This annual for Christian young men and lads took place as usual at the Working Lads' Institute, Strangeways, Manchester, on October 7. There was a larger attendance than ever, taxing the accommodation of a larger hall than has been used before. Representatives were present from Ashton, Denton, Stockport, Southport, Lytham, Bolton, Hyde, and Rochdale. The power of the Holy Spirit was present, as in former years, and an abundant blessing was poured out.

Mr. James Boyd presided the first hour. Rev. H. T. G. Kingdon, rector of St. Phillip's, spoke on the words "Out and Out," and dwelt on the necessary separation of the Christian from sin, worldliness, and weights.

Mr. Councillor Harrison next took the chair, and Rev. H. A. Phillips, of Southport, spoke from 2 Sam. x. 12, "Let us play the man." Very powerful were his words, closing with an appeal for personal consecration.

The evening was devoted to testimony and prayer. One told of gathering in the lads of a genteel suburb, first on a lawn, then God gave them a room and furniture in answer to prayer. Others spoke of cottage meetings, buttonholing other young men, Christlike lives in workshop and office, all as the outcome of an "out and out" Christian life.

Some little lads, as well as young men and youths, told of their lives being brightened by Jesus, and of their determination to live for his glory.

G. R. K.

THE MONTH'S CELEBRATIONS of the 25th anniversary of Good Templary concluded with a sermon by Mr. Price Hughes, at St. James's Hall.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the Late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXX.

THE SECOND SIGN—THE GREAT RED DRAGON.

Before continuing our examination of the marvellous predictions relating to the eighth head of the wild beast, as revealed to the prophet in the thirteenth chapter of the Apocalypse, we must revert for a moment to those narrating the draconic action recorded in the twelfth. This has to some extent been anticipated in our review of the prophetic history of the sunclothed woman exhibited in that chapter under the symbolism of the first sign; but some deeply important particulars remain to be noticed.

A word or two may in the first place be devoted to the expression "in heaven," which occurs in verses 1 and 3. "There appeared a great wonder [margin, sign] in heaven." "And then appeared another wonder in heaven."

Primarily, the term must be regarded as describing that which the Seer actually beheld; and an attempt was made in the earlier paper, entitled "The Scenery of the Book," to explain the manner in which the various objects, or scenes of action in the Divine Drama, would in all probability be presented to view. Among these was the heaven, the firmament, or what we should call the sky, stretched above that part of the earth where the predicted events were to take place; and it was in or against this background of sky, or heaven, that the great signs now appear. The portents which the Apostle witnesses are there seen in shadowy and awe-inspiring forms. Such a use of the expression is by no means uncommon among us, as when we speak of "the political horizon," "the gathering clouds," etc.; and a striking instance of its employment, well illustrating the passage under notice, occurs in Keble's beautiful poem on Balaam, where he writes—

> "Oh! for a sculptor's hand,
> That thou might'st take thy stand,
> Thy wild hair floating in the eastern breeze,
> Thy tranced yet open gaze
> Fixed on the desert haze,
> As one who deep in heaven some airy pageant sees."

But while the expression describes the outward appearance exhibited in the vision, we must not fail to notice that, in the second place, it had a symbolical meaning. And the symbolical meaning of "heaven" has been explained in the paper on "The Symbolism of the Book," as depicting, together with the heavenly bodies, the sun, moon, and stars, the place of power and authority, and the rulers of this world. When, therefore, it was "in heaven" that the Seer beheld both the sunclothed woman, and the great red dragon with the seven heads, the meaning would be that in some way or other the two bodies or systems represented by these symbols would, for a time at least, be occupying, and that concurrently, positions of power in the political firmament. Strange and paradoxical as this may appear, history nevertheless attests its truth. The Christian Church had, in consequence of the conversion of Constantine, been elevated to a position of power as novel as it was exalted. But this was the case in two-thirds only of the empire, namely in the European and African portions over which the Emperors Constantine and Licinius reigned. There she enjoyed not only toleration, but recognition and support. But in the remaining, the Asiatic third, ruled by Maximin, the Christians were yet exposed to the bitterest and most cruel persecution. Here, therefore, it was that the dragon, animating Paganism, was still in authority. Infuriate at the now imminent prospect of the Christian body attaining establishment in the empire, Maximin renewed the persecution against Christians within the limits of his dominion, prohibiting their assemblies, and degrading, and even killing, their bishops. Many of them indeed disgraced their profession by apostasy. In the language of the vision, "the third part of the stars of heaven" (those who presided in the churches, see ch. i. 20) were "cast to the earth" by Satanic action.

But the close of Pagan persecution was at hand; the delivery of the sunclothed women, who had so long been travailing in birth, was about to take place. And it is curious to notice, as pointed out by Whiston, whom Bishop Newton quotes, that, as the period of gestation with women is forty weeks, or two hundred and eighty days, so from A.D. 33, the time of our Lord's resurrection and ascension, to A.D. 313, the date of the famous Proclamation and Edict for the universal liberty and advancement of Christianity by Constantine and Licinius, which put an end to the pangs of birth in the heaviest persecution that ever then was known, was exactly two hundred and eighty years. The thirty-ninth week expired in the Diocletan persecution.

It is that last and fiercest contest for supremacy between the powers of Paganism and Christianity that the Seer is now called to behold. The scene is recorded in the 7th, 8th, and 9th verses: "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought, and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him."

The shadowy forms of angelic hosts are seen filling the regions of the air. Against the dazzling myriads of the elect angels, which excel in strength, led by the Archangel himself, contend the dragon and his angels. The imagery is in keeping with Old Testament representations and phraseology.

Eighteen hundred years ago the angels of God had met the patriarch Jacob as he went on his way, and when he saw them he said, "This is God's host, and he called the name of that place Mahanaim" (or, the two hosts). Six hundred years later, in the prophetic song of triumph in which Deborah and Barak the son of Abinoam celebrated the victory of Israel over the kings of Canaan, the belief in superhuman intervention was expressed as the words rang out, "They fought from heaven; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera." To Daniel it was revealed that the destinies of Israel and the fate of empires were the subject of strife between principalities and powers in heavenly places; for the glorious Revealer of Mysteries declared that the prince of the kingdom of Persia had withstood Him one-and-twenty days—that Michael, the first of the chief princes (margin), came to help him; that he was about to return to fight with the prince of Persia; that the prince of Grecia would come; and that at a certain time Michael, the great prince which stood for the children of Daniel's people, should arise on their behalf (chs. x. and xii.). And again to Zechariah the active enmity of Satan against Judah and Jerusalem was revealed as being carried out in the heavenly courts (ch. iii.)

The meaning of the terrific visionary conflict waged in mid-heaven between the angels who are sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation, and the prince of the power of the air, the leader of wicked spirits in heavenly places, could hardly fail to be understood by him who witnessed the marvellous scene. And it was no doubt with intense joy that he beheld the issue of the supernatural combat, the hosts of darkness vanquished, their place "not found any more in heaven," and that he heard the loud voice saying in heaven, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ." No less than five times does he describe the overthrow of the Satanic powers:—

"The great dragon was cast out."

"He was cast out into the earth."

"His angels were cast out with him."

"The accuser of our brethren is cast down."

"The dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth."

And then he records the secret of the victory, the threefold means whereby they who had waged the conflict on earth, of which the "airy pageant" was the symbolic representation, had vanquished the great adversary, the accuser of the brethren.

"They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death."

For the "war in heaven" was a symbol. That which the scene symbolised was, as I have said, the final contest between Paganism and Christianity in the Roman Empire, the issue of which we have already seen described by the imagery of the sixth seal in the previous and parallel series of visions. It was the crisis of the last efforts of ascendant heathenism to retain supremacy and to crush Christianity. "Maximin had vowed to Jupiter," writes the historian Milner, "before the decisive battle with Constantine, that, if victorious, he would abolish the Christian name. The contest betwe Jehovah and Jupiter was now drawing to a close. And the result of the warfare of three centuri which then culminated was not indistinctly appr hended. The Emperor Constantine wrote Eusebius of "that dragon having been depose for the governance of affairs by God's providence and depicted in a picture over his palace gate th overthrow of the enemies of Christianity under th semblance of a dragon precipitated into the abys Medals were struck with similar devices, an Ranke in his "History of the Popes" attests th prevalence of the view taken of the situation whe he writes, "As we see on the coins of Constantine th labarum with the monogram of Christ above th conquered dragon, even so did the worship and th name of Christ stand triumphant over prostra heathenism."

The religious system which had so long prevaile was irretrievably ruined. The false gods, unde whose names Satan had caused himself to be wo shipped—for "the things which the Gentiles sacr ficed they sacrificed to devils and not to God (1 Cor. x. 20)—were cast down. Pagan idolatr in its original form—though, alas! ere long to b resuscitated in Christendom by diabolical powe and in yet more seductive guise—had fallen; an most vividly indeed did the aerial contest represe and prefigure the great event; for here again w find the value of that key to New Testament syn bolism which we have so often used, namely, th ascertained meaning of similar symbols in the O Testament.

The expression, "casting down from heave to earth," was the one more than once em ployed in Scripture to describe dejection from position of prestige and power, whether politic or religious. Apostrophising the King of Babylo the prophet Isaiah speaks of him as "Lucifer ('day-star'), the son of the morning," who had sai in his heart, "I will ascend into heaven; I wi exalt my throne above the stars of God; I wi ascend above the heights of the clouds." And pr dicting his approaching downfall, he says, in almo the very language of our chapter, "How art tho fallen from heaven—how art thou cut down to th ground—thou shalt be brought down to hell" (s Is. xiv. 4, 12-15, and xiii. 1, 19). Jeremiah, l menting the degradation of Jerusalem, cries, "Ho hath the Lord cast down from heaven unto th earth the beauty of Israel" (Lam. ii. 1).

In New Testament Scripture, moreover, we fin our Lord Himself predicting in similar language th loss of the wonderful privileges enjoyed by th cities wherein most of his mighty works had bee done without inducing repentance, when he say "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted heaven, shall be brought down to hell" (Mat xi. 23).

And once again, describing the defeat of th powers of hell by his disciples, through the exercise the spiritual might wherewith He had endued then He exclaims, as if actually seeing something beyon mere mortal vision, "I beheld Satan like lightnin fall from heaven." (Luke x. 18.) It was the subje tion of "devils," "serpents," "spirits," and "a the power of the enemy," by the omnipotenc of his own name to which He thus referre Remembering such Scriptures as these, the Apostl could be in little doubt as to the meaning of th wondrous vision.

And then burst forth the song of triumph Premature no doubt it was, for "the Kingdo of our God and the power of his Christ" we not yet "come." But such, as we have alread seen, was the belief of the Christians of those day Nor was it unnatural. The change from catacomb to council chambers, from prisons to palaces, fro persecutions of most frightful description to pos tions of honour and even splendour, might we give rise not only to feelings of deepest joy, but als to the conviction that a condition of things had s in which was the inauguration of a millennial da The accuser of their martyred brethren, the inst gator of the calumnies and persecutions whic had so long tormented the Church of God throughou the Empire, had lost his place of vantage; an while they who still lived were restored with ever honour and the restitution of confiscated good from exile or the mines, the memories of those wh had suffered for Christ's sake were vindicated an exalted. As space forbids, I can only refer to th "Horæ Apocalypticæ" (Vol. III., pp. 23-27) for th testimony of the times, furnished by both Imperi decrees and contemporary historians, concernin the universal joy which prevailed and the convictions which possessed the minds of men. Eusebius wrote: "It looked like the very image of the Kingdom of Christ, and was altogether more like a dream than a reality."

Well, too, did they recognise the means which God had employed to overthrow the gigantic fabric of hellish superstition which had ruled the world and desolated the Church. The blood of the Lamb, the word of the Gospel, and the sufferings of the saints had won the glorious victory. Are there mightier weapons now?

But the great drama was not yet over; woes were yet to follow. The enmity of the serpent against Christ and his Church, though apparently for a time subdued and quiescent, was soon to be exerted in the great masterpiece of Satan, of which the prophetic history is now to be unfolded.

The late Sir S. A. Blackwood.

REMINISCENCES.

Shaftesbury, Spurgeon, and Blackwood! My three ideal Christian workers, are gone, and I feel to-day how great is my personal loss. Three manly men, unlike in some things, but how like each other in witnessing for God among all classes!

My earliest recollections of Mr. Blackwood are in connection with services which he conducted in his own house, next the vicarage, at Streatham, about thirty-five years ago, when his wife, the Duchess of Manchester, led the singing, and the old groom prayed with a deep bass voice, as sonorous as a church bell. The delightful addresses of Mr. Blackwood were refreshing and helpful to our young ardent spirits.

When he came from the Treasury to the Post Office in 1874, to rectify the financial blunders connected with the purchase of the telegraphs, we all felt, what has since been abundantly proved, that a man of God was among us. Referring to this position he wrote to me: "The post to which I have been appointed is not an easy one by any means, and I shall be deeply thankful for your prayers that I may fill it to the glory of God and the good of the service." Everyone who came closely in contact with him realised this to be the key-note of his official life, "the glory of God and the good of the service."

His advent to the Post Office brought out many timid Christians, and others were confirmed and strengthened in the faith. Whilst always maintaining the dignity of his high position, and commander of an army of at least 100,000 men, women, and boys, he became the personal friend and adviser of all the employés. With untiring energy he became "all things to all, that he might by all means save some." The Civil Service Prayer Union was his creation, and how nobly he worked to make it successful other pens will tell. He was one of the first to aid us in the formation of the Evangelistic Mission Union for London—a noble idea for the consolidation of all truly Gospel Missions, but which came to grief through the action of a modern Diotrephes.

The Master hath taken home many of his best servants in recent years; worthy successors of such men are hard to find. W. J. Orsman.

My earliest memories of Sir Arthur Blackwood are associated with the old "Willis's Rooms," with his faithful witness for Christ there, more than thirty years ago. I well recollect one occasion when, winding his arm round me in his old familiar affectionate way, he remarked that he and I were of the same spiritual age. He pointed to the little inner room and said, "There underneath that chandelier at a ball, years ago (1856), I surrendered my heart to Christ." I remember him, too, in connection with Stafford Rooms and the blessed Revival of '59-'61, with Brownlow North, Reginald Radcliffe, Henry Hull, and others. What precious soul-gathering seasons they were.

He was a loving, loyal-hearted servant of our Heavenly Master, a true soul-winner, ever keen for an opportunity of pressing home the truth to individual hearts. It was an old saying of his, "Wherever and whenever I find one who is a sinner I have all the warrant I need for speaking of Christ as a Saviour." He led many to the Cross both by voice and pen, and multitudes will rise up in the last day to own him as their spiritual father.

His removal just now is a deep loss, and to our view he can be ill spared; but it is the Lord. Let Him do what seemeth Him good.

Frank H. White.

I have much pleasure in complying with your request about the beloved Sir Arthur Blackwood. It was about 1859, at Huntly, in the North of Scotland, I first heard of our now departed friend, and of his conversion, in conversation with Her Grace the late Duchess of Gordon. Some time afterwards, having come to London to engage in evangelistic work, Mr. Blackwood was found present in my meetings. He took an active part in conversing with the inquirers, being deeply interested in one young man. I well remember that he kindly arranged to take him into his service under his butler.

At that time he had probably not himself engaged much in conducting public services. But how the Lord has blessed his word since. Take one convert only, the widely known and greatly blessed Pastor Archibald Brown, with his immense congregation in the east of London. From that East End congregation who will tell how many burning lights have gone forth over the world and to the heathen, including two of Mr. Brown's own daughters to far off China. There should be a shout of thanksgiving at this beloved disciple's grave! God bless his beloved widow.

Reginald Radcliffe.

P.S.—I append a copy of a memo which in July last I gave to my daughter to use as an illustration at her meetings of men and women:—

"Sir Arthur Blackwood was speaking in a drawing-room meeting. A gentleman who had gone to the opera and found it closed, drove on to this drawing-room meeting, and as he entered the room Sir Arthur Blackwood was just saying, 'I offer you now instant and eternal salvation.' This gentleman was thus arrested and converted, and forthwith invited his employés to supper. Being too many to come on one night, they had to come on two nights, when the employer testified what God had done for him, and had the Gospel preached to them."

An official at the G.P.O. supplies the following interesting notes:—

Sir Arthur kept a large placard in his private room showing the evil effect of strong drink, so that the numerous officials going in and out might have the fact constantly brought before them; he also never lost an opportunity of personal dealing, his strong point being that for the sake of others the use of strong drink should be given up.

Always kept flowers on his table, with Scripture texts attached, in such a way that all who entered the room could scarcely avoid reading them.

Gave a garden party to his officials, and in giving the invitation said he wanted to make that an opportunity of telling the story of his conversion. His Christian manliness and kindliness of manner towards his officials produced a good effect.

THE FUNERAL.

The affectionate interest manifested in the funeral on Monday afforded remarkable evidence of the esteem and love in which Sir Arthur was generally held. St. Jude's Church, Mildmay Park, was crowded at the funeral service, conducted by Revs. D. B. Hankin, G. R. Thornton, G. Savage, and H. O'Rorke, amongst those present being representatives of the leading Christian and evangelistic institutions. It would be exaggeration to say that all these were represented, but as we looked round on men and women known as leaders in every form of Christian service, it seemed that scarce a society or mission remained unrepresented.

Rev. D. B. Hankin spoke in the following touching terms: On a certain occasion our Lord said to a number of people, "What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken in the wind?" So might we ask, For what purpose have ye come here to-day? and you might well reply, To do honour to a great and good man; or rather to magnify the grace of God in him. You remember his high spiritual tone, his warm sympathy, his rare capacity for dealing with difficult questions, the manner in which he went in and out amongst us for so many years; some remember these and therefore seek to honour his memory.

Then there are those who may say: We remember him specially as a loyal follower of the Son of God, as one of the most fearless witnesses for his Lord. We remember his work of faith, and labour of love and patience of hope. We remember how he spoke for his Master, and especially how, at our annual conferences, as he expounded the subject of the risen Saviour, and led us into the deeper mysteries of the Christian faith, his lips seemed to drop as an honeycomb. There was in his utterances a sweetness and depth and richness, as of one accustomed to dwell in the presence of the King. Others are bound by a still stronger tie, for it was through the words of truth that fell from his lips that they were led to desire to enter on "the path of the just which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Thus many of us are under the shadow of a great loss, and we can only say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord.

Some may say, "What is the lesson of all this?" Let me recall the fact that once he moved in society, in the crowds of the world. The truth was brought home to his mind amid strange surroundings. Will you be surprised to hear that it was in a ballroom, in the whirl of the giddy dance, under a certain chandelier in Willis's Rooms, that he yielded his heart to God? A friend had spoken to him very seriously, had pleaded with him, had warned him of his danger. He went, however, to the ball, although the Spirit was striving within. But at a certain moment, in the night or morning, as he was dancing, the crisis came; he yielded to God, and there and then commenced his career of holy usefulness.

Now, as we commit his ashes to their resting place, we look back on these thirty-seven years in which he served God; and as we think of his grace and tenderness, we see that he was one who lived constantly in the presence of God.

As we review his career we cannot help seeing how strong the evangelistic instinct was in him. He was instant in season and out of season, by the wayside, in the homes of the poor, and in the drawing-rooms of the rich.

We thank God also, that he ever preserved the simplicity of his faith. Never did he show the slightest leaning towards sacerdotalism. He was satisfied with the glorious Gospel in all its simplicity and fulness.

When lately he presided at our Mildmay Conference, many of us were touched and grieved to observe how ill he looked, yet none of us thought the end so near. As for him, he murmured not. You have heard, perhaps, how he received the tidings when his medical man felt it necessary to tell him clearly that his illness could have but one termination. On his attendant entering the room immediately after, he said, "Nurse, I have heard such glorious news." Her reply was, "Glorious to you, Sir Arthur, but not to us." Thus when the message came, he girded up the loins of his soul ready for the flight to his everlasting home.

Does he not speak to us now? In the solemn presence of death the question arises. Did he follow cunningly devised fables? Was he the victim of a delusion or of a gigantic fraud? Impossible. His whole life protests against the idea. He lived in the presence of the King, with whom he was blessedly one. His life may be summed up in these words, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which now I live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

The interment in Kensal Green Cemetery was a stirring scene. The high official position occupied by Sir Arthur became specially prominent in all the arrangements. Every department of H.M. Post Office service appeared to be represented; and large numbers of letter carriers, telegraph messengers, mail cart drivers (in quaint, old-fashioned, scarlet greatcoats), were assembled, together with a party of seamen and officers from a mail steamer, and a strong detachment of the Post-office Volunteers. These with a numerous contingent of Dr. Barnardo's boys, formed a guard of honour, lining the path from the great gates of the cemetery to the place of interment. Around the open grave a very large crowd gathered, standing sorrowfully silent as the remains of him they had loved were committed to the dust till the morning of the resurrection; and singing over the tomb a metrical version of Psa. xxiii., "The King of Love my Shepherd is."

Dear Sir,—Doubtless there are very many like myself who feel it a great denial not to be able to attend the last services connected with our beloved and revered Sir Arthur Blackwood.

May I suggest that instead of perishable flowers on his last resting place, we who loved him should perpetuate his memory in helping forward some of his loved works for the benefit of others. Many might be glad to hear which need help most, so that friends may give "in memoriam." Annie Wood.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15.—PSALM LXVI.

It is thought that this outburst of devout joy dates from the days of Hezekiah, when Sennacherib's attempt against Jerusalem had so signally failed. A Summons to Praise (1—4). The devout soul cannot be glad alone. It demands sympathy in its raptures. All the earth is not too great as an orchestra; all living beings as a choir.

Divine Deliverance (5-12). We must never forget the great past. Every nation may recount marvels of deliverance in its history, which its children should gladly recall. In one form and another, the Red Sea and the Jordan have their counterparts in all ages and lives. How often does God turn our seas into dry land, and make a path through the rivers for our feet. "Through the flood on foot" is the mystery and miracle of our daily experience. The rebellious exalt themselves, but our feet are not moved. We are proved and tried by fire, but it is that we may be refined as silver, and no atom is lost. Men ride over our heads, we traverse fire and water, but we come out at last into abundance. Through death to life, by the cross to the throne.

Payment of vows (13-20). We utter many things when we are in trouble. which we forget when bright skies are overhead. How much better the example of the Psalmist. God remembers, though we find it convenient to forget. Pay your vows; declare what God hath done. Use the tongue by which you cried to God as the means of extolling Him. But God wants something more than the voice. He puts his ear to the heart, to detect its sounds of health or disease, of obedience or refusal. Blessed be God! though we have so often forfeited his mercy, it has shown no shadow of turning.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16.—PSALM LXVII.

This psalm may have been originally composed for the feast of tabernacles, but it is suitable to all occasions of personal or national joy. 1, 2. Whatever mercy or blessing we enjoy is not for ourselves alone, but through us to others. We are stewards of the mercy and love of God. And when He causes his face to shine, we eagerly collect its rays, that we may the better reflect them, so that his way may be better known on earth, and his saving health among all nations. 3. If this Jewish hymn is so full of desire for God to be crowned with the praises of the earth, how much more should we make it the subject of prayer and effort. It is of no use breathing these words as a pious ejaculation, unless we are doing what we can to make men praise God, and are praising Him ourselves. 4. The equity of God lays the basis for the songs of the people. As long as his rule is obeyed, life is full of melody. Be governed and led by Him. 5, 6. Again and again the heart of the love of God sighs that all should know and love Him too, and already to his eye there arises the prospect of an earth which has become fruitful and generous in her gifts. 6. What an exceedingly lovely title for God. Our own God! There is always a peculiar pleasure in possession. But, O heirs of God, who shall estimate the extent of your inheritance, in that you can put your hand on God and say "This God is all my own." He will never cease to bless, and his dominion shall spread to the ends of time and space.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17.—PSALM LXVIII.

At the close of the war with Ammon, the ark was brought back in triumph to Zion, and this is a triumphal hymn, composed to celebrate the event (2 Sam. xi. 11). It may have been sung at successive stages in the procession up Mount Zion. The Apostle especially quotes it of the Ascension, and in this light it yields many lessons (Eph. iv. 8).

The Arising of God (1-3). It was thus that Moses addressed Jehovah, each time the congregation recommenced their onward march. Throughout human history, God has repeatedly arisen to deliver and defend his own. The Son of Man stands to succour a Stephen and to strike the arrow of conviction into a Saul. Contrasts (4-6).—Sing and cast up the highway: exult before Him, but show mercy to the widow and fatherless; remember that though God sits on his holy throne, yet He visits the home of the desolate, and is a father to fatherless babes. Solitary ones are put in families; prisoners in prosperity; rebels in desert wastes.

The March (7-18).—As God led his people through the deserts, so did Jesus lead his redeemed ones through the grave, and up into the light. What though we have been blackened by the sullying smoke, we shall yet flash in the sunny air, as we follow his resurrection track. God's chariots are around our march and his gifts await our hands. Yea, He is Himself ready to dwell among us for ever.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 18.—PSALM LXIX.

This and Psalm xxii. are the two Psalms most often quoted as referring to our Lord in the N.T. It is very sad—the cry of a breaking heart.

There are many reasons why the sufferer claims salvation. There is, first, imminent danger from the inrushing waters, and the deep mire. There is also the failing strength, the dried throat, and the drooping eyes. There are, thirdly, the mighty foes, hating wrongfully. There is, fourthly, the consciousness of sin, and the dread lest others might be ashamed through his failure. And then, fifthly, he reminds God that the suffering was brought about by his zeal for his house (1-10).

What a bitter aggravation it is when we become common talk, and when those that hate us spread evil reports until the places of public resort ring with our name! Then indeed the water-floods threaten to overwhelm. But out of all, the incessant prayer arises to Jehovah, pleading with Him on the ground of his lovingkindness, and the multitude of his tender mercies. Can God do other than return to and redeem the soul that clings to Him with such undeviating trust? (11-19).

The succeeding verses predict the inevitable retribution of the ungodly (20-28), and the inspired writer says, "Let it be so."

Light breaks. The sorrowful soul is set on high. The needy is heard, and all the earth breaks out into exultant praise (29-36).

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19.—PSALM LXX.

Compare this Psalm with Ps. xl. 13-17. It may be that it is a fragment from which that was built. 1. We are very impatient. Thrice in the Psalm David tells God to make haste. But God is making haste always, just as the earth makes haste back to spring through the long winter days. 2. Our shame would be God's dishonour. We have therefore an agreement with Him—his great Name. 4. Before ever we find God, the very act of seeking Him is a gladsome thing. If you are nothing more than a seeker, you may rejoice. To love God's salvation is to find continual reason for his magnification. We need to adore God more, "that Christ may be magnified in my body." O for Mary's heart, that we might always sing her Magnificat. 5. It is just because we are so poor and needy that we have so great a claim on God. If we could do without Him, we should have to do without Him. But since there is no help or deliverance outside the circle of his care, we may urge Him not to tarry. But if He tarry till Lazarus dies, He will come to raise him, and to do more than we had asked or thought.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 20.—PSALM LXXI.

In old age the Psalmist turns again to his harp, and sings the old song of trust. Note his reiteration of I, me, and my. The longer we know God the more intimate we become with Him, and speak as a man speaks to his friend. God was a Rock, now he claimed that He should be Rock to him. God was his hope, and now he asked Him to vindicate it. God had watched over his birth-hour, and now he asked that in the time of old age, he might be neither cast off nor forsaken. It seems almost as if these were superfluous demands. It was impossible to suppose that God could do either one or the other, and yet it is a relief to pour out the whole tale of hopes and fears into that bowed-down ear (1-9).

Again he hastens God, as though his enemies were at his heels, about to drag him down like a pack of hounds. But hope sings her song of praise, so certain is he of deliverance. And he begins to compose his sermon on the faithfulness, and righteousness, and mighty acts of God, which he is to deliver to the next generation (10-19).

Have you experienced many sore troubles? He will quicken you again. Are you in the depths? He will bring you up. You shall yet sing praises. Your lips shall rejoice. Your tongue shall talk. Your soul shall be redeemed. (20-24.)

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21.—PSALM LXXII.

It is supposed that Solomon was the author of this Psalm, the twentieth verse being appended by a later hand to mark the close of the second book of the Psalter, which for the most part contains David's Psalms. In its full significance it can only refer to the Son of God. Note the salient features of our Saviour's reign over men.

I. It is founded on righteousness, and even the poor may count upon equity at his bar. Repeatedly the words poor and needy recur, as if for once they had found in Him one well able to maintain and vindicate their cause against their proud oppressors. II. It is everlasting. The sun and moon shall fail, but his name and reign shall be unaffected by the flight of ages or the wreck of worlds. III. It is gentle, resembling rain upon the mown grass, or like silently distilling showers. When He is recognised as King, peace and abundance shall fill the whole extent of his dominions unto the ends of the earth, and throughout all the extent of the inner life. IV. It shall be triumphant over all opposition. The wild Arab, the inveterate foe, the kings of distant lands, shall own his supremacy. May He set up that kingdom in our hearts that we may be blessed in Him, and that we may bless the Lord God, the God of Israel, who alone can secure his supremacy.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 22.

Christian Living.—Rom. xii. 1-15.

Golden Text, Ver. 21.

The doctrines of the Gospel, as unfolded in the previous chapters, are intended to lead to practical Christian living as taught in this lesson. There is an inseparable connection between sound doctrine and right conduct. Redemption in Christ and justification by faith, the themes of the two former lessons, are useless if they do not lead to practical godliness.

Consecration is the apostle's first demand (1, 2). There can be no living for God until we have presented ourselves to God. True consecration is voluntary. Paul does not command, he beseeches; and though all we have already belongs to God, so that He might claim it from us as His right, He asks for it as a "present." Is it not one of our greatest delights in life to make presents to those we love? Make this present to God. It is prompted by the mercies of God. It is impossible to think of what we have received from God through Christ, or of the manner in which He procured our blessings for us without wanting to make Him some return. A redeemed slave yielded herself voluntarily to the service of the man who had redeemed her. Are we not redeemed slaves? Can we make a less return. It is entire. "Your bodies" means yourselves. The man acts through the members of his body. Give, not only the whole, but each member (vi. 13). Was it not himself in every part of his being our Lord gave to us? Living contrasts this offering with that of the victims consumed on the altar under the old covenant. It is also a contrast to what an ungodly person might offer. Until he is "alive from the dead" (vi. 13), through Jesus Christ, he can offer no living sacrifice. Have we made this surrender? It is the way to offer "reasonable" or spiritual worship (R.V., margin).

This new relationship to God is accompanied by a changed relationship to the world (2). This is Scriptural nonconformity. Whatever is evil or doubtful in the world's maxims or conduct, we must avoid. Daniel and his three companions are good illustrations. "Transformed" is the same word as transfigured (Matt. xvii. 2). Moses was transfigured because his face reflected the glory that had shone upon him. Our transfiguration is to be the result of a change taking place within. The whole mind and affections are continually renewed. To such a life the "will of God" appears different. How we shrink from it naturally! We regard it as something to which we must submit, but not as something in which we can delight. Consecration will lead us to accept God's will with joy (John iv. 34).

The practical result of consecration will appear in three directions. (1) In a man's estimate of himself (3—5). Self-conceit is impossible where consecration is real. There is a kind of self-depreciation which is not humility, and a kind of consciousness of power which is not pride. The evil to be avoided is an undue sense of one's own importance, which leads one to despise another. In the Church of Christ, which is his body, there is no room for this. Each part of the body has its own place and its own work. The thought is worked out more fully in Cor. xii. 7-27.

(2) In a man's service (6-8). Each man is to exercise that kind of service for which he is qualified. All our gifts and opportunities are talents. Our business is, not to envy another man the exercise of his superior gift, but to use our own with diligence. Great injury has been done to the Church of God by the separation between clergy and laity, as though some were called to minister and others only to be ministered to. Though there are forms of service for which a young Christian is not fitted, yet he can speak or write to an unsaved companion, or give instruction to some who are ignorant, or by his life and words can correct some false impressions entertained by others. Are you seeking to know your ministry, and to fulfil it?

(3) In a man's conduct (9-15). These brief counsels are very valuable. They refer to very ordinary everyday virtues, the lack of which has often led men to denounce the Gospel itself. A man is not living the Christian life who is unloving and cold; eager to obtain the best positions for himself; slothful in business, so that his work is imperfectly done; melancholy in disposition, and impatient in trial; niggardly and grasping; full of the spirit of revenge; and too selfish either to rejoice or weep with others. These are the evils that are reproved here. Seek the opposite virtues. No Christian character is complete without them.

MR. JAMES RENNIE, colporteur, Hitchin, has sold and distributed during the year £763 of Bibles and books, numbering in all 41,180, and 53,000 tracts. He has conducted sixty Gospel and temperance meetings in various chapels.

For the Young.

SAILING AND SIGNALLING.*

By Rev. J. Reid Howatt.

"Watch and pray."—Matt. xxvi. 41.

Now, children, I want you to knit your brows and sharpen your wits, as you do when teacher sets a difficult sum on the board, for I want to speak about something you won't understand unless you pay close attention, but you will understand it if you do.

I have some water-plants growing in glass jars, and they stand on a table near the window. The other day the sun was shining on these plants, so warm and bright, and I noticed little streams of air-bubbles rising up from the roots deep down in the water. You have all seen these bubbles coming up from a pond, I am sure; and they only come when the sun is shining.

Well, I thought I would find out what kind of air was in these bubbles, so I put a bottle above them so as to catch the bubbles, but catch no other air; and, when my bottle was full, I took a little wick that was smouldering—not lighted, you know, but smouldering—and I dipped that into the bottle, and at once it was kindled into a bright flame. Then I was certain of what I had guessed before, that these air-bubbles were full of oxygen—the best and purest air, without which we could not live.

That was my experiment, but I want you now to remember what it means. It tells us a great deal about prayer. These little air-bubbles were the water-plant's prayer.

When did it begin to pray? It was when the sun shone upon it. Did the water-plant think about that? No, I am sure it didn't; it simply felt that it must pray, that it was good for it to pray, and so it did pray, and most likely it thought it was all its own doing alone. It didn't understand, you see, that it was the sun that was really warming it into prayer.

Never you make the same mistake. Be you sure of this, that whenever you really want to pray, whenever there is something at your heart that tells you you should pray, then it is because God's good Spirit is warming your heart into prayer. He begins the good work in us, and we never refuse to pray when something tells us we should pray, but we are resisting—going against—God's good Spirit. Mind that, children, and when the Spirit puts it into your heart to pray, then pray, for He knows what is ready for you, and what God is wanting to do for you, and so He puts it into your heart to pray.

In time of war the merchant ships can't go safely over the seas alone. They don't carry guns, they have no fighting men, and they would soon be captured by the enemy. So a number of them gather together, and they get a great man-of-war to go with them. The merchant ships sail round and round the battleship just as the little cygnets keep swimming round and round the swan. The big line-of-battle ship is their protector, and they are safe while they are in the shelter of her guns.

But the darkness comes on, and the waters sometimes grow rough, and the winds become stormy in the night, and the ships are driven hither and thither; and the people on board the merchant ships are anxious, for they are afraid they may be parted from the war-ship, and then they would be easily captured. How they long for the first grey light of the morning! And when it comes how eagerly they look round and round the heaving waters, looking to find where the war-ship is! And when they see it, how they keep watching—watching it still! What are they watching for now? They are watching for signals from the man-of-war to tell them what to do—to put on sail and go in advance if all is safe—or to keep behind and gather closer to one another if the enemy is in sight; and they know that it is only as they watch for the signals and obey them that they can be protected.

It is just the same with us and God. There is never a morning when we wake but every one of us needs to say, "I will watch to see what He will say to me." That's the first thing to do in the morning —watch for God's signals. There is no boy nor girl, nor man nor woman, can venture out into the world and be safe unless they have first watched to see what God would say to them.

God has his signals for every soul, but we must learn to watch for them. This way: Begin the day with God; begin by kneeling down to Him; begin by thanking Him for caring for you while you slept, and for protecting you when you were helpless; and then wait—think—listen. Ask yourself, "Is there anything wrong I meant to do?" Conscience will soon tell you that, and when conscience speaks look for God's signal. Ask, "What would He have me to do about that?" And He will signal; He will tell you; something inside you will let you know what God is wanting.

That's his signal: set your heart bravely and lovingly to obey it, or before the day is over you will be in danger. Kneel and pray, and think. Is your heart right with God? Is it right with your brothers and sisters, father and mother, your friend or companion? God's signal will let you know: be true to that signal. There is an enemy always watching for you, and he will capture your heart before the day is done unless you obey the signal of God. Watch and pray, and you will be safe in God's care all the day long, and will be conveyed by Him safely into the good haven at last.

What did that pure air do to the smouldering wick? It kindled it into a flame again, so that, instead of being smouldering and smoky, it became a bright and shining light. Yes, children, and that is what prayer—true prayer—always does. It makes smoky things become clear, and dark things become bright, and things that were almost ready to die become strong and good again. So when you are cast down, when you are disappointed, or vexed, or sad, the first thing and the best thing to do is—pray. You will never know what a difference that can make till you try it; and you will never find out all the difference it makes till you try it, and try it, and try it again. It is the oxygen that sweetens the air for everything that lives, and it is prayer that sweetens the world for all. Pale flowers and pale people become ruddy and strong when they get more oxygen; and it is just the same with our hearts and spirits. When they grow faint and poor and cold, the best cure is—more prayer, more prayer.

Maybe now, then, children dear, you will be better able to understand how much kindness Jesus meant to do us when He told us that we ought always to pray and not to faint. No, we never faint while we pray; it is when prayer stops fainting begins. So pray and pray all your days, till at last, like Jesus Himself, it will be with a prayer on your lips you shall pass into glory.

* Extracted from The Children's Pew: a Year's Sermons and Parables for the Young. (6s. Nisbet & Co.)

CHESHAM SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

Mr. Newton Jones, the Sunday-school Union Evangelist, has just paid a visit to Chesham. The work began on September 23 with a gathering of workers. On Sunday, 24th, a united service was held in the General Baptist Chapel, when about 1100 teachers, scholars, and friends were present. After the ordinary services of the day, a Gospel meeting was held, a large congregation being present.

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday Mr. Jones addressed gatherings of junior scholars at 6.30, and senior scholars and friends at 8 o'clock. The attendances were good, increasing each evening. On Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons Bible readings were held, with good attendances. On Thursday Mr. Jones visited Great Missenden, and held a Bible reading in the afternoon and a service in the evening. The Mission was preceded with a week of prayer. It was carried on to October 1 by the local ministers.

The impression created is very encouraging, several having come out as decided Christians, some being scholars and others well advanced in life. Backsliders have been led to consider their ways, and Christians have been greatly encouraged and helped.

J. R.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Christchurch Schools, Sparkbrook, Birmingham, Oct. 14-20; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Kenley, Oct. 13; Penge, Oct. 15; Plumstead, Oct. 17; West Hampstead, Oct. 20; St. Chrysostom's, Liverpool, 21-29; Rev. M. J. Hall, St. Paul's, Rockferry, Oct. 14-21; Taunton, Oct. 28 to Nov. 6; Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, St. John's Hall, Forest Hill, Oct. 14; Cricklewood, Oct. 23; Mr. Phillips Welch, Mansfield-street School, Borough-road, Oct. 16-19; Mr. H. Hankinson, Waltham Abbey, Oct. 11; Caterham, Oct. 17; Mr. J. Spiers, at Aberystwith; Mr. Livesey Carrott, Boston Convention.

LITTLE THINGS.

Only a tiny candle
Lit by Him,
Not lost, though He has many
Lamps to trim.
Only an earthen vessel
Used to-day,
Although in the Master's pathway
Gold ones lay.
Only a cup of water
Given in love,
But the Saviour saw and owned it
From above.
Only the world's derision
Meekly borne,
Yet He notes the word, the action,
Done in scorn.
Only a little service
By the way,
He'll reward the smallest effort
"In that day."
Only following Jesus
To the end;
And then his promised glory
He will send.

West Norwood. Maud Bussell.

WORK AT PONTYMOILE, MON.

During her recent visit to Wales, Lady Henry Somerset, who takes a warm interest in the work of the Undenominational Christian Mission at Pontymoile, near Pontypool, carried on by Mr. T. M. Wintle, spoke at a special meeting held in Wood-street Chapel, Cardiff, on behalf of the Mission.

Mr. John Cory, J.P., who presided, told of the founding of the Mission in 1878 at Pontymoile, near Pontypool, in a district inhabited largely by colliers, tin-plate workers, and iron and steel workers. Opening as a ragged school the Mission has extended in the direction of evangelistic work, temperance and social reform, and rescue work, and later an institute and reading-room for working men and women was built, with coffee-bar and reading-rooms, etc. To-day there are five halls and three Bible-carriages at work, while the average number of services held was seventy-one per week, with an average attendance of 7577 of a class that probably would not attend any other place of worship. To carry on this work five paid agents are employed.

After describing the many and varied operations of the Mission, Mr. Wintle, who is himself employed in mining work in the district, and attends to the spiritual welfare of the large populace around during his leisure hours, before and after his day's work, said that it was his wish to further extend the preventive and rescue work, to make the Bible carriages more self-supporting, and to greatly enlarge the scope of the prison gate and prison shelter work at the county gaol. There is, he said, at present a deficit of £200, which he is most anxious to remove.

Lady Henry Somerset, in the course of her address, said that it must have been brought home to all present that if such missions as Mr. Wintle's were spread over the country there would not be any necessity for pleading for what were often called the degraded classes. Her deep interest in the work in South Wales dated from some years ago, when she went to a mining town to hold a temperance mission. She was then so deeply impressed by the hundreds of careworn faces of workmen standing around, that the following summer she spent some time among them in that town, and had one of the happiest weeks of her life. Since her sojourn in South Wales, so closely had she been drawn towards the people, and realised their inner life that whenever she sat by a blazing fire she thought of the lives of toil and danger that the miners had to spend to obtain the coal. That feeling of love towards them impelled her, when there was a difficulty in getting the men together for meetings, to go down the mine to them and hold a meeting while the men were having their midday meal. She would always recollect that scene of darkness and dimness, and the little lights that were held aloft showing the rugged faces of the men, stained with their hard toil. In conclusion, she appealed for practical and hearty support for the mission.

A BRIGHT MISSIONARY CORNER.

In the picturesque Spanish town of Algeciras, facing Gibraltar, is a bright missionary work, carried on in much isolation, but with great blessing from the Lord. Three years ago I experienced the warm, kind feeling of the missionaries to a stranger, and now in revisiting them I am impressed with their whole spirit of kindness and love to the natives and to one another. It deserves the deep hold on the Spaniards which these missionaries have, and joined with this spirit their active zealous work has been blessed in the conversion of many souls and to the building up of others.

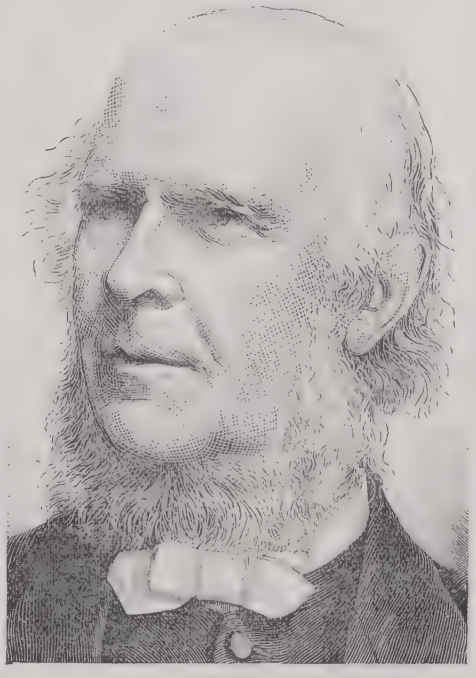
It is truly refreshing to come into such life, both in their simple happy home and in their evangelistic and school work. Through a pathway of much personal trial, some of their number have come to their present Christian life. One, who in the late months has been blessed to very many souls, now led of God into his full salvation—this one has lost in the last year his beloved wife, in a steamer wrecked on the coast of Portugal; and literally thus lost his all. Desolation could scarcely be greater than what thus fell on him. But as if it were to bring life eternal to a multitude out of the death of one most beloved, God has made his desolated child to be now marvellously used with new abounding Divine Grace. It is greatly on his heart to go itinerating to country parts adjoining in Andalusia, where the Spaniards are in deep darkness, but many are thankful to hear the Gospel, and some heartily receive it. A companion who is closely joined with him in true fellowship has this also on his heart, the work in Algeciras being able to spare them for these needy spots where the Gospel is not preached. Christians in England may well consider and help this excellent work, which the Lord has surely laid on the hearts of his two servants, while He has also made those dark Spaniards to desire their preaching the Gospel to them. Help to facilitate access to other places will be a great and direct blessing in the midst of the gross darkness covering this beautiful part of the South of Spain. Any further particulars I will gladly give. (Miss) C. Hanbury.

Tangier, Morocco.

ON THE UPPER CONGO.

Writing from Bongandanga Station, Lupori River, on July 10, Mr. H. G. Haupt, of the Congo-Balolo Mission, refers in terms of warm affection to the late Mr. T. Coote. He says:—

"I was his colleague, and alone with him for the last two months of his life. I nursed him through his fever and closed his eyes for the last rest. I made his coffin with my own hands, and laid him lovingly into the cool bosom of kind Mother Earth. His grave is not forgotten, but cared for; he sleeps beside Brother Scarnell 'until He comes.' I loved him as a brother, and can speak well of his devotion to his Master, and his great earnestness and zeal in the noble work of winning souls for Him. Alas! he was hardly permitted to attain to a sufficient knowledge to preach the Word of Life; like my own precious young wife, he was only permitted 'to look upon the fields.' God's ways and thoughts are not ours; 'tis not ours to reason why, but to trust Him wholly and fully. 'Some day, some time, we'll understand.'



"We have passed through dark times and trials, and the hand of God has been heavy upon us. I personally have experienced the furnace heat, but, praise God, always in the blessed company of one like the Son of man, according to Isaiah xliii. 2. God is blessing his Word here. Beside the two graves, only a few months old, there arise hymns of praise daily, and every Lord's Day witnesses the gathering of 30 or 40 native Christians to remember the Lord's death in the little chapel. We have a church of 46 members now; when Coote died there were only five Christians here."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a very old man, who is near his journey's end, but without God and without hope, that he may even now receive Christ Jesus.—For blessing upon the Railway Mission anniversary and fifteen days' special mission at New Cross.—For three weeks' mission by Mr. Henry Lakin, for the Doncaster branch of the Railway Mission, commencing October 15.—For blessing on a mission, conducted by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, at Southall, October 15 to 17.

THE LATE DR. J. EDMOND.

Yet another familiar figure in London religious circles has passed away in the death, last Saturday morning, of Rev. Dr. Edmond, pastor of Park Presbyterian Church, Highbury. He had attained his 78th year, of which fifty-two were spent in Gospel ministry. For some time he has been in failing health, but the illness that proved fatal was not of long duration. He was present at the induction, a few weeks ago, of Mr. Connell at Regent's-square. On Sabbath fortnight he preached in Park Church what proved to be his last sermon. Dr. Edmond has long been noted for his happy gift of addressing young people, and a children's sermon was his final pulpit message to his flock. His text was: "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," and the address was in his usual attractive and practical vein.

In the evening of the same day he walked a considerable distance to the Mission Hall in Hoxton, connected with his church. Here he spoke with much vigour, and walked home after the service. Next day he attended an important committee meeting, and was present in the evening at the meeting of his Presbytery. He went to bed feeling wearied, and never rose again.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, Baker Street, London, W.)

On Tuesday morning an attack of pleurisy developed itself, and for some days his condition alternated between great weakness and seeming recovery. On Friday, however, he began to sink rapidly, and, as stated, he passed away to his eternal rest on Saturday morning.

Some years ago we gave a detailed sketch of his ministerial career, so that we need not recapitulate now. He was a man of an ardent nature and wide sympathies, and was greatly beloved by those to whom he had long ministered in sacred things. For a number of years he has had the benefit of a colleague in Rev. P. Carmichael, who is now his successor. In a farewell interview with Mr. Carmichael on Friday his last words were, "Let duty be done"—not an unfitting epitaph for his long, active, and useful life.

The mortal remains of the deceased will be laid this day (Thursday) in Abney Park Cemetery, a service being held in Park Church at 2 p.m. Next Sunday morning a funeral sermon will be delivered in the church by his co-presbyter, Dr. Morison, of Westbourne-grove Church; in the evening Rev. R. Leitch, of Newcastle, will officiate.

Somewhat singularly, next Sabbath is "Children's Day" at Park Church, and in the afternoon some 400 young people will gather, but not to hear the gentle voice they loved so well. A week of special evangelistic meetings is about to be held in the church, beginning the following Sunday, the preacher being Rev. Mr. Davey, of Belfast. The solemn circumstances of the hour will, it is believed, predispose the people to hear and attend to the messages that will be addressed to them.

SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, K.C.B.

My sorrow is profound for thee, my brother:
Earth's noblest form instinct with nobler soul:
True son of the Eternal, for no other
Than Jesus Christ Himself had made thee whole.

Leader of sons of God, far in the van
Thou stoodst serene, immortal, undismayed;
Though hostile forces strove to cast their ban,
Thy track to glory was already made.

Long years of faithful witness thou hast borne,
Erect, undaunted, Christ's most holy Cross
Before the world, unheeding proud man's scorn,
Willing for his dear sake to suffer loss.

Thy torch with fire a hundred torches crowned,
Brands from the burning still make bridal light
To welcome back the Master from his round
Of other worlds and kingdoms out of sight.

How oft, thy hand upon the shoulder laid
Of some proud careless youth that met thee first
In rich saloon, Heaven's call was straight obeyed,
And one more life had quenched its deathless thirst.

Now rest is sweet, loved brother, prophet soul;
Sweet after toil to fall asleep in light—
The long sweet summer light of God's high goal,
Then wake immortal in thy Saviour's sight!

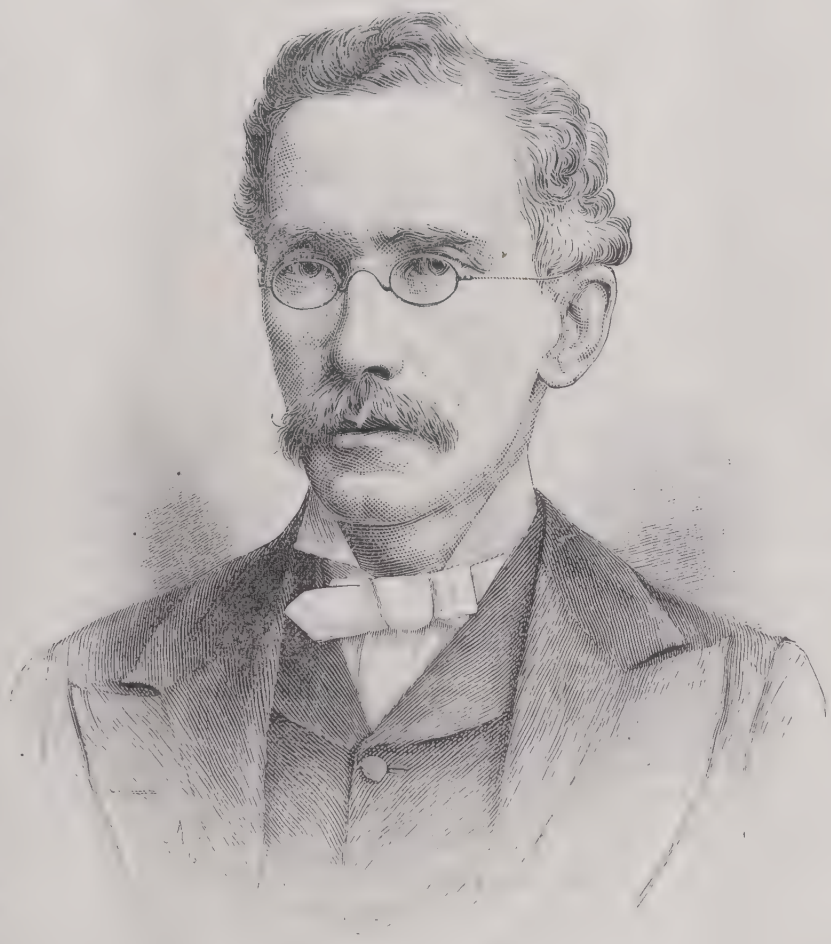
Charles A. Fox.

ARTHUR'S MISSION, SNOW'S FIELDS.

For thirty years a good work has been carried on in Snow's Fields in a building by no means well adapted for the purpose. At length this became so dilapidated that something, it was felt, must be done. Earnest prayer was made, and in due time God laid it on the heart of a bereaved mother to build a new mission hall in memory of her departed son, whose name the new building bears. This fine hall was opened on Thursday evening with much thankfulness to God.

Mr. C. Steinitz, who presided, reviewed the past, and indicated the marvellous way in which God had provided premises suitable to the work going on. Mr. S. R. Pearse said: When I look back upon the past, for nearly thirty years since we first commenced work in the old cowshed, and when I remember all the difficulties through which we have passed Sabbath by Sabbath for many years, winter and summer, I hardly know how to praise God enough. We bless God that during these years we saw his hand from the very commencement until to-night, and He who has guided us thus far will never leave us or forsake us. I bless God also that when I took the superintendence of the school almost from the very first I was surrounded by an earnest band of men and women. The dear friend who was first secretary of the school is at the present time a Congregational minister in Cambridge, and he is here to-night. When I look back, oh, how I rejoice! Why, I have seen dear friends in the old school, teachers in their classes with umbrellas over them because it rained, and the dear children were sitting receiving the drippings. In looking back, I bless God for spiritual work done. We have a number of young men and women here to-night who were led to Jesus Christ there. I have a letter here from one of them, and he says that some years ago he used to buy winkles to throw the shells at my Sunday hat, but now he is trusting in Christ. I bless God for the many who have confessed his name, and I pray that their number may be increased.

Addresses followed by Rev. J. W. Upton (first secretary of the Mission), Mr. T. Hoyland, Mrs. Jonathan Lynn, Mr. John Kirk, and others.



STRANGERS' REST.—At the monthly meeting for workers on Friday last (Mr. Shorey, chairman), very interesting accounts of missionary work were given by Miss Webb and Mr. Hutton, of the C.I.M., and also by Miss Leicester, late of Southampton. Miss Webb related more than one remarkable instance of reclaimed opium victims. The great need China has of Christ in political, religious, and social life, was urged by Mr. Hutton. Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, the Hon. Sec., in mentioning that the "shop" is now open from 11 till 10, instead of 2 till 9, asked for further help in the work. A new trap has been laid for the unwary sailor in the form of a Roman Catholic Mission recently opened close by.

REV. JAMES STALKER, D.D.,

FREE ST. MATTHEW'S, GLASGOW.

In his admirable speech at the recent Jubilee meeting of the Free Church General Assembly, Dr. Oswald Dykes said with much emphasis that the great movement which began with the Disruption owed far more to the strong Evangelical convictions of the rank and file of our Scottish commonalty than even to the signal influence of her leaders. The noble ministers who guided the exodus fought hard in the front of the battle; but the Free Church had never been the Church she is to-day had they not been supported by the unswerving loyalty of thousands of plain men and women, not only in our cities and towns, but in our country villages and highland glens.

The home in which the subject of our present sketch was born one February some years after the Disruption was exactly of this stamp. His father was a merchant in the Square of Crieff, the well-known beautiful health-resort of Strathearn. Casting in his lot with the Free Church congregation there, he speedily became one of its most respected and influential elders. One who knew the family well has told us that John Stalker was not merely a very godly man, but noted for his intelligence, shrewdness, and energy, in the whole community. No better training ground could have been found for one who was to be a minister of the Free Church, and was to exercise a wide and sympathetic influence on all classes of society.

(From a Photograph by Mr. R. G. Rettie, Kirkcaldy, N.B.)

James Stalker was always a very diligent pupil at school. From his earliest boyhood he was a thorough and painstaking, if not omnivorous, reader. A very common method of gaining additional time at school in those days was to become a "pupil teacher" or monitor of the junior classes of a school. James Stalker did not disdain to occupy this position, and diligently used the opportunities it afforded him of advancing in those subjects that were required for entering the University. Only, in the midst of this preparation, he did not forget to make a very resolute choice of "the better part," that could not be taken away from him. While yet a lad of about sixteen, he confessed his faith in Christ, and entered into full communion with the church. At this period also he had fully made up his mind to devote himself to the ministry of the Free Church.

In his preliminary training, the young student had, if we mistake not, the advantage of the admirable tuition of Rev. W. Ogilvie, M.A., then rector of Morrison's Academy at Crieff. So thorough was this preparation that instead of taking the lower classes of the first year at the University of Edinburgh, he was able to avail himself of a then recent ordinance by which a student, on passing a sufficiently testing examination, might enter at once on his second year. At this time he obtained by competition the Miller Scholarship of the New College, designed for young men at the University who are looking to the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland.

The honour just mentioned was but the precursor of many similar distinctions in the course of his stay at Edinburgh. The Scottish Churches, and particularly the Free Church, have always insisted on the necessity of a thoroughly educated ministry. The leaders of the Disruption saw that if ever their Church was to take a firm and wide grasp of the country, her pastors must from the outset be trained in every department of knowledge likely to make them efficient ministers of the Word and able defenders of the fundamental truths of Christianity. To this ideal the students of the Free Church as a rule have manfully striven to rise. Exceptional men, like John McNeill, who was an evangelist before he became a student, may not care to undergo the routine of a scientific training, or to aim at University honours. But the great majority feel it laid upon them to make full proof of all their gifts as students, and for the sake of their future work, as well as the reputation of their church, to win all the distinctions they can. This was the spirit in which James Stalker entered on his work at the University. The results fully justified his aspirations. He took an honourable place in every class, gaining some of the highest prizes, especially in English literature, philosophy, and classics.

After leaving the University, the aspirant to the ministry of the Free Church enters one of her well-equipped theological colleges. Mr. Stalker became a student at the New College, gaining at his entrance, as afterwards in his third year, the valuable Hamilton Scholarship, which relieves the successful student from all anxiety about "ways and means." Here, in men like Dr. A. B. Davidson, Dr. Rainy, and Dr. Blaikie, he came under the influence of minds quite as polished and fresh as those he had left, and dispensing a theological training as rich as can be found anywhere in Christendom. The result in his case was a corresponding fuller mental and spiritual development. To be under the tuition of Prof. Davidson in Hebrew, Chaldee, and Syriac, is to be at the feet of Gamaliel. Mr. Stalker took the first prize in his class. The calm wisdom of Dr. Rainy, and the broad, genial, ecclesiastical spirit of Dr. Blaikie, furnish the best atmosphere a student of theology can breathe. Mr. Stalker enjoyed it to the full, and turned all the advantages it conferred to the best account. Nor were the claims of other centres of learning overlooked. In the summer of 1872 he went to Berlin to hear the lectures of Dorner; in the following year he went to Halle, and there came under the influence of the veteran Tholuck, in a way that has left deep traces on his views of the Christian ministry and many other topics.

At the New College, Mr. Stalker continued his habit of mingling frequently and closely with the members of his own and other classes. Several of these were young men even of high gifts, such as the late Mr. Ewing, of Toorak; Henry Drummond, now professor in Glasgow; and Mr. Watson, of Sefton Park, Liverpool. Giving his best stimulus to them, he received in return, through their undisguised affection and admiration, the best possible impulse to the development of his mind and heart. The names of two other friends cannot be omitted. Mr. (afterwards Rev.) R. W. Barbour, of Bonskeid, whose studies he guided at this time, became a very helpful and beloved associate. So, also, was the minister of the congregation with which he was connected during all his stay in Edinburgh, Dr. J. Hood Wilson, of the Barclay Church. Different as were the pastor and the student in many respects, they were knit together by thorough confidence in the Gospel, loving sympathy with souls, and delight in intercourse with young men. It is a fitting tribute to the impulse Mr. Stalker received at this time, that the most prominent picture over his study mantelpiece in Glasgow is a large portrait of Dr. Wilson. After crowning his earlier distinctions by occupying the secretaryship of the Theological Society, the presidency of the Missionary Society, and winning the first Cunningham Fellowship, he became assistant in the Barclay Church, and at once began to exhibit the preaching gifts which speedily led to his being ordained a minister at Kirkcaldy, and which have since made him one of the most prominent of the younger ministers of the Free Church.

The grand characteristic of Mr. Stalker as a preacher is his intense loving desire to make a direct impression for Christ on the souls of young and old around him. As he said to the students of Yale College, America, "When I first was settled in a church, I discovered a thing of which nobody had told me, and which I had not anticipated, but which proved a tremendous aid in doing the work of the ministry. I fell in love with my congregation." It is the sympathy with those he has to do with that constrains this preacher to simplify his presentments of truth as he does, It is a mistake to suppose that he is lacking in power of thought. The keen eye that glances beneath the high, deeply-lined forehead tells of a fine faculty of penetration. But when he speaks, he must speak so as to be thoroughly understood. Hence arises his instinct for the picturesque aspects of truth. He does not count it enough to convince the intellect. Like the Master whom he serves, he must put the truth in a form that will reach the heart and fire the imagination and abide in memory and conscience.

After helping to build the noble church of St. Brycedale, in Kirkcaldy, at a cost of about £20,000, and spending there a happy ministry of about thirteen years, Mr. Stalker accepted, in 1887, a call to Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow. This large and influential congregation was formed under the ministry of the late Dr. Samuel Miller, and had also been ministered to by two excellent junior colleagues, Mr. Watson, now of Liverpool, and Mr. C. A. Salmond, now of Edinburgh. Under Mr. Stalker, the church, if perhaps not so wealthy, is at least fuller and more active than at any previous period of its history. Here also he continues to cultivate the literary gifts by which he is now so widely known, not only in Britain but also in America. While still in Kirkcaldy, Mr. Stalker published a Life of Christ (1879) in the series of Bible-class Handbooks (T. & T. Clark). This little volume was at once recognised as having a style and flavour entirely its own. By its keen spiritual insight, its fresh language, and exquisite finish, it at once took a unique place in this department of literature, and won for itself a very wide welcome. It has since been translated into French, German, Norwegian, Spanish, and, in part at least, into one or two Eastern languages besides. At various intervals there have followed The New Song (1883), The Life of St. Paul (1884), Imago Christi (1889), The Preacher and his Models (1891), and The Four Men (1892), all of them marked by the same attractive features. It was a well-merited recognition of this excellent service that in 1891 the University of Glasgow honoured him with the degree of D.D.

While devoting himself to the duties of the pastorate and the study, Dr. Stalker has always taken a strong interest in public questions. A loyal friend of the Y.M.C.A., a warm advocate of the temperance cause, and a champion of social reform, he has also given marked attention to the problems of the day in the field of Biblical criticism, especially the Old Testament. Here it is gratifying to be able to record that he has never lost his head amid the noise and dust of this controversy. While quite free to accept all really ascertained facts, Dr. Stalker is still practically on the conservative side, and, as in his recent correspondence with Professor G. Adam Smith, does not hesitate to indicate that the modern critic has much need both of bit and bridle.

This is not the place to write much of a living minister's home life. Dr. Stalker has in his time drunk deeply enough of the cup of grief. In the loss of the bright young partner of his manse at Kirkcaldy he suffered a blow from which it took much time to recover. But he has also rich draughts of happiness. His many friends over the country always minister much warm encouragement. The lady who now shares his home in Glasgow, a daughter of the late Mr. F. Brown Douglas, of Melville, formerly Lord Provost of Edinburgh, has a large stock of the spiritual intelligence and loving kindness and practical sagacity that distinguish her husband. In the sweet and quaint little ones that play around their hearth they have much present delight and the hope of joys to come. All Dr. Stalker's friends fondly wish that he may be spared to continue his work in Glasgow, and in due time take the place of still higher influence among the younger ministry of the Church that seems plainly destined for him.

YES, LORD!

(Mark vii. 28).

Lines suggested by a short address given by a lady at the recent Salisbury Conference.

A stranger she, and not of Israel's race,
Could she not therefore claim Messiah's grace?
Had she not all that sinners have to plead,
Just his great pity, and her urgent need?

And yet, alas! it seems in vain to crave,
Since He who can, unwilling is to save,
The One by whom alone she might be fed,
Could see her hungry, and refuse the bread!

She is not faithless, and can trust Him still,
She knows his power—dare she doubt his will?
She will not let Him go, unless He bless,
So when denied, she only answers "Yes."

"Yes, Master, all that Thou hast said is true,
The children's bread is only for the Jew;
Yet like a dog, I'll take the children's crumbs,
I want the blessing, howsoe'er it comes."

O wondrous faith! more wondrous scheme of love,
Which makes us weak, to test the strength above;
Which keeps us waiting, only to receive,
And holds back nothing, if we will believe.

I may not question Him, nor ask Him "Why?"
'Tis his to give, his wisdom to deny.
Yet may I plead, and tell Him all my grief,
He may see well to send his child relief.

But if not, Lord, let me submit to Thee,
Mine eyes are dim, the future Thou canst see,
And if the present brings some sore distress,
Grant me to own thy sway, and answer "Yes."

C. B. S.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE, GLASGOW.

It was truly a privilege to be at this Conference in St. George's Tent, on Saturday, September 30, and Lord's Day, October 1. It was in my experience unique in the fervour, freedom, and freshness which characterised it. These gatherings of believers are convened annually, and are a most fitting close to the summer campaign in the large tent capable of holding 1000 people. This branch of the work at Garscube Hall has been carried on with great blessing for many years past, and the numerous clear testimonies to God's saving grace during the past three months by those who had been blessed were very cheering. In some cases whole families had been brought in.

Mr. David J. Findlay, the director of the work, presided at all the meetings of the Conference, which were crowded throughout. On Saturday afternoon and evening the bulk of the large audience showed their interest by remaining seated in the tent for six solid hours, listening to powerful and stirring addresses from workers in the home and foreign fields.

The opening word was given by Mr. John Anderson, of the Bible Training Institution and South Morocco Mission, who spoke most helpfully from Isaiah xl. 26-31. Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., evangelist, followed with a powerful message on the "Anointing of the Holy Ghost" (Ps. xxiii. 5). Messrs. Archd. Annand and Walter Sloan spoke of China and its needs; the former pointed out that almost the entire opposition to Gospel work in China is from the educated classes. Mr. Edward Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, next took us in a few minutes on a mission tour through the countries fringing the southern shores of the Mediterranean, and showed us some of the difficulties, as well as the encouragements, of the work among the Moslems and others.

We had next a straight talk about our individual responsibility for the evangelisation of the heathen from Dr. Harry Guinness. He told of a man in London who was sure his work was at home, as he had reason to believe that the Lord had blessed him to some souls! As if anyone who was not used of God at home ought ever to think of being a missionary! Mrs. Spencer Walton followed with a graphic account of God's work in South Africa, and the many open doors which waited for labourers to enter them. Mr. W. D. Dunn, who had just closed a fortnight's mission in the tent, spoke stirringly on "The presence of God with his people." After a short exhortation and a touching solo by Gipsy Smith, Mr. James N. Carr, of Carlisle, gave the closing word, which was specially addressed to young converts, from Deut. xxxi. 6-8, Jos. i. 6-7.

From six in the morning till ten at night the Lord's Day was fully occupied. The forenoon gathering was addressed by Mr. Edward Glenny on Col. i. 9-14 and Mr. Wm. Thomson, jun., on "The Christ life: Its formation and manifestation." In the afternoon Pastor Fanstone made a pathetic plea for Brazil: and all were touched as this brother held up his crutch, and told how the missionary societies had refused to send him to the foreign field, as they only accepted able-bodied men. But God had sent him to Brazil, where he had laboured for fourteen years. Mr. Lamb, from Kabylia, and Mrs. Webster, of Rochdale, followed with addresses, when Mr. Whytock, Congo Balolo Mission, spoke of God's work on the Congo and the present great need for labourers.

The evening meeting saw the tent packed out. Mr. Sloan spoke from Num. xiii., "The Spies," and Mr. Findlay delivered a weighty and pungent address from 2 Kings vii. These blessed and refreshing meetings were appropriately brought to a close by a large gathering at the Lord's table. Friends will be interested to know that the plans for the erection of a large hall and accessory rooms have been passed by the city authorities, and that already the work is in progress. The name it will bear is "St. George's Cross Tabernacle." P. W.

THE HOUSE OF REST.—On Friday the monthly meetings were resumed at the House of Rest, St. John's Wood. The Pillar Room on both occasions was crowded, and there was evidence that many were glad to meet once more within its walls. In the afternoon Rev. John Wilkinson gave an address on "The Jewish Nation." In the evening Mr. Reader Harris led a conference on the deepening of spiritual life.

The Church Congress.

The Church Congress at Birmingham last week was very largely attended. In the words of The Record, which reported the proceedings with great fulness, it "will be known in the future as one of conspicuous usefulness and pronounced success. It will have given a strong impulse to some practical movements of urgency and value; it will have touched the popular imagination in an unusual degree. It has shown itself to be more in touch with the life of the nation, more conscious of what are real necessities and perplexities of the time, more free from the merely sentimental or academic."

On the Sunday of the Congress week visiting clergymen preached from the church pulpits. In the afternoon a series of working men's meetings was inaugurated, Archdeacon Farrar giving an address before an audience of several thousands. In support of the Forward Movement of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, a large meeting was held on Monday afternoon, at which Archdeacon Sinclair read a paper on "The Present Position and Responsibilities of Evangelical Churchmen." He said: We look upon the Reformation, not with any superstitious reverence, but as a Divine deliverance, a unique crisis, when opinions were sifted with a thoroughness of learning and a loyalty of spirit which are not likely to occur again. We have no wish to bring on once more such a crisis, but are gratefully content with the inestimable benefits it has won for us and for our people. Yet, it is our duty to make the whole English people aware that a very large number of zealous men, who have sworn allegiance to the Reformed Church, and to none other, are openly and avowedly determined to restore the distinct and alien services of the unreformed Church.

The official reception on Tuesday morning was very hearty. An address was afterwards presented by a deputation of Nonconformists, headed by Dr. Young, Principal of the Wesleyan College at Handsworth. In reply, the Bishop of Worcester spoke of the happiness he felt in working with Nonconformists. During his fourteen years' work on the Old Testament Revision Committee no one asked or thought of the denomination to which his neighbour belonged, for, added the Bishop,

"THE BIBLE MADE US ONE."

Referring to reunion, the speaker said he should never forget the service of Holy Communion in which he was privileged to take part last year at Grindelwald, when Churchmen and Nonconformists knelt side by side at the Lord's Table. It seemed a blissful vision of the realisation of Christ's prayer regarding his Church "that they all may be one." In the evening the inaugural sermons were preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury at St. Martin's, the Bishop of Durham at St. Philip's, and Archdeacon Farrar at St. George's. Enlarging upon the work of the Church, Dr. Farrar urged that she must be a teaching, witnessing, pastoral, beneficent, evangelistic, militant Church, and an inspiring force of hope and energy.

In the course of his presidential address, the Bishop of Worcester referred to many subjects, ecclesiastical, political, and religious. He said: I do not forget, I thankfully acknowledge, the efforts of the various Nonconformist bodies to bring the message of Christ's love and peace into the homes and to the hearts of the toiling, suffering masses. The "Federation of Churches" which they have lately started shows that they are fully alive to the moral and spiritual destitution of Birmingham. It is an attempt to bring about a more united action among themselves; it is expressive of a desire not to hinder spiritual work anywhere, but for them to consolidate and strengthen it, whether it is done by Nonconformists or Churchmen. But nothing can supersede or make up for the work of the National Church. I do not mean that we are to proselytise. It is a paltry ambition to win converts from Nonconformity; it is a noble ambition to win converts from vice and sin. This is the work to which God calls us. This is the work for which it is my earnest hope and prayer this gathering of the Church Congress in Birmingham will inspire us. Papers were afterwards read on the increase of the Episcopate, with special reference to the proposed founding of a see with Birmingham for its centre.

Religious education was discussed in papers read by the Dean of St. Asaph and the Rev. the Hon. Edward Lyttelton. The latter, in conclusion, urged: It cannot be amiss for all those who are engaged in the religious education of the home to remind themselves frequently of the tremendous fact that the Omnipotent God has so committed the welfare of each young soul to those by whom it is trained, that though all the imperceptible growth in the spiritual life is his gift, the share in the work which belongs peculiarly to man is absolutely necessary to the final issue, no less so than the preparing of the soil of the earth for the glory of the perfect flower. In the course of discussion, Dr. Percival, of Rugby, said that the head masters of the public schools have come to the conclusion that religious education should in school be given to all the boys at once, and not in sections, and no other policy could, to anything like the same extent, strengthen the hold of the Church upon the English nation. In an experience of thirty years he had found no Nonconformist parents who had objected to their sons attending the Church services, and receiving the ordinary religious teaching of the public school. Many who are outside the Church of England are now ten times better friends to her than they would have been had they been put in a Nonconformist section and not received their religious training as members of the school as a whole.

In the evening the obligation and observance of the Lord's Day was considered at a meeting presided over by the Archbishop of Dublin. In the course of a valuable paper, Canon Edmonds maintained that the Sabbath does not rest on the Fourth Commandment. It is before it; it owes nothing of its permanent obligation to it. It is made for man—not man in this dispensation or in that. The Canon proceeded: Just as it narrows the breadth of our Lord's words, to rest the authority of the Lord's Day on the Fourth Commandment, so, it would seem, notwithstanding much and high authority amongst English divines, would it narrow them still further to rest the sanction of the Lord's Day upon the authority of the apostles or of the apostolic Church. There is something, some recognisable institution, something that can be called by a name, by whatever name we call it, "which was made for man." That gift, like the Giver, who sometimes appeared in glory and sometimes without form or comeliness, and yet was the same on the Mount of Transfiguration as when He wore the crown of thorns, has come to man in legal hardness and in Gospel liberty. Under both forms the Divine intention can be made of none effect. A Jewish Sabbath, interpreted by a Jewish Rabbi, was a burden that no man could bear. A Christian Sunday, interpreted in a secularist spirit, can be spent riotously in a far country. Under both forms what was made for man has been sacrificed. Under both forms what was made for man has been discerned and enjoyed.

"THE SABBATH WAS MADE FOR MAN,"

The Lord's-day is not for rest only, nor for worship only, nor only for rest and worship together. Come unto Me, all ye that labour, and I will refresh you. Yes, it is for refreshment. O ye winds of God, bless ye the Lord. Awake, O north wind, breathe upon our physical and mental nature; and come, thou south, and blow upon the garden of the soul, that the spices thereof may flow out. Regard for the health of the spirit is the guiding principle of Christians in the exercise of their personal liberty as Christians; and what is lawful to them under such conditions for their individual refreshment, it must be lawful to them in their capacity as citizens to co-operate with the State to provide for the poor. I do not doubt that we, to our advantage, are less Sabbatarian on the Lord's day than we were a generation ago; and it is likely that, if we were more in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, it would be certain that the Sabbatarian element might yet more fully give place to the free spirit of God's children. For though legislative restrictions of labour and protective Sabbatarian traditions are together of immense importance as "a serviceable breakwater" against a tidal wave of secularism, the only sure defences of the Lord's Day are the four square walls of the city of God itself. If we be risen with Christ it will be our Easter Day; if there be fellowship of the Spirit it will be our Pentecostal Day. To us who believe is its preciousness: salvation will God appoint for its walls and bulwarks.

After an address by Mr. C. J. Blagg against the opening of museums and art galleries on the Lord's Day, in the course of discussion, Rev. E. A. Stuart spoke. He held that the Lord's-day should be not only a day of rest worthy of the name, but as one of family reunion, a corner-stone of family life. In great cities the young people in houses of business present a special difficulty. They cannot join the home circle. Some business houses will not allow them to come in before ten o'clock at night, with the result that the hours between eight and ten, during which these young people are forced to walk the streets, are full of danger and temptation. He suggested the throwing open of Christian homes to supply the lack of social and family life for these young men and women. Rev. Dr. Peake, Secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, in an able speech, described a Sunday excursion from Paddington, in which four or five trains full of people started for the coast. In going and returning they spent fifteen hours in the vitiated atmosphere of the overcrowded trains, and only nine out of the twenty-four in what might possibly be for the sanctification even of their bodies!

On Wednesday morning Lord Halifax read a paper on "Church Reform." This was a High Church brief, advocating sacramentarian and other

ROMISH ERRORS AND EXCESSES.

The antidote was quickly supplied by Sir C. Robert Lighton. Natural man, he said, has corrupted the spiritual worship of the Gospel dispensation, which to the spiritual man is far more glorious than that of the old; he, living by faith and not by sight, is in touch with God, and God with him. But the natural man knows nothing of this; he sighs for the (to him) more glorious external rites of the old, and has made his religion, as it has been truly said, to consist in "varied and gorgeous dresses and decorations, postures of the body, sprinklings with so-called holy water, and soft sounds of elaborate music exciting the imagination, and creating the deceitful appearance of devotional feeling," and step by step has learnt to falsely worship God; for wherever the doctrine of Transubstantiation is maintained, or the Real Presence is taught, there altars have arisen, Masses have multiplied, and the idolatry of the worshippers is proclaimed aloud; they profess their God to be in the changed bread, or in the mysterious Real Presence in the elements. To them the sacrifice of Christ appears insufficient; they therefore repeat it, and in the repetition it is dramatised to the senses. The purpose for which our blessed Lord died was not accomplished; his words, "It is finished," were not true; an offering there still must be, expiation must still be made, man must do what Christ could not, and amidst clouds of incense and strains of music they elevate the Host, and Christ the Lord of Glory is again and again offered up by man to God. Is not this false symbolism, false worship, idolatry?

In conclusion, Sir Robert said: Symbolism is an aid to worship to be jealously watched; it so soon passes into formalism, and then furnishes a false religion to the careless and the worldly. Symbolism should only be regarded as purely secondary, inasmuch as man's corporeal nature is lower than his spiritual; but when it is cultivated for its own sake, and dares to represent itself as a vehicle for man's access to the Father, then its use has become an abuse, and, like Nehushtan of old, we must away with it as the very beginning of idolatry. When our Lord would sum up in a word the kind of worship He required, it was simply "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." And any symbolism which emasculates this must of necessity detract from true worship. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Archdeacon Farrar, in a thoughtful address, declared the Sunday services of the Church, when absolutely conformed to the rubrics, to be too long, too repetitive, too formal, and too inelastic. He maintained that Churchmen would be faithless to the spirit of the Prayer-book and its teaching, if they allowed it to remain stereotyped for ever. He pleaded for more liberty in the ordering of public worship. Canon Venables advocated a mild reform. In the course of discussion, Archdeacon Perowne controverted the Ritualistic assumption that the Christian service is based on the worship of the Jewish Church. Did Holy Scripture represent our Lord in heaven as re-presenting the sacrifice which He offered on earth? Emphatically it did not. A sacrificing priest did not sit on the right hand of God, neither did the priests of old offer the sacrifice within the Holy of Holies. The symbolism therefore failed. The word hiereus (priest) was never used of the ministry, but of the whole Christian Church. Though yielding to no man in his love and reverence for the service of Holy Communion, the Archdeacon protested against its being exalted out of due proportion.

The subject of preaching was discussed before a large audience, Mr. James Kenward insisting upon the need of a Preaching Order. A paper in support was read by Canon Bowers. The Dean of Armagh feared that the establishment of such an order would be letting off the clergy too easily, for they should not be relieved of the burden which lay upon them before God to preach.

The Parish Councils Bill was the subject of papers by Chancellor Dibdin and Mr. P. V. Smith. Local and labour questions were discussed in addresses by Mr. A. M. Chance and Archdeacon Wilson, the former being very practical because embodying an account of personal effort on behalf of employés. Home Missions was the subject on Wednesday evening, Canon Allan Smith reading a very suggestive paper.

On Thursday morning Mr. Gilbert Child introduced a discussion on "The Church of England in relation to OTHER BODIES OF CHRISTIANS."

Rev. Charles Gore being called upon to speak, a scene was enacted by Father Ignatius claiming to speak "in the name of Jesus Christ." The Archbishop of Dublin said: The very existence of this Congress is a manifestation of unity in diversity which should encourage those who are almost inclined to despair of success. Amid grave divisions there is an underlying spirit of unity and brotherly love. No one could say that the differences between ourselves and Nonconformists are less than those which exist amongst ourselves. Why should we not hope for unity in diversity with these two? After Professor Stokes, of Dublin, came Rev. H. C. G. Moule, who asked his hearers what they had done towards cultivating friendly relations with individual Nonconformists. The opportunities he had obtained had been blessed in many ways. At Keswick Convention, for instance, where 10,000 or 12,000 Christians meet around their personal Lord, there was a realisation of the union of the members and the Head not met with elsewhere.

The Bishop of Worcester stated his own view and defended his own action at Grindelwald. He said: I believe episcopacy to be the best form of church government, but I am not going to say it is the only form of church government. The Act of Uniformity may be brought up against me. Well, I must make you a present of that. I wish we were well rid of it. It is a most terrible fetter round the neck of the Church. There is something deeper, truer, and more holy than any church organisation, and that is to love and worship our Master, Christ; and in all our divisions the closer we have fellowship with Him, the more we shall rejoice in the Communion of Saints.

On Friday, the final day of the Congress, among the subjects considered was that of the disposal of the dead. Cremation had its advocates. Earth-to-earth burial was championed by Mr. F. Seymour Haden, who expressed his surprise, not to say regret, that a subject so retrograde in its character as cremation, and so singularly out of harmony with the dispensation under which we live, should find a platform, of all places in the world, in a Congress of the Church of England.

THE PRESS

in its relation to the Church was introduced by Mr. Thackeray Bunce. Rev. J. E. C. Welldon, headmaster of Harrow, vigorously denounced "realistic" literature, and attacked the publication of sensational news and divorce court details.

The name of M. Zola having been mentioned, Sir Hugh Gilzean Reid explained that he was invited to London by the Institute of Journalists, not as a writer of novels, but as a contributor to newspapers. The Bishop of Worcester, replying to this, said he could not cut a man into two pieces, and say one half is a newspaper writer and the other half a writer of novels. Nothing, he proceeded, has seemed to me so painful in our late history, as the reception of a man in London with all sorts of honour, who has spent his life in corrupting and defiling not only the minds and souls of thousands of his fellow-countrymen, and especially the young, but also, by the translation of his works, thousands and hundreds of thousands of young souls elsewhere; and nothing has pained me more than to see respectable newspapers one after another apologising for the reception of M. Zola in England, and trying to make light of his immoral publications.

The Congress will visit Exeter in 1894.

[1054]

Baptist Missionary Society.

Tuesday was the missionary day at the Baptist Union Meetings in Reading. A goodly number were present at the missionary breakfast, and a still larger number gathered when the Conference began. The paper read by Mr. Wm. Payne was a good introduction to the discussion.

Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., spoke with much force and feeling. He contrasted the readiness with which parents sent out their sons to take positions in the Civil Service in India, with the unreadiness sometimes manifested in connection with missionary work. Was it because a salary of about £400 a year, without the prospect of a considerable advance upon that, was a prize more eagerly desired than the reward promised to those who turn many to righteousness? He told of a young engineer who, after attending a missionary meeting, said to his father: "I cannot waste my life in building bridges and constructing roads; it is not good enough. I am going to be a missionary."

The speech of Rev. Hubert Brooke (St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Reading) was listened to with the deepest interest. He said that the question now before the Church of Jesus Christ was this: "Were they going to obey his call to preach the Gospel to every creature?" The call could be obeyed with ease, but it would take every living church to obey it. In the Mission field there was room enough and to spare for them all. They needed to face the duty with the spirit of faith that says: "It shall be done." It had been customary to speak of Foreign Mission work as the duty of the whole Church, and of the special individuals set apart for it. But we needed also to recognise a congregational responsibility in this work. From every Mission station there came the same complaint—the station is undermanned, and the missionaries are overworked. The response to their appeal would be met if each church was like that at Antioch. Barnabas and Saul did not go out as missionaries in response to the general call given by the Lord before his ascension; nor to the special call given some time before to Paul; but the call came to the congregation as a whole. Three features marked that church. (1) It was consecrated. It was while "they ministered to the Lord and fasted." (2) It was sacrificing. The term for "Separate me Barnabas and Saul" was the same in the LXX. as that used when Israel was commanded to separate the Levites as a wave offering before the Lord. And (3) it became a church represented in the mission field. The ideal church would be able to answer the question, "Who is your minister?" and another question, "Who is your missionary?" Church members at home should be taught that besides the question which they had all asked, "What must I do to be saved?" there is another question no less important for them to ask, "What wilt thou have me to do?" Consecration ought to be recognised as a part of true conversion.

Mr. Brooke said it seemed strange to him to read that the churches had raised £100,000 as a centenary gift, and yet there was a debt of £12,000 on the Society's account. What! (he asked) were they generous before they were just? He noticed that 1700 churches at home supported 120 missionaries in the foreign field. So that it took just fourteen churches to support one missionary. He suggested that in many churches there were 120 persons who could give one penny a day, and the £150 required for the support of a missionary would be raised. How should it be done? When he was a smoker he spent a shilling a week on tobacco; since he had given up the habit he had set free that 52s. a year for any good work. Perhaps that would indicate where some of the gentlemen could find their penny a day. He heard of a lady in Canada who during Lent saved so much by her plainer living as to be able to buy herself a new bonnet. Would that indicate where some of the ladies could find their penny a day?

Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, pleaded that in the home there should be more conversation and reading about what transpired on the mission field.

After the reading of a letter from Mr. R. C. Morgan, which emphasised a scheme on the lines of that which Mr. Brooke had suggested, it was time to adjourn to the large hall. There was no time therefore for free conference. This was rather to be regretted, as something of a useful and practical nature might have resulted from it.

The sermon by Dr. Parker was listened to with deepest interest, and not infrequently with applause. His theme was "The Immeasurable Altar," suggested by Ezek. xliii. 13. It abounded with original and suggestive points, and was delivered in Dr. Parker's own remarkable style, dramatic, passionate, tender, humorous. Here are some of its many striking passages:—"The use of the measurable is to point to the immeasurable. At first we are greatly taken by bulk, by magnitude, and we talk of the great mountains and the great seas. It fits our age well; we shall outgrow it. Great mountains! Why, a child, give him time, can climb to the top of every one of them, and wave a banner there. . . . The man who has communed with God fears no opponent. Goliath looked so huge when I saw him from the human standpoint, but after five minutes with God I sought him, and he could not be found. . . . There are many persons who say they read the Bible through. You cannot. You have never read the Bible until you have read the spirit of it, got into sympathy with its song. . . . There are those, with measuring lines in their hands, who say, 'Now, do you think prayer is ever answered?' They never pray. I say it solemnly. . . They may use the language of prayer, they may respond to prayers that are read, they may say words that have a devout colour and tone, but that is not prayer. The goal of prayer is "Nevertheless not my will but thine be done." When a man has said that he can add, "Though He slay me yet will I trust in Him." Young souls, do not be disturbed by the people who write about the answerableness or non-answerableness of prayer. The best answer to every attack upon the altar is prayer; the best answer to every assault upon the Bible is another edition of 10,000. . . We see the cross no more after its cubit measures. The cross was measurable, the Roman foot-rule was laid upon it—so much vertical, so much horizontal, so much in weight—was that the cross? No! That was the Roman gallows. Who can measure the word 'atone?' Where was the atonement rendered? In eternity! When did Christ die? He is the Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world. Before the sin was done the atonement was made! . . . This gives us a new view of all our Society reports and all our Church work. 'We only added one man to the Church last year.' 'Who was he?' 'I think his name was William Carey.' When you added William Carey to the Church you added India! . . . Small spheres do not mean small service. You can measure your ministry by the cubit, and not measure by the spiritual lastingness and amplitude of it as viewed by God."

THE VALEDICTORY SERVICE

in the afternoon was necessarily long, but impressive. There were four young men going out as missionaries to India, and seven others returning to their work in various fields of labour. Mr. Baynes introduced all the eleven, giving a brief and interesting account of each one. The whole eleven followed with brief addresses; and Professor Medley gave the valedictory address; and the venerable John Aldis commended all the missionaries to God in a childlike and trustful prayer. One of the outgoing missionaries, in telling what had led him to offer himself for missionary work, mentioned a certain tombstone in a cemetery he often visited as a boy. The stone bore the following inscription:—"When I grow up to be a man I would like to be a missionary; but if I die when I am a little boy, put it on my memorial stone, that someone seeing it may go instead of me."

THE PUBLIC MISSIONARY MEETING

in the evening was held in Trinity Congregational Church. Rev. W. Holman Bentley, in his quiet manner, told a most interesting story of brave work done, whose value in God's sight will be much greater than yet can be realised. It is surely something that in a country practically unknown fourteen years ago, there should now be a line of stations extending a thousand miles into the interior. Six years ago he and his wife found the people at Bolobo so surly and defiant that if they had not been unwilling to go they would have been driven away by force. This is now the dockyard of the Mission. A station is now planted at Monsembe, where formerly the cannibalism of the people had rendered it impossible for them to land. The work of translation has gone on successfully. The whole of the New Testament is translated, and is now being published by the British and Foreign Bible Society. "More about Jesus" and "Peep of Day" have also been translated and printed, besides some books needed for school work.

After a fervent address by Rev. E. G. Gage, of Regent's Park Chapel, a narrative full of pathos and power was given by Rev. R. Wright Hay. The incidents he told were of the most interesting character. Here are two of them:—"One day a Hindu ascetic approached the mission-house. He was a strange-looking man, with matted hair, ashes on his face, and clad in a yellow robe. He carried in his hand a long crooked staff. My little girl noticed him approaching. She had been learning to sing, 'I'm a little soldier, though only four years old,' and had somehow associated with fighting the possession of such a staff. She went up to the man, and drew the staff towards her, saying, 'I mean to fight for Jesus.' He yielded the staff into her hands, and then prostrated himself on his face, spread out his hands, and prayed aloud, 'O God, teach me what it is to fight for Jesus, and as the child has taken away my staff, take away from me all inclination to lean on my own efforts for salvation, and may I lean only on Christ.' He arose and begged me to put his staff in my 'praying room,' and when I looked on it to pray for him. See how Emmanuel (God with us) used the audacity and tenderness of a little child to bring a Hindu ascetic out of the jungle of perplexing ideas to something of the liberty Christ has provided for all men, and also that He who prompted the prayer offered is the One who answers prayer. And so far there is evidence that his prayer is being answered. He is no longer an ascetic, but has washed his face, clothed himself like a sane man, and gone back to wife and children he had left, and is reading for himself the Word of God."

The second is even more striking:—"The day after my arrival in Dacca I was introduced in a most unlooked-for way to one of the most influential men in the whole city. I said to him—I know not why, except that I felt it—'We shall know each other better soon.' Some time after he came to me, repeated what I had said, and said he desired to know me better. He was the leader of a considerable religious community, which had its headquarters in Dacca, but was spread all over Eastern Bengal. Every member of the community had turned away from idolatry and renounced caste, and prayed twice a day, 'Lead me from untruth to truth, from darkness to light, from death to life.' It was a great privilege to speak to such a man of One who said, 'I am the Truth,' 'I am the Light.' We got to know each other very soon. His heart was longing for the Christ. It was my privilege to preach Him to him.

"In the autumn of 1888 this man came to me to ask me to take part in the annual festival of his religious community. I said he must distinguish between friendship for himself and identification with his religious system. He said: 'I want you to come into our midst as a Christian, only let me prescribe the subject of address.' I was curious to know what subject he would wish a Christian to speak on to his followers. It was 'the doctrine of the new birth.' He said: 'We have renounced the false teaching of a new birth held by the Brahmas, whereas you have also a doctrine of a new birth, and we would like to know what it is.' This brought about what to me was a unique privilege. I took the leader's place, and read John iii. 1-16, and emphasised the two great solemn imperatives in that passage, 'Ye must be born again,' and 'So must the Son of man be lifted up.' There was wonderful power in the meeting. Strong men were weeping while I sought to deliver the truth as it is in Jesus.

"I can't describe the intercourse during the following year, but when the next anniversary came round he came and thanked me for my previous address and asked me to come again, and, not waiting for an answer, he burst into tears, saying, 'Come, and just preach Christ. It is Christ I need and my country needs.' I asked if he was willing to advertise in the paper he edited, and which was circulated throughout the district, that Christ would be preached in the gathering of his community. He said he was. I drew out an advertisement, and it appeared. The place was filled, Mohammedans and Hindus, as well as members of the Somaj, being present. For two hours I preached Christ to those people.

"A year passed. It was impossible for me to attend again, as I was away from home; but before I went I had the joy of baptizing one of the brightest and ablest of that community. When the meetings came, my place as foreign missionary was taken by a young Bengalee, a member of the society, who stood before his fellows, and who prayed the prayer I have mentioned, and told them he had found the answer to that prayer in Christ. His subject was not 'From Hinduism to Christianity,' but 'My sin and my Saviour.' Notice the sequence: (1) a doctrine; (2) Christ Himself; and (3) a personal testimony by one of themselves that Christ had become his. One of the older members of that Somaj wished that the paper should be printed. It has been done and largely circulated, and I have had many letters testifying to the fact that its testimony has brought many to Jesus."

EAST LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

The anniversary of the Wesleyan East-end Mission was celebrated on Wednesday last week at Stepney Temple, Commercial-road. In the morning Rev. F. B. Meyer preached from Eph. ii. 10 and 2 Tim. ii. 21. Luncheon was afterwards partaken of, at which Rev. Peter Thompson, superintendent of the Mission, speaking of the state of the Mission as a whole, said he believed the spirit of prayer and faith was never so deep as now. Very practical help was given by suburban friends. The financial year had opened with a deficit owing to the heavy claims of the distressed poor in the spring. The outlook, too, for the coming winter was very gloomy, in consequence of the coal war, and these things, together with the alterations at Mile-End, would necessitate contributions from outside of quite £3000.

At the afternoon meeting, presided over by Mrs. Steward, of Ongar, several of the lady workers made statements. Miss Starling had much to the point to say as to the cheer brought to the hearts of sad women in the neighbourhood by conversation with the district visitors. Miss Budgett, who labours amongst the children, said they manage to make themselves happy after a fashion, except when the weather was bitterly cold. The lives of the women were very narrow and hard, yet amid all their troubles and hardships there was wonderful evidence of trust in God. Describing the children's meetings, which are attended on an average by 600 or 700 children, Miss Budgett gave instances of the improvement in morals and manners manifested by some of them. Miss Florence Bennett had interesting stories to tell of the old people she has visited in the neighbourhood of the "Bar." Many of them were, in spite of their hardships, the sweetest-tempered people she knew. Rev. Joseph Jackson spoke on general work at St. George's.

Mr. E. R. Moxey, of Cardiff, presided over the evening meeting, at which further words were spoken by Mr. Thompson. He said he was not weary either in the work or of the work. Eight years ago they started at St. George's. This year they reported the extension of the work by the addition of the Lycett Memorial Chapel, which would, he believed, become one of the crowded centres before long. They could rejoice in most remarkable conversions. He had never seen anywhere, like he had in the East-end, what he called the majesty of God in conversion.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson said he believed the East-end Mission deserved all support because it was a mission to the poorest, but not to the poorest alone. Mr. Thompson had been rightly directed in going to St. George's, because in Methodism they had need of a mission that went right to the bottom. To the bottom they must go in some way or other.

FINSBURY PARK.—The Finsbury Park Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission has just concluded its work for the summer season, during which many thousands must have listened to the Gospel. In the park during the six months its members have conducted evangelistic services every Sunday morning and evening with encouraging result, although surrounded with the meetings held by Freethinkers, Socialists, Spiritualists, and many other false teachers seeking to attract the crowds of passers-by. Showing how remarkably favourable the past summer has been for open-air preaching, it is worthy of note that out of the fifty meetings held only two have been interrupted by inclement weather. The Auxiliary is arranging for a tea and public meeting to take place on Thursday, October 19, in the Railway Mission Hall, Finsbury Park, for all those in the neighbourhood interested in their work. Tickets may be had free on application to the hon. secretary, Mr. Henry Hammond, 15, Russell-road, Holloway, N.

NOTES FROM SINGAPORE.

Singapore has an unenviable moral reputation, although it is perhaps no worse than many other Eastern centres of European life. Notwithstanding this, the Lord does cause his light to shine even here. The light may be feeble and small, but still there is light.

The work of the Church of England is in the hands of the S.P.G. entirely. As might be expected, the services are conducted with high ritual. There are those who protest against the observances practised, but they are in a minority.

The Presbyterians have both a church and a mission here, and the one must not be confounded with the other. The mission is doing a good work.

The American Methodist Episcopal Mission, who work specially amongst the Chinese, have not been long in the field. Dr. West had to return to America on leave, and his place was taken by Dr. Lewring. About four months ago, six Chinamen came to him and said they had heard the open-air preaching, and wished to become Christians. They were in due course received, and since then they have brought so many others that now there is a Chinese membership of about sixty, gathered in during the past four months, much to the encouragement of the workers.

The Brethren also have a work here, not very large, but good is undoubtedly being accomplished, especially amongst the Chinese.

The Bible Society is doing a good work, which must claim the sympathy of every Christian. They are shortly expecting largely to increase their staff of workers, and a wonderful field of labour exists in the peninsula and magnificent islands of Malaysia.

The Soldiers' Home has been removed to a more commodious building, and the management has been entrusted to the Methodist Mission, which has put a Mr. Snuggs temporarily in charge. He appears to be a suitable godly man, and therefore it may be assumed that the soldiers will have similar advantages, perhaps greater spiritually than the sailors have at the handsome Bonstead Institute.

H. W. Fry.

TENT WORK IN THE MIDLANDS.

During the past summer the North Midland Evangelistic Mission have held tent services in the counties of Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. On June 17 the tent was pitched in the old city of Lincoln, and continued there for over eight weeks, the evangelist, Mr. J. Neech, of Lincoln, declaring night by night the good tidings of salvation to men. The people of Lincoln are not very hearty in taking up work outside the churches, but the tent proved an attraction. Many gathered to hear the Word spoken, several testifying to the blessing they received during the Mission.

At the close of the work in Lincoln the tent was removed into Yorkshire, and pitched at Outwood, a mining district near Wakefield, where, in spite of the excitement caused by the coal dispute, the people came again and again, filling the tent each night. Many were the expressions of regret when the tent was removed to Belle Vue, Wakefield. The services in this place were most encouraging. From the very first an interest was aroused which deepened as the Mission progressed. The evangelist is invited to return and hold a mission there during November.

The next Mission was in the grounds of the Wakefield Y.M.C.A., and was also encouraging. At most of the meetings the power of the Spirit was manifest in turning men and women from darkness to light. At the close of the tent services, a general mission was held in the music saloon. The missioner was the well-tried servant of God, Rev. William Haslam, assisted by the local evangelist. The meetings began well with full attendances, rapt attention, and manifest blessing.

The workers were much disappointed when, at the close of the Wednesday Bible reading, Mr. Haslam was suddenly called upon to return home in consequence of the illness of Mrs. Haslam. Upon Mr. Haslam's removal the Bible readings were taken by Mr. Alfred Haley, who spoke the Word profitably and encouragingly to all, Mr. Neech taking the Gospel meetings.

During the winter months Mr. Neech is at liberty to take missions wherever doors may open. Application for his services should be made to Mr. Alfred Haley, Grove Hall, Wakefield.

THE OUTLOOK IN IRELAND.

[By our own Correspondent.]

At the conclusion of the Evangelical Alliance Conference in Dublin a meeting was held in aid of the Bible and Colportage Society, whose secretary is Rev. Thomas Lyle, Rosevale, Knock, Belfast. The Society is undenominational, and it employs men to circulate the Scriptures and other religious literature among the Irish peasantry. The testimony of the colporteurs was in every case cheering and encouraging. The old party spirit and racial hatred, so antagonistic to successful Gospel work in Ireland, seem fast passing away. Then the system by which Rome contrives to inspire her followers with a dread, and even terror, of God's work has received so serious a shaking in Ireland during the past three years that the peasantry purchase Testaments freely.

A large gathering was present at the afternoon meeting to hear the Dean of Achonry and Rev. T. Connellan plead for the Society. The former, so well and favourably known on English platforms, spoke with characteristic raciness and acceptance. Among other things he told the audience how he had just purchased "the best Bible to be had in Dublin," and presented it to a converted Roman Catholic young man on his way to the Cape. Mr. Connellan's address was mainly directed to advising the colporteurs present as to the best methods of working. He spoke with great deliberation, assuring himself beforehand that no reporters were present, and informing his audience that Christian people are too fond of playing into the hands of Rome by proclaiming their intentions from the housetops. A skilful general, he said, about to make an attack upon the enemy's lines, does not collect all the reporters to be found and inform them of his time of departure and attack. The pith of his advice was that in working among Roman Catholics it was always best to give them the pure Gospel. Cases, however, will be met in which no amount of Gospel will make an impression, for the simple reason that Roman Catholics do not look upon the Bible as their rule of faith. We have got, then, to shake their faith in their Church, and he instanced the many ways in which that may be done, as by calling history to our aid, by contrasting the teaching of well-known priests with their actions, etc. The address was deeply interesting.

So pronounced has become the defection from Rome here, that the Roman Catholic bishops have been consulting as to the best method of stemming the tide. A very large number of converts brought out through Mr. Connellan's instrumentality belong to the young girl and servant classes. In every case in which a servant has become converted the ukase has gone forth that no Roman Catholic is to be permitted to take employment in that house again. If the priests discover that a mistress has been speaking to her servant about Christ, the servant is ordered to leave, under pain of excommunication; and no Roman Catholic girl is permitted, under a similar penalty, to take service in that house. Quite a number of cases of this kind have cropped up, and so many Protestant mistresses are now without servants that Mr. Connellan is engaged upon a counter organisation, the particulars of which, I am informed, will appear in the November issue of his magazine, The Catholic.

As an illustration of the persecution to which Irish converted Roman Catholics are subjected, I enclose a copy of a letter from an ex-Roman Catholic girl living not far from Dublin:—

"Dear Sir, — This is a line to tell you I am in great trouble at present. You may recollect I was speaking to you with another friend, but since that I have left off going to mass, and I went to the Methodist Church and to open-air meetings. Well, on this day (October 4) my mother and aunt and sister came up from —— to take me back with them, and put me into the convent there. I said I would not go, and I need not tell you all they said and threatened. They then went to the police, but the police could not take me, as I was twenty-one years old. The priests here wrote to the nuns and priests at ——. So they are all after me now, and told me I sold my soul to the devil. I told them they were judging there, and in the Sermon on the Mount it is said, 'Judge not that ye may not be judged.' I do not care if all the bishops and priests in Meath and Dublin came for me, I will never go back to mass again."

One of the nuns wrote to her, and I give an exact copy of the letter:—

"Convent of Mercy, St. Joseph's, 3rd Oct., 1893.

"My Dear Anne,—I received a letter from your sister Helena this morning, which surprised me very much. I could not believe that one of our own dear children would think of abandoning the Catholic religion. You whom I prepared for your first communion and confirmation, and that was always so good and pious in company with your dear sisters in the chapel and at school! Oh, how all our fond hearts are grieved at your disobedience to your loving parents. But above all you have grieved the loving heart of Jesus, who so often nourished your soul in Holy Communion with His precious body and blood, bestowed so many gifts on your soul in confirmation, and shed the last drop of his blood for your salvation.

"Dear Anne, I know you will consider all this, and take the advice of a sincere friend who is deeply interested about your soul's salvation. Leave at once where you are. God will provide you another situation, where you can practise the religion of your parents. It will give us all the greatest pleasure to see you back again in ——.—Yours sincerely, in Jesus Christ, Sister Mary Vincent."

The priests are merely throwing grass at this girl up to the present, but obstinacy on her part will bring the stones to bear upon her. This is no unique instance; girls have had to fly for protection even from Ulster. Two girls have been kidnapped. Yet hundreds of ex-Roman Catholic men are to be met with in Dublin, and elsewhere, who glory in their apostasy.

TOURING AMONG TELUGUS.

Mr. W. G. Scott, writing from Palmoor, Janumpet, P. O., Deccan, India, describes an evangelistic tour among the Telugus. Rev. E. Chute and his wife (American Baptist Missionary Union), with native helpers, were in the party. Hundreds of miles were covered, and the Gospel preached in 250 towns and villages. The people listened intently, and thousands of tracts, books, and Scripture portions were sold. He says: "Many times, after we had been preaching for hours, the people continued to listen with interest: and when we finished, they asked to be told more about the love of God and salvation. Many confessed the sinfulness of idolatry, and said, 'We have forsaken the true God, and have been ignorantly worshipping senseless and lifeless stones; hereafter we will worship the true God of whom you have told us. We want the love and favour of God, and to dwell with Him for ever.' I believe there are thousands who, though they have made no profession of faith in baptism, have lost all confidence in idol-worship. They are hindered from making confession by lack of courage: they fear the caste system and the opposition of friends and relatives.

"In Almpoor, a large district town, when we had refuted all the arguments of the Hindus, two Mohammedans asked what instruction we had to give them. We called upon them to give up their evil practices and superstitions. Discussion followed, and the Hindus present were much impressed by the hollowness and deception of the Mohammedan religion. Had we made any objectionable statements regarding Mahomet, they would have stirred up the people, and no one can say to what length their fanaticism would have gone. But the Lord gave us a complete victory over all opponents of his truth.

"The great need of these people is the Gospel. In the district where they have not felt the influence of Christian civilisation, they are sunk in ignorance and vice to an extent beyond conception or belief. In many of the villages the people almost wallow in filth; cattle, horses, buffaloes, and human beings occupy the same apartment! Who can wonder that plague and pestilence carry off whole villages in a few days?

"At the station here a good work is going on. Numbers are added yearly to the church, and we trust written in the Book of God. Yet there are thousands around us who are still in darkness. Many would come to the church (which holds six hundred) if they knew the time. They have little idea of the use of a clock; but if we had a bell we could ring them in. Some friends may be willing to supply this important need."

MR. W. R. LANE IN DUBLIN.

The Mission in Dublin, which has been the subject of much prayer, and the object of much expectation, has proved without doubt successful. The meetings closed on Sunday. From the outset the Word was accompanied with power from on high, and not a few have borne intelligent testimony to the renewing power of the Holy Ghost through the Mission.

Much interest was manifested on Friday night last, when Mr. Lane told the story of his conversion while in the Guards. He gave Bible talks at noon each day, which were a great help to many Christian workers. These meetings were open to all. A most interesting feature of the Mission was the work of the Holy Spirit among the "associates." Backsliders have been restored to the "joy of their Lord." It was a gratifying sight to see how the members of our "Out-and-out Band," full of sanctified enthusiasm and holy desire for the salvation of their brothers, rallied round the evangelist night after night. Many interesting incidents occurred as the young men were out on Sackville-street with cards of invitation; a young fellow from the North of Ireland accepted one; he came in, and found the seeking Saviour in the after-meeting. He told the general secretary that he did not think a few hours previous he would be converted that night. He left the following morning for the north. Another young man said he had a letter of introduction from a Y.M.C.A. in his pocket for months. As soon as he got to this city, fresh from his home, he fell, and was ashamed to call on the secretary; but he found Christ through the Mission. Other instances could be told. Great has been the joy of godly mothers and fathers in the salvation of wandering sons.

Wm. A. Boyd, General Secretary.

THE WORK IN SPITALFIELDS.

In visiting the still interesting district of Spitalfields last week, in company with Mr. Charles Montague, hon. superintendent of the King Edward Ragged Schools, we found that the outlook for the winter was more gloomy than usual. The ragged-school was commenced in the heroic days of Lord Ashley, close upon half a century ago; and its history would show that during that period Spitalfields itself has undergone a transformation. The weavers, who once represented its chief industry, are now a very small company, many of them being very old. Jews and aliens from the Continent abound on all hands, and, by taking away their work, make it the more difficult for the poor English population to live. Then the final closing of a sugar refinery, and the discharge of 400 hands, was a disaster from which many will never recover. When homes are once broken up, it is found that usually they are not got together again, especially in the case of more elderly people, who have little chance in the labour market.

Though the main object kept in view is the spiritual enlightenment of a densely crowded neighbourhood, the sick poor are visited and assisted, while there is a benevolent society for aiding the aged and the ailing. The Bible-classes for the young of both sexes, as well as the mothers' meeting, are very largely attended, and the ordinary Sunday services for the people are crowded, these being supplied by evangelists from the Metropolitan Tabernacle and elsewhere. In going among the people it is to be noticed that numbers of the older folk can neither read nor write. Another fact is that the Gospel is such a new thing to many that they receive it with joyful astonishment, while its power is often seen in wretched rooms being transformed into comfortable homes. The young girls, who have a Christian Association of their own, are taught the use of the needle, and thus to make garments for themselves. The night classes for boys who are above school age are also a necessity; and the industrial classes are a counter-attraction to vicious amusements, while the knowledge imparted enables the young to rise in life.

Last month the Queen and some other members of the Royal Family sent a quantity of fruit for the sick poor, and very touching were some of the acknowledgments made by the children. There is more than the average amount of sickness in the district, and the income being £200 behindhand, funds are urgently needed. Mr. Charles Montague, hon. superintendent, 4, Bedford-square, E., answers all inquiries. H. P.

"THE STUMBLING-BLOCK."*

BY MR. ROBERT BROWN.

"Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of My people."—Isa. lvii. 14.

It is the unbelieving nature in man that makes it so difficult for the convinced sinner to trust himself in the hands of the Lord Jesus. And it will not do to tell him only that it is his unbelief that is keeping him back from Christ, for this he knows; or (as but too many do) that he must make an effort to believe. What he needs to be shown is "the stumbling-block" that is before him; and how that is to be "taken up out of" his "way" (Isa. lvii. 14): for "faith cometh by hearing," not by effort, "and hearing by the Word of God" (Rom. x. 17). And I have seen deeply-convinced souls (I mean, of course, those who have been truly "convinced of sin" by God the Holy Ghost: for it is only of such that I am now speaking), again and again bound up into the light, on this having been made clear to them. And indeed it must, and always will, be so where this is the only "stumbling-block" that has to be removed. If there be others, the soul will not and cannot, of course, "enter into rest," until these likewise be taken away.

As an illustration of what I mean, I think I cannot do better than introduce here one of the many cases that have come under my own personal observation, a case which might, as the lawyers say, be considered to be because it includes so many points that might serve as rules for the decision of other cases, wherein the same principles are involved.

"A LEADING CASE,"

Several years ago, while conducting an after-meeting, consequent upon an evangelistic address, my attention was directed to a lady, who seemed to me to be deeply and truly convinced of sin by God the Holy Ghost. Finding this to be the case, I pointed her at once to "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John i. 29) at the same time opening out to her several passages of Scripture which were applicable to her particular case.

"Oh!" she said, "I cannot feel that it is for me!"

"Now," I said, "let me point out to you what your heart is saying to the Lord. You are really saying to the Lord, 'I cannot believe what You say, Lord, because my heart tells me the contrary. You tell me, indeed, in Your Word, that Christ Jesus the Lord is a Saviour for such as I am; but my heart tells me the reverse. If, therefore, You will give me some sign in my heart that You are speaking the truth, I will believe You; but not unless.' Is this the way, think you," said I, "to treat Him, who 'cannot deny Himself?'" (2 Tim. ii. 13).

"No," she said, in much distress; "but what am I to do?"

"Well," I replied, "I will tell you;" and then, after having fully opened out and explained to her that blessed passage in John iii. 14, 15, I pointed out to her that she was like an Israelite who might be looking at his wounds, instead of at the serpent that was lifted up upon the pole; and that she was to reject what her own heart said, and give it the lie, and just simply trust in what the Lord Himself had said in his Divine Word; according to that which is written: "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths" (Prov. iii. 6, 6). "And the reason," I continued, "why he gives you this counsel is, because 'your understanding is darkened' (Eph. iv. 18), and it cannot therefore guide you aright; but 'the entrance of and it giveth understanding to the simple' (Ps. cxix. 130). Now judge yourself: which of the two do you think is speaking the truth, your heart, or God?" "God," she said.

GOD'S WORD GIVETH LIGHT,

"Well, then," I said, "just give your heart the lie, and give God credit for speaking the truth; and cast yourself on his faithfulness, and you will find his promises to be true: for 'he that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true' (John iii. 33). For we are not received for what we are, or for what we have done; but for what Jesus is, and what He has done and suffered for us," as I then more fully explained to her; pointing out to her at the same time that she was looking for a righteousness in herself, instead of in Jesus, who is the Lord our righteousness (Jer. xxiii. 6), and to whom the Holy Ghost was now pointing her (John xvi. 8, 10, 13).

And now I looked for her to enter into rest by believing, as I had seen so many do before, on this "stumbling-block" having been taken out of their way; and she no doubt would have done so had there been none other, but it was otherwise with her. Quivering with emotion, which showed that the power of the enemy, who was striving to retain his hold upon her, was relaxing, she said, "But is it not said somewhere that 'the Spirit beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God'?"

"Yes," I replied, "it is, in the 8th of Romans and the 11th verse: but that is spoken of the children of God; and the Spirit cannot bear witness to a lie. The Spirit has borne witness to you that you are a sinner; and you hath believed his testimony, and found it to be true. Now the Spirit would point you to that Blessed One, who 'bare our sins in his own body on the tree' (1 Pet. ii. 24), and the moment you 'receive' that 'testimony,' He will bear witness that you are a believer in Jesus, but He cannot do this before—for it would not be true until then: as it is written again, 'as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God (John i. 12, 13). And if you can truly say, 'All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every every one to his own way' (as I had previously found that she could), then you can also say, 'and the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all.'"

"Oh," she said, bursting into tears, "I fear I have not got the right kind of faith!"

THE RIGHT KIND OF FAITH

I replied: "I only know of one kind of real faith: and that is trust. If I were to tell you I would call upon you to-morrow morning, and bring you a book which might instruct you further on these subjects, I suppose you would believe me, would you not?"

"Yes," she said, "I should!" "Why?"

"Because I don't think you wish to deceive me."

"Because, I suppose, "you really believe I should be speaking the truth?" "Yes."

"Then can you really think that I should speak the truth, and that God could lie"—He, who says, He 'cannot lie?'" (Titus i. 2).

Here she fairly broke down: and now the tap-root of her final unbelief was fully revealed; and gladly and joyously did I use "the Sword of the Spirit," even "the Word of God" (Eph. vi. 17) to cut it. Weeping, she said, with much emotion, "But I shall never be able to stand: because all my family are worldly people!"

"Ah," I said, "I see where your difficulty lies now! You think you have to trust in Christ as your Saviour; and then that you will have to keep yourself in Him by your faith? Is that it?"

"Yes," she said, with much surprise; and haven't I?'

"Oh, dear no," I rejoined: "you could no more keep yourself in Christ, than you could save yourself, to begin with. This is Christ's work altogether. You will have to be 'kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation' (1 Pet. i. 5) which is a very different thing indeed!"

And now the Divine Spirit opened her heart to receive the truth in the love of it, and the light shot down into her spirit; and smiling through her tears, she said, "Oh, I will trust Him!"

"Then," I said, "if you will trust Him, He will most assuredly bless you. Shall we kneel down and ask Him?"

"Oh, do," she replied, with intense earnestness. And so we knelt down; and I pleaded with the Lord to reveal Himself fully to her, and to bless her: and He did so; and "the God of hope" at once "filled" her "with all joy and peace in believing" in Him (Rom. xv. 13); the blessed Spirit then testifying that she was truly one of God's own dear children in Christ Jesus.

* From Outlines of Prophetic Truth, Vol. I., chap. x. (S. W. Partridge & Co.)

HOWARD-STREET GOSPEL MISSION reports a good work among the children, many of the boys and girls having decided for Jesus. Several of these distribute tracts from door to door, and invite men and women to the mission. The children attending the Sunday-school and Band of Hope have lately increased in number.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

A large number of Congregationalists met at the City Temple on Tuesday to hear the address of the Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and for the transaction of other business in connection with the Union.

The Chairman, Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., delivered a long address, entitled "An Outlook on Congregationalism, from the Standpoint of a Layman." His subject was the outcome of twenty-eight years' experience of denominational work. He spoke of their ideal system, adding that such a system required ideal men, but he confessed that that they had not yet fulfilled that lofty requirement. Dealing with the question of public worship, he stated that their Sunday services formed one of the most important opportunities for strengthening and stimulating those who are trying to live the Christian life, and impressed upon his hearers the importance of music in their services. It remained for some ministers, organists, choirs, and congregations to do their part, so that the service of praise in their churches might be inspiring and generally helpful to the spirit of worship. The speaker gave it as his opinion that the public reading of Scripture had not, as a rule, the attention and preparation given to it that it deserved, and he advocated a little more system in arranging a regular course of Scripture reading, with the view to prevent the repetition of certain passages, to the neglect of others. He thought that they had too much mere preaching and too little Bible teaching, and he was in favour of a systematic training in the Scriptures.

The Chairman next compared the new with the old preachers. He had sometimes asked himself whether the force and directness of the sermon had not been somewhat affected by the modifying of views and opinions touching sin and the need of salvation. In the generality of present-day preachers, earnestness and enthusiasm were not so apparent as in bygone days. Some of the new preachers took, he said, but a languid and very partial interest in the life and history of the present day. Often only a small portion of the congregation followed the different points of a sermon, which he described as "a literary production containing a well-sustained argument, but run together too closely." Another point which the speaker touched upon was the absence of appeal in the sermon, leaving it indistinct in the minds of many hearers. He had heard it said in outside circles, and in many pulpits, that there was an absence of reality, that the services were too formal, and the sermons were something to please the seatholders, and he urged all preachers to throw earnestness into their subject.

YORKSHIRE WOMEN AND TEMPERANCE.

The Annual Conference of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union was held this year at Middlesbro' on October 2nd to 4th. The whole of the meetings were well attended, there being a considerably greater number of delegates from the branches in Yorkshire. Among the visitors were Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Mrs. Aukland, &c.

The most important part of the business transacted was the decision by a large majority to withdraw from affiliation with the B. W. T. A., and carry on the work of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union as an entirely independent body. Cheering and satisfactory reports were given from a part of the branches, and a most encouraging account of the good work lovingly carried on at the High Flatts Sanatorium was added to this list on Tuesday afternoon.

Miss Glaisyer, of York, read a paper on the "Work in Yorkshire Branches," on Wednesday morning. The "Doctors' Meeting," as many call it, was held on Wednesday afternoon, Dr. F. C. Coley, of Newcastle, the chosen lecturer, dealt very clearly with his subject: "Alcoholism in Men and Women." Dr. Coley declares that when a woman drinks for the sake of company, as a man mostly does, it proves that her moral nature has lost the high tone which it ought to have, and is of a very low order indeed. Dr. Coley went on to show the very great danger there is in the giving of brandy or any other spirit; even in apparently simple fainting fits a person should know unquestionably what ails a patient, what is the cause, and how medicine should act.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN TURIN.

For some two years and a half the Salvation Army has been labouring in the corner of north Italy nearest to France, and work is being vigorously carried on at five stations there, in the Waldensian Valleys, where already a number of converts have been gained both amongst Roman Catholics and nominal Protestants, and those of the class who were not being reached by the existing churches. The valleys, however, owing to their remoteness from the large towns, and the small and scattered character of the population, have not been at all suitable for a centre from which to endeavour to evangelise the great cities of Italy, and they have always been looked upon somewhat as a kind of training-ground or nursery where some Italian-speaking officers could be obtained, and the experience gained necessary for the wider field of labour which lay before us. These hopes have now, with God's blessing, been realised, and we have been enabled to secure a fine hall capable of accommodating 500 people, in the important city of Turin, and to place five officers (four of whom are Italians and Army converts) in charge of the work there.

Turin is one of the largest towns of the country, having a population of 330,000, the great majority being Catholics. Hundreds of copies of the Italian "War Cry," the Grido di Guerra, have been sold on the boulevards and in the cafés by our officers, who have been able at the same time to give an invitation to attend the meetings, with the result that since the opening on September 23 the hall has been filled night after night with an interested congregation belonging to all classes of society, including students, Socialists, infidels, &c. Two souls have already sought salvation, and from the number who frequent the meetings consecutively, and the interest and conviction manifested in their faces, we feel sure that God's Spirit is at work, and that soon many more will follow the light and become believers in a present and personal Saviour.

We are not forgetful of the labours of other Protestant missions here in Turin; probably we are reaping some of their fruits, but we are sure they will rejoice with us over those who come boldly out as professed followers of Christ. We are depending upon God for the love, patience, and strength, as well as for the material help, which shall enable us to win souls for the Master here in sunny but dark Italy. One of the mottoes which adorns the hall, "Torino per Cristo" (Turin for Christ), is the embodiment of our prayers, hopes, and toil at the present time. "They of Italy salute you!" (Hebrews xiii. 24.)

Our officers would be pleased to meet any English visitors proceeding to Rome, Florence, Genoa, &c., at the station here, where, besides assisting them in any linguistic difficulties, they could give any information about the city or our work here in Italy.

William A. Salter.

20, Via Principe Amedeo, Turin, October 3.

MR. AITKEN AT WEST DULWICH.

Having closed his interesting and successful labours in the heart of the City, Rev. W. H. Aitken has this week entered on a two weeks' mission at Emmanuel Church, West Dulwich. Happy memories are cherished of a former visit to the church some few years since, and there are many expectations that another season of reviving and converting power will accompany the present effort.

The missioner is accompanied by Rev. Jas. Stephens, who takes some of the subsidiary meetings, and Miss Agnes Clifford, who addresses women's meetings. The service on Sunday evening was a very solemn one. The subject of Mr. Aitken's exhortation was "Grieving the Holy Spirit," and his powerful earnest words were a very appropriate introduction to the many engagements of the two weeks.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—The monthly muster of the above was held on Thursday last at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's headquarters, London Dock. The meeting was well attended, and many Christian seamen and other friends gave most helpful and encouraging testimonies. The Rev. G. J. Hill, who presided, said that during the past quarter, a new branch had been opened at the Society's Sailors' Rest in Whitehaven, and already about forty members had been enrolled.

Letters to the Editor.

"CLAIMING" BLESSINGS.

Dear Sir,—In response to the appeal of "M. A." for help and light as to the duty of "claiming from God what we need," let me say: (1) The promises are all true for us the moment we claim them. (2) Faith has the right to claim all that God's promises contain. Take, for example, the promise, "Perfect love casteth out fear." That promise is true for all time. It is a plain statement of fact. But it was not true for me—that is, in my experience—until I claimed it in faith, taking God at his word.

The word "claim" should not be "repugnant" to a true believer, because it expresses precisely what he does in entering upon his inheritance. A friend leaves me a legacy laid up in a bank. It is mine by right, but it is not mine by possession or in enjoyment until I claim it. There is no arrogance in my claiming it. If I did not claim it, I would be disrespectful to my friend. I would seem to despise his gift. Let it, therefore, be clearly understood that we honour God by claiming as ours every blessing purchased for us by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Jesus has purchased for us life, and love, and peace, and power, and all rights to the heavenly inheritance; and he gives us, so to speak, a blank chequebook, to fill up with each present need. But, as it is all his worthiness, not our own, we must ask in his name. But you must do more than ask: you must present the cheque. Every promise is Christ's cheque, and you must claim the cash and get it. Many well-meaning Christians are always poor, because they present the cheque—they plead the promise, and then go away without the blessing. They should claim it, with Jacob: "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me." There is the fulness of blessing laid up for us in Jesus. It is our privilege to claim it, and to wait patiently in trustful expectation, until we can say: "Of his fulness have we received."

God promises us the fulness of blessing—abundant pardon, perfect peace, abundance of grace, life more abundant, power over the enemy, and perfect love that casteth out fear; and we honour God by claiming these blessings as a present possession. True faith will not be afraid to claim in Christ's name all that He has promised. A true faith is a clinging, claiming faith, that insists upon entering into the promised inheritance. The devil may try to dispute your right, but you must insist upon your claim, whoever may oppose. And then "the Lord will bruise even Satan under your feet shortly."

S. MacNaughton.

Preston, October 5th.

"CHEAP MISSIONARIES."

Sir,—While fully endorsing the remarks of Rev. J. H. Horsburgh on this subject, I should be sorry if any supposed (as they naturally might do) that the appeals on behalf of underpaid missionaries are without foundation. Granted that a missionary in China needs only £50 or £60 a year, the fact remains that there are many who have to live on £30 or £40, and that in districts where living is more costly than it appears to be in China. This £50 or £60 a year represents many a "cheap" missionary's idea of ample provision, but as it is he has to worry along with perhaps two-thirds of that amount, barely enough for food and raiment; and runs great risk of becoming that most expensive of missionaries—a broken-down man.

Such a man is crippled, and it is to give him the extra £10 he needs that "cheap" societies ask for more generous support.—Yours truly,

A Cheap Missionary.

THE COAL WAR.

Dear Sir,—I write to ask if you could start a fund for the wives and children now starving through the Coal War. If this war were carried on by shot and shell, the Christian Churches would all be astir to help the wounded: but when the weapons are only starvation and endurance, we are comparatively apathetic. And yet 500,000 children are going to bed cold and hungry every night. How can we enjoy our bright fireside this winter, if we leave these innocent little ones to starve? Vast multitudes of mothers and children have but one bare meal a day, and some even less. Whatever the general question in dispute may be, we know it is not the will of our Father in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish.

My own people are responding nobly—domestic servants bringing their shillings, and one of them her ten shillings. I am sure that Christian people generally will do the same, if only they know what the facts are.—Yours truly,

J. P. Clark.

The Manse, Gunnersbury, W.

POST CARDS.

NORTHENDEN, CHESHIRE.

Praise the Lord for a glorious summer's work. Large crowds come out here every Sunday, also on Bank and other holidays. A little band of the Lord's children have gone out at such times into the open air, preached the Gospel, sung hymns, and otherwise testified to the power of the blood of Christ. They have had the joy of seeing and hearing of blessing, but eternity alone will reveal the full results.

G. F. D.

HOME-SEEKERS' RUSH IN AMERICA.

The wild rush of 100,000 home-seekers for land in the Cherokee strip of Indian territory in the United States was far from the brutal affair too many reports would lead one to imagine; and nothing I have seen in America has redounded more to the honour of its people than the wonderfully good behaviour of that motley crowd. I entered the strip along with 5000 on one train, with as many more in vehicles and riding on either side, and though much profane language was used, I saw not one rough action, but the utmost good humour, and often instances of chivalry. Kansas being a prohibition State, I saw no drunkenness, and special laws were enforced against gambling. In the evening thousands of shelterless "boomers" sang "Jesus, lover of my soul," "Nearer, my God, to Thee," "Home, sweet home," "The old folks at home," etc., drowning all attempt at comic songs. On Sunday open-air services were held all over, many faithful ministers being there to share the hardships of the settlement. At night I preached from a buggy, lighted by the distant prairie fires.

J. E. B. Meakin.

Monterey, Mexico, Sept. 23.

COATS, LANARKSHIRE, N.B.

The "Iron Burgh" of Coatbridge has had full opportunity of hearing the Gospel during the month of September, and it sorely needs it. The Parish Church of Coats has had a fortnight's special mission, while at the other end of the town the Lanarkshire Christian Union have had one of their evangelists—Mr. Fergusson—with their tent, conducting services nightly during the month. The Mission Fortnight in Coats Church has resulted in manifest blessing—souls having been born again, and Christians having entered into a closer walk with their Lord. The brunt of the work was undertaken by two young but able evangelists in the ministry of the Church of Scotland—Rev. Thomas Miller, minister of St. Paul's Parish, Leith, and Rev. Wm. H. Rankine, minister of St. Boswell's Parish, Berwickshire. Amongst other ministers who came to assist were Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, Rev. W. Dundas, minister of Carriden Parish, Linlithgow, and Rev. Gavin Crawford, minister of Fauldhouse Parish, Linlithgow. But the fruitfulness of a mission must in the end depend on the spirit animating a congregation; and the spirit of this congregation is the result of the unwearying labours for many long years of the minister of Coats Parish—Rev. Wm. Hutchison. He is one of the foremost mission preachers in the Church of Scotland. He has been, in the hands of God, one of the earliest fountains from which has flowed that new tide of evangelistic life which is so rapidly rising in the "Auld Kirk" of Scotland, and which has been borne witness to by Mr. Moody and Dr. Pentecost.

P. A. Kennedy Mackenzie.

Victoria-terrace, Coatbridge.

THE PARK MISSION.

In connection with the work of the Park Mission, we are constantly coming across girls who, though not having fallen into any definite sin, are, from the nature of their surroundings, in positions of great peril. It is impossible to exaggerate the difficulty of procuring situations for girls of this class, and frequently we have to send them to most unsuitable places, as they are almost always in absolutely destitute circumstances.

I cannot help thinking that, were this need more fully realised, there might be many Christian ladies, living in the country, who though perhaps unable to do any active work, would be willing to take up this service for the Master. "He that converteth the sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." I can only add if any lady would care to hear more of this important branch of the work I shall be most happy to communicate with her.

May I take this opportunity of asking your readers who have letters for convalescent homes or hospitals to remember the Park Mission? Old garments of any sort or description are also of the greatest sevice to us in our work.

Mina Hay-Chapman, Hon. Superintendent.

Y.W.C.A. Park Mission,

16a, Old Cavendish-street, W.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

THE CHILD'S OWN MAGAZINE (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union) has been "on the road" for sixty years. Little ones will read "The Runaways" story with pleasure, and find delight in the pictures, puzzles, and general contents.

HOME WORDS, conducted by Rev. Charles Bullock, is a very attractive monthly. The new volume, amply illustrated and filled with wholesome and instructive reading, deserves a place in parochial and other libraries for the people. (2s. Office: 7, Paternoster-square, E.C.)

YOUNG ENGLAND, vol. xiv., is every page written for "our boys." There are not only stories of an adventurous type, but many instructive sketches. "Heraldry, its Romance and Meaning," is a capital series of articles. Of course, there are many illustrations. (5s. Sunday School Union.)

THE PARABLES OF OUR LORD (6d.), is the latest "Bible Class Primer" issued by T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. It is from the pen of Professor Salmond, D.D., Aberdeen, and is a very thorough and useful little work.

MEMORIALS OF A BELOVED MOTHER. By M. C. F. (1s. Nisbet & Co.), is a deeply touching tribute to the worth and Christian character of one of the choice ones of the earth. Happy the children who have such a mother, and who follow in her footsteps.

ECHOES FROM THE UNDYING WORD is a volume of twenty terse and pithy homilies, by Rev. Frederick Harper, M.A., rector of Hinton-Waldrist, Berks. The pages are filled with sound teaching on Christ and salvation, and will help the devotions of many who cannot attend the spoken ministry of the Word. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

GOLDEN NAILS, and other addresses to children, by Rev. George Milligan, B.D., minister of St. Matthew's Church, Edinburgh (1s. 6d., Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier). Here are twenty attractive talks to the little ones, the first, which furnishes the title, being founded on 2 Chron. iii. 9, "And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold."

DID A HEN OR AN EGG EXIST FIRST?—A series of animated talks with a sceptic, by Jacob Horner, has been issued in a revised and enlarged edition. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society). The pages present a useful discussion which many working-men would be the better for reading. The treatment is essentially popular, and calculated to tell upon fair-minded people.

LIFE ON THE CONGO, by Rev. W. Holman Bentley, of the Baptist Mission, has appeared in a new edition, revised. An additional chapter summarises up to the present time the progress, political and religious, of the Congo Free State. Every page is interesting, and we trust the little book will have many readers in its more complete form. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

Public debate seems to us a very unsatisfactory way of dealing with asserted scriptural difficulties, and the course of the recent discussion between Rev. J. Urquhart, and Dr. Clifford does not modify that opinion. If, however, as a matter of historical interest, any readers desire to have a full account of that debate they can find it in a sixpenny pamphlet published by Messrs. Clarke, 13, Fleet-street, entitled "The Absolute Inerrancy of the Bible."

THE YOUNG PREACHER is the title of a series of thoughtful and helpful papers by Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler. Whether treating of sermon-making or ministerial habits, whether asking his reader "Why should you be a minister?" or speaking on "How to have a working church," the Doctor shows himself a past-master in pastoral work and Gospel preaching. His little book is replete with sound sense and practical suggestion. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

FORTY-TWO YEARS AMONGST THE INDIANS AND ESKIMO, pictures from the life of the first Bishop of Moosonee. By Beatrice Batty. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The story of Bishop Horden's hard and adventurous career is for the most part told in his own words. The work was essentially of a pioneer order, but it was signally blessed of God. A map and several illustrations are given, and they enable one better to appreciate the abundant incidents of the book.

THE COVENANTERS OF THE MERSE: Their history and sufferings, as found in the records of that time by Rev. Wood Brown, M.A., Gordon. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) These pages will have a charm and interest far beyond the Border counties. The events lie mostly in the seventeenth century. Much patient research has been expended upon the book, which unfolds stories of moral heroism and spiritual fidelity which it does one good to read to-day.

THE LOG OF A SKY PILOT: or Work and Adventure around the Goodwin Sands, is another stirring book by Rev. T. S. Treanor, M.A., Chaplain, Missions to Seamen, Deal and the Downs. "Sky-pilot" stands for "clergyman" in the patois of British seamen; and in his log Mr. Treanor shows a true spiritual interest in sailors of all nations. Many thrilling incidents are narrated, and the well-illustrated pages are calculated to inspire lively interest in sailors and lightshipmen. (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

AUSTRALIAN COMMONWEALTH.—The new volume of the "Story of the Nations" series deals with New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, Western Australia, South Australia, Queensland, and New Zealand. It is from the pen of Greville Tregarthen, who has for some time been known as a writer on the Great South Land. The pages are eminently readable, and outline in an able manner a deeply interesting history. This is likely to be one of the most popular volumes of a deservedly-popular series. (5s. T. Fisher Unwin.)

SHORTHAND AND TYPEWRITING.—Messrs. Isaac Pitman & Sons' new publications include the third edition of PROGRESSIVE STUDIES IN PHONOGRAPHY (paper 1s., cloth 1s. 6d.), KEY TO PITMAN'S SHORTHAND INSTRUCTOR (1s. and 1s. 6d.), and the LEARNER'S SHORTHAND READER, illustrated (paper 6d.). In A MANUAL OF THE TYPEWRITER (cloth 3s. 6d.) is given practical guidance in the use of the typewriter, and in the execution of commercial, literary, legal, and all other classes of typewriting work, illustrated with thirty-four plates of specimens. PITMAN'S POCKET DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE (Russia leather, 2s.) is a neat portable volume, suitable for ready reference, in which all irregularities of spelling in derivative words are noted, and new words find a place. Additions to the publishers' educational series include the AVON ENGLISH READER, STANDARD I. and STANDARD II. (cloth 10d. each), containing new reading matter, arranged in series.

THE WORD OF GOD; OR, THE KEYNOTE OF DIVINE TRUTH, by C. McK., is an attempt to express in rhyme the character and contents of the various books of Scripture. (1d. Eastbourne: W. Brooker, Terminus-road.)

Mr. C. H. Hemmel, North-street, Langport, Somerset, has brought out some choice leaflets of hymns, by C. Butler Stoney, J. H. S., and others. The series is entitled, "Sunlight through the Shadows." (Packets of one dozen, assorted, 6d.)

The Church of England Temperance Society, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, have prepared several new books of addresses for the winter season, the principal of these being EASY LESSONS ON ALCOHOL, COURSE II., by W. Taylor, dealing with the physiological effects of alcohol; and a new volume of BAND OF HOPE OUTLINE ADDRESSES.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Digby, Long, & Co.—STEPPING-STONES TO LIFE, sermons by Rev. J. George Gibson (3s. 6d.).

From J. Snow & Co.—FROM ISLAND TO ISLAND IN THE SOUTH SEAS, by Rev. George Cousins (1s.). CITY, RICE-SWAMP, AND HILL, by W. Johnson, B.A. (2s.).

Sunday School Union.—BRIDGE OF BEAUTY, 5s.; BENEATH THE SURFACE, 3s. 6d.; HEIR OF SANDYCOMBE, 2s. 6d.; A GIRL GOVERNESS, 2s.; LOYAL TO HIS TRUST, 1s. 6d.; ALEX. MACKAY, 1s.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge and Co.—THROUGH LIFE'S SHADOWS, by E. F. Pollard, 1s. 6d; ROSE CAPEL'S SACRIFICE, by W. L. Haycraft, 1s. 6d.; EVERYBODY'S FRIEND, by E. E. Green, 1s. 6d.

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—ERMENGARDE: A Story of Romney Marsh in the thirteenth century, by Mrs. Hadden-Parkes; REMINISCENCES OF SEVENTY YEARS OF LIFE, TRAVEL, AND ADVENTURE, by a Retired Officer, Vol. I.

From Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.—SIFTED AS WHEAT, by Elizabeth Neal (2s.). THE MUSGRAVE RANCHE, a tale of Southern California, by T. M. Browne (2s.).

From The Religious Tract Society.—THE EARLY SPREAD OF RELIGIOUS IDEAS, especially in the Far East, by Rev. Dr. EDKINS, 3s.; WHICH WAY? or, The Old Faith and the New, by the late E. Jane Whately, 1s. 6d.; THE BRAHMIN'S PLOT, a tale of life in India, by W. J. Wilkins, 3s.: THIS IS WHAT I WANT, volume of illustrated tracts, 1s.; THE PEOPLE'S Almanack for 1894, one penny.

THE SERVANTS' MISSION.—Very happy and helpful was the quarterly meeting of the Christian Servants' Association held on Thursday evening, October 5th, at the unpretentious headquarters of the "Servants' Mission," 14, Sloane Terrace, S.W., when a goodly number of members gathered for praise, prayer, and testimony. Many who were not able to be present sent requests for praise, some had experienced God's keeping power, others had with joy seen souls coming out on the Lord's side, one telling of four conversions in the household. Prayer was offered for several who are now wholly engaged in Christian work, some in China, some in America, and others scattered in our own country, while several in the meeting were able to bear testimony to the good hand of God upon them.

THE OPIUM COMMISSION.—The Opium Commission will meet on November 15 at Calcutta. In view of the protest in India against the decision of the Imperial Government to make India responsible for one-half of the expenses of the commission, it is to be noted that no member will draw a salary or remuneration of any kind, but will only be allowed travelling expenses. It is expected that the Commission will be in a position to submit their report early next March.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

THERE are now 743 branches of the Y.P.S.C.E. in Great Britain, including one recently formed at Liscard.

A conference of Sunday-school workers at Kingswood has recommended the formation of Christian Endeavour Societies in connection with all the schools of the circuit.

The Society of Christian Endeavour of the Baptist Church, Aberdeen, the first registered society in Scotland, was started about two-and-a-half years ago with some six members, and now there are on the secretary's roll twenty-five active member and fourteen associate members.

A Conference of the Birmingham and District Christian Endeavour Union was held at Soho Hill on Monday (2nd), when more than four hundred representatives of the various societies were in attendance. The meeting throughout was hearty and enthusiastic, and the speeches were inspiring. The watchword of the Union is "Birmingham, '95!"

The C.E. Society ought to be always evangelistic. We do not mean by this that there should be a continued prevalence of revival excitement, but every month, every week if possible, throughout the year souls should be brought to Christ through its agency. We should be satisfied with nothing less—at least somebody, one soul for Christ each month.—The Independent.

"A Christian Endeavourer," writing with regard to the Coal Strike, says:—"It seems to me this is a splendid opportunity for the 'Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour,' of which there are over 500 in connection with our Nonconformist Churches in this country, to do a work worthy of their Great Head by helping to feed the starving women and children."

The annual meetings of the Y.P.S.C.E. in Manchester and district were held at Oldham on Saturday. Rev. J. E. Roberts presided. Papers on Christian Endeavour topics were read, followed by discussion. In the evening a large assembly was presided over by Rev. T. K. Higgs. The secretary stated that during the twelve years the movement had been before the world a million and a quarter of young people stood to its credit, of whom 150,000 had last year joined themselves to the Church of Christ.

MISSIONARY PRAYER UNION.

BOURNEMOUTH.

ON Sunday last, special services were held in connection with the departure of Mr. Hale for mission work in Agra; he is to be supported by the West Cliff Tabernacle Missionary Prayer Union. A sermon was preached in the morning by Rev. Dr. Culross, President of the College in which Mr. Hale has studied. The afternoon meeting was largely attended by young people, and the quarterly report of the Prayer Union, which showed that the sum of over £16 had been contributed by the members, was read by the pastor. Mr. Baynes, who is a member of the church in Bournemouth, spoke of Mr. Hale as "our faithful messenger," giving a brief sketch of his history, and describing the district in India to which he was going. Mr. Hale followed, and by his interesting speech made himself known to those who were to support him by their gifts and prayers.

In the evening the pastor presided at a valedictory service, in which Mr. Baynes, Mr. Hale, and Dr. Culross all took part. The audience stood while Pastor Geo. Wainwright, in the name of the church and congregation, bid Mr. Hale farewell, and Dr. Usher commended him to God in prayer.

The Prayer Union is now entering upon the last quarter of its second year's history. As a method of perpetuating and deepening interest in missionary work, it has abundantly justified itself. Daily praying makes daily giving easy. And now that there is a missionary for whose support the Prayer Union will be responsible, the membership is showing signs of considerable increase. Many will give to an individual with enthusiasm and zeal, who only give to a society because they feel they must.

WORKING GIRLS.—A club is being started for the working girls of Tottenham and Edmonton, and classes will be held for their social and moral improvement. The movement is quite undenominational. A drawing room meeting was held at Miss Howard's residence to inaugurate the society, when a very interesting account of work among factory girls was given by Miss Darker, of Bermondsey. A committee was formed to start the work. A room has been taken at 137, Upper Fore Street, Edmonton, and we are desirous of making it as comfortable as possible. We shall need furniture, piano, books for the library, &c.

(Miss) L. M. JOHNSTONE, Secretary,
Hope Villa, Hyde Side, Lower Edmonton.

[1059]

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Dartmouth Association, which has for some time past been seeking new premises, has now secured Fairfax Cottage, and purposes making it a "bright home" where young men can profitably spend their evenings.

Mr. A. K. Dearden, the new general secretary at South Shields, has inaugurated series of Sunday evening lantern services. On the first occasion there were present 1700 persons, most of whom, it is believed, were non-churchgoers.

The Monte Videan Y.M.C.A., already three years in existence, has become a combined native and English Association, and progresses favourably. A weekly paper El Crucero (the Southern Cross), has recently been started, the editor, Dr. Cubilo, desiring by this means to reach the students of the University.

The District Union assemblies taking place in various parts of the country are proving very interesting and successful. In almost every case large accessions to the membership are reported; and the work has already commenced in eight or nine new centres since the recent publication of the Year Book.

The Belfast Association recommenced its Sunday afternoon services for the people in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, on Sunday week, when Rev. H. Montgomery preached to about 2,000 persons. On the following evening it commenced a series of pleasant meetings for the people in St. George's Hall, when there was also a good attendance.

The lapsing of country branches has been a matter of keen regret to many friends of the Y.M.C.A., and it was lately suggested to the National Council that it might be prevented by mutual help among the Associations. The Oxford Y.M.C.A. has taken up this method, and has already put it into operation with very gratifying results.

The Cork Association has opened its season with a delightful social meeting. Col. Wilson (the host and chairman) reviewed with thankfulness the progress of the work. The general secretary referred to the new building in Marlborough-street rapidly approaching completion, and said that their prospects for the future were beginning to look brighter.

The inaugural gathering, winter session took place at Worthing on Wednesday, in the form of a coffee supper; sixty to seventy young men came together. Several short addresses by members and tradesmen, and secretary's report, was given. Although town is now depressed, yet it may prove God's time for using the Y.M.C.A. for much good.

The committee of the German Y.M.C.A. have, on the return of Mr. A. Scholten, missionary from Cameroon, arranged a four days' special foreign mission at their rooms, 28, Finsbury-square, E.C. All German-speaking gentlemen are heartily invited. The dates are as follows:—Oct. 15, 16, 19, and 20, commencing at 4 p.m. on the 15th, and at 7.30 every other day.

On Wednesday evening (4th inst.) the Hull Y.M.C.A. had a most enjoyable meeting at the St. George's Hall, presided over by Mr. Thos. Stratten, J.P. Mr. George Holmes gave an account of his visit to Egypt and Palestine. The lantern views of Gibraltar, Malta, Cairo, Jerusalem, etc., and the native costumes were much appreciated by the audience, which numbered over 500.

The Y.M.C.A. of Buenos Ayres received much blessing from God during the visit of Rev. G. C. Grubb and party. The work has not been a surface one, as now, six weeks after the mission, the membership steadily increases, and the meetings are well attended, God's spirit moving in the hearts of many, and the deep Scriptural tone of the whole work being apparent. The Lord is doing mighty works in our midst.

The Brighton Y.M.C.A. has issued an excellent programme for the coming session, embracing literary, social, and religious meetings. A special feature is made of a series of evangelistic services called "Pleasant Hours for Young Men" each Wednesday evening, commencing October 18, with a social gathering preceding the service. The speakers announced are men of pronounced Evangelical views.

The editor of the Y.M.C.A. Gleaner (Argentina), Mr. W. C. K. Torre, has just left for England on a visit. May he be greatly used of God to stir up Christian interest in the work amongst the poor in this great city, where he has been so markedly blessed! His address is care of Mr. G. Maynard, 34, Gracechurch-street, E.C. The Association rooms have been moved to 87, Avenida, 25 de Mayo, quite close to the principal plaza, where Mr. A. E. Holder, the secretary, will be glad to see any new arrivals.

The winter session at the Y.M.C.A., Stratford, was inaugurated last Thursday evening by a reception given by Mr. John M'Call, whose invitation was responded to by about 250 young men. A collection of curiosities and pictures from the Holy Land was exhibited in one of the rooms by Mr. G. H. Lord. Mr. Butlin gave a hearty invitation to join the Association and various classes, gymnasium, etc. Rev. S. Jones gave a very powerful address on "Do not begin to play the fool," taken from the life of King Saul.

The inaugural meeting of the winter's work at Walsall, was held on Thursday (21st), and was crowded; the Mayor presiding. The following night the president (Mr. E. J. Shannon) held a largely attended reception for young men. Both meetings were most enthusiastic. Thanks mainly to the generosity of the president, the building has been entirely renovated and remodelled internally, and as the membership has increased within eight months nearly 50 per cent. the outlook is most hopeful. During September, a very helpful series of meetings for the deepening of spiritual life was held.

The Central Presbyterian Association, Belfast, has issued a programme. First on the list comes a series of Monday evening lectures by Rev. Samuel M'Comb, B.D., who has lately returned from Oxford, where he was engaged with marked success in the study of these subjects for which he is naturally adapted, and the theme which he has selected—"Religion and Life: Some Aspects of the Incarnation." Then on Friday evenings Rev. W. J. M'Caughan is to conduct a class on "Our Confession of Faith—Its Origin, History, Construction, and Use"; and on Sabbath evenings Rev. Prof. Leitch, D.D., promises a continuance of his Bible-class on the subject: "Life of Christ—Chronologically Studied."

The Hackney Association is one in which foreign mission work is a subject of living interest. Mr. R. C. Porter (a younger brother of the general secretary) will leave for South India next month, in connection with the L.M.S. Two other members of the Association have this month entered missionary colleges to prepare for foreign work. The Association has, at the present time, four members in training for the ministry, and four in training for foreign work. The late Mr. T. Coote, of the Congo-Balolo Mission, was a member, and when he died, some months ago, bequeathed his Oxford Teacher's Bible to the Association. It is expected with keen interest, having been forwarded from Central Africa by Mr. H. G. Haupt, a fellow worker in the mission.

The monthly meeting of the English National Executive was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, Mr. George Williams presided. A welcome was given to Mr. Campbell White, who is in this country en route from New York to Calcutta, where he is going to work under the auspices of the American Executive. Amongst the principal business was the adoption of a movement inaugurated by the Birmingham Association (from whence it it will be worked), to which the title was given of "The Young Men's Christian Association Bible and Prayer Union." Many members have already been enrolled at Birmingham and other Y.M.C.A. centres; and it is believed the union will be warmly taken up by the Associations throughout the country and prove a means of great good amongst them.

IRISH NOTES.

The Methodists of Cork have recommenced their aggressive mission work on Sunday evenings in the Central Hall in that city under hopeful auspices. At the first service, which was held on Sunday evening week, there was a large attendance, and good was done.

The evangelistic services conducted by Miss Smith and Miss Ban at Knock, Belfast, during the past week have been so successful that it has been decided to continue them for the present week also. A Gospel Mission has been held in the Methodist Church, Castleberg, co. Tyrone, by Rev. H. Ball.

A remarkable example of the effect of godly influence has occurred near Omagh, co. Tyrone, where a member of the Presbyterian Church just deceased has left £100 to Wesleyan Foreign Missions in memory of a poor man, a Methodist, long since departed, who used to talk to him of Jesus and His love.

The series of meetings in Belfast for the Deepening of Spiritual Life and the Promotion of Foreign Missions, held last week under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A., was a great success. At the last meeting, held on Friday night in the Exhibition Hall, the number of testimonies given as to the benefits that had been received at the Convention was most encouraging.

A meeting to bid good-bye to Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips and Miss Lynd previous to their departure for Damascus was held in Fisherwick-place Church, Belfast, on Monday evening week. Rev. Dr. Todd Martin presided, and an address from the ladies of the congregation was presented to Miss Lynd. A similar meeting was held last Monday evening in Rev. H. Montgomery's church, Belfast, to bid farewell to six missionaries about to go to India, viz., Revs. Wm. Beatty and H. R. Scott, and four ladies.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The number of Jews in Glasgow is very large, and a most hopeful mission has been instituted in their behalf, under the charge of Mr. Michaelis, who is a convert from Judaism.

At the annual meeting of the Young Men's Guild in connection with the Established Church, which was held in Perth last week, it was stated that the membership now amounts to 22,000.

Rev. Wm. Tulloch, presently pastor of Duncan-street Baptist Church, Edinburgh, celebrates this month the jubilee of his ministry. During these fifty years past he has done good service in the cause of Christ in Scotland.

At the annual meeting of the Evangelical Union Churches in Scotland, held last week in Glasgow, a very decided motion in favour of temperance reform was carried. A hopeful report was also made regarding the contemplated union with the Congregational Churches.

Rev. John Robertson, of the Gorbel's Tabernacle, Glasgow, has received but declined a call to the pastorate of Chicago Avenue Church. His decision has given great satisfaction in Glasgow, where his work has been much blessed, especially among the "lapsed masses."

The new Home Mission secretary of the Established Church, Rev. Theodore Marshall, has entered upon his duties. As he is an earnest Evangelical preacher, and an enthusiastic Christian worker, it is generally expected that aggressive work will be more vigorously prosecuted by this church, especially in the large towns.

"Gipsy Smith" is now engaged in a six months' mission in the Free Churches in Glasgow. He began his labours in Trinity Free Church, in the East-end, and at the closing service the large church was crowded in every part, and 200 individuals made profession of faith in Christ. Last Sabbath he began work in the West-end of the city, in the Free College Church (Rev. Dr. Reith's), which was also crowded; the message was with power.

The second session of the Bible Training Institute, 1, Blythswood-square, Glasgow, has begun, and gives every promise of being successful. Twenty-six students are in residence, whilst there are about sixteen outside students, among whom there are several missionaries on furlough. Several missions of ten days or a fortnight are being carried on by the students in connection with various churches in the city, and these are being greatly blessed.

Under Major Howe, the Salvation Army have been prosecuting an inquiry into the social state of "Darker Glasgow," and the facts brought to light are truly appalling. Some of them are so hideous that they cannot be made public, but will be laid before the police authorities. Others, however, have leaked out, such as that between ten and eleven o'clock on a Saturday evening 2,309 men and 365 women were seen to enter eight public-houses in and about the Trongate, in the east-end of the city; that this year 17,232 women were dragged before the Police-courts, and 13,208 of them consisted of drunkenness, disorderly conduct, and simple assault. In Glasgow the Army has got nine stations, two slum stations, and a Rescue Home; and they contemplate erecting other shelters for the homeless.

Zenana Farewell Meeting.

The friends and supporters of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission assembled in large numbers on Thursday week in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, to take leave of seventeen missionaries for India and Ceylon.

Rev. J. J. Kitto, rector of the parish, who presided, pointed out that in furthering the objects of this Society, healing the sick and preaching the Gospel, we are but fulfilling a duty and discharging an obligation; that India being now a part of our Queen's dominions, it is our privilege to share with our fellow-subjects the blessings of the Gospel.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier, general secretary, in introducing the missionaries, mentioned that three on the list are lady doctors, three trained nurses, and that of the rest four are going out specially for village work. He then called upon some of the out-going ladies to address the meeting.

Miss Jenkins, L.R.C.P. and S. (Edin.), returning to the Lady Kinnaird Memorial Hospital at Lucknow, spoke of the great and absorbing interest of the medical work. Miss Leslie, L.R.C.P. and S. (Edin.), who hopes to go out to Ceylon this autumn to open a Medical Mission in Jaffna, and Miss Wahl, of the Village Mission in Lucknow, Misses Edwards, McKinney, Borlase, and others having spoken,

Rev. F. B. Meyer gave the valedictory address, reminding those about to set forth of the wonderful words spoken to Gideon: "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valour": "Go in this thy might."

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 2, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	" "
For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2¼ dols.	" "
	2½ dols.	" "

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 " "	4s.	" "
12 " "	6s.	" "
24 " "	12s.	" "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Madame Esther Abraham, wife of Deacon Abraham, of Oroomiah, Persia.

With our next issue will be given a copy of The Christian Almanack, containing, in addition to the usual daily texts and other information, a number of illustrations in the life of Jeremiah, on which Rev. F. B. Meyer is about to contribute some chapters to our columns. The price of the paper (with Almanack) will be Twopence.

We direct special attention to the brief letter in our correspondence columns, suggesting an endowment fund for the Mildmay Institutions as the best memorial of the late Mrs. Pennefather and Sir Arthur Blackwood. We trust the proposal will be warmly taken up.

Col. Morton, of the Conference Hall, Mildmay, writes to us:—

As several have expressed a strong desire that a special service of praise and testimony should be held at an early date in connection with the departure of dear Sir Arthur Blackwood, it has been arranged to hold, if the Lord will, such a meeting in the Conference Hall, not to glorify Sir Arthur, but to glorify God in him. The day fixed is Tuesday, October 24, at 7.30 p.m.

The National Protestant Congress, which opened at Bath on Monday, bids fair to prove of great educative value in an important centre. On another page we give a brief account of the first meeting, and hope next week to report the proceedings of the three succeeding days of conference.

Friends of foreign missions may like to be reminded of the autumnal gathering to be held in Gordon Hall, Liverpool, on October 26 and 27. The special feature of this Conference is to stimulate interest in all missionary enterprise, and the programme is well calculated to accomplish this. More than a dozen societies will be represented. Among the speakers will be Dr. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, and Miss Annie Taylor of the Tibetan Mission.

As we write, the Coal War is dying down, and we hope will be virtually over before many days are gone. Some of the coal owners have almost justified the men in their determination to submit to no reduction, for they have taken thousands on at the old rates. The high prices which will rule for some time to come have afforded them an excellent reason, for, as The Times said last week, they stand to gain. Better counsels and kindlier motives have also played a part. The dislocation of trade and the sufferings of the poor women and children have had their effect. One can only regret that the Coal Owners' Association should have shown such a stiff front throughout the struggle. The Mayors gave them a good opportunity for yielding gracefully, and it is a pity they did not take it.

In their united capacity the coal owners, especially latterly, lost a good deal of sympathy, but it should never be forgotten that individually some of them have done noble things. One firm on the borders of Derbyshire and Yorkshire would not allow help to be sought for beyond the place itself, "because," said they, "other places have their own poor, who are worse off than ours. We will help our own men through." So the masters aided the very men with whom they were contending. In London no idea can be formed of the generous gifts and self-denying labours for the colliers, by families whose own businesses were crippled. Surely, out of this kind feeling and the bitter experience of the past weeks should emerge some wise plan by which these conflicts may be made for ever to cease. All points in the direction of a permanent Board of Arbitration.

There is always a gain in hearing the views of every class of men and every school of thinkers on the questions which affect the purity and usefulness of the churches of Christ. The utterances of Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., the Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, have weight and worth, as coming from a layman. His opinion that there is "too much mere preaching and too little Bible teaching" is not peculiar to himself, but some preachers who have attempted a more regular and systematic exposition of the Scriptures have been sorely discouraged by the want of appreciation on the part of hearers, from whom better things might have been expected. "The sincere milk of the Word" and "the solid food" are not agreeable to all. The embellishments of illustration and the secrets of the orator's art are of too much account. The pulpit gives tone to the pew, but the pew also tones the pulpit.

Mr. Spicer spoke truly of Independent churches when he said that "their ministry was not a hierarchy set over them, nor a caste living and working apart from them, but was from them and of them." If so, the laymen have a grave responsibility. Every theatre-going, pleasure-loving, money-making member of the churches is doing his worst to degrade the ministry into a man-pleasing institution. If the ministry does not, as Mr. Spicer thinks it does not, press home the conviction of sin and the need of salvation, the question is not altogether settled by blaming the ministers. They are to blame if he is right, but it takes a good deal of courage to reprove the sins of those respectable sinners who attend places of worship. It must be done, and we hope Mr. Spicer's words will aid all ministers to do it. Ministers know what the cost will be; but what are they for if they do not do it?

As part of that whole defect, Mr. Spicer deplores the absence of "appeal" from modern sermons. It certainly was a prominent feature of the Evangelical preaching of the first half of this century. John Angell James in his strong and massive way; James Sherman with his showers of tears; James Parsons with his weird voice and heaped-up terrors—were mighty in appeal. But when we look at the preaching of our Lord and his apostles, appeal, instead of being reserved for the end as a kind of final forth-putting of energy, was interwoven with the very texture of the discourse. The speaker was all along in close contact with his hearers, seeking to rouse their consciences and to bend their wills. When Paul reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment, Felix trembled. When Lord Brougham heard Robert Hall preach from that text, he remarked: "Felix might well tremble, if Paul reasoned as Hall did." Yet Hall's sermons, at least the printed ones, are not distinguished by appeal as a separate feature.

Rev. W. Pierce was applauded when he said at the City Temple that candidates for the ministry should be adequately tested; which, of course, meant a resuscitation of lay preaching. Who applauded? The laymen? Then they can resume at once a too much forgotten privilege. Did the ministers applaud? Let us hope that their zeal will fire the laymen.

The Congregational Union took a step in the right direction when it not only called upon Government to enforce at once upon all administrators of law in India an absolute obedience to the will of the Imperial Parliament, but also affirmed that the only effective method of preventing those systematic practices for the legalisation of vice which have been carried out in India, is by penal legislation. This is the opinion of the Departmental Committee, which has just reported on the question, and it is the strong opinion of those who have given the most care and attention to it. The military authorities would never have been so careless or so reckless, whichever it was, as to have gone on working an abominable system, had they known that they could be punished for doing it. Once we get this made the law of the land, we shall soon see an improved state of feeling and practice.

That our large centres of population become centres of condensed evil influences can hardly be doubted; but whether London Christianity deserves to be stigmatised as Mr. Tom Mann has done is not so clear. He is reported to have said:

They had as much hypocrisy in London churches and chapels as the whole country beside could show.

This statement, made in a chapel on a Sunday, was cheered by some and hissed by others. But only cheers greeted Mr. Mann's next utterance:

Captains of industry went to church and mumbled the Lord's Prayer, and then for the remaining six days of the week violated every principle contained in that prayer, and sweated their fellows without remorse.

Before condemning Mr. Mann for doing anything unbecoming, we must remember our Lord's words: "Woe unto you rich men," and also James's: "Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you." And if we are shocked by the cheers and hisses, we may remember that Paul again and again preached amid storms of popular rage. We say these things to create thought.

We referred last week to Professor Prestwich's article on the position of geology as an evidence that the theories as to the antiquity of man rest on a very insecure basis. Dr. Wright's book, "Man and the Glacial Period," is said by the Critical Review to be an interesting and valuable contribution to the same side of the subject. As there has been only one glacial period, and that came to an end in America only some 8000 years ago, it brings the old chronology and the latest scientific calculations almost within touch. Men would hardly spring up after the Ice Age as quickly as flowers follow the melting of the snow and ice on the Alps in spring; so that if some fair allowance be made for the appearance of man, we may find that our old notions were not so absurd. On the whole, the Book of Genesis is weathering the storm of adverse criticism wonderfully well, and we can afford to wait.

A writer in The Biblical World, a Chicago monthly dealing with Hebrew historiography, well says:—

The history of Israel was no history of battles, and sieges, and treaties; no history of kings, and statesmen, and diplomatists; no history of commerce, and manufacture, and art. It was a history of the faith and rebellion of the people, as individuals, and as a nation; it was a history of the Divine reward and the Divine retribution; it was a history of the providential movings of God in the selection of a man, and a family, and a nation, to be holy unto himself, and a peculiar people.

Thus the primary purpose of the Old Testament writers was a religious and theocratic one, to set forth the relation of man with his Maker, and to exhibit the purpose of God in redemption. The New Testament completes what the Old began, as its history has for centre and circumference the Christ whose day the patriarchs and prophets joyfully anticipated.

Disregard of the notes of time in Rom. vii. has caused many to fall short of realising the Apostle's precise meaning. A correspondent points out that in this epistle Paul carefully places past and present experiences in direct and emphatic antithesis by employing the particle nuni de—"But now," "Now, on the other hand." Our correspondent writes:—

Turn to Rom. iii. 21 ("But now, apart from the Law"); vi. 22 ("But now, being made free from sin"); and vii. 6 ("But now, we are delivered from the law.") It is a strong temporal contrast in each case, and the expression has no other meaning. The old "I" was carnal, sold under sin; the new "I" is a different agent altogether. And having told of the doings of the one, the Apostle says (v. 17), "But now it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." The "I" is different, and cannot do what it used to do; but there is something now which is not the "I," but sadly mixed up with it. And this something brings me into captivity—that is, seeks, aims, labours, to bring me into captivity. It only needs a man to be very holy to give him such a feeling in regard to the least remaining unholiness.

Thus, the chapter does not describe varying degrees of Christian experience, but contrasts the sonship and freedom conferred by union with Christ, with the bondage and fear which characterised the service of God under the dispensation of the law.

THE BEST THING we can do for our children, after all, is to "stand out of their sunlight." Show Christ to your children, and depend upon it they will love Him as naturally as did those Jewish children, who, when they saw Him, ran up to him in childish delight.

[1068]

The Labourer's Hire.

One of the most noteworthy incidents in the recent meetings of the Congregational Union was the discussion on the recent strike, which indicates very clearly the tendency of Christian thought at this present crisis in one large and important section of the Christian Church.

A resolution, which bore the traces of very careful preparation by its well-balanced phraseology, was moved by Dr. Horton, to the effect that whilst carefully refusing to pass an opinion on subjects needing technical knowledge for their proper consideration, the assembly pleaded with all concerned for an exercise of forbearance and fair judgment, urged each to do what was right as between man and man, and recommended that those holding different opinions should credit one another with the best and highest motives. In his speech Dr. Horton said that the time was coming when the empirical laws of political economy would not be ranked with the laws of nature, with the laws of morality, or with the laws of God, but when dealings between masters and men would be adjusted on the principle of the Sermon on the Mount, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

The assembly appears to have endorsed Dr. Horton's speech, but not his resolution. Indeed we will do Dr. Horton the credit of believing that his own sentiments were but inadequately expressed by the resolution that was put into his hand. Almost immediately an amendment was moved, embodying much that he had said, but going far in advance of the proposition he had made, and this was adopted without any dissent, as expressing the mind of the assembly.

Instead of refusing to pass an opinion on technical details, this resolution struck at once to the root of the matter, and announced the great ethical principle that the rights of humanity must always take precedence of those of property. It went on to declare that it is inconsistent alike with righteousness and fraternity, that profit should be made out of the labours of men who are receiving wages inadequate to the support of themselves and their families. Finally it recommended the submission of all trade disputes to the settlement of an impartial tribunal.

This is almost the first occasion on which a great Christian body has espoused so clearly and emphatically the rights of labour, and entered into conflict with the maxims of political economy. Hitherto the one principle that has determined dealings of man with man, has been selfishness. It is supposed that employers are justified in giving the lowest wage that men will take, altogether irrespective of whether that wage is sufficient for the decent and healthy living of operatives and their families. On the other hand, it has been granted that the men have a right to extort the highest wages that they could extract, and to do this by strikes, promoted at the time when they will cause the greatest inconvenience to capitalists. The principle of selfishness has been the one prevalent motive power in the world of commerce and labour.

It appears to have been permitted by Divine Providence, that this principle of securing the utmost benefit with as little consideration as possible of the claims of others, should be allowed to work itself out to its legitimate results, and to be therefore self-condemned in the dead-lock to which it is reducing human society.

On all hands we have illustrations of the extremes to which it is leading capitalists and workmen. Take, for instance, those gigantic emporiums which are mercilessly swallowing up all smaller tradesmen, and filling whole streets with a variety of shops under one name. Would not these have fallen under the denunciation of the old prophets, who exposed the wickedness of those who added field to field until there was no room left in the land! The enormous fortunes of the last twenty years tell the same story—of the advantage that men of capital have taken to aggrandise themselves at the cost of the suffering and penury of thousands; for it is certain where there is excessive wealth there must also be excessive poverty. A further illustration of the same principle may be found in the transactions which take place by tens of thousands every day, and in which each man endeavours to make his profits in avowed unconcern of the well-being of those for whom he negotiates, or with whom he deals. Everything shows that the principle of "Every man for himself" has as its worthy climax, "The devil for us all."

We have yet to learn that the principles of the Sermon on the Mount are not the dream of an enthusiast, but the only working code of morals on which all the dealings of man with his fellow can be conducted, consistently with the healthy maintenance of society and the true welfare of the individual.

We hold that the capitalist has a right to a fair percentage on his capital, and, in addition, to fair remuneration for his thought and time and power of organisation and management, but that he has no right to avail himself of the further results of the workers' toil for purposes of luxury and self-indulgence unless he is sure that these are provided with the means of healthy and sufficient livelihood. A Christian man has positively no right to live in luxury if he knows that the girls in his employ receive so miserable a pittance that they are driven to straits which expose them to the worse perils of the streets. Infinitely better to give them a righteous wage than presently to be announced in subscription lists as the donor of £1000 to a charity. We must learn to look each one on the things of others as well as our own.

In the meantime there is ample scope for Christian philanthropy to alleviate as far as possible the misery caused to the women and children, and to others indirectly concerned, and we cordially rejoice in the liberal response which has been made to the appeals of the daily papers. But that there should be a need for such an appeal is one of the saddest comments on the practical absence of the Spirit of Christ as ordering the relation of man with man in mercantile life.

Welsh People in France.

Pastor Fargues, of the French Reformed Church at Nantes, writes as follows:—"There are from thirty-five to forty working people living at Basse Indre about seven miles from Nantes, who have come from the neighbourhood of Swansea, Newport, and Cardiff, and belong to the Baptist Church. We meet together on the principles of the Evangelical Alliance. There are only two Protestants where they live, and they are very isolated. I have begun a service, in English, for them twice a month, and am getting together a little library. But the room in which we meet is too small. We want a larger room, and furniture, also money to purchase Bibles and hymn-books. I estimate the cost for the first year at about £30. Besides the Sunday meeting, I visit them as often as I can in the week."

The pastor asks us if we know any friends in Wales, or in England, who will come to the help of these lonely people, who are indebted to the kind help of this French pastor for their spiritual sustentation. I shall be very glad to forward to Pastor Fargues any sums that your readers may feel moved to send.—Yours faithfully,

28, Villa Molitor, Auteuil, Paris. W. Soltau.

Miss Willard's Annual Address.

A pamphlet of ninety-six pages constitutes Miss Willard's "Address before the Second Biennial Convention of the W.W.C.T.U." No part of it, unfortunately, could be either read or spoken by Miss Willard, who is ordered to take a year's rest from public work, and is enjoying it in England. We turned to such a bulky "address" with the hope that we were going to read, for once again, a document like the reports of the old American Anti-Slavery Society, wherein are preserved discussions of every phase of the movement, answers to all opponents of any note who had either spoken or written able contributions to the political thought of the times, and a constant application of Christian truth to the question in debate.

Perhaps we were not justified in our expectation; certainly it was not fulfilled. The time was clearly one for some very exhaustive discussion of first principles and present-day phases of thought on moral reform; but we have to be content with a document which is multitudinous in topics and not very cohesive. It is bright, epigrammatic, ardent, and full of hope and faith.

We can hardly believe that Miss Willard's utterances on "Gospel Socialism" will commend themselves to a large section of earnest temperance workers. She says:—

It will take several generations to change the set of brain and trend of thought, so that in place of an individual we shall have a corporate conscience; but the outcome of the Gospel and the golden rule will at last make it intuitive with us to say, "Our duty," rather than always "My duty."

Corporate consciences have generally been dangerous things, and on the wrong side. The cultivation of the individual conscience is the only way by which righteousness can be brought in; it alone can and will withstand the conventionalities and the easy-going acquiescence in wrongdoing which are so deplorable a feature of our times. Jesus said, "I must work the works of Him that sent Me." So must every disciple.

We cannot accept the statement that "in every Christian there exists a socialist; and in every socialist a Christian," leastways, as our American friends would phrase it, many Christians are unaware of the socialism they harbour, and many Socialists are quite innocent of any Christianity. Miss Willard speaks also of "King Demos" as "the only ruler who, once set on the throne, shall never abdicate." No; the only Ruler who shall never abdicate is Jesus, "whose throne is for ever and ever." We may mean the same thing at the bottom, as we surely are aiming at the same thing—"preparing the way of the Lord, making his paths straight."

The record of the "Progress of women in 1892-93," as given by Miss Willard at the end of her address, is a very striking table. Many of its points are not of much moment in themselves, but as straws to show the current they are significant. One at least we should take as a bad sign; the last article in the manifesto of the Women's Rights party in Paris:

Obligatory military service for men, obligatory humanitarian service for women, the defence of the territory entrusted to men, the philanthropies confided to women.

We grieve that any women should foster militarism, that they should separate men from women in humanitarian works, and that they should be so unwise as to think that any service for the uplifting of the world can be of any use when it is "obligatory." One item in the table of progress is well worth quoting—"Women are employed at railway switches and crossings in Italy, because they do not get intoxicated."

Prophetic Notes.

Forty years ago, in prophetic Bible-reading meetings, at which it was attempted to set forth predicted events in the order in which they were to occur, one question almost invariably arose: "Whether the Church would be called to pass through the tribulation?" This question has never been settled. It is almost always one of the first raised at similar meetings still. One school of interpreters is certain that the Church will, and another is as certain that it will not, be so privileged, as some regard it, or so dishonoured, as others think of it. The question has been burning for about half a century, and it remains a burning question still. With respectful deference to teachers of various prophetic systems, we advise our readers, especially the younger, to refrain from it. If it were the Lord's will that we should certainly know, and if the knowledge were necessary to our sanctification, would He not have told us?

To those, however, who think themselves called to consider the question, we may mention two scholarly but caustic tractates by Dr. Nathaniel West (a prominent member of the Niagara Conference for Bible Study), entitled, "The Apostle Paul and the Any-Moment-Rapture Theory. No Any-Moment Rapture;" and "The Coming of the Lord in the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles." (Armstrong, 718, Sansom-street, Philadelphia.) The price would be under 6d. each.

On the other hand, we have before us a handsome volume entitled, "The Scroll of Time," by John Ashton Savage (Rouse, 2s. 6d.), with an exceedingly well executed diagram of the Epochs and Dispensations of Scripture, in which the alternative view is taken that the Rapture may occur at any moment.

We have nothing to say on either of these views, except that the hope itself may be as effectually obscured by a controversy as to time and manner, as by looking for intervening events. We think that all expressions calculated to depreciate or irritate the exponents of opposite views should be scrupulously avoided!

The first coming was so clearly foretold, that many were waiting for redemption in Jerusalem when Jesus was born; and thirty years later "they thought the Kingdom of God should immediately appear." The events of his second coming have been as distinctly foretold as the first, and we also are waiting for Him. But schemes of fulfilment, on which no two persons perfectly agree, are, we humbly think, calculated to distract us from the "blessed hope" itself, to set us "reasoning" with one another, and to divide us into parties. Paul was judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers, unto which promise (he said) our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. Is not "instantly serving God day and night," a more influential factor in keeping alive the hope of his coming and the love of his appearing, than any view as to the manner or time of his coming, or the order of events connected with it?

As the position of the Jew in the purposes of God may be overlooked, so it may be exaggerated. We remember a brother in our younger days, early in the fifties, who had a habit of following out an idea, no matter where it led him. He had been taught that certain Scriptures were Jewish. He soon maintained that not only all the Old Testament, but a large part of the New, was Jewish. Matthew, Hebrews, James, Peter, the Revelation, all Jewish. And, pursuing his studies in this direction, he exercised himself to discover how much of the rest was Jewish.

Since this was written, one of the speakers at a conference on the Lord's Second Advent, in answering the question, "Will all believers be caught up at the coming of Christ for his saints?" said that the multiplication of questions of this sort has a tendency to divide students of prophecy into cliques, which is very much what we have said above. Such questions have a tendency to multiply, and not only to divide elder Christians, but to puzzle younger ones.

The idea that only eminently devoted and watchful and faithful believers will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, or that only such form the Bride (if indeed the Bride is not, as some say, altogether Jewish), would prove a comforting doctrine rather to spiritually proud than to humble souls, for the devoted and the watchful and the faithful are also the lowliest. They have the meanest opinion of themselves. They know more than anyone else can know of their sins and shortcomings. And if union with Christ does not make them meet for the inheritance of the saints in light; or if the Bride is an eclectic company out of the Church; or if a believer may belong to the Bride, yet not attain to be a member of the body; or be saved, and yet come short of the 144,000—then they who do not think of themselves more highly than they ought to think, and who esteem others better than themselves, would be the last to feel assured that they would attain to the more exalted place.

Expository Notes.

"WATER AND THE SPIRIT."

It is sometimes taught with emphasis that in John iii. 5, the water is equivalent to the Word. It is quite true that we are begotten by the Word of Truth, and that water is used in Eph. v. 26 as a symbol of the Word. But does this interpretation meet the conditions of the passage before us, and by its fitness prove itself true, as a key proves itself by fitting the wards of the lock? The following remarks are offered for consideration:—

1. This interpretation takes the two objects differently—water symbolically, Spirit literally. This should suggest hesitation in adopting it.

2. The instrumentality by which the new birth is effected does not seem to be the first matter in which Nicodemus needed instruction.

3. In the beginning of the Gospel, as well as just before Christ's Ascension, we have these two terms in similar juxtaposition. John the Baptist says, "I indeed have baptized you with water, but He shall baptize you with the Holy Spirit" (Mark i. 8; Matt. iii. 11). In Acts i. 5 Jesus says, "John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit."

4. John had come to prepare the way of the Lord, and the Pharisees, whom Nicodemus represented, had refused the baptism of John, had rejected the counsel of God against themselves, not being baptized of Him.

5. The baptism of John meant the confession of sin and repentance toward God. Those who submitted to it confessed that they were worthy of death because they had broken the covenant they entered into at Sinai—"All that the Lord hath spoken will we do." It was indispensable to entry into the kingdom of God, that a man, whether Jew or Gentile, should take the place of confession and repentance signified by the baptism of John, who came to prepare the way of the Lord. Whereas the fact that we are begotten by the Word of Truth, though a most important truth, was not relevant to the then condition of Nicodemus or to the instruction necessary at the present stage. A man not yet born anew was not prepared for teaching as to how the change was to be brought about, for "none can experience Divine things by mere learning and knowledge of themselves" (Stier). "The kingdom of God is nothing into which a man can think, or investigate, or study, or read, or hear, or talk, or discuss himself. Man can only experience his way into the kingdom of God" (Dräseke, quoted by Stier).

6. The great truth to be pressed upon Nicodemus was that he, the teacher of Israel, must come down from his high place, must die out of what he was as a son of Abraham after the flesh, a son of fallen Adam, and be quickened by the Spirit into newness of life.

Stier, Olshausen, Alford, and other of the most thoughtful evangelical commentators substantially agree that the terms "water and the Spirit" relate respectively to the ministries of John and of Jesus, and this appears to be justified by its relevancy to the case, as the true key fits the wards of a lock.

The Chicago Campaign.

Sunday last saw the commencement of the twenty-fourth week of Gospel effort at the World's Fair, and seldom, if ever, have Christian workers received more encouragement in their labours of love than among the residents and visitors of all classes, who have thronged in their thousands to hear the word of God. We heard it said the other day that Mr. Moody had more workers than he knew what to do with; but this is not the case. True it may be that he has more preachers gathered round him than he has platforms or pulpits for them to occupy, but he keeps them busy none the less, for to be a co-worker with him is to know but little of repose and still less of idleness. No more important sphere of service exists than personal dealing with anxious ones in the inquiry room, and it has been a welcome respite to some of them to exchange the pulpit for the pew, and the crowd for the individual listener, to whom they have explained the way of life more perfectly.

The great feature of the past month has been the engagement of several more theatres—the largest and most influential in the city—for evangelistic use upon the Lord's Day; and the Central Music Hall for daily meetings from eleven to one o'clock, with an attendance of three thousand persons. Below we give some of the impressions formed and described by our several correspondents.

From the opening of the Moody evangelistic campaign to its present stage of development all has gone well.

NO FALSE STEP HAS BEEN TAKEN.

An overruling Hand has evidently controlled the movement from the beginning. It seemed to some timid souls a hazardous experiment to push into the very business heart of the city, to solicit a hearing for the Gospel of Christ in the mid-day hours of the busy days. But faith takes not account of human fears or improbabilities. The splendid Central Music Hall was secured for daily meetings, and the wisdom of the choice was demonstrated in the first service. It is a striking object lesson set before the eyes of the hurrying thousands on business and pleasure bent—two hours out of the heart of each day devoted to the consideration of things unseen and eternal, while the foaming waves of worldly traffic beat upon the walls within which the worshippers wait upon the Lord. It is a daily standing protest against the mammon worship of the busy mart, and an appeal to the unsatisfied cravings of the soul that cannot live by bread alone.

It was in Mr. Moody's heart from the beginning of his World's Fair campaign to bring the Gospel message to the ears of various nationalities represented in Chicago, as well as to the English-speaking multitudes. His own preaching, by word of mouth, is confined to one language only—his strong, simple, lucid, terse, graphic English. But his heart yearned after the tens of thousands of Germans, French, Bohemians, Swedes, and other nationalities, and he rested not until they also heard the Gospel at the mouth of evangelists in their own language.

When it was known that Mr. Moody had invited Germany's famous Court preacher, the eloquent and powerful Dr. Adolf Stoecker, full many faint hearts waxed fainter still in fear of the opposition that his coming would provoke among certain classes of our population. It was also feared that the great orator would strike out beyond the lines of Gospel-preaching into questions of bitter controversy and contention. But Dr. Stoecker has come as a man of God, a minister of Jesus Christ, to preach the Gospel of the Grace of God to his brethren. A number of daily papers had indulged in ungracious criticism of Mr. Moody for having invited him, and misrepresented the object of the preacher's visit. "I'll tell you," said Mr. Moody, "why I tried to get Dr. Stoecker here. Because he is a man of God who is giving his life for the welfare of the people, and has been greatly used of God. He is trying to do in Germany just what I am trying to do here—to reach the non-church-going masses with the Gospel of Christ for their salvation. He has institutions in Berlin somewhat like our Bible Institute here, and is doing the same work. I have great respect for a man who comes out of the royal court to do the work that he does. I want him here to speak the word of life to his own fellow-countrymen in this great city."

Dr. Stoecker honoured this confidence by giving public assurance that he had not come to Chicago as an agitator, but as a preacher to proclaim the Gospel to his brethren. His first public address soon set at rest the fears of foes, and silenced the voices of doubting friends, while it vindicated the wisdom and sound judgment of his host.

During three weeks Dr. Stoecker went in and out among us, as a man of God without guile and without reproach, preaching the Gospel in beautiful simplicity, sweetness, and power, in various churches, halls, and tents, and addressing immense audiences in the Central Music Hall on four memorable occasions with surpassing eloquence. Some of his hearers will not soon forget how he brought them face to face with the highest and noblest ideals of life and character, and with the overawing realities and solemnities of eternity; how he appealed to his German hearers by all that is best and most inspiring in the old national life, character, and history; how he touched with masterly skill and power the chords of memory that bind every true German heart to the old homeland beyond the seas; and how faithfully he set forth the evils and dangers that beset the path of this great republic in its career of development, and pointed out the only security for personal, individual, social, and national life in the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Some will long remember how persuasively he appealed to the sons of the old fatherland to show themselves worthy of the new fatherland to which they had come, by seeking the highest good of the places where they dwelt, and to aspire to the better fatherland in that unseen world towards which all men haste.

It is interesting to notice what estimate the German secular Press has formed of Dr. Stoecker in his championship of Christianity in Chicago. A fair expression will be found in an editorial of the Illinois Staats Zeitung, one of the ablest and most influential German dailies of the West, which has no sympathy with the religion of Jesus Christ. The article is remarkable for its candid recognition of the high character and abilities of the illustrious preacher, and of the work he has done in Chicago.

"With regard to Dr. Adolf Stoecker's labours in Germany, one may think what he pleases, but for his now completed three weeks in Chicago he certainly deserves the warm appreciation of the German-Americans. When, in spite of many provocations, he honestly and faithfully kept his promise to leave the Jewish question entirely untouched, he rose, as a Christian preacher,

ABOVE ALL SECTARIANISM.

"In his more secular discourses before great assemblies from the various German-American circles he also evidenced a gratifying spirit of tolerance, without compromising or denying his positive orthodox Protestant principles. A more charming and beautiful address was probably never delivered in Chicago than the one with which Dr. Stoecker took leave of that immense assembly in the Central Music Hall on Sunday, September 24."

Dr. Stoecker's parting from Mr. Moody and his associates was very touching. His warm, generous German heart had been completely won, and he had entered with all his soul into the work for his fellow-countrymen. He departed with regret, and with desire and hope to come back again at some future day.

Dr. Stoecker closed his series of week night sermons in the Moody church on a Saturday evening by taking his hearers into the Book of Revelation for a look into eternity and a view of the millennial age of the world, when the socialistic dream of an earthly paradise shall be realised, not in the wisdom and power and achievements of man, but in the grace and power of God. The series of sermons culminating in this made a profound impression on the scores of ministers and thousands of people who heard them. Yesterday afternoon the great German orator addressed an immense multitude of people that packed the vast Central Music Hall to its utmost capacity. It was a scene and an experience such as Chicago has not witnessed before. The occasion was a great and critical one and the preacher turned it into a sublime triumph in the name and by the power of his Divine Master. The sermon was from a preacher who is greater than his sermon and the effect was profound and overwhelming.

A MASTERPIECE OF SACRED ORATORY,

One Friday afternoon, in Holmes' Hall, a special meeting was held, which many will long remember. About 450 mothers were assembled, to whom Dr. Stoecker spoke with such wisdom, tenderness, and power that all hearts were profoundly moved and affected, and tears flowed freely. The speaker's own soul was deeply moved as he spoke of the duties and responsibilities of mothers, and the strength and tenderness and power of mother love. He paid a beautiful tribute to his own mother, and said that what he was he owed to her. Never have those German mothers listened to such an appeal and never will they forget it.

In explaining the movement under his direction in the heart of the city, Mr. Moody said: "We have been working for four months in various parts of the city, and now we have secured this Central Music Hall for two months, to reach the business centre with the Gospel, in the middle of the day. We have got the help of a number of eminent ministers from home and abroad. We want a little Scotch fire here, a little English fire, and a little German fire. We have distinguished speakers to speak to speak to us every day. These meetings will accommodate the many World's Fair visitors, and the business men in this central part of the city who are anxious to hear these men of God. Many who come here to listen to the Word of Life will be quickened and renewed, as they go away from here into all parts of the land and the world, and to their own towns, churches and homes and set them on fire for God. That is what we want, that is what we are praying and labouring for."

THEY WILL CARRY THIS FIRE

These midday meetings in the Central Music Hall were crowded out of that place by other engagements for three days, and transferred to the Columbia Theatre. The change did not decrease the great congregations nor abate the remarkable interest of the meeting. When the meetings were again resumed in the Music Hall, among the new faces appearing on the platform was that of Count Bernstorff, of Germany. He is a tall, large, stately man of fine presence and good address. Better still, he is an earnest, faithful Christian who gives himself to diligent service in the cause of Christ. Mr. Moody introduced the count to the audience, and he responded with a short address, in good English bearing strong testimony to the reality and blessedness of the religion of Jesus Christ. "I don't know," he said, "how I could manage to live even one day of this earthly life of mine without Jesus." On another occasion, while Mr. Moody was speaking, there appeared on the platform two men in strange foreign garb, who took their place among the ministers seated there. At the close of the service Mr. Moody, turning to the eldest of the two strangers—a large, portly, full-bearded ecclesiastic dressed in a gorgeous robe—simply announced, "The Greek priest will lead us in a closing prayer," which the priest did, in broken English, closing with the apostolic benediction.

The following from The Inter-Ocean, one of Chicago's leading dailies, shows to what extent the movement has forced itself upon public notice, especially in view of the fact that it is introduced by five or six "head-lines" upon the front page:—

"One of the busiest days of the Moody gospel campaign was yesterday (Sept. 24). The orders for a general advance had been issued from the office of the commanding general at the Bible Institute headquarters, and Sunday was to give the marching start for the week.

Mr. Moody was, as usual, on the stage of the Haymarket Theatre in the morning. It has come to be understood that this is the one place where inquiring strangers may be sure to find the man of whom all the world has heard. And it has been ascertained by actual test that on a certain Sunday about 2,8[illegible] of the 3,000 people in the theatre were strangers presumably World's Fair visitors, eager to see and hear the great preacher.

"During the past week Mr. Moody and Dr. A. C. Dixon maintained a sort of preaching exchange in the Model South Side Building and the Epworth Hotel Tabernacle, near the Exposition grounds, each of them preaching at both places each evening. One remarkable feature of these meetings was the who attended them, as many as sixty or a hundred being present at one time, probably aggregating nearly 1000 during the week.

LARGE NUMBER OF MINISTERS

"In addition to these nightly meetings, Mr. Moody conducted the daily noontide meetings in the Central Music Hall, and in the Columbia Theatre. He was assisted by Mr. Varley (London), Revs. Dr. Dixon (Brooklyn), John Robertson (Glasgow), Dr. Wharton (Baltimore), J. Riddell (Glasgow), Dr. Wilbur Chapman (Philadelphia), Major Whittle and others. Mr. Moody himself spoke each day, with others, during the first hour and a-half, and Rev. John McNeill filled the remainder of the two hours with his wonderful Scripture illuminations, of which the fascinated hearers never weary. The short, spirited, pointed addresses of the various speakers who have assisted Mr. Moody have been greatly appreciated. During ten consecutive days Mr. Moody spoke on the subject of prayer, presenting one of ten elements of prayer each day, and recapitulating and newly enforcing the points already presented.

"Mr. Henry Varley preached with characteristic energy and power in Hooley's Theatre and in First Congregational Church. His great sermon on 'The Doctrine of the Atonement,' preached in the latter place, will not soon be forgotten by many who heard its invincible argument and irresistible application. In ten propositions the preacher set forth his important subject."

Of another Sabbath the same paper says:—"The last week of the Moody World's Fair Gospel campaign has opened under the most favourable conditions, with wider scope, larger working forces, more thorough organisation, and brighter promise. Yesterday was a notable day in the eyes of the evangelists and their co-workers. It was full of gratitude for past accomplishments, and radiant with hope of still greater things to come. A number of new centres of operation have been occupied, among which are two theatres, the Windsor and the Columbia, the South Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, where about twenty different Churches have united for a grand forward movement, under the inspiring leadership of Dr. H. M. Wharton, of Baltimore, aided by that cultured singer, Professor Stebbins, and the Third Presbyterian Church, in union with half-a-dozen other Churches, with Dr. Wilbur Chapman, of Philadelphia, in charge.

"In the Columbia Theatre the first sermon was preached by the popular favourite, Mr. McNeill, and in the Windsor Theatre, the able leader, Major Whittle, and the successful people's evangelist, Ferdinand Schiverea, united for the opening meeting. The newly-arrived singer, whom all the world knows, the sound of whose voice has gone to the ends of the earth, Ira D. Sankey, was booked for not less than eight different meetings during the day. Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, had, so to speak, an all-day meeting, preaching five times, in the Model Sunday-school building and the Epworth Hotel Tabernacle, and Professor Towner celebrated his convalescence by conducting the services of song.

"At the Haymarket Theatre Mr. Moody had his usual experience with an eager multitude that overflowed the great building. He preached a sermon of convincing power on the scriptural doctrine of the Atonement. In the evening a great throng listened to him in the Plymouth Congregational Church.

"The Standard Theatre meetings were addressed by Mr. Henry Varley and Dr. R. A. Torrey. These meetings have been among the most fruitful of the entire campaign. Sometimes from one to two hundred souls yield to the power of the truth in a single service.

"The Central Music-hall meetings were in the hands of Mr. McNeill, who preached to great throngs at 2.30 and 8 p.m. The Moody church had three preaching services with Rev. John Robertson in the pulpit. His words were with power. The tents, halls, gospel waggons and other places had their usual meetings, where thousands came under the influence of the Gospel. The entire force of the workers was engaged in the fifty or sixty different meetings in the various places, and a genuine field day they made of the Sunday."

Among other speakers, besides those mentioned, who have joined the forces are Dr. Pentecost (London), Major Cole, Mr. Merton Smith, Rev. Niclaus Bolt (for Germans), etc. Also Miss B. B. Tyson, of Washington, whose labours among the children in the tents during the afternoons have been wonderfully blessed, this lady having a degree of sanctified sympathy and good judgment which has qualified her in a special sense for this phase of the work. Thus there is coming and going, some staying longer than others, and their places being taken in turn by further fresh arrivals. As, according to present information, the campaign will close with the present month, our readers will, we trust, make fervent and effectual prayer that the remaining two weeks may be characterised in an unprecedented degree by the power of the Spirit to wound, to bind up, and to heal those who, coming from all quarters of the globe, shall hear the Gospel and feel its power, as in the days of old, so that they may return as bearers of the good tidings to their kinsfolk and acquaintance afar off.

A CONTINUAL STREAM OF FELLOW-HELPERS

THE LATE SIR S. A. BLACKWOOD.

MORE REMINISCENCES.

Dear Sir,—Though at a distance, I desire to place my little wreath upon the sacred memory of Sir Arthur Blackwood. In all the world there is no man who has deeper and sweeter reason for doing so than myself. All I am and all God has been pleased to do through me are to be traced back to that dear man of God. He was God's instrument of my salvation. Thirty-two years ago, just to keep a promise, I went to the Monday meeting at Wood Lodge, Streatham. I was a careless young fellow, and had little faith in the reality of Christians. Before Mr. Blackwood had been speaking ten minutes I felt that I was listening to one who believed every word he spoke.

Great was my surprise when, at the close of the meeting, he came straight up to me, put his hands on my shoulders, and looking me in the face with those loving eyes of his said, "Young man, you are a stranger here. Are you a Christian?" I confessed at once that I was not, and had no great desire to be. I think I can now hear him answering, "How sad!" That question hooked itself into my heart. For two days I had no rest. Then I found peace in Jesus. I went at once to Wood Lodge and told Mr. Blackwood I could now say "Yes" to the question "Are you a Christian?" He took me into his private room, kneeled down with me, and poured out his soul in thanksgiving. The next week he asked me to breakfast, and took me down to Tooting Common, where a railway was being made. He introduced me to the navvies, and told them I would come every morning during their breakfast time and read the Word of God to them, which I did. He thus not only won my heart to Christ, but gently led me into his service. Living as I did then in Clapham Park, I used to see him almost every day as he rode on horseback to the Treasury. He always pulled up to allow me a few minutes' walk by his side, and his loving words helped me all the day.

A few months later dear Mr. Spurgeon took me by the hand and brought me into his College. The rest is generally known. I went to East London and preached the Gospel as I had learned it from Sir Arthur's lips. God mightily blessed the same; and it has been my gracious privilege to baptize over 5000 who have been converted by the same Gospel that won me. Pardon any seeming egotism. I only mention the fact as a tribute to the memory of that faithful servant of God, who thirty-two years ago, grasped me by the hand and won me to the Saviour. Whenever I met him he used always to ask with loving smile, "How are all my spiritual grand-children in East London?" Thousands to-day have reason to join with me in praising God for that Monday evening, thirty-two years ago. He has entered into glory and his works do follow him. As one of his early converts, allow me to bear this grateful witness to his precious memory.

Yours very faithfully,

Mentone, Oct. 13. Archibald G. Brown.

We first met in a tiny garret in a dim old alley near the Home of Industry, twenty-seven years ago. The occupants were a couple of saintly but very poor widows. He was in the act of commending their suffering bodies to the loving Father; this was done with both tears and tenderness; no haste; he seemed full of leisure, revelling in "the joy of doing kindnesses," carrying sympathy and compassion down to his Lord's much-tried children. The elder was bedridden, and the younger a widow with twisted fingers, trying to wind silk for the neighbouring weavers.

Our next meeting was quite a different scene. Some 300 poor little matchbox makers were to have a Christmas treat. Sir Arthur came bringing his two eldest children. How we all toiled that night, fitting those half-naked children with garments made by the ladies who attended his mission hall services. What a help to a beginner in East-end work to have one who could not only give an address, but keep order whilst the robing each wee mite went on. It would be difficult to say who showed most delight, the givers or the receivers. This we know, that the deep interest shown by this noble man and his dear lady to the suffering poor after the scourage of cholera in East London cheered many a vineyard labourer. Then with his large heart he devised the thought of taking the poor into the country from our closely-packed dens. After we arrived at his mansion in waggons, how his delight was to marshal them amongst the flower beds, and regale them most sumptously. Songs of Zion were sung, words of loving cheer were spoken, and we returned to our city life under the influence of his prayers and blessings.

We have heard how the rich and the great loved him and flocked to his Bible readings in halls, and drawing-room meetings in the West End, but we know how genial and attractive he ever was to the poor and needy, many became pensioners of his bounty, and they have never been forgotten these long years with their weekly allowances; many are on before, and would welcome him on the golden shore.

Many a happy postmen's gathering has been held at the Home of Industry. The last was a very specially impressive one, the men, owing to their official duties, gathered late, but, oh, how his whole heart and soul flowed out for a whole hour whilst recounting the story of his own conversion, and trying to win those dear postmen to decide which master they were going to serve.

We believe that night there were trophies won for the Saviour. As the years rolled on he most kindly consented to become one of our trustees of the various Homes, so we will miss his counsel in times of difficulty. Meanwhile, if any, as it has been suggested, in memory of the departed, would, through us, incline to rescue a little one this winter, we shall consider it a privilege to have and care for such to the praise of our blessed Lord.

Annie Macpherson.

Amongst old reminiscences of Sir Arthur Blackwood, I do not see any notice of his work at Crayford, and the surrounding districts of Bexley, Bexley Heath, and Dartford. In no place is he more truly mourned than here. For about twenty years he has laboured in the Master's service, beginning his residence at the Manor House by "house warming" as he advertised it, by inviting all to come and hear the Gospel in his grounds. The village hall at Crayford he built, and here, even when he ceased to reside in the district, he came over from Beckenham every Tuesday to preach. How many were won to the Master by his instrumentality will never be known.

Sir Arthur was often to be seen in the brickfields before 7 a.m., speaking to individual men about their souls, and one brickmaker, at the Dartford Martyrs' Memorial Hall last Sunday, testified that it was through Sir Arthur he was converted. Crayford was a great meeting-place for Christians. Here he helped and encouraged them on, and strengthened their spiritual life; it was mainly to his stimulating zeal that the work at the Memorial Hall at Dartford was carried on, and nearly his last, if not his last, appearance in this neighbourhood was here on December 7, 1892. We then saw how sadly he was altered, but the glorious message was still the same. T. Lawrence Mitchell.

THE WOMEN'S TOTAL ABSTINENCE UNION have formed an employment bureau in connection with their association for the purpose of helping total abstainers to find employment in temperance families.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the Late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXI.

THE SECOND SIGN—THE WILD BEAST FROM THE ABYSS.

"If any man have ears to hear, let him hear."

"Here is wisdom."

"Let him that hath understanding, count!"

Such is the pointed, emphatic, reiterated call to attention addressed to the Church by the Spirit at the stage of Revelation which is now introduced.

Nowhere else, except in the seven epistles at the commencement of the book, is such a call sounded. Its presence here is of the deepest importance, for it is hardly too much to say that had the ear been opened to hear, had wisdom been sought, had there been the count of understanding, the Church of God would have escaped the delusion and the thrall which overtook and enslaved her during the centuries of darkness, superstition, and Satanic tyranny which now commence.

But Divine warnings fell, both in Jewish and in Christian days, as they often fall still, on heedless ears; and the Spirit of prophecy accordingly records, in sure anticipation of the future, the things which were "shortly to come to pass." It will be well for us if, in the closing days of the dispensation, we are able to trace the marvellous prefiguration, with its not less marvellous translation into history, and to profit by the solemn lessons it still conveys.

The prophetic scenes depicted in the thirteenth chapter give us, in the mysterious, yet intelligible, language of symbol, the story of the rise and progress of the great—yea, the superhuman—power which has ruled throughout Christendom for more than twelve hundred years, and has exercised in the very name of Christ nothing less than the subtlety of hell. It is the narrative by the pen of Deity of what has been truly called "the masterpiece of Satan."

We have arrived at the point of the Apocalyptic delineation where the power of the old serpent, the devil, working against Christ and his Church throughout the Roman Empire, by means of the Pagan religion and its votaries, had been overcome. Christianity had supplanted heathenism, but the ceaseless efforts of the great enemy were still carried on, and either by persecution in scattered places, or by the floods of various heresies, he "made war with the remnant of the woman's seed, which kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Jesus Christ." These efforts were, as we have seen, but partially successful; and it was as if revolving on what fresh scheme he could achieve his object that the Apostle next beholds him standing upon the sand of the sea, and, as it were, conjuring out of its depths—from the very "abyss" indeed—the monstrous creature which was thenceforward, and till the day of doom, to be the depository and instrument of diabolical power, as exercised against the Church of Christ.

Monstrous and terrific in very truth is the form that now emerges from the waters. Leopard-like, bear-like, lion-like, with seven heads and ten horns, the Seer, doubtless, at once recognised its practical identity with the form whose appearance he had described in the twelfth chapter. It is clearly something which has to do with the territorial limits of the fourth world-empire, exhibited to Daniel under the guise of the wild beast, "dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly" (Dan. vii.); which is, in some way or other, a very incarnation of the serpent himself—for "the dragon gave him his power, and seat, and great authority"—but which differs from the form he had previously beheld, in that all action now resides in, and emanates from, the seventh head, a head which has been wounded to death, and yet restored to life; and that the ten horns, not the seven heads, are now crowned.

A partial explanation of these features by the symbol has already been given. The differences in the form now revealed from that witnessed at an earlier stage, indicate the change of time. The seven forms of government under Pagan rule have passed away, for the "heads" are no longer crowned.

The seventh head has been wounded to death by the sword. The Imperial power has been brought to nought. The Decline of the Roman Empire has terminated in its Fall. Whichever way "the sword" be interpreted, the fact remains, standing out in boldest relief on the page of history, that the universal sway of the iron might of the fourth kingdom had waned, broken up by the successive attacks of the Gothic nations.

Its one and indivisible rule had been gradually replaced by the formation of the ten kingdoms—more or less, but generally on an average ten—which from that time to this have constituted the European Commonwealth, or Christendom; and it is accordingly the ten horns that are now crowned, as the depositories of the secular power which had hitherto resided in the emperorship.

But a power of entirely novel character has come into existence, and that too in the very place where universal monarchy had previously existed, for it is the seventh head which, healed and revived, has now become an eighth.

The fulfilment of this in history has been traced for us by Gibbon. Rome Papal rose on and out of the ruins of Rome Imperial. Other prophecies had foretold something of this kind. St. Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, had told them in covert terms, the significance of which they, however, clearly understood, that it was the power of Imperial Rome that prevented the development and manifestation of the "Man of sin, the son of perdition," and that whenever that event took place there would be nothing short of Satanic craft and power at work in all their terribly delusive and destructive effects in the heart of the very Church of God itself (2 Thess. ii.).

It was this anticipation that led the Christians of that day to pray for the perpetuation and preservation of the Imperial power. For they rightly believed that it would be on the removal of the "letting," or restraining authority of the Empire that the revelation of the Antichrist would take place. Thus wrote Cyprian, "We are now in the end, or consummation of the world; the fatal time of Antichrist is at hand." And Tertullian, "Who is he that letteth? Who, but the Roman Empire? the breaking up and dispersion of which among the ten kings shall bring on Antichrist. And then shall be revealed that Wicked One, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the spirit of his mouth." And similarly Lactantius: "This—the predicted Antichrist—shall come when the time of the Roman Empire shall be fulfilled, and the consummation of the world approach."

The expectation of those days, no doubt, was that the power, whose advent had been foretold by Paul, would be embodied in an individual, the incarnation of diabolical wickedness, who for three years and a-half would rage against and persecute the Church, and then be destroyed by the return in glory of the Lord Himself. But as the times passed on, and the events of history unfolded, it began to be slowly perceived that instead of an individual, it was a dynasty, a succession of individuals, that was to fulfil the prediction, and that in place of forty and two literal months, it would be for 1260 prophetic days, or years, that this awful and blasphemous enemy would bear rule and make war with the saints.

Gradually it was seen that as the expression, "he that letteth," denoted a dynasty, a succession of rulers, so the kindred term "he that sitteth" might have a similar application; and eventually it was apprehended by those who looked backward across the centuries, and to whom it was given to discern the true character of the Satanic power that had usurped the place of Christ, and had claimed the prerogatives of Deity, that the supreme authority in the Visible Church was none other than the Antichrist foretold by Daniel, under the guise of the "little horn" of ch. vii.; by Paul as "the man of sin"; and by John as "the wild beast from the abyss."

How slowly this was realised; how reluctantly it was admitted by the Reformers; but how irresistibly the conviction forced itself upon their minds, we know. They saw, at length, what the Apostolic Church could hardly have imagined, a corporate Antichrist; they traced the diabolical features as revealed in the prophecies, in the terrific form, the blasphemous pretensions, the bloody cruelties, the age-long and universal sway of the so-called Vicar of Christ, the actual son of perdition. "Antichrist is already known throughout all the world," exclaims Latimer. "England, England, beware of Antichrist!" cries the dying martyr Bradford. "The son of perdition is revealed," declares Luther.

These features, as exhibited to the Apostle in Patmos, and pourtrayed in Rev. xiii., must be dwelt upon in a succeeding paper. But it will be well to point out very briefly here a few of the leading p dictions given through other channels, together wi their recognised accomplishment.

To the Prophet Daniel the apparition was that a little horn rising among the ten horns of t fourth wild beast, of which it plucked up a subdu three—having eyes like the eyes of a man, and mouth speaking great things, even great wor against the Most High—wearing out the saints the Most High—changing times and laws—ex cising power for a time and times and the dividi of time (i.e., three and a-half prophetic years, 1260 literal years)—and enduring till the coming glory of the Son of man.

Such has been the Papacy. It arose from a ve small origin among the ten kingdoms into whi the Roman Empire was divided. It subdued t three independent dominions of the Exarchate Ravenna, the Kingdom of the Lombards, and t State of Rome—a fact of which the triple crow or tiara, worn by the Popes, is the memorial. assumed overseeing or episcopal functions ("t eyes of a man"). It spake outrageous blasphem against God (of which more later), claiming t prerogatives and power of Deity itself. It persecut and still persecutes, wherever it has power, the tr followers of Christ. It has martyred by millio the saints of God, the best and holiest of men. has arrogated to itself the right to change times a laws, saying, "I am all in all and above s so that God Himself, and I, the vicar God, have but one consistory: I am able by t law to dispense above the law, and of wro to make justice (or right) in correcting laws a changing them. What can you make me therefo but God? No marvel if it be in my power change times and times, to alter or abrogate law to dispense with all things, yea, with the precepts Christ. Likewise against the laws of natu against the apostles and against the canons of t apostles, I can and do dispense."

The Papacy dates from the beginning of t seventh century. Twelve hundred and sixty yea bring us to the close of the nineteenth—that is, the present days, in which Rome is no long governed by the little horn, or Popedom, and h become the capital of the kings of Italy. B doom is imminent. The beast is to be slain, body given to the burning flame, its dominion be consumed and destroyed even unto the en "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of h coming."

The secular aspect of Roman dominion, fi Pagan, then Papal, was that which was mair dwelt upon by the prophet Daniel. The Apos Paul brings forward its ecclesiastical character, a predicts its most prominent marks in 2 Thess. and 1 Tim. iv.

In those passages he describes the working of t mystery of iniquity, developing into the great ap tasy, departure, or falling away from the fai culminating in the revelation of the power to whi he gives the awful names of "the lawless one "the man of sin," "the son of perdition." H declares that this power, while energised by no other than Satan himself, would find its sphere activity in the professing Church, or "temple God"; that while in reality the opponent of Go and exalting itself into a position of Divine auth rity, it will, by false and hypocritical professions, delude and deceive them that believe not the trut that they will believe the fearful lie which casts fatal glamour over them, and that, like the little ho of Daniel, it would last until, and then be destroy by, the coming of the Lord.

And such, indeed, has been the great and terrib Antichrist (for it has well named itself the Vicar or Vice-Christ) which has usurped the place a prerogatives of the Great Head of the Church, a while professedly honouring God (since otherwi such position could never have been gained) h practically denied both the Father and the So In the very language of Rome, the Pope is he wh "presides in the temple of the Lord," receives t worships due to Deity alone, and is even styl "Our Lord God."

"If any man hath an ear to hear, let him hear

THERE IS TO BE HELD AT THE MANSION HOUS on the 21st inst., under the auspices of the Nation Temperance League, a gathering of provincial Mayo all of whom are total abstainers. The Lord Mayor w preside, and Sir Benjamin W. Richardson will addre the meeting.

CONFERENCE ON PROPHECY.

In order to awaken fresh interest in this important subject, and direct the hearts of the Lord's people in waiting for his Son from heaven, a two days' conference was held at Morley Hall, Regent-street, on Thursday and Friday last. The three meetings each day were fairly attended; indeed, in the evenings the hall proved too small for the gathering. Rev. A. Wilkes, of Ipswich, presided throughout, with the exception of one meeting, when Mr. W. Greene took his place in the chair.

Dr. Neatby, in his opening address on "The Church of God: what is it?" said that the New Testament uses the term "Church" in a very specific way. In a few Scriptures it stands for the local assembly, and once (Acts vii. 38) it is used in an exceptional way, "The church in the wilderness"; but apart from these, it is uniformly used of a distinct body. There were saints before the Church, as there will be after; but the Church of God consists of the whole body of believers from Pentecost to the Lord's coming. The speaker proceeded to review various passages throwing light on the calling and hope of the Church, the body of which Christ is the Head, a mystery hid in God, called the mystery of Christ, leading to the grand truth of oneness with Christ, and the consequent oneness of the members one with another.

Dr. Bullinger spoke next on "The Coming of Christ in relation to the Church." Paul's Epistles to the Thessalonians, which are expressly addressed to the Church, have a distinct bearing on the subject. These saints at Thessalonica are singled out for praise, and this is largely due to the fact that they cherished the hope of the Church, which had a purifying and stimulating effect upon them. Hence these epistles are full of the theme, and each chapter has some important reference to the coming of the Lord. See ch. i. 10, ii. 19, iii. 13, iv. 13-18. v. 23. The second epistle deals largely with other aspects of the coming of the Lord, but the Church aspect is also developed. It is perfectly evident from these epistles, and indeed from the whole of the New Testament, that the grand hope of the Church is the return of her Lord. For Him she waits, and just in proportion as she so waits does her light shine before men.

THE GREAT TRIBULATION.

At the afternoon meeting points which have given rise to much controversy were considered. Dr. McKilliam dealt with the question, "Will the Church pass through the Great Tribulation, or be caught up before it sets in?" Admitting that differences exist on this point, he claimed that the answer given by the Spirit of God must be accepted. Our Lord's reading in Lu. iv. 18, 19, from Isa. lxi. closed abruptly. Why? Because "the acceptable year of the Lord," during which the Church is formed, must be completed ere the "day of vengeance" dawns. This seems to indicate that the Church must be removed ere the tribulation sets in. A careful reading of Acts xv. 14-17 was claimed by the speaker to lead to the same conclusion. Another point urged was that the taking away of the Church before the tribulation is in accordance with revealed truth as to the day of judgment. Mistakes on this point may have arisen from the lack of sufficiently clear distinction between the remnant of Israel, which are to pass through the tribulation, and the Church, which is not. The study of 2 Thess. i. 7-11, and of the epistle to the church at Philadelphia (Rev. iii. 10) seemed to Dr. McKilliam to lead to the same conclusion—that the Church will be taken away ere the great tribulation begins. He concluded his address with words of solemn warning to the unsaved.

Mr. J. H. Burridge spoke on the question: "Will all believers be caught up at the coming of Christ for his saints?" While anxious to respect the views of others, he claimed liberty to state what he believed to be the teaching of the Word of God. First, the Gospel principle is that it is the work of Christ which has made us meet for heaven; our acceptance with God rests solely on the blood and righteousness of Christ. Hence every true believer is ready as to standing for heaven. The question of reward for service is another matter, and has nothing to do with acceptance in Christ. On this point the speaker enlarged, bringing many Scriptures to bear upon it.

Next Mr. Burridge dealt with the Church from a dispensational point of view, showing that, though in the purpose of God from all eternity, it has been formed during the period in which Israel is cast out. That Church must be removed ere the earthly people be restored; and inasmuch as the Church is the body of Christ, will He take to Himself a maimed and incomplete body, a portion of the Church? No; all who are in the unity of the Church must be caught up to be for ever with the Lord.

He believed that every single believer, from righteous Abel to the last convert before the Lord shall come, will be raised or caught up at his coming. Such passages as 1 Cor. xv. 23, 51, 52; 1 Thess. iv. 14-17, and Heb. ix. 28 were expounded and shown to bear out the teaching that every believer, those that sleep and those that are alive, shall be gathered round the Lord when He comes for his saints.

CHRISTENDOM AND THE JEWS.

Mr. T. Shuldham Henry, speaking in the evening on "The Coming of the Lord in relation to Apostate Christendom," traced the rise, progress, and fall of formal worldly Christendom. The Gospel of Matthew, that is the Gospel of the kingdom of heaven, is full of the subject. After the rejection of the Jews (in chap. xii.), the Lord wonderfully opens out the whole theme in ch. xiii. The doom which is coming on the seething mass of corruption and false systems known as Christendom, is shown in 2 Thess. i. 8-9, and Rev. xvii. and xviii.

Rev. John Wilkinson followed with a Bible reading, in his accustomed way, on "The Coming of Christ in relation to the Jews and Jerusalem." In opening he indicated that where prophetic truth is held there is no down grade, and, conversely, where there is down grade in doctrine prophetic truth is ignored. Proceeding, he dealt with the purpose of God in Israel, the rejection of the Jews by reason of their rejection of Christ, and the glorious future restoration "when the Deliverer shall come to Zion."

THE MILLENNIUM AND ITS PRELUDES.

The second day opened with an address by Mr. James Spruit, on "The Coming of Christ in relation to the Millennium." After dealing with the coming of the King, the opening scenes of judgment, and the binding of Satan, he showed, from Isa. ix. 6, 7; xxiv. 23; lx. 9, 13, the character of the Millennial reign. Idols shall be abolished (Isa. ii. 18-20; lxvi. 23), all wars shall cease (Isa. ii. 4), there shall be no more want or oppression (Psa lxxii. 12-14, and lxv. 9), the animal creation shall be blessed (Isa. xi. 6-9), life will be prolonged (Isa. lxv. 20), the Church of God shall shine as the sun (Mal. iv. 2, Dan. xii. 3), Judah and Israel shall be saved (Jer. xxiii. 6), and the Lord shall be King over all the earth (Zech. xiv. 9).

Rev. A. Wilkes followed with an "Exposition of the Parables of Matt. xiii. and especially of the Wheat and Tares." The address consisted of a minute examination of these parables. The interpretation of the first four was very much on the accepted lines; but the later parables, the hid treasure, the pearl of great price, and the drag net were expounded as Jewish and belonging to the period after the Rapture. The speaker remarked that some see dispensational teaching everywhere in the Bible, others see no dispensational teaching at all; but the truth, he thought, lay between these two extremes. He was very emphatic in claiming not merely plenary but verbal inspiration for the Scripture (that is in the original) and he was certainly unsparing in his denunciations of the "higher critics" and the evil they are doing. This was the longest address of the conference, but from its detailed character a précis is well nigh impossible.

THE BEMA AND THE TWO RESURRECTIONS.

In the afternoon Dr. M'Killiam dwelt on "the Judgment Seat of Christ, or the Bema" (2 Cor. v. 9, 10), showing that it concerned only believers, and that it is an examination of their work and not of their standing. As regards sin, judgment is past; but service must be tried, and rewards assigned. Such Scriptures as 1 Cor. iv. 2; Lu. xiv. 12; 1 Cor. iii. 10-15; Col. iii. 24; Mark ix. 41; Rev. iii. 11; 1 Cor. ix. 24-27, x. 1-11, were referred to and expounded as bringing out various features of the judgment seat of Christ before which we must all appear.

Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with an address on "The Two Resurrections, that of the just and the unjust." Without entering on minute prophetic details, he gave sound reasons for regarding these two as perfectly distinct events, severed from one another by a thousand years. As to the resurrection of the body, he believed it would be that manner of body which Jesus had after his resurrection—a human body, but changed, spiritualised, glorified in a way we can hardly understand now. This became evident from a careful consideration of 1 Cor. xv. 35-45; Phil. iii. 20, 21; 1 Cor. xv. 20-23; Rev. xx.; Dan. xii. 2; John v. 29: and Lu. xx. 35, 36.

JUDGMENT AND SIGNS OF THE END.

On the last evening of the Conference, Mr. J. H. Burridge spoke on "The Judgment of the Living Nations (Matt. xxv.) and the Great White Throne" (Rev. xx.). In the first there is no mention of any dead, or of such a thing as resurrection, and the speaker regarded it as an enquiry made by Christ at his coming into the treatment of the faithful remnant—his brethren—who have been publishing the news that the King is coming. Thus "the sheep" represent those who accept the message and kindly treat the messenger; while "the goats" represent those who refuse the message and maltreat the messenger. This takes place during the last week of Daniel. Turning next to Rev. xx., we find there no mention of any living—it is the dead who are raised and judged. These are judged according to the books—the Book of life, the inspired Book (the Scriptures), and doubtless other books.

Mr. David Baron gave the concluding address on "Signs of the Speedy Return of Christ." He believed we are now in the presence of many remarkable facts indicating that the coming of Christ is nigh at hand. After an exposition of Heb. x. 25, 1 Tim. iv. 1-3, 11 Tim. iii. 1-7, Isa. lix., and similar passages giving lurid descriptions of a state of things which seems to be fulfilled in these last days, the speaker went on to deal with certain specific signs in the Jewish nation. First, the striking increase of the Jews in numbers. Secondly, the wonderful development among the Jews of the national idea, as shown, for example, in the formation of the Chovei Zion, "lovers of Zion," a remarkable association, begun amongst poor Jews in Russia, and now spreading all over the world, and having as one of its aims the colonisation of Palestine. Lastly, he spoke of the significant awakening among the Jews of a spirit of expectation, strangely analogous to that expectation which widely prevailed just prior to the first advent of our Lord. Such signs appeared to the speaker to be a sure indication that the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is now speedily to take place.

[We understand that the addresses delivered at the Conference will appear verbatim in Excellent Things, published by A. Holness, Paternoster-row. —Ed.]

STAR HALL CONVENTION.

To attempt to describe in any adequate measure the way in which God has dealt with and satisfied his people during this week would be impossible. Many of those who have been in the habit of going to conventions have seldom seen such a mighty work as the Holy Ghost has been accomplishing. Every side of the life of Christ in the believer seems to have been touched upon. One point on which emphasis was laid was that the life of Christ was sufficient for spirit, soul, and body. God's salvation is full, and "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." (Rom. viii. 11.)

The halls have been fairly full at the 6 p.m. and 7.30 p.m. meetings, and all have been well attended. Large numbers have gladly taken the opportunity of coming to the penitent form for all that God means by "our old man" being "crucified with Him that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin," and have claimed an indwelling Christ and the baptism of the Spirit for life and service. We believe that many are returning to their homes determined that God shall henceforth have them entirely for his temple, and that many signs and wonders will follow them that have believed "to the praise of the glory of his grace."

Friday was set apart for foreign missions, and after most searching addresses, many came out to show themselves willing to go "anywhere with Jesus" at any cost. Pray that God will give grace to all to go forth "to bring light to them that sit in darkness," and to manifest the holy life of Jesus before "them that know not God."

It has been specially manifest that the teaching has not been that of a cleansed self, but a cleansed temple and an indwelling Christ.

Hubert T. G. Kingdon.

St. Philip's Rectory, Ancoats.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22.—PSALM LXXIII.

The problem to every age of good men has been the prosperity of the wicked. How true the description given by David is still! The strength remaining firm till death; their exemption from many of the troubles that vex others; their pride; their violence; their scoffs; their arrogance. All these are familiar enough to us, and they stir us too with the same perplexity, and drain out to us the waters of a full cup. Have you not sometimes said, Doth God know? and thought that you had cleansed your heart in vain, because plagues and troubles had fallen thickly on your life? It would be quite natural, but we are called to supernatural faith and trust in God's arrangements.

The true place to understand the mysteries of God's providence is to occupy not the human standpoint but the Divine. Go into the sanctuary of God, stand there with Him, as Abraham did, when the fate of Sodom was in the balance. Look beyond the confines of time into the great deep of eternity, and consider their latter end. God seems now to sleep, but He will presently awake, and in a moment will recompense for sin. The righteous shall be vindicated and shine forth as the sun. Meanwhile live continually with God, your right hand in his, your eye upon his guidance. Heart and flesh may fail, but receive into yourself God as your strength. Take Him to be the portion of your soul for ever, and you shall look with equanimity upon those whose portion is in this world.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 23.—PSALM LXXIV.

This psalm was probably written after Jerusalem had been captured, and the temple burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. It reminds us of the Lamentations of Jeremiah.

The Story of Affliction (1-11).—Notice how the Psalmist implicates God throughout. Thou and thy recur perpetually. He recalls the purchase and redemption of the chosen people, and recounts the indignity which has been done to God Himself. And God is asked to lift up his feet, to come and inspect all the evil that the enemy has wrought. We can almost hear the axes crashing through the carved work of the temple, as though it were a forest of wood; so temple, synagogue, prophet had perished, and God seemed to keep his hand in his bosom. Thus we may plead the everlasting love, the purchase of Calvary, the dishonour threatened to God's name, as arguments why He should interpose to defend us from the assaults of the devil.

The Expression of Unwavering Faith (12-23).—Yet! Ah, there is always God for the background of our lives. Not only the King, but mine, ever working salvation in the earth. Faith is quickened as she reviews the marvels of the past, or considers the constant forth-putting of God's power in nature (12-15). The first plea is the tenderness of God (19, 20), the next to the covenant. It is an invincible argument with God, Have respect unto the Covenant. Let your cause and God's be so identified, that in soliciting his help, you may be able to say, Arise, plead thine own cause.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 24.—PSALM LXXV.

This psalm was evidently the expression of soul-anguish in the face of strong opposition and persecution. (1) God is near, there is every evidence of this. As when the proximity of your friend is shown by the bent twigs in the forest, or the traces of recent occupation in the apartment. (2, 3). In these verses we detect the voice of God, of that Divine Messiah, who is the inspiration of these psalmists and seers. He is awaiting the set time for judgment; and amid the dissolution of society He upbears it; a very Hercules carrying the earth on his shoulders! (4-8). Here the Psalmist speaks again, turning from God to his foes and bidding them cease their arrogant talk and behaviour. What if they were in positions of power: God put them there for his purposes; and if his people were depressed it was not less his arrangement for their chastisement and ultimate welfare. Then follows the metaphor so often employed in after parts of the Bible, of the cup in the hand of Jehovah, full of wrath which the wicked would have to drain. (Isa. li. 17, 9, 10). The righteous as he sings incites his soul to trust, and dares to anticipate the time when the power of the wicked will be destroyed for ever, whilst that of God's people shall be exalted. Let us bind to our heart the comfort of the thought that lifting up, or promotion, in other words, our several positions in life, are due, not to man, but to God, who appoints us to occupy them for his glory, and for the well-being of others.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 25.—PSALM LXXVI.

It is said that 2 Kings xix. furnished the occasion for this psalm. The tide of Assyrian invasion was broken by Jerusalem, and deliverance led to an outburst of Jewish minstrelsy, of which this is a specimen. (1) Those who know God best adore him as greatest. (2) He is compared to a lion in its covert or lair (R.V. mar.) (3) The arrows and implements of war are snapped by his fingers; so will He quench all the fiery darts hurled from the bow of our great adversary. Compare margin R.V. with Ephes. vi. 16. (4) Because God was there Zion had glories that Assyria, and other great nations of the world, could never have. (5, 6) Wrapped in the sleep of death beneath the stroke of the angel of God, Sennacherib and his host could never again assert their power, and so it shall be when the last enemy is destroyed at the rebuke of the Son of God. (7, 8, 9) Note the sublimity of the conception here, the Almighty vindicator of his people speaking on their behalf, whilst all the earth lies beneath hushed and still. (10) Out of the eater comes honey, and the wrath of man is transmuted by Divine alchemy to praise, just as the refuse of gas retorts yields the fairest hues. Do not be afraid of the wrath of man, it will yet serve the purposes of God, as that of the Jews against our Lord. (11, 12) God's people fear Him with a dread born of love. They fear to grieve Him, but that love casts out fear that has torment.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26.—PSALM LXXVII.

This psalm is a memorial of great sorrow, which has long since stanched. But a path has been trodden through the brake of sorrow, which many a weary soul has trodden, and will tread until sorrow is ended.

The Prayer of the Afflicted (1-10).—Give voice to grief. It is our best relief. The Garden of Gethsemane is a place for strong crying and tears. Not only day, but night, may witness the outstretched hand lifted up to God. It is well when wakeful hours are filled with prayer. One of the saddest ingredients in the cup of sorrow is the memory of the past, of the happier days, and the nights which were filled not with complaining, but with song. Oh, golden hours! Have ye fled for ever? When the sense of God's presence is withdrawn from the spirit it is filled with the chill dread that it may never come again. We think that God's loving mercy depends wholly on ourselves, and that when we have forfeited its light we have changed his attitude towards us. Ah! vain and foolish conception of Him who cannot cast off, whose mercy endureth for ever, and who cannot forget.

The Resort of the Afflicted (11-20).—Recall what God has been! Has He ever failed his saints? He has led them through deep and dark waters, but has He not always brought them out into a wealthy place? His way has been through the depths, and his footsteps have been veiled in mystery, but He has never failed to be the Shepherd of his flock. The pebbly depths and the green oasis of Elim have proved alike the way home.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 27.—PSALM LXXVIII.

It is said that this psalm was written when there was strong controversy between Judah and Ephraim as to the location of God's sanctuary, and its final transfer within the limits of the tribe of Judah. The idea of the Psalmist is to show that there were moral and spiritual considerations which actuated God in this selection.

An Appeal to Posterity (1-8).—Our prime duty in middle life is with the young, that they may grow up to appreciate and revere our great and glorious privilege as a Christian people, that they may in turn tell their children to set their hope on God. Alas! that our spirit has not been steadfast with Him (8).

The Record of the Past (8, &c.).—Throughout this wonderful recital there is a perpetual contrast between God's unswerving goodness and the incessant backsliding of the tribes, and as we read it we learn that sin is not simply the violation of the Divine law, but a source of trouble and pain to the Divine nature. For us He cleaves the seas, leads us in the daytime, and builds his watch fires around us at night, brings streams of blessing out of rocks. But we tempt God; we do not build up an argument on what He had done, to what He will do. We fail to believe in and trust in his salvation (22). But even this does not stay his bounty; manna and corn and quail prove his unwearied care. There are gleams of better things with us (34), which our God eagerly reciprocates (38), because He remembers our frailty and weakness (39). But we forget, and grieve Him still. Surely the wonderful past were argument enough for us never to forsake Him (41-45). But there is always the repeated provocation and moving God to jealousy. The one complaint of this psalm is the lack of steadfastness and goodness. But we may play fast and loose with God too long; there is a limit beyond which his patience will not go, because it leads to our own deterioration. Let us see to it that we do not become, like Ephraim, a castaway, or that passing from us He shall choose some other to be the channel through which He may pour his grace and truth.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28.—PSALM LXXIX.

It was the period of the Chaldean invasion. The cry of horror went forth from the people who had looked upon the sacred shrine as inviolable; it was as if they could not believe that the tide of invasion had reached the sacred precincts, or that Jerusalem should be in heaps, whilst the bodies of priests and Levites should be strewn along the streets as those of common soldiery, and whilst the blood of the holy nation flowed like water through the conduit pipes. How could God risk his name and character in having permitted this!

From v. 5 and onwards, the cry of the remnant begins to beat about the throne of God, as the full tale of oppression and tyranny is told.

But side by side there is the humble confession of iniquity, and the entreaty for mercy. What an unexampled prayer is that in v. 9; it befits our lips in our conflict against sin. The sighs of prisoners come before God, and presently He must arise to avenge his saints, humbled and contrite. The sun, long obscured, must presently shine again, the flock will be driven out of the dark and cloudy day into the sheepfold in the radiance of sunset, and from a delivered people thanks will arise to the God of deliverances for ever and ever.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

OCTOBER 29.

Abstinence for the Sake of Others.—1 Cor. viii. 1-13.

Golden Text, Rom. xv. 1.

The church at Corinth was founded by Paul, A.D. 52, during his second missionary journey. The story is recorded in Acts xviii. 1-18. This epistle was written toward the close of the Apostle's stay in Ephesus, about A.D. 57, and during his third missionary journey.

Very unfavourable tidings of the church at Corinth had reached him by report (v. 1), and by letter (vii. 1). It would be a grave mistake to regard the sins prevailing in Corinth as excusing in any measure the same sins among Christians to-day. It must be remembered that the church was formed of those who had previously been addicted to all the iniquities associated with idolatrous worship. Habit is second nature, and cannot be thrown off quickly and without difficulty. The surrounding life of the city was full of "dishonesty, debauchery, and drunkenness." A church composed of such converts, and surrounded with such influences, was exposed to peculiar temptations.

The difficulty with which this lesson deals concerns that of eating meats offered to idols (1). The social life of a heathen city was most intimately connected with its idolatry. Portions of the victims that had been offered in sacrifice to idols might be sold in the shambles, and used in private houses, or might be eaten in the idol's temple (10).

There were two ways of deciding this question, one according to knowledge, the other according to love (1-3). Knowledge alone, especially that kind of knowledge which fills a man with conceit (2), is worthless. Do you know any illustrations of this? How little a man becomes when you have to say concerning him, "He is very clever, but he knows it!" Knowledge alone "puffeth" up, inflates, fills with wind. A child's balloon is as big as a cannon ball, but how worthless! Love, which is placed in contrast with this, edifieth, buildeth up. Love to God takes a man out of himself, and delivers him from self-conceit. It is intelligent; hence John was the first to recognise Jesus as He stood on the shore (Jno. xxi. 7). The sense in which God knows a man who loves Him (3) is more than that in which He knows all men. (Compare Psa. i. 6; Jno. x. 14; 2 Tim. ii. 19.

See how knowledge, apart from love, would treat this question (4-6). The knowledge referred to here is of the utmost importance, especially to a people just saved from idolatry. There is one God, one only, because, as the child said, "there is room for no more." A Christian knows Him, not only as Nature reveals Him, but as He reveals Himself in Jesus Christ. Such knowledge is of the first importance; because, for one reason, it decides the question as to all heathen deities. Their number is legion, but among them all there is no God. There are demons who have associated themselves with heathen worship (x. 20), but no God. Apply this knowledge to the question the Apostle is considering. The properties of the food are not changed by having been offered in sacrifice. There need be no restriction put upon the liberty they enjoy as Christians.

But love takes another view (7-12). See R.V. of ver. 7. There are "weak consciences." How shall we deal with these? Show them a mingling of pity and contempt? Look down upon their ignorance from our more enlightened position? Love will not act so. The weak conscience may become "defiled," and there is no communion between God and a defiled conscience. Another man with more knowledge may do with safety what will work most serious consequences in one who is weak. The inconsiderate exercise of your liberty becomes a stumbling-block to him (9); emboldens him to practise his former idolatry (10) thus causes him to perish (11), and becomes sin against Christ (12). Remember that Christ always did, and always does, associate Himself with the weak. Love in Him meant sacrifice for the salvation of the weak. Be partaker of his Spirit. Love will forego any indulgence by which another may be made to stumble. Such is the Apostle's conclusion (13).

This is the temperance lesson, and should be applied particularly to that question. A course that may be perfectly safe to one man is full of danger to another. The Lord will lead the stronger to consider his weaker brother, and to take a course which may be followed with safety. Two ministers during a holiday were climbing a hillside, and one of them led the way up a rocky steep. The other said, "I will follow." The first completed the ascent without difficulty, and never felt the slightest sense of danger. From the summit he looked down and saw his companion half way up the rock, with face blanched with fear, and trembled to think of the danger into which he had unconsciously led him. It was with difficulty that the summit was reached. A course that was safe for one, may lead another to ruin. In giving up a pleasure for the sake of others we are following the example of Christ.

Some boys came forward to sign the pledge after a public Band of Hope meeting. "Will you sign?" I said to the father of one of the boys. "Not for my own sake," he said, "but I will for the sake of the boys."

REV. D. M. KITCHIN, CAPE HAYTI.

We have had sent us a detailed account of the life and labours of this devoted missionary, who for some fifteen years did valuable work at the Haytian Mission stations. A native of Falmouth, Jamaica, he was trained in the Calabar College, Kingston, and, giving promise of much usefulness, was appointed to Port de Paix (Hayti), a picturesque, but spiritually dead, city, almost wholly under the control of the priests. After six years' fruitful labour there, Mr. Kitchin was transferred to the larger seaport, Cape Hayti, where he was privileged to see great blessing. He was also called to the neighbouring country city, called Trou, to take solemn charge and oversight of the church there from the hands of its dying founder, Onésiphore Lamour, a Haytian, who had come to the truth without any other help than of the reading of the Scriptures, and who had conducted that primitive church on that basis for many years. These three cities were Mr. Kitchin's principal stations, besides several smaller ones.

Towards the close of his life, Mr. Kitchin had the joy of reaping in many sheaves as the fruit of his long labours, which had produced only small visible results before. Thus he was visibly rewarded by a revival among his hearers, especially in Port de Paix and Trou. He had often been suffering from the irregularities and privations of travelling from one station to another with very primitive accommodation, as also from overwork, so that when a fever confined him to bed, he was so broken down and exhausted that he could not resist it. He had obtained a temporary leave from his committee, but too late, a month before his death, which took place early, at two o'clock on Sunday morning, November 20, 1892, far away from medical aid, at Trou. He leaves his helpmeet with five infant boys, who now look to the Protector of the widows and orphans for their sustenance and education. As peaceful as his life, so was his death. Many of his hearers came on foot from twelve miles, and even double that distance, to give him their last tribute of honour and love. He died at his post, in the midst of his activity—a glorious end! Not only his addresses from the pulpit, but his private life and conduct, had won for him the highest respect of all. The bitterest trials and persecutions he met with patience, faith, and meekness, and if sorrows and trials increased in the last two years of his life, the Divine blessings also increased in equal proportion. This latter fact the departed brother gratefully ascribed to the prayers offered in behalf of his work. What will become of his five small boys? Shall they be educated to follow their worthy father's footsteps? Who will now remember the infant churches in that mission field, where spiritual darkness is prevalent, the need so great, the Christian efforts so scarce? Who will rise to strengthen those churches as a new leader? and who will become a messenger of peace to the French-speaking population of Hayti, numbering fully one million, and yet almost overlooked by the Protestant missionary propaganda?

For the Young.

FEAR.

"They feared a fear where no fear was."

Did you ever meet with that text before? You will find it in the margin of your reference Bible in Psa. liii. 5. What strange people they must have been to be afraid of nothing! Yet, perhaps you have been as foolish. Young people and old are often "fearing a fear where no fear is." And though there is nothing to fear, yet they often greatly trouble themselves, and do great injustice to others by their foolish fears.

(1) Sometimes they are afraid of God, as though He were their worst enemy. There is a story told about a great preacher, who lost his mother when he was quite young. Some few years afterward his father told him that he was going to bring him a new mother. He was quite delighted at the prospect, until some foolish person told him that stepmothers were unkind; then he was full of fear. He was in bed when his new mother arrived; and the next morning, while he was dreading the cruel treatment which he expected to receive, she came into the room with a face so bright, and a voice so gentle, and eyes that beamed with love, and stooping down she kissed him. All his fear was gone. He had been "fearing a fear where no fear was." Do not some young people think of God as that boy thought of his new mother? Are you afraid of Him as though He were cruel and severe? But like this boy your fear is the result of an entire misunderstanding. You need to know Him, then you will not fear Him in that sense. "God is love." The love of your mother faintly reveals to you the love of God. Begin to think of Him now as loving you with more than a mother's tenderness. Need you be afraid of Him?

(2) Do you know why you are afraid of God? Try and recall if you have ever been afraid of your mother. I have heard of children who, while their mother has been away, have been disobedient, and have been unwilling to confess their sin. When she has entered the house she has looked for her children, and some of them have not been there to welcome her. Why? Has the mother ceased to be kind and loving and tender? No, but the children's sin fills them with fear. That is the reason people are afraid of God. God had not changed to Adam and Eve when He came into the Garden of Eden. But their sin had changed them. They could not endure his presence, so they fled and concealed themselves among the trees of the garden. Is it not because you know that you have sinned that you are afraid of God?

(3) But even then it is foolish for you to dread Him, and seek to escape Him? What is the proper thing to do when you have disobeyed your mother? Will you try and avoid her as much as possible? To live in another part of the house where you would never hear her voice, or see her face? You know that this would be a severer punishment than she would ever be likely to inflict. You have no better or more loving friend on earth, even when you have done wrong, than your mother. Go, and tell her you have done wrong: ask her to forgive, and you will find that her heart of love is not changed. Why do you dread to go to God when you know you have sinned against Him? If He calls you in his Gospel it is not to punish you, but to tell you that He loves you still, that Jesus has died because of your sin, and that you may receive through Him a full and free pardon. Should you be afraid of Him?

The one thing you ought to be afraid of is sin. It is that which troubles the conscience, which burdens the heart, which embitters the life, and which ruins the soul. But don't be afraid either of God who would save you from sin, or of those who would tell you about Him. A pastor is visiting the house of one of the members of his congregation. The daughter in this family is not converted, and does not want to be. She sees the pastor coming, and, dreading to meet him, leaves the house by the backdoor, chuckling to herself, "He'll not catch me this time." She returns when the pastor has gone. "Did he ask for me or leave me any message?" she says to her mother. The mother opens the Bible, and putting her hand upon a passage he had marked, says, "Yes, and that is his message." The daughter reads it, and is full of distress. After a few days of doubt she sought the pastor from whom she had fled, told him her trouble, and was pointed to Jesus as her Saviour. And what was the passage? Will you find it, and read it, and put a mark against it in your own Bible? It is in Prov. xxviii. 1, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

TRUSTING JESUS.

Trusting Jesus, oh! how blessèd;
Trusting Him for everything;
Trusting that He'll keep each loved one
Safe beneath his sheltering wing.

Trusting Jesus, oh! how blessèd;
Trusting Him in sorrow, too;
Trusting Him when sad and lonely;
He will bear thee safely through.

Trusting Jesus, oh! how blessèd,
Just to lean on his dear breast;
Then, though hot and close the strife,
We shall have such perfect rest.

Trusting Jesus, oh! how blessèd,
Trusting Him for future days;
Trusting that He'll gently guide thee,
Ever onward, through life's ways.

Trusting Jesus, oh! how blessèd;
Trusting that, when life is o'er,
He will surely, safely lead thee
To the bright eternal shore.

Irene Gray (aged 14).

GODALMING.—Mission services were held at the Congregational Sunday-schools, from October 1 to October 5, by Mr. Newton Jones. The faithful preaching of the Word has been richly blessed, especially among the scholars, a goodly number of whom have professed to accept the Saviour, and become soldiers for Christ. The workers have also been stimulated.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Christchurch Schools, Sparkbrook, Birmingham, to Oct. 20; Mr. H. Hutchinson, West Hampstead, Oct. 20; St. Chrysostom's, Liverpool, 21-29; Rev. M. J. Hall, St. Paul's, Rockferry, Oct. 14-21; Taunton, Oct. 28 to Nov. 6; Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, St. John's Hall, Forest Hill, Oct. 14; Cricklewood, Oct. 23; Mr. Phillips Welch, Mansfield-street School, Borough-road, Oct. 16-19; Mr. H. Hankinson, Caterham, Oct. 17; Mr. J. Spiers, at Aberystwith; Mr. Livesey Carrott, Boston Convention; Rev. W. S. Standen, Gloucester, Oct. 23-28.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending, Oct. 28: 22, S., Jeremiah xxix. 1-14; 23, xxxi. 10-20; 24, xxxi. 27-37; 25, xxxiii. 1-16; 26, xxxvi. 1-10; 27, xxxvi. 16-28; 28, xxxviii. 1-13.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Rev. W. J. Mayers has returned from a fortnight's visit to Jersey and Guernsey, where he has been holding a series of meetings in aid of this noble work. Large numbers attended the services, and great interest was manifested. Some of the boys from the London and Jersey Homes played and sang, much to the delight of the crowded audiences. The funds of the Homes were replenished by the generous sum of over £200.

On the 20th inst. Mr. Mayers will commence a series of meetings in Devon and Cornwall, and he hopes to visit Totnes, Truro, Redruth, Penzance, Marazion, Falmouth, St. Austell, Liskeard, Launceston, and Exeter. The friends of Dr. Barnardo's work in these places will doubtless use their best efforts to give Mr. Mayers a hearty reception, and will show as much practical sympathy as possible. Dr. Barnardo's efforts were never more needed than now; it is grievous to think that they are crippled for want of money. Thousands of little ones call for aid, let thousands of Christian hearts and hands make loving and speedy response, in the Master's name.

HOMES FOR HEBREW CHRISTIANS.—The charge of these Homes, founded by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, vicar of St. Thomas's, Lambeth, has been accepted by the committee of the Hebrew Christian Prayer Union. In the Home for the Aged and Afflicted, 13, Fremont-street, Victoria Park-road, South Hackney, there are seven inmates. In the Temporary Home for the Homeless, 35, Victoria Park-road, is a young Jewish convert from Persia, who is being trained at King's College for mission-work among the Mohammedans. Rev. A. Bernstein, hon. sec. of the committee of management, writes to us:—"Mr. Barraclough will continue to act with the committee. If Christians, before answering private applications of Jewish converts, would apply for information to the committee of the Hebrew Christian Prayer Union, their charity would not be abused, but well applied. We have the welfare of our brethren at heart, and we know all or most of the converts." Communications to Mr. Bernstein should be addressed: 79, King Edward-road, South Hackney.

Irish Impressions.

A SUNDAY IN DUBLIN.

A member of our staff who recently passed ten days in and around Dublin furnishes some partial notes of what he saw and heard:—I spent a busy but altogether delightful Sunday (he writes) in observing a few of the many good works that are sustained in the city.

HARCOURT-STREET BAPTIST CHURCH.

At the forenoon hour of service my wife and I elected to form part of the congregation of Pastor Hugh D. Brown. He is regarded as the Baptist Bishop of Dublin, and his unpretentious but commodious "cathedral" is situated close to Harcourt-street Railway Station. He has a full, comfortable-looking flock, with a large proportion of young people of both sexes. Mr. Brown surrounds himself on the platform, à la Spurgeon, with his elders, several of whom conducted portions of the service. The sermon on "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," struck me as being notable for a marked absence of doctrinal teaching from one so highly orthodox. It was a very fervid and effective setting forth of the overflowing and present sympathy of Christ in the woes and sorrows of life, and the security we have for that in the changelessness of his dual character. Mr. Brown's outstanding pulpit note is intense earnestness, without much to indicate originality in conception or expression. Here and there a striking sentence bursts forth; as when in one daring metaphor he annihilated the evolutionary theory, and described Christ in his creative function as "dashing off the stars like so many sparks from the anvil of omnipotence."

Judging from the extensive announcements, I should say that the church is a hard-working one; that afternoon an added Sunday-school was to be begun in some fresh district of the city, and the general winter arrangements indicated much pastoral and congregational zeal.

AMONG THE INCURABLES.

One or two pleasant and most instructive afternoon hours were devoted to a visit to the Hospital for Incurables in the Donnybrook suburb. In this and for the remainder of the day I deemed myself fortunate in having Mr. Wm. Fry, sen., of Mount-street, as my "guide, philosopher, and friend." My heart prompts me to say much about the Christian qualities and the abounding good works of this worthy Dublin citizen, but I should not like to incur even his mildest rebuke, and so I forbear. It was plain to see that he is very warmly interested in the comfort and welfare of the dwellers in this Donnybrook "Palace of Pain," and is a regular visitor there. Some 180 patients are scattered through the wards, and it seemed as if they were all, men, women, and children alike, on intimate terms with Mr. Fry. He told me that continual intercourse with these patient sufferers had developed a wonderful individual interest in their condition, and he found it a most fascinating part of his weekly curriculum. "Romans" and Protestants equally share in his attentions; and words of comfort and cheer, with more substantial tokens of goodwill, are distributed impartially. It was certainly a means of grace to me not soon to be forgotten to note the sustaining and joy-giving power of a living daily fellowship with Christ, in those who were so sorely tried by the weakness and pain of some deep-seated physical disorder. The "Wards" appeared to be so many little social communities where the welfare of each is the special concern of all. I cannot imagine any Christian work more Christ-like in its character than regular sympathetic visitation of these sick ones; many of them gradually but visibly fading into the eternal world, and some of them on its very boundary line.

The hospital is being enlarged by the addition of two wings which will give accommodation for about fifty more sufferers. I was glad to hear that the institution is well supported; all such places of retreat for the heavily wounded in life's battle have a special claim on public benefaction.

MERRION HALL.

This mission centre, associated with the body of believers who are content with the title of Brethren, was the next point of interest in my day's peregrinations. I found a large Sunday School in the middle of their Bible studies, and it needed nothing more than a glance to note that the teachers generally had acquired the secret of holding the attention of their classes, which were scattered over area and gallery.

In the basement story, preparations were being made for the weekly meeting of Miss Fry's pet friends, the Irish police. A stalwart, splendid-looking set of men they were, some of them quite youthful. A really grand work is maintained all the week through among the police and constabulary by Miss Fry; of that I shall have something to say in a subsequent paper. This Sunday afternoon meeting is strictly evangelistic in its tenour. I had to move on before the proceedings were well begun, but I afterwards learned that some very effective personal testimonies had been given by the men, and a telling Gospel address followed from Mr. A. S. Wardlaw. Miss Fry has the co-operation of various earnest-minded brethren on these occasions, and the good seed of the Word is plentifully sown, as well as watered by faith and individual effort.

In Merrion Hall itself, though little is known of it through newspaper channels, a steady, fruitful work goes on from year to year. Many hear and believe the Gospel message there, whose names find their way to the membership rolls of other living churches throughout the city. Some prefer, for the culture of the Christian life, a more elaborate and more sharply defined church organisation than obtains among the Brethren, so the place becomes a feeder of other churches; the friends at Merrion Hall are content to have it so. One may plant, another may water; it is God alone who giveth the due increase to all. Meetings for mutual fellowship are held after the primitive pattern on Lord's Day morning, and in the evenings the one Gospel message is proclaimed from varied lips. On this particular evening the preacher was to be Dr. Robert Anderson, Chief of the Criminal Investigation Department of Scotland Yard. I would gladly have been a listener, but I specially desired to make one of Mr. Thomas Connellan's audience, on his resumption, for the season, of work among Roman Catholics.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Previous to that, however, I looked in at Mr. W. R. Lane's service in the Metropolitan Hall, in connection with the week's mission he had just begun there for the Y.M.C.A. In a city so largely Roman Catholic as Dublin is it was most pleasing and hopeful to see such a goodly gathering of all ages, but mainly young men and women, on the Sunday afternoon, especially as the public posters had not announced any such meeting for the general public. Mr. Lane's mission has already been reported on in these columns, so I may content myself with saying that his visits to Dublin are always seasons of peculiar interest, from the fact that in former days he was one of a regiment of Guards quartered in the city. His direct, clear, and manly mode of address commends him much to young people, and his Gospel home-thrusts that Sunday afternoon were manifestly finding their mark.

MR. CONNELLAN'S MISSION.

As I have already stated, the Sunday evening services, designed specially for those dissatisfied with the Romish faith, were recommencing for the winter, and I was anxious to see and hear Rev. Thos. Connellan at work in this difficult but important field of service. The meeting was held in a very small hall right in the centre of the city. The room was well filled by the time of opening, and difficulty was found in providing seats for a few late comers. Mr. Joseph Connellan acted as usher; he led in the opening prayer, very simply but earnestly. I could not tell how many of those present were non-Protestant, but I was glad to be told by one of the young men that some half of the little company were converts from Romanism, chiefly through Mr. Connellan's agency. The address, founded on several well-known New Testament passages, appeared to me well suited for the purpose in view. The preacher's aim was to show that all men are involved in a state of condemnation before God's holy righteous law, and therefore the idea of personal merit cannot enter into the question of salvation; it is to be received by faith and through grace alone. Many of the references and illustrations were such as would appeal to those trained in Romish doctrine. The Evangelical truths advanced were, so to speak, broken up into small pieces, line upon line, and precept upon precept, so as to be readily grasped and apprehended.

Mr. Connellan in his notices said he hoped soon to make arrangements for securing better accommodation for the meetings, and intimated that on subsequent Sundays there would be opportunity for answering and dealing with inquirers. He laid special stress on attendance at the weekly prayer-meeting which he holds with the workers and converts. This effort is yet in its infancy, but we have faith to believe that it will develop into something more co-extensive with the prevalent unrest and the loosening hold of Popish errors on the minds of many throughout Ireland. Doubtless there is more of this than comes to the surface. I would earnestly commend the two Connellan brothers to the prayerful remembrance of the readers of The Christian in connection with their enterprise.

At the close of this interesting day I could not but feel thankful to God that so many of his true and Spirit-taught servants are holding aloft the banner of the Cross, among a people who are familiar enough with the outward symbol of our Lord's passion, but who are taught so little about its renewing and sanctifying power.

A TOUR IN THE WEST.

Many English friends must be quite unaware of the grand and picturesque scenery, the lovely glens and lakes, that lie within a very short distance of them in the sister island. I would strongly recommend them, instead of so constantly seeking for rest and change on the Continent, and in long and expensive tours, to secure a holiday nearer home in some of the wild and magnificent retreats of Connemara or Galway. If, while thus benefiting themselves, they would at the same time endeavour to minister to the spiritual and temporal needs of the Romanists around them, we believe they would feel amply repaid.

Ireland no longer dreads her priesthood in the same way or to the same extent as she once did; now, therefore, is the time to carry to her a pure and simple Gospel, while in many outlying districts the extreme poverty and ignorance ought surely to be sufficient to awaken in the hearts of the Christians of England an echo of the old Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us."

In travelling through the west we have found almost no let or hindrance to a free distribution of Douay Testaments and Gospel books, and often they are gladly and gratefully received. A Roman Catholic lady, not long since the head of a large establishment, procured a Protestant version of the New Testament, and after searching it said she wished her tenantry would read it, that Ireland would be a different country if the Bible were read. A Roman Catholic priest observing a Douay Testament on the dresser of one of his parishioners, inquired how it came there, was told a Protestant clergyman had been the donor. He looked at it, and after perusing the Pope's imprimatur on the title-page, said, "Well, you'll not go far wrong if you read that."

Surely many Christian ladies might find their way from some of our favoured, highly-privileged—shall I add Gospel-hardened?—villages and city suburbs in England to the homes of those lying so near to them, but who are still "sitting in darkness and the shadow of death," because no one has yet been found to tell them of Christ and his full and free salvation.

One earnest, hard-working clergyman in a small village on the coast said he wished two ladies would come and stay there and work amongst the people. A nice little home could be offered at a cost of 4s. or 5s. per day inclusive. A. M. Barbour.

Marathon, Bangor, co. Down.

AMONG THE SOLDIERS.

During a fortnight's visit in Ireland, I have been permitted to address eighteen soldiers' meetings, at most of which the Lord graciously gave tokens of his presence in men coming out boldly on his side. Soldiers' Christian Associations have been formed at Queenstown, Tralee, Limerick, Buttevant, Fermoy, the Curragh, Dundalk, and Newry, and the work generally strengthened at other centres of Association work.

One sad feature in connection with our army in Ireland is the large increase in the number of men attending mass after the regiments have been stationed there some time; however, the Homes, under the direction of Miss Sandes and others, bright and cheerful, yet with a deep spiritual tone, afford a real shelter for many men who otherwise might be led astray. Arthur H. Wheeler.

Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.

LAST SUNDAY the causes of Sunday-schools and Temperance were specially remembered in a large number of churches.

MR. JOHN CURRIE,

SCOTO-AMERICAN EVANGELIST.

THE name of the friend whose portrait we give to-day is a household word in the far west; he has been busy as an evangelist in California and other parts of the United States for the last fifteen years, and has seen many wonderful proofs of the converting mercy of God, through the preaching of the Gospel of his grace.

JOHN CURRIE is himself a notable instance of the transforming power of the old Gospel. In his early years no one seemed less likely than he to become an honoured messenger of the Cross. It is true that he was brought up in infancy by a Christian mother, who prayed for him, and before she died committed him and his young sister to God. After this irretrievable break in the family life, the boy and girl were left very much to their own untutored devices. Living under such conditions in poor quarters in a huge city like Glasgow, the lad, at any rate, speedily became familiar with many undesirable aspects of life. At the age of eleven he was placed under the care of his aged grandmother. She took him to church, where his youthful mind became much mystified in trying to fathom the deeps of the doctrines of electing grace and effectual calling, as expounded from the Presbyterian pulpit. That kind of teaching, however, left no impress for good on his wayward career.

Early in life John became enamoured of foot-racing, at which he became an adept. This training no doubt helped to build up his physical constitution, but it also brought him into scenes and companionships that were not of the best. After winning a race with more than usual success and profit, he resolved to emigrate to America. He was not satisfied with himself, and thought a change of surroundings might help him to a better life.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.)

But, as he quaintly puts it, he did not leave either the devil or his own bad heart behind him in Scotland; so, on reaching the United States, he fell into the old sporting ways. He was successful financially, but the more money he got the less sense he seemed to have in the spending of it. We need not follow him through all the devious paths he trod in those unregenerate days. He was persuaded to start a saloon in the town of Lynn, Mass. The prohibitory law was in active force there, however, and he soon discovered that, so far as Lynn was concerned, selling rum spelt ruin. The teetotallers raided his establishment and broke up his illegal business.

We next find Mr. Currie in Montreal, at his proper trade of a shoe-cutter. His master took a fancy to the wiry, merry, fleet-footed Scot, and courted his company. For a time they "lived like dukes;" but the master cutter failed, and John Currie was once more adrift. This was really the best thing that ever befel him. Having spent all his money, he came to himself, like the prodigal of old. A friend invited him to go to the Y.M.C.A. and sign the pledge. There he found something even better than abstinence; he was converted to God by appropriating the blessed truth of John iii. 16. So thorough was the change of heart and life that all old things passed away; boxing, betting, and racing were entirely given up.

He started work again in another factory, where he fell to testifying of his new-found Saviour to all around. God's Word grew to be like fire in his bones, and he was gradually led out into active mission work among his chums, for which the need was very great.

Among the earliest places he visited as an ambassador for Christ was "Joe Beef's Canteen," a low drinking saloon, where some 150 men found a nightly lodging. This was a field of operations after John Currie's own heart, and God stood by him in a most wonderful fashion. The proprietor challenged him to a talking match one afternoon, and John promptly responded. There were over sixty rough fellows present to witness the wordy combat. The opposing champions took ten minutes each in turn. Joe was a very smart speaker, but John had prayed that God would confound him, and sure enough, at the third "round," the man became perfectly foolish in his statements, and by God's grace John gained a complete victory. Under the spell of his simple, pathetic speech, the rough lodgers began to weep like children; they were fairly broken down. Joe Beef was the only one who seemed unmoved; but he could not help seeing that he had lost the day; so he said to the men: "You can all go with John Currie to his meeting, and I will give you supper, bed, and breakfast for nothing." They went to a little schoolhouse where the Gospel was preached, and that night twenty-five of them stood up to seek the Lord.

For some time Mr. Currie continued to labour in this needy corner with many signs following. By-and-by he was led out into general evangelistic service, and the work in Montreal was taken up by others. What was once Joe Beef's Canteen is now a thriving temperance coffee-room. In his evangelistic travels Mr. Currie has gone from Canada to California, back to Canada, and westward again to the Pacific sea. In these abundant labours God has given him many trophies. His life-partner, who went with him from Scotland to the new land across the Atlantic, died not long after he was converted. Some years afterwards he married a sister of Mrs. G. C. Stebbins, who has been a true helpmeet to him in his Gospel labours.

Mr. and Mrs. Currie recently ended a twelve-months' visit to the old country, and returned to their American home. Soon after Mr. Currie experienced God's saving grace he began to pray about and plan for the spiritual welfare of his old companions in Glasgow. Years passed on, and the desire to do something, though unfulfilled, was kept well alive in his heart. About five years ago some of those very men who had been partakers in the follies of his youth, having heard of his conversion, traced him out, and wrote earnestly inviting him to pay a visit to Glasgow. After four years' longer waiting the way was opened up for his return, through the kindness of some Christian friends in California. On reaching the scenes of his early life, he hunted up many of his old acquaintances. Several months were devoted to Gospel work among them, and he had the joy of leading some of them to the feet of Jesus; so the main object of his journey from California to Scotland was accomplished.

A striking incident happened to Mr. Currie while he was at work in California, and looking for some token from the Lord as to his projected trip home. He had asked God to give him some Gospel trophy from among the sporting men in the far west, as a sign that there was work for him to do among such, should he get back to Scotland. Preaching one night in a Californian town he was led to choose a text about forsaking sin. He threw out, on a venture, an invitation to anyone in the audience who wanted to forsake sin, to express their desire. A fine-looking athletic man came forward, among others; he was completely broken down, and wept bitterly. After conversation he found peace in believing, and, to Mr. Currie's astonishment, he turned out to be Jack Carkeek, once the champion wrestler of the world. He had had a praying mother, and had fought his convictions for years, till he could hold out no longer, and yielded himself in this meeting. He has since been preparing himself for Gospel work, and on Mr. Currie's return to California, about this time, it was intended that he should join the evangelist in his labours throughout that great region, where the powers of evil are so strong.

Mr. Currie is a man of eminently simple heart and unsophisticated ways, but he is deeply taught in the saving truths of revelation; and a fine play of native humour helps him to arrest the attention of the thoughtless. We earnestly wish for him long years of happy service in the world-wide evangelistic field, and many souls for his hire.

COUNT CAMPELLO'S WORK.

In recent letters, Rev. Ugo Janni, who labours at San Remo in association with Count Campello's work, says: "We can report progress, but the difficulties are enormous. But by God's help all can be overcome. It seems incredible that the Romish Church should have succeeded not only in falsifying Evangelical doctrine and in taking the Bible out of the hands of the people, but also in extinguishing every desire for pure and spiritual food. This is the greatest difficulty that we have to encounter. But the Gospel has not ceased to be the power of God unto salvation, and we therefore have an unswerving faith that in the end consciences will be aroused, and will turn to Christ as to the Fountain of Living Water, springing up unto Eternal Life.

"I hope shortly to spend a week at Aquila, where, if possible, I shall hold a conference in some large building. I have no thought of opening a mission in Aquila, or in any small centre; on the contrary, my idea is, as soon as God permits us, to start another pastor in some large city, in which the nation lives and thinks, and from whence the Gospel can spread to the country round. Not in Rome, that city of unbelief, but in Milan, the moral capital of Italy. This would be the realisation of my fondest dreams."

The deputation secretary in England of the Italian Church Reform Association is Rev. E. C. Britton, Hermosa School, Ealing, W. He writes to us:—"It is most important that a beginning should be made in Milan and other large towns, not only because they are the natural centres of influence, but because in these places the class possessing the necessary means to support the work would be more speedily reached and the church become self-supporting. At present, however, it is as much as we can do to maintain the work in its present condition."

Communications may be addressed to the hon. sec., Miss Mayor, 20, Manor-place, Paddington Green, W.

PARIS.—A series of special meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life is to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, October 24, 25, and 26. Meetings at 4 p.m. at 23, Rue Royale, and at 8.15 at the Wesleyan Chapel, 4, Rue Roquepine. Revs. E. W. Moore and C. G. Moore will speak; also Pastor Theodore Monod, Revs. S. H. Anderson, J. Bramley Hart, W. Gibson, C. E. Greig, and E. G. Thurber, D.D.

[10781]

DORKING CONVENTION.

"This also we wish, even your perfection" (2 Cor. xiii. 9), seems to have been the desire of the conveners and speakers of the fifth annual Dorking Convention, held, as usual, in the parish room of St. Paul's, and presided over by the vicar, Rev. C. H. Sturdy. The words we have quoted formed the basis of a searching address on Sunday morning in St. Paul's previous to the Convention proper. It was pointed out that the words had no reference to sinless perfection, while every believer ought to aim at perfection as pertaining (1) to the conscience (Heb. ix. 9); (2) to standing (Col. ii. 10); (3) to the daily walk (Gen. xvii. 1); (4) to the Christian's equipment (2 Tim. iii. 16, 17); (5) to forgiveness (Matt. v. 48); (6) to works (Rev. iii. 2). Reference was also made in the evening sermon by Rev. F. Peacock to the need of heart-searching. He applied the text, "Where art thou?" (Gen. iii. 9) both, to the unconverted and to believers, and said it was better to be judged now rather than hereafter.

On Monday evening a goodly company gathered in St. Paul's Church, when Rev. F. Paynter, rector of Stoke-next-Guildford, preached the Convention sermon, taking as the basis of his remarks Rev. xix. 7, "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." A considerable number remained behind to partake of the emblems of the Redeemer's passion.

At Tuesday's 11 o'clock meeting, the chairman drew attention to Ps. lxxxv., on which he based many helpful remarks. Captain Tottenham followed with a searching address on the preparation of Moses for his life-work. Omnipotence, he said, is placed at man's disposal; man should therefore place himself at God's disposal. Rev. Mr. Brass, Redhill, called attention to the history of King Hezekiah as given in 2 Chron. xxix. We need (1) to cleanse the temple of the Lord; (2) to offer sacrifices; (3) to give free-will offerings; (4) to cultivate the evangelistic spirit—Hezekiah sent letters to all around inviting them to the feast, and (5) the result will be "prosperity."

There was a very large attendance at the evening meeting, and the presence of the Lord was manifestly felt. Rev. J. Gossett Tanner spoke of the threefold fulness (1) of wisdom, (2) of power, (3) of love, which centre in Christ, and of which the Christian is called upon to partake. Rev. J. J. Luce dwelt upon Job "the perfect man," abhorring himself in dust and ashes.

On Wednesday morning Rev. H. G. Thwaites said revival either in nations or individuals is always the result of searching, cleansing, and turning out. A very helpful address was next given by Rev. S. Dixon. "As the days of heaven upon earth" (Deut. xi. 21) formed the key-note. The covenant is a perpetual one, and the condition is obedience. We want to live in the present, not with one foot in the Middle Ages and the other in heaven. This heavenly life upon earth will involve (1) daily dying (1 Cor. xv. 31), (2) daily praising (Ps. lxxii. 15). The Uganda martyrs sang in the flames, "Daily, daily sing His praises." (3) Daily praying (Ps. lxxxviii. 9), (4) daily searching (Acts xvii 11). The Bible is the Christian's day-book. (5) Daily cross-bearing (Luke ix. 23), (6) daily testifying (Heb. iii. 13), (7) daily sacrificing (Numb. iv. 16, xxix. 6).

Rev. J. J. Luce spoke on Luke i. 67. "Nearness to God" formed the subject of Mr. Thwaites's address. He believed that the hearts of those present were longing for a closer walk with God. This could only be gained as the result of (1) humility, (2) submission, (3) resistance of devil, not by argument or strength of purpose, but by holding up the precious blood, (4) drawing nigh to God (5) with cleansed hands and hearts. Captain Tottenham pointed out two incentives to holiness as given by St. Peter. (1) 1 Peter i. 15, 18, 19, we have been redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, (2) 2 Peter iii. 11, the nearness of the Lord's return.

Thursday was a memorable day. A solemnity pervaded the meetings from early morning to the after meeting in the evening, when the climax was reached by Rev. J. J. Luce requesting those to stand who wished to consecrate themselves to the Lord. Besides addresses by Mr. Dixon and Mr. Thwaites, Pastor Fuller Gooch gave an exposition of Psalm xvi. in the morning, and spoke with much power in the evening on the Lord's second coming.

The usual missionary meeting in the afternoon was presided over by Rev. W. Wickham, vicar of S. Holmwood, and the speakers were Rev. M. Bailey (North India), Mr. Wood (China Inland), Rev. G. Liesching (Ceylon); and Rev. W. C. Fremantle (Bengal). The two latter have worked as curates in S. Paul's parish, and much interest was natually centred in them. The Rev. A. G. Lockett (C.M.S.), also a former curate, was especially remembered in prayer. A meeting was held later in connection with the Children's Scripture Union, when Rev. H. Thwaites kept the children most attentive, whilst he addressed them on the words, "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

The praise meeting on Friday morning was conducted by Rev. J. J. Luce, and many were the testimonies given as to blessing received. Texts were repeated from all parts of the room, many by those who had never attended a convention before. The last meeting was held in the evening, and was of an evangelistic character. Captain Tottenham was the only speaker, and his remarks were based on the two narratives (1) of the healing of the paralytic, and (2) of the anointing of Christ's feet with tears.

On Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons the Christian Colportage Association and the Society for Propagating Christianity Amongst the Jews were respectively represented by Mr. Brown and Rev. F. Paynter, who both addressed numerously attended meetings.

ARRIVAL OF DR. JOHN G. PATON.

After a lengthened tour in the United States, pleading for the suppression of the traffic in drink and firearms with the New Hebrides, the venerable Dr. John G. Paton is returning viâ Britain to his life work in the Antipodes. The privilege of meeting him last week on his arrival from Nova Scotia and spending two days with him in Scotland was eagerly accepted.

At threescore and ten his vigour is unabated, and burning enthusiasm for heathen missions still characterises his life. As we listened to his story of marvellous toil—travels by night and by day—the exhaustion of four and even five meetings a day—the frequent exclamation forced from his overwrought body, "my work is done"—and the infusion of new power as he stood up to plead for his "dear cannibals"—we felt that we had discovered the true ideal of apostolic succession.

Surely his visit betokens a coming deluge of God-sent enthusiasm for heathen missions. He has cheerfully undertaken the toil of a hurried series of visits in the three kingdoms to pour out his soul in the interests of the perishing heathen. His testimony to the marvellous power of the Gospel amongst the lowest savages must stimulate our faith. November 8, at Exeter Hall, has been fixed for his welcome to London. A. K. Langridge.

NORWEGIANS IN ROUEN.—Rev. O. K. Brune, missionary, 1, Rue de la Vicomté, coin du Quai du Hâvre, Rouen, writes: "I have here a Sailors' Reading Room, and hold meetings which are well attended by Swedes and Norwegians. I am sorry to say Danes do not often come. I should be glad if a friend would send us a Danish flag, and books by Danish authors, and the Danish illustrated paper."

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—The Anti-Sunday Travelling Union, which devotes itself to awakening the public conscience to the evil of using conveyances on the Lord's Day, needs both workers and funds. Through its agency, leaflets dealing with the subject are distributed Sunday by Sunday at railway stations and other centres of traffic, but the cost of printing the large supplies required, is necessarily great. Persons willing to distribute the leaflets on Sundays at centres of traffic near their homes, will be welcomed as workers, and kept supplied with leaflets. Address, The Secretaries, Anti-Sunday Travelling Union, 18, Christchurch-avenue, Brondesbury, N.W.

The Evangelist.

OBEYING AND KNOWING.

BY CAPTAIN R. KELSO CARTER.*

In August, 1891, I met one afternoon a lady of the most remarkable gifts. Never in all my experience have I encountered such an intensely brilliant mind. She was in trouble, serious and deep. For nearly two hours she poured out her mind in a stream of eloquent description, telling how she had tried everything under the sun in order to get rest, but had found it not. At the age of fifteen she had become an infidel, practically at least. She had determined to marry no man who believed in God or the Bible. She had read and studied almost everything in literature and art. The widest circles of social life among literary people and students of science and mysteries were open to her constantly. She eagerly embraced Christian Science, wrote upon it, taught it, and inculcated its principles everywhere. A great sufferer, physically, with nervous disorders, she had sought relief in every way; but the central trouble was the wild unresting heart that found no peace, in any of these things, nor anywhere. I spoke to her only briefly in a few words now and then, praying constantly all the time for divine guidance, and for the power of the Holy Ghost upon her, as well as speaking from my own experience directly to her heart. With the errors to which she had given her adherence, I was perfectly familiar, and knew their deepest windings, yet I never argued for one moment against any one of them. Let me sum up her position before going further.

First; she believed God was only a principle. Second: she did not believe the Bible to be inspired. Third: she believed that Jesus Christ was only a man. Fourth: the doctrine of the blood atonement was repugnant to her mind. Fifth: she had no faith whatever in Christianity.

Now I call attention pointedly to the fact that every one of these is a fundamental necessity in the Christian faith. The Christian must believe every one of them without exception. Yet will it startle any reader, will it surprise any Christian worker who has earnestly laboured for hours to try and convince people of their errors and mistakes, thinking that this must be done before they can get ready to be saved, if I tell them that not one moment did I spend in attempting to convince her of her errors on any one of these points? On the contrary, I said to her, "I don't care what you believe or what you don't believe. It makes no difference at all. I tell you if you will do a few simple things you will have peace."

"Oh," she replied, "I have done everything, I have tried everything for years."

"Yes," I answered, "You have done everything and tried everything, except these few simple things to which I refer. You have never done them."

Finally, when she had spoken of her intense longing for peace and rest, I secured her attention and said slowly, "You can have rest in thirty minutes if you will do a few simple things. I know it."

"Rest," she exclaimed, while the tears ran down over her cheeks. "Oh, but it is impossible."

"No," said I, "It is not impossible. You can have rest in thirty minutes if you will do a few simple things that you have not yet done."

How I inwardly praised the Lord when she turned and replied, suddenly, "I will; but when, and where, and how?" With an emphatic gesture I said, "Will you do it here and now?"

"Yes," she said, "if you will close those doors."

We were sitting in a large double parlour with perhaps twenty persons. I immediately arose and closed the sliding doors, shutting off most of the people, and leaving us alone with one lady. "Kneel down," I said abruptly, and she did so. I prayed briefly, but sympathetically, speaking a little of the wonderful love of God and his desire that his children should not suffer, and then turning to her I said, "Now you pray."

"Oh, I have prayed, and prayed, and prayed for years."

"No," I replied, "you have not called upon God."

She hesitated, and seemed unwilling to do it, and then I said, "Now, see here, whether you believe it or not, this Bible is true from cover to cover, and everything in it; and this Bible says, 'Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.' (The desperateness of the case so impressed me that it probably prompted the intense force of my next sentence.) I added, "If that promise is not true, then God is a liar, the Bible is a fraud, salvation a delusion, the whole thing a humbug; but I know it is true, God cannot lie. He says: 'Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.' Now I don't care what you believe and what you don't. Will you call upon God to save you. If you will, He will do it."

She began to pray aloud. I cannot give all the details of what she said, but simply touch the fundamental points. After I felt she had prayed enough in this way, in response to the question, "What shall I do next?" I told her, "Ask Him to save you for Jesus' sake."

Notice, please, that I did not waste a moment's time in telling her that she had got to believe that Jesus was divine. She obeyed, and prayed in Jesus' name for her salvation. A little later, in answer to her repeated query, "What shall I do next? What do you want me to say?" I replied, "I think it is about time to tell God that you will believe his Bible, whether you understand it or not. You cannot make yourself feel that you do, but you can set your will to it, and will to do it, and tell Him so."

"Where is it?" she cried, "Let me take it and do it." And taking the blessed Book between her hands, she told the Lord that she would believe it from cover to cover, whether she understood it or not. "Now," said she, "what do you want me to do next? I want this thing to be complete, and nothing to be left out. Everything must go in."

The intensity of this declaration led me to speak of a depth of consecration that is, of course, not usual in dealing with the unconverted, but after such a request I could do no less. Opening a book to a blank page I said, "Will you sign your name on the bottom of this page, and then give it to God, and let Him fill it up for your life, your family, your friends, your relationships, your associations, what you shall be, what you shall do, and what you shall suffer? And no matter what it costs you, will you stand to that signature, by the grace of God?" A moment's hesitation, and she said emphatically, "I will do that." "Tell Him so," I replied, and in a few more words of prayer aloud, she pledged herself thus to do.

"Now, what do you want me to say next?" I replied, "It is not I that want you to do it. I did not get up this scheme of salvation. God has laid down these rules. I think He wants you to tell Him that you believe He hears and answers your prayer. Here is the Scripture, 'What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.' Now you have come, and you have called, and you have the positive promises of his Word. You have just told Him you would believe everything in it, and Jesus Himself tells you to believe when ye pray, that you do receive. Will you tell Him, "I believe you save me now"?

There was hesitation here. There always is. This is the last ditch with everybody. But only for a few moments. The hesitating question came, "Do you want me to say that?" I replied, "He wants you to say that. If you will confess Him here, He will instantly confess you before his Father and the angels in heaven. He has said it, and He cannot lie."

Only a moment more and the words came tremblingly, "I believe Jesus saves me now."

"Say it again," I enjoined, and it was repeated again and again. "That is your weapon," I said; "meet the devil with it every moment. Confess Jesus with your mouth, and He will confess you. His word is true."

We had been about fifteen minutes upon our knees. At this point we arose, and after rising she almost fainted on the sofa. Recovering in a moment, with all the nervousness gone, and the face calm and quiet, she said, "I thank you very much; I will go up-stairs now, and I will go saying it. I believe Jesus saves me now."

At the present writing over three months have elapsed,* and in that time this lady has most wonderfully demonstrated the truth of God's Word in this simple scheme of salvation. Her testimony has been firm and unfaltering, and her heart overflowing with joy and praise to God for his goodness. She has a freedom in working and speaking for Jesus that have been the envy of many a Christian who has been in the Church for forty years. Recently in a great meeting in New York city, her testimony thrilled the audience as she poured out her words of praise to God for his wonderful salvation, and contrasted her misery and unrest with the deep peace which she now has, until tears flowed from almost every eye, and shouts of praise rose from the congregation.

* Extracted from The Science and Secret of Soul Saving. 20 cents. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York,

* Two full years have passed (Aug., 1893), and God has most signally used her in service, public and private.—R. K. C.

CHILDREN'S SEASIDE SERVICES.

On Thursday afternoon last week a crowded meeting was held in St. Martin's Town Hall, Trafalgar Square, to hear reports of the seaside services of the past summer. The chair was occupied by Rev. E. A. Stuart, president of the Children's Special Service Mission.

The first address was by Rev. Martin J. Hall, who described the effort at Newquay and Ventnor. Though the work was on a small scale, a large measure of blessing was vouchsafed. All along the real object of the meetings was kept prominent—the bringing of boys and girls into living relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ. Two brothers have gone back to school determined to confess Christ and serve Him. One of them had been immensely popular in the past; and as day schools are for the most part quite closed to Gospel work, it is a joy to know that from the meetings on the sands boys and girls take with them a vital faith and settled purpose to carry out solemn resolutions to live to the glory of God. The amusement element was reduced to a minimum, but pleasant hours were spent in rambles and healthful games. Ministers of the Gospel were among the helpers in the work, and at Ventnor the Mission was earnestly supported by the Vicar.

Mr. A. G. Dodderidge spoke of missions at Portrush and St. Leonards, having spent in all three months on the sands, during the season. The Word of God has been owned as never before in his experience, to the great encouragement of himself and a band of whole-hearted helpers. Every endeavour had been made to proclaim the Gospel in such a way as to make its reception easy for youthful minds. In the North of Ireland a large number of Scripture Union branches have been started. The children were plainly told that conversion means being born again, and entering upon a new life; and many testimonies have been received of little ones living for Christ, and dying after testimonies to his praise. Measures were adopted to excite and extend interest in the foreign branch of the work, and sums have since been received for circulating Gospel leaflets among children in heathen lands.

The Chairman, in emphasising the importance of the mission to the young, said he regarded the revived interest in missionary work as owing in a large degree to the efforts of the Children's Special Service Mission. The duty of instructing the young in Divine things was enlarged upon, and illustrated by the many injunctions in the Pentateuch, in which Israel was charged to explain to the children the law of God and religious ordinances.

Dr. C. Harford Battersby, who had passed some time at Cromer, rejoiced to report that very good meetings were held. By way of attracting and interesting the children, "flag signals" were worked, in order to introduce Gospel invitations or counsels. Large missionary maps were outlined on the beach, especially to show the pressing need of the Dark Continent. More male helpers would have been welcome, to get the boys together, but with speakers the Mission was fairly well provided. There is still sore need to impress upon the parents the tremendous privilege of allowing their children to attend the services. While desirous of getting their children into tip-top schools, and settling them well in the world, parents do not seem to care much about their souls being won for Christ.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith sketched his recent tour in Canada and the United States, telling of earnest effort for the young in some places and systematic neglect regarding them in others. He saw many results of the work, extending over a long period of years, of Rev. E. Payson Hammond, to whom large numbers who are serving the Church as ministers owe their conversion. He was more than ever convinced of the importance of seeking the lambs for the Saviour's fold. Since then he has been engaged in a mission at Eastbourne, and seen more of the intense need that exists for individual work, especially among the children of the well-to-do, who are in many cases kept deplorably ignorant on religious subjects.

African Missions Visited.—13.

BY D. A. HUNTER.

To many readers of The Christian who have travelled in the Protestant Cantons of Switzerland, the name of "L'Eglise Libre" is familiar. It is a Church, corresponding in many ways to the Free Church of Scotland, and it supports a vigorous African mission, with stations in and around Delagoa Bay, and in the Spelonken. The mission works in harmony with the French missions in Basutoland and the Barotsé valley, although the one belongs to the Suisse Romande and the others to the Paris Missionary Society. The Bulletin Missionaire, published each month in Lausanne, describes the splendid work which is being done, in a quiet way, by l'Eglise Libre.

It has been my good fortune to visit Elim and Valdezia, the two stations in the Spelonken, and to find in MM. Creux and Rosset warm-hearted Evangelical Christians. The Spelonken is a range of hills immediately south of the Zoutpansberg Mountains, and is, to Europeans, one of the most inviting districts in which to settle that I have yet visited in South Africa. It is just within the tropics, but a good elevation greatly tempers the heat, while the climate is good. Mealies, bananas, coffee, etc., grow well, and I quite anticipate that tea, once introduced, will become a staple industry there. Moreover, it is expected that within two years the railway will be opened as far as Pietersburg, a rising town about sixty miles south of the Spelonken.

An easy ride from the Spelonken brings one to the Zoutpansberg Mountains, with their large native population, almost wholly unevangelised, owing to the opposition of the chief. The white population of the Spelonken is very small, most being storekeepers, and many of the stores being at the same time canteens, and a curse alike to whites and blacks. The welcome we received from the missionaries was quite touching. It has been almost a unique experience for them, during their twelve years' labours, to receive visitors in sympathy with their work. Instead of allowing us to thank them for their unbounded hospitality and kindness, they insisted on thanking us for coming along. If Christian people with the needful leisure and means at their disposal realised the loneliness of many missionaries, and how much a visit from a Christian friend means to the lonely ones and their work, many a summer holiday or wintering abroad would be invested with a new purpose and a deepened interest. There is so much need for white Christians, other than missionaries, to travel this and other heathen lands, protesting with life and lip against the evil living and evil speaking of nominal Christians, who render the missionary's task doubly difficult.

To those who have money to invest, there are at present splendid opportunities in the Transvaal, where the investment would not only return a handsome profit, but could be made a powerful adjunct to mission work. Large and fertile farms can be purchased at low figures, and they are almost sure to advance in value in the course of a few years. I have talked the matter over with the missionaries, and they heartily commend the scheme. Their people find it hard to make ends meet, and so go off to Johannesburg and Pretoria for work, where they are brought under many evil influences. The missionaries' hands are too full with preaching, schools, medical work, out-stations, and other duties, to give the time and attention needful to train the people in proper agricultural and industrial habits. Were a Christian man to purchase a farm adjoining a mission station, and either work it himself or put a Christian manager on it, he could make it pay way well, and at the same time give employment to the native Christians from the station, and the natives settled on his farm, whom he could also train in farm work. In the evenings and on Sundays he would have ample scope for evangelistic work. MM. Creux and Rosset say this is just what is needed, and Mr. Hofmeyr, whose long experience as a missionary of the Dutch Reformed Church in the Zontpansberg gives his opinion great weight, concurs.

It seems to me one of the most practical pieces of mission work that a layman could take up in this country; it would greatly strengthen the hands of the missionaries. Nevertheless, the temptations of the life are great—not the least of them, to give up seeking first God's kingdom, and seek first riches and honour. So, "let a man examine himself," and count well the cost before he give himself to this work. I am sure M. Creux, Elim, Spelonken, Zoutpansberg, South African Republic, would be glad to correspond with anyone on this subject, or if any care to write to me, letters addressed to Post-office, Cape Town, will reach me.

Word having been received that Magatu, the great chief of the Zoutpansberg mountains, wished to see him with reference to a teacher for his children, MM. Creux and Rosset decided to pay him a visit, and we were fortunate enough to accompany them. When, on horseback, we reached the brow of the first hill of Magatu's mountains, we came in sight of the kraal of Magatu's great wife. We inquired where the chief's own kraal was situated, and I could hardly believe my eyes when they pointed to the highest peak of the mountain, and informed us that among the trees, at the base of some rugged crags, which formed the crest of the range, would we find the chief's village. It seemed a "far cry" to reach such an eyrie on horseback, for there were two deep valleys between us and the mountains, but we pushed on, up hill and down dale, and then up, up, up, at times coming to places where we had to dismount and drive our horses before us, till at length we found ourselves at the outskirts of the village.

Here was heathenism and no mistake. Numbers of people, whose clothing was of the scantiest, came out to see the strangers. They showed us where to leave our horses, and we were conducted into the kraal. It is a curious place. Native huts nestling among huge rocks and boulders larger than the huts themselves, the whole being overhung by the grim crags which had nothing but blue sky above them. The view towards the plain was extensive, and one could hardly imagine a better selected outlook than has chosen this chief, who, declining to own the sway of the Boer, has entrenched himself in this mountain fastness. We were first conducted to an induna, who received us in the yard surrounding his hut. The hut was a circular building, with a thatched roof, overhanging so as to form a verandah all round, the outer edge of the eaves being supported on poles.

After shaking hands with us, the induna went off to announce our arrival to his chief, and we were presently escorted into a circular yard, fenced all round with tall pickets. Three chairs were brought for the four of us, one of them being exceedingly shaky. Some twenty indunas were sitting around on the ground looking at us. Soon Nagatu arrived. He is a short, stout man, with a good shaped-head, a man whom education could have enabled to take a leading place among civilised men. He was dressed in European clothes—rather shabby—and a black felt hat, with two very long feathers stuck in one side, served for head gear. He sat at some little distance from us, but not facing us, until the interpreter had learned our business and carried our presents to him. We were then conducted forward and presented to him.

This ceremony over, we all repaired to his house, a little white-washed cottage built close up to the crags, and, in its European appearance, quite a contrast to the native huts around. The little room was crowded when all got in, we and the chief sitting on chairs, while the Indunas squatted all around on the floor. Then ensued a long palaver, during which the advantages which he and his people would derive from missionary and teacher were set forth. He said the words spoken were good, but he was not yet ready for them. In spite of the apparent failure of our trip, M. Creux, who has known Magatu for years, is of opinion that he was impressed, and himself really wants a teacher, but that the indunas are not yet all in favour of it, and so Magatu feared to commit himself before them. A woman, apparently one of the chief's wives, who had occasion to pass through the room during our interview, crawled on all-fours, not being permitted to stand in the presence of the chief.

I asked if I might photograph Magatu, but he gave a most emphatic "No," fearing he might be bewitched. He seemed very sleepy during our conference. On asking the reason, I learned that he fears to sleep at night, lest he be murdered by one of his sons or brothers who covets the throne. Murder is not so easy in daylight, so he sleeps then. We made our adieux and started back about 3.30 p.m. The sun set just as we neared the plain, and we lost ourselves in the dark, so that it was quite late when we at last reached the wagon, tired and hungry, but thankful to our Heavenly Father for all his care of us during the day.

THE WORTHING EPIDEMIC.

Every diligent reader of the daily papers knows that a terrible and far-reaching disaster has lately fallen on the pretty little seaside town of Worthing, ten miles to the west of Brighton. Some months ago a fever epidemic broke out, caused, it is asserted, by defective drainage combined with a vitiated water supply. The results have been disastrous almost beyond description; indeed the town is practically ruined, for the present at any rate. The fever has carried off numerous victims among the poor, whilst many more have been left weakened and stranded, so to speak, on the shores of life.

The well-to-do residents, of course, made haste to migrate to safer quarters, on the outbreak of the fever. The town, like other seaside resorts, is largely dependent on summer visitors; needless to say that avenue of social prosperity has been completely closed. All through the fine summer season, when the local householders and tradespeople should have been reaping a harvest for winter consumption, Worthing has virtually been a deserted city of the dead and dying. Schools have had to be closed. The desolation has been complete, and it must be many a day before the little town recovers from the effects of the dread visitation. Happily the course of the epidemic has now been materially checked, though it is not completely stayed. We hear also that the preventive steps taken by the local authorities are by no means deemed sufficient; as to that the future alone can decide.

All sections of the community have been affected; the great fall in postal and railway receipts are one manifest proof. House proprietors and lodging letters have lost heavily, and in some cases are probably ruined financially. Among the many who have suffered in plan and pocket is an esteemed Christian lady who for a number of years past has had a Home of Rest in the town for tired Christians; with that she combined much earnest effort of a Gospel and social kind which has been an unspeakable blessing to many. Of course all this has been scattered through the calamity that has fallen on the place; besides, our sister has been affected considerably in health through the anxiety and exertion attendant on making necessary arrangements to move to another centre; for it is deemed hopeless to continue the work in Worthing. She has secured desirable premises in another town, for a Home of Rest of the same superior stamp, and hopes, God willing, to resume her varied Christian labours there at an early date.

All this means a heavy expense, which the lady is not herself able to bear. She has experienced many wonderful tokens of God's guiding, preserving, and providing love in connection with this crisis, and she is encouraged to believe that other Christian friends will show practical sympathy in this time of trial and loss. A sum of £200 would probably suffice to meet all expenses of moving, and the purchase of some necessary furnishing for the newly-acquired house.

BETHEL NAIOTH, TITHEBARN-ROAD, SOUTHPORT, has been opened as a Gospel Mission and Training Home, for young men who, having consecrated themselves to the Lord, are anxious to acquire a more complete knowledge of Divine revelation, as a preparation for home and foreign evangelisation. While preparing for wider fields of labour, students will have ample opportunities of preaching the Word of Life in the immediate neighbourhood of Southport. Mr. J. C. Hindle, director of the Home, writes:—"One young man who has spent some time with me is now on his way to Mexico as a missionary, and three others will shortly leave for Lake Chad in Central Africa."

THE LORD'S DAY IN CARDIFF.—"The Liverpool of South Wales" may now be added to the list of great towns which have publicly pronounced against the Sunday opening of museums. A "Cardiff Sunday Society," of which Canon Thompson, vicar of St. John the Baptist, is the president, was recently founded to promote this form of Sunday opening. At its first public meeting, held on October 10, a resolution in favour of the Society's objects was rejected by a large majority. The amendment deprecating the Sunday opening, which thus received the well-nigh unanimous support of the meeting, was moved by Rev. J. T. L. Maggs, a Wesleyan minister. Rev. Dr. Peake, of the Lord's Day Observance Society, writes:—"My committee rejoice to learn that the earnest Christian efforts, in which it has been their privilege to take part, have had so satisfactory a result."

OPIUM IN CEYLON.

A striking paper on the ravages of the opium habit among the poorer classes in Ceylon, written by the Misses Leitch, appears in The Banner of Asia. We make some extracts:—

With the earnest wish in our hearts that the evil which has grown up largely in the past century in China and India, may not grow up in the same way in the coming century in Ceylon, we took the opportunity while in the south of the island to visit several of the opium shops licensed by Government, and learn what we could of the traffic as now carried on.

The first shop visited was the one in Slave Island. We had no difficulty in finding it or those which we visited subsequently. The fact that there are such shops, and their location, seemed to be well known among the people generally, as all from whom we inquired our way from time to time, readily gave us the desired information. We found the man in charge of the shop industriously weighing and measuring opium for customers. We asked him,

"How many come daily to buy opium to consume on the premises?" He replied, "From fifty to sixty."

"How many buy opium and take home?" "Two hundred or more daily."

"What castes, classes, or nationalities come to buy?" "All castes, classes, and nationalities: Singhalese, Tamils, Malays, Chinese, English sailors, etc."

"Is it sold to women?" "Yes."

"To children?" "Yes."

"To small children?" "Yes. Children under ten years of age are not allowed to smoke it on the premises, but children of any age may buy and take away."

"How much do people who are regular purchasers spend a day on opium?"

"Some buy six cents' worth a day, some twelve or twenty-four cents' worth a day, some habitual consumers spend ten rupees a month for opium."

We were shown into the rooms where opium was being smoked, and counted thirty-six persons lying about on the floors, evidently in various stages of stupefaction. The place was dark save where the small dull fires of the opium smokers' lamps served to make the gloom and absolute bareness of the place dimly visible. A drum was being beaten in this licensed opium den, perhaps to draw in outsiders, as well as to please the habitual comers. These were inhaling the fumes through pipes perhaps a foot long. The place was badly ventilated, and the air was heavy and sickening with the thick black smoke and opium fumes from the pipes, and with the breath of the smokers.

Some struggled to their feet as we entered. A few of these seemed so far under the influence of the drug that they could not stand steadily or speak coherently. Some of the faces which surrounded us as we opened the door to let in the sunlight and fresh air looked ghastly and unnatural, the features distorted, the eyes dull and vacant. Some of these, we were told, spent a large portion of their time and earnings in this den, being confirmed opium sots. We asked if they could not be cured of the habit, and the opium seller, speaking in a somewhat scornful manner, assured us that they would be obliged to go on using it while life lasted, saying that a confirmed opium-user could never break himself of the habit. We asked him if he or any of his own family used opium, and he replied that assuredly they did not.

As we looked at these poor people lying on the floor around us, bound, as it were, hand and foot, in the slavery of this insidious and degrading habit, a great pity and sorrow filled our hearts for them.

Those men whom we saw about us are some women's husbands, some children's fathers, some mothers' sons. Some woman's heart will ache to-night because someone dear to her has fallen under the power of this vice. That woman is our sister; these men, marred and besotted though they may be, are still our brothers.

In the presence of the fact that there are four shops in Colombo, licensed both for the sale of the drug and for smoking on the premises, and thirty-nine other opium shops throughout the country; that 12,457 pounds of opium were imported into this island last year, the amount consumed yearly having increased nearly 30 per cent. in the last ten years; that from this traffic Government derives this year a total revenue from the sale of licences and from import duties of Rs.31,745, and costing the consumer several times this amount—we cannot help feeling that in the face of such an evil, affecting the happiness of so many persons in so many parts of the island, indifference would be a sin.

Will not the blessing of them that are ready to perish come upon everyone who seeks to heal this open sore of "Cheery Ceylon," and remove from this beautiful island this fruitful source of insanity, pauperism, and crime?

AMERICAN PRISONS.

BY CHAS. COOK.

After twelve years' absence, I am revisiting the prisons of New York, and am greatly surprised at the laxity which prevails in the system of gaol discipline.

"Truth is stranger than fiction." After taking the morning service in the church of the Sing Sing convict prison, I went round with the chaplain and visited the men in their cells. One prisoner was playing with a diamond which he said he had found among some rags; another was in bed smoking a pipe; a third was boiling some water over his lamp to make some tea, which he acknowledged had been brought in surreptitiously from the outside world. "If the warder sees me, guess I'll be reported," he remarked. The man in the next cell was passing a note to his fellow-prisoner, by the aid of a piece of stout wire and a pair of scissors, but our presence disturbed him, and he dropped his apparatus outside the cell door, and was dependent upon me to give it to him again. "What's this?" I asked. "Oh, a patent telephone, sir," The chaplain smiled, and we passed on. The cells in which the men are confined when not at work, are terribly small; not more than six feet by three.

Sing Sing is the State convict prison of New York, and contains some 1260 prisoners; in ratio to the population, the Roman Catholic element largely predominates. Some seventy men are here "for life," and they, with some 730 others, were present at the early morning service. A band, composed entirely of men under long sentences, played a selection of music before the meeting proper began. A magnificent choir (also of convicts), led the singing, and it was strange to hear such men singing the refrain.

"All sorrows past, and grief and pain,
We'll meet to part no more."

As I spoke from the text, "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the end of the earth," my audience, when anything pleased them, broke out into applause; and at one point laughed outright.

Sentences range from two years to thirty years; no corporal punishment is permitted, and each prisoner is allowed four ounces of tobacco per week. Bibles are not supplied to every prisoner, but any prisoner can have one by asking for it. This I feel is a mistake, for many an English convict has been converted through reading the Book to pass the time away; and again, some who were thinking seriously, might hardly like to ask the chaplain for a Bible, lest he might be thought to be currying favour. In the light of the action of the American Government forbidding the entry of Chinese into the States, it is well to notice that not a single Chinaman to-day is in the State prison of the Empire State; and I may add, after visiting the Tombs prison, and the gaol on Blackwells Island, neither is there a Chinaman in either of those places.

I spent a very happy Sunday in the Tombs, preaching four times to distinct congregations, the women and the boys being specially interesting. An Irish woman was roaring out in a drunken fit whilst I was speaking to the women, and at the close I ventured to remark to the matron that we "should have kept her quiet if it had been in England." "Oh, bless you," she answered, "I would not punish any woman, poor thing." "Everybody's business is nobody's business." I was certainly surprised to find the State does not provide Bibles or Testaments for the men or boys. Here were about twenty men sentenced to short terms, sitting on a bench all day long doing nothing, and not a Testament among them, and it was the same with the boys. I hope to supply all these on my next visit.

Visiting Blackwells Island, I found fault with the smallness of the cells in which the prisoners are located, and noticed the strange punishment meted out to those guilty of breaking the rules of the gaol. We saw three men standing with their faces to the wall. The warder said to us, "They will be kept in that position all day without moving, and without food." Surely this is not humane, but brutalising, and cannot tend toward reform.

Recently two murderers escaped from Sing Sing, it is supposed by the help of an outside friend, who is a millionaire. Being situated on the Hudson, it was inferred that they had crossed the river in a boat. A few days later a boat was discovered upside down, and, near by, the bodies of two men, who had been drowned. The search for the escaped prisoners at once ceased, but the detective who told me of it said, "But I guess those bodies were not belonging to the murderers!"

Besides preaching in the churches on the Sundays, I have visited the Florence Mission and Cremorne Mission, and rejoiced at the wonderful work being done in the reclamation of drunkards and fallen girls. These meetings continue every night. The testimonies are really remarkable; they are live meetings, conducted in the power of the Holy Ghost, and most inspiring. We have nothing like it in London.

We have just spent a Sunday with the Hon. Capt. Moreton at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, preaching yesterday in two of the churches, and in the afternoon at the Y.M.C.A. We hope to leave here at the end of this week for Detroit and Chicago.

September 25, 1893.

CENTRAL Y.M.C.A., LIVERPOOL.

The inaugural meeting for the winter season of the Central Y.M.C.A., Liverpool, was held on Thursday last, under the presidency of the Bishop of Liverpool. In the course of his address Dr. Ryle spoke of the world-wide ramifications of the Y.M.C.A. Some earnest exhortations to cultivate nobility of character were founded on the successful career of the late Mr. George Moore, of Cumberland. The Association was urged to avoid risking shipwreck on the rocks of mere intellect or political partisanship.

Dr. Wm. Carter, Professor of Therapeutics at the University, gave the inaugural address, in which he said: "Of the many institutions distinctive of the Victorian era, none seem to me more hopeful for the future of our country and our race than those which band its youth together into great and strong brotherhoods, animated by the one common principle of devotion to the idea of a pure, wholesome Christian life. As every human being must help 'to shape the growing stature of this world,' it comes to be a fact of the greatest significance and encouragement that there are to-day upwards of 5000 Young Men's Christian Associations, all more or less closely united together by organic ties, and with an aggregate membership of nearly half a million.

"The aim of the Y.M.C.A. is a magnificent one. It is that of developing to its highest degree all that is best in the man physically, mentally, and morally, and, by that process, of giving no room for the growth of what is weak, foolish, and ignoble. It strives to build up a robust, manly, Christian character—the highest conceivable type of character—and the particular method by which it aims at accomplishing this is by disciplining heart, and lung, and limb by wholesome physical exercise, by quickening the intellectual life by the stimulating contact of the minds of its members with those of teachers of proved ability in their several departments, and by shaping the highest portion of our complex nature after the model of that ideal Man, who through all the long centuries since first his blessed feet trod our earth has been the source and centre of everything noblest, purest, and most beautiful in human life."

Mr. Thos. Jameson (general secretary) read the annual report, which showed that the past year had been one of the most active in the history of the Association. Short speeches were made by the treasurer and chairman of the general committee, and several anthems were sung by the choir. During the evening prizes were presented to the successful students in the evening classes.

THE 19TH ANNUAL REPORT of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association, besides containing the usual financial and other statements, is made specially interesting by the addition of a list of abstaining Baptist ministers in the United Kingdom.

THE TIBETAN MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The widespread interest that has been created about Tibet (and which is, I think, largely owing to the publicity you gave to my recent journey through that country in your issue of August 17th) has brought me a large number of letters making inquiries and offers of service for God in Tibet, whilst other offers have come as the result of meetings I have had since then in many parts of England and Scotland.

Having secured the assistance of friends to consider these offers, the present result is that the following are accepted and will probably go out with me about January next, together with others whose cases are now under consideration :—Mr. and Mrs. Evan Mackenzie, of Dingwall; Mr. Ebenr. J. Brewer, of Liverpool, but recently working amongst the Chinese in New York; Mr. J. McDonald, of the Island of Harris.

A young doctor from Nova Scotia will also perhaps be one of our party, but the distance has prevented anything being definitely settled yet.

The party will probably collect in London about November 1. We then propose holding meetings both in London and the provinces, further to urge the claims of Tibet on the home churches. But we have no house. Would some servant of God with a furnished house at disposal lend it to the Lord by giving us the use of it for two or three months prior to our departure in January? Such a house should be near a large railway terminus (Victoria for example) to facilitate our railway travelling, of which we are likely to have a good deal, as I have numerous invitations to hold meetings about the country.

But our principal need for this advance upon Tibet is men fitted for pioneer work—men of God, who know God, who are prepared to obey God, and who dare to go forth trusting in God, and in God alone. As one who first went to China in connection with the China Inland Mission (which connection I hope to keep up as long as they will allow me), I very heartily accept and adopt all its principles, and propose to work on the same lines. This may be a guide to some who are already interested in our Tibetan Mission and who may be hearing God's voice calling them to service among the heathen.

I may here say that I have been compelled to branch off into a separate effort for Tibet, because the China Inland Mission feels it has yet ample scope for all its efforts within the boundaries of China, and does not see its way to enter upon a work which might and probably would necessitate a base of operations in India. I have, however, I am glad to say, their best wishes in this effort.

It is possible that friends of missionary work may be inquiring, "But what about funds?" Well, as to this, we shall look to the Lord for supplies to meet both our spiritual and temporal needs day by day. How we stand at present is this. Some forty or fifty friends of the work, hitherto unknown to me, have sent in altogether about £84. This amount, with any more that may be sent, will be applied for the sending forth and maintenance of the workers. God has in his goodness given me sufficient means (some £80 a year), through deceased relatives, to fully supply all my own requirements. But we shall need some £600 or £700 to place the proposed party of twelve on the Tibetan frontier, and then about £80 a year will suffice for each worker while in the field.

I feel very weak at times over this seemingly bold step, but directly I recall how God has pushed me forward by the most marked indications of his will I am able to cast the responsibility on Him, and be at rest. Will you please grant this work and myself a share in your prayers?

I should like to add that Mr. William Sharp, of 13, Walbrook, London, E.C. (who is a member of the Council of the China Inland Mission), has kindly consented to receive and acknowledge any gifts for this work, and to act generally as hon. treasurer. Will any friends writing to him there please put outside their letters the words "Tibetan Mission". Inquiries about the mission or Tibet itself, or offers of service or of a house, may be addressed to me, care of my brother-in-law, Mr. Chas. Bethell, Ellesmere House, Templeton-place, London, S.W.

With renewed thanks for your kind help, which is most valuable, yours in the Master's service,

Annie R. Taylor.

[1082]

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE, JAPAN.

A profitable Conference of missionaries has been held at Arima, a short account of which may be of interest to readers of The Christian. Arima has long been known to residents in this portion of Japan as a summer resort, being situated in a lovely valley at the back of the hills overlooking Kobe (better known in England as Hiogo), one of the open ports. The village (which has hot and cold mineral springs) is about 1250ft. above the sea level, and visitors from the plains not only find the air invigorating, but also get the advantage of cool nights, which is of some importance when the thermometer reaches 90 deg. and over in the shade in this rice-growing country.

Of late years Arima has become chiefly a rendezvous for missionaries working in China and Japan, and in 1891 an annual Conference was established, which has been growing in favour and reputation. This year over one hundred and thirty missionaries (with their wives and families) have attended and enjoyed many blessed meetings. The subjects selected for contemplation were: (1) The Holy Spirit (two days) and (2) the Resurrection of Christ (three days), with a day set apart for conference on mission work in China, whence quite a large number of workers had come, chiefly from the Central Provinces.

To many it was very refreshing to visit such a quiet, secluded, picturesque spot, and gather together with so large a company of fellow-workers in the mission field. One could not help feeling how we are "all one in Christ Jesus" as we met side by side in the nice comfortable Conference Hall erected this year for the special purpose, and as we listened to the grand truths of our common faith so ably dealt with in the papers. A spirit of serious attention, combined with fervent, prayerful seeking for blessing, characterised the assembly, and there is no doubt that much help and blessing were received. Most of the denominations were well represented, and Presbyterians, Methodists, Episcopalians, Congregationalists, and Baptists worshipped side by side, not only at the Sunday services, but also at the daily devotional meetings, and a prayer-meeting at half-past six every morning.

Altogether we have had "a happy time." New friendships have been made and old ones cemented. Fresh sympathies have been aroused, our impressions of God's truth have been deepened, faith has been strengthened, hope stimulated, love quickened, and the unity of the Spirit has been manifested in the bond of peace.

The Conference needs to be more widely made known. Living is very cheap, good quarters are available (though of course luxuries must not be expected), the natives are, as a rule, civil and attentive, although some anxiety and sleeplessness were occasioned from the prowling round of thieves in the early part of the summer.

Rev. J. Frazer Smith, M.D., of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission in Honan Province, China, presided over the meetings with geniality and tact, and the board of managers (of whom Archdeacon Warren, of the C.M.S., Osaka, Japan, was chairman) did all in its power to make things go off smoothly and satisfactorily. An excellent programme is promised (God willing) for next year, when it is hoped still more will avail themselves of this happy mode of obtaining recreation and refreshment, both physical and spiritual, during a few weeks of the hottest season of the year.

G. N. Pole,
Secretary to the Conference.
C.M.S., Osaka, Japan.

BRIMSCOMBE (GLOS.).—The annual fellowship meetings held here on the 12th inst. were attended by several hundred believers of all sections, an encouraging feature being the presence of many young persons. Mr. Trippe (Southampton) very profitably spoke on Relationship, Separation, Expectation, and Sanctification (1 John iii, 1-3). Mr. James Wright (Bristol) with much power dwelt on (1 Cor. i, 9) "Partnership with Christ," whose grace makes bankrupt sinners sharers of his eternal inheritance, aptly connecting the "ye" of the verse with 1 Cor. vi. 11. Practical points were that we share Christ's life, words, witness bearing, and the world's hatred (1 Jno. i. 7). The realised presence of the Lord gladdened all hearts, and much spiritual refreshing resulted.

REVIVAL IN LISMORE.

With the exception of Iona, there is no island on the west coast of Scotland that can boast of such an interesting history as the island of Lismore, which lies about eight miles to the north-west of Oban. In ancient times the island was the residence of the Bishops of Argyle and the Isles. To-day, however, there are only the remains of their palaces. The inhabitants, numbering about five or six hundred, and scattered over an area of fifteen square miles, are almost exclusively small crofters and common working people. Those who know the history of the people best tell us that they are rather slow in apprehending truth, but when they do so they at once respond, and that with great reliability. This phase of their character is confirmed by the fact that several special seasons of revival have been enjoyed by them, the last of these taking place about seventeen years ago, the fruit of which remains until this day.

About seven weeks since, a company of four members of a Glasgow Free Church, and two of them students, visited the island for a holiday. Being earnest Christians, they at once made arrangements for some evangelistic meetings, believing that this would in no way interfere with their enjoyment of a time of change and rest. At first there was some difficulty experienced in getting the people to turn out, but by making the meetings as attractive as possible, and also by some visitation during the day, this was soon overcome. After a few days the people came willingly, in some cases several miles. From the very commencement there appears to have been tokens of blessing. On one night, for example, about the commencement of the mission, four people out of one home gave themselves to the Saviour.

The work went on with much success for three weeks, and then the four gentlemen had to leave, but the work was not allowed to drop on that account. Mr. Munn, of the Appin Congregational Mission, and Dr. Mackay, of Port Appin, who had taken an interest in the movement all along, continued the work with marked results. After a week or so they received the help of Rev. Allan MacDougall, Congregational Church, Arran.

Thus the meetings have been steadily carried on every night since the commencement seven weeks ago without any signs of lack of interest. On Monday week the old Independent Chapel was about full, although the night was dark and wet. On this night the friends had the help of Rev. Alexander Man, Oban; four addresses were delivered, and yet the people showed no signs of being weary. It was specially gratifying to see so many young men engaging so eloquently in prayer in the Gallic tongue, as well as the hearty way in which they rendered the Gaelic hymns of the late Rev. Mr. Farquharson, of Tiree.

Truly the Lord hath done great things for the island of Lismore, and this becomes all the more manifest when the extent of the population is taken into the reckoning, as well as the scattered condition of the inhabitants. That the good work may continue to prosper, and that the young converts may be wisely led into a deeper and richer experience of the grace of God, will, doubtless, be the prayer of all the Christians throughout the land.

A PILGRIMAGE TO JERUSALEM is being arranged for February and March next. The Bishop of Worcester will preach in Jerusalem, Archdeacon Farrar will deliver a series of lectures in Rome on the outward journey, Canon Tristram, of Durham, will lecture in Palestine; and arrangements are also being made for some of the most eminent archæologists and excavators of the day to lecture in Egypt, Palestine, and Greece. Mr. Woolrych Perowne, of Hartlebury Castle, Kidderminster, is making the arrangements, and will conduct the party.

DORCHESTER SOLDIERS' HOME.—Founded in honour of the late Major-General Sir Herbert Stewart, this Home has been carried on for several years with singular devotion by Mrs. Everett, wife of the rector, and sister of the distinguished officer whose memory it perpetuates. A real Gospel work is done, and the Home is highly appreciated by the soldiers. Mr. Everett having been ordered to pass the winter abroad, in the hope of thereby recovering from an affection of the lungs, the responsibility of the work has of late weighed very heavily upon Mrs. Everett, whose desire has been not only to leave things perfectly straight, but to make provision for some weeks ahead. She will rejoice to hear from sympathisers. Address her at the Rectory, Dorchester.

THE PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS.

Dr. W. T. Moore gave an address on Monday evening in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Aldersgate-street, on his impressions of the "Parliament of Religions" lately held in Chicago. Premising that such a congress ought to be judged by its avowed purpose, he explained that the aim of the conveners was to bring together representative men and establish a comparison of religions. While nothing he had heard at Chicago had minimised in any way his faith in the religion of Jesus Christ, he yet felt that the gathering referred to was of much value. For one thing, everybody had a fair hearing, and thus men of widely different ideas learned to understand one another better. He believed that missionaries would find it very helpful if they sought to utilise and turn to account whatever they could find in common between the Christianity they taught and the religion of those people they wished to reach.

Proceeding to description, the speaker said that there were held simultaneously in two large halls in Chicago—those of Columbus and Washington in the great Art Institute—two important conferences, the one being the Parliament of Religions referred to, and the other a Congress of Denominations (Christian). In the first heathen religions of many kinds, chiefly Asiatic, were represented, while such men as Dr. Joseph Cook, Dr. Pentecost, Dr. Lawrence, and Dr. Schrenk represented Christianity. In the second hall the various Christian churches were represented by leading men sent as delegates. Now it was very significant to note that the latter congress—that of the churches—was, as a rule, very poorly attended, while the former hall was crowded. Of course the novelty of the whole thing, the presence of Bhuddists and others in gorgeous robes, may partly explain the crowds attracted. The newspapers, too, gave ten or twelve columns daily to the heathen speakers, and perhaps half a column to the Christian congress. The fact is, said Dr. Moore, the people have ceased to care for purely denominational differences.

Summing up, he confessed he had been much impressed with the decency and good order of the great Exhibition and of the city of Chicago. This he ascribed to three things. First, the discussion about Sunday opening produced a good effect, as demonstrated by the failure of the people to go to the World's Fair when the gates were opened on Sundays. Secondly, he believed that the Parliament of Religions, and the full reports given in the papers, kept religion constantly before the people, and in this way had a restraining influence. Thirdly, Mr. Moody's great evangelistic services had a wonderful effect. His observation, which was necessarily limited, led him to think that the value of these services consisted not so much in immediate conversions, as in their stimulating effects on the churches and chapels. In these three ways, he believed, Chicago has been greatly influenced and benefited during the Exhibition.

OUTGOING ZENANA MISSIONARIES.

On Friday last a large company assembled at the Kensington Town Hall for the purpose of bidding Godspeed to a party of thirty-three ladies about to embark for the mission-fields of India and China. Sir Charles Aitcheson, K.C.M.G., presided, and gave a very sympathetic address.

The report and instructions were read by Rev. G. Tonge, the secretary of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. He stated that during the first year of its operations, some twelve years ago, eleven ladies had been sent out. Their numbers now amounted to 168, but the increase was altogether inadequate.

The final address was given by Principal Moule, of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, who exhorted the ladies to take for their motto John xx. 21, and ever keep before them the words of our Lord: "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." He impressed upon them that life in the mission-field was quite as prosaic and possessed of very much the same kind of duties as life at home.

A NOVEL LICENSING proposal appears in The Review of Reviews under the title, "Shall Bound Houses be Freed?" The suggestion is, that tied houses should be abolished, because so long as the publican is bound to the brewer, he has no choice but to push the trade, regardless of the ruin brought among his customers.

SOUTH LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

The anniversary of the South London Wesleyan Mission was celebrated on Tuesday last week in Southwark Chapel. Nothing less than a day's meetings would satisfy the promoters. At the morning service a helpful address on Acts i. 8 was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer. The afternoon service was well attended, and after the hymn, "Fill me, fill me with thy Spirit," had been sung over two or three times, the chairman, Mr. Ambrose Pomeroy, gave a brief address on holiness. That was, he said, the very thing they aimed at securing in Southwark. Mrs. Lamb also gave an address in a different manner upon the same subject. Spiritual songs were beautifully rendered by Madame Annie Ryall, whose solos have been instrumental of much good in the work at Bermondsey. Rev. Darlow Sarjeant gave a long address on the fulness of the Spirit, and was followed by Dr. Montague Miller on a similar subject. Mr. Sarjeant then asked, when every head was bowed, that those who desired entire sanctification should stand up; and several, mostly young people, stood up. Prayer concluded the meeting.

The evening meeting was presided over by Rev. Walford Green, whose words were hearty and to the point. Rev. J. H. Hopkins, in a statement on the progress of the Mission, could tell of nothing but success. In the face of poverty and distress, suffering and affliction, wickedness and drunkenness, everything is on the move forward. Since the opening of the Mission, 907 persons have been added to the society, 676 adults and 231 juniors, and in senior and junior society classes they now have 1426 members. In the Sunday-schools there were 1506 children. Mr. Hopkins said: "If you want to know where our mission is, ask the children."

Rev. Samuel Chadwick followed with a stirring speech. The modern Gospel, he said, seems to consist of three things, sanitation, economics, and education. He believed in the whole three, but when they had them all, and had not conversions, had not gained the hearts of men for Christ, where were they? When you have got a man fair wages (he firmly believed in fair wages), where are you going to get him a pair of legs to carry him past the first public-house? Convert a man, however, and you bring him to soap and water; you teach him how to spend his money rightly; and, though he cannot read when he is converted, he soon wishes to know how to read the Word of God.

Finally, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes appeared, and did his utmost to enlist the sympathies of benevolent people in the work of the mission. His efforts were successful, and the doxology was at last sung with becoming fervency of spirit.

REV. DR. GUINNESS IN BELFAST.

This well-known worker addressed a large audience last week in St. George's Hall, Belfast. The meeting was one of the Monday night "Services for the People," now being held in that hall under the auspices of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. Rev. Wesley Guard occupied the chair. In the course of his address—which occupied over an hour in delivery—Dr. Guinness gave an excellent and most interesting outline of the past history of Missions, showing the part which was so well played by Ireland in propagating Christianity in the sixth and seventh centuries of our era. It is a mistake, he said, to think that nearly the whole world has been evangelised. Not a fourth of it has been yet brought under the influences of the Gospel. He described the present religious state of Continental countries as half superstition and half infidelity. There are a hundred and fifty millions of Mohammedans in the world, forty millions of these being in India alone. Their creed is a combination of great truths with the meanest of falsehoods. He profoundly moved the hearts of his hearers while he stated that there are still 875,000,000 of heathens in the world, with some 530 languages in Africa alone that have never been reduced to writing; and about 2000 languages in the same condition among the Indians in North and South America.

As a result of a former meeting he had held in Belfast, some seventy young men had volunteered for mission work, and he trusted that, as the outcome of that service, several would do the same. Dr. Guinness announced that he had been offered a few days before, in the neighbourhood of Belfast, a magnificent mansion, well furnished, and surrounded by extensive grounds for the purpose of establishing an Interdenominational Missionary Institute in it, and that he was disposed to accept the offer. This statement was very heartily received, as was also the announcement that a committee representing the various churches would hold a meeting to consider the matter.

At the close several young men waited, in response to the speaker's appeal, to offer themselves for missionary work, and altogether the address was one not soon to be forgotten.

MR. TOYE AND THE ORPHANS.

Mr. Henry Toye reviewed the work of the past year in connection with his Home for the Fatherless, Lewisham-road, Greenwich, at his recent annual meeting. His whole soul was full of thanksgiving and praise, as he told out before a large company of the many fresh manifestations of the goodness and faithfulness of God.

Mr. Toye, as most readers of The Christian are doubtless aware, carries on this labour of love among Christ's little ones in simple reliance on God, never telling his need to any creature, but waiting only on the Lord. He has now in the Home some 170 fatherless girls; some of them being mere babies and others ranging up to sixteen years of age. And though no appeal for help is ever made, excepting to Him who said, "They shall not be ashamed that wait for Me," the work has now been carried on for some twenty-four years; and, far from being disappointed by the ways of God's leadings, the venerable servant of God, now in his seventy-third year, has a shining and rejoicing face—the result of his long practical acquaintance with the "Father of Light with whom is no variableness nor the shadow of a turning."

This year, after printing and sending out of the notices appointing the annual meeting "for praise and thanksgiving," the supplies of provisions ran low, and the bins for the children's food became empty. Then the temptation was to have the meeting adjourned on the ground that praise could not be given in the face of empty bins; but Mr. Toye quickly declined that suggestion, and felt sure that God would appear. The night before the meeting a cheque arrived for £20, so that at the time of the meeting the bins were found well filled, and praise could well ascend and that more truly because of the clear manifestation of mercy. Mr. Toye has often had the question put, "Supposing the Lord should fail to appear?" and his ready answer has been, "I never allow myself to suppose any such thing, as I look and find God always faithful to his promises."

And so he goes on with the blessed work which his hands have found to do, not only rejoicing in the past, but rejoicing also in the contemplation of the fulfilment of all God's promises in all the future.

L. F.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

The cordial welcome which the Clifton Conference has always given to this Society was not wanting this year, when addresses on its behalf were delivered in the large hall. Mr. S. Thomas presided, and said from all he had heard the Society was doing a work greatly needed to-day.

Rev. J. D. Smylie, a member of the deputation from Ireland, dwelt upon the many open doors for Scripture readers which Ireland now presents. They go to Protestants and Roman Catholics alike, and it is encouraging to know that their efforts are well received. Rev. R. J. Noyes added his testimony to the value of the work in which the readers are engaged, and added that he was specially thankful to the Society for the one engaged in his parish. Mr. J. Sullivan, one of the Irish-speaking readers, whose address greatly delighted the meeting, gave a vivid description of the itinerant work of the Society, and some of the characters he had met with.

STARVING CHILDREN AT WAKEFIELD.—Rev. J. E. Pater and his helpers are doing all they can for the famished children. For four weeks they have given a free breakfast and soup dinner to all children in need within the city at a cost of about £50 per week. The distress is still very great and likely to be so for some time. Help may be sent to Rev. J. E. Pater, 4, West Parade, Wakefield.

(1822)

MR. AITKEN IN DULWICH.

The first week of this mission was seriously affected by the wet weather. Some of the early evenings saw a steady downpour, and the attendance naturally was comparatively small. No doubt it ought not so to be, but if people generally were so anxious to embrace these opportunities as to disregard physical discomfort there would be less need for them than there is. Thursday evening was beautifully clear, yet the concourse in Emmanuel Church was not a great one; the damping of enthusiasm caused by the rain apparently takes some time to evaporate. The mission preacher remarked on the curious fact, and appealed to those present to strain every nerve in the direction of inducing people to attend during the remainder of the special season of effort.

The sermon on Thursday evening was on the need of repentance as a preliminary to an experience of salvation. On the previous evenings Mr. Aitken had dealt with the Godward aspects of the matter; now he took up the part that man has to play in this transaction. This repentance, said the missioner, must be "towards God," since all sin is primarily an offence against the just and holy Jehovah. To show what real repentance is, recourse was had to the immortal parable of the Prodigal Son—most majestic, most dramatic, and most sublime of stories that ever was penned. Here we have a marvellous picture of the course of many a poor sinful soul.

The successive steps in the returning path of the prodigal—Mr. Aitken described these: First step: He came to himself. Hitherto lost in the crowd that runs in the way of evil, he awoke to his personal identity and to his individual responsibility. The past had been marked by nothing but wilful waste, resulting in woful want. The self-revealing that comes from a glance into the looking-glass of God's Word and providence, is not a flattering experience, but it is essential to real repentance. When the Spirit says, "Thou art the man," it is ours to say with stricken, repentant David, "I have sinned against the Lord." Second step: We turn our back on sin, and turn our face toward God. We are not in a position to call in to our assistance the power of God until we consent with our whole heart to an utter forsaking of sin. As illustrating this point, an extraordinary incident was told of a dying man in a garret who sent for a clergyman to pray with and for him. While the visitor continued in prayer, the death-rattle was in the man's throat; the minister opened his eyes, to find that the sick one had breathed his last sigh; but grasped in his hand were the watch and chain of the man who knelt in prayer before him! Even in the grip of the last enemy he was not prepared to let go his besetting sin.

Third step: We begin to realise the depth of our sin and ingratitude, in view of the holiness and goodness of our God. "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight."

Despite the absence of enthusiasm in the district, which seems a difficult one to move out of its respectability and self-complacency, there has been no abatement in the zeal of the missioner and his helpers. A quiet but steady work of winning souls has been going on through the after-meetings, and there have been compensations for the earnest workers. On Sabbath morning Mr. Aitken's subject, "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life," enabled him to deal faithfully with the spiritual indifference that is so prevalent among those who give a formal adhesion to Church ordinances and privileges. The evening meeting saw a goodly number impressed by the Spirit's application of the preacher's rousing message, and some encouraging cases of decision were met with.

This week a strenuous endeavour is being made by the helpers to get the people out to the meetings. Monday evening saw a considerable congregation, to whom Mr. Aitken spoke with great power and solemnity on the present-day lessons to be drawn from the circumstances attending on the conversion of Cornelius, as recorded in Acts. Modern professors of Christianity were contrasted with the centurion, even when still unsaved, in the matters of devoutness, of family religion, of liberality in giving of his substance, and of prayerfulness. The need of a personal acceptance of the Divine mercy in order to the remission of sins, was pressed home by tender appeal and striking illustration, and the riveted attention paid to the address betokened the brooding presence of the convicting Spirit. The mission closes on Sabbath next, after which Mr. Aitken goes to St. Martin's Church, Charing Cross.

NATIONAL PROTESTANT CONGRESS.

The meetings of the National Protestant Congress opened at Bath on Monday evening, in the Assembly Rooms. A goodly number of visitors were received by the committee at a pleasant conversazione. The sessions for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday are set apart for the exposure of Romish error and the defence of Gospel truth. With much appropriateness, therefore, the initial meeting was called upon to consider the unity and continuity of the Church of Christ. The chair was occupied by Colonel Savile, of Clifton, who introduced the proceedings with a speech in which he urged the supreme place of Holy Scripture in the conflict against false teaching, and the quest for Divine truth.

The addresses were spiritual in substance and tone, and were listened to with evident interest. Rev. J. G. Train, of London, spoke on the corporate character of the Church. Remarking that Christians may sometimes accomplish more by attesting to God's truth than by protesting against error, he rejoiced in the positive character of the evening's subject. He went on to consider the Church in various aspects, calling attention first to St. Paul's teaching, in the Epistle to the Colossians, of what Christ is to the Church, the Head of the body; secondly, to the Epistle to the Ephesians, where the Apostle sets forth what the Church is to Christ, the "fulness," "the Bride"; and, thirdly, to other epistles (Romans xii. and 1 Corinthians xii.), of the relations of the members of the Church to one another, involving interdependence and mutual love, which forbid individual communities from overrating themselves to the exclusion of others. Yet those who are in Christ should not underrate themselves; there are "many members," but "one body." It is sadly possible for Christians to apprehend their relation to Christ, while forgetting their relation one to another.

Rev. Herbert B. Workman, M.A., of Bristol, dealt with the manifestation of the corporate character of the Church. He maintained that there can be no unity which is not from the centre to the circumference. St. Paul's teaching was that all who have received one gift from one Lord, by one Spirit are made one. The unity of the Church can only be reached by a greater and closer consciousness of the common Head, and by loyalty and love to Him. It will not be manifested in the suppression of individuality, but rather in the suppression of angularity. As Christ is really and actively present in the Church, true unity will show itself.

The concluding theme was "The Indwelling of the Holy Spirit," which was advanced by Rev. James Lunt, M.A., of Bath. The qualification for membership of the Church of Christ is, to have been regenerated by the Holy Ghost. This thought suggested the further blessing of being "filled with the Spirit," and on this the speaker imparted very helpful teaching. Finally, he counselled a loving spirit in theological discussion.

Work in Buenos Ayres.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the paragraph in your last issue, will you kindly ask those of your readers who may desire to communicate with me respecting work for God in the Argentine to write to me, care of Mr. F. Freeman, 15, George-street, Mansion House, London, as Mr. Maynard has not now any City address?

I am returning to Buenos Ayres soon, and would be glad to give all the information I can to young men and others who desire to earn their living and witness for Christ in the Argentine, as well as to those who, having means, would be willing for his sake to enjoy the privilege of living amongst the people of Buenos Ayres, where the doors for service are wide open, and "the fields are white unto harvest."—Yours, in his happy service,

W. Chas. K. Torre.

DEPEND UPON IT, the hallowed influence of a child's sweet voice, singing in its own home the song learnt at the Band of Hope meeting, shall not go unblessed. Who knows but it may be a messenger to some poor father or to some poor mother under the spell of the intoxicating cup?—Frederick Sherlock.

Obituary.

THE HON. MRS. HALL.

This earnest and greatly beloved servant of the Lord entered into her rest on Friday week, after a short illness. Mrs. Hall was widow of the late Henry Hall, of Barton Abbey, and daughter of the late Lord Bridport, Cricket St. Thomas, near Chard. For the last forty years she has been a staunch upholder of Evangelical truth, and her name has been a household word in North Oxfordshire. She was a great admirer of Dr. Cumming's writings, and a personal friend of the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, whose ministry she greatly valued, and whose published weekly sermons she took in to the end. In 1870 Mr. Spurgeon preached at Barton Abbey in a large marquee accommodating 1500 people, and those who were present will not soon forget the occasion and the scene.

For seven years she regularly attended the ministry of the late Rev. Thomas Curme, vicar of Sandford St. Martin, Oxfordshire, and enjoyed his friendship up to the time of his death in 1884. Her special ministry was visiting the poor in the village of Middle Barton, relieving their temporal wants and reading to them the Word of God, and pointing them to the Saviour she herself loved. Her liberality was great, and her charities were given so readily and lovingly that if ever anyone could claim the character of being a cheerful giver it was this honoured Christian lady. Her natural disposition was singularly lovely and guileless, and she has been truthfully described as a "Nathanael—an Israelite indeed in whom there is no guile."

When the Lord called her, she had entered into her seventy-sixth year. Blissful recognitions and reunions have doubtless taken place in heaven since she passed in through the Gates of Pearl that Friday morning. She had murmured the words, before the end came, "No separation," and when at last the "swelling of Jordan" was reached, and she "passed over" into the King's country, a light gleamed on her face which to those who stood around her weeping seemed to be a ray of light from the glory in Emmanuel's land. Now, "Jordan is past," "she is home at last," and has seen the "King in his beauty," and heard his "Well done, good and faithful servant." Farewell till the ransomed of the Lord shall meet in Zion. May we who are left follow her bright examples and be as faithful as she was. J. B. R.

POSTCARDS.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

Four more farewells in the past week have been our privilege: four more dedicated young lives for India. They are sent by three different societies. These make about a score who have stayed with us longer or shorter periods, now in India or en route, who have proved whilst working with us that God has called them. A. McP.

AMONG RED INDIANS.

We are finishing our first year of labour among the Puyallup Indians, and, looking back, can see many difficulties overcome; the work considerably extended; both young and old Indians added to the Church upon profession of faith in Christ; and a foundation laid for further usefulness. We hope to get our manse built on the reservation before the wet season commences, so as to live among the Indian people, and do our work with less loss of time and strength. Great financial distress prevails here, and we fear there will be considerable suffering among our people this winter. J. M. Pamment.

Tacoma, Wash., U.S.A., September 26.

THE PANNAG OF EZEK. XXVII. 17.

So far as I can ascertain, commentators are in the dark as to this product. Yet the word appears in our Hindustani dictionaries as a dye-stuff, the fine dust of the capsules of a small tree common all over India. It is also well known as a vermifuge. Some years ago, when my little dog was ailing (at Jullundur, Punjab), my servant said, "Master must give punnag in a bit of butter," went into the bazaar, and got it at once. Those who collected the "honey and balm" of Ezek. xxvii. 17 would naturally collect this also from the same jungles, and find a ready market for it with the dyers of Tyre. I have seen the tree growing freely on the lower slopes of the Himalayas in the same latitude as Judæa.

Coonoor, Nilgiris, India. J. G. Clarkson.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END.—It is interesting to note that what is believed to be the largest audience ever gathered together in London, or probably in Great Britain, to listen to a scientific lecture, was to be seen last week in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road. In connection with the Gilchrist Education Trust, Professor Sir Robert Ball discoursed on "Other Worlds," illustrating his subject with admirable limelight pictures. The attendance, mostly of the working classes, numbered about five thousand.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. William Hogg has been appointed secretary at Cupar.

The motto chosen for 1894 (the Jubilee year of the Association) is "He (Paul) thanked God and took courage."

Four additional members of the Manchester Association have entered on training for foreign mission service.

An effort is being made to resuscitate Kilmadock Association, Doune, which has been in a dormant state for about two years.

Lord Charles Beresford presided on Friday evening at a display in connection with the Exeter Hall Gymnasium. There was a large attendance of spectators.

A testimonial has been presented to Dr. Hingston, at Plymouth, by a large number of representatives of the Y.M.C.A. in the West of England, in recognition of his valuable services.

Mr. W. R. Lane commenced for Abergavenny Y.M.C.A., a mission last Sunday in the Town Hall. About 300 men were addressed from Titus ii. 12. The evening meeting for both sexes was largely attended.

At the annual meeting of the Southport Y.M.C.A., the Mayor presided, and the principal speaker was Rev. T. J. Madden, of St. Luke's, Liverpool. The members and associates number 351, an increase of twenty-three on last year.

Efforts are being put forth by the National Council to promote the increased efficiency of Bible-class work amongst the Associations throughout the country, and lists of lessons for 1894, compiled at headquarters, have been circulated.

At the annual meeting of the Northampton Association, the president, Mr. Edmund Law, occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. The National Council was represented by Mr. E. J. Kennedy, who delivered a stirring address.

The winter session of the Torquay Y.M.C.A. has been very auspiciously opened by a social gathering and reception. Dr. Black, the president, took the chair, and was supported by Dr. Odell, Col. Appleton, and several other gentlemen, who gave stirring addresses.

In proportion to population, there are more Associations in Scotland than in any other country except Holland and Switzerland. 235 Scottish Associations, numbering about 25,500 members, have reported to the Central Association this year.—Aberdeen Bulletin.

The Adelaide Association lately took the Theatre Royal for a special 12 days' mission. Every effort was made to interest the young men of the place, and consequently the theatre was crowded, and great interest awakened. It is believed that very many have been saved.

On Monday the prize distribution in connection with the Manchester Y.M.C.A. was held in the Association Hall, Peter-street. The Lord Mayor distributed the rewards, and spoke highly of the work done. Sir W. H. Houldsworth, M.P., and others also took part in the proceedings.

The Ballynafeigh Y.M.C.A. (Belfast), organised some years, has been so successful that it has acquired a reading-room and parlour, a good adjunct to the work. Special evangelistic services were commenced on Sunday night, October 8, which will be continued right through the winter. There is expectation of great blessing.

At Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., Prof. Gladstone presided on the 4th inst. at the opening reception of members and friends, of whom a large company assembled. Pastor H. E. Stone, speaking particularly to the large number of young men present, gave a capital address on "Manliness," and the success of the gathering gives much encouragement to the workers to press forward.

Mr. W. S. Oakden presided over the annual meeting of the Burton-on-Trent branch on the 10th inst. Seventy-five joined during the year; sixty from various causes were crossed off the books, leaving a net gain of fifteen, and a total of 326. The Association appears in a healthy condition, and a prosperous winter's work is anticipated. Mr. Kennedy spoke highly of Mr. Hannant, the new gen. sec.

The Aberdeen Association reports that the Christian Doctrine class has concluded a very profitable summer session. The text-book was Moule's "Outlines of Christian Doctrine." We are just getting into harness for our winter's work, and are not without indications of blessing. On 13th September, a tea evangelistic meeting (the first for the season) under the auspices of the Bible classes was held.

The Young Men's Christian Magazine, organ of the Y.M.C.A. in Scotland, is one of the best-conducted magazines of its class. Besides sketches of leaders in the cause, it abounds in good things for young men and workers, and the latest Y.M.C.A. intelligence. In the October issue, the Scottish Conference, lately held at Falkirk, is admirably reported; whilst Provost Hunter contributes a very suggestive paper on village associations.

"Exeter Hall Notes" states that the third visit of Rev. A. J. Harrison has been as successful as his two former ones—the attendance being even better, and the spiritual tone of a decidedly higher character. The series of seven lectures embraced the cardinal points of Christian doctrine, viz.—The Being of God; The Trinity; Repentance; Faith; The Atonement; and Conversion. A large number of Sceptics and Agnostics were present each evening.

THE Y.W.C.A.

At the Young Women's Christian Institute, West Brighton, work is being freshly organised for the winter, and an attractive programme has been issued.

Miss A. R. Taylor recently addressed a large gathering of members and friends at the Y.W.C.A., Dublin. The account of her travels in Thibet was most interesting, and her simple faith gained the sympathy of all. A collection was taken, to help in the funds necessary to send out missionaries to the land so long closed against the Gospel.

A week of special mission services has been conducted at Brentwood Association by Mrs. Keith, of Woodford, assisted by local Christian workers. The meetings were held in the Association rooms afternoon and evening, with separate children's services, and finished on Thursday with a tea and testimony meeting. The interest steadily increased from the beginning; the rooms were filled to overflowing, and the final meeting will long be remembered.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A Y.P.S.C.E. is being formed this week in connection with Trinity Church, Glasgow.

The Christian Endeavourers at Darwen are doing earnest work in the surrounding villages.

A successful anniversary meeting of the Christian Endeavour Society has been held in Enniskillen, Ireland.

The Christian Intelligencer says that there are three Chinese churches in California, and that they have all organised Christian Endeavour Societies.

Miss Anna E. Bliss, a South African missionary, gives a list of nine Societies, of which she knows, that exist in Cape Colony. Three of these were formed as the result of a revival among the young people.

At the first annual meeting of the Carr's-lane Society, Birmingham, there was a large attendance. The reports on the work of the year were excellent, and there were frequent expressions of gratitude for God's great goodness in accepting the service of the members and answering their prayers. The Society has now eighty-seven active, fourteen associate, and eight honorary members.

Rev. E. Edgar Harris writes to The Independent:—"One Tuesday evening, last summer, a young man accepted Christ. A week later he was elected president of a strong Endeavour Society organised through his own efforts, and the following Sunday evening he led the first prayer-meeting. He leads the choir, superintends the Sunday-school, and is a source of inspiration to his pastor. The Lord wants more such young converts.

IRISH NOTES.

The Dublin Central Mission is to be inaugurated on November 3 with a devotional all-day meeting, in which Rev. J. Ernest, Clapham, is to take part.

The foundation-stone of a new mission hall to cost £600, in connection with Mr. David Officer's very successful work in the Duncairn Gardens district of Belfast, was recently laid.

The half-yearly interchange of pulpits in connection with the Cork Ministers' Union, took place on Sunday week, when the Methodist ministers preached in the Presbyterian churches, and the Presbyterian ministers in those of the Methodists.

During the past month evangelistic services have been held in various districts of the city by the agents of the Belfast Town Mission, who have during that time induced over twenty families to join churches.

The Belfast branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children continues to do an excellent work. During the past month it investigated seventy-two cases, involving the welfare of 213 children, and prosecutions and convictions took place in fourteen cases.

A meeting was held on Monday evening week in Albert-street Presbyterian Church, Belfast, of which Rev. H. Montgomery is the pastor, to say farewell to six missionaries going out to India, viz. Revs. Wm. Beatty and H. R. Scott, and Mrs. Blair, who are returning to their work; and Miss Beatty, Miss Irwin, and Miss Montgomery who have just been appointed to Zenana work.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The Evangelical Pastorate scheme is making a quiet but promising start. Rev. H. H. Gibbon, son of Canon Gibbon, of Ripon, takes up the work this term.

It is a pleasure to record that the valued principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse), has made very great progress towards the complete recovery of his health, and is now able to resume his ordinary work at Wycliffe Hall.

The three present Wesleyan ministers are all new to Oxford, having come through the usual changes which take effect in September of each year. Rev. Enoch Salt is the superintendent, and Revs. T. F. Nicholson and Isaac Newton are the assistant ministers.

The Congregational Church in George Street seems to be recovering its strength, after the long interregnum, under the pastorate of Rev. A. R. Ezard. The annual meeting of the Sunday School held last week showed a steady increase in the number and a flourishing Band of Hope.

The long vacation has not witnessed many changes in Oxford, but one or two must be noted here. The departure of Rev. H. C. Squires from St. Peter le Bailey to Richmond has been followed by the arrival of his successor the Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice, whose return to his University city is very cordially welcomed. His influence as an undergraduate and his ministerial work in London encourage solid anticipation concerning his work in Oxford.

The recent death of the Master of Balliol has called very special attention to his influence in the University and in his own college, over which he presided for so long with such remarkable ability and success. Such a gathering as that seen at his funeral is probably unique in the modern history of Oxford. Though differing greatly from what is known as Evangelical truth, Dr. Jowett's influence was very great on the side of all that "makes for righteousness."

CAMBRIDGE.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday by Dr. Bickersteth, Bishop in Japan.

We commence the Michaelmas term with an addition of 878 Freshmen, the number of entries being eight less than in 1892. We record with happiness the fact that the programme of Christian work for the winter is being commenced as vigorously as in the past. Many capable workers have left us, but we look hopefully to those of the newcomers, who are whole-hearted Christians, to step boldly into their places.

The first of a course of Sunday evening sermons in Holy Trinity Church upon Romans xii. was given on October 15 by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, when the first verse of that chapter formed the subject of his discourse. He pleaded with his hearers by the "mercies of God," the mercies of the Divine eternal plan, the historic fact of Christ's sacrifice, and his present salvation, to "present their bodies" to God (upon the presupposition of the surrendered will)—their "bodies," because constituting the vehicle of their spirits.

After Mr. Moule's sermon, Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham, delivered a vigorous, brotherly, and pointed address to University men only upon 2 Sam. iii. 17 and 18. Very faithfully did he expose the evils of moral laziness, cowardice, love of evil, and procrastination, that hindered men from bold decision for Christ. Apparently an impression was made upon many hearts.

On Monday evening Rev. H. C. G. Moule presided over a meeting of the Cambridge University Church Missionary Union in the Henry Martyn Hall. An earnest address was given by Rev. Ruttonji Nowroji, of the central provinces of India. The work that has been carried on there—both itinerant, educational, and evangelistic—has met with considerable success. It is hopeful to hear of the growing reverence for Christ that that class, so difficult to Christianise—the Mohammedans—are now manifesting. An appeal was made for men with private means to offer themselves as honorary missionaries.

A valedictory service was held at Holy Trinity Church on Tuesday week to take leave of nine Cambridge graduates, who are about to proceed to the foreign mission field, one of whom, Rev. C. E. Barton, is the son of the highly-esteemed vicar of the above-named church. After farewell words from the departing missionaries, Rev. H. C. G. Moule briefly addressed them, touching upon the elements of gravity, hopefulness, and joy that the work possessed. He was told on the previous day by one well qualified to speak, that there were nearly, if not quite, a hundred members of the University solemnly and specially pledged to watch for God's opening of the door for them to the mission field.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A series of evangelistic meetings in Dalry, a large village in Ayrshire, has come to a close. Mr. Gellatly, whose power as an evangelist is fast growing, was the speaker. The largest hall in the village was crowded every night, and many aged Christian workers say that the village was never so deeply moved by the Gospel.

Mr. W. A. Campbell, of the well-known firm of warehousemen, W. and A. Campbell, Ingram-street, Glasgow, one of the best speakers in Glasgow, is giving lectures this winter on Friday evenings in the Bible Institute, on what must prove very interesting and profitable to Christian workers, namely, "Christ's methods of evangelisation, as recorded in the Gospels."

As one of the indications which point to the more earnest efforts to solve the social problem in Scotland, it may be mentioned that Rev. Robert Finlay, the president, speaking in name of the Evangelical Union Church, urged that the Church should take a more active interest in the condition of the masses, instead of leaving the work of improvement to such agencies as trades unions and congresses.

On Monday week an interesting conference on "Non-Church-going" was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. There was a good attendance of the general public, whilst ministers were well represented. The meeting lasted two hours, and was presided over by one who takes a deep interest in Christian work, Sir J. N. Cuthbertson. The opening and closing addresses were given by Rev. James Paton and Rev. E. J. Brailsford. Pointed references were made by many speakers to the necessity for lively services, and warm direct Gospel preaching, if the people were to be drawn to the churches.

The winter's work of the Glasgow United Evangelisation Society has begun with every promise of success. On Monday night of each week there is a meeting for women in the Mizpah Hall, which is well attended, and is conducted by two lady workers. On Tuesday there is a meeting for Christians. On Thursday there is the regular Gospel meeting, and on Saturday the Gospel temperance and testimony meetings. Sabbath is well filled up. Rescue work is also rigorously prosecuted among those addicted to drink by a wing of the Mizpah Band. Bethany Hall, in the east-end of the city, where much blessing has been experienced for many years, is always filled.

The figures quoted in our last impression regarding "Darker Glasgow" have been much commented on by the newspaper press of that city, and at public meetings. They suggest a very painful state of matters, and indications are appearing that this winter will not pass over without some vigorous efforts being put forth by the Church to enlighten and lift up the thousands in the city who are "far away" from the Church. In Dundee there has been a great gathering of ministers and representative men of all the Evangelical churches, at which steps were taken for mapping out the town, and covering it thoroughly with Gospel agencies. This should be followed by Glasgow.

Personalia.

Mr. Douglas Hooper has, we regret to hear, been bereaved of his dear wife, the daughter of Rev. F. Baldey, who went out to East Africa in 1889.

Rev. J. K. Nuttall, of Great George-street, Liverpool, has, we hear, been compelled to rest awhile, by reason of an affection of the throat.

Rev. James Jackson, who is resigning the vicarage of St. Sepulchre's Church, Snow Hill, is said to be the oldest clergyman in London, being now ninety years old. He is greatly beloved in the parish in which he has so long laboured.

Dr. Robert Steel, of Sydney, has had an attack of liver complaint and jaundice, and is, we regret to see from a Sydney contemporary, "only slowly progressing towards recovery." Many will hope this useful labourer may be preserved to the Australian Church yet awhile.

Mr. Green, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has recently returned from a tour round the world. His special object was to conduct services for children in South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, and Canada; but he also visited many Y.M.C.A.'s in the line of his long journey, and he reports favourably on these upon the whole.

Rev. Marmaduke Washington, it is announced, has decided to resign the charge of Portman Chapel at the end of the year. He succeeded, it will be remembered, Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke in 1891. His reason is the strain of the work, for which he feels unable, while his wife's health proves unequal to the duties involved.

Rev. George H. Giddins, Congregational minister, Woodford, has undertaken the secretaryship of the Evangelical Continental Society, a post rendered vacant by the death of Rev. R. F. Ashton. It is hoped that this excellent undenominational agency will now make encouraging progress. Communications should be addressed to the office, 13, Blomfield-street, E.C.

Rev. J. M. Eppstein, of the London Jews' Society, who has for years directed the "Wanderers' Home" in East London, has removed to Bristol, which thus becomes the centre of the South of England Mission of the society. He is conducting a "Wanderers' Home" in the western city, and counts upon the symyathy of those who are mindful of Israel in this day of tribulation. His address is 3, Brandon-villas, Charlotte-street, Bristol.

Ex-president Harrison, U.S.A.—Since his retirement from the Presidency of the United States, Mr. Benjamin Harrison has accepted the office of Professor in the magnificently endowed Leland Stanford University, in California. He has arranged to deliver a course of lectures there on International Law, and on a general Code to be offered for acceptance to the chief nations of the world, with the view of obviating appeals to arms for the settlement of disputes.

The Bishop of Worcester has (says The Manchester Guardian) joined the newly formed National Protestant Church Union, and it is hoped he may be persuaded to take some public part in its campaign either in his own diocese or in London. The recent Church Congress has shown that whatever Bishop Perowne's failings may be, he has certainly the courage of his convictions. His vindication of his position on the question of episcopacy as relating to the bene esse and not the esse of the Church is looked upon as a most remarkable speech, delivered as it was in the face of a hostile majority.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Geo. S. K. Anderson has been conducting evangelistic work at the Madison-square Church Mission, New York City, with excellent results.

Mr. Richard Weaver had a good day on Sunday at Bromley, Kent, although himself far from well. The mission hall was densely crowded, the Word was with great power, and many appeared cut to the heart.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting Gospel services at Hawkenbury, Tunbridge Wells, during the past two weeks. The Lord has made it a time of refreshing. At the request of the friends Mr. Notman stays a week longer.

Gospel Tent Work has been carried on with great encouragement in South Weymouth, North Stoughton, Brockton, Millville, Three Rivers, Ayer, and other cities in Massachusetts. The work has been abundantly successful, and God has set his seal of approval in the salvation of souls.

Messrs. B. and F. Weaver have had a good mission in Howgill-street, Whitehaven, with much power in singing and speaking. Night after night big strapping men and women might be seen seeking Jesus, some weeping bitterly. At the closing meetings on Friday testimony was borne to great blessing.

Mr. Ned Wright has conducted a ten days' mission in Bristol, preaching in Croft Chapel and Bedminster Town Hall. Some of the meetings were crowded. God was with the Word in power. Many were convicted of sin, and numbers professed conversion. Mr. Wright has been asked to return in February for a month's mission.

Eastern Maine.—Miss F. A. Crosby and Miss H. McGregor, students in Dr. Gordon's Training School, have lately held a series of evangelistic meetings in six different places, and remarkable results have attended their labours. Their method is to visit from house to house on week days, and hold meetings in school-houses, halls, and churches, wherever there is an "open door." Large audiences have greeted them wherever they have been, and many conversions are reported.

Brighton.—The Brighton Open-Air and Christian Mission brought another year of of open-air preaching on the Brighton beach to a successful close on Sunday week, when two services were held on the Lower Esplanade, opposite the Bedford Hotel. Mr. Thwaites mentioned that during the past summer they had had some of the largest meetings he had ever seen during the thirty-three years the mission had been in existence. He was also pleased to say that God had blessed their work to the salvation of many souls.

Knock, Ireland.—Miss Smith and Miss Bax have held a fortnight's mission in the Methodist Church, Knock, one of the suburbs of Belfast. Rev. W. Guard Price, senior minister of the congregation, speaking of the mission, says, "It was the most genuine, spontaneous work I have seen in the whole of my long ministry." Night after night large congregations gathered to hear the Word of Life preached and sung, and not a single night passed without anxious seekers. A large number professed to find peace through believing.

Letters to the Editor.

"CLAIMING" BLESSINGS.

Sir,—It seems to me that what "M.A." desires is a simpler explanation of what is intended by the word "claim" as applied to spiritual blessings.

I would define it thus:—When we see in the Word of God the revelation of certain things which our souls desire, it behoves us, in childlike sense of our own ignorance and of the promised teaching of God the Holy Ghost, diligently to search the Scripture, so as to receive all the light we can from God upon the subject. We need instruction, for instance, as to his mind upon the nature and extent of the blessings, the conditions annexed to their experimental reception, and so on. Let mind and heart be soaked with what it has pleased God to reveal upon the subject. And then, if in the light of his word or Spirit we can do so, we have the right to "claim" from Him that blessing; by which expression, I understand, that we should NOT continue to say, "O that it were mine!" But that the believing soul says, "Then it IS mine!" At that point the whole attitude of the soul is changed.

It may be useful to recollect the distinction between what we may term the Statements and the Promises of the Word of God. For instance, "Ye are Christ's" is a statement; "All things are yours" is a statement. Both are, to the child of God, always and evermore true, though many believers only accept either in the most limited degree; and the most advanced need in fuller measure to "claim" these statements in some such way as I have indicated. On the other hand, "I will be with him in trouble" is a promise. "The Lord will provide" is a promise. I may not at this moment need more than the general knowledge of either, happening to be free from definite trouble, and well provided for. But should affliction arise, then is the time, not merely to say, "O that the Lord may be with me," "O that He may provide"; but to "claim" those promises for my present need, and to say, "Then now is the time when He IS with me in a special sense. Certainly, surely, absolutely, the Lord IS providing for me, and WILL provide."

The use of the word "claim" I apprehend to be only a fresh endeavour to make clear to these doubting hearts the possibilities and the simplicity of faith.
—Yours faithfully, C.

THE KINGDOM.

Dear Sir,—The subjects selected for our consideration at the late Clifton Conference were: The Gospel of the Grace of God (Acts xx. 24), the Gospel of Salvation (Eph. i. 13), the Gospel of the Kingdom (Matt. xxiv. 14). On the two first Gospels the speakers seemed to have definite ideas, but on the latter the prominent thought seemed to be that as Christ was now King, when we by faith so accept Him, we are made subjects of his kingdom and now partake of its privileges and fulfil its duties. This undoubtedly is true, but is this the meaning of the "Gospel of the Kingdom."

If you or any of your readers can shed light on the subject many who attended the late Conference will be grateful.—Yours truly, G. E. T.

Bath.

THE NEEDS OF MILDMAY.

Dear Sir,—It has pleased our Heavenly Father to call home to Himself in one year Mrs. Pennefather and Sir Arthur Blackwood. What more suitable memorial for these two beloved and honoured servants of Christ than a Permanent Endowment Fund for all the important work at "Mildmay," with which they were both so closely connected?

This work is in great danger of languishing for want of funds, and is likely to suffer even more, unless some special effort is made to secure its continuance on a permanent basis.—Yours truly,

Algernon C. P. Coote.

24, Powis-square, W., October 16.

"FATE OF AN ARMENIAN PASTOR."

Dear Sir,—In reply to your article in The Christian of October 5, I beg to suggest that if thirty Christian friends would give £1 each for six years the family of the Gemerek pastor would be provided for till he is released. I therefore enclose £1, and, all being well, am willing to do the same each year at Michaelmas.—Trusting twenty-nine others will be found to complete the amount, I am, yours sincerely, Hackney.

MADAME ANTOINETTE STERLING says:—"With regard to the training of my children I am a strong individualist. I think it is very wrong to be continually curbing and checking the child's growing individuality. If its mind is cramped at the outset, the faculties with which it is endowed may never have a chance of expression."

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 " "	4s. " "
12 " "	6s. " "
24 " "	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. W. P. Lockhart, of Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool.

The important International Conference at the Hague on the State Regulation of Vice, which is pretty fully reported in The Dawn for October, showed that the task of fighting the giant social evil in its national aspects is far from being ended. Still, there were many encouraging circumstances brought forward, and steady progress was announced in the movement for repeal on the Continent. Recent events and revelations in India came in for serious consideration, and it was stated that the British Government had definitely pledged themselves to prohibitive legislation for Indian military cantonments.

In view of the re-assembling of Parliament next week, meetings have been convened at Westminster Town Hall for Wednesday, November 1st, for prayer and conference, as to the action to be taken in the House of Commons on the report of the recent Commission of Inquiry. The sessions of conference will be at 4 and 7 p.m., and it is hoped there will be a large muster of the friends of national righteousness at these important gatherings. A meeting for prayer will be held in the vestry of Westminster Chapel, James-street, Victoria-street, S.W., at eleven o'clock, on Thursday, November 2nd. Mrs. Josephine Butler will preside.

Principal Cave says very wisely, in an article on Inspiration, in The British Weekly, "Let every man beware of making necessary truth of anything which the All-wise has not so made." It would be difficult to overstate the value of this counsel. A large number of questions which are laying the foundation for new parties, now that the old causes of division are waxing old and vanishing away, would be ruled out by Principal Cave's prohibition. Positions which rest upon inaccurate interpretation of Scripture, or on truths, prophetic or otherwise, driven beyond their due proportion and limitation, would not be insisted on, if the above important principle were observed.

Dr. Cave feels "bound to say that the stress of facts compels me to stand with Dr. Clifford and not with Mr. Urquhart in the discussion now forward." But though it should be admitted that Dr. Clifford has the better of the argument, as an argument, we are bound also to say that the Bible seems to us to be more to Mr. Urquhart than to Dr. Clifford. It seems an exceedingly weak and superficial proceeding to give away Stephen in the way Dr. Clifford has done to meet a young man's shallow difficulty, without an exhaustive inquiry into the subject, which evidently the Doctor has never made.

It is possible for Christians to think as well as (like the Corinthians) to "walk as men." "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." And so far as even spiritual men think and act according to the natural man, this is true of them. The natural man in Christians is the cause of inconsistency in teaching, as well as in conduct.

It is a cheering sign of the times that Christians are waking up to the importance of the young. The coming generation is being formed and moulded by the present. How frequently God commanded Israel not only to teach his law to their children, but to explain his dealings with them, so as to preserve the continuity of the relation between Himself and the nation through successive generations. And this could only be done by instructing them as children. "We have heard, and our fathers have told us; we will not hide them from their children" (Psa. xliv. 78). A more shallow, false, or selfish sentiment was never written than Byron's cynical query, "What has posterity done for me?"

We owe to posterity what we have received from our forefathers. Our children are their children. So the Psalmist says, "What our fathers have told us we will not hide from their children, telling to the generations to come the praises of the Lord."

It is the way of God to build up all his works from small beginnings.

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Form the mighty ocean
And the pleasant land.

Dr. Barnardo's last report shows that the income for the year, amounting to £133,000, was contributed by 74,543 donors, two-thirds of the amounts being in 49,004 sums under £1 each, and that less than 1900 were of sums of £10 and above. Half the income of the Salvation Army is collected, chiefly in pence, from the poor people who attend the services. The innumerable sweet-shops, which appear to thrive, make their returns in sums which may be reckoned in pence upon the fingers of one hand. The railways have become aware that dividends are created not by the few first-class but by the many third-class passengers. A brother intensely interested in winning souls believes that if the unused thousands of Christians were awakened to their personal responsibility a glorious harvest would be gathered this winter.

The argument deducible from these illustrations is expressed in the Scotch saying, "Mony a mickle maks a muckle," and in the wise man's proverb, "Much increase is in the tillage of the poor." We have little doubt that the two millions or so annually subscribed for the work of God at home and abroad will be found to be subscribed in the same proportion as Dr. Barnardo's last year's income.

Mr. C. M. Harger gives an account, in Frank Leslie's Monthly, of the Socialistic colony formed in Mexico on the Pacific Coast. The leaders who founded it were Mr. Edward Howland and his wife Marie, of New Jersey, and Mr. A. K. Owen. In 1886 four hundred colonists from various States in America, bringing with them all their possessions, settled at Topolobampo. There have been desertions and accessions, and now the colony is 500 strong; 40 per cent. only are men, the rest are women and children. After describing their work and manner of managing affairs, Mr. Harger adds:—

It can be imagined that there is frequent loneliness, especially among the women. The lack of religious feeling, the endless grind for material things, the years of demand for hopefulness upon the spirit of each colonist, have been productive of discouragement for many.

These words, which could be adopted by thousands of colonists, are an emphatic comment on the saying, "Man shall not live by bread alone." At home or in the colony, men need "the Word of God."

Mashonaland continues to yield interesting remains of ancient civilisation. Mr. Robert W. M. Swan announces the discovery of several fresh ruins, which he has no doubt are of Semitic origin. He is of opinion that the explorers, probably Phœnicians, were attracted to the place by the precious stones which appear to have abounded there; indeed, beautiful pebbles abound there now; and he has identified six or more of the precious stones mentioned in the Revelation. Mr. Swan has discovered in a small tumulus, several little sun images of terra-cotta.

These discoveries remind one forcibly of the statement made by Herodotus, referred to by Canon Rawlinson in his "Phœnicia," that Necho, King of Egypt, engaged some expert Phœnician sailors, and sent them on a voyage of discovery along the coast of Africa.

They were ordered to start from the Arabian Gulf, and come round the Pillars of Hercules into the North Sea, and so return to Egypt. Sailing, therefore, down the gulf, they passed into the Southern Ocean, and when autumn arrived, they laid up their ships, and sowed the land. Here they remained till harvest time, when, having reaped the corn, they continued their voyage. In this manner they occupied two years, and the third having brought them by the Pillars of Hercules to Egypt, they related what to me appears incredible, that they had the sun on their right hand; and by this means was the form of Africa first known."

This Necho was the king by whom King Josiah was defeated and slain at Carchemish, the same place where his own power was broken a few years later. The report of the Phœnician sailors, that the sun rose on their right hand, which made Herodotus doubt their story, is now known to be conclusive evidence of its veracity. Mr. Grote accepts the story, and so does Canon Rawlinson. These new discoveries seem to show that the great colonisers and traders of the ancient world did not content themselves with tarrying on the African coast only long enough to sow and reap corn to victual their boats for the remainder of their voyage, but that some of them came to dwell. Perhaps the contemporaries of King Josiah built the ruins which Englishmen are now finding.

Mr. W. E. Bear, writing in The Economic Journal, says that one great cause of the commercial depression of the last twelve or fifteen years is "gambling in farm produce." He thus describes the system :—

The forestalling of the crops by selling them before they are grown; the sale for future delivery of goods which the sellers do not possess, and do not intend to deliver; an enormous amount of reselling, without the transfer of the commodities; rampant speculation; a method of hedging, conducted after the professional betting man's plan of book making; and the establishment of clearing houses, in which a daily or weekly settlement of sums due on variation of prices is effected."

In America, where this system has been in vogue for twenty years, the farmers, almost to a man, denounce it as injurious to their interests. We have known of it in London for some sixteen years. It is another example of the truth that things morally wrong always work failure and misery as their result. Trading in "options" or "futures" is trading in nothing! Honest toil is the source of wealth—and nothing but honest toil.

Dr. C. H. Pearson, author of "National Life and Character," the pessimistic book which has attracted so much attention, tried, in vain we believe, to forecast the future of the nations. There is little wonder that he failed when he so egregiously blunders over the past. He tells us that "Hebrew prophets were for the most part pessimists. Yet these men were the conservators of the spirit of nationality, and when the stroke of doom fell upon them they were able to bear it with dignity." Dr. Pearson confounds the rebukes of the prophets, their grief and shame for the sins of their nation, with a hopeless or dark view of their nation's future. Now they are never despondent of the future. Their words are radiant with hope and strong in faith. He might fairly have charged them with being confirmed optimists whom no calamity could daunt. And what is the explanation? The Spirit of God showed them things to come.

In his new book, "The Holy Spirit in Missions" (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), Dr. A. J. Gordon emphasises a supremely important aspect of all evangelistic work. The Apostles in council at Jerusalem expressed their decision with the words, "It seemed good to the Holy Spirit, and to us" (Acts xv. 28). All down the ages, the same Spirit has guarded and guided the Church of God; and there is to-day a growing conviction among Christians that it is desirable more definitely to recognise the place and ministry of the Paraclete. In his deeply instructive volume, Dr. Gordon speaks of the programme, preparation, and administration of the Spirit, and enlarges upon these in their present application. He says:

What an incalculable difference it makes whether we preach the Gospel in the energy of the flesh, or in the might of the Spirit! Peter, who had witnessed the marvellous scenes of Pentecost, had only this single explanation of the results, when afterwards referring to them: "We have preached the Gospel unto you, with the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven." It costs much to obtain the power of the Spirit; it costs self-surrender and humiliation, and the yielding up of our most precious things to God; it costs the perseverance of long waiting and the faith of long trust. But when we are really in that power, we shall find this difference: that whereas before it was hard for us to do the easiest things, now it is easy for us to do the hardest things.

A ministry that lacks this enduement is a hard and slavish service. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty"—not to do as we please, but to do what pleases God. "Such spontaneity in service," remarks Dr. Gordon, "issuing from the sovereignty of the Divine life within us, is an unspeakable attainment for the servant of Christ. It is not to be striven for; it will certainly come if we habitually live in the Spirit."

The declaration of 140 leaders of the working classes in favour of the Local Veto Bill is an important, and ought to be an influential, document. The tone of it is fair.

The control of the liquor traffic by the classes has hitherto resulted in the impoverishment and degradation of the working people and the enrichment of the already rich property-owners and great liquor monopolists. We do not suggest that the capitalists who have drawn their wealth from the demoralisation of the people had a deliberate design of injuring the people, but certainly no more effectual means could have been used for the purpose.

The demand it makes is urgent, and will, we hope, be immediately attended to.

We, therefore, being strongly convinced that the Veto Bill would confer on the industrial classes of this country a measure of legitimate and necessary power to deal with a matter which directly and intimately concerns their own dearest interests, urge every working man, and all true and earnest friends of the working classes in the country, to give their warm and energetic support to this Bill, and to demand that the Legislature shall, without delay, pass it into law.

This is proof enough that the brain and the executive power of the working classes are not on the side of "the poor man having his beer."

Miss Willard's Address.

Dear Brother,—Your paper has always been so friendly that I am grieved to have called forth the commentary made in last week's issue on my annual address. Having been prevented by my semi-invalid condition from active participation in the work, I was unable to give my comrades a line of argumentation as strictly based on the current events of the year in temperance circles as I have been wont to do. In place of this I therefore tried to put before them the thoughts that had come to me, which I hoped might prove helpful, on correlated themes, as well as concerning total abstinence and prohibition.

It was farthest from my thought to disclaim individual duty, but I wished to emphasise that of which we do not so naturally think, because it has not been insisted on so strongly, and that is, the corporate conscience of the community acting in concert to secure conditions for all the people that shall incarnate the "Golden Rule" in custom and in law; and I am pained to have given the impression that I would set King Demos on the throne higher than Him whose Gospel alone can renovate the world, recast society, and put the people into power. It has always been my prayer, and so often my expressed thought as to have passed into a proverb among White Ribbon women, that "Christ shall reign not in form, but in fact; not in substance, but in essence; not ecclesiastically, but really."

I ought to say, in respect to your reference to military service, that the Women's Christian Temperance Union has long had as one of its departments specific and systematised work to help bring about peace and international arbitration.

Perhaps you would do me the favour to publish the enclosed paragraphs from the annual address to which you refer.—Yours in the love of God and of humanity,

Frances E. Willard.

Friday's Hill House, Haslemere, Oct. 21.

EXTRACTS.

It will be well for us in these days of clanging creeds if we can say in all simplicity and earnestness what one true heart has said so well that I place it before you as a statement of Gospel truth that in my belief would unite Christendom:—

"I follow Christ because I have heard Him speak a natural language, and because I have heard beating in his heart, the heart of all. Therefore He is not for me a person who was, and is no more, but the eternal contemporary of us all, the symbol of a spirit which rests with us always. The visible truths of the human and divine Evangel rise every morning on my horizon like new luminaries. I salute and adore them with the same admiration as if I were seeing them for the first time. Miracles, dogmas, strangenesses of forms, which worried me at first, worry me no longer. Across them all I see only one thing:—'Man in search of God, God in search of man.'"

This is indeed a heavenly vision, and the best report that any one of us could give if our characters were being passed upon to-day, as is the custom in some ministerial conferences, would be to answer in the sweet old words, "Behold I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision."

May it be light in our minds; love in our hearts; peace in our consciences.

. . . . . .

The trouble is, we judge Christ by religions instead of judging religions by Him. In former days the cry was, "The Bible, the Bible, the religion of Protestants;" but now it is, "Christ the same, yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

. . . . . .

There comes a time when the child that had lain under its mother's heart, and whose little head had been long and often pressed against her bosom, takes note of the fact that the heart beats. So it is with us. Our God-consciousness comes late. We are born of that great Being which has far more of the mother nature than man-made theology has ever set forth. In that Being we live and move and have our own, but the most intelligent and happy hour that comes to us is when we begin to hear, and feel, and know the beating of the Heart that is the home of every creature God has made.

A human being is like a ship on a long voyage from childhood to immortal life, with the Bible for his chart and the Star of Bethlehem from which to take his bearings; if he has only set sail wisely there is no storm that can drive him off his track; each one will help to fill the great white sails of his hope and of his onward going; if he is praised, that is a zephyr from the tropics that speeds him over the billows; if he is blamed, that is a vitalising breeze from the north that carries him perhaps more rapidly. He passes many other ships, and for them all he should hoist signals of goodwill and helpfulness. It is for him to say out of a heart that means those pregnant words, "Blest be the sorrow, kind the storm, that drives me nearer home." He who meets life in this spirit is a victor, no other ever can be; and it is not in the plan of God that any other should.

. . . . . .

Every Gethsemane has beside it the serene, sweet heights of the Mount of Olives, and from its summit, the resurrection into the heaven of heavens.

We are told that off the coast of Wales a large bell has been placed in the sea, to warn vessels of too near an approach to the shores near which it swings. This bell is so arranged that at every motion of the waves, however slight, it sends forth its warning sound.

Amid the din of business, the people on the shore may not hear, or, if they do, may not heed its tuneful stroke.

Even so, above the changing sea of life, touched ever by its mystic waves, the bell of conscience rings; the Spirit of God speaks to us through his word. It rings in eternity, but we hear its tones in time sounding soft but clear through "our life's deep dream." May it prove to us, when we do wrong, an alarm bell that will not let us rest; may it ring out in the ears of those devoted to the pleasures of sense, with the words, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, for at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." May its clear notes call to the thoughtless, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," and to us all, "He who sinneth against Me wrongeth his own soul."

SHAFTESBURY INSTITUTE.—A meeting to unveil a tablet in memory of Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D., who took a deep interest in the work, will be held in the Shaftesbury Institute Mission Hall, 21, Bell-street, Edgware-road, on Tuesday, October 31st, at 8 p.m.

A WORKING GIRLS' CLUB was opened by a few Christian ladies at Upper Edmonton on Friday. Miss Darker gave an address of welcome to the girls. The secretary of this new work, Miss L. M. Johnston, Hyde Side, Lower Edmonton, will be glad to hear from sympathising friends.

Fading Leaves.

BY REV. NEWMAN HALL, D.D.

All Nature is a parable. Physical are not identical with spiritual laws, but there are many analogies. God teaches by his works as well as by his Word. If "the heavens declare the glory of God," the leaves of autumn remind us of the frailty of man.

A leaf is an emblem of our life. The tiny bud of infancy unfolds into the growing beauty of childhood and youth. After the spring-sunshine, the summer drought; after the songs of birds, the roaring of tempests; after the shiny smoothness of the bright green foliage, the tamer tints of maturity and scars of many a battle with the winds. Some leaves fall before their prime, and, bruised by blasts, nipped by frosts, insect-eaten, lightning-scorched, or withered by the blazing sun, decay prematurely.

Fading leaves often suggest sad thoughts. We are reminded of losses in the past; we fear others in the future; we think of the inevitable winter fast coming on. "We all do fade as a leaf." Yet lessons of grateful, hopeful cheerfulness are taught by fading leaves. If we really "do fade" just as leaves fade, may we not rejoice? Leaves fade when their work is done. They perform important functions as lungs of the tree, vitalising the sap, and depositing new material, so that every single leaf helps to build up the mightiest oak. So the soul, breathing the air of heaven and receiving the sunshine of God, not only unfolds itself, but helps to build up the great tree of humanity and the church. Each leaf helps to make the wilderness rejoice. A weary woman with her child rests at noon under the broad shade of the spreading beech, which every single leaf helps to produce. If we fade as the leaf, having made life less burdensome to others, having cheered some fellow-traveller in the dusty highway of life, having done our little part in the growth of the Kingdom of God, we need not lament, for the leaf will have fulfilled its purpose before its fall.

How bright such a fall may be! This is the chief lesson of fading leaves. What painter can adequately depict the transformation scene that is spread before us year by year! How, when the foliage had seemed the dullest, it gradually, silently, surely bursts forth into indescribable loveliness! How varied the tints. What rich browns, and bright yellows, and blazing crimsons, with endless combinations of orange and grey and mauve and purple, intermingled with the varied shades of lingering green from emerald to olive! When the sun breaks forth, how the picture suddenly blazes into splendour, and the trees are radiant with joy and triumph! Even so the dying flame of the Christian's life bursts forth with renewed beauty at the close.

This autumnal glory of the leaf results from the action of frost and wind and rain, as well as of sunshine. Trials produce tints. Sorrows, "not joyous but grievous, afterward produce the peaceable fruits of righteousness," and the "beauties of holiness." If when our leaf is about to fall we are more humble, compassionate, holy, Christ-like, we may rejoice if thus we "fade as a leaf." Though the leaf lives again in next spring's foliage which it helps to nourish, its individuality ceases. But every separate leaf in the garden of God will live again in glory, "sown a natural body, raised a spiritual body." There, no frost will nip the tender bud, no tempests strip the branches, no single leaf will fade, but all will always glow in the radiance of the Sun of Righteousness. Transformed into the same image, from glory to glory we shall be like Him, seeing Him as He is.

Brief winter, fadeless spring!
Blissful belief!
This be our joy, that we
Fade as a leaf!
Of all our ends in life
This, then, be chief:
Ripe, hopeful, bright, that we
Fade as a leaf!

Evil Speaking.

"Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be" (Ja. iii. 10). "Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt" (Col. iv. 6).

This subject has been of late very much laid upon my heart. How easy is it unwittingly to offend in word, and how difficult oftimes it is to heal the breaches caused thereby. Truly, "death and life are in the power of the tongue!" How often do we put to death the reputation of another by an incredulous look, an unkind remark, a slight detraction, to say nothing of the more pronounced gossip and scandal which too oft disgrace the social hour. "The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity . . . set on fire by hell." Sad indeed is it to hear the careless, thoughtless remark made about some Christian worker, whose peculiarities and shortcomings are so discussed as altogether to lose sight of his many excellent qualities and his genuine worth.

And what about the insinuations and bold statements as to the motives of others we so often hear? Are we on a higher spiritual plane than Paul when he declared, "I judge not myself"? Then, too, are we always in a position to judge of motives? The intricacies of life and its many complexities call for a wisdom greater than our own, and a love so deep that it will cover the naked shivering form; that, seeing the wound, will handle it with gentlest, tenderest touch; that in the place of death, despair, despondency, will pour in words of life, of love, and hope. God teach us Christians more and more the importance of guarding well our speech! The world is tired of preaching without practice, but the silent testimony of "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," as evidenced in the life of one of his weakest, humblest followers, will be more potent for good than any amount of preaching divorced from practice.

If our hearts were filled with the Divine love, how differently should we regard the fall of that weak brother. How this Divine love, emanating from us, would be as a wall of fire between the weak one and the sin, or, having fallen, with what loving hands should we stoop down and lift that blood-bought sinner out of the mire, and, bearing the reproach for Christ's sake, uphold the faltering steps, and see him well and safely on his way. With what loving hands should we remove the earth-stains, lest unholy hands should be lifted up in scorn.

What about that poor backslider? Oh! you knew he would never stand! Then what in the name of God's great heart of love did you do to make his footing sure? Your theory to you was dearer than the honour of the Son of God: a theory so ignoble that it dared to limit the power of Him, "able to save to the uttermost," and it was proclaimed so loudly that others were deterred from going to his rescue. Let us be careful lest there be found upon us blood-guiltiness!

Then, about that worker we are tempted to regard, from our vantage ground of educational, or of even spiritual, attainment, as so far beneath us. It is true that he may not exercise the office of teacher to us; but shall we withhold the criticism, the disparaging remark, for the sake of those to whom he is so faithfully dispensing the Bread of Life according to his light, lest his influence for good be wholly or in part destroyed?

This brings me to an important point. What effect should a knowledge of the shortcomings of those with whom I am in contact have upon me? I believe that therein lies one of our greatest and grandest opportunities of service. If the Lord allows me to perceive the spiritual poverty of another, his weakness or his sin, is it not a call to me to ask and to receive for him the grace that doth so "much more abound" in place of them? The natural heart "rejoiceth in iniquity," but the renewed heart has the exceptional privilege of suffering with and for the body of which the Christ of God is Head, that it may be lacking in no good thing. Instead, then, of proclaiming upon the housetops the knowledge detrimental to the interests of another, the Lord would have me regard that knowledge as peculiarly sacred and in the secret of the closet, with door shut to, commit it to his keeping, being careful to ask the Lord to place "a fair mitre upon his head." Are we willing to leave out that "but" we are so fond of using to qualify some favourable remark we hear about another? Are we willing to stand aside; to be less than the least; content to be forgotten and neglected, and find our joy in fitting on the armour of another; in supporting the weak; in passing on those words of comfort which have been to us as the very "balm of Gilead"?

Oh! for the lips that shall dispense the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ to all around. Oh! that He might so richly dwell in us that our "speech" might be not only sometimes but "always with grace," and our presence check the corruption of idle talk and gossip so widely prevalent even in Christian circles. The love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost will not blind us to others' faults and failings, but over all we shall throw the mantle of charity, and feel that having looked upon the nakedness of another, it is at once our duty and privilege to supply the lack from that rich source of infinite fulness.

We do not wish to use the carnal weapon of fair speech, nor would we enrol ourselves members of a "Mutual Admiration Society," but there is a language learnt at Jesus' feet I covet much, and it is "the tongue of the learned, which knows how to speak a word in season to him that is weary."

Reader, if you and I feel condemned by the foregoing remarks, let us, without excuse or palliation, confess to God our sins of the tongue, and let the Blood not only cleanse, but keep it from the evil, whose roots are so deeply embedded in heart corruption. We cannot combat the evil in the strength of our own good resolutions, but on the Tree was purchased for us "all that pertains unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by them we might be partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

Our spiritual standing to-day may be gauged by our control, or otherwise, over the tongue; for "if any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man, able also to bridle the whole body." May the heartfelt prayer arise from writer and reader both, "Lord, keep Thou the door of my lips."

Gertrude Cockerell.

[1995]

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the Late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXII.

THE WILD BEAST FROM THE ABYSS—ITS UNIVERSAL DOMINION AND BLASPHEMOUS UTTERANCES.

Leopard-like in stealthiness; bear-like in ferocity; lion-like in strength; energised by the dragon himself; rising out of the abyss; and going into perdition: such was the creature whose character and history now passed in vision before the seer's astonished gaze.

"Dreadful and terrible," yea, "exceeding dreadful and strong exceedingly," "breaking in pieces," "devouring the whole earth," "treading it down," "speaking great words against the Most High." Thus did it appear to the prophet Daniel. Paul, like his brother apostle in the sea-girt isle, beholds it enthroned in the sacred precincts of the Church, usurping divine prerogative and power, yet the very embodiment of diabolical craft.

Could there be a more appalling sight? Here, in fact, was the symbolic prefiguration of the great Antichrist, who was to wield his hellish power over the scene of prophetic vision, the territory known as the Roman world, otherwise Christendom, for a period of no less than twelve hundred and sixty years! Here was the cause of "the tribulation, the great one," indeed, through which the followers of Christ were to pass. Already mentioned as the slayer of the witnessing, or Protestant, Churches, its persecuting career is now more fully unfolded, and its specific characteristics detailed for the warning of the servants of God.

In obedience to the repeated call to attention, let us dwell yet a while on this most solemn, most instructive, and still most deeply needed portion of the Revelation of Jesus Christ. And may He graciously bestow the "ear to hear" and "the mind that hath wisdom." The present paper will be devoted to a brief consideration of that which is predicted concerning the Universal Dominion and the Blasphemous Utterances of this awful power, whose "coming" was to be "after the working of Satan."

The Universal Dominion.—"All the world wondered after the beast, and they worshipped the beast." The ten horns—or kings—were to give their power and strength and kingdom unto the beast. "Power was given him over all kindreds and tongues and nations"; and "all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world." They that "dwell on the earth" were to be induced, or compelled, by the second beast with lamb-like horns, to worship the first, and they were to make an image to him and to worship the image. "All, both small and great, rich and poor, bond and free," were to be impressed with the mark or the name, or the number of the name, of the beast. "They that dwell upon the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the Book of Life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was and is not and yet is." And, finally, it is they who have "not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither have received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands," who, with those who have suffered as Christ's witnesses, are associated with Him in his millennial reign.

Such are the terms in which the world-wide sway of this mysterious power was predicted. It must, however, be remembered that, although at first sight they would seem to imply that it was over the whole of the habitable globe that the wild beast was to rule, a closer examination shows that the geographical extent of the dominion was distinctly limited. For the scene of the Apocalypse is the territory of the Roman Empire, the fourth of the great world-powers which are the subject of prophetic revelation, first to Daniel, and then to the Apostle. That, and that only, was the area upon which the events depicted in the earlier visions had been exhibited as taking place. That and that only is still in view. America and China, India and Australia, do not fall within the scope of the book. It is the world, then commonly known as such, the orbis veteribus notus, now called Christendom, which is under notice. And this is made still plainer by its being stated that the ten kings, i.e., the European Commonwealth, are they who are the vassals of the supreme authority of the beast. The expressions in fact mean exactly what was implied when it was said that "there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed" (Lu. ii. 1), i.e., the whole empire over which he ruled. (Compare also "all Judea" Matt. iii. 5. "All in Lydda," Acts ix. 35. "All the people, nations, and languages," Da. iii. 7.) It is well to bear this in mind in view of the idea which has gained favour with some, that the predictions can only be accomplished by the whole of mankind being brought under the sway of the anti-Christian power.

The Blasphemous Utterances.—Daniel had foreseen a little horn, rising up in the Roman Empire, among the ten kingdoms, and having a mouth "speaking great things"; so great that it was because of them that "the beast" (thus identified with its "little horn") was to be "slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame" at the coming of the Son of Man. And in the explanation of the vision, it was declared that these were to be "great words against the Most High." Our Lord had announced that many should come in his name, saying, "I am Christ." Paul had predicted, as we have seen, that the man of sin, whose coming was to be after the working of Satan, was to "oppose and exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he, as God (quasi Deus—as if he were God) sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." This power was also to be destroyed by the brightness of his coming who was to be "revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance." The "man of sin" is thus unmistakably identified with the little horn of the fourth beast; and as the latter is said to denote a king, or kingdom, being identified with the beast itself, the former must also be understood as describing, not an individual man, but a power.

And now upon the heads of the terrible wild beast from the abyss the seer beholds the names of blasphemy, and hears that "there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies." Then it is recorded that "he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name and his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven." Blasphemy, it must be remembered, is not only to speak in opposition to God, but to assume Divine power or attributes; as, for instance, when Jesus asserted power to forgive sins, the Scribes said, "This man blasphemeth"; when they took up stones to stone Him, saying, "We stone Thee ...for blasphemy; because that thou, being a man, makest thyself equal with God"; and again when He declared that He would sit on the right hand of power, and come in the clouds of heaven, thus claiming to fulfil as King of kings the prophecy of Daniel vii. 13, the high priest said "He hath spoken blasphemy."

Such are the statements concerning the universal dominion and the blasphemous utterances of the power that was to be "revealed in his time," and whose fearful form and features the Apostle sees pourtrayed in the monster now appearing on the scene. The question therefore is, whether there has yet arisen any power, exercising authority over Christendom, and claiming, as supreme over every other power, the allegiance, the homage, of all, yea, usurping the very prerogatives and attributes of Deity itself.

Can there be any doubt as to the answer? What are the utterances of the power, which, enthroned in the seven-hilled city, has ruled, yea, tyrannised over, the European Commonwealth, for more than twelve hundred years, and, seated in the Church, has ascribed to itself the most awful functions of the Most High God?

Hear what the great Antichrist saith. In the bull Unam Sanctam it is declared that "All the faithful of Christ are subject to the Roman Pontiff, who judges all men, but is judged by no one." "This authority is not human, but rather Divine. Therefore, we declare, assert, define, and pronounce, to be subject to the Roman Pontiff is to every human creature altogether necessary for salvation." Again, "That which was spoken of Christ, 'Thou hast subdued all things under his feet,' may well seem verified in me. I am greater than the angels, and have power to bind and loose in heaven, and to give heaven to them that fight in my wars. I have the authority of the King of all kings. I am all in all and above all, so that God Himself, and I, the vicar of God, have but one consistory, and I am able to do almost all that God can do. What therefore can you make me but God? Being above all potentates, I seem by this reason, to be above all gods. I claim to be the supreme judge and director of the consciences of men; of the peasant that tills the field, and the prince that sits on the throne; of the household that lives in the shade of privacy, and the Legislature that makes laws for kingdoms. I am the sole, last, supreme judge of what is right and wrong."

On his election to the Pontificate, the Pope is placed upon the altar in St. Peter's to sit there. The ceremony is called "the Adoration." Throughout the dark ages, his dogmas were received as oracles, his bulls and sentences were the voice of God. The Sicilian ambassadors prostrated themselves before the Pope with the thrice-repeated cry, "Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world." The fifth Lateran Council subscribed a decree which declared that as "there was but one body of the Church, so there was but one head—viz., Christ's vicar, and that it was essential to the salvation of every human being to be subject to the Roman Pontiff." Constantly he is styled "Our Lord God the Pope," and in the confessional both Pope and priests are declared to "hold the place of Jesus Christ," and to hear confessions, "not as man, but as God."

Such "great words" and "blasphemies" might be cited almost indefinitely, but they have been crowned, and if possible surpassed, by the assumption at the late Œcumenical Council of Rome of the Divine attribute of infallibility.

Is it possible for any human being to fulfil more precisely the prediction that the man of sin, the Antichrist, or vice-Christ, should "exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped. So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God"?

And as "all the world was to wonder after the beast," to submit to his authority, yea, to worship him, i.e., to accord to him reverence and homage, so we find that his proud claims and blasphemous assumptions were acquiesced in and submitted to by the "kindreds, tongues and nations," and that the ten kings gave their power and strength to this veritable Antichrist.

It was no empty boast of Gregory II.—"All the kings of the west reverence the Pope as a God on earth." The mighty emperor, Charlemagne, consented to receive his title and empire as a donation from the Pope, and the coronation oath of western kings came, ere long, to include a vow to be "faithful and submissive to the Pope." John, King of England, and Otho, Emperor of Germany, held their dominions as his vassals and resigned them at his bidding. They, with others, held his stirrup, led his palfrey, kissed his feet, and bowed before him as slaves. The Emperor Henry, to avoid a papal interdict, sought pardon barefoot and clothed in sackcloth, three wintry days and nights, at the gates of the Pontiff, ere he could secure an interview.

And as with monarchs, so with their subjects. "The people," writes Gerson, "think of the Pope as the One God that has power over all things in earth and heaven." "Under the sacerdotal monarchy of St. Peter," says Gibbon, "the nations began to resume the practice of seeking on the banks of the Tiber their kings, their laws, and the oracles of their fate." And Hallam observes of the 13th Century, the noonday of Papal power, "Rome inspired during this age all the terror of her ancient name. She was once more mistress of the world, and kings were her vassals." "All the world wondered after the beast!" "All that dwelt upon the earth worshipped him!"

"If any man have an ear to hear, let him hear."

P.O. Total Abstinence Society.

With reference to your notices of Sir Arthur Blackwood, and a letter asking for information about the works in which he was interested, I would point out that the Post Office Total Abstinence Society, of which Sir Arthur was president for fifteen years, and in which he took a deep interest, is doing good work with very small means, and could use with effect any help received from outside.

A. W. Coates, Hon. Sec.

Secretary's Offices, G.P.O.

A FAREWELL MEETING was held at Lewes on Tuesday week to commend to God Mr. Arthur Hammond, who sails to-morrow for China, to labour in connection with the China Inland Mission. Rev. Marcus Wood and others spoke, and earnest prayer was made for Mr. Hammond by his fellow-labourers in Lewes.

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER.

Very pleasing testimony continues to be received as to the wonderful change for the better being produced in the neighbourhood of this centre of Christian activities, under the pastorate of Rev. F. B. Meyer. One rather striking evidence of this was recently afforded by the fact that on the Sunday the police-court cells of the district were all vacant. Many policemen might have been seen sitting at the P.S.A. meeting alongside of those with whom they were formerly familiar in the police courts. Some of the wildest characters in Westminster are now humble disciples of Jesus Christ. A curious incident took place lately. A sergeant, who is P.S.A. visitor, went to a poor woman's house. On making his appearance he was greeted with the entreaty, "Do not take him, sergeant; you have had him so many times, and he has just got a job." The official was able to assure the good woman that he had not come on such an unwelcome errand as the arrest of her son, and was simply calling in the capacity of a P.S.A. visitor.

Last week was an unusually busy one at Christ Church. On Monday afternoon an Institute and Evening Home for Working Girls was inaugurated in Oakley-street, with the desire of interesting the young ladies of the congregation in the condition of the factory workers around them. Dr. and Mrs. Newman Hall were present, and the latter formally declared the institution open. The premises are well adapted to the object in view, as they comprise not only a dwelling-house, but two spacious halls in the rear. The entire charge of alteration has been borne by a private friend of Mr. Meyer; but the cost of maintenance will be considerable. The services of a resident deaconess have been secured; she will devote her time partly to work among the girls and partly to visitation in the neighbourhood.

On Thursday another Institute was opened (at 95, Kennington-road) for the use of the large number of men who have gathered at the P.S.A. meetings, and who often total up to 600 or 700. Many of them have become Christians and total abstainers, and this Institute is designed to serve as a place of evening resort, and as a headquarters for the P.S.A. movement connected with Christ Church. At the opening on Thursday evening several men professed decision for Christ, and there is every ground for believing that the place will be well patronised. The cost of alterations in this instance also have been defrayed.

A similar P.S.A. work for women is about to be started.

MR. AITKEN AT DULWICH.

The second and closing week of the special effort at Emanuel Church saw larger congregations; and great power went with the preaching of the word. As the opportunities faded away Mr. Aitken's message seemed to deepen and concentrate in its intensity and urgency. On the Thursday evening, from the text, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth," he preached an extremely solemn sermon on the dangers of procrastination in matters spiritual. On Sabbath evening another weighty utterance, almost overpowering in its cumulative effect, was given from the wondering question of the Roman Governor to the crucifiers of Jesus, "Why! what evil hath He done?" The discourse was really grand in its description of the way in which the influence of Christ has transformed the world since the days of his humiliation. Each night a fair number of hearers have remained for the after-meeting, to receive instruction and guidance in the way of life.

Monday was the last day of the mission, and it was well filled up. A "quiet hour" in the afternoon was the occasion of helpful words of counsel to the Christians and the young converts; and also for personal transactions with God in periods of meditation and consecration. At the final meeting in the evening there was a good gathering of earnest listeners to the farewell admonitions of the missioner. In some words of advice to the babes in Christ, Mr. Aitken besought them, out of a long experience, if they wished a real and fruitful Christian life, to be fervent and constant in prayer; to make full use of the means of grace; to study intelligently and regularly the Word of God; to be very careful in the choice of close companions; to give the love of God a primal place in relation to human loves; and to get to work for the Saviour in some form or another. After that came the sermon, on "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." The last words addressed to those still undecided were indescribably pathetic. Whatever may be the net final result of the Mission, it can certainly be said that Mr. Aitken and his helpers did everything possible to clear their skirts of the blood of souls.

Next Sabbath Mr. Aitken begins a fortnight's work at St. Martin's Church, Charing-cross; he will give addresses to business men each week day except Saturdays, at 1 p.m.

THE MILDMAY MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—The needs of Mildmay having been brought forward in your last number by Mr. Algernon Coote in his concise and vigorous appeal, so warmly endorsed by yourself in a leading paragraph, it may naturally be expected by many of your readers that, as superintendent of these institutions, I should make some statement in this connection.

To study brevity, I cannot do better than quote from Sir Arthur's own words, uttered on June 27 of this year, on the first day of the conference. He said:—

I should like to say one word with regard to the circumstances of the Lord's work in and around Mildmay. Mildmay does not advertise or beg, but its wants are very great to carry on its work, and because it does not advertise or beg it is perhaps overlooked by many who delight to help forward the Lord's work in other ways. I should like to mention, for the information of this meeting, that there is at the present moment a deficit of £3500* in the income to meet current expenses. You may not know, perhaps, that connected with the centre here there are maintained two hospitals, three medical missions, twenty missions in and about London, a training home for forty young ladies for the home and foreign field, an orphanage, a probation home, two convalescent homes, and an invalid home. Forty buildings are occupied in the various works connected with Mildmay. And then, besides that, there are the necessary expenses of the Conference Hall and its services all the year round. I only mention these facts for your consideration.

Mr. A. Coote suggests a Permanent Endowment Fund for all the important work at Mildmay with which Mrs. Pennefather and Sir Arthur Blackwood were both so closely connected. Perhaps some of your readers may be unaware that in the case of Sir Arthur, the connection was literally so close that, to his sorrowing widow's great consolation and relief, Mildmay received the remains of its beloved leader, and had the honour and privilege of watching over them in one of the wards of the Memorial Cottage Hospital until they were laid in their last resting-place at Kensal Green.

Should any of your readers require more details of this work I would draw their attention to a book entitled "Mildmay," by Miss H. J. Cooke, published by Elliot Stock (price 2s. 8d. net), to be had at Deaconess' House Book Department here, or from any bookseller.—Your faithful servant,

J. F. Morton, Colonel.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., Oct. 21.

THE CHICAGO CAMPAIGN.

I am writing this brief note to ask the readers of The Christian to pray that the last three weeks of this great Gospel campaign at the World's Fair may be the most fruitful. Two-and-twenty years ago yesterday, the great fire swept over this city, and to-day God is visiting this place in his grace. Yesterday was the most remarkable day for blessing we have yet had. The halls, theatres, churches, and tents, under the leadership of Mr. Moody, were crammed, and thousands turned away. Not only were we cheered by the many that were brought to Christ, but by the fact that over 73,000 people heard the Word through the lips of God's servants yesterday. At a meeting to-day (Monday), in one of the biggest halls in the city, thousands were turned away for want of room.

We expect the blessing will be far-reaching in its character, for many of those who attend the meetings are from all parts of the world. All the brethren here are working most earnestly, and we shall be glad for the Aarons and Hurs to hold up our hands in prayer. Charles Inglis.

Chicago, October 9.

THE REPORT of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association states that the past year "has been a unique twelve months in temperance progress." A large amount of work has been done by this society, with good result.

* To-day the deficit is close upon £4000.

WORKING LADS OF LONDON.

About a year ago I wrote a short account of our work in East London amongst the thousands of errand-boys, apprentices, and factory hands who reside there. The response was very cheering. We were in special difficulties at the time, and I wish now to thank most sincerely and heartily every one of the friends who then sent us their generous help.

Another year of work has been added to the sixteen previous ones. About 500 more boys have come and enjoyed the gymnasium, cricket, and swimming; many have attended the classes for reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing, shorthand, music and singing, carpentry and wood carving, etc.

During the recent hot season the swimming-bath has been much used by the lads, by the public, and by the Board School children, who are taught swimming there. There have been about 16,000 bathers.

From thirty to forty lads have resided at the Institute, and had a comfortable and happy home, with kindly Christian influence, instead of being in lodgings. The Bible classes have been maintained, and the earnest interest evinced by the lads is very encouraging. Prayer-meetings and evangelistic services have been held, and souls gathered into the fold of the Good Shepherd.

Two things are noteworthy. First, many of the lads who come have ceased to attend Sunday-school, church, or chapel, and but for the Working Lads' Institute would be practically as outside Christian influence as the heathen in Africa.

Second, they appreciate what is done for them, and respond to it.

Lately there has been a larger attendance than any previous summer, and the prospects for the winter session are most promising so far as the lads are concerned.

The work is mainly preventive, but perhaps when "the books are opened" it may be seen to have been as useful and as blessed, or, even better, to have saved these lads from a life of sin and trained some of them for a life of service for Jesus, than in later years when they had fallen to have saved them. Miss Macpherson well says, "Your work is really preventing the submerged tenth overwhelming us."

As not infrequently happens, the very success of an enterprise becomes a difficulty, and the present large premises require a heavy annual outlay even for rates, taxes, lighting, warming, etc. Unfortunately a number of our subscribers have died, and none have come to take their places. We have suffered from the general depression as to charitable contributions, and we have lost the grants formerly made by the City vestries, as they no longer administer the parochial funds.

The present building has been erected eight years, and a general cleaning and some repairs had become absolutely necessary for health's sake. About six months ago I had an accident which completely laid me aside, and in consequence I have not been able to raise funds as heretofore. The result of all this is that at the present time we have no funds at all, and, worse still, the bank account is overdrawn about £1000, and we are pressed for immediate repayment.

Who will come to the help of the Lord, the help of the Lord against the mighty?

The Institute and Home is at No. 137, Whitechapel-road, adjoining Whitechapel District Railway Station, and East London line. Visitors are always welcome any evening from 7 till 10 o'clock. We should be glad of any friends who could kindly give one hour a week to teaching the lads, or to assisting in the meetings and services.

Henry Hill, Founder and Hon. Sec.

38, Bow-lane, E.C.

WILLIAM CARTER'S TOMB.—A correspondent writes calling attention to the fact that the tombstone erected in Nunhead Cemetery over the grave of this valued servant of Christ is in a sadly neglected condition. He thinks someone who honoured Mr. Carter for his work's sake might be willing to undertake to have the stone repaired and repainted.

A MISSIONARY CONFERENCE, attended by about fifty missionary representatives from various agencies throughout Cape Colony and South Africa, was recently held in Durban. Considerable attention, in view of Governmental action, was given to educational matters. As regards evangelisation, hopeful reports were received from many districts, and English, Scotch, and American missionaries united in bearing testimony that God is working among the natives.

National Protestant Congress.

In our last week's issue we reported the opening of the National Protestant Congress at Bath. It gives us pleasure now to state that the entire proceedings of the Congress, extending over the three following days, were successful in a high degree. The attendance of the public was encouraging throughout, and the addresses calculated to stimulate thought and promote activity on the part of Evangelical Protestants.

On Tuesday morning the spiritual and political influence of Rome was the subject of the Conference. Colonel Saville, who presided, commended to notice the definite object of the Congress—to unite in closer bonds of Christian fellowship and effort the various sections of Christ's Church, in maintaining the faith and practice of the Gospel, and in exposing and resisting sacerdotalism and other forms of error. He combated the idea that the Church is the foundation of all truth; as, in fact, the foundation was laid by the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner-stone.

THE POWER OF ROME.

Rev. Wm. Paterson, of Edinburgh, read a paper on Romanism as a spiritual and political power in the United Kingdom. The Papacy is to-day what she was in the days of Leo X.; there has been no change. It claims the right to rule emperors and kings, and arrogates the power and authority of God Himself. The Pope still requires that Romanism shall be the religion of all men; and though he calls himself a prisoner, he lives in a palace with 11,000 rooms, and enjoys an annual revenue of about a quarter of a million pounds sterling! He has actually a rule as wide as the world, and there is no language where his word is not listened to as a command from God. Having described the setting up of the Papal hierarchy in England by Cardinal Wiseman, greatly to the indignation of the British public, the speaker referred to the lull of interest which succeeded that indignation. The setting up of the Papal imperium in imperio, with its infallible code of laws, was not manfully resisted, and so a heritage of trouble and woe has come upon the present generation.

Ritualism and Romanism are exercising a deadly influence, doing their utmost to enslave a free people, to lead them back to tyranny, and to have the foot of the despot of the Vatican placed again upon their necks. There are 2605 Romish clergy in England alone, and 4200 Ritualistic clergy plotting to bring us back to Rome. In the Church of England there is idolatry, advocacy of the confessional, and a teaching of the doctrine of purgatory. Instead of making effective resistance, we are playing with rockets, about our glorious ancestors and martyrs. Not waiting for the bishops or for Convocation, we should rise in our might, and demand that the Church of England be cleansed of Rome's lackeys. In conclusion, the speaker said that times of political excitement are not the best times for Protestant demonstration, but efforts should be made to educate the public when their minds are more at liberty to consider such questions.

FIRING SQUIBS OF PROTESTANT ELOQUENCE

The influence of Romanism in the colonies and America was dealt with by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, of London. At the outset, attention was directed to the United States, where the Romanists hold the reins of power to such a degree that they can return whom they like to the Government assemblies. They also manipulate elementary education, excluding the Bible, and when deemed desirable, setting up their own schools, in which care is taken to impart the least possible instruction beyond teaching the mischievous Roman Catholic catechism. The priests are political agents, and skilful in organising their forces. In Canada also Rome arrogates supremacy, and is ever plotting to advance French influence.

Proceeding to describe affairs in New South Wales, where he resided for eight years, the speaker told of the chicanery which obtains where Romanism predominates. There, as in the United States, the number of criminals is very large in proportion to the number of Papists in the population. In conclusion, he showed that ignorance of Scripture is a great source of danger. A Bible-armed nation is guarded against terrible evils; whereas a nation ignorant of the Bible is open to the inroads of Satan, the Pope, and his agents.

Pasteur C. Merle-d'Aubigné, of Belgium, spoke of Rome's influence in continental Europe, with special reference to France and Belgium. He maintained that while, on the one hand, Roman Catholicism has of late been gaining ground, on the other it has been losing. At present there are in France 40,000 parish priests, 30,000 members of religious communities—otherwise called the regular clergy—who have given themselves up entirely to spread Romanism and establish the power of the Pope. There are also 127,000 nuns, making in all nearly who has never before had in France such power as he to-day enjoys. In Belgium, the condition of things is worse, there being 6613 priests for a country of six million inhabitants. More than that, whereas in 1846 there were in Belgium 779 convents and 11,968 monks and nuns, the statistics for last year show that there are now 1700 convents and 30,000 members of the religious orders. Add to these agents the large number of lay men and lay women who have of late exerted themselves in the interest of Rome, both in France and Belgium, and some idea will be formed of the mighty army of workers against true liberty, political and spiritual. Though engaged in works of charity, or in advancing clubs among workingmen, these voluntary agents of the Pope are in reality enslaving the people, and all that is done proceeds with the acquiescence and support of the priests.

200,000 SERVANTS OF THE POPE,

On the other hand, if the Church of Rome is not decreasing as a temporal power, it is certainly falling off in other respects. A few years ago a census was taken in Paris, and it found that of the two millions of Roman Catholics in the city only 100,000 went to communion on Easter-day, or, in other words, performed a duty which is regarded as absolutely indispensable. That is to say, five out of a hundred—four women and one man. In point of fact, one woman out of twelve does the minimum of what is expected, and of the men not more than one in fifty. In the country districts the proportion will be greater. So, while in political matters the power of Rome is still strong, in spiritual matters the case is very different. A growing proportion of the community in all Roman Catholic countries is becoming estranged from the teaching of the Church.

In some further remarks, M. Merle-d'Aubigné exposed the fallacy of the alleged unity of the Romish Church. Each adherent has his own faith—some rely on the Virgin, some on this saint and some on that, some believe in pilgrimages, others in confession, others in prayers or masses. The Romish Church adapts itself to the different classes of the community; and in that fact is found one reason of its power. Another reason of that power is found in discipline and organisation; and yet another in the uniting of temporal and spiritual operations.

FUNDAMENTAL PROTESTANT TRUTH.

Tuesday afternoon was devoted to a statement of fundamental doctrine, the Atonement being the theme. Mr. E. B. Anstis occupied the chair, and in some opening remarks pointed out that in the Apocalyptic vision Christ was seen as the Lamb who had been slain, not as a sacrifice to be perpetually offered, as the Romanists teach.

Rev. Talbot Greaves, of Torquay, read the first paper, in which unbelieving objections to the doctrine of the Atonement were examined. These were shown to originate very often from a failure to take into account other parts of the Christian scheme, and from looking exclusively upon one isolated aspect of the doctrine. False or inadequate conceptions of sin account for many objections, and lead to a denial of the necessity of any atonement. Man is regarded as reduced to a state of weakness, but scarcely of wickedness; he is sick and needs a physician's skill, but not the King's forgiveness; he appeals to pity rather than deserves punishment. A consciousness of guilt runs through all sacrifices among heathens as well as Jews; and whenever there is a just conception of sin there will be felt a need and a longing for some expiation, which, however, must come from without ourselves, as we cannot offer it.

Another source of error is found in false or partial views of the character of God, who is regarded simply as the Friend or Father of men, who might, without any injustice, freely forgive sin. God is the righteous lawgiver and judge. There can be no forgiveness of sin which shall obscure God's justice, ignore his love, or enfeeble his rule. Whatever his wisdom may prompt Him to do, will be so done that the whole universe will confess that in punishment his love is never absent from his justice, and in forgiveness his justice is never absent from his love. Socinian and other misrepresentations were also dealt with by Mr. Greaves, who showed the all-satisfying character of the Scripture statement, that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing unto men their trespasses."

Dr. Clement Clemance, of London, advanced the proposition that with the Scripture doctrine of the Atonement. He showed that sacerdotalism is based on a theory of the Church which is utterly foreign to that necessitated by the Atonement. According to New Testament teaching the Church includes the totality of regenerated souls; it is in no sense something outside the faithful, and becoming to them a kind of ark of refuge, or a channel of salvation. On the contrary, the Church is made up of those who are saved by virtue of the Atonement—men who are first saved by Christ, and then added to the Church. Thus sacerdotalism creates an office for which the Atonement affords no place whatever. A sacrificing priest continually engaged in offering cannot be reconciled with the Scripture which says that "by one offering" Christ "hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." Through that atonement, forgiveness is free to all; but the emissaries of Rome hold that it is dispensed only through priests, and those must be her own.

SACERDOTALISM IS INCONSISTENT

Though "we have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus," sacerdotalism sets up a mediation which narrows the way which God has opened. To interpose a mortal man between the sinner and his Saviour is a profane intrusion. God forbid that Protestants should be silent when such blasphemy is taught in the name of religion, as that the sacrifice which was offered on Calvary may be repeated or renewed day by day. The "one sacrifice" by which sin was put away, must stand unique for ever, gloriously complete, the trust, and love, and joy, and rest of Christian people.

REV. H. C. G. MOULE, OF CAMBRIDGE,

who had prepared a short paper on another phase of the same subject, was unable to attend the Congress. The paper was read by Rev. A. A. Isaacs, one of the local honorary secretaries. Examining the witness of Scripture truth against modern sacerdotal claims, Mr. Moule called attention to the Epistle to the Hebrews, which shows Christ as having already offered Himself and entered into the heavenly holiest in the virtue and merit of his own blood, and as now being there, not standing before but seated on the throne of the Shekinah the true mercy-seat. It shows Him as a priest now and for ever, yet no longer for ever in the act of sacrifice, nor in the act of offering, but in the act of sacerdotal dispensation, as having sacrificed Himself, as having offered Himself; He now is seated to shower out from his high-priestly throne the blessings his altar-death has won—priestly gifts from a priestly hand. And observe (proceeded Mr. Moule), this great Epistle shows us not only the Priest, the High Priest, in the holiest, and upon its throne; it shows us all his true Israel there too. Unlike the Israel of the elder covenant they no longer await Him outside, but follow Him in.

Of old, not people only but priests and Levites were utterly forbidden entrance into the holy tent while the high priest was there on the great Atonement Day. Now He who, as Priest, entered in has, as Forerunner, rent the veil; and lo, all his people pass in after Him, to see Him there by faith and to receive direct from his own hand his own gifts, without one whisper of a hint that they must get them through a secondary conveyance. "Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an High Priest over the house of God; let us draw near"—near to Him in the holiest—"with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled"—by this great High Priest—"from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." The man once in covenant with Christ is placed, by Christ's merits, in faith, before the very throne of the living Shekinah. He could not be nearer. He has but to stretch out a reverent, and empty, and trusting hand—and take from the Great Priest all his benedictions.

Though believing that the ministry is the gift of the ascended Lord to his Church, Mr. Moule denied that the minister is the counterpart of the Aaronic priest, and that his work is to offer any other sacrifice than that which all saints offer—

THE SACRIFICE OF PRAISE AND THE SACRIFICE OF SELF.

He continued:—While he is in a temperate and constitutional sense the chief guardian of order and of ordinances, the minister has no commission, not the slightest, so to come between the individual soul and God in Christ as that it is not always Divinely free to the believing soul to come direct to God in Christ, to have eternal life by faith direct from God in Christ, to know the forgiveness of sins, and the power of the Spirit, and the hope of glory, by personal acquaintance with and reliance on the promises of the Scripture—as simply as if the Christian ministry did not exist.

In the light of the High Priesthood of Christ, the priesthood of all believers, and the presence now of the whole priestly kingdom in the Holy of Holies, let us, in the true sense of the word, "protest" in this solemn controversy. Protestant, that word so much disliked and despised, yet so glorious in its true sense, is commonly thought to be a word of negation only. Alas! if ever it is so in the case of those who bear it. It is one of the dreariest of all "corruptions of the best" when Protestants seem to think that Protestantism means only that we do not believe what Rome believes, or what the Middle Ages believed. Sorrowful is the sight and sound of a merely combative and denunciatory Protestantism. But it is otherwise when, with those great Christians at the Diet of Spires in 1529, we protest for the Word of God, and for the sacred call to the human soul to deal direct and face to face with God for its eternal life. It is otherwise when our Protestantism, always watchful not to misrepresent an adversary, also affirms all those truths which we believe he has mistaken. We affirm the Sacerdotalism of Christ. We affirm the Altar, the Sacrifice, the Confessional, the Absolvo te of the heavenly High Priest. We believe altogether, and with a sense of utmost need, in mediation and intercession. But we mean it of the One Mediator, and of Him alone; we do so positively, and with a jealousy born of the conviction that the least substitution of anything or anyone for Him is a drop of spiritual poison.

THE ERRORS OF ROME.

Tuesday evening was devoted to addresses showing that Romanism and Ritualism are antagonistic to the Word of God. General Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, described the erroneous teaching in question as merely "natural" religion, such as Cain preferred in his day. Antichrist "makes God a liar," after the manner of Satan in the temptation of our first parents in Eden. But some who hold the false doctrines of Rome do not know them to be antagonistic to the Word of God; so efforts must be made by Christian men to show them the truth.

Rev. C. H. Wainwright, of Blackpool, dealt with the antagonism as it regards priesthood. He showed that the Roman Catholic priest exercises his functions by virtue of authority received at the time of his ordination, while the Ritualistic Anglican priest simply attempts to perform that which he has not been authorised to do, and which, moreover, is in opposition to the teaching of the Church of England. Both practices are equally antagonistic to the Word of God. These priests not only claim to occupy the position of the old Jewish priesthood, but to to personate Him, to do the very things which He did. "The priest," they have said, "is, as far as priesthood is concerned, as Christ Himself, the great Eternal High Priest." That this is directly antagonistic to the Word of God is clear from the fact that of Christ we are told that "this man, because He ever liveth, hath an unchangeable priesthood," or, as the margin gives it, an "intransmissible" priesthood, which cannot be handed from one to another. The Lord Jesus Christ possesses this because He "ever liveth," and is able to continue his office as long as it may be required. We read then: "Therefore He is able to save unto the uttermost all who come unto God by Him." In that case, where is there room for any other priest? What has he to do, and what right has he in the Christian Church, endeavouring to supersede or join with the Lord Jesus Christ in the exercise of an office which is declared to be intransmissible?

STAND IN THE POSITION OF CHRIST HIMSELF,

Having shown that the Apostles, from whom High Churchmen claim descent, never assumed any priestly functions, but rather regarded themselves as ambassadors of Christ, the speaker pointed out that the entire Epistle to the Hebrews is opposed to the continuance of priestly functions among men. The proceedings on the great Day of Atonement illustrate this truth. When the high priest was in the holiest of all, the whole congregation stood without in the attitude of expectancy, waiting for him to come forth and pronounce the benediction upon them. No sacrificial work could proceed outside. The antitype and reality of this is to be found in the Lord Jesus Christ, who, after offering the sacrifice on earth, went up into heaven, into the holiest of all, in order that He might there plead the merits of the sacrifice, and intercede on behalf of his people. In the meantime, all other priests are superseded and out of office, and anything done in the way of priestly work is but a following of the example of Korah.

Rev. J. G. Gregory, Brighton, exposed and refuted the sacramental teaching of Romanism and Ritualism. He quoted authoritative statements of Romish doctrine, cited published works by High Church writers, and finally set forth and defended the teaching of Holy Scripture. Admitting himself content with Bible language, he yet, for reasons of argument, referred to the Lord's Supper by using the ecclesiastical term, "sacrament." He showed that Ritualism in its teaching regarding both is essentially Popery. He read extracts from so-called "mass" books and manuals of devotion, the spirit of substance being Romish, penance and prayers for the dead being inculcated, as well as baptismal regeneration and eucharistic sacrifice. In maintaining Scripture truth, the speaker excluded at once five of Rome's seven sacraments, and spoke with much vigour about the two—Baptism and the Lord's Supper. These are simple and unmysterious ordinances, precious in their simplicity, holy because ordained by Christ Himself. The Lord's own account of the Supper, as given to the Apostle Paul (1 Cor. xi.), is accurate and sufficient, and a perusal of it would never lead a soul to Popery or Ritualism, nor would it give sanction to a priestly act. Rather, in obedience to the Lord's word concerning the Communion, Christians will find their hearts uplifted to Him in love, and drawn out in the same mind one toward another.

BAPTISM AND THE LORD'S SUPPER

THE CONFESSIONAL

was the subject of a paper by Rev. W. Millar Nicolson, D.Sc., of Bristol, who began by emphasizing the importance of the truth which, in this regard, Rome has corrupted. Confession to Christ is enjoined in Holy Scripture, but the priest arrogates to himself the authority of the one and only Mediator between the soul and God. In the confessional the penitent is obliged to rehearse every sin which he or she can recall, and only those which are thus confessed are pardoned. Many people suppose that auricular confession is nothing beyond an anxious soul unburdening himself of his doubts and fears to a spiritual adviser. But it is much more, for the priest is bound sooner or later to subject the sinner to an examination which shall not only suggest every kind of impure thought and temptation, but shall bring up every abominable deed that has ever been committed in or out of hell. Thus the confessional box is a moral charnel-house, and as children are questioned about their parents, wives about their husbands, and servants about their masters, it is the deadliest foe of the sanctity of the home and the well-being of society. The recesses of the conventual system will not bear the light of day; and so it is easy to understand why official inspection of such institutions is so strenuously resisted.

(Report to be concluded next week.)

THE COAL STRIKE.—We have, owing to a disastrous coal strike, 600 families literally starving. The gaunt wolf hunger is at our very doors, and my committee are straining every effort to act the Christian's duty to feed the hungry. We feed 1400 children daily, and allow flour to our destitute population according to the funds we receive. Will any kind friend send me a donation for the victims of this fearful thirteen-weeks' war? Parcels of boots and clothing will also be acceptable. The sights seen are painful beyond description.—M. Fulwood, cor. sec., Normanton General Relief Committee, Providence-place, Normanton.

"THE CHRISTIAN" ALMANACK, 1894.

In this issue, we present our readers with our Almanack for 1894. We cannot but feel that it has well repaid us for the time and thought expended on it, and that in many a home it will speak for God throughout the year, suggesting words of Holy Scripture that will be an inspiration to weary hearts. It will be noticed that the text selected for the Lord's Day gives the keynote for the remainder of the week, so that the whole is a beautiful mosaic, the colours blending in harmony, and repeating from various parts of Scripture the same deep sweet thought from God.

The centre is occupied with a series of pictures from the life of Jeremiah, whose biography will shortly be commenced in our pages by Rev. F. B. Meyer. There is, perhaps, an especial appropriateness in the reverent and earnest study of this biography in these days, because his lot was thrown in times so troublous, and when the different classes of society were so hostile to each other—the rich oppressing the poor, and the poor hating the rich, that we may learn salutary and helpful lessons to guide our own conduct in these stormy and difficult times.

(1) In the first of these sketches, the young lad, child of a priest, is startled by the call of Jehovah breaking on him as light through an open casement, whilst he pores over the scroll of Holy Writ. (2) The call leads to the expostulation of the open street, where the most timorous of men stands forth undaunted for God. (3) Then God by his providence co-operates with the voice of his servant. Drought and famine drive home his words. If men will not hear the still small voice of the Spirit, they must hear the rugged voice of the earthquake and the storm.

(4) Those that teach must also learn. The apostle must be a disciple. Those that stand for man must also have times of waiting at the feet of Christ. And the Divine voice not infrequently speaks in some simple episode like that of the potter's house. (5) The corresponding picture to this on the other side of the central piece reminds us of the heroic faith, fed by fellowship with God, and resting upon the promise of God, which was able to count on land beyond the city walls, and in possession of the foe, as if no foe was there. (6) But mark the contrast between these companion pictures and that of the king flinging into the brazier the roll of the prophet's words because they had denounced his sins.

(7) In contrast to the sins of king and court, of priest and people, violating the provisions of the Divine covenant, and disobeying God's commands, stands out the submission of the Rechabites to the will of their father and founder, in refusing to take wine. They did it for one earthly parent, but Israel would not do it for a Heavenly. Alas! that we are so eager to obey the will of man, and so slow to acquiesce in God's.

(8) It is fitting that a picture of the deep dungeon should form part of the series, because such faithful witnessing for God against sin inevitably leads to suffering and death. The confessors are martyrs. But God delivered from so great a death, and doth deliver, and will deliver.

(9) The hapless flight of the imprisoned multitudes from the city ended, as Jeremiah said it would, in disaster. Every struggle made by Jerusalem only rivetted the yoke of the conqueror more tightly, and led finally to its utter overthrow. Thus step by step the fate of Jerusalem in the days of Jeremiah and our Lord was sealed by her sin against her light. Often might she have been gathered as a nestling under the wing of the mother, but she would not.

Perhaps the most salutary lesson in the whole line of teaching suggested by this prophet's life is, that strength is perfected in weakness, and he who accounts himself to be a child, becomes in the power of the spirit of God as a brazen wall of a fenced city. To those who have no might, God increaseth strength, and his power is made perfect in weakness.

THE FIFTH OF NOVEMBER.—A correspondent writes to us: "The fifth of November this year falls on a Sunday. Would it not be a grand thing if Evangelical clergymen and ministers throughout England could, on that day, unite to preach on the errors of Popery, making their intention known by public advertisement?"

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 29.—PSALM LXXX.

The ten tribes were in captivity, and the hearts of their brethren, still left under the reign of David's line, seem to have turned with great longing towards them, and this psalm is full of intercession on their behalf. Three times, at the turning-points of the Psalm, the refrain is repeated, that God would turn them again, and cause them to be saved (3, 7, 19). Note the ascending climax, God; God of hosts; Jehovah, God of hosts.

The Shepherd (1-3).—Yes! shepherd still! Though the flock be scattered far upon the mountains. And He is resolved to march before the hosts in their return from captivity, as He did through the wilderness. Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh were always the first tribes in the march.

The draught of tears (4-7).—The word measure indicates a recognised standard for liquids, like our pint. This filled with tears was drained to the dregs, amid the derision of Israel's foes. The miseries of exile, the longings for the land of their birth, the sense of the displeasure of God, the malicious mirth of their foes, were bitter to bear.

The broken vine (8-19).—This imagery is taken from Jacob's dying words, who compared Joseph to a fruitful bough. Israel was this fruitful vine. But what a contrast to the true vine! Benjamin was the son of the right hand. But what a contrast to the living Saviour! He is the branch which God has made strong for Himself (15, R.V.). Let us join this prayer for quickening, not otherwise can we properly pray. Let us ask for the shining of his face, so only can we be saved.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 30.—PSALM LXXXI.

A colloquy between God and his people.

The Church (1-5).—It is supposed that this psalm was sung at the great Jewish festivals; and especially at the Passover, which is specially referred to in vv. 5, 6, 7, 10. Music and singing were always in vogue at the Passover (2 Chr. xxx. 21). We should equally remember to celebrate the deliverance of the cross, when our Paschal Lamb was sacrificed. Psalm and psalter, timbrel and harp, are significant of our different faculties for praise. Let us never forget that supreme love which rescues us from the burden and basket of our tyrant foe.

The Lord (6-16).—When we call in trouble, He delivers us, according to his promise (Psa. c. 15). He comes out of his secret place. How eager is God that we should lead a full life. He waits to fill our mouths with good things. But, alas! we do not open them, or do not open them wide, or we turn from Him altogether. What a sorrow this is to God! There is yearning pathos in this outcry, which recalls the tears shed by the Saviour at Jerusalem, "Oh that thou hadst known!" When we are right with God He constitutes Himself our champion, subduing our enemies, or making them yield obedience. How short-lived is the triumph of our foes. But those who do his will, abide for ever. The upright have dominion in the morning. Christ's flesh is meat indeed, and his love is like honey from the rock.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 31.—PSALM LXXXII.

Those spoken of in this psalm as gods are doubtless the judges and magistrates of Israel. They were intended to be the mouthpiece and representatives of God, but instead of this they thought only of their own interests, and sought their personal aggrandisement. But the Psalmist saw what was veiled from ordinary sight. God standing in the midst of his people, judging them Himself, and judging the judges in every case they tried.

In contrast to the grave failures of justice in these unrighteous judges, let us realise the safety of our interests in the hands of Jesus. The Father hath committed all judgment to Him, because He is the Son of Man, and against His ruling there can be no appeal. The poor and fatherless, the afflicted and needy, the poor and needy, find in Him a ready and sympathetic aid. He is our High Priest, who has suffered in all points as we do, and can succour us.

When the leaders of men are worthless the whole fabric of society is threatened with dissolution. But the children of God look for a kingdom that cannot be shaken. There they shall shine forth as the sun, their characters vindicated, and their wrongs avenged. Though men have been exalted to be God's vicegerents on earth, yet they shall die as common men, and suffer the ordinary fate of men, whilst God will fulfil their neglected office, and inherit the praise and love of the world.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 1.—PSALM LXXXIII.

This praise-song was composed in anticipation of victory, probably by a Levite, Jahaziel, on whom the Spirit of the Lord descended (2 Chron. xx. 14). He was a son of Asaph, and therefore the psalm bears the family name. It was sung by the Levites, with a loud voice on high, as Jehoshaphat's army marched to meet the great confederacy of heathen nations that threatened the very existence of Israel.

There was urgent reason to appeal to God (1-8). Thy hidden ones (3). When our life is hidden with Christ in God, we can appeal with every certainty to God.

The fate which the psalmist desired to have meted out (9-18) is terrible. It is the dispensation of Moses, not of Jesus. Yet it was not only to gratify a personal vindictiveness that the hosts of Israel prayed thus, since there is the outlook to the world of men, that they should come to know God as Jehovah. We are the better prepared to see men suffer, and to face the great problem of human pain, when out of it all we can catch distant glimpses of the moral and spiritual results which He is bringing about.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2.—PSALM LXXXIV.

How fair to those who week by week gather from the storm and stress of life to find a parenthesis of rest and an opportunity for praise are the holy precincts; but fairer still, if that be possible, when seen from a distance by the exile, the sufferer, the pilgrim. What the house is to the sparrow, and the nest to the swallow, that is the sanctuary to the holy soul. The altars of God are its home.

And yet there are sources of blessedness left to the solitary believer. He may find his strength in God, and in his secret heart there may be the highways of Zion. What though he may not join the festal crowds in their passage through the vales, heavy with the scent of balsam trees, or tread the fresh green pastures of the early rains, and climb from spur to spur of the hills, yet he may be sure that the Lord God of Hosts is listening to his prayer, and that the God of Jacob is giving ear.

God is our Shield. He looks lovingly into the upturned face of his Anointed, and accepts us in Him. He invites us not to stand on the threshold only, but to eat and drink at his table. He is sun in dark days, and covert in the burning heat. He will give grace as the bud of glory, and glory as the flower of grace. Anything that He withholds from the saints is not the best for them. But, who can ever exhaust the blessedness of the man that trusts Him?

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3.—PSALM LXXXV.

The counterpart of lxxx. There petitions ascended, here thanksgivings are returned. Perhaps this psalm was prepared in anticipation of an event which was assured to faith. These words well befit the glad days of revival, but they might also have been sung on the first Easter day, when at the cross mercy and truth had met, and there had been a bridal of the earth and sky.

Reversed captivity, forgiven sin, wrath ended, anger foregone, indignation ceased. Here are themes for holy exultation! But the soul is insatiate for such heavenly grace. It still pleads to be quickened again, because each throb of returning life is the signal for ever-augmenting joy. When we have asked for God's mercy and salvation, let us be still, and listen for God's reply. He will speak peace.

Fear Him with the fear born of love, and know that his salvation is nigh—nigher than you dream. He is even now on the threshold with the needed help. But his mercy is always consistent with his truth, and his peace with righteousness. What a meeting of the Divine attributes. The cross is their trysting-place. It is like the gathering of brothers and sisters at a common board. There can be no lack of food with such a Lord as this, and we can wish nothing better than that his righteousness should make his footsteps a way for us to follow, and enable us to walk in them.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4—PSALM LXXXVI.

In this prayer we can all join. 1. God stoops to listen to the feeblest whisper. To be poor and needy is a supreme plea with Him. 2-4. Thrice in three verses he speaks of his soul, and describes himself as godly. If we have come out of the world of men and take refuge in God, we have another claim on Him. We may ask, not only for help, but for joy. Sad heart, lift your soul up to God that He may make it full of his joy. 5. What an exquisite title, Ready to forgive, as if God were always looking out for an opportunity of washing the feet, soiled with travel-stains; Plenteous in mercy, as though God's mercy were like the stars in heaven, or the flowers in spring. 6-8. Well may the children of God go to Him in all days of their tribulation, as of their wealth. To call is to be sure of an answer. The noblest and best of men will bear no comparison to God's readiness to help. 9, 10. God is great as well as good. However much you trust Him, be sure to revere Him also. 11. The greatest of the apostles must ever be a disciple. The united heart takes as its motto, This one thing I do. 12, 13. If thou art the tenth Samaritan leper, and art healed, come back and give thanks. 14-17. The malign hatred of our foes is ever threatening us. What a relief to turn from them to God! Again the Psalmist dwells on his forgiving love and plenteous mercy; asks for a token for good; and counts on certain comfort and help.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

NOVEMBER 5.

The Resurrection—1 Cor. xv., 12-26.

Golden Text, Ver. 57.

By some members of the Church at Corinth, the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was denied (12). Certain forms of philosophy recognised no future life, so had no place for the resurrection. Even the disciples of Plato, while believing in the immortality of the soul, regarded the body as a hindrance to the soul's fullest life, and knew nothing of a resurrection. Others did not believe it because it seemed improbable; or perhaps they gave it a merely spiritual significance, and considered it past already. (Compare 2 Tim. ii., 17, 18).

To correct this mistake Paul wrote this wonderful chapter, which has continued through all the centuries to sound its message of hope around the open grave of those who have died in Christ. The opening verses declare two things, (1) that the resurrection is not only a part of the Gospel, but that it is essential to it (3, 4). And (2) that the witnesses to Christ's resurrection were as numerous, and of such undoubted character, that the fact is placed beyond all dispute (5-8). No fact of history rests upon more conclusive and abundant evidence.

This lesson divides itself into two parts:—

I. What consequences follow from the denial of the resurrection (12-19).—The chief of these, and that which explains all the rest, is the first (13-16). Either the dead rise, or Christ is not risen. A statement that involves the denial of Christ's resurrection destroys all the Gospel. Its foundation is removed, and they who believe in it are deluded (14). Better have no hope at all than one which rests upon vanity. The apostles, on whose testimony alone we know the Gospel, are convicted of untruthfulness (15). They have given their lives, at the risk of terrible martyrdom, to the proclamation of a lie. The anticipation of reunion with the dead, which has comforted believers in every bereavement (18-19), is a delusion. And even our pardon is no pardon at all (17), since the resurrection of Christ on which it rests (Rom. iv. 25) is a mere invention. If Christ be not raised, it is easy to see that all these consequences follow.

But how are the resurrection of the dead and Christ's resurrection so closely united? Do the two stand or fall together? If so, why? Well, note how the objectors put it: "There is no resurrection of the dead." The statement is universal, or it is meaningless. If it makes an exception in the case of Christ, then it is not a true statement; for if one has been raised, why not others? But if it be universal, including even Christ Himself, then it is a distinct denial of his resurrection. To say "There is no resurrection" is the same thing as saying "Christ is not raised." He was dead, and was buried. To raise Him from the dead was no more difficult than to raise all others who have died. Men must, therefore, believe that the dead rise, or deny Christ's resurrection, and so give up the whole Gospel.

II. The blessings resulting from Christ's resurrection (20-26). That fact is now assumed, and we see, first, how it secures the resurrection of his saints (20). It is his resurrection that changes the death of believers into a sleep. The grave is the bed in which the body sleeps till the resurrection morning. "First fruits" (see Lev. xxiii. 10-11) are the pledge and the pattern of the whole harvest. Christ's resurrection not only makes our resurrection sure, but is the pattern of what ours will be (Phil. iii. 21). Read verses 42-49 in the light of this prospect. Next, we see how the one is secured by the other (21-22). Adam and Christ are the two heads of the human race. In the sin and consequent death of the first man all his posterity are involved; in the death of the Second man for sin, and his glorious resurrection, all his posterity had a part. Observe the order of events (23-26). The great purpose of God through the mediation of Christ is an entire undoing of the work of the fall. By that act of sin man cast off the authority of God and the defeat of death. This is restored, first, by Christ's resurrection. That fact contained in itself the prophecy of death's entire destruction (Heb. ii. 14). The next stage is the resurrection of the saints at Christ's coming (23). This will be a further triumph over death. What a change from the corruption of the grave to a share in the glory and likeness of Christ! See 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. How long a period elapses between this and "the end" (24) cannot be known; but it is at least "a thousand years" (Rev. xx. 5, 6).

Lessons:—(1) Christ is risen, therefore all Gospel blessings are sure. The atonement is offered, pardon may be ours. Have you received what his death and resurrection have purchased? (2) You will rise, but the glorious resurrection is for those "who are Christ's." Are you? There are two resurrections (Dan. xii. 2; Jno. v. 28, 29); which is yours?

For the Young.

THE PEARL OF FORGIVENESS.

"The twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl."—Rev. xxi. 21.

Have you ever been able carefully to examine a pearl? Pearls are not plentiful; even grown-up people do not handle them every day. Tiny things they are, with a beautiful lustre, and they are rare and costly.

Those who possess them wear them only on grand occasions. Sometimes they are set in a ring, or a brooch, or a bracelet; and a necklace of pearls is of great value.

I would like to tell you of another use to which pearls have been put.

The apostle John, the friend of Jesus, when living in the island of Patmos, saw, as in a vision, the holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven. What a grand sight it must have been! He took plenty of time to look at it, and one of the points that struck his attention was its beautiful gates. There were no fewer than twelve of them, three on each of its four sides, and he particularly noticed that every several gate was of one pearl. No other living man ever saw such a sight before, pearls so great and large that each one could serve as a gate in a city wall. All the pearls in our great world, made into one, would not be sufficient to serve such a purpose.

There surely must be some good reason why each one of these gates was made of a pearl. It was not that there was a scarcity of precious stones, for it is said that the very foundations of the walls of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones—read the long list of them for yourselves—and the wall itself was made of jasper. But not one of these precious stones was made into a gate, except pearls. Will you think about this? Perhaps before the lesson is over, we may find one reason why it was so.

There are some who speak as if the New Jerusalem was intended largely as a home for angels, as well as men. It is well to note exactly what John saw. He does not say that there were angels walking its golden streets. Certain angels he did see, twelve in all, and to each a particular duty was given. Beside every gate of pearl an angel stood.

Angels were the doorkeepers of the New Jerusalem. This special duty was to keep the gates always open. No man or woman, no boy or girl, no tiny babe, could ever come and find a gate shut. Never a gate of all the twelve was ever closed.

I see by your eyes that you have a question to ask. What is it? "Would, then, everyone go in?"

If you will turn to the 15th verse you will find the answer. Certain could not go in—"Whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." Do not think that a lie is a little thing. While it is yet in the heart, before it gets to the tongue and the lip, it may seem a very trifle.

But once it is coined in the mint of the mouth it immediately goes into circulation to work mischief and misery and sin so long as it holds together. Oh, the pity of it! that there are some who live to love and to make lies.

But could they not go in if they would? Ah! all the things they love are outside; there is not a lie, nor a place for a lie, in all the New Jerusalem! Why then should they go in? The feet of a lover of a lie would refuse to carry him past the angel doorkeeper and the gate of pearl.

There is one question I would like to ask here. Have you ever read how pearls are made? How wonderful is their origin, how humble and lowly is their place of birth! Every boy and girl knows what an oyster is—a little sea animal so soft and tender that it needs a strong house of shell to live in.

Take a fresh oyster-shell in your hand, and feel the inside of it. How smooth and pleasant to the touch it is. All the wall of the oyster house must be like that, or the tenant would not feel at home in it.

But it sometimes happens that there is a "fault," a tiny little roughness on this otherwise smooth wall. It hurts the tender skin of the oyster, its life is made miserable by it, and all its energies are directed for the time somehow to remove the cause of it. How is this done? It places a smooth round patch of pearl on the rough jagged place. It builds it up, little by little. It grows and grows until at last, where once there was a "fault" in the shell, there is a round smooth little something that man calls a pearl.

But how does this apply to the pearls that form the gates of the New Jerusalem?

Long ago the soul of man suffered grievous injury through disobedience, and as a result thorn and brier, sin and sorrow, grew up around him to fill his life with toil and hardship. The injury grew from bad to worse, until the jagged edge of a guilty conscience scraped and harrowed every pleasant place in his life and made it miserable.

Each member of the human race has grieved his Heavenly Father, and peace of mind can never be his until he is forgiven and reconciled.

As he enters through the gates of the New Jerusalem with a humble mind, and a contrite heart, the very gate through which he passes assures him of a Father's welcome. He can see with his own eyes that his sins are forgotten, that they are all covered over with the great pearl of Divine forgiveness.

I give you the end of a golden thread,
Just wind it into a ball;
It will lead you up to a gate of pearl,
Built in Jerusalem's wall.

William Main.

ON HAPPINESS.

O happy ears that hear the voice
Of Jesus Christ the Lord,
That early listen and rejoice
In his life-giving word.

O happy feet that early tread
The straight and narrow way;
By God's own Spirit safely led,
Their steps shall never stray.

O happy those who fall asleep
On Jesu's loving breast,
No more to sin, or toil, or weep,
But with their Saviour rest.

O happy resurrection day,
When Jesus Christ shall come
And take his risen saints away
To dwell with Him at home.

Lord Jesus, cleanse our hearts from sin,
And fill them with thy grace,
That we at last may enter in,
And see Thee face to face,

C. S.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, St. Chrysostom's, Liverpool, to Oct. 29; Chester, Nov. 1; Weaverham, Nov. 2; Liverpool, Nov. 3-5; Pershore, Nov. 6-7; Rev. M. J. Hall, Taunton, Oct. 28 to Nov. 6; St. Philip's, Manchester, Nov. 18-27; Mr. J. Spiers, at Aberystwith; Rev. W. S. Standen, Gloucester, to Oct. 28; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tottington, Bury, to Nov. 5; Tunstead Schools, Nov. 12-19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Gresham Chapel, Brixton, Nov. 12-17; Drybrook, Nov. 19-24; Mr T. Lewes Sayer, Sydenham, Nov. 1; Chester, 9; Birmingham, 10; Walsall, 11; Stafford, 12; Grays, 14. "Seaside" meetings.—Gordon Hall, Liverpool, Tuesday, Oct. 31 (afternoon and evening). Seaside meetings.—Manchester (Central Refuge, Strangeways), Monday, Oct. 30 (afternoon and evening).

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Oct. 29, S., Jeremiah xxxviii. 14-28; 30, Psa. cxxxii. 1-18; 31, cxxxv. 1-21; Nov. 1, 1 Kings iii. 1-15; 2, iv. 20-34; 3, v. 1-18; 4, vi. 1-14.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon in Bristol.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, has been conducting a series of special evangelistic meetings in Cotham-grove Baptist Chapel, Bristol. The meetings commenced on Monday, October 9, and concluded on the Monday following. There were Bible-readings each afternoon, with an evangelistic service each evening of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. A children's service on the afternoon of Saturday. Mr. Spurgeon also conducted services both morning and evening of Sunday, with a special service for young people in the afternoon of that day, concluding the series with an extra Bible-reading meeting, by expressed desire, in the afternoon, and a service in the evening of Monday, the 16th.

Having been preceded by much prayer for a special blessing, the meetings were very enthusiastic from the first. There was manifestly great spiritual power, with devout fervour in the preacher, as also a growing interest in the audience each day, as evidenced by the large congregations which gathered. These so increased in numbers as the days went on, that on Sunday the crowding became so great as to necessitate the holding of a large overflow meeting in the school-room. Many were unable to obtain admission at either the chapel or school, both being literally packed. Truly it was a season enjoyed by all, as a time of great spiritual blessing. J. P.

Bristol, October 17.

LADIES AND SEASIDE SERVICES.

A few recent incidents of the Lord's work at Walton-on-the-Naze will be interesting. We three ladies in the Home of Rest had a fifteen minutes' prayer-meeting every morning, and then sallied out with small harmonium and banners inscribed "Faith" and "Victory through Jesus," down to the beach, where our tent, capable of holding nearly 200 persons, had been erected, where one of us started singing, and the others gathered in the children. Generally two short addresses were given, the last speaker drawing in the net, and the invitation being given to stay for the after-meeting usually five to ten children lifted their hands, and on dealing with them we found that some had definitely yielded themselves to Christ while we were speaking, and others needed help. One girl, fifteen years of age, was seen crying in the after-meeting, and on inquiry she said that she was afraid that the Mission would be over and she would not be saved; she was led to Jesus at once.

One boy, ten years of age, told a lady friend that "A lady is coming here for an hour, and she is going to talk of nothing but Jesus," and he pressed for "long meetings." Once when he overheard a worker suggesting half an hour for the children and the rest of the time for adults, he said he was converted at six years old. There were conversions of children and young people from seven to seventeen years old.

In the adult meetings, the truth of the privilege of the filling of the Spirit was set forth, and thirty souls accepted, and many said, "I didn't know it was such a simple thing to be filled with the Spirit, just by faith. As for salvation, I have waited to feel his presence, before I confessed that I had trusted. Now I see that is 'believe and receive and confess Him.'"

Another instance showing that "the Holy Ghost is given to them that obey Him" came to us. A girl sixteen years of age said she was not right with God for two reasons—that she would not pray and testify to her salvation, though she was saved when about twelve years of age; and that she had not obeyed the voice of God to speak to the Italian ice-cream man at the corner of a certain street. She was prayed with and entreated to give up her will to God, and that week we had a short meeting for the children on the sands before going to the chapel where we were to hold the meeting, and this young girl came, bringing three elder sisters with her, and prayed in the power of the Spirit; and in the chapel, later on in the evening, she testified to having given up her will, and trusted for the Holy Spirit, and we and she had much joy in seeing her three elder sisters yield and trust also.

A young man who had been converted five weeks before, through one of the workers speaking to him about his soul in a train, testified that he had thought that the whole of salvation was coming to Christ to ask forgiveness of sin, and now he had seen farther on that the carnal mind must be put off, and Christ only reign within.

We set the children reading their Bibles by giving them a search word, and first, second, and third prizes for a word competition, and occasionally texts to learn and repeat, and leaflets on leaving the meetings. The work does not end at a meeting. Just one instance: A young lady had been at our meetings last year, and had sung with us,

All I am, I am bringing to Thee,
All I have I am bringing to Thee.

She thought, "I ought bring my 'fear of man' and friends to God, and I do." She then trusted to be filled with the Spirit, and peace came into her life. During the following winter, she had to leave London on account of health for three months, for a country village, and finding that there was only one service, and that on the Sunday morning, requested permission to hold one. A friend offered a room, and she carried on Sunday and Thursday evening services with blessing, and they continue to this day. We were occasionally helped by an address to the children from other friends, and as we have taken a cottage for workers next to the Home, our numbers were considerably augmented, and Miss Grundberg, who also gave an address at the Congregational Chapel, joined us, helping with others in this work.

We feel that there are many small seaside places where young or nervous workers might begin open-air services, where they would be much valued, and their own faith enlarged and deepened.

C. and A. Moore.

LECTURING TO SCEPTICS.—Mr. A. Biddlescombe, 11, Rose Hill-terrace, London-road, Brighton, has been visiting various parts of the country, having a happy power in reaching working men. In dealing lately with doubters among the labouring classes in Brighton he proved very successful.

DR. PARKER'S LATEST BOOK.

A new book from the pen of Dr. Parker has been published,* and it illustrates in a remarkable way the many-sided nature of his genius. Whatever may truthfully be said about many ministers, it certainly cannot be asserted of the City Temple pastor that he lives in a world far removed from the hard facts and experiences of daily business life. The rich and wise counsels as to character and conduct scattered throughout this volume show that the author has observed widely and acutely; all the world knows with what literary grace and skill he can clothe his ideas and convictions. The book is not very artistic in its construction, being largely a collection of papers written for occasional or serial publication. Yet it has a practical unity of aim and treatment, and it may be said to embrace all the manifold relations of individual, commercial, and social life. The autobiographical elements in the early chapters will not detract from the interest and worth of the book in the eyes of most readers. We do not hesitate to say that the young man who will deny himself a few luxuries or even comforts in order to purchase this volume will have made an investment which, if he fairly trades with it, will bring him a rich and abiding dividend.

The present crisis in one department of the industrial world gives a special weight and value to the following remarks on CAPITAL AND LABOUR.

"In thinking of the subject of capital and labour, which will come up again and again in the development of your business life, remember that capital is a larger word than money. Too often money and capital are supposed to be equivalent and interchangeable terms. We have capital set against labour in the sense of money being set against industry. This is a fundamental fallacy, and until we get rid of it we shall have no sound and large economical reasoning. By industry I do not mean mere drudgery; so by capital I do not mean mere money. I regard capital as an inclusive term, representing faculty, mental resource, power of management, skill in handling affairs, business sagacity, and, in short, every element and aspect of practical genius. A man may have a million at the bank and yet be a dunce. He may not, as we have already said, so much own his money as his money owns him. Such money is not worth the name of capital, for it is so much mere metal. When you hear men condemning capital, you would suppose from their foolish talk that they are condemning only so much money or metal. When you take the larger definition of capital into your account you will see that money is in some respects the very least element in it. So with regard to industry, I do not regard it as mere toil, or a continual stooping of the back to the ground: I mean pleasure in work, the highest acceptance of labour, the adoption of discipline as a means of education, and the service of the world as a religious sacrifice and joy. We must get larger and better definitions if ever we are to get into a happier relation as between man and man, class and class, in true socialism.

"It should be your business as a Christian man to advocate that every labourer should have at least sufficient to live upon. In the first instance it is not your business to consider what use the man makes of his compensation. You have a conscientious duty to perform, and that is to see that no man is kept down to a starvation point. Having assured yourself that a man has sufficient to keep body and soul well together, it will be for you to consider what educational and Christianising influences you can bring to bear upon him with a view to his making a right use of his earnings. So long as the man has not enough to live upon, it is absurd for you to attempt to address him how to spend his money. He will not listen to you. Starvation can give no audience to eloquence. But when reason has been satisfied or justice has been in some measure meted out, then will be the opportunity for wisdom to speak earnestly and for practice to show how much can be done even with a little. Never join in the foolish clamour of pulling down the rich. Never imagine that poverty is merely a question of circumstances, or of political economy, or of social arrangement. There is a poverty which certainly ought to be removed, vigorously and completely. There is also another kind of poverty which cannot be handled by men; account for it as you please, the poor we shall have always with us, it will be for us to make them, not objects of patronage but means by which we show the tenderness and glory of the Gospel of Christ. Do not imagine it is our business to enlarge such poverty by neglecting the poverty which we have it in our power to alleviate. We must deal with poverty as if it lay completely within our power to remove it, and having brought it to a point where our resources are exhausted it will be for us to perceive that God has set poverty in the midst of civilisation as an instrument of education, and as an agency for developing the tenderest and sweetest faculties and sympathies of the human soul."

* "Well Begun: Notes for those who have to make their way in the World." (5s. Nisbet & Co.)

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN LONDON.

This gifted lady has recently concluded at Westbourne Grove Baptist Church a most remarkable series of services. The mission extended over fifteen days. The afternoon meetings, intended especially for Christians, drew together some 400 or 500 persons, and the teaching given was characterised by an uncompromising demand for thorough consecration to Christ, an out-and-out loyalty to Scripture, and the strenuous maintenance of the old paths of Christian doctrine, great plainness of speech being employed towards those who question the full inspiration of the sacred volume. "Our Relationship to Christ," "The Personal Presence of God," "The Secret of Victory," and "The Personality of the Holy Spirit," were amongst the subjects dealt with.

At the evening meetings, intended mainly for the unsaved, the building, which seats nearly 1500 persons, was crowded. The addresses were brief, pointed, practical, and intensely Scriptural. But few anecdotes were used, and those few were almost entirely matters of personal experience or observation. Mrs. Baeyertz's Jewish training has undoubtedly helped her to a clear perception of the significance of many passages of Old Testament Scripture, and her address on "The Passover" was illustrated by means of a table spread in the modern Jewish fashion, as she had often seen it spread in her father's house, with its piece of burnt bone as the miserable relic and memento of the Paschal Lamb.

The meetings closed with an immense gathering of Christians, admission being by ticket only, to hear an address on "Holiness." Mrs. Baeyertz's teaching on this subject is wholesome, robust, and eminently Scriptural; free on the one hand from "perfectionism," and that weak sentimentality which has so often characterised the utterances of some of its foremost advocates, and on the other hand from the least encouragement to those culpable inconsistencies in which so many professing Christians permit themselves to indulge upon the ground that absolute freedom from all sin is impossible. At the close of this meeting upwards of a thousand persons remained and engaged in the glad and solemn act of entire personal consecration to God.

During the mission the names of upwards of three hundred and fifty persons who professed to rest on Christ alone as their Saviour were received in the inquiry rooms. The quiet earnestness of the whole of the proceedings affords ground for the strongest hope that the vast majority of these professed decisions will be found to be lasting and genuine. The pastor, deacons, and members generally of the church are filled with thankfulness and praise to God for what He hath wrought.

John Tuckwell, Pastor.

Deaconess' Institution, Tottenham.

Sir,—Can you make known our efforts to open our empty children's ward? The falling leaf predicts the approach of winter. Mothers, who frequently are the breadwinners also, knock at our doors with eager expectation. The sick child causes her to stay at home, and what little she is able to earn is no longer available. On account of want of funds we dare not increase our responsibilities, already outstanding at £1500.

If each mother reading your paper would send a penny for each child enjoying good health, the suffering of these neglected ones would not only be alleviated, but little hearts gladdened, and weary faces caused to smile.—Yours faithfully,

W. David Newton.

AMERICAN MISSIONARIES.—Last week there arrived in Liverpool a party of American missionaries from Boston, to the number of about thirty, who are en route to Burmah and India.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

These honoured brethren have concluded a fortnight's special services in Dover. Nearly all the meetings were held in the spacious and commodious New Town Hall. At times this large place was far too small for the crowds which sought admission. All classes of the people were dealt with. Mr. Fullerton conducted several services styled "An Hour with the Bible." These were for Christians, and were very highly appreciated. The children had two meetings specially for them, conducted by Mr. Smith, who has the rare ability of holding for some time the attention of over a thousand children, and of bringing the Gospel message down to the level of the apprehension of the little ones. There were also meetings for "men only," addressed by Mr. Fullerton; and one for "women only," when Mrs. Fullerton preached Christ with power to over nine hundred of her own sex. The general vangelistic services were brightened by the sweet singing of the Gospel by Mr. Smith, and by the able services of a choir, drawn from the members of the evangelical congregations of the town. Mr. Fullerton's addresses at the meetings were very heart-searching. The Gospel was presented in all its fulness, and very many heart-broken sinners accepted Christ as their Saviour.

Much prayer had been offered before these friends came on this, their second visit to the town, and when they came the members of the local Evangelical churches worked together in loving harmony; now they are gratefully rejoicing in the precious results of the mission already gathered in, feeling at the same time that the future will reveal that very many more were savingly blessed. To God be all the praise. E. J. E.

REVIVAL IN THE VALE OF LEVEN.

In the early spring of the present year the souls of devoted Christian workers in this district were burdened with the consciousness that the time had come for a season of spiritual reaping. One evening at the close of the weekly meeting of the Sabbath school teachers of Renton United Presbyterian Church, the subject was talked over, and spread in prayer before God. The prayers of the friends attending the London noon prayer-meeting were also solicited, and an answer beyond the expectations of his people was given by the Lord. Mr. Samuel MacKenzie, evangelist, Campbeltown, was the instrument whom the Lord sent into the field to reap a precious harvest.

Mr. MacKenzie commenced labours in Renton Free Church on the first Sunday evening of March, and during the first week many professed conversions took place. For five weeks, instead of one as had been arranged, the evangelist laboured in Renton, and his labours were not in vain. At the close of each Gospel service, the Lord confirmed his word with signs following. In the adjacent villages of Alexandria, Bonhill, and Jamestown, Mr. MacKenzie continued his labours with manifest results. In Alexandria, many who were impressed, but who would not wait until the inquiry meeting, called upon the evangelist at his lodging, and were brought to decision; while in Jamestown a very rich and abundant harvest of souls was reaped for the Lord.

Twelve weeks, instead of a week, were spent by Mr. MacKenzie in the district, and as the practical outcome of his work, an Evangelistic Association was formed in Renton, the Evangelistic Association in Alexandria, which was almost extinct, was resuscitated to its former strength, and in Jamestown a branch of the Railway Mission was formed.

On Sabbath evening, October 15, Mr. MacKenzie paid a return visit to Renton, and commenced a week's services in the United Presbyterian Church. The church was crowded, each evening the attendance was large, and many yielded themselves to the call of the Gospel. As Mr. MacKenzie labours in connection and along with the churches, it would be to the spiritual advantage of many congregations were they to secure the services of this earnest evangelist.

NORWICH CONVENTION.—A convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been called for Oct. 30 to Nov. 3 in the Assembly Room of the Agricultural Hall. A number of well-known speakers are expected. Further particulars may be had from the secretary, Rev. R. Middleton, 166, Dereham-road, Norwich.

MADAME ESTHER ABRAHAM.

NESTORIAN MISSION AND ORPHANAGE, OROOMIAH, PERSIA.

THE name of Deacon Abraham is familiar to our readers in connection with the Nestorian Orphanages at Geog-Tapa, a village near Oroomiah, in Persia. After the terrible famine of 1880, which carried off 20,000 people, he received into his own house as many of the poor starving orphans as it would hold, in humble faith that the Lord would provide the means for their support. His heart was touched with pity for the children lying about on the roadside to die. Realising that the Lord had called him to care for the poor destitute orphans, he established the Orphanages. He has twice visited England, and evoked much practical sympathy from the Lord's people towards their support.

In a country like Persia, where no charitable institution of any kind had before been known, and where there is no poorhouse in which the destitute could find a refuge, such an orphanage is an inestimable blessing. The extremest poverty exists, the people can do little for each other, and, as small value is set on human life, the state of the helpless children is truly deplorable; they simply starve or die.

Deacon Abraham's plan has been to rent and cultivate land, employing the elder orphans during the summer, which is the only time when field work can be done, owing to the severity of the winters, but the burdens upon tenant farmers are so great as to leave but little profit when all the labour has been expended. Half the produce has to be given to the Government, besides the payment of taxes, and the petty tyrannies from officials make his work an intensely heavy and trying one. Several times he has received orders to close the schools and quit the place, and these could only be rescinded after much painful labour and expense, and earnest trust in God to deliver him.

The American Board of Missions, who know all these difficulties, two years ago voted him the sum of £320 for the purchase of a vineyard for free cultivation in aid of his work, and he is most anxious to raise £800 more to enable him to purchase other land near, and to cultivate it, so as to make the work in great measure self supporting.

To aid him in accomplishing this most desirable object, his wife Esther determined, with his consent, to undertake a journey to England to try and raise this sum among the Lord's people. Such a journey under such circumstances had probably never before been accomplished. She travelled with her infant daughter of eleven months, in company with Miss Green, a missionary returning to America. These ladies travelled through the dangerous mountains of Kurdistan, infested with fierce robbers, with a robber chief for their guide.

Esther's history before she became the wife of Deacon Abraham was a very interesting one, and showed clearly that God was preparing her for the position of responsibility she now holds. She was born in Kurdistan, of good family, who had, however, been despoiled of their earthly goods by a marauding Kurdish chief. Her mother was the daughter of a Nestorian pastor, and desired to train her children in the right way. Esther, the youngest daughter and child, being of a more studious disposition than her sisters, was encouraged to apply herself to her education, to a degree unusual among the young girls of the land. Her father died when she was but eight years old, and as the widow had no son, the possessions of the family were appropriated by the nearest male relation, according to the custom of the country.

(From a Photograph by Mr. F. Viner, 110, Southwark Park Road, London.)

At the early age of ten Esther experienced a saving change of heart, and had a great desire to attend the American school at Oroomiah. Her mother soon after fell ill and died. This was a sore trial to the already half-orphaned girl, but she committed herself to the God of the Fatherless, and kept herself apart for his service. After a considerable stay with an uncle she got the desire of her heart, and reached Oroomiah. She was installed in the American College, and soon found favour with her teachers and others. She remained four years in the College, where she ultimately became a teacher. Nearly three years ago she was married to Deacon Abraham, who has found in her a very sympathetic helper in the work of caring for the orphaned children under his care.

Esther arrived in England just before the Mildmay Conference of last year, and was allowed five minutes at one of its gatherings in which to tell the story of her people's wrongs and degradation and their cruel sufferings. The lamented Mrs. Pennefather provided a home for her until after the birth of her second child, Samuel Mildmay. Since then she has been going from place to place seeking to make her husband's work more fully known, and to gain new friends for it. She must return to Oroomiah in the spring to mother the forty-four orphans so much needing her care. An Orphanage for girls is in course of erection, the house in which they have hitherto been received being no longer available.

Those who have seen Esther in her Eastern costume, and heard her, have been greatly interested in her account of the work and the terrible need which exists for it.

Some of the children who come to the Orphanage are so wild as to be almost untameable. These poor Nestorian orphans are believed by many to be the descendants of the ten tribes of Israel who were carried away captive into Assyria, the very regions whence these orphans came; as a distinct people they have been miraculously preserved to the present day.

Dr. Shedd, President of the American Missions in Oroomiah, has known the Deacon for thirty years, and his work from its commencement, and bears the best of testimony both as to its need, and the good it accomplishes. A board of trustees has been formed, to whom the property is secured in the name of the Nestorian Orphanage for ever.

At an examination of the Schools, Deacon Abraham said:—

From the commencement of this work, we have had 145 inmates; these have all been fed, cared for in every way, and trained in the fear of God and the knowledge of his Gospel. Some whose mothers had remarried and deserted them, were brought to me on the backs of their friends, and left with me, before I could decide whether I was able to take them in or not; others came from the mountains who had been set upon by robbers and stripped. Nearly all came dirty, ragged, full of vermin, scarcely human in appearance.

Twenty-five former inmates were present, and testified to the blessing they had received. Several have gone to the American college, to be trained as teachers and evangelists to their people. Two are in this country learning trades to return and teach the orphans, for in that land trade and mechanism are yet but in their infancy. The Deacon is anxious that the young men who now are obliged to migrate to other countries in order to find employment, should remain in their own, and by practising and teaching European arts become a national benefit. Who can estimate the amount of blessing which may accrue to Persia from that one Christian institution?

Our readers can greatly help these poor orphans by giving Esther opportunities to speak at drawing-room and other meetings, in towns and villages; by needlework; or by earnest prayer that the Lord will, through his servants, provide for the support of these children.

Besides the work of the Orphanages Deacon Abraham is engaged on Sundays in evangelising in the villages, accompanied by some of the elder orphans, who thus learn in their turn to preach the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, which everywhere brings light and peace and joy. Further information concerning Esther and the work can be obtained from Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, near Andover.

WAKEFIELD CONVENTION.

For seven years past many Christian friends have met autumn by autumn in Wakefield for three days of conference and waiting upon God. The Convention just brought to a close will long retain its place in the memories of those privileged to be present. From first to last speakers and hearers were conscious of a deep though intensely heart-searching manifestation of the Lord's presence

The speakers were Bishop Hill, Revs. J. J. Luce, I. E. Page, C. Musgrave Brown, J. Hudson Taylor, James Adler, and Dr. H. Grattan Guinness. Throughout the conference Mr. Alfred Haley, of Wakefield, presided.

At the morning gathering on Thursday, the missionary day of the Convention, Bishop Hill gave harrowing accounts of the scenes of inhumanity so constantly to be witnessed among the African tribes. He made an earnest appeal for labourers for the Soudan and other parts of the vast continent of Africa. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor followed with a vividly descriptive account of his own call to missionary work in China.

At the evening meeting, Dr. Grattan Guinness appealed to the assembly, mainly composed of young men and women, bringing before them the calls to work for God among the heathen. Mr. Hudson Taylor followed up this appeal, conducting an after-meeting. Over twenty young men subsequently remained behind for further information and direction as to missionary work.

SEEKING GOODLY PEARLS.

Shall we search for earthly treasure,
Braving danger for each gem,
While in darkness lie unheeded
Jewels for Christ's diadem?

Shall we gladly leave our country,
Seeking knowledge, wealth, or fame?
Do we count them stronger motives
Than the love of his dear name?

Let it not be said of us, Lord,
That our crowns remain unwon;
And while calling Christ our Master,
Leave his last command undone.

For Thou knowest that we love Thee,
May we love in very deed,
Doing, daring, yea, and dying,
If thy cause such service need.

G. E.

[1104]

West London Mission.

ANNIVERSARY MEETINGS.

The workers who rally around Messrs. Hugh Price Hughes and Mark Guy Pearse in connection with the West London Mission had a gala day on Friday. Many fellow-workers from other parts of London were there to show sympathy and to share in the common joy. The anniversary programme was a full one, and it is difficult to say which item was the best. The whole formed an occasion of strong interest, and a harbinger, we trust, of many Gospel triumphs throughout the coming year.

A CONSECRATION MEETING.

The proceedings of the day began by a devotional service in St. James's Hall, at eleven o'clock. In former years there used to be a noon-day service in Prince's Hall by Rev. M. Guy Pearse. This time the programme was somewhat altered, so as to give opportunity for more prayer, and to hear the voices of some other friends. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in some opening words, said they had gathered to learn better how to do Christ's own work in London in Christ's own way. To this end let all get as big a blessing as they could contain. In the midst of his little talk to the workers, Mr. Hughes could not refrain from a brief Gospel appeal to any stray hearer who might be unsaved: now was the moment for him to step over the line.

The first to lead in prayer was Rev. J. McKenny, of whose earnest ministry at Hampstead years ago the writer has a grateful recollection. He is aging in appearance, and is now a "supernumerary," but he has lost nothing of his true Methodist fervour; he poured out his soul in heartfelt petition for the operations of the Mission, for the outcast, for the licentious; and for all the churches, that they might rise to the height of their privileges, and receive the fulness of the blessing that God has to give. Mr. Josiah Nix pleaded for a time of Pentecostal cleansing and enduement, and for a heart of one accord, so that the blessing might be claimed. Sister Katharine's voice was also heard, entreating a fruitful season throughout the day.

Our thoughts were briefly directed by Rev. W. H. Tindall to those wonderful searching words in Phil. ii. 5, where, "in a few master strokes," the Apostle sketches the person and work of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he may show what the lives of Christians ought to be. If the mind of Christ is in us we shall seek to live the life of Christ. In his recent studies of the New Testament Mr. Tindall said he had been struck afresh with three things bearing on the full and perfect surrender of the believer to the life of Jesus Christ. This consecrated life is (1) a matter of immediate obligation; (2) it is quite within our own present power; (3) it covers all the details of life. These points were pressed home with intelligent and definite urgency.

Then Rev. F. B. Meyer reminded us, in the words of 1 Cor. i. 9, how God our Father has called us into the fellowship of his son Jesus Christ. This wonderful word fellowship means "going shares, having all things common, entering into partnership." This thought of partnership with Christ was developed by Mr. Meyer in words of tremendous import and suggestion. To think that Jesus Christ, with his wealth and power and infinite sufficiency, goes shares with us in our poverty and need! Angels were not deemed fit for this partnership; alas! how many men seem to shut themselves off from the experience of it. In his human life Christ needed human companions, so now He wants the close fellowship of his disciples in the travail and agony of his soul over the sorrow and sin of men. Moreover, He wants us to share with Him the reception and working of the Holy Ghost as Anointer for service. Have we, like Jesus Christ, had our Jordan bank experience of the reception of the Mighty Spirit of God? If not, let us claim it now and get it?

Mr. Meyer had been led into this line of thought by a remark from Mr. Hughes that his favourite hymn was because of the first lines of verse three—

> Jesus, lover of my soul;

> Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
> More than all in Thee I find.

This second line contained the next point of emphasis made by Mr. Meyer. The great thing with many, he said, is that they feel their want, but they do not find what they need. There is a time for us to cease praying, and to go on to finding. Having pleaded the promise, let us not persist in worrying God for the blessing, but go forth to work and witness—believing that his Word is sure, and that we do indeed find in Him more than all we want. Let the Atlantic be brought into fellowship with the Mediterranean, then there will be no ebb and flow in the tide of power and fruitfulness.

After this came what Mr. Hughes called the practical test of our fellowship with Christ—the collection. There are many Christians, he declared, who will never be sanctified because they are cheating Christ of his money every day of their life. In connection with the work of the Mission they were asking to-day for £4000; if they did not get that amount at least, they might have to relinquish some important parts of the work.

Prayer being made again by Rev. J. Hopkins, of the South London Mission, the closing words of exhortation came from Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. He wanted to fix in the minds of the hearers the truths they had heard. How true is it that we have been so busy praying that we have had no time to open the door to receive the answer! How blessed it would be if this morning meeting of the West London anniversary were to become a rallying-ground for all London workers. He gave as a motto for the year, "He must reign" (1 Cor. xv. 25). Here is a girdle for lowly service, a sword for daring combat, and yet a chariot in which to ride, and music of heaven by which to march. How grand to have the granite of a must on which to rest and to build! It is enough to send us away singing. These "musts" of Jesus Christ—how striking! "I must be about my Father's business"; "Even so must the Son of Man be lifted up"; "These things must be accomplished"; "the Scripture must be fulfilled"; and now "He must reign." Let us to-day take an oath of allegiance to our King. Every drop of blood in our body is his, every penny in our possession. The best thing we can do for the reign of Christ in the world is to let Him be absolute monarch in each of our hearts. Then in our individual work let us know that there is no hopeless case with Him. What is the worth of money or position if it is not helping on the reign of Jesus Christ? Mr. Pearse's last words were, "Let us be out-and-out and altogether Christ's." Tender confession and entreaty at the throne of "our King who is yet our Brother" was the note of dismissal.

THE LUNCHEON.

An excellent luncheon was spread in St. Martin's Town Hall, and was partaken of by a large company. Alderman Evan Spicer, of the London County Council, graced the chair. Before introducing him, Mr. Price Hughes made one of his characteristic and lively appeals for help, which so greatly impressed the chairman that he said he must henceforth take a back seat as a public beggar. Mr. Hughes said that never in the six years of the Mission's existence had they received more astonishing and constant encouragement in all directions than now. The financial cloud was the only one that obscured the prospect. They were near a critical period in the history of some parts of the work, as Wardour Hall must be given up early in April next. What they should do he did not know, but in some way or other God would provide. Then followed a very straight and pungent invitation to contribute £4000 at once for the aggressive work of the Mission, so as to release Mrs. Hughes and himself for more directly spiritual effort.

Alderman Spicer was extremely warm in his commendation of the Mission. He did not appear, however, to look on the financial deficit as a calamity, but "a healthy sign." The money would be got, and the Mission would escape the paralysing influence of a big balance in hand. To be successful in a place like London a work must be on a large scale, and the expenditure must be in keeping.

A few words followed from Mr. Pearse, who said the Mission had been much indebted to all the churches, not excluding the Salvation Army, whose Hallelujah lasses had suggested the idea of the sisterhood. It was Mr. Mearns's pamphlet on "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" that had first roused them to inaugurate this work in West London. Incidentally, in thanking Mr. Spicer for personal kindness shown to the "mothers" of the Mission whom he had entertained at his own residence, Mr. Pearse gave a new and beautiful rendering of Paul's words, "Condescend to men of low estate." The new translation is, "Going along with people of low estate"—a much more suggestive and helpful thought than that embodied in the older interpretation.

THE SISTERS OF THE PEOPLE

as usual were to the front at the afternoon gathering, which met this year in St. James's Hall, and which drew together a large sympathetic assemblage. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse counted it a great honour to preside over the Sisters' meeting; he thought he must have been chosen for the post because he had the gift of being able to sit still and do nothing.

In rising to make her general report, Mrs. Hughes was cheered and cheered again. She struck a jubilant note of praise at the outset in the fact that from three the number of Sisters had grown to thirty-four. She drew a contrast between their sisterhood and other sisterhoods which were more largely devoted to subjective ends. Another point she made as to the plan of the work was the fullest scope given to individual force of character, the only condition being a personal consecration to Christ. Premising that it would be impossible to describe all the branches of the work, Mrs. Hughes proceeded to give an enumeration of them as follows:—

House to house visitation, medical mission, nursing sisters who tend the sick poor in their own homes, the crèche, St. Luke's Home for Dying, relief work, registry work for situations for the out-of-work, boys' club, four girls' clubs, six mothers' meetings, various children's agencies, boys' brigade, provident clubs, workhouse tea, temperance work, Winchester House for rescue work, convalescent home and country holiday work, work for soldiers and police; society classes never so flourishing as now, week-day service and open-air work, besides a vast amount of work that cannot be tabulated, calls for help from very unexpected quarters, from rich as well as from poor.

Three new branches were specially noted. The first was a branch at Somers Town, opened last autumn. The Sisters in charge have the joy and privilege of living in a court which they would not change for a palace. It is a very bad neighbouring, with abounding sin and vice, but the Sisters have never met with a single case of rudeness or insult; they are everywhere loved and respected. The house in the court is a place of call for all who are in trouble, and during the year there have been many cases of true conversion. The other new branches were Winchester House (rescue) and St. Luke's Home for the Dying. Into the former seventeen girls had been received, and of these fifteen had been most satisfactory cases. In closing her deeply touching statement, Mrs. Hughes appealed for more funds. Out of 1000 women whom she had wished to collect a guinea yearly, she had found 300; the remaining 700 she must have somehow. If people but knew the work they would be certain to send all the help that is needed.

Sister Lily, one of the ablest and most experienced of the lady workers, followed with a talk that fairly melted the meeting by its charm and pathos. Referring to her own Bible class, she told an intensely moving incident about a girl who had once been a member of it, but had been subsequently betrayed by one in whom she trusted, and who was the very first to seek the shelter of Winchester House. Then the work of Sister Agnes was described, and some of the wonderful fruits of it. Sister Agnes herself eighteen months ago went to the Cape of Good Hope, where she has charge of a Rescue Home. God is richly owning her loving, devoted labours there also. Sister Lily made an earnest call for some consecrated lady who would lay her life on the altar of service, and go out to the Cape to take her stand by the side of Sister Agnes.

At this point Mr. Hughes came to the aid of his wife (who, by the way, looks anything but strong, and has to walk with the aid of a stick), and made a most effective appeal for women to join the three hundred who already undertake to collect or give a guinea a year. By his instructions "promise papers" were freely scattered through the hall, and when they were collected it was found that over 150 had pledged themselves to get an annual guinea for the work of the Sisters. Mr. Pearse handed over to Mrs. Hughes £25 he had received for a lecture and a Bible reading in the North, and of course there was the collection.

After this interesting interlude we were prepared to listen to the stately, measured, and polished periods of Sister Emmeline as to the wonder and reality of human life. This Sister is evidently not only a thoughtful and eloquent speaker, but a devoted and God-honoured worker, if one may judge from the recital of her experiences. One story she told of sin and degradation and death through the drink, and of the repentance and the restoration of a father and his children to prosperity and happiness, that was listened to with a great hush of wondering interest. Sister Emmeline is certainly a remarkable personality even in such a high-class community of workers as Mrs. Hughes has at her command. If she should ever take to the platform as a profession, Mrs. Besant will have to see to her laurels.

No more likely worker among the soldiers could well be imagined than Sister Mabel. Her face is as bright as a summer morning, and her rapid, rolling, heartfelt speech must be wonderfully attractive to Tommy Atkins. We could not properly represent this lady's speech by any verbal method. It was an impassioned and sometimes passionate plea for a better social treatment of the soldier. She repeatedly convulsed the meeting with her outbursts of advocacy of the red coats. She believed that much of the wonderful success God had vouchsafed to Sister Ruth and herself the past two years arose from the fact that they loved the British Army in all its branches. Oh, how she wished she could have a good home of her own in London, one where she might have a drawing-room to which she could invite her soldier friends. What they need is not a lot of patronage or preaching, much less the censure and suspicion they too often get. They need sympathy, and those who know by love how to penetrate the crust of outward seeming hardness will reap a rich reward.

THE EVENING MEETING.

A splendid concourse of friends filled the great hall in the evening. Mr. Heath Mills and the united bands had held the interest of the assemblage during waiting time, and led the hearty sounding praise all the meeting through. Hymns and prayer of course began the evening, and then Mr. Hughes introduced the chairman, Mr. T. H. Bainbridge, of Newcastle, in flattering terms. Mr. Bainbridge spoke as an ardent believer in the work of the Forward Movement as incarnated in the West London Mission. He regarded it as a great object lesson for workers in all the great cities throughout Britain. He told how the inspiration of it had nerved them to attempt great things in Newcastle, and God had blessed them greatly. Mr. Bainbridge was a little severe on the Methodist Conference of a few years ago, but he was glad to know that conservative body are getting more sensible and liberal in adapting methods to present needs. Then the Chairman called for large-hearted liberality. It might be called an expensive work, and so in some senses it is, but considering the work done he regarded it as an extremely cheap effort.

Rev. Dr. Waller was laudatory and congratulatory in a high degree, and by and by gave way to Dr. Howard Barrett, who made a right good speech from an inside point of view. The Doctor is blunt and candid to a degree. He declared that, with an exception or two, the workers of the Mission are quite an ordinary average lot; so that none of the credit of success is due to them. Passing on to some details of the many-sided work, the Doctor referred to the Somers Town branch, the account of which in the annual report had greatly taken his fancy. He knew the district well, and though it is much improved, it has still "a fine broad free air of savagery about it." This led the speaker to dwell somewhat on the need of reaching and uplifting the mothers of these sad homes if we would improve the families. Other parts of the work were referred to in a very lively fashion. When Dr. Barrett came to speak of the medical and nursery work, and especially the new St. Luke's Home for the Dying, he was on his own ground, and it was good to hear him tell of its worth. A little homily on self-sacrifice as the secret of present happiness concluded an extremely clever and charming speech.

Mr. Price Hughes came next with a really magnificent deliverance. It was certainly discursive, being partly a grateful commentary on a very complimentary article in The Methodist Recorder, partly a spirited defence of his own attitude on the burning social topics of the hour, and partly a powerful appeal for help in the aggressive programme of the mission. It has the ear of West London, he said, in a wonderful degree; some 8,000 people attend the services every Sabbath. The appeal was specially directed to the young men and women who so largely compose the Sabbath congregations. The programme of the afternoon was gone through again, papers and pencils distributed over the hall for the formulation of promises of help in giving or collecting. It was announced amid much applause that the chairman and various friends to whom he had taken the trouble to write had contributed £300 between them. Mr. Bainbridge gave the promise of a further £100 if the whole amount given totalled up to £2500. This sum was almost reached by the close of the meeting, and doubtless the additional offer of the chairman will be available.

The remaining speeches of the evening were by Dr. Heywood Smith, the new Director of the medical part of the Mission, and Mr. Josiah Nix. The former paid a fine tribute to the devotion and skill of the Nursing Sisters, who go in and out of the slums like so many angels of mercy and light. Mr. Nix, it need not be said, was himself—"bright and vigorous," as Mr. Hughes predicted. With trembling voice he said that two things greatly troubled him—one of them the precarious state of health of Mr. and Mrs. Hughes. Surely the time has come, he said, when wealthy Methodist laymen should come to the help of the Mission, and so relieve these devoted leaders of the heavy burden of collecting money. The other thing that was lying heavily on Mr. Nix's heart was the prospect of losing Wardour Hall. Every brick and beam and nail in the old place is dear to those who have worked in it, and they are anxious to have the work there perpetuated. If the hall must go, will not some rich friend raise another in its place? After telling some curious experiences in collecting funds, Mr. Nix closed with a story of the last Derby day—the sound conversion of a travelling minstrel, who is now devoting his gifts in a more praiseworthy fashion. If anybody wanted (he said) to support a genuine honest work of God, let them give to the West London Mission, to the best of their ability. And so say we with all our heart.

JEWISH EVANGELICAL MISSION.

Friends of Israel will be glad to hear that a union was recently effected between the Jewish Evangelical Mission in England and the Gospel Work among the Jews in Scotland, by which means it is hoped that the work of both may be greatly helped. The united Missions will prosecute endeavours to bring the Gospel home to the hearts and minds of the thousands of Jews who are living in cities and towns in Great Britain, hitherto overlooked or but seldom visited.

In northern towns, of which it used to be said that no Jew could reside in them, wandering Israelites are now found. They are in Aberdeen, and in Inverness they are forming a Hebrew congregation. It is estimated that there are now about 8,000 Jews in Scotland, and many thousands in the northern cities of England. In connection with the united Missions there is in Newcastle-on-Tyne a mission house, containing lecture and reading rooms, which are open every evening, where Bible classes, night school, a medical mission, Gospel services, mothers' meetings, etc., are conducted.

Mr. Jacob Markson has been placed as missionary in Glasgow. Rev. Eliezer Bassin, who for some years used to go backwards and forwards from Edinburgh to Glasgow, is now able to devote the whole of his time to the east of Scotland.

Communications regarding the work should be addressed to the superintendent, Rev. Aaron Matthews, 68, Fern-avenue, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—At the monthly prayer meeting of this society last Friday at 20, Berners-street, W., Rev. W. R. Mowll delivered a very earnest and heart-searching address on four great duties incumbent on all true Christians: Wait, watch, witness, work. Simultaneous meetings for prayer are conducted by the missionaries at their respective stations in different parts of the country.

SOLDIERS' HOME, CAIRO.

Cairo is a large garrison: there are 5000 English soldiers there. In January, 1892, a few rooms in a private house were opened by a lady as a soldiers' home, which a few months later was removed to a large flat in a more central part of the town. The rent is £100 a year. A home of this sort is much needed in a foreign city where cafés abound, and there is every inducement to lead the young soldiers to drink. The coffee-bar is much appreciated, and men come to it in large numbers. The reading-room is also very popular. A correspondent says: We have a room where a Bible-class is held every evening; on Sundays there is a class at 3 o'clock, and a Gospel meeting, sometimes taken by an officer, at 8.30. These are usually well attended; at 4.30 there is a social tea, often as many as sixty men sitting down to it.

Up to the present time the expenses of the Home have been almost entirely borne by the lady who opened it; but we are now very much in want of funds, and earnestly appeal to those interested in soldiers to help us in order that the work may be carried on. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. E. D. Ridout, Soldiers' Home, Cairo.

Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester.

Sir,—This centre of work of all kinds amongst homeless, neglected, and suffering children, will, during the coming week, be the headquarters of varied work for the Master at home and abroad. Beginning with the usual early Monday morning prayer meeting for workers, the hall, in the afternoon and evening of that day, is in the hands of the Children's Special Service Mission, of London, when reports of the blessed work done at the various seaside services will be rendered by various friends.

Tuesday, the 31st, is devoted to the veteran missionary J. G. Paton. The meetings will be held afternoon and evening in the Central Hall and Free Trade Hall respectively.

Thursday, November 2, is the Missionary Day, when from early morning until evening the parting command of the Lord Jesus and his rightful claim over the world He has redeemed, will be pleaded in prayer and song and speech. Will readers of The Christian pray for us and help us during the coming week? The missionary day last year was the means of sending forth a new missionary, now labouring in China, and of supporting two native teachers in Africa. We want this year to be the means of placing another missionary in the world's great field, as well as to continue to support those who are there.—Yours, Leonard K. Shaw.

Conference Hall, Strangeways, Manchester.

HEBREW A LIVING LANGUAGE.—In some centres of Jewish influence on the Continent, Hebrew continues to be largely used as a medium of intercourse, both in speech and writing. In compliance with the wish of Baron Edmond Rothschild, the colonists at Zichron Jacob, in Palestine, have substituted pure Hebrew for the Judeo-German speech. A note in the new issue of the "Quarterly Statement" of the Palestine Exploration Fund, says:—"After the Babylonian captivity, pure Hebrew was never the language of the common people of Palestine. It is said that at Safed, and in less degree at Jerusalem, Jewish children, both boys and girls, may now be heard speaking Hebrew to one another."

ROMANISM IN THE UNITED STATES.—In The Converted Catholic for October, Father O'Connor, of New York, describes the recent submission of Archbishop Corrigan to the papal delegate Satolli. He says: "This Archbishop has more Roman Catholics—subjects, he calls them—under his jurisdiction than any other Bishop in the world, except, possibly, the Archbishop of Paris. By the aid of Tammany Hall, he is the power behind the throne in the municipal government of the city. His voice is potent in State and national affairs, though like the Jesuits, who are his staunch supporters, he works in secret. His wealth is so great, and his income is derived from so many sources, that millionaires bow before him." In a pulpit deliverance on Satolli, the Archbishop said: "Let us raise our hearts to Heaven and beg our Blessed Mother, whose glorious assumption the Church is now commemorating, to pour out upon him every best gift and every choicest benediction." While on the one hand Rome is patronised in high places, as when President Cleveland congratulated the Pope on his jubilee five months after the celebration had occurred (during General Harrison's term of office), on the other hand The Converted Catholic is continually recording the renunciations of Romanists on coming into the light of the Gospel.

RESCUE WORK IN EASTBOURNE.

A small cottage was opened some time ago at Polegate for the children of women who, after being in the Upwick Rescue Home, Eastbourne, have gone out to service. In order to permit such to earn their living, they were allowed to leave their infants at the Home at a charge of 2s. 6d. per week. This has worked well, but as these little ones grow up, the question presses as to what is to be done with them. Various plans were considered, but finally a six-roomed cottage was taken, and opened for the reception and training of the elder children. The "Cottage Home" is in charge of a competent matron, who will train and teach the children till they are old enough to be removed into industrial homes, to be trained as servants. The matron will have one servant to help her, and it is confidently hoped that the plan of home life thus secured will lay a foundation for the future of these little ones. Only under exceptional circumstances will any child be kept unless the mother pays regularly for it, as it is not desired to relieve the parents from the burden of the child's support. It is computed that £30 per annum will be needed, while £20 more are at present wanted for furnishing.

The Rescue Home, of which this is an offshoot, was opened in 1886, and the development of the work was so rapid that in less than four years it demanded an increase of accommodation from one cottage in 1886 to five in 1890. There remained, therefore, no doubt that the experimental effort must be replaced by permanent organisation. Applications came from many distant places, particularly London, which it was difficult to refuse, yet it was impossible under the circumstances to accept. A beautiful site having been offered at the foot of the Downs, the new building was completed in September, 1891, and occupied immediately; since that time it has always been nearly full. A large laundry for the reception of public washing was provided in connection with the new building, the profits of which have amounted to £226 during the last year; 172 adults and fifty-nine infants have been received, and from forty girls who have been placed in service most encouraging letters are being constantly received. There are now in the home twenty-four girls and fourteen infants. The work has developed so quickly that it has been necessary to have a mortgage on the building for £1000, which it is important to clear, as when this is done the Home will be on a more self-supporting basis than is usually possible in rescue work. The benefits of the Home are in no sense limited to local classes. Particulars can be obtained by applying to Miss O'Malley, Belclare, Eastbourne.

Home of Industry.

The hearts of those who gathered at the monthly workers' meeting on Wednesday, last week, were stirred during the tea hour, when Mr. C. L. Boyer gave an account of his Christlike work among the neglected cripples of the East End. A yet deeper chord vibrated when eight grievously deformed atoms of humanity sang sweetly and plaintively the songs of Zion.

The meeting which followed was addressed by Mr. Eugene Stock. In his customary interesting and graphic way he made to live before us his months of travel in distant lands, and vividly pictured the truth that as to the heathen of ancient Rome so now "the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation" to the heathen of to-day, whatever their creed or race. With much feeling he spoke of that devoted chaplain of the penal settlement in Australia, Rev. Mr. Marsden, through whose self-denial and faith the Maoris of New Zealand, after five years of persistent waiting and self-sacrifice, were reached and eventually Christianised, and the land opened to colonisation by white men. The poor natives, shocked by the treatment received at the hands of the new settlers, well-nigh relapsed into their old heathen practices or infidelity; yet to-day there remain many settlements among them giving bright evidence of the genuine character of the work then begun. Hearts were thrilled as he spoke of an Indian leper settlement visited, where the poor creatures, wasted and disfigured with disease, in response to the question, "Do you think Jesus will come to-day?" said, "We don't know, but we hope so."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—On behalf of a young Christian lady, that she may be preserved from the now almost overpowering influence of a bad mother.—For blessing on a mission to be held at Kimberley, Notts, by Mr. J. T. Stevenson, commencing October 29.—For blessing on meetings being held this week at the Gospel Union Hall, Worksop, Notts, by Mr. Opie Rodway, of Stroud.

MR. LANE AT ABERGAVENNY.

A very useful week's mission has just been concluded in this town. It was the result of a united invitation, and representatives of every section of the one Church took part in it. Mr. Lane's readings and addresses were highly appreciated and effective. Nearly 200 Christians, old and young, stood up to show their colours on the Lord's side. If they are faithful and diligent another mission will soon be prepared for, and in the meantime not a few souls will be gathered in one by one through individual dealing. The Y.M.C.A. was the instrumentality for bringing about the recent mission. This Association has been quietly growing up through several years on spiritual lines, and is a power in the town. A building is necessary, and it is hoped will be soon erected. The writer had the gratification of being present at this movement in his native town, and hopes to see the harvest of which this is the seedtime.

R. C. M.

The Railway Mission.

Dear Sir,—Many who have been enjoying their holidays in visiting friends at a distance or places of interest, have pleasant recollections of the care and attention received from our railway men while travelling. How few who thus travel realise the great lack of spiritual privileges from which these men suffer, owing to Sunday work and irregular hours of duty. It is saddening to hear from them, especially from those stationed at our seaside resorts, how, with the ever-increasing passenger traffic, the difficulty of attending any place of worship regularly gets greater year by year. The need for a special effort and special machinery to take the Gospel to the men is very great, and is rendered more urgent still by the dangerous character of their employment. During the year 1892 the number of railway men killed by accidents in the United Kingdom was 534, and statistics show that from 1874 to 1892, 10,295 railway employés were killed on our lines. Surely something ought to be done to bring these men to a knowledge of the Saviour.

The Railway Mission is trying to do what it can in this direction. One thousand two hundred meetings are held every week at about 350 branches of the Mission. Many of these take place in goods-sheds, mess-rooms, and other places, where the men congregate, and much blessing has resulted. A convalescent home has been established in Hastings for the benefit of the wounded men. The Mission has branches in South Africa, Egypt, Australia, Switzerland, and other countries, and might do much more, but its work is sadly crippled for want of funds.—Yours faithfully,

R. Nixon, General Secretary.

18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

New Forest Gipsies.

By the kind permission of Lady Marcia Cholmondeley, a drawing-room meeting was recently held at her residence in Bournemouth on behalf of "The New Forest Gipsy Mission." Words of sympathy as to its object were spoken by Colonel Molesworth, who presided. Mr. R. W. S. Griffith, hon. treasurer, gave a most interesting account of the manners, customs, language, origin, and advent of gipsies into England.

Mr. W. Bullen, who with his wife has been labouring for several years amongst this class, spoke of their shyness with strangers; when confidence is established, their reserve vanishes and they welcome friends to their encampment. Several incidents were related showing spiritual interest awakened by some of the gipsies desiring to live a better life. Mrs. Bullen finds her hands fully occupied during the winter months in dispensing gifts of cast-off clothing and new under-garments received from many kind friends.

These workers were much encouraged by many kind expressions of sympathy and generous support from those present.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, PORTSMOUTH.—In the North Staffordshire Regiment, which left Portsmouth last week on board H.M.S. Assistance, en route for Dublin, there was a band of about thirty Christian men belonging to the local branch of the Soldiers' Christian Association.

THE UNITED CHRISTIAN MISSION, now endeavouring to send a clear Gospel message into every home on the Continent, is being urged to extend its efforts to the Colonies. This it is most willing to do, but in the meantime it is very sorely pressed for funds to carry on the work in Austria, Belgium, France, and Spain. The secretary is Rev. J. D. Kilburn, Ottensen, Holstein.

Letters to the Editor.

OCCUPATION WITH THE LORD.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me through your columns to bring before Christians a remedy for two apparently opposite classes of evil with which the enemy is afflicting the saints of God at the present time, viz., occupation with others, and occupation with self? The remedy is occupation with the Lord.

One band of Christians is afflicted by internal dissensions, holding aloof from those outside the band; professing to be ruled by the Holy Spirit, the testimony is the direct opposite to that by which His presence is to be known—love. They are occupied with one another, and by so much as this principle exists among them, by just so much is occupation with the Lord set aside.

Another band of Christians is withdrawing itself upon an apparently opposite plan (I say "apparently," as the enemy's object is the same in each case—hindrance of spiritual progress), as first wretchedness of soul is produced by self-occupation, and then an opiate offered to disguise the true nature of indwelling sin. Self-occupation shuts out occupation with the Lord.

As regards the former of these (I refer to the evil in its root, not indeed in its present manifestation), the 73rd Psalm sets before us the contrast, in the result upon the soul of the saint of the contemplation of others and their acts and that of the Lord and his revelations. The alternatives are misery and joy.

The 77th Psalm is parallel, and deals with the contrast in the result upon the soul of the saint of the contemplation of self, and of that of the Lord and his redeeming love.

Job was a man full of grace, but he looked at the effect of the grace on himself, not in the graciousness of the Giver. Self is at the bottom of both evils. Job had thought of his own testimony, not of the Lord, who is the Creator of all things. In chapter xxix. all is "I," "I," "me," "my," as in the first portion of the 77th Psalm, and in Romans vii.; but at the end he repents in dust and ashes, learns what God is in Himself, and abhors himself. It was at the root of the very error of the Pharisee, who contemplated what God had wrought (as he imagined) in himself, and even thanked God for it, but thoughts of what God is in Himself were far from him.

God has given us the antidote to both these evils in the way He closed the Scriptures. John's writings were all given together about 30 years after the death of Paul, when ravenous wolves had got into the assembly. They teach us to contemplate the Father and the Son; they show us the Father Himself and his great love. They are addressed to individuals, not to bands of Christians.—Yours in the Father's love, G. Warrand Houghton.

7, Oxford and Cambridge Mansions, N.W.

EPH. V. 26.

Dear Sir,—In "Expository Notes" in this week's Christian, there is an able and convincing refutation of the notion that in John iii. 5 "water is equivalent to the Word"; but the position here so well maintained is afterwards well nigh surrendered by the remark that in Eph. v. 26, "water is used as a symbol of the Word."

Is it not more correct to say that the cleansing by the washing of water spoken of in Eph. v. 26, is explained by the appended words "by [or "in"] the Word" to be that cleansing, which is conveyed by the Gospel received and believed? "The Word" here cannot mean Scripture, as the Greek expresses the spoken rather than the written Word, and is the same as that used in 1 Pet. i. 25: "This is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you."

But surely, as the writer so well maintains as to John iii. 5, we must not deny the obvious reference of "water" to baptism. Not, of course, in the materialistic way of regarding the rite as of itself conveying the blessing, but as the appointed symbol and explanatory sign of the source of the blessing. Rom. vi. 3 leaves us in no doubt as to what that source is. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death." This is "the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness." This is the element which "cleanses us all from all sin" (1 John i. 7). We must beware of allowing Scripture or the Gospel, instrumental though they doubtless are in conveying the blessing, to take the place of the cleansing element itself, typified by water, which can be none other than the death, as a propitiation for sin, of the Lord Jesus Christ. To this I have no doubt even John's baptism pointed anticipatively (see Acts xix. 4), and Christian baptism points retrospectively.

The best antidote to the exaggerated and delusive language often used of the sign, is to look through it to the thing signified. But it will not do to let the water of baptism signify either Scripture or the Gospel, but only that cleansing element to which both Scripture and the Gospel point as alone effective in putting away sin, viz.: "the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. ix. 26). Henry E. Brooke.

Beckenham.

CLAIMING BLESSING.

Dear Sir,—In answer to the letter of a beloved brother in the Lord which appeared in your issue of October 5, I would say, it appears to me that in the spirit of humility and by simply taking God at his word, we may "claim" the blessing we need, when we are assured that what we ask is in accordance with the mind of God. We simply "claim" what our loving Father in his infinite grace has already given us in Christ, for all the promises of God are "Yea" and "Amen" in Him. Hence they are our portion and inheritance—made over to us in Divinest certainty and assurance.

God has given us his own infallible word that "He will supply all our need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Upon this ground can we not humbly lay "claim" to the grace, wisdom, strength, and every needed mercy already secured to us by the gift and promise of our God?

If an earthly parent gives or promises to a child a certain portion, has not the child a right to "claim," by virtue of the gift or promise, what the parent has in love bestowed? But while this is greatly for our consolation and joy, may we ever be far removed from any spirit of irreverence or presumption, while in lowliness of heart we grasp in the power of faith the "exceeding great and precious promises."—Yours very sincerely, Alfred Page.

Fir Cottage, Aylsham, Norfolk.

REPRESENTATIVE MISSIONARIES.

Dear Sir,—Allow me space for two corrections in your notes on my address at the Baptist Missionary Society breakfast lately. Your reporter confused the number of missionaries under that society (120) with the number of penny-a-day subscribers needed to raise £150 per annum. As one penny a day represents £1 10s. 5d. a year, I said that only 100 subscribers were needed (literally ninety-nine are sufficient) to produce the above sum.

But it was not at all my suggestion that separate congregations should have a missionary assigned to them by the societies, irrespective of any previous connection between that church and the missionary; as I believe that such an artificial expedient tends rather to contract the sympathies of subscribers from the general work to that of the assigned missionary. My proposal was that where one offers for missionary work and is sent out, the congregation to which he belonged at home should become responsible for part or all of his expenses abroad, over and above their existing contributions to mission work. In this way the support for the fresh 100 missionaries of the B.M.S. could be easily obtained. Thus the idea of the first model missionaries—sent out by the Antioch church to which they previously belonged, and becoming the personal representatives of that church—would be reproduced in our Church to-day.

Nothing is more natural, when God's Spirit is calling out one from a congregation to foreign service, than that He should at the same time make the other members of it ready to take up their share in the work. Thus the greatest sacrifice of the life in the one will be supported by the lesser sacrifice of means in the others. Ezra i. 4 is the exact picture to fit the case before us: "And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God." Hubert Brooke.

Reading, October 14.

CHEAP MISSIONARIES.

Sir,—I have been much interested in the correspondence in The Christian on "Cheap Missionaries," but may I ask how it is that missionaries are expected to be "cheap" at all? I have been for six years a member of a mission which does not guarantee any salary to its agents, and I have always adhered to the principle of dependence on God alone for my support, and have not found my trust misplaced. But it is distressing to me to find the Lord's people discussing how little they need pay for the work to be done which their departing Saviour left in trust to all his Church.

Allow me to suggest the following considerations in favour of well-paid missionaries—(1) A missionary has the same responsibility to practise self-denial as any other Christian, and no more. (2) He has already enough to bear—expatriation, lack of Christian fellowship, the indifference and often hostility of the natives to himself and his message, the chilling influence of evil and unbelief on every side of him—without compulsory poverty, and the impossibility of voluntary denial of self for the Master's sake.

(3) An efficient missionary is necessarily a man who would have been successful in some other employment, and ought to be a man of good education and ability. Why should he be cut down to the lowest possible living rate, and exposed to the temptation of regretting his self-consecration, or of accepting some more lucrative post, such as his experience and attainments sometimes open up to him abroad?

(4) Why should he be disabled to perform his duties of husband in sickness, father in educating his children, son in helping aged or poor parents, friend in sympathy in distress, and with no other reason than the relief of selfish or thoughtless brethren at home?

Surely, in view of the Lord and Master's return, it is wrong—yea, grievous to Him who emptied Himself for all sinners—that the workers should be so few, and the amount given by the Lord's people for their maintenance so pitiably out of all proportion to the silver and gold in their hands. I know from experience that very many missionaries have to live on £30 or £40 a year, and that irregularly received and precarious. I also know very many houses of Christian people and supporters of missions which are often luxuriously, in any case unnecessarily lavishly, furnished and maintained. In such houses one's thoughts recur very sadly to sick, weary, unencouraged missionaries, "living from hand to mouth" themselves, and utterly unable to help in the misery and squalor surrounding them.

Yours in Christ's service,

Sandown, I.W., October 14. G. B. Michell.

POSTCARDS.

TEMPORAL JUDGMENTS.

These are often a blessing to transgressors—their salvation. Count Zinzendorf mentions a clergyman in a Saxon village, in 1730, who felt condemned for his careless ministry. After happy and humble preparation on a usual day of fasting and prayer, he presented himself before his church as an example, and exercised on himself what is called church discipline. Thereupon he is said to have fallen down dead, with these words:

My sin is deep and very great,
And fills my heart with grief.
Oh, for thy agony and death!
Grant me, I pray, relief.

He is, no doubt, says the Count, more blessed, and his remembrance more honourable, than thousands of others who are praised by their colleagues in funeral discourses as faithful pastors, and are condemned in the invisible judgment as dumb dogs, wolves, or hirelings.

VILLAGE WORK IN IRELAND.

Since April last, Lieut. Foord, of Athlone, has conducted evangelistic services at Baylin with much acceptance and blessing. The meetings are held on alternate Sunday evenings in a small schoolhouse on the estate of Lord Castlemaine. A series of services was held from Sunday, October 15, to Friday, October 20. The meetings were well attended, many coming from a distance. Baylin is a small village, and is only served spiritually by the Episcopal Church in Ireland once fortnightly; the country people gather together willingly and listen earnestly and attentively to the Gospel message. Brethren, pray for us, that the seed sown may bear abundant fruit. W. L. T. F.

Athlone.

Dr. J. G. Paton in Scotland.

Dr. Paton's first public appearance since his arrival in this country was in Falkirk on Sunday, October 15, a day long to be remembered by both young and old. Dr. Paton conducted services in the Parish, Free, and U.P. churches. A united meeting of all the Sunday-schools was held in the large parish church in the afternoon, when there would be about 2,200 boys and girls present, with their superintendents and teachers, every seat and passage in the spacious edifice being packed.

The venerable missionary said it was worth coming to Falkirk twice over to witness such a sight. Dr. Paton's visit, coming so close after the National Conference of the Y.M.C.A. in the town, has had a wonderful effect in deepening the interest in foreign missions. One bright boy after going home said to his father, "Father, I am going to be a missionary." Who can tell but this may be a future Moffat, Livingstone, or Paton? A lady who had been at one of the services met her minister on Monday forenoon in the street, and said, "There's £1 for Dr. Paton's mission, as I had not my purse with me yesterday." His touching appeals have a wonderful effect in emptying the pockets, and softening the hardest of hearts.

LAST WEEK was one of great importance in temperance circles in the United States, the whole six days being occupied at the World's Fair in Chicago by the Conventions of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and of the National Union.

The Book World.

A Valuable Bible Help.

The Bible by Modern Light is the very appropriate title given to the new edition, largely rewritten, of Dr. Cunningham Geikie's well-known work "Hours with the Bible." The first volume of the handsome re-issue follows the story from the Creation to the time of the Patriarchs. (6s. Nisbet & Co.) We cannot better describe the work than by saying that it is the cream, carefully taken, of a large library of ancient and modern books having for their object the unfolding of the Bible story. A wealth of expository and illustrative information is given, from historical, geographical, archæological, and philological sources; the many attractive and thrilling narratives of the book of Genesis being set forth in the language of to-day, with idioms resolved and difficulties squarely met. Every chapter is in a high degree valuable, and in point of precision and detail the book will meet the requirements of all. The work has involved much independent research, and its use will amply reward earnest Bible students.

Mr. Meyer on the Epistle to the Hebrews.

The Way into the Holiest: Expositions of the Epistle to the Hebrews. By F. B. Meyer, B.A. It has been beautifully said that, like Melchizedek of old, of whom its central portion treats, the Epistle to the Hebrews marches forth in lonely, royal, and sacerdotal dignity, being, like him, "without genealogy," inasmuch as it bears no name of author or designation of the precise community to which it was addressed. The book gives us a glimpse of the glory of the Ascended Christ; it points "the way into the holiest," and cultivates in the soul an attitude of confident and expectant "looking unto Jesus." Leaving aside merely critical questions, Mr. Meyer remarks in the preface of his deeply instructive book, that in every sentence we can detect the authorship of the Holy Ghost, and feel that the Epistle has a message for the universal Church in all ages. When the chapters appeared in our columns, many readers declared that the perusal of them was a real means of grace. As the Epistle treats of doctrine in order to elaborate practical exhortations, so the author of these studies aims at deriving spiritual lessons from the New Testament interpretation of the Levitical ritual. The sacrificial death of Christ is as prominent an element in the exposition as it is a fundamental fact in the Epistle, so that the volume is soundly theological as well as experimentally helpful. (Cloth, 2s. 6d.; presentation edition, 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

Sir William Dawson's New Book.

Some Salient Points in the Science of the Earth. By Sir J. William Dawson. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This deeply interesting and valuable work is declared by its author to contain "much that is new, and much in correction and amplification of that which is old." It is intended as a closing deliverance on some of the most important questions of geology, and embodies the maturest conclusions and impressions of its veteran author. The eighteen chapters deal with a great variety of topics; the style is readable, and the tone, it is needless to add, responsible and sober. The attractive character of the essays may be judged from some of their titles:—"World-making," "The Dawn of Life," "The Great Ice Age," and "Early Man." The concluding topic, "Man in Nature," leads the author to make a brief statement on the Christian faith and hope. After showing that man's "many inventions," his "fall," have injured him in his natural relations, and that Christianity reveals to us the perfect Man, whose mission is to restore the harmonies of God and humanity, he says: "If it is true that nature now groans because of man's depravity, and that man himself shares in the evils of this disharmony with nature around him, it is clear that if man could be restored to his true place in nature he would be restored to happiness and to harmony with God; and if, on the other hand, he can be restored to harmony with God, he will then be restored also to harmony with his natural environment, and so to life and happiness and immortality. It is here that the old story of Eden, and the teaching of Christ, and the prophecy of the New Jerusalem strike the same note which all material nature gives forth when we interrogate it respecting its relations with man." There are many illustrations, and the pages are instructive in a high degree.

The Biblical Illustrator: The Acts, Vol. II. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) This volume of over six hundred pages deals with chapters ix. to xvii. inclusive. It is a compilation of great value, giving many hundreds of condensed sermons, outlines, and illustrative facts.

Darton's Leading Strings is a capital book of pictures and stories for the young. (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.)

The Silver Link. Vol. II. of this attractive monthly contains serial stories, sketches, and articles at once healthful in tone, and instructive in substance. (2s. Sunday School Union.)

The Boys' Mail Bag, a monthly illustrated record for post-office messengers, is a bright penny monthly paper. (Partridge.) By arrangement with the editor, Miss Synge, 4, Vanbrugh Park-road, Blackheath, S.E., it may be localised.

Alexander Mackay, missionary hero of Uganda, has been added to the "Splendid Lives" series of the Sunday School Union (1s.), by the author of "The Story of Stanley." It is a capital little book, and calculated to interest as well as instruct young people.

A new incentive to Bible study has been framed, which at once affords occupation for Sunday hours, and a basis for improving intercourse as well as a consecutive study on selected Scripture topics. The Bible Treasure Seekers' Game, published by Messrs. Caswell, Birmingham (1s. 6d.), will reward the attention of Sunday-school teachers, Christian parents, and workers generally.

The Homiletic Review for October is a good specimen number. Professor T. Harwood Pattison writes ably on "The Minister's Literary Culture," and Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts on "The Model Church." Rev. W. C. Newell answers the question "What is True Preaching?" and Dr. Philip Schaff contributes "Homiletical Suggestions." The collection of sermons and outlines includes much really valuable matter. (1s. monthly. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street.)

Henry Ward Beecher, the Shakespeare of the Pulpit. By John Henry Barrows. (Funk & Wagnalls.) In the preface the author says, "I have aimed to give, in swift, flowing narrative, the story of Mr. Beecher's spiritual inheritance, his interesting early development, his various achievements, sorrows, and triumphs. The main theme of the book is Mr. Beecher's richly endowed personality, and to a large extent he has been allowed to speak for himself." Whatever estimate we may have formed of the man, we cannot doubt that he took a powerful part in many movements in America, and exercised a worldwide influence. Dr. Barrows writes as an admirer, but his book is not a mere eulogy but a very readable biography, compiled after a study of the large literature which has gathered round Mr. Beecher's name. The book belongs to the very useful "American Reformers" series, edited by Dr. Carlos Martyn.

The Early Spread of Religious Ideas, Especially in the Far East, by Joseph Edkins, D.D., Shanghai, China. (3s. Religious Tract Society.) Long residence among the adherents of Eastern religions has qualified the author of this compact little work to speak with authority. He maintains that language shows that in the early days there was one common speech and religious worship, and that the monotheism of China and Persia is a survival of the revelation made to Enoch, Noah, and others of the patriarchs. The book is a valuable contribution to apologetic literature, by one of the most distinguished Oriental scholars of our time. Of the book of Genesis, Dr. Edkins says: "The higher criticism of the passing hour tells us it is legendary. The investigation of Eastern religions appears to me to show that Genesis is historical, and is our best guide in seeking to know the origin of religious ideas."

Rev. William Adamson, Vicar of Old Ford, E., has written a vigorous Letter of Protest to the Bishop of Rochester, with reference to his lordship's speech in the Upper House of Convocation in July last, on Lord's Day Observance. An appendix deals with the ordination, obligation, and observance of the day. (Edinburgh: Sabbath Observance Society, 34, St. Andrew-square.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Digby, Long & Co.—Gleanings from Thoughtland, by "Fernleaf."

From Hodder & Stoughton.—The Holy Spirit in Missions. By A. J. Gordon, D.D. (3s. 6d.)

From Elliot Stock.—The Day of Preparation; or, The Gathering of the Hosts to Armageddon. By Burlington B. Wale.

From James Nisbet & Co.—The Biblical Illustrator—Acts, Vol. II., by Rev. J. S. Exell, 7s. 6d.; Betting and Gambling, by Major Seton Churchill, 1s. 6d.

From James Clarke & Co.—The Pilgrim in Old England: A Review of the History, Present Condition, and Outlook of the Independent (Congregational) Churches of England. By Amory H. Bradford. (5s.)

From the Sunday School Union.—The Silver Link, new vol., 2s.; Keith's Trial and Victory, 3s. 6d.; In the Grip of the Algerine, 3s. 6d.; Girls of Cliff School, 2s.; Vulcan's Revenge, 1s.; Browning Boys, 4d. and 1s.; Heirs of Dene Royal, 4d.; Golden Mill, 4d.; Bertha Pemberthy, 4d.

From S. W. Partridge & Co.—Annual volumes: British Workman, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d.; Band of Hope Review, 1s., 2s.; Children's Friend, 1s. 6d., 2s.; Infants' Magazine, 1s. 6d., 2s.; Family Friend, 1s. 6d., 2s.; Friendly Visitor, 1s. 6d., 2s.; Mother's Companion, 1s. 6d., 2s. Dorothy's Training; or, Wild Flower or Weed? by Jennie Chappell (2s.); Living it Down, by Laura M. Lane (2s.); Mick Tracy, the Irish Scripture Reader, by the author of "Tim Doolan, the Irish Emigrant" (2s.).

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

Mr. Hodgson Pratt, of the Peace and Arbitration Society, addressed meetings in Oxford on Saturday last, and it is hoped that the result may be the formation of a branch of the society.

The list of speakers at the University Missionary Union for this term is an exceptionally good one, and bids fair to be of keen interest. The Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot has succeeded to the Presidency.

Sermons in aid of the Wesleyan Missionary Society were preached on Sunday week and on Sunday last by Rev. T. Tunbridge, of British Guiana, and Rev. T. D. Barnes, of Egypt, and the annual meetings followed the sermons.

Manchester College, the new Unitarian addition to Oxford colleges, was opened last week. In spite of the announcement that its membership will be open without any restriction, one would have thought that the well-known Unitarian antecedents and management of the institution would have been a reason why some of those who value the truth in Christ Jesus should have abstained from giving the opening their countenance.

The custom which has been in existence in Cambridge for some time of having a "Freshmen's" sermon at the commencement of the academical year has been very wisely followed in Oxford this time, when Rev. F. J. Chavasse preached at St. Peter-le-Bailey to a good gathering of men. It is interesting to compare the subject of Mr. Webster's recent "Freshmen's" sermon at Cambridge with that by Mr. Chavasse in Oxford. "Now then do it" (2 Sam. iii. 18), and "So did not I" (Neh. v. 15).

The annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held on Monday, when Sir Richard Temple presided, and the principal speakers were Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. F. E Lawes, of the L.M.S. in South Sea Islands. The meeting was held in the fine rooms of the Examination Schools, and attracted a large and representative gathering, and one which must certainly be greatly used on behalf of the society. Sir Richard Temple's high position, Mr. Stock's wide experience, and Mr. Lawes's devoted work gave to the meeting unusual interest, and made the anniversary very successful.

CAMBRIDGE.

Archdeacon Sinclair preached on Sunday evening in Christ Church in aid of the Church Pastoral Aid Society.

A missionary week was concluded at St. Barnabas Church with a public meeting in the school room, on Monday last, when Mr. Ruttonji Nowroji, of the Central Provinces of India, gave an address.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule preached on Sunday evening in Holy Trinity Church from Romans xii. 2. The quiet persuasiveness and deep spirituality of these evening sermons influence many University men very deeply.

Rev. J. Barton, who through recent years has taken so prominent a part in evangelical work in University circles, has been chosen by the committee of the Church Pastoral Aid Society to succeed Rev. J. I. Cohen as the society's secretary.

A combined meeting of University missionary bands was held at the Henry Martyn Hall on Tuesday week, when Mr. Eugene Stock spoke on the gratitude with which he viewed this steadily growing type of missionary organisation, and eloquently appealed for more assistance in the foreign field.

At the meeting of the Cambridge Intercollegiate Christian Union in the Alexandra Hall, Rev. T. J. Madden gave the address to a large gathering of University men. His address was based upon Exodus iv. 23, dwelling chiefly upon the fact that deliverance must precede service, made practically ours by the indwelling of Christ, resulting in the gradual transformation of the believer—a transformation conditioned by hourly waiting upon God.

Rev. P. Ireland Jones gave a highly interesting account of missionary work in Calcutta at the weekly meeting of the Cambridge Church Missionary Union in the Henry Martyn Hall. He has been working for eight years in Calcutta, previously to which he was the first Vice-Principal of Ridley Hall. After an appeal from Rev. H. C. G. Moule for new members of the Union and a testimony to the reality of its work in the past, Mr. Jones spoke upon the chief features of popular Hinduism. In some aspects it is linked with a great intellectual revival emanating from Calcutta. An educated Hindu said recently—"Idolatry is going down, not before theology, but before Tyndall and Huxley." Yet abiding and real work is being done by means of personal influence—"one-man audiences."

THE Y.M.C.A.

Classes for Bible students on "Inspiration" are to be conducted at Aldersgate-street on the Tuesday evenings in November by Canon Girdlestone, M.A.

The annual tea and public meeting of the Hereford Y.M.C.A., which was largely attended, was held in the Corn Exchange. Rev. J. Askwith was in the chair.

Sunday evening "At Homes" have been re-started by the Ipswich Y.M.C.A. On the first occasion a hundred young fellows attended at the invitation of the Mayor and Mayoress.

The Sunderland Association held its annual meeting on the 17th under the presidency of Mr. Thomas Rutherford. The membership was reported to be 661, and the accounts showed a balance in hand.

The Ross Y.M.C.A. held its second anniversary on October 17 in the new rooms in the Crofts, Mr. Alderman Blake in the chair. Addresses were given by Revs. J. S. Maben, W. A. Wicks, Mr. H. Southall, and others.

Mr. R. Henderson Smith has issued a useful booklet (to be had from the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A., 1d.) on the work of the Association among juniors, and containing many good hints as to how to get hold of the lads early and interest them in the Y.M.C.A.

The annual report of the Islington and Highbury Association shows that during the past year 53 new members have been added, while the various branches of work have been vigorously carried on. The open air and evangelistic services have been greatly blessed. The work among the lads has been most encouraging. The educational and social side of the work have also gone on remarkably well.

The English Year Book for 1893, issued a few days ago, shows 36 Associations conducting separate junior sections, with a membership of 2522. Of the large Associations that have made special provision for the juniors, Bristol and Sheffield are perhaps the more conspicuous. The junior membership at Aldersgate-street is 180; Bristol, 200; Birkenhead, 200; Liverpool (Central), 196—North, 210; Peckham Rye, 140; Sheffield, 88; and Wakefield and Middlesbrough, 130 each.

The North Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s held its annual Conference at Derby on Wednesday; 150 delegates were present. The anniversary of the Derby Y.M.C.A. was celebrated in the evening, when a crowded and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Temperance Hall. Mr. Bemrose was in the chair, and addresses were delivered by Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Souttar, and others. The secretary, Mr. Yapp, had a most encouraging report to present.

Rev. F. B. Meyer has resumed his weekly Bible lectures to young men at the City of London Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Saturday afternoons, from three to four o'clock. This session he has selected the topics of the Sunday-school International series, which will form a great attraction to those who have to deal with the lesson on the following day. Last Saturday, the first meeting since the vacation, the attendance exceeded 150 young men. All young men will be heartily welcomed.

The fourteenth Conference in connection with the Southern District Union was held at Bournemouth, on Thursday last. Delegates were present from Bramshaw, Blandford, Dorchester, Bournemouth, Wimborne, Winchester, Portsea, Portsmouth, and Ryde. The subject for consideration was "power for service." This was opened in an address by Rev. E. N. Thwaites. A large public meeting was held in the Shaftesbury Hall in the evening, when evangelistic addresses were given by Rev. E. N. Thwaites, and Major Liebenrood.

How can we, writes Mr. R. H. Smith, utilise the juniors in the ordinary Bible study and fellowship meetings? Among recent attempts to solve this problem, I know of none more interesting than the experiment of the Bridge of Allan Y.M.C.A. They have for two sessions entrusted the introduction of the subject to a senior and a junior member. The latter is expected to do no more than paraphrase the subject, and put it into words of his own. This plan has awakened a deal of interest among the youths, has secured their attendance at the morning meetings, and has put the seniors on their mettle.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The twenty-first anniversary of the Reading branch has been celebrated with great interest.

Mrs. Keith has held a special mission to young women, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. in Brentford.

Under the auspices of the Falmouth Y.W.C.A., a series of meetings has been conducted by Miss Radcliffe, daughter of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. Gospel addresses have been given at the Town-hall, and Bible readings at the Y.W.C.A. Rooms.

The Windsor and Eton branch has opened its new session with a "rallying tea," following this with a week of meetings by Miss Hull, of Eastbourne. It was a time of real, true, deep, and lasting blessing, and at the praise meeting over twenty stood up and gave testimony to blessing received. Now our winter's work is in full swing, and our programme is an attractive one, each night being filled up. We have begun Sunday evening evangelistic meetings, after church hours, in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A., each Association providing its own speaker.

An old member of the Y.W.C.A., of Melbourne, who has lately returned from the Colonies, furnishes us with a few particulars of this Association, recommending it to the notice of any sister outward-bound. The Association is now in its tenth year, and the building in Spring-street is replete with every comfort. A most important work is the Travellers' Aid Department, no less than 270 strangers having passed through the house during the past twelvemonth. The Employment Agency is another valuable and beneficial branch, as many a member and stranger can thankfully vouch for. The different missions connected with the Association are carried out with the same regularity and earnestness as the services and classes at its headquarters and ever-extending branches.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

At Denton Congregational Church a Y.P.S.C.E. has been formed.

A society has been formed in connection with the Stead Memorial Church, Howdon.

Eighty new members were enrolled the other evening at the meeting of the Y.P.S.C.E. in Godalming.

The Christian Endeavourers in America are to a large extent adopting the principle of systematic giving.

The latest statistics of the Y.P.S.C.E. show that twenty-five societies in Scotland have been registered by the Council.

On November 1st, a Convention of Christian Endeavourers will be held in connection with the annual meeting of the Tabernacle Society, Lewes.

In connection with the Sunday-school Convention being held this week in Birmingham, an aggregate meeting of Christian Endeavour Societies is to be held this evening in Carr's Lane Chapel.

Committees should be organised with a view to preparing the younger and more diffident members for greater efficiency. It would be well in many cases if the society, when electing its officers, should also elect the chairman of each committee, care being taken to select one of the older and more active members, and then put on the committee two or three of those who are younger, and have had less experience.

The prayer meeting topic for the week beginning October 29th, is "Our responsibility for others," 1 Cor. viii. 10, 11; Rom. xiv. 12-19. Endeavourers who mean to fulfil their pledge by taking part in the meeting will find considerable help in studying the following passages:—Gen. iv. 9, 10; Rom. xv. 1, 2; 1 Cor. viii. 13; Heb. x. 24; Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; 1 Cor. ix. 16, 19-23, x. 23, 24, 32; Philippians ii. 14, 16; 1 Peter ii. 12.

It is suggested that local Conventions and Union meetings during this winter should be largely devoted to the earnest consideration of committee work. Those who are called upon to arrange programmes for such meetings will be wise in giving heed to this. One secretary writes: "I find it difficult to get our committee to realise the great scope for work which lies within their reach." And this is far from being a solitary lament.

The Christian Endeavour movement is doing much to revive the use of a word recently too much neglected: the word Conversion. An analysis of the reported conversions through the agency of the Y.P.S.C.E. during the last four years shows that in that time, taking the world round, four hundred and thirty thousand associate members have been won for Christ. Thus God has blessed Christian Endeavour as an evangelistic agency!

TORQUAY.—Pastor Julius Rohrbach, of Berlin, preached in the Chelston Mission Hall on Sunday week. The hall and adjoining school-room was crowded. His earnest and eloquent Gospel address was much blessed. The Lord is greatly blessing the work of this mission.

A CONFERENCE OF WOMEN WORKERS is to be held at the Albert Hall, Leeds, November 7 to 10 inclusive. Papers by experienced workers will be read on various phases of Christian work among women and subjects closely affecting their welfare Temperance, mission work, rescue work, etc., are among the topics chosen. All the speakers will be ladies, and the Conference is open to all ladies interested in work among women and girls.

IRISH NOTES.

The names of 197 children were added last week to the list of the Presbyterian Orphan Society.

A meeting to bid good-bye to Rev. H. L. Starr, who is being sent out by the Dublin University in connection with its Fuh-Kien Mission, was held last week in the Gregg Memorial Hall in that city.

A series of evangelistic services has been held in Donegal-street Congregational Church, Belfast, by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, of Birmingham. Similar meetings have been held in Kilcadden, co. Donegal, by Mr. Jackson, of Belfast.

A farewell meeting in connection with the departure of three lady missionaries, who are about to join the Dublin University Chota Nagpore Mission, North India, was held in the Gregg Memorial Hall, Dublin, on Monday week, Lord Plunket presiding.

A Young Men's Home, entitled "The Hewitt Memorial," was opened on Wednesday week in Belfast by the Lord Mayor (Sir D. Dixon). Although this institution is connected with the Young Men's Society of the Episcopal Church, any Protestant young man will be welcome to its advantages.

Speaking on Monday week at the annual Conference of the Belfast Episcopal Young Men's Society, Rev. R. C. Hallowes, of Arklow, said that he preaches every Sunday in the open air at six centres in Arklow, and that he had never experienced such happiness in doing God's work as during the last three years, simply because he had acted as God had bid him. Rev. Thomas Connellan, addressing the same meeting, said it would have been utterly impossible for him six years since to go back and labour as he is doing at present in districts where he had formerly worked as a Roman Catholic priest. God is using politics as a wedge to split up the people, and make them more accessible to the truth.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

At the Free Synod of Fife, which this year was held at Anstruther, the birthplace of Dr. Chalmers, for the first time since the Reformation, a conference was held on the question of how best to carry out the ideals of Dr. Chalmers's life.

At the annual meeting of the Baptist Union of Scotland, held in Edinburgh last week, encouraging reports were given in as to the blessing which had attended the home mission work of the Union. The Union now consists of ninety-five churches, and the membership stands at 12,688, a gain of 494 in a year.

Last week a most interesting meeting was held in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, to bid farewell to four lady missionaries going out to India. Dr. J. H. Wilson, of the Barclay Church, was in the chair, and delivered an address which moved the hearts of all present. He was followed by others, and the proceedings were felt by all to be singularly impressive.

Evangelistic work has been carried on for many winters back by Mr. George Ross on Sabbath evenings in the George A. Clarke Town Hall, Paisley, which is capable of holding upwards of 2000 people. On Sabbath the first of this year's meetings was held, when the Rev. Hugh Black, of Sherwood Free Church, Paisley, spoke to a crowded audience on "The Church and the Churchless," a subject which is exciting great attention in the West of Scotland.

A commendable practice is growing up in connection with the half-yearly meetings of Church Synods, at which the business is often of a very dry and routine nature, namely, to have a conference on some subject bearing on Christian life and work. Last week, at the close of the Free Church Synod of Dumfries, Mr. Thomson, of Lochend, read a paper, introducing the subject, "The spiritual condition of the Church at the Disruption and the present time."

A series of papers on aggressive work in Glasgow, which are appearing in The Scottish Weekly, are attracting considerable attention, and giving rise to much comment among Christian workers. Last week the revelations regarding the work of the Gospel away in the east-end of the city under Mr Evans have made a deep impression. He has bought the Globe Theatre there, and from that centre carries on active evangelistic work all the week through among the masses of the non-church-going that surround him.

HIGHWAY AND HEDGES MISSION.—Miss F. M. Reade writes that she is greatly in want of additional workers in the South Arcot Mission. The present most special need is that of a lady of education to take charge of two young girls of Mohammedan birth, and undertake the superintendence of the Mohammedan Girls' School. A lady medical missionary and a married missionary are also much wanted. Miss Reade, who is returning to India in December, may be communicated with, care of Miss Lowe, 8, Childebert-road, Upper Tooting, S.W.

Obituary.

MRS. PEDDIE, EDINBURGH.

Just as we are going to press, we receive an intimation of the death, on the afternoon of Monday (23rd), of Maria Denoon Peddie, so well and widely known as an earnest friend of missions, especially in Spain, and as editor of Times of Refreshing.

REV. DR. HUGHES.

Dr. John Hughes, a leading Calvinistic Methodist, died suddenly at Carnarvon on Monday, in his 67th year. He had been Moderator of the General Assembly in Wales, and also of the North Wales Association. He was the author of several theological works.

REV. H. Z. KLOEKERS.

The announcement that the first missionary sent out to China by the Baptist Missionary Society has just passed away, illustrates forcibly how brief, as yet, is the story of modern missions. Of Dutch nationality, Rev. H. Z. Kloekers, who died at Nieuwe Bekala, on October 10, aged sixty-five, was accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society, for China, in 1859. He had, however, at that date been already working in China in connection with an American society.

MR. JOHN GADSBY.

We regret to hear of the death of this veteran in service, who passed away, at the ripe age of eighty-four, at his residence, 12, Cambridge-road, Brighton, on Thursday week, after a long and severe illness. He was formerly the head of an extensive printing business at Manchester, where he printed some of the earliest railway guides, also the Anti-Corn Law Circular. He was the son of William Gadsby, a famous Strict Baptist minister in Manchester. He travelled extensively, especially in Eastern countries, and published among other books one entitled "My Wanderings," which attracted considerable attention. He published many works of a spiritual and doctrinal character after his retirement from active business pursuits in 1889, and was the proprietor of the Gospel Standard.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF ARMAGH.

The Protestant Archbishop of Armagh, Dr. R. B. Knox, died rather suddenly on Monday from heart disease. He presided at the meeting of the Diocesan Synod on the 10th inst., and on Saturday drove out with several members of his family. He was born at Dungannon Park, the seat of his grandfather, the Earl of Ranfurly, in 1808, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He was Bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore from 1849 to 1876, since which time he has been Archbishop of Armagh, and primate of all Ireland. He has published numerous ordination charges, sermons, addresses, and lectures. In 1842 he married Catherine Dehlia, daughter of Mr. T. Gibbon FitzGibbon, of Ballyseeda, county Limerick, and leaves a son and two daughters.

DR. PHILIP SCHAFF.

The death is announced of Dr. Philip Schaff, of New York, widely known as the president of the American Old Testament Revision Committee. He was one of the most learned Presbyterian divines of America. Born at Coire, Switzerland, in 1819, he studied at Tübingen, Halle, and Berlin. In 1842-3 he lectured in the University of Berlin, and in the last-named year was called, on the recommendation of Neander, Tholuck, and Julius Müller, to a professorship in the Theological Seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, of the United States German Reformed Church. Here he lectured for twenty years. In 1869 he became Professor of Biblical Literature in the Union Theological Seminary, New York, and lectured there successively on Christian Symbolics, Hebrew, and Sacred Literature; and in 1887 was appointed Professor of Church History. He was one of the founders of the American branch of the Evangelical Alliance, and was a delegate to the General Conferences. He received the degree of D.D. from the Universities of Berlin and St. Andrew's, and that of LL.D. from Amherst College. Dr. Schaff was a voluminous writer, the more important of his many works being "A History of the Christian Church," from the beginning of the Christian era to 1530 A.D., "The Creeds of Christendom," "The Person of Christ," and "A Dictionary of the Bible." He also edited many important works.

TWO DUTCH CHRISTIANS.

Holland has sustained a double loss in the death, first of Baron van Doorn van Westcapelle and ten days afterwards of Jonkheer Elout van Soeterwoude. The first named, Chamberlain to the late King William III., was almost the only lay preacher belonging to the Dutch nobility, and gave all his time and strength to holding up Christ before needy sinners. Five years after his conversion in 1867, he left active service at Court to devote himself more entirely to Christ's work, and became a very popular preacher, beloved by high and low. During the last years, owing to heart disease, it was often in pain and bodily weakness that he continued his loved and much blessed work, and he had the joy of seeing many brought to the feet of Jesus. His last short illness was a time of great physical suffering, but of wondrous gladness in his Lord, and of testimony for Him.

Jonkheer Elout was converted about 1825, and ever since held up the banner of the Cross. During a long political career at the Court of William II., in Parliament, in the Law Courts, and in the Council of State, devoted to his country and to the House of Orange, he was never ashamed of Christ and Him crucified; and although a strong anti-revolutionary in politics, he was always in the first place a Christian, and as such won the respect and reverence even of his opponents. In 1878 he headed a petition to the King, urging him to retain the Bible in the State schools, and when this was refused he joined with a few others in establishing Christian schools all over the country, and strengthening those already in existence. Although during the last eight or ten years he had retired from public life, his advice was constantly sought by politicians of widely differing views, his long experience, sagacity, and clear judgment enabling him to see the way out of many a difficulty. His chief joy, however, consisted in following the progress of the Redeemer's Kingdom all over the world.

REV. J. WYLIE, DUNDEE.

We regret to hear of the painfully sudden death of Rev. John Wylie, of Martyrs' Free Church, which occurred last week at the manse, Balgay-terrace, Lochee-road. On Sunday week he preached three times in his own church. In the evening he seemed to be in remarkably good spirits. He complained of a slight headache on Monday morning, and partook of breakfast in bed. Shortly after he was seized by an apoplectic fit. The doctors did all in their power, but Mr. Wylie was beyond human aid, and, never regaining consciousness, died about eight o'clock. Mr. Wylie was a native of Kilmarnock, where he was born fifty-two years ago. By the members of the Dundee Free Presbytery he was held in much respect, and was a devoted minister of the Church. Only six months ago Mr. Wylie suffered a sad bereavement in the death of his wife, who had proved a valuable helpmeet in all his duties. He is survived by three sons and a daughter, who in their affliction, having lost both parents within so short a period, will have the sympathy, not only of a large circle of friends, but of the community.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Henry Smith, whose former missions were much blessed at Nawton (Yorks.), is now holding a third mission there with many tokens of power and blessing.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are experiencing much of the Holy Ghost power in their mission at Southall. Each night the building is crowded, and great blessing is received. The afternoon meetings have been specially attractive and interesting. Not only are many drunkards being saved, and men and women quietly deciding for Christ, but believers from all the churches testify to being quickened.

Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have finished a special mission at Roughan, near Aughnacloy, co. Tyrone. Many have professed conversion to God. In three families eighteen professed to having received Christ. Frequently the large movable wooden hall was insufficient to hold the people, the overflow remaining outside during the delivery of the Gospel message.

Mr. James Wharton has closed a fortnight's Gospel work at the Gospel Hall, Coomassie-street, Pendleton. Many young men and women have decided for Christ, backsliders have been restored, and the people of God roused to work and bring others to hear the old, old story. He begins a ten days' mission at Northenden, Cheshire, to-morrow.—Harry Goldsmith.

Mr. John Anderson, of Dundee, has held a week's special mission at Havelock-place, Belfast. From the very commencement great interest was manifested in the meetings; the hall was packed night after night, numbers being unable to find admission; but best of all, "the power of the Lord was present to heal," and many persons professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour.—S. J. B.

Messrs. B. and F. Weaver have revisited Carlisle. Each evening the meetings have grown in power. Sabbath last was a day that will be long remembered. Men and women were affected all over the church by the power of God. Many boldly confessed Christ. One happy feature is the joy of seeing many of the young men and women who found Christ last February, with Bible in hand, working in the after meetings.

Chelmsford United Gospel Mission.—A series of special services has been held here by Mr. Henry Thorne. It is felt that these services have done much good, not only in reviving the spiritual life of Christians and leading to a reconsecration of themselves to the Master's service, but in bringing many to seek salvation. These meetings, which have been well attended, were held on the Sundays in the Corn Exchange and week evenings at the Public Hall.

Tamworth.—Mr. F. W. Jarry has held a mission in the Mission-room, Newton Regis, Tamworth. The Lord has manifested his presence, and the word was with power. Christians have been built up, and sinners have been pricked to the heart. One man who was in the meeting on Friday night was out with a team of horses on Monday, when they took fright, and he was killed in an instant. This cast a gloom over the place; it has caused many careless ones to think, and, we trust, to turn to the Lord. T. R.

Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues, Newcastle.—The mission to soldiers, held inside of the barracks, October 1 to 15, has resulted in much good. God gave us great blessing. Believers were quickened, and led to give up themselves "out and out" to the Saviour. Soldiers were saved, and are now giving a clear testimony to the saving power of Jesus. Two additional nights were given to the big girls and boys of the garrison, and God visited and saved several of them. Men and women came to the services who had not been to any place of worship for years. A. D.

The Paul and Silas Mission Car, sent out by Mr. Odell's Evangelists' Home, has met with great success these last three weeks round Birmingham. At Greet much good has been accomplished, and God's power has been manifested by the salvation of souls. On Sunday Mr. Turner, superintendent of the car, conducted united open-air and indoor services. At the close many testified as to the good they had received, and others told how they had accepted Christ at different services. The work still goes on. The Mission Car has now gone to King's Norton.

Belford, Northumberland.—Very helpful services were recently conducted in the Presbyterian Church by Mrs. Baeyertz, which resulted in several conversions and in much quickening. As the "harvest" appeared to be ready, Mr. C. L. Thorp was invited to conduct a ten-days' mission, while Mr. J. R. Mackenzie gave two or three days. The result was seen in well-attended services and a deep spirit of earnestness, while we trust many were helped on their heavenward way. On Wednesday (19th) Lord Radstock, being on a visit to the Earl of Tankerville, addressed a meeting in the church, when there was a goodly company present. We are now looking forward to a week's mission, to begin (D.V.) on the 29th inst., and to be conducted by Rev. J. More, of Cheltenham. "Brethren, pray for us." W. S.

Personalia.

Rev. Henry Evington has accepted the offer of the new bishopric in Japan.

Bishop Edward Bickersteth and his bride sailed from Liverpool on Saturday for Canada en route for Japan.

Prebendary Gordon Calthrop is stated to be better, but still unable to undertake pulpit work. Rev. A. R. Buckland preached at St. Augustine's on Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton, of the Cape General Mission, sail for the United States in the Etruria on November 4. They ask for prayer and a loving welcome across the Atlantic.

The Bishop of Liverpool has become a Vice-president of the National Protestant Church Union. The Bishop of Worcester and the Bishop of Sodor and Man had previously accepted the office.

Mr. W. Y. Fullerton, the well-known evangelist, has received a very hearty invitation to the pastorate at Melbourne Hall, Leicester. The proposal is one which cannot fail to occasion Mr. Fullerton much anxious consideration and prayer.

Mr. Crittenden, of the Florence Night Mission, New York, is on a visit to this country. He was present at the P.S.A. meeting at Christ Church, Westminster, on Sunday afternoon, and spoke of mission work among girls in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pearse, who have been staying at Geneva, are returning to Algiers this week in the hope that the Lord will open the way for continued service. They will be glad of prayer on their behalf. Their address will be Poste Restante, Algiers.

Dr. Dawson Burns, having been attacked by reason of his former association with the Liberator companies, has issued a statement of his relations with the concern. A letter is being largely signed by leaders in the United Kingdom Alliance, expressing entire confidence in Dr. Burns's integrity, and the hope that he may long be spared to do good service to the cause he has so much at heart.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	" "
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	" "
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols.	" "

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 " "	4s.	" "
12 " "	6s.	" "
24 " "	12s.	" "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Mrs. Rundle-Charles, author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family," and other works.

We have given a lengthy report of the meeting at Mildmay in memory of the late Sir S. A. Blackwood, not to glorify man but God, and because the records given were so encouraging and instructive and exemplary; touching Christian life and character and work at many points. We did not know how much he was until he was taken away. "Our blessings brighten as they take their flight."

Some of our friends have felt grieved by the last paragraph of our Prophetic Notes in our issue of October 19, as though we had attributed spiritual pride to those who taught the views to which we referred. We spoke what we conceived to be the tendency of those views, but had no idea of charging its results upon any of our brethren. Nevertheless, we regret that our language was so misunderstood, and willingly withdraw the paragraph.

We must, however, express our deepening conviction that the universal weakness in the Church of Christ, which we all deplore, while it is caused, on the one hand, by the Laodicean self-gratulation that says we are increased with goods, and have need of nothing, is caused also, on the other hand, by false conceptions and teachings as to the Gospel of God. We hope to write more fully on the subject in our next.

We have received several letters on "Claiming a Blessing," but the propriety of the term depends rather upon the spirit in which the claim is made than upon the use of the word. A claim may be preferred in a proud, unthankful, overbearing spirit, or with reverence and godly fear. If a thousand pounds were placed to our credit in the bank we should honour the donor by drawing cheques upon it, and thus claiming it. God has given a Saviour to the world, and the greatest dishonour men can do to Him is not to claim their portion in his Son. He has given us all spiritual blessings in heaven, and we honour Him by claiming them on the ground of his exceeding great and precious promises. For all the promises of God in Him are yea, and in Him, amen, to the glory of God by us.

We are gratified to note the firm stand the London County Council has taken on behalf of public morality in reference to the licensing of music-halls. In renewing the licence of the Palace Theatre of Varieties, it has refused to relax the restrictions as to the sale of drink and promenading in the auditorium. There are sufficiently good reasons for this action, and we are thankful for the way in which this public body resented the methods adopted by interested shareholders by letters and through the Press to force their hand. We shall welcome the day when these restrictions, which at present apply only to the more recently opened halls, will be applied to every one. The Council has done much during its years of being to purify the performances, and its endeavours to purge the auditorium will be appreciated in proportion to their more extended application.

The World's Fair at Chicago is now a thing of the past, and its record, whether for good or evil, is fixed. Whatever may have been the course of the Fair as an international industrial exhibit, it cannot be doubted that God has given the stamp of genuine and large success to the Gospel work carried on upon such a gigantic scale by the army of workers who have rallied under the leadership of Mr. Moody. Our pages from week to week have contained deeply interesting accounts of the special campaign, and our readers must have followed with prayerful attention the earnest endeavours made to carry the Gospel message to those gathered in Chicago from the ends of the whole earth.

Now that we have the assured prospect of again welcoming Mr. Moody and his helpers to London a year hence, it is time for us to be paving the way by combined prayer and planning. Hope unfolds a wonderful vista before the mind as we anticipate a lengthened campaign in our great metropolis, similar in scope, we trust, to that now closed or closing in Chicago. If Mr. Moody could see his way to transfer to our midst the chief helpers by whom he has been supported these past months, American and European, what great things might we not look for? Many other English friends would come to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and a new chapter might be begun in the religious history of the world.

The most encouraging feature of the Nonconformists' meeting at the Mansion House last week was the reiterated conviction that nothing could be effectually done by the churches, for the masses or classes of London, without a larger manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit. The following notice has reached us. It expresses a conviction widely, and we believe increasingly, felt:—

> There is much in the state of things around us which calls for prayerful waiting on God. While the powers of evil seem working with undiminished energy, there seems a need for a far greater manifestation of Divine Power to overcome them. Therefore some of God's servants in Southampton and the neighbourhood purpose to spend Wednesday, November 8th, as a day of prayer and fresh consecration to the service of God. The meetings will be held at the Shaftesbury Hall, at 11.30 a.m., 3.30 and 7.30 p.m. All who love our Lord are invited to join in united supplication. "Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full."

One of the most notable features of the "coal war" was the offer made last week by the owners of the Staveley Colliery Company to allow their men to return to work at a "living wage." Thus the language and idea of the men have passed into other minds—we would fain hope into the minds of the whole nation—to be a guiding principle in all settlement of wages, in the making of contracts, and in all arrangements between men and masters. The idea of manhood is gradually and surely superseding the idea of property, and property will not thereby suffer. The Manchester Guardian says:—

> Whatever may be the end now, the stoppage has assuredly knocked on the head the practice of contracting for the future supply of coals at prices inconsistent with the payment of fair wages.

Meanwhile the sufferings of women and children call for the utmost help that can be given.

The Daily News is publishing a series of articles by a "Special Commissioner" on the Labour Colonies of Germany, which are attracting much attention. The description of Wilhelmsdorf, "the restful island of the shipwrecked," is very pleasant reading, and the facts and principles set forth are full of instruction. Take only one. Something of a primeval forest had to be cleared away, and something of a Sahara had to be dug up.

> But the forest was not the most formidable obstacle. Below the surface of the treeless spaces was a layer of hard ferruginous earth, through which no moisture could penetrate. Dug up and thrown on the surface, it crumbles after a time into a soft mould and turns the waste into a fruitful soil. Of the eleven hundred acres belonging to Wilhelmsdorf, between five and six hundred have been reclaimed, and the reclamation is still going on—the breaking up and exposure of the hard layer forming one of the principal occupations of the winter months.

We often speak of uncultivated land as if it were the same as uncultivable; yet observation shows how, in every country, "the wilderness" has been turned into the "fruitful field." Human skill, industry, and perseverance can make almost any place habitable. The labours of Pastor Oberlin in the Alps and of Moffat in the Bechuana desert are illustrations. To these may be added the Dutch labour colonies, where the land, now blooming like a garden, is said to be worse than any land to be found in England. Our Heavenly Father has put more into "the earth which He has given to the children of men" than has ever been found out; He gave enough for every one.

Another point in Germany's treatment of her tramps deserves notice:—

> Even with their deficits, the labour colonies throughout Germany are, say taxpayers and social reformers alike, cheaper than relief by indiscriminate almsgiving. So strong and so increasingly prevalent is the public feeling on this subject, that one or two beginnings have been made in the direction of punishing the alms-giver as well as the alms-receiver.

The stern ideas of discipline which run through all German life are applied without pity to the man out of work:—

> In a matter of this sort our English notions of liberty are held to be irrelevant. Discipline, also, is a good thing, say the leaders of this social movement. And thus, for the sake of wiping out trampdom, districts and provinces grant yearly subsidies, and the charitable public their contributions, in aid of the colonies, as well as of the relief stations, to which I have already made one or two references. Almsgiving does not reclaim. The Labour Colony does.

The Parliament of Religions at Chicago has been marked by some vehement attacks by men of one religion on another religion, and Christianity, as was to be expected, has had a full share of the storm. Vive Rananda, the popular Hindu monk, says the correspondent of The Chronicle, denounced our commercial prosperity, our bloody wars, and our religious intolerance, declaring that at such a price the Hindu would have none of our boasted civilisation :—

You come, with the Bible in one hand and the conqueror's sword in the other—you, with your religion of yesterday, to us, who were taught thousands of years ago by our Richis, precepts as noble and lives as holy as your Christ's. You trample on us and treat us like the dust beneath your feet. You destroy precious life in animals. You are carnevores. You degrade our people with drink. You insult our women. You scorn our religion—in many points like yours, only better, because more humane. And then you wonder why Christianity makes such slow progress in India. I tell you it is because you are not like your Christ, whom we could honour and reverence. Do you think, if you came to our doors like Him, meek and lowly, with a message of love, living and working, and suffering for others, as He did, we should turn a deaf ear? Oh, no! We should receive Him and listen to Him, as we have done our own inspired Richis (teachers).

We all know that war, commercial prosperity, and shameful treatment of women, have nothing to do with Christianity, but we see also that heathen nations inevitably associate them with Englishmen, who, as a nation, profess to be Christians. They seem to say, "These be thy gods, O England!" But we must distinguish between Englishmen and Christians; between the seed of Adam and the seed of Christ; between the old creation and the new.

Mr. Edward Berdoe writes to The Star to protest against the recent action of the Royal College of Physicians in awarding the Baldy medal to Professor Schiff, "the notorious vivisector of Florence." Mr. Berdoe affirms, on the authority of evidence given before the Royal Commission, that this man vivisects 700 dogs every year. The vivisectors protested at Geneva in 1876, that during the past twenty-five years no one had heard in his laboratory a single cry of pain from animals under operation." And why? In his book on "The Physiology of Digestion," he had stated that he was in the habit of severing the nerves which supply the organs of the voice to prevent the victims who arrived at his laboratory "from giving too noisy nocturnal concerts, and so bringing discredit on physiological studies amongst the inhabitants of the quarter."

This confession of the Professor has been confirmed by M. Scholl, who says in his book "Ayez Pitié," that "an unexpected visit to Professor Schiff's laboratory (Florence) discovered the presence of a considerable number of living dogs with open wounds in their throats, which the professor confessed had been made by him to prevent the animals from howling and disturbing the neighbourhood." Now, if these things are so, they are a reproach to so-called science, and to the men who countenance them. Surely our English societies which have honours to bestow might make a more suitable selection than M. Zola, who writes books which it is criminal for an Englishman to publish, and Professor Schiff, who treats animals so cruelly, that we should lodge him in gaol for it if he did it here. International courtesies are pleasant, but we should select fit men on whom to bestow them.

EALING.—A conference on the deepening of the spiritual life was held in the Victoria Hall from October 17 to 20. The meetings were largely attended, and many expressed gratitude for stimulus received.

Savour.

There are flowers in whose perfume there is a savour or taste of their sweetness, so that the word not only means fragrance, but a taste of fragrance. In Scripture the term has a deep significance and practical lesson, as it defines an expected, personal attribute or quality in the children of God, which is a power for Him in the world, and his great pleasure. We know that the object of all the sweet incense, which so continually ascended to God in the Temple ceremonial under the Jewish dispensation, was but a type of something sweeter to come. If one carefully reads the account of this special compound in Ex. xxx., from the 31st verse, one is struck with the extreme minutiæ of detail employed concerning its construction, and the object; i.e. its entire appropriation by, and consecration to, God. There was a good reason for this, though not openly revealed until 1500 years after, when He, the One, Pure, Perfect Savour of Love and Life, even Christ, appeared, "Who gave Himself for us, an offering and sacrifice to God, for a sweet-smelling savour" (Eph. v. 2).

From that date the type became merged into the Divine Antitype, just as the morning and evening sacrifice of a lamb in the Temple was to disappear, when the Lamb of God came to take its place, bearing the sin of the world, the "rent veil" then showing the new and living way by which sinful humanity could approach God. But the spiritual sense of all these things still remains, though the material has passed away. There is no longer a temple at Jerusalem, but the "living stones" which form the Everlasting Temple of the Father, through his Spirit, are being built together from age to age for his dwelling-place to all eternity. So this precious savour, or fragrance, is still looked for by Him, in the members of this spiritual house, a "reasonable service" well pleasing unto Him (Rom. xii. 1).

Paul puts it thus in 2 Cor. ii. 14, 15: "Now thanks be unto God, who always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place." "For we are unto God, a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish"! Are we a sweet savour of Christ God-wards and man-wards? Do we fulfil this special mission of our high calling in Him? Is the sweetness of Christ made manifest to the world in all our life, and actions, and words? Can it be said of us as in Canticles i. 3: "Because of the savour of thy good ointments, thy name is as ointment poured forth: therefore do the virgins love thee"? Not our name, not our virtues, but His!

In the thirteenth verse of this same chapter we have a further development of this savour or fragrance through the presence of the King: "While the King sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof."

Is He so continually seated at our board, that the savour of his presence may be felt by everyone within our reach, that men may "take knowledge of us, that we have been with Jesus"? Alas, alas! for our savourless lives; alas! for the "dead flies" which so often befoul the beauty and sweetness of our Royal Guest; alas! for the hemlock corner of envy, hatred, strife, which we so often nourish in some hidden crevice of our being, which becomes a miasma of death unto death, instead of a "savour of life unto life," and which is defined by the Apostle Paul as "any root of bitterness."

"Salt is good, but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men." These are the Master's words.

He also says, "Ye are the salt of the earth." If we are the salt, then Christ is the savour! Is it so? Or is our salt like that spurious imitation found on the low marshy grounds in Palestine, and referred to by Him as worthless, because the savour is lacking? "Trodden under foot of men," because our life and conversation are so unattractive that those we seek to win will have nothing to do with us; and, alas! in rejecting us, how often it really means rejecting our Master whom we have dishonoured. May we then strive to cultivate that sweetness and fragrance which will really make us "a savour of life unto life" in this sin-stricken weary world (James iii. 17, 18).

Esculapia.

THE NEGLECTED CONTINENT.

This is the term which of late has been truly applied to South America. It is certainly remarkable how that vast region seems to have been so largely overlooked by Gospel lands. There has been a South American Missionary Society for many years, but its scheme of work, among English people and some aborigines, has not embraced the millions of the Spanish-speaking population.

At the Aldersgate-street noon meeting on Tuesday the interest was concentrated on this needy part of the world's surface. Mr. Torre, who spoke first, has resided in Buenos Ayres for four and a-half years. He is in the employ of a railway company, and his spare hours are devoted to evangelisation. He told how, on reaching the Argentine, he sought to advance the work of the Y.M.C.A.; now the Buenos Ayres Association is in a prosperous condition under the earnest secretaryship of Mr. A. Holder. Having had laid on his heart the condition of the natives in the city of Buenos Ayres, Mr. Torre was led to undertake Gospel work among them, and the results have been most cheering. Instead of concentrating the efforts on one spot, meetings were commenced in rented rooms here and there, so that the workers could come into closer touch with the people. Many souls have been won for Christ, and the work among the children has been specially encouraging. Mr. Torre emphasised the great need for more consecrated workers. He told of meeting a Franciscan monk who said he was one of a party of thirty who were going into South America, and were prepared to beg their bread from door to door while spreading the tenets of the Church of Rome. Would that English Christians showed a like spirit of self-sacrifice.

The few remaining minutes of the meeting were taken up by a brief survey of the great South American fields by Rev. A. M. Milne, who has acted as the agent of the American Bible Society for about thirty years. He spoke of work carried on by different Protestant churches among the Spanish-speaking people in Buenos Ayres, Monte Video, and Rosario; and also of isolated efforts in Chili, Peru, Brazil, and Columbia. Ecuador is without any Gospel work, and a mission at Venezuela had to be suspended owing to a revolution. There are in South America three millions of Indians; people of settled habits, and, having a language of their own, who have yet to receive the first ray of Gospel light. Speaking of his own special work, Mr. Milne said that over 350,000 copies of the Scriptures had been circulated in the country by the various colporteurs. A great deal of varied Christian effort has, of course, grown out of the Bible work, but of that there was no time for Mr. Milne to speak.

Mr. Torre goes back to South America next week; Mr. Milne and his wife have just come home on furlough, and hope in due course to return to their life-work in the neglected continent.

REV. E. N. THWAITES, of Salisbury, starts for a visit to India and Ceylon on December 19.

World-Wide Evangelisation.—5.

Julian, called the Apostate, is said to have counted it policy not to put the Christians openly to death, because he perceived they were like new-mown grass, the oftener it was cut down, the thicker it sprang again. (Gillie's Historical Collections, p. 7, Glasgow, 1754.)

Tertullian says that when Arrius Antoninus was Proconsul of Asia he severely persecuted the Christians. But the whole of them in that city where he at the time was, having as one man beset his tribunal, and openly confessing themselves to be Christians, he was so amazed at the multitude, that he caused only some few of them to be executed, telling the rest, if they had a mind to end their lives, they had precipices and halters enough at home, and need not come hither for execution. (Gillie's Collection, 11.)

But why take us back to those barbarous days and barbarous doings practised by heathen governors upon the early Christians?

(1) Because in this present year 1893, everyone who uses the Lord's Prayer prays in each of its first three petitions for the spread of the Gospel, and that to the very ends of the whole world.

(2) Because the same Lord who gave us that prayer commands every male and female Christian to be a reflecting lamp.

(3) Because when the magistrates apprehended Peter and John for letting their light shine, the converts ran together and appealed with united prayer to their Heavenly Father, not merely that Peter and John should disregard the command, but prayed that they themselves and all the converts, who then numbered in males, without counting females, five thousand, should, "with all boldness, speak thy word;" . . "and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and they spake the word of God with boldness" (Acts iv. 29, 31).

It may be said that was all right for Jerusalem and for Palestine. But that won't do. For next comes Paul with his legal warrant from head-quarters, to persecute the church at Jerusalem, and they (5000 men without counting women) were all scattered (viii. 1, 4), and all that were scattered went everywhere preaching the word—literally not preaching, if preaching is understood to be confined to preaching to a large number, but declaring the glad tidings.

The urgency for reiterating these simple and obvious truths will be seen at once if we refer to the account of the fearful and extensive persecutions now being borne by our fellow-Christians in Russia, described in The Missionary Review of the World, for October, p. 750. The following is an extract:—

Wonderful is the history of these humble Christians. Thirty years ago they were but a handful. At the time of the emancipation of the Serfs, less perhaps in number than the apostles. From that time on, the work began to spread in the same way as that recorded in the first chapter of St. John. As Andrew found Peter and Philip Nathanael, so, too, did these humble disciples find first one and then another, to whom they communicated the truth. The ones became twos, and so the work went on, until in fifteen years Southern, especially South-Western, Russia became dotted over with Stundist congregations, until, in thirty years, the small handful has become a mighty host, two hundred and fifty thousand strong, whose shadow, like a mighty tree, already covers the land. Such, in a word, is the history of the Stundist movement.

In the succeeding paper (No. 6) I will hope to suggest how this movement in Russia may become a practical example to American and European missionaries working amongst the heathen and Mohammedan populations of Africa and the world,

Reginald Radcliffe.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

In a recent issue a correspondent, "G.E.T.," asked the meaning of the expression "Gospel of the Kingdom" (Matt. xxiv. 14). At the Clifton Conference it was distinguished from the Gospel of the Grace of God (Acts xx. 24) and the Gospel of Salvation (Eph. i. 13), and explained as imposing duties and conveying privileges for those who acknowledge Christ as King. In most of the replies to the questions that have come to hand, it is shown that the term does not define any separate Gospel. One friend ("P.E.L.") says:—

It expresses the wider view of Christ's redemptive work—not simply the calling out of the Church nor the perfecting of the Bride, but the command to the nations, yea, and the whole world, to acknowledge Him as King of kings and Lord of lords.

Mr. Govett's view is set forth by others—that the kingdom in mystery exists already; the kingdom in manifestation is yet to come; that all believers are in the first; the second is to be gained by personal service. One correspondent explains:—

There are no degrees in eternal life; there are in the kingdom (Matt. v. 19; xi. 11; xviii. 1—4). Baptism is not necessary to obtain eternal life. It is to entrance into the kingdom (John iii. 5; Matt. xxi. 31, 32; Rom. vi. 5). That is to say, that an unbeliever loses his soul; an unbaptized believer loses the kingdom, but has eternal life.

Thus, the idea which "H. O." expresses, that the Gospel of the Kingdom emphasizes the goal or destination, has inspired most of the letters. Kingdom suggests territory; hence Mr. E. Davies (Old Charlton) asks:

Why did Christ teach us to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth," if he meant a kingdom in the skies, of which the Scriptures know nothing?

Mr. John Elliot, of Edinburgh, writes:—

The kingdom itself is not yet in outward manifestation established, but under the preaching of the Gospel of the Kingdom its future subjects—rather, perhaps, its rulers—are to-day being gathered out of all nations, by the grace of God through the Spirit's work among men.

Another correspondent, "A. V. S.," says:—

The Lord's kingdom is brought in, not by the preaching of the gospel of God's grace, which is alone preached and accepted by all those who shall form the Bride of Christ, but by judgment executed by the Lord's returning to the world in manifested power and glory.

But surely the sum of Scripture teaching regarding the Kingdom of God is more fundamental than a dispensational aspect; it is something higher than a mere phase of doctrine. It is not simply of a reign that it speaks; it speaks of God's Reign. It is not simply a new order of things that is implied, but the heavenly order—the Kingdom of Heaven. Putting the emphasis on the right word, removes many speculations and many difficulties. It is the Kingdom of GOD, in contrast with the rule of Satan and of fallen man.

When He had made man, God gave him a commandment. Man rebelled against God, asserting his own independence and setting at nought God's authority. This was sin, and it involved man's banishment from the Divine presence. In mercy and grace God strove tenderly with lawless man, and devised means whereby his banished ones could be restored to his favour. Thus the Reign of God has been brought near to man, and by some has been loyally acknowledged. Throughout the generations, however, the spirit of disobedience has been manifested by servants of the "prince of the power of the air," who has been "a liar from the beginning."

But God's power and purpose are not set aside by the defection of hosts who may follow Satan, or the rebellion of such as may be misled through them. He still "sitteth King for ever," and will reign until all his enemies have been subdued, and the whole creation shall combine to say "Just and true are thy judgments." There is no King like unto our God, of whose kingdom there shall be no end.

It is impossible to dissociate God's kingly prerogative from his power and glory, and the fact that, in his plan of the ages, He reserves a special display of these for a grand consummation, in no sense modifies his actual and eternal kingship.

It is good news for the world that God reigns and will reign: that righteousness is established "in the very heavens," and will, in the fulness of time, so prevail, that the kingdoms of the world will "become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ," God's reign, like Himself, spans the ages, and bridges past and coming eternities. As men say from the heart and with the life, "Thine is the kingdom," they become members of the Royal Family of Heaven, and "receive a kingdom which cannot be moved." This, in our judgment, is the kingdom which "by the word of the Gospel" is preached unto men.

It passed out of the line of father Adam, when the princes of this world crucified the Lord of glory; and was transferred to the sphere and region of resurrection life in the risen Christ. Therefore, in order to enter it, "ye must be born again."

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE SON OF MAN.

I remember hearing it stated many years ago, that the term "Son of Man," was used of Jesus in relation to the Jews. It appears to me on the other hand, that "man" relates to the race rather than to the nation.

When Nathanael said, "Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel," Jesus replied, "Thou shalt see greater things than these. Thou shalt see heaven opened and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man," i.e., the vision which your father Jacob saw, shall be fulfilled on Me, not merely as King of Israel in relation to the nation, but as "Son of Man" in relation to the whole human race.

When Jesus told his disciples, "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not, but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," He added, "Verily, I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come," i.e., until I be manifested in my relation to the race as the Saviour of the world.

In accordance with this, Jesus said to the typical Jew, Nicodemus, that "as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up," intimating to the teacher of Israel, as He had previously done to Nathanael, that the great and significant events in Israel's history were not confined to that nation, but were tokens of promise to all the nations of the earth, who were to be blessed through Abraham's seed.

"For God so loved the world, that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

In his last parable Jesus depicted all nations gathered before the Son of Man, sitting on the throne of his glory. (The Father "hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man.") Clearly these are not exclusively Jews, if Jews at all. A previous parable (that of the Ten Virgins) had been sealed with the admonition, "Watch therefore, for ye know not the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." The title Son of Man, used here, should give us pause, if there were no weightier reason, before concluding with some that this parable is exclusively Jewish. Jesus had likened the coming of the Son of Man to the days of Noah (which were not Jewish days), when all the inhabitants of the world save eight perished in the Flood.

We need to beware of the old Jewish supposition that man was created for the exaltation of the Jew; on the contrary, the Jew was elected in order to the blessing of mankind M.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the Late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXIII.

THE WILD BEAST FROM THE ABYSS—ITS WAR WITH THE SAINTS.

"I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them." "He shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and they shall be given into his hand."

"It was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them."

"And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

"They have shed the blood of saints and prophets."

"In her was found the blood of prophets and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."

The little horn of Daniel, the wild beast from the abyss, and Babylon the Great, are then all associated in the persecution of them "which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." They are, in fact, one and the same power, exhibited in different aspects, and therefore represented by different symbols. Babylon, the great apostasy, the adulterous and fallen Church, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, is so connected—yea, identified—with the wild beast, that she is exhibited as riding upon and supported by it—the ecclesiastical power of the seven-hilled city sustained by the temporal—and both together being the depositories of the draconic, or Satanic, energy and authority. As it is said that the ten kings give their allegiance to the beast, or temporal power of Rome, so also it is declared by the woman, or ecclesiastical power, that she "is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." They are one in their hellish source, their diabolical blasphemies, usurpations, and persecutions; they will be one in their terrible and everlasting doom.

Having seen how thoroughly the prophecies concerning the universal dominion and blasphemous utterances of the wild beast found their accomplishment in the history of Papal Rome, we have now to observe the crowning mark of identification furnished by the predictions of the fearful persecutions which she was to inflict upon the servants of God, and the fulfilment of which is recorded by the pen of history.

What is the curse, published in the Romish Pontifical, to be pronounced on heretics by Romish priests? Listen, yes, listen attentively, to its fearful terms:

"May God Almighty and all his saints curse them, with the curse with which the devil and his angels are cursed. Let them be destroyed out of the land of the living. Let the vilest of deaths come upon them, and let them descend alive into the pit. Let their seed be destroyed from the earth: by hunger, and thirst, and nakedness, and all distress, let them perish. May they have all misery, and pestilence, and torment. Let all they have be cursed. Always and everywhere let them be cursed. Speaking and silent let them be cursed. Within and without let them be cursed. By land and by sea let them be cursed. From the crown of the head to the sole of the foot let them be cursed. Let their eyes become blind, let their ears become deaf, let their mouths become dumb, let their tongue cleave to their jaws, let not their hands handle, let not their feet walk. Let all the members of the body be cursed. Cursed let them be standing, lying, from this time forth for ever; and thus let their candle be extinguished in the presence of God at the day of judgment. Let their burial be with dogs and asses. Let hungry wolves devour their corpses. Let the devil and his angels be their companions for ever. Amen, amen. So let it be, so let it be."

And through many centuries has Rome done her utmost to be as good as her words. Gigantic enterprises of extermination of Christian confessors were from time to time undertaken by the Pope, such as the religious wars against the Waldenses, and as the bloody crusade against the Albigenses, from which the ministers of Papal vengeance returned, saying, "We have spared neither age nor sex; we have smitten every one with the edge of the sword."

The populous and beautiful Val Louise in Dauphiny was deserted on the approach of the Papal army, the Waldenses fleeing to the mountains. They were pursued, caught, thrown headlong over precipices, dashed to pieces; those who took refuge in caves were suffocated by the smoke of fires lit in the cavern's mouth, 3000 men, women, and children, with 400 infants, being thus smothered in one case.

At the Lateran Council, A.D. 1179, a decree was issued against all heretics, forbidding any to harbour them while alive, or to give them Christian burial when dead. Innocent III. charged every bishop to gird himself for the work of extermination, and to employ both princes and people in the cause. At the sack of Beziers 60,000 Protestants were slain; the lands and goods of heretics were given to their murderers, and plenary indulgence to the day of death was granted to everyone taking part in the persecution.

The sufferings inflicted on the Vaudois in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries are too well known to need repetition. The wretched people were surprised in the night, hunted from rock to rock by the light of the flames which were consuming their homes, and ruthlessly slaughtered. Surrender did not save the men from butchery, nor the women from brutal and fiendish outrage. No quarter or succour was allowed to the fugitives. At Cabrières more than 700 men were put to death in cold blood, and the women were burned alive in their houses.

The "bloody ordinance of Gastoldo," issued in 1655, decreed that all who would not embrace the Catholic faith must quit the valleys within a few days. More than 1000 families were thus driven from their homes in the depth of winter to the shelterless recesses of the Alps. The villagers were persuaded to receive the 15,000 soldiers to whom the execution of the edict was entrusted in small detachments, and then the massacre was ordered which filled Protestant Europe with horror. Four thousand victims suffered death under cruelties too horrible to relate, and the carnage was repeated in valley after valley.

In 1686 a fresh persecution was organised against the remaining Vaudois by the Duke of Savoy, when unheard-of barbarities were committed on every age and sex, multitudes of the Protestants being consigned to prison, while their lands and possessions were divided amongst the Catholic soldiers. They slept on bare bricks, in dungeons thronged to suffocation, in the intense heat of summer, and the disease and death engendered were such that in six months only 3000 of the Vaudois survived.

In Ireland, in 1641, a "war of religion" against the Protestants was proclaimed by the Romanist Bishops. North, south, east, and west, Protestant blood flowed in rivers; villages and towns were all but destroyed; the only burial allowed was the burial of the living. Popish children were taught to pluck out the eyes of their Protestant playmates, and to hunt them to death. In Armagh 4000 Protestants were drowned; in Cavan the road for twelve miles was stained red with the track of the fugitives. In the province of Ulster alone more than 154,000 Protestants were either massacred or expelled. O'Niel, the Romish Primate, declared this to be "a pious and lawful war," and Pope Urban VIII., by a bull, dated May, 1643, granted "full and absolute remission of all their sins" to those who had taken part in "gallantly doing what in them lay to extirpate and wholly root out, the pestiferous leaven of heretical contagion."

Who can fully recount the horrors of the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day in France, when nearly every town and village became a scene of carnage? It is believed that between 50,000 and 100,000 Protestants perished on account of their faith in that fatal August, 1572. The Pope, Gregory XIII., who was privy to the plot, celebrated a Te Deum on hearing the news, ordered a jubilee and a solemn procession, in which he himself took part, to thank God for this glorious success. He sent a nuncio to Paris to congratulate Charles IX.; had a medal struck in memory of the event, and a picture of the massacre painted and hung in the Vatican.

In 1685 the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which had restored the civil and religious rights of Protestants, was revoked by Louis XIV., and the exterminating war against the Camisards in the Cevennes soon began. "Never," writes a Huguenot historian of that dreadful civil war, "never did hell in the direst persecution invent or employ means so diabolical and inhuman as the dragoons, and the monks who head them, have used to destroy us." Pope Clement XI. promised complete exemption from the pains of purgatory to all who took up arms to exterminate "the accursed and execrable race."

The papal persecution in Spain and Portugal, in Savoy, in Poland, in Bohemia, in the Thirty Years' War in Germany, the dark deeds wrought through the infamous Duke of Alva in the Low Countries, would fill volumes.

And then the Inquisition—the Holy Inquisition—the very name of which evokes a shudder! In Spain alone, it has been proved by careful statistical investigation, that between 1481 and 1808 over 341,000 persons were sentenced by this "Holy Office," of whom 31,912 were burned alive, and nearly 300,000 were tortured or condemned to severe penances. When the French took Toledo, and broke open the Inquisition prison, "graves seemed to open, and pale figures, like ghosts, issued from dungeons which emitted a sepulchral odour. Bushy beards hanging down over the breast, and nails grown like birds' claws, disfigured the skeletons, who with labouring bosoms inhaled for the first time for a long series of years the fresh air. Many of them were reduced to cripples, the head inclined forward, the arms and hands hanging down, rigid and helpless. When, the next day, General Lasalle inspected the place, the number of machines for torture thrilled even men inured to the battle-field with horror."

Well has it been said:—"As some luxurious emperors of Rome exhausted the whole art of pleasure, so that a reward was promised to anyone who should invent a new one, so have Romish persecutors exhausted all the art of pain, so that it will now be difficult to discover or invent a new kind of it which they have not already practised upon those marked out for heretics. They have been shot, stabbed, stoned, drowned, beheaded, hanged, drawn, quartered, impaled, burnt or buried alive, roasted on spits, baked in ovens, thrown into furnaces, tumbled over precipices, cast from the tops of towers, sunk in mire and pits, starved with hunger and cold, hung on tenter hooks, suspended by the hair of the head, by the hands or feet, stuffed and blown up with gunpowder, ripped with swords and sickles, tied to the tails of horses, dragged over streets and sharp flints, broken on the wheel, broken on anvils with hammers, blown with bellows, bored with hot irons, torn piecemeal by red-hot pincers, slashed with knives, hacked with axes, hewed with chisels, planed with planes, pricked with forks, stuck from head to foot with pins, choked with water, lime, rags, excrements, or mangled pieces of their own bodies crammed down their throats, shut up in caves and dungeons, tied to stakes, nailed to trees, tormented with lighted matches, scalding oil, burning pitch, melted lead, etc. They have been flayed alive, had their flesh scalped and torn from their bones; they have been trampled and danced upon, till their bowels have been forced out, their guts have been tied to trees and pulled forth by degrees; their heads twisted with cords till the blood, or even their eyes, started out; strings have been drawn through their noses, and they have been led about like swine, and butchered like sheep. To dig out eyes, tear off nails, cut off ears, lips, tongues, arms, breasts, etc., has been but ordinary sport with Rome's converters and holy butchers. Persons have been compelled to lay violent hands on their dearest friends, to kill or to cast into the fire their parents, husbands, wives, children, etc., or to look on whilst they have been most cruelly and shamefully abused. Women and young maids have also suffered such barbarities, accompanied with all the imaginable indignities, insults, shame, and pungent pangs, to which their sex could expose them. Tender babes have been whipped, starved, drowned, stabbed, and burnt to death, dashed against trees and stones, torn limb from limb, carried about on the point of spikes and spears, and thrown to the dogs and swine."

But where will the awful tale cease? Let Foxe's "Book of Martyrs" tell its story; let the records of the Lollard persecutions in our land, and of the reign of "bloody Mary" do the same; let Mexico, and Abyssinia, and India, recount the doings of the Holy Inquisition, and of the Jesuits. Well have the prophecies in Babylon and Patmos been fulfilled, that this terrible power should "make war with the saints and overcome them." If this feature of the wild beast with its harlot rider alone existed, it would suffice to identify it with the predictions. "It has been calculated that the Popes of Rome have, directly or indirectly, slain, on account of their faith, fifty millions of martyrs—fifty millions of men and women who refused to be parties to

Romish idolatries, who held to the Bible as the Word of God, and who "loved not their lives unto the death, but resisted unto blood, striving against sin."

"Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."

[Note.—Many of the statements in the above paper are quoted from "The Approaching End of the Age," by Dr. Grattan Guinness.]

Religious Australasia.

A paper on the religious condition of Australia was read at the World's Conference of the Evangelical Alliance of the U.S.A. at Chicago, by Rev. H. B. Macartney, Incumbent of St. Mary's, Caulfield, Victoria. He said:—

Australia is the youngest continent in the world, but, as regards size, it contains 3,100,000 square miles when taken together with Tasmania and New Zealand. In other words, it is only smaller than Europe by 680,000 square miles, and is larger than the United States, exclusive of Alaska, by 7,000 square miles. But although we thus occupy one-third of the entire area of British dominion, our population is under four millions.

(1) If judged by our Morality, we must be to a great extent an irreligious people. The love of money, with gambling, "statutes that are not good," intemperance, secret forms of vice, and the love of pleasure, prevail to a frightful extent. Opium, with which England so long cursed China, is now cursing her colonies. I have myself seen opium-dens in Melbourne crowded with young Europeans getting their earlier lessons in the deadly drug. As regards the drink traffic, I grieve to report that we occupy a most unenviable position in the eyes of the civilised world. The Drink Bill of Victoria and New South Wales, each with a population of little over one million, was £6,500,000 each for 1892.

A Vigilance Association has been formed in Melbourne, composed of men and women "who have banded together to grapple with some of the deepest problems of our national social life." It seeks "to concert measures for the prevention of infanticide and for the repression of criminal vice and public immorality; to check the causes of vice; and to protect minors." The Association regards it as a central truth "that the moral law is the same for all men and for all women." It finds, however, a general lack of sympathy with the injured class (who are under sixteen), and a great unwillingness on the part of juries to convict, even for proved offences. The moral conscience of our people wants arousing, and though our laws are good, they avail nothing if young girls may be ruined with impunity "before they are old enough to know the sanctity of their bodies and the priceless value of their virtue."

(2) Our Education, taken as a whole, is distinctly non-religious. A system which has for its cardinal features "secular, compulsory, and free," prevails almost everywhere except in New South Wales. In 1891 there were in this colony 33,000 persons above fifteen who were unable to read. Roman Catholics, who were specially in view in the Act, are forbidden by their priests to countenance State schools, and are clamouring for a separate grant. The churches are permitted to give religious instruction on certain days, after school hours, when the children are weary. Energetic measures are being taken everywhere to have the Bible restored—to have given to it some place of honour, if only as a book to be ignorant of which is to be unlearned. Our universities are all secular; but in Victoria, at least, splendid grants of land have been made, contiguous to the University itself, for the erection of colleges, denominational and affiliated.

(3) Benevolence is a marked feature in our colonists. They have received freely and they give freely. Charitable institutions—such as hospitals, infirmaries, asylums for the aged, the blind, the deaf and the dumb, convalescent homes, orphanages, refuges, reformatories, Royal Humane Societies, and St. John Ambulance corps—are to be found on every hand. Appeals in the daily papers are readily responded to, and if a public calamity occurs, the sufferers are sure of the sympathy of a thousand outstretched hands.

(4) Ecclesiastically there is much in which to rejoice; there is much also to awaken grave solicitude. Worldliness is blighting professing Christians. The same people attend theatres, races, dances, and the Lord's Supper; and office-bearers are often chosen on the sole ground of influence, ability, or wealth.

The missionary spirit—that sure mark of a living Church—is wanting in scarcely any of our religious brotherhoods. The Church of England has several associations in connection with the great Church Missionary Society. The Presbyterians carry on a blessed work in the New Hebrides, besides extending a helping hand to India and Korea. The Wesleyans have just cause for pride in the stability of their work among the Fiji Islanders, and many of their colonial ministers being retired missionaries from the South Seas, the flame of love for the heathen is kept brightly burning. Some of the Baptist churches are quite intense in their zeal, and send large reinforcements to Asia; while the Independents render substantial and intelligent aid to the operations of the London Society, especially in New Guinea and the Pacific Ocean. All these denominations, moreover, without exception, combine in supporting the China Inland Mission both with men, women, and means. They are also alive (though none of them sufficiently so) to the wonderful opportunity which God has given them in sending to their very doors 42,000 Chinese emigrants—an army of heathen sojourners fully intent upon returning home. The same may be said of the hundreds of Kanakas who labour on the Queensland sugar plantations. There are some also here and there to whom the original Australian tribes are dear, but the difficulty of winning to Christ the members of a wandering and degraded race is greater than can be imagined. They are best reached, as some are reached, when persuaded to settle with their families on large Government reserves, where the ever-faithful Moravian Brethren superintend their education and their manual labour, shield them from temptation, and watch over them to their dying day. New Zealand has more or less evangelised her 41,000 Maories; Tasmania has no aborigines to evangelise; but Australia is only just awaking to the existence of some 60,000 natives, chiefly roaming its Northern and Western Territories, before whose eyes the Light of God has never shined. Victoria has another work—almost unique—a Mission by post, not without fruit, to the lighthouse-keepers and their families all along the Australasian coasts.

Among Colonial institutions of a distinctly religious character I may mention:—

Y.M.C. Associations.—There are twenty-two in all, with property worth £150,000, 4550 enrolled members, and six paid secretaries. The Adelaide branch stands in the van of aggressive work. In all our Associations spiritual work receives the very first care. The Sydney Branch is exceedingly popular with the churches—a sure token of healthy and legitimate development—and does a great work amongst men in a city where Secularism is strong, profane, and defiant. The Melbourne Branch has had a splendid but chequered career. Some of the smaller societies, such as Auckland, N.Z., are doing nobly.

Y.W.C. Associations are planted out pretty generally in coast cities, and real soul-work is being done, although on a limited scale. The factory department, both in Melbourne and Adelaide, has been much blessed, and the work which they seek to do amongst all young women is being supplemented by the "Society of Time and Talents," and by "Girls' Friendly" Societies.

Individual Christians are greatly helped in their inner life by means of the Bible Union, which assigns one consecutive chapter daily to its 300,000 members throughout the world. The Scripture Union comes to the aid of the young with its selected passages, and the Sunday-school Union issues a somewhat similar calendar of its own to its immense constituency. The Children's Special Service Mission is beginning to take root, especially in connection with its seaside services. The Society of Christian Endeavour, the latest plant of our Heavenly Father's planting, has just come to us from America to supply a long-felt need, and we hail it joyfully. The British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, and other well-furnished depôts keep our workers supplied with seed for sowing; while we, in return, are not unmindful of their world-wide character and peculiar claims. Christian conventions commenced in Australia about twenty years ago, somewhat on Keswick lines, but, having removed to a capital, they now more nearly resemble Mildmay. Recent circumstances, however, and spiritual hunger of the deepest kind, have called the Geelong Convention into existence. Here addresses are delivered bearing directly on practical righteousness, heart-purity, and the filling of the Holy Ghost. The ministers with whom the Conference originated met three years ago to wait on God until their own souls were satisfied, and they still wait on Him for hours every Saturday afternoon for fresh accessions of power, and to plead for a great revival.

We have not as yet any very notable itinerant preachers, although the Presbyterian evangelist for Victoria, our Southern John MacNeill, is as dear to us personally as ever your Northern John McNeill can be to you.

The Secular Press is, as a rule, in the hands of men not in sympathy with spiritual things, and who take the wrong side on the question of Bible Education, Sabbath Observance, and Worldly Amusements. Still we have much cause to be thankful that the work of God is very fairly reported in the daily papers, and that religious correspondence is treated, not always, but generally, with a considerable measure of fairness. Church papers are to a large extent in the hands of Evangelicals.

Our country is still young, and though full of sin's leprosy, there is not one of our many colonies without some lovely lamps of pure Divine truth glittering in surrounding darkness. Freethinkers may be bold and blasphemous; standard-bearers may faint or flee; the number of the saved may be comparatively small; but yet there is a "remnant according to the election of grace," and Jesus shall reign.

SOUTH-EAST AFRICAN MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—We have received good accounts of the work carried on among the Zulus, which we think will interest your readers and cause thanksgiving to God.

Mr. Suter, who is in charge at Durban, writes that on the previous Lord's Day he had the joy of baptising twenty-six Zulus in the sea. A number of these had learned to read in the night-school, and are now daily reading the Scriptures.

They were quite anxious to be formed into an evangelistic band to spread the Gospel among their own people, of whom there are nearly 7000 in Durban. It was planned that on the following Sunday, Daniel, our Zulu worker, was to take a number of them to visit the togt barracks (sleeping quarters of the heathen labourers.)

These converts have been brought out of heathendom, and are the first fruits of two years' itinerant work in Durban. When our mission-hall was opened last April, an inquirers' class was formed, and the night-school for men begun.

In Zululand Mr. and Mrs. Olsen-Feyling have had interesting work among the kraals. On one occasion they rode twelve miles on donkeys, under a sun so intensely hot that the Zulus called it "death." Saddles are a luxury still to come, and will greatly facilitate their work. Their object was to see a Zulu girl dying in consumption, to whom they had once spoken of Jesus.

One man, the owner of two kraals, having four wives, is seeking the light. He said he had crossed the way of God, and gone his own way, now he wanted to walk in God's way.

He begs that a hut for meetings, near his kraal and some twenty other kraals, may be opened. The cost of it will not be more than £3.

In the Majuba district the Misses Grieve have been hindered in their work among the heathen by the want of a school-room. They have now received help privately towards erecting one of wood and iron. It will be used for meetings and as a school for both adults and children. Many of the people in the district are refugees from Swaziland.

During the preaching at a kraal meeting a lad was awakened, and with tears and sobs cried, "Oh, Jesu! Jesu!" He has continued in deep distress of soul, and longs to be a Christian.

The colportage work among Europeans has been attended with blessing and success. For all we give praise to God.

My husband and I purpose spending the winter in England, and will gladly give information regarding openings for work to any who may desire it. Our address will be—care of Mr. Arthur S. Day, Mayfield, Lancaster-road, Wimbledon.

M. S. Osborn-Howe.

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT is now at work in South Wales. He held a Gospel Temperance Mission last week at Pembroke Dock, where he remained over Sunday, visiting this week Haverfordwest.

National Protestant Congress.

(Concluded from last week.)

ROME AND EDUCATION.

Dr. G. Hardyman presided on Wednesday morning, when the educational efforts of Romanists and Ritualists were discussed.

Miss Golding, the "Rescued Nun," was the first speaker, and after intimating that she had been a nun for twenty-five years in a French convent, she related something of what she had known of Protestant children being received in the convent for the purposes of education, and so trained as speedily to develop into Roman Catholics. What else could be expected of children sent to such institutions at the tender age of three, and kept there until they arrive at eighteen or twenty-one? Many English people entrust their children to the nuns with the assurance that they will be allowed to remain Protestants, but no time is lost in getting such children to mingle with those of Roman Catholic families. From "crossing" they soon pass to the worship of the Virgin. From the first there is a fascination about the religion of Rome. "My own father," said Miss Golding, "was a clergyman of the Church of England; and having lost my parents, I was allured to the Church of Rome, like many another girl, by the attraction of the music in the oratorios in the Romish places of worship. That fascination is nothing but a Satanic mesmerism or power whereby young people are led away."

After declaring that, almost as soon as they can read, the girls have mischievous books put into their hands, ostensibly as examples of virtue, but really they are repositories of which no woman should read, Miss Golding remarked that, arriving at the age of seven, the little girls are taken to confession. Speaking of a typical case, she said: Looking into my face, the eyes of the child declared that there was no great sin to confess. But as I knelt by the confessional, I could hear the priest laughing and talking, and amusing himself with the child, in order to get her to say what he wanted. Need I say that the child came out of that place with her head down, her face blushing, and her eyes downcast? She seemed as though she would hide herself and get out of sight. Why? Because the priest had questioned her on things that she would never have known, and that her imagination would never have conceived, thus putting abominations into her mind.

ABOMINABLE POISON AND DISGUSTING THINGS

The speaker proceeded:—I was instructed and bound by the discipline of the Church of Rome, to inform Protestant parents that their children would remain Protestants. I say with shame that obedience to my superior has led me into this hypocrisy, and to tell parents that their children could go to the neighbouring Protestant place of worship. The next moment I took the child and told her to converse with the others, to learn French; and though, for that one evening, she might be permitted to say her prayers as a Protestant, she would subsequently be included with the other children in the Roman Catholic form of worship. The amiability of the nuns makes a great impression upon the little ones, and the priest is soon confided in, so that his word is implicitly followed as to the child's "vocation." How many unfortunate marriages have been made through the counsel of the confessional that the penitent should marry, and how many miserable and pining lives have been passed because the priest prescribed the vocation of a nun in a case where the temperament and disposition was entirely opposed thereto!

Rev. Dr. Potter dealt with the efforts of Rome in schools, colleges, and universities, enlarging upon his experiences in Ireland and Sheffield. He exposed the Romish practices of getting Protestant children into schools through the inducement of a smaller charge than is ordinary, and then inculcating Popish doctrines. He vigorously called upon Englishmen to awaken to the importance of the present crisis, and to fight this great enemy of sound education and true religion.

Rev. B. Senior, of Bath, spoke of the power of the Press, the pulpit, and the platform, and urged jealousy lest Rome should capture them. The people have not yet been drawn into the Romish Church, and faithful testimony and Gospel preaching may win them to Christ, and confound all his enemies.

[1124]

HOLY SCRIPTURE CONFIRMED.

On Wednesday afternoon the chair was occupied by Captain the Hon. C. E. Hobart-Hampden, who urged Protestants to have nothing to do with Romanism or Ritualism, both of which are hateful. The subject was "Holy Scripture Illustrated and Confirmed," and the first paper was by Professor Hull, LL.D., who called attention to the discoveries of recent years, which have showed some of those narratives of the Old Testament which are essentially connected with the miraculous interposition of God, to be trustworthy down to the minutest details. Among the monuments described were the inscriptions on the temple at Karnak in Egypt; the outcome of the excavations at Tel-el-Hesy (the ancient Lachish) in Palestine; the Tel el-Amarna tablets in Egypt; the Moabite stone; and the Siloam inscription.

Rev. J. Urquhart, in a very able address, marshalled some of the outstanding facts in Egyptology and Assyriology to illustrate and corroborate the Old Testament record. At the outset he showed the intimate relation of the subject to the controversy with Rome, by remarking that the Word of God must be at once the test of truth and the weapon of spiritual warfare. The criticisms which rationalists have passed upon the Book of Daniel, the Chronicles, and the Pentateuch were admirably stated and conclusively answered. None of the books could have been written at the comparatively late periods assigned by the critics, and this conviction has been expressed by scholars of independent judgment and unquestionable authority. Mr. Urquhart's direct and forcible delivery distinguished his address as one of the most effective of the entire Congress.

THE TACTICS OF ROME.

On Wednesday evening "Rome's Tactics" were exposed. Mr. James Inskip, who occupied the chair, opened the proceedings with some cogent remarks on the claims and designs of Rome. She claims to be the one true and universal Church, arrogates authority to interpret the Word of God, to make laws for all people, and to expound morals in every department of life. She aims at the conversion of the Anglo-Saxon race, as preliminary to a world-wide rule, and to this end is putting forth all her powers.

Rev. Dr. Kerr, of Glasgow, spoke on the secret methods of the Ritualistic party in the Church of England, at the outset declaring the entire conspiracy to be an adaptation of Jesuitry. Of the unions and reunions, societies and associations, fraternities and confraternities, brotherhoods and sisterhoods, one of the most prominent characteristics is their secresy. In America secret societies are a source of great social danger, and everywhere they are inimical to mental and spiritual freedom. Therefore Protestants have a right to demand that the objects, rules, and usages of these agencies shall be made known to the public.

The speaker denounced the furtive policy of these societies, and said that the intrigues adopted are calculated to train ecclesiastical burglars and generate moral assassins. The overthrow of Protestantism and the restoration of the Papacy has been boldly avowed as the object of some of these organisations, one exponent of their policy having declared that they had nothing to do with the spirit or principles of the Reformation, except to get rid of them as soon as possible. There is no dogma of Rome which they do not hold and disseminate, and thus they offer themselves for each and all of the mediatorial offices of the Lord Jesus Christ! Gavazzi called these conspirators a set of Iscariots; and if there was a spark of honour in them they would quit the Church from whose profession they had so completely diverged, and either form a denomination of their own or go to their own place—the Romish communion.

Rev. E. Theodore Hitchens read an instructive paper on the Jesuits, outlining their history, expounding their principles, and giving modern instances of their activity. The statement was full of facts of practical importance, which, in turn, were analysed to show the dangerous character of this great engine of Popery and masterpiece of Satan. Having called to mind recent proceedings in France, Canada, and elsewhere, Mr. Hitchens urged vigilance on the part of Protestants that the machinations of this foe may be frustrated; and asked Christians to make known the facts regarding the evil, in the hope that by God's blessing our land and institutions may be saved from the clutch of the hidden hand.

Rev. Dr. Kane, of Belfast, followed, on the social and political tactics of Rome. To overthrow Protestantism is the immediate object of Rome, and if the weakening of the British Empire is necessary to the attainment of that end, then Rome is prepared to do her utmost in that direction. Though disclaiming the introduction of party politics, some of the speaker's allusions distinctly involved them; yet he was at once considerately temperate and desperately earnest in the statement of his convictions.

As regards the masses of Ireland, he said he believed they are "finding out" Romanism. They are displaying a marvellous independence, which would, he hoped, bear much fruit in the shape of converts to the truth. The classes of the country, notwithstanding the genius of their religion, have of late proved themselves to be loyal and patriotic. In conclusion, Dr. Kane urged that every endeavour should be made to fire the people of Great Britain and Ireland with an appreciation of the value of Protestant freedom and Protestant truth, and to diffuse vital godliness, which will be proof against all the arts of the Jesuits, whether posturing in Anglican or Roman livery.

THE LORD'S RETURN.

With singular appropriateness, the Second Advent of our Lord was the subject of the concluding session of the Congress. This hope brings to mind the assurance that Rome's tactics and power will, in due course, be brought to an end, and the truth of God be completely and universally vindicated. The thoughts that were developed at this meeting induced a restfulness of mind and lively hope calculated to support constant solicitude for the truth, and to arm for unceasing conflict with error and sin. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who opened the proceedings by reading 2 Thess. ii., and making timely remarks on the "falling away" from Protestant truth and the adoption of Romish teaching and rationalistic negations. The bright lining to the dark cloud is found in the blessed hope of the Lord's return, an event which many signs show to be very near.

CANON GARRATT, OF IPSWICH,

read a paper on the Second Advent in relation to movements among the Jewish people. The present position of the Jews is, he said, one which, if predicted fifty years ago, would not have been believed to be possible. That they should return to their own land, though disbelieved by all others, was nevertheless an article of faith by students of prophecy, although the manner in which it is being brought about was neither imagined nor imaginable. Proceeding, the speaker held (mainly from Zech. xii. 2, 3) that when again settled in Palestine in unbelief, Israel will be under republican rule, and be fiercely hostile to all surrounding nations. Neither France nor Russia, with their acknowledged interests in Jerusalem, would submit to the city being in the hands of the Jews, so trouble would inevitably ensue upon the attempt to set up an Israelitish government there.

On the appearing of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven, Israel "shall look upon Him whom they have pierced." Before this there must be a last conflict of the Church of Christ with the apostate systems of the East and West; and then many faithful ones will suffer even unto death. Some may say that this is impossible; but if the Greek Church can persecute the Stundists, and inflict horrors worse than death upon them, why cannot she join with the Church of Rome in the same cruel enterprise? Jewish restoration is near, and so is the Church's affliction. Thank God that while these loom on the horizon, the coming of the King is seen just beyond, for all these events are bound together. And as some communities will be overcome by the oppressor, and will cease their Protestant witness, how earnestly should we watch lest we are led astray! Mere Protestantism will not keep men from apostasy. Remember what happened when Queen Mary ascended the throne of England, how Lords and Commons rushed into the arms of Rome, as it were, in a moment! A day of sifting is coming, and Protestants who are without living faith will fall an easy prey to the Satanic lie; while doubtless many godly Roman Catholics, who love Christ, will in the very moment of Rome's triumph, hear the heavenly voice saying, "Come out of her, my people."

REV. W. FULLER GOOCH

spoke on the Second Advent in relation to the fulfilment of "the Times of the Gentiles." Christ's return is necessary in order that Scripture may be fulfilled.

Every detail of his life in the days of his flesh took place "that the Scripture might be fulfilled"; and the prophetic word deals with the Second Advent as plainly as with the first. The Second Advent is also essential to the execution of the Divine purposes, which cannot be accomplished apart from the personal return of the Lord Jesus. Those purposes centre in Christ, viewed as the Son of the Highest, the Son of Man, the Son of Abraham, and the Son of David.

Continuing, Mr. Gooch showed that, according to all computations, we are on the eve of the fulfilment of the times of the Gentiles. The signs, whether political or ecclesiastical, are unmistakeable; and in due time Rome shall be destroyed. Whether Pagan or Papal, Rome is one; her hate of God's truth is to-day the same as it ever has been. The system is not made better because some men of God may be beguiled into it. It is the system of Antichrist—it is against the Christ of God. In conclusion, Mr. Gooch counselled Christians to stand clear of everything Romish, and faithfully to witness for the truth.

This was the last session, and at the close Rev. VARDEN F. STUBBS announced that next year the Congress would, God willing, meet at Edinburgh. The Bath Press—the Chronicle, and the Gazette—reported the proceedings at length, giving the full text of some of the papers. The Protestant Alliance had a stall of books on the advance of Romanism and expository of Evangelical doctrine; and it is confidently believed that by literature distributed and addresses delivered a great educative work has been done by the Congress in an important religious and social centre.

WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION.

On Thursday afternoon and evening, meetings were held in connection with the Women's Protestant Union. Mrs. ARBUTHNOT, President of the Union, was able to announce a present membership of 3700. A deeply spiritual tone pervaded the addresses, making it evident that the Union leaders realise that nothing short of a vital religion, or (to quote the admirable definition given in Miss Isaacs' paper on "True Devotion") "a living contact with the living Person," can avail to carry on the warfare successfully.

Mrs. Goodman (Southampton), in a paper on "Woman's Part in the Conflict," said: "What we women want is to be filled with the Holy Ghost. God has given Sisera into the hands of a woman, and He can do it again." Little wonder that, after hearing the papers read, the President should remark, in a way which it was evident was no mere formal compliment, how much she had personally enjoyed the addresses. "I am sure we shall have a blessing on these meetings," she said, "for God's plan of salvation has been so fully set forth and honoured."

Here we have alluded first to the evening meeting, at which Mrs. Arbuthnot presided, when she sketched briefly, as well as in the afternoon, the aims and objects of the W.P.U. The specially new feature of operations upon which the Union has set its heart, is the establishment of a distinctively Protestant Convalescent Home, as an adjunct to its work; for, "as women," said the President, "we feel it is our special province to look after the sick." In doing this the difficulty has arisen that so many of the Convalescent Homes are in the hands of ritualists; and it is a great temptation in a time of weak health to conform to pressure, if such be put upon an inmate, especially as many of these Homes have nothing to be desired with regard to requirements for the restoration to bodily health. In such case the President has now in hand, where a young convert, described as "but a babe in Christ," had been urged, during residence in a Home, to go to confession, and upon her refusal to do so, had been given to understand that she must go elsewhere. Until such time as it may please the Lord to put it into the heart of some servant of His to give a house for the purpose, Mrs. Arbuthnot asks for special funds for the placing out, privately, of convalescents, where they will be free from Ritualistic influences. The money may be deposited with the W.P.U. in trust for this purpose. (Mrs. Arbuthnot's address is: Plaw Hatch, East Grinstead, Sussex.)

We can touch but very briefly on the afternoon meeting, when Mrs. Auffray occupied the chair. She spoke words of caution against the errors of a conventual school training, and urged the study of the Bible as the only true guide, testifying, also, from her personal experience, to the all-sustaining power of prayer. Other speakers were Mrs. Bruce-Kingsmill, who, as Miss Marsland, has been known for some time on the Protestant platform, Mrs. Anderson (of London), and Mrs. Liesching (Tunbridge Wells).

The Parliament of Religions.

BY REV. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

COMPARATIVELY little notice has been taken in this country of the remarkable religious gathering in Chicago, known as the Parliament of Religions. Yet from every point of view it deserves notice. No such religious assembly was ever before convened, and probably never could before, and nowhere else, have been convened. Certainly we can hardly conceive of such a religious gathering outside a Christian country, nor outside a Protestant Christian country. I am almost inclined to think that it could have been convened in no other country than in the United States of America or in one of the British colonies where the dominant Church is not a State institution. In England, with the Archbishop of Canterbury in pronounced opposition, it would have lost its high representative character, and have been banned by the Established Church; but in America, where the Church knows no State patronage or control, and where there is perfect equality of all forms of worship, prominence being given only to those churches which deserve it by reason of love and good works; where the right of private judgment and ecclesiastical independence has ever been recognised, it was but natural that such a parliament should be held.

There was in the minds of some most earnest Christians a question as to the wisdom of holding such a parliament; and not a few of the best men of the American churches abstained from participation in its proceedings. On the other hand, among its numbers were those who have ever been foremost in the defence of Evangelical truth, and leaders in every good aggressive Christian work.

To my mind the only pity was that Evangelical Christians did not rally with greater force to its gatherings and participate in larger numbers in its proceedings. Whatever difference of opinion may have been entertained as to the wisdom of summoning the parliament, it seems to me that it was most unwise and a serious tactical blunder not to have stepped promptly to the front and secured for Evangelical Christianity the largest and best possible presentation of the fundamental doctrines and principles of our faith. As it was, the Roman Catholics and the Unitarians were more in evidence than were the Evangelical Protestant party. This, however, was not because of any bias on the part of the promoters of the scheme, who throughout were most fair and courteous to all parties, but rather because so many who were invited declined to participate, Nevertheless the Gospel was fairly witnessed to and the faith of Christ fairly defended.

The gathering itself was most notable, and of the scores of congresses of all kinds held during the past summer this gathering was, in point of numbers and interest awakened, the most conspicuous and successful of them all. For nearly three weeks the great Hall of Columbus, specially built within the court of the Museum of Arts, with a seating capacity of 3000, was filled three times a day, practically covering seven or eight hours, morning, afternoon, and night, with an audience whose intelligence was above the average, and whose interest, enthusiasm, goodwill, and fairness were maintained and manifested to the end.

On the platform day after day, touching elbows, were Roman Catholic bishops, distinguished Evangelical clergymen and theologians, prominent Unitarians, Jewish Rabbis, Greek Patriarchs, Buddhist priests, Brahmin pundits, distinguished representatives—priests and masters—of Buddhism from Japan and China; Confucians and Parsees; the representatives of Mahomet, Indian native Christians, both male and female; Christian missionaries from all countries; college presidents and professors; the leaders of great philanthropies and social reforms; and the advocates of every phase of religious thought down to and including Mrs. Annie Besant and her Oriental confrères in the mystical Theosophy of the East and West. The spectacle of this goodwill among men met to confer upon the subject the most vital to the happiness and well-being of mankind was impressive. As a spectacular show it could scarcely be outrivalled. The gorgeous costumes of the Orientals, the splendid robes of many colours, with turbans and pugarees galore, shaven heads of the Buddhist priests, and the long flowing locks of the Greek Patriarch and the archdeacons; the black faces and strongly-marked features of African bishops and Red Indians from North America—all these were striking in the extreme.

The ostensible object in view was to get a first-hand statement of the various religious faiths of the world. That is, to seek, not from missionary exposition, but from native and trained experts in the various religions, an exposition and justification of their faiths. The Christian is admonished to be "able always to give a reason for the hope that is in him," and we asked of these Orientals to do the same, that we might know from their point of view what they believed and why they believed it. Besides this, there was an express wish on the part of the promoters of the parliament to find out, if possible, what there is in common among the various religious systems of the world. Such, for instance, as concerning God, sin, sacrifice, ethics and the humanities, together with the doctrines of life and immortality. In short, it was a conference for ascertaining the data for a common religious faith.

There were some who had so wild a dream as to suppose that it would be possible to find some simple formula of faith upon which all men who believed in God might agree, and from that point of agreement construct a brotherhood of faith which might at least soften the asperities of religious debate, and bring about a universal tolerance and practice in all matters of religion; in other words, to build a new and universal Pantheon. This of course was, in the nature of the case, impossible, at least so far as Christians are concerned. For what fellowship can those who believe in Jesus have with idols, and what concord hath Christ with Belial? Nevertheless, the spirit which suggested even so wild a dream of universal religious unity was a true spirit, in harmony with our Lord's prayer. But it was early manifest that there could be no unity of faith or life except in Christ, the new Head of the human race, the Second Man, in whom only redeemed and regenerated manhood may find standing and fellowship.

All the discussions, even those in which the most manifest antagonism were brought out, were carried on in an admirable spirit; and it may almost be said that there was no serious note of bitterness or anger in the whole three weeks of continuous debate.

That the Chicago Press gave to the proceedings of the Parliament from two to twenty columns a day, aggregating perhaps fifty columns per day in the leading dailies, is a sufficient testimony to the profound interest awakened by the gathering.

In one or two succeeding articles I will endeavour to give some of the more salient points brought out in the various addresses read or delivered before the Parliament, especially on those points that are more vital to faith. I may mention that the entire proceedings are being published in two large volumes, and will constitute a thesaurus on the subject of comparative religions. These volumes may be had of the Parliament of Religions Publishing Company, Chicago, and will cost, I believe, about 30s., bound in cloth. It is likely that they may ultimately be had of booksellers on this side of the water.

London, October 27.

Keswick Missionary Funds.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers may be interested in knowing the amount actually received by me for missionary purposes at and since the Keswick Convention of 1893, say July 1 to October 25:—

	£	s.	d.
For the Keswick Convention Mission Fund	858	5	3
For other Missions	401	9	6
	1259	14	9

Some large sums promised may have found other channels, not having been sent to me as yet.—Yours faithfully, ROBERT WILSON.

Broughton Grange, Cockermouth, Oct. 25.

AN ADULT SCHOOL CONFERENCE was held in the Friends' Meeting House, Croydon, on Saturday week. The reports presented showed the good work being done in many parts through this movement, special mention being made of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. Good papers were read by Messrs. Blanckenhagen, C. H. Clark, and W. C. Braithwaite, also Miss Moscrip, of Bunhill Schools.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 5.—PSALM LXXXVII.

Nothing can fully realise the idea of this psalm except that Church which is founded on the mountains of God's holiness, and whose gates are dear to Him. These words, spoken first in a burst of patriotic pride, meant more than appeared. This holy man spoke as he was borne along by the Spirit. Dear as the dwelling of each saint is to God, that spiritual house, which is composed of all true hearts, is his chosen home. This is his rest for ever; here He dwells.

In the fourth verse Jehovah Himself is introduced as claiming Egypt, and Babylon, and other Gentile nations as closely related with his people. Another provision of the Church in which is neither Jew nor Greek, and admittance to which is not a matter of nationality, but of the regenerating influence of the Holy Ghost. It is by the new birth that we obtain the freedom of the city of God.

The idea of citizenship is still further carried out in the allusion of the sixth verse to the roll of burgesses which the Lord keeps Himself, and which is known in the Book of Revelation as the Lamb's Book of Life. The psalm as it closes gives us the theme of the long procession that climbs towards the city of the redeemed, headed by the singers and players; from many lips the confession comes that all fountains of spiritual joy, all fresh springs of life, are in God.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 6.—PSALM LXXXVIII.

This is a minor key indeed! It is a song from the lowest depths. We have no clue to its occasion, but every sentence of it comes with a sob. The only note of hope is in that first line that still speaks of God as salvation of the sufferer. Note the different items of trouble. Probably heavy disease was sapping the energies of life, so much so that he was reckoned as already among the dead; then, the fear that his suffering was the expression of God's anger, a mistaken idea indeed, but none the less sad; acquaintance and friend alienated, and looking on the sufferer with loathing as an abomination; his apparently ineffectual prayer; the dread so natural to the times, when as yet life and immortality had not been brought to light, of the after-death; the absence of God's help; all these things combined were enough to put his soul in straits.

At such times we must cry day and night. No prayer of ours stands knocking long at the door of God's presence chamber (2). No cry is so weak but what God inclines to it. Tears have a tongue (9). The daily call, and the outspread hands, the argument of the soul brought to bay, the agonised pleading, are the only resort for the soul in its extremity. Oh tired and sorrowful one, there is a Lover and Friend who never goes far away; make much of Him. The darkening of thy life drives thee back to his home, where He is waiting for thee.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 7.—PSALM LXXXIX.

The theme of this psalm is the faithfulness of God (1, 2, 5, etc.). It may have been written in the time of Absalom's rebellion, and sorrowfully contrasts the experiences of Israel with the forecast of 2 Sam. vii., and the appeal is made that in his faithfulness God would arise to vindicate his truth. (1, 2) Sing of mercy with faithfulness, child of God. It is like a tower being built up by fresh proofs of Divine love, and God's faithfulness is as constant and unvarying as the movements of the celestial bodies. It is God's mercy which lies at the root of all his faithfulness. He is faithful to the engagements He has made in mercy.

Let us, like the psalmist, celebrate in prayer and song the attributes of God (3-18). His wonderfulness; his holiness which makes Him terrible; his might that rules the pride of the sea, and stills its storms, that brought Israel out of Egypt, that sustains the frame of nature; and his favour to his people. These are themes that quicken the pulse and make the heart dance.

Let us sometimes pass from the general to the particular, and celebrate his individual mercies. Take the life of any one of the saints, and enumerate God's dealings with him. Or review your own life beneath the light of memory and revelation. Then, if days of adversity and reproach come, be sure they are due to no caprice on his part, but to some change on the part of his children. The former mercies are not far away, though the soul thinks them gone for ever. They only wait in ambush, to return when there is true repentance, contrition, and faith.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 8.—PSALM XC.

God is the home of his people. All generations of his saints have hidden themselves, where Moses resorted, from the strife of tongues and the anxieties of his charge. (2) Nature is evanescent. Time is a parenthesis between the two eternities on either hand. God is the same, unaltered, unaffected by the passage of the years, (4-6). The imagery borrowed from the scenes of the wilderness march is pathetically beautiful. The night watch by the dying embers; the rush of the mountain stream to be soon lost in the sand; the sleep broken by the call of the trumpet; the grass springing up after a shower, but withered at nightfall—such are the emblems of mortality.

Mortality would not be so hard to bear if it were not associated with sin, and with the consciousness of guilt. Moses knew that God forgave iniquity and sin, and yet the constant succession of funerals by which the generation of evil-doers was carried to the desert graves was a perpetual reminder of the sin which had forfeited Canaan. As long as the dark consequences remained it seemed so hard to believe that sin was put away for ever.

Be it ours to give God the fear which is his due (11); and to join in the prayers for grace to use the fleeting days; for satisfaction with God's mercy; for the permanent result of our life in the blessing of men when we have passed away.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9.—PSALM XCI.

This may be called the psalm of the three voices. There is first the voice of the chorus stating generally the eternal fact of the safety of the man who dwells in God's secret place, and who is covered by his wings. (1) And this voice continues to utter the assurances with which the psalm teems. "He shall deliver; He shall cover; it shall not come nigh; He shall give his angels charge."

There is also the voice of the psalmist in the second verse and the ninth, "I will say of the Lord," etc., "Thou, O Lord, art my refuge" (cf. R.V.). There is an advance in the second of these on the first. The first avows what he will say, the second says it.

There is the third voice of God Himself in the three closing verses of the psalm, ratifying all that had been said, and adding thereto.

This is the traveller's psalm. Put yourself, or your friends, within its precincts before undertaking a journey. That the devil quoted from it is no reason why you should not believe that if you are in God's ways you can absolutely trust his protecting care. It seems to anticipate the marvels which our Lord promised to ensue on faith (Mark xvi. 16-18). Trouble only brings God nearer. His own are satisfied and saved, and the years only reveal more of God's all-sufficiency.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10.—PSALM XCII.

"Let us sing a hymn and spite the devil," Luther used to say. The sad heart tires in a mile, but to sing will often break up the pall of cloud and let in sunlight. There is no day so suitable for praise as the day of rest, which anticipates the new heavens and earth. Lovingkindness may well be the theme of our matins as we step forth upon our path, and faithfulness the theme of evensong.

Enumerate topics for thanksgiving. God's work; God's thoughts; the working out of God's patience; the eternal victory that awaits God's people; the blessedness of the righteous; the rock-like unchangeableness and the unsullied righteousness of the Most High. Sad and dark must that heart be that cannot find music here!

But there is something closer to the inner life in the closing portion of the Psalm. Is it well to adventure on the day without getting that fresh anointing mentioned in v. 10? Is there not an unction from the Holy One to fit us for service and to unveil to us the deep truths of God's Word? Then note the emblems of the forest, that typify the growth and beauty of the children of God. The palm-tree aspiring heavenward; the cedar deeply rooted; the evergreen full of sap; the monarch of the forest fruitful in its age. All these will typify the righteousness of God in succouring his people's life!

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11.—PSALM XCIII.

The reign of God. He is a great King. His robes are majesty, his girdle strength, and waves that would not heed the bidding of Canute obey the gentle voice of the King when he says, "Peace, be still!" He imparts to the frame of nature something of his own stability, and though the world be but a star, unsuspended in the vault of heaven, it is stedfast, because God holds it there.

There never was a time when his throne did not stand as the centre of authority and power. There was no age untenanted by his royalty, as there is no space beyond his sceptre. Gladly, therefore, may we rest in an authority which, as it had no birth, can know no decline or cessation. Sin and evil are but as a passing shadow cast upon the face of the great white throne.

Often have we stood by the coast and heard the dash of the breaker, and have quoted instinctively these words about the floods lifting up their voice. Yes, and in times of dark sorrow we have heard that voice again. What have the wild waves not said, threatening despair and wreck and death? But look from them to the mighty Lord, who from on high beholds the toiling mariner. He will not fail to come at the fourth watch of the night. The waves shall be the pathway for his approach. With such a God, let us be holy. The garments of holiness should be worn by all inmates of his house.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

NOVEMBER 12.

The Grace of Liberality.—2 Cor. viii. 1-12.

Golden Text, Ver. 9.

This epistle was written during the apostle's visit to the Churches of Macedonia (Acts xx. 1,2), whether from Philippi or from Thessalonica is not clear. It was conveyed to Corinth by Titus and two other brethren (16, 18, 22), when they went to complete the collection previously begun (10).

The collection was for the Christians at Jerusalem, who were suffering considerable difficulty. The city was in a most unsettled condition. "Agrippa II. was compelled to resort to artificial means, such as paving the streets with white marble, in order to supply 18,000 workmen with work and wages." If work was scarce, it is not unlikely that Christians, who were regarded as apostates from the Jewish faith, found it difficult to obtain employment. In this chapter and the next the Apostle is recommending the duty of liberality.

The Example of Others (1-5.) The Churches of Macedonia—Philippi, Berea, and Thessalonica—were especially forward in this service. Their trying circumstances (2) enhanced the value of their gifts. Their "great trial of affliction" did not diminish their joy, nor make them unsympathetic towards others. "The Macedonian Christians were poor for Christ's sake, because they had been obliged to renounce all dishonest arts of trade (1 Thess. iv. 6), and had been persecuted with the loss of employment, dismissal from service, and apprehensions of complete destitution."—W. F. Besser. Learn that the poor are not therefore debarred from the privilege of giving to God for the relief of others. It was the extreme poverty of the widow (Mark xi. 44) that made her gift of such great price.

(2) They gave willingly (3, 4). They were "willing of themselves." Their liberality was not forced from them by earnest and eloquent appeals. They were themselves urgent in their entreaties to the Apostle to receive and distribute their gifts. No other kind of giving does God accept (ix. 7). Such liberality is an indication of an unselfish spirit, and ministers joy to those who give equal to that of those who receive (1 Chron. xxix. 9).

(3) Their liberality was a part of their consecration (5). This is the true order. First ourselves to the Lord, then our substance. Consecration recognises that we and all we have belong to Jesus. Don't seek to reverse this order. Not yours, but you, is what our Lord requires. Have you made this surrender? Then of all your gifts you will say, "Of thine own have we given Thee" (1 Chron. xxix. 14).

This example Paul urges the Corinthians to follow (6-8). He calls liberality a "grace" (7) which has its place with faith, utterance, knowledge, love, and without which the Christian character is incomplete. Cultivate it, for, like every other grace, it grows as it is exercised. Paul regards it as a proof of our love (8). Not that he would estimate the love by the amount of our gifts, but by the spirit of unselfish love that is behind them. A gift that is but of little value in itself may acquire great worth from the spirit which prompts it. Dr. Culross tells of his child, who came out to him as he was about to leave home for a journey, and putting a penny into his hand, said "This is all for yourself!" Was such a gift worth only its money value?

The Example of Christ (9). The love of Christ for us did not waste itself in words. "We measure the grace or goodness of one toward others by four things:—By the height from which He looks down on his objects; by the depth in which He finds them lying beneath Him; by the sacrifices to which He submits for their good, and by the benefits which at much cost to Himself, He confers upon them."—Schaff. What were our Lord's riches? (see Prov. viii.; Jno. xvii. 5). Before his incarnation, want was unknown to Him. All resources were at his command. His poverty began at his birth, and continued throughout his whole life. He was cradled in a manger, and was buried in a borrowed tomb. His life was one of continual dependence. He possessed no home, and owned no property. The purpose of this was to make us rich, not in a temporal sense, but as He was and as He now is. The term "riches" is used very frequently in the New Testament, but very seldom with reference to this world's goods (see Eph. ii. 7; iii. 16; Rev. iii. 18). These are the "durable riches (Prov. vii. 18) which never fail us.

We are called to be imitators of Him in this. How can we be recognised as his followers if we do not tread in his steps?

It is said of Mr. Spurgeon that when a lad he adopted the custom of giving a tenth to God, but when he won a money prize for an essay he felt he could not give less than a fifth. How God blessed him, and gave him continually increasing opportunities for doing good, is known to all. Life becomes a luxury when it is lived in such a spirit.

For the Young.

NELLIE'S PROMISE.

Sweet Nellie Rivers! Everyone called her that, and I think if you look at her in her sombre black garments, telling of some sorrow lately borne, with her dark eyes upturned and her finger uplifted, as though to hush even the beating of her heart amidst the great silent woods, you will agree with me that she looks a dear, gentle girl, well-earning the title of "Sweet Nellie." To-day her face is a little sad, for she has been busy gathering delicate wood-anemones or "wind-flowers" in her garden basket from their shelter under the trees; and when I tell you the dainty white blossoms are to weave a wreath for her mother's grave, and that mother's grave was not yet green, every one of you will read aright the secret of Nellie's sorrow, and will sympathise with a lonely, motherless girl of only ten years old.

Not four weeks ago Nellie had stood by her mother's bedside weeping. The Angel of Death stood silently by, watching mother and child, knowing that soon the farewell words would be spoken, and the last, long kiss be given. Nellie had watched her mother grow daily weaker for many months, and her long illness had made the little maiden thoughtful and tender beyond her years. She seldom left her mother, and often cried bitterly at the thought that she could not accompany her across death's river, but must remain behind, lonely, heart-broken, and friendless. Nellie's mother loved the Lord Jesus, and right across the dark river she could see the "goodly Land."

There everlasting spring abides,
And never-withering flowers, where the Lamb leads all who love Him beside living fountains of waters, and where tears are wiped away for ever. She often talked to her little daughter of that bright city, and told her how her heart swelled with joy at the thought of soon seeing her Saviour. But often her eyes would rest lovingly on her little daughter, and she would say—

"Will you meet me there, Nellie, darling?" Then Nellie would look away, and big tears would fall fast, yet mother's tender question would remain unanswered.

Mother's last day on earth came. She was very weak. Nellie could only just catch the whispered request,

"Bring your hymn-book, darling, and sing me something before I die."

"What shall I sing, mother dear?" asked the child, with quivering lips.

"Sing that pretty hymn we used to sing together —about the fountain."

"I know; here it is," said Nellie, trying not to cry—'Will you meet me at the fountain?' Isn't that it, mother?"

"Yes, that's it. And when you come to the chorus 'Yes, I'll meet you at the fountain,' try and mean it, my darling child. Let it be your promise to me before I die, and may Jesus help you to keep it!" How Nellie sang that hymn she never knew. It was with tearful eyes and tremulous voice, you may be sure, but it sounded like angel music in her mother's ears, soothing her dying spirit with sweet and heaven-born calm. Her worn features lighted up with inexpressible joy as, making an effort at clearness, Nellie uttered the promise:—

Yes, I'll meet you at the fountain, with an emphasis that showed she really meant what she said. Then came the farewell kiss and moments of unconsciousness, during which mother's spirit took its flight, to await in the "sweet by and by" her little girl's coming to the golden gate.

. . . . . .

The Sabbath bells were ringing for the evening services and the very sound of them made Nellie sad. Somehow she missed her mother more every day, and many a visit the child paid to the quiet grave in the cemetery corner. She knew well enough that her mother's happy spirit was not there, only the poor frail body, that had suffered so terribly during her last months of life.

The child's young heart was almost crushed with sorrow, and her loneliness was intensified by the fact that no one dreamed of her depth of feeling, and those around, seeing her quick, bright ways unchanged, decided that Nellie bore her loss very well.

Nellie's schoolfellow, Mary Davies, happened to look in this Sunday evening upon the lonely little girl, who looked particularly forlorn, as she sat in solitary state in the big dining-room.

"Will you come to the children's service with me this evening?" she asked. "I want a companion, for papa will not let me go alone of an evening."

"Come to the children's service. Oh! yes, that is just what I should like." And Nellie jumped up at once to put on her tippet and hat, and to fetch her Bible. She did not tell her friend Mary why she felt so pleased to go, but it was because she hoped at the children's service to hear more of the beautiful land to which her mother had gone.

She wanted to keep her promise, and she felt a great longing for some friend to take her by the hand, and to lead her to her mother's Saviour, from whom she felt so far away, and to whom she knew not how to come.

With her little friend she soon joined the happy crowd of boys and girls who were trooping to the hall, and joined in their sweet songs of praise.

O! how bright and cheerful it all seemed, and how close it brought Nellie, in spirit, to her mother. At that service Nellie fulfilled her promise, pouring out her sorrowful heart into the sympathising ears of a Christian friend, whose simple explanation of the way of salvation just met the child's need. Gladly she accepted her mother's Saviour, and from that day Nellie's loneliness left her, although she could never help missing her mother in many ways, yet she knew that each day brought her nearer to the waiting time, and when a great longing crept over her for her mother's love and sympathy, she would quiet her heart by the thought that in a very little while they would meet never to part again.

And Nellie's life work is to tell the lonely-hearted that the Lord Jesus is a good and satisfying friend.

Eva Travers Evered Poole.

WHAT TIME IS IT?

What time is it?
Time to do well—
Time to live better;
Give up that grudge;
Answer that letter;
Speaking that kind word to sweeten a sorrow,
Do that good deed you would leave till to-morrow.

What time is it?
Time to be earnest,
Laying up treasure.
Time to be thoughtful
Choosing true pleasure;
Loving stern justice—of truth being fond
Making your word just as good as your bond.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Weaverham, Nov. 2; Liverpool, Nov. 3-5; Pershore, Nov. 6-7; Nechells, Birmingham, Nov. 11-19; Rev. M. J. Hall, Taunton, to Nov. 6; St. Philip's, Manchester, Nov. 18-27; Mr. J. Spiers, at Aberystwith; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tottington, Bury, to Nov. 5; Tunstead Schools, Nov. 12-19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Gresham Chapel, Brixton, Nov. 12-17; Drybrook, Nov. 19-24; Mr T. Lewes Sayer, Chester, Nov. 9; Birmingham, 10; Walsall, 11; Stafford, 12; Grays, 14; Mr. George Goodman, Baptist Church, Putney, Nov. 5-10; Powis Hall, Bayswater, Nov. 12-19; Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Baptist Chapel, Brockley, Nov. 19-24; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Southport, to Nov. 3; Birmingham, Nov. 4; Cambridge, Nov. 6-18; Brussels, Nov. 19-30.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Nov. 5, S., 1 Kings viii. 1-13; 6, viii. 14-30; 7, viii. 54-66; 8, ix. 1-9; 9, x. 1-13; 10, xi. 4-14; 11, xi. 26-40.

HEDNESFORD, STAFFORDSHIRE.—Mr. Newton Jones conducted a week's mission in the Wesleyan Chapel and School, commencing Saturday, October 14. Upwards of 6000 children assembled each evening and were interested and instructed in a manner which was certainly unique; many of them gave unmistakable signs of the good work. The meetings were followed by services for senior scholars and adults, and at each meeting the attendance was large. As a result, a considerable number have expressed their desire to join the Church.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY. — The committee of the C.M.S. will meet friends of the Society for special prayer, on St. Andrew's Day, Thursday, November 30, at Sion College, Thames Embankment, at 3 p.m. In a circular to friends and supporters regarding this annual day of intercession for foreign missions, the following topics are mentioned for a place in the prayers of friends of the C.M.S., in view of the Society's present position and prospects:—The colleges and divinity institutions at which students are being prepared for foreign service; that there may be a deepening of spiritual life in the labourers; and that Christians in general may more adequately recognise their duty as regards non-Christians. Special reference is made to the claims of Mohammedan lands, and the needs of India, China, and Japan, and new developments in Africa. Reasons for devout thankfulness are also given. Copies of the circular may be had from the Society's house, Salisbury-square, E.C.

CHRISTMAS LETTERS.

Once more Christmas is approaching, and the latest report of the Christmas Letter Mission brings its reminder of a handmaid to varied departments of Christian work, only waiting to be helpfully utilised. We sometimes ask ourselves whether ministers and district visitors, Bible-class and Sunday-school teachers, workers among soldiers, sailors, miners, factory hands, navvies, railway men, omnibus, cab, and tram men, realise the helpfulness of a machinery which in 1871 originated with the printing of a few letters, to be placed on the pillows of the sick in hospitals and infirmaries during the night of Christmas Eve, and has now extended to a varied annual issue of illustrated letters, cards, and Christmas and New Year's gift books, etc., for all classes, and for these and other seasons. At a time of special pressure it furnishes bright and attractive missives, needing only a signature, and, if desired, a few added lines, to constitute each letter a personal and individual greeting.

A perusal of the twenty-first annual report will confirm our suggestion that workers should distribute these brightly illustrated and anecdotal letters whenever possible. Containing the Gospel message in simplest form, they are calculated to emphasise with permanent impression the "Unto thee is born a Saviour," which at Christmas time it is the longing of every true-hearted worker to give forth.

In reporting the dissemination of more than 580,000 letters and text cards in the English language alone, we note that the Christmas Letter Mission distributions have approximately reached a total of seven and a quarter millions.

The following extract from the report details an account of distribution to railway men:—"For several years these have been distributed by the Christmas Letter Mission. The following, from a signalman on one of our Midland lines, was forwarded by a lady engaged in Christian work among a 'tunnel gang'—a rough crew of navvies to whom 'Christmas Letters' had been sent. One of these, founded on the narrative of the Forth Bridge, had proved the arrow of conviction to the writer:—'I have to thank you again for your beautiful Christmas letter and card. I cannot express the gratitude I feel to you for it. . . . . I believe I told you when I wrote to you before that I had come over on the 'sunny side of the bridge' (a reference to the Christmas letter). 'I am glad to be able to testify that my Lord can both save and keep me, and I know I am his at this very moment, for his Spirit beareth witness with my spirit that I am his child.'"

Many early friends have been removed by death since the issue of the last report, but as, year by year, the names of old friends and subscribers are missed from our Christmas Letter Mission ranks, it is hoped that new helpers and distributors will enlist. More than ever is such help needed, not only in large cities, and for hospitals, infirmaries, and other institutions left unprovided, but also in the effort to make arrangements for distributions in towns and villages and in rural districts, where the Christmas post is welcomed with a surprise of delight and interest. The hon. secretary and treasurer will gratefully respond to such offers of co-operation, and will furnish full information by return of post. Address, Miss E. Steele Elliott, 66, Mildmay-park, London, N.

Our readers should furnish themselves with specimens and sample packets of the new letters, prices 3d. and 1s. 6d. respectively, to be obtained direct from the printers, Messrs. Hazell, Watson, and Viney, 1, Creed-lane, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

DEEP-SEA MISSIONARIES.—A Reuter telegram from St. John's, Newfoundland, October 23, says:—The ship Albert, which is despatched each year by the Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, to minister to the spiritual and material needs of the large migratory colony of men, women, and children who annually visit the Labrador Fishery, arrived here to-day on its return from the Labrador coast. The three doctors have treated no fewer than 2250 patients against 900 last year. Two hospitals have also been erected, and found most serviceable. The benefits of the philanthropic work undertaken by the mission are universally appreciated, but it is felt that the services of a steamer, to replace the Albert, which is only a sailing vessel, are greatly needed for next year, in order to overtake the growing work among the fisher settlements on the bleak shores of Labrador.

The Chicago Campaign.

A GREAT MEETING.

Sunday, October 8, 1871, is a date that has been burned with flame into the memory of every Chicagoan of that awful fateful time. It was the day of the most destructive fire in the history of the New World. The magnificent city of to-day, with its world's wonder of the Great Exposition, took note of the twenty-second anniversary of the fire, and made it a "Chicago day" for the Fair, celebrating it with imposing demonstrations that attracted the largest multitude of people the city has ever seen, about three-quarters of a million.

Mr. Moody, whose great evangelistic enterprise has run parallel with the World's Fair, and who has always been swift to make the utmost of every opportunity to press the Gospel upon the attention of the people, resolved to celebrate "Chicago day" on the religious side, by holding an extraordinary meeting four and a-half hours long, from 10 a.m. to 2.30 p.m. in the great Central Music Hall.

"Will the people go and sit down in a hall over four hours, to listen to songs and sermons, on such a perfect October day, when the World's Fair has put on all its glory?" This was the anxious question of many, who feared that Mr. Moody had made a mistake. The question was soon answered by a multitude of people that packed the immense building and overflowed into the streets by hundreds. So great was the desire to enter, that the doors had to be double-barred, after the hall was full, to resist the pressure from without, and many went away bitterly disappointed, who had come great distances to attend the meeting.

The writer of this article, to gain a good point for outlook and hearing, climbed to one of the boxes hanging like birds'-nests up near the dome. On the platform are massed together the whole corps of evangelists, all the song leaders, with the quartettes and the great chorus choir, and Mr. Moody at the front, keen, active, alert, like the veteran engineer on the engine of a "flyer" directing everything to its destined end. The time has come to begin.

Let us sing, "All hail the power of Jesu's name," cries Mr. Moody, and the thundering organ, the two cornets, the choir, and the thousand-voiced congregation burst forth in a musical shout. "Crown Him Lord of all." Surely there are heart and soul in this exultant song. "Let us all give thanks to God for his great goodness," says the leader, reverently, and Evangelist Porter leads the worshippers in thanksgiving and prayer.

Now another hymn, one of Moody's favourites, a metrical version of the 130th Psalm, with the chorus, "For Jehovah I am waiting, and my hope is in his word," rings out in a mighty volume of sound. "Let us all unite in prayer," says the leader, and Lord Kinnaird, of London, prays fervently, with thanksgiving and praise.

"Sing hymn 309, 'I shall be satisfied.'" Mr. Burke and Miss Hidden sing this beautiful song as a duet, while the author of the music, Mr. Stebbins, accompanies them on the organ.

"The ladies' quartette will sing." Four ladies of the Moody Bible Institute rise and sing "I will abide with Thee." Dr. L. W. Munhall, of Philadelphia, leads the congregation to the throne of grace, and still the spirit of devotion rises.

"Let us sing hymn 301, 'Saviour, lead me,' the congregation joining in the chorus." The choir sing these tender words, and the chorus swells out with the voices of the multitude. "Mr. Towner will sing 'My Mother's Prayer.'" What a sweet, simple, pathetic song. Rev. John McNeill prays, and the worshippers rise with him on wings of faith before the throne of God. "Sing Hymn 135. All sing. If you can't sing, say the Hallelujah. You can all say that." How the people sing! The glorious "Hallelujah" of the chorus makes the building thrill and tremble. It stirs Mr. Moody's soul. "Men tell us the Cross has lost its power! Does this look like it? Yesterday the Gospel was preached to more people than on any day in the history of Chicago. Nothing draws like the uplifted Christ of the Gospel."

"Now let us take up our offering. Help us to pay for the rent of this building. All give something." As the offering is being taken the instruments softly play the music of the hymn, "I need Thee every hour."

"Mr. Varley will now speak to us. I call on him first, so that he can go over to the Women's Temple and conduct a meeting there." Evangelist Varley reads the account of the woman with a spirit of infirmity whom Christ healed, and makes application of its lessons to Christians having life but no liberty—bent, bowed, bound souls, who need the power of Christ to loose them and make them upright. He touched some of the great evils that afflict us.

"Mr. Jacobs will sing hymn 101." The pleading song rings out sweetly from the singer's lips, "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me," and amens are in our hearts. "Let us all rise and sing hymn 430." Again and again the solemn question rings out in song from thousands of lips, "When Jesus comes, will He find us watching?" "Major Whittle will lead in prayer. Let us all pray." The Major recalls past mercies, praises the faithful Lord, and cries fervently to Him for manifestations of saving grace and power.

"The ladies' quartette will sing 'Rock of Ages,' a beautiful hymn." How sweetly these charming singers render the dear old hymn, singing with grace in their hearts and voices. "Mr. McNeill will now speak to us." The Scotch preacher begins with a happy reference to the dominant memory of the day. "I remember the time when that tempest of flame swept over your city, and the cry of her desolation sounded in our ears beyond the sea. In that dark day God was your helper, and your sorrow brought you near the hearts of the whole civilised world. I don't know but that you were nearer God in that day of your disaster and woe than now since you have waxed strong and mighty. In conversation with Treasurer Harvey, of your Relief Committee, he told me that the most touching gift he received was a box of clothes from one of the most destitnte parts of destitute Ireland, poor patched clothes of every description, in which Ireland is so rich. When you look upon your big dry-goods' houses that reach up almost to heaven, it will be well to remember that box of patched clothes from poor Irish homes beyond the sea." As a fitting keynote of praise for the day, the speaker reads the opening verses of the 103rd psalm. "The core of all praise is the throb and song of the heart. Oh, for the singing heart!" He opens the riches of the "inspired directory of praise," and evokes music from every sounding chord of the beautiful psalm. He closes with a vivid picture of the release and sunward flight of a captive eagle, the congregation breaking out into applause.

"Sing the 378th hymn, 'His mercy flows an endless stream.' Sing as you never sang before." And they do sing. Higher and higher swell the notes of the magnificent chorus. "Sing it again." And they sing it again and again. "Let the people on the floor of the hall sing it alone." The wave of song rolls over the auditorium. "Now let the first gallery try it." The chorus rolls up from the first balcony. "Now you people up in the second gallery sing it alone." Up in the dome the glad chorus breaks out. "Once more! That was good." Again, louder, they sing it out with gladness and joy. "Now let everybody sing it." Organ, cornets, choirs, floor, stage, galleries, aisles, every thing breaks out into the jubilant cry,

> His mercy flows an endless stream,
> To all eternity the same.

The waves of sound break upon my lofty eyrie like the spray of a musical Niagara, and the dome rolls them back again upon the heads of the worshippers.

"Mr. Inglis will lead us in prayer. Let us all pray." The warmhearted Englishman gives voice to the thoughts in our hearts, and soft ripples of "amen" pass over the auditorium.

"Miss Hidden will sing a solo, No. 116." As she sings the beautiful strains, our thoughts are borne towards that happy time when

> We shall meet our loved ones there,
> Some sweet day, by and by.

"Major Whittle will address us." The Major is a Chicagoan. He recalls how he came to the city in 1857, and has made it his home city ever since. He also has his memorable experiences of the great fire burned in the memory. He recalls some of the incidents of the time and makes spiritual application of them, centering all upon the supreme importance of the unseen and eternal things which abide when this glory and wealth of the earthly shall have passed away for ever.

"Sing the 318th hymn, 'Am I a soldier of the Cross?'" The familiar words seem to put on new meaning as they are sung forth under the inspiration of the hour.

"We will now be addressed by Dr. Pierson." Dr. Pierson's stirring address has the glowing reflection of the great fire in all its parts. He relates some remarkable incidents of the awful conflagration that swept over the north-west which came to his knowledge in a journey over the wide waste of the burnt district, six by four miles in extent. The speaker proceeded to talk of the fire that shall try every man's work and of the kind of work that shall abide the finery test, concluding with an account of his own experience in the ministry which issued in entire consecration and new spheres of blessed service in the kingdom of Christ.

"Let us pray. Mr. Needham will lead us in prayer." The evangelist speaks out of our hearts, and with one accord we wait at the throne of grace, receiving the blessings we seek. "Let us sing." What? Nothing so fitting as the cry, "Nearer, my God, to thee." How the musical outcry of the throng rings out with heart and voice.

"We will hear a word from Lord Kinnaird." The word which the British peer speaks is an appeal to the young to keep their record clear and clean and an assurance to those who have failed that God can and will restore and revoke that which they have marred, if they will but bring it to Him.

"The Princeton Quartette will sing." The song is one of the most affecting and impressive yet heard in these meetings. It is the first seven verses of Ecclesiastes xii., set to music that carries the sentiment irresistibly into the heart. One rarely sees a congregation solemnised, hushed, and moved as that touching cry of the ancient singer moves them.

"Dr. Munhall will now address us." In a rousing address the evangelist speaks of a current misconception of the fatherhood of God, and corrects it. He refers to Nature's testimony to the wisdom, power, and glory of God, and shows that only in Jesus Christ can we find his saving grace and love declared and set forth. He speaks of the written word as disclosing the living word, and illustrates the power and sufficiency of the word from the experiences of men, closing his inspiring address with a thrilling incident of the late civil war.

"Let us all sing Hymn 74." It is two o'clock, and the hymn seems to be intended for the close of the meeting. It is, "God be with you till we meet again." But now Mr. Moody rises to speak, and we are to have the promised sermon he preached twenty-two years ago, on the night of the fire.

Mr. Moody begins by expressing his gratification at the success of the meeting. "I want to say to young ministers here," he says, "that nothing will draw people like the Gospel of Christ, preached and sung with the Spirit." He recalls his experience on the night of the great fire, as he was preaching in Farwell Hall from the words of Pilate, "What shall I do then with Jesus, who is called the Christ?" He is profoundly moved, and cannot restrain his tears, as the memories of the past rush through his soul, and as he repreaches the same sermon he had preached that fateful night to a congregation he would never see again until the Judgment of the Great Day. He speaks on the high key of truest eloquence, the congregation responding with tears and amens, or with a deep hush of holy awe.

He concludes with a prayer of thanksgiving, consecration, supplication, and tearful intercession for the city and for the multitudes coming up to the Fair. Once more the people unite in singing, and are dismissed with the benediction, to meet again no more until all the earth shall stand before the Judgment seat of Christ. H. B. Hartzler.

240, La Salle Ave., Chicago, Ill.

CONFERENCE IN SPAIN.—A Conference was lately held at Corunna of workers from Madrid, Vigo, and Linares, who told of God's work. Says Mr. Davies, "How great is the need! From Madrid to Corunna, 400 miles, and only one preacher on the way; Madrid to Linares, 180 miles, with no preacher; from Madrid to the Mediterranean, no preacher; Madrid to Portugal, no preacher! Mr. Nisbet's recent visit to Setiles was counted a most daring act by the priests and people, so unknown is the Gospel message!"

A NOBLE PROGRAMME.—A new weekly halfpenny paper called The Hammer has been launched in Sheffield. In the first number it says:—"Our aim will be to advocate such a policy as shall sweeten human life; a policy of unselfishness, so that man will not continually be looking on his own things, but every man upon the things of others. Whatever is good for all is good for each; and what is good for each is also good for all. Our intention is to elevate and refine social conditions; to raise even the lowest and most degraded amongst us; in a word, to do our share in making the Lord's Prayer a reality—'Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven.'"

The Late MR. W. P. LOCKHART,

OF TOXTETH TABERNACLE, LIVERPOOL.

VERY prominent in the list of Scottish worthies who have enriched England by their forces of brain, hand, and heart, should ever be the name of William Peddie Lockhart. His first eleven years were spent in Kirkcaldy, the Fifeshire town which saw the early friendship of Edward Irving and Thomas Carlyle. The law of heredity found in him a striking illustration, for both his grandfathers were men of business and earnest pastors, and the sober piety of his father and uncles mingled in his character, with the quick wit and hard thinking of an exceptionally clever and studious mother.

In 1847 the family removed to Liverpool, whence the ships in which Mr. Lockhart was part owner sailed. Here William, after a good many years of experience, entered business on his own account. Just about this time his conversion took place. "I knew the truth well enough intellectually," he has said to the writer, "and I could take part in religious discussions at my father's table, but I didn't see it." He was walking by himself near the Menai Straits, when suddenly the Saviour's dying word, "It is finished," was flashed upon his mind. On the instant he replied, "If that is true, I'm saved," and the conviction so expressed seems never to have left him for a moment.

Such a man with such a truth could not long be silent, and so after a few months he was constrained to announce, without any indication of his subject, that "W. P. Lockhart would deliver, in a certain hall in Birkenhead, an address to young men." Curiosity to hear the model wicket-keeper—possibly on cricket—drew a good audience, one at least coming from Chester for the occasion. Mr. Lockhart has described the nervous misery which he suffered before that memorable meeting, which marked the commencement of his mighty ministry, and which his manly bearing and self-possession would never have allowed a hearer to suspect. A reporter sat in front, pencil in hand, but his paper remained blank, and at the close of the address he stepped on the platform with the old question, "What must I do to be saved?" Another hearer listened longer unmoved, sceptical probably of all religious purpose, till the speaker, marking the downward course of a soul, with an emphatic thrust of his hand struck the glass of water and cut himself to the bone. The impatient haste with which he twisted his handkerchief round the wound arrested this onlooker, who said to himself, "The man is in earnest"; and thenceforth listened with an attention which resulted in his decision for Christ.

From the mission-room and the open-air in Birkenhead, the new evangelist's work soon spread to various points in Liverpool and the neighbourhood. Hengler's Circus on Sunday evening furnished his largest opportunity, but the Thursday evening meetings of from five to eight hundred in Hope Hall were his most characteristic successes. They were for the most part plain and practical expositions, without a suspicion of oratory or any preparation of language, but they were wonderfully fascinating. The writer remembers them as the treat of the week during college vacations. The quality of the audience may be gathered from the remark made by one of the most able and prominent of the Liverpool clergy: "That young man has got the cream of our congregations."

(From a Copyright Photograph by Mr. Thomas Edge, Gloddaeth Street, Llandudno.)

The attraction was no doubt in the man as much as in his words, and that drew us to his office for a chat as often as we dared to go. He was a good business man, but he never seemed too busy to welcome us, and to talk of the greatest work of all. And time was given as readily as money. A young man impressed at one of his earliest meetings came by invitation to his office at twelve o'clock. For two hours he laboured to make him see that salvation was immediately possible to him, and being obliged then to let him go as he came, he made him promise to return on the morrow. Two hours more were patiently given, with the happy result that the visitor went away the second time with his cup running over.

Straight hitting was the great characteristic of Mr. Lockhart's preaching. Seldom had any of his followers heard such faithful dealing with the conscience, such exposure of the tricks of Satan and the deceptions of the human heart. Seldom, if ever, had they been told so plainly how out of Christ they were under condemnation, without hope, in constant danger of eternal punishment. And God used this testimony, and souls, awakened by it, received as good news indeed the declaration of pardon through the finished work of Christ, and of immediate adoption into the heavenly family. Conversions multiplied, and many of those whom he had led into the light called for his help in their new sphere of service.

A band of young men of good parts and positions was now and ever afterwards closely associated with him in evangelistic work; but, able preachers as some of them were, there was never any possible question about leadership. His word about other men's work was often an inspiration. Once we carried a message to him from a dying sister, begging him to visit a certain ungodly village and speak in the open air, and his unexpected reply, "I can't; go yourself," seemed to come to us direct from heaven, and started us on a new experience of service.

He was soon known and felt far from Liverpool. Being in Paisley in 1865, we went one week evening into a large church. Our friend was preaching, and the building was full. In explanation we were told that he was as welcome in Glasgow and its neighbourhood as in Liverpool. He did everything naturally, and so harmonised things that are usually exchanged only with an effort. Thus one evening he sat down beside us for a prayer-meeting exclaiming, "I've just come from cricket: made a big score!" "How much?" "Ninety." And he was all the more ready for prayer.

His sympathy with the work of others was prompt and practical. We told him once of a wish to make an evangelistic effort among University men, for which we had not means. Next time we met he held out a handful of gold, saying, "Take what you want; it's from a friend." He could wound, too, in true love, not by a passing word only, but by letter, carefully written in the cause of truth or justice which he thought had been wronged or imperilled.

No doubt his humour and repartee enhanced the influence of his strength and wisdom. Rightly believing in the importance of continuity in his work, he would not allow the Hope Hall meetings to be interrupted. The representative of some society called upon him and said: "Mr. Lockhart, in the name of the Lord I ask you to let me have Hope Hall on (such a) Thursday." The only reply was "In the name of the Lord I refuse you." On his umbrella one day we read the strange engraving, "Don't steal this as you did the last," and he assured us the inscription had been successful in bringing back a forgotten loan.

"Why are you a teetotaller?" we asked him one day, as we crossed the Mersey together. "Because I'm afraid of getting drunk," he said, and gravely insisted upon the reasonableness of the answer, in the absence of all special tendency to intemperance. We commend the blunt word for its humility and true philosophy to those who think that they stand safely on the ground of moderation.

Since those early years Mr. Lockhart has been mostly known, in business, as the founder and manager of the important and successful Investment Building Society, and in Christian work as the lay pastor of Toxteth Tabernacle, which was built in 1871 at a cost of £7000, and opened, as alone he would permit it to be opened, free of debt. There and in the adjoining buildings, added at a cost of £1200, and in mission halls among the poor of Liverpool, he has laboured in the Gospel and for the right, wherever he could recognise it—in temperance, peace, philanthropy, and politics—a true Christian Bayard, "without fear and without reproach."

The warning of the end came fourteen months ago by an apoplectic seizure, but he rallied, and too daringly continued his double work. Obliged at last to desist, he was resting hopefully at Ballater, on the Scottish Dee, when paralysis supervened, and after a few days of peaceful weakness, on the 12th of August he was called away.

His funeral, attended by the Lord Mayor of the city and by thousands of mourners, including many clergymen and ministers and deputations from religious and political societies, fitly expressed the public esteem which his great life had unintentionally but inevitably won. Among the true words of appreciation then spoken none were more authoritative than those of Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who, speaking from a friendship of thirty-two years, said:—"He had a much higher talent than the world gave him credit for. He had one of the strongest understandings and clearest minds, and intuitively saw the right course in most things. . . . Had he chosen to devote his talents to public life and self-aggrandisement, he might have risen high, but God reserved him for better work. The effects of his life were beautiful and good, and no man could wish for more than that."

Ashton-under-Lyne.

For several years a quiet and interesting work of God has been in progress here. A morning meeting in the Methodist New Connexion room for Bible exposition and prayer, specially with a view to the deepening of spiritual life, has been attended by Christians from many churches, and has been a source of very great blessing. A conference of Christian workers and a convention for the deepening of spiritual life was arranged for October 7. The meetings were very largely attended. Addresses were given by various brethren. The meetings have resulted in still further stirring up the churches throughout the district.

A permanent committee has been formed, and it is decided that an annual convention shall be held at Eastertide, with quarterly union gatherings between.

In Memoriam.

SIR STEVENSON ARTHUR BLACKWOOD.

"And they glorified God in me."

A meeting for prayer, thanksgiving, and testimony, in memory of the president for over twenty years of the mother of modern evangelical conferences, was appropriately held at Mildmay on Tuesday evening last week.

Col. Morton presided. After reading letters of sympathy from several friends unable to be present, he referred to 2 Kings xiii. 20-21, and hoped that as, when the dead body of a man touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, so, coming in contact with the memory of their late friend, Christians would be aroused and souls be quickened into spiritual life. He added that Miss Marsh has written a memorial sketch which appears in the November number of Service for the King.

Mr. H. C. Nisbet, as one of the trustees, spoke of the wise counsel and prayerful guidance which their deceased friend had given in the private consultations, as well as his valuable expositions on the platform of the conference. They were all familiar with his form and face, and all would miss "the touch of the vanished hand, and the sound of the voice that was still." He was a man of God—one who came from God and went to God.

Dr. H. Grattan Guinness said: A prince in Israel has fallen. How can we but mourn? Stevenson Arthur Blackwood, when shall we see thy like again? So manly and so Godly; so strong, yet so gentle; so natural and yet so spiritual. A gifted teacher, an able manager of men and of affairs, a faithful friend, a loving, sympathising brother. Who shall take thy place? A Saul in stature, a David in spirit, a Jonathan in gentleness and grace. How often in this very place has his voice lifted and guided the minds of thousands? Naturally noble, spiritually nobler still, thou hast glorified the hand that made thee what thou wert.

Faithful to the end thou hast reached the goal. To thee the wilderness is passed. The city which hath the foundations hath received thee. Thy star is not extinguished. Set to us, it shines on other scenes, and shall shine for ever. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord: they rest, they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them. They sleep in Jesus. Absent from the body they are present with the Lord. They are with Him where He is, and behold his glory. They are numbered with the holy. They are spirits of the just made perfect.

He is gone; gone on; gone up; gone in; gone home. But his example remains as an inspiration. His steps have left their prints upon the upward path. His large-hearted sympathy with Christian work in every form, how can we forget it? He was the warm and practical friend of missionary enterprise. For the last sixteen years he was the treasurer of our Missionary Institute in East London and Derbyshire. During the whole of that period he was in constant communication with us, examining the Institute accounts, and signing all the Institute cheques from week to week; no light work for a busy man such as he was, but most cheerfully and gracefully and faithfully accomplished. Never in all that period of many years did one single cloud come over our friendship. Never the least chill. Never did we see any relaxation of his missionary sympathies. Never did he complain of the burden he had undertaken to bear. Never did he render the service as though it was a sacrifice; always as a privilege. And the service he rendered was a strength to the work, especially in its earlier days, and in times of difficulty. We know not how to measure the good he thus accomplished. It has reached wherever the Institute has been made a blessing in the world.

Beside the missionary bond there was another tie of sympathy which bound us to him. His daily and diligent studies of the Word of God had led him to embrace the grand old Protestant and historic interpretation of prophecy, the interpretation which sustained the faithful witnesses to God's truth all through the gross darkness and dreadful persecutions of the middle ages; the interpretation that the Reformers received, and on which they built the noble structure of the reformed churches; the interpretation which they embodied in their expressions of faith, and sealed with their blood; the interpretation which has been justified by long centuries of fulfilment. Stevenson Arthur Blackwood was no mere speculatist in his study of prophecy. He was no presumptuous dogmatist. He did not pretend to be a prophet. He was too wise to rush in where angels fear to tread. He kept, in his studies of the prophetic word, on the terra firma of historic fulfilment. He studied facts and eschewed mere fancies.

To him the Papacy was the anti-Christian power foretold by prophets and apostles, and worthy of the place it occupies in prophecy, as having centred in itself for long ages the darkness and superstition and tyranny which have eclipsed the Church of God, and changed the Temple of the Spirit into a synagogue of Satan, a temple of idols, a house of merchandise, and a den of thieves. He recognised Rome as the predicted Babylon. He mourned over the mischief it had wrought. He abhorred its evil ways. He looked and longed for its speedy and final destruction.

We need the grand old Protestant interpretation of prophecy in these days. The hands which should have helped to sustain it have broken it down. This old barrier against Romanism is removed, and as a consequence superstition, sacerdotalism, Ritualism, priestcraft, Popery, are rolling in like a dark flood upon the land. The terrible tide advances, and there is no power to stay it. The watchmen on the walls have ceased to warn the people. The spirit of Luther, of Tyndale, of Latimer, of Knox, of Calvin, is dead. These men have no successors in our days. Their doctrine is silenced. But Truth is Truth. It changes not. It knows no fashions. It never fades. It cannot die. And it shall yet speak, and shall be heard, and shall prevail.

The last words our brother Blackwood published were on this theme. The words he still speaks in the letters on Apocalyptic prophecy, which are still being published from week to week, are on this subject. He has gone up, pointing us to the prophetic page. His last utterance has been the cry, "Come out of Babylon, my people, saith your God"; and that other and even more thrilling cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

Farewell, beloved and honoured brother. God give us others of like spirit with thyself. Farewell, until the day break and the shadows flee away. Then shall we see thee again. We shall meet thee in the morning—in the morning without clouds.

Dr. Barnardo said: I can only venture to speak of Sir Arthur Blackwood as I personally knew him. Of him I can say that he was an ever-faithful friend and a wise counsellor. For five-and-twenty years I have known him. During all that time he has stood by me and God's work in my hands, through evil and through good report. He possessed one essential quality of friendship—a sympathetic, loyal nature, "a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathise." Of his wisdom, I can recollect how often I sought him, and with what manifold difficulties and perplexities, how unerring, commonsense, and direct was his wise perception of the case. All who knew him, knew as I did, that he was also very courageous.

Let me recall one notable example. In December, 1889, in consequence of the strictures of one of the judges, a meeting was convened under Sir Arthur Blackwood's presidency at Exeter Hall to express confidence in me, and in my work. Agitation was set on foot to prevent his filling the chair, and questions were actually asked of the Postmaster-General in Parliament. In his opening remarks, Sir Arthur Blackwood in dignified terms replied to the attack, closing with these words:—"I should be untrue to my extremely deep religious convictions if I absented myself to-night from a post to which honour and duty alike call me."

All who knew him could speak of his gracious bearing towards those in an inferior position. Some of my lads, who were employed in the post-office a few years ago, were in a difficulty. I advised them to write a respectful letter to Sir Arthur Blackwood. The latter had an interview with them, and afterwards one of the lads said, "Sir, he was such a gentleman. He put his hand kindly on my shoulder, and spoke to me as if he was my brother."

Sir Arthur Blackwood was eminently a man of the Book; his mind was saturated with the Word of God. That he was also a man of prayer we all know. I have frequently gone into his room to consult him about some difficulty. While there, every now and then a clerk would bring in a basket of letters. We could not kneel to prayer, but, unruffled, Sir Arthur would pass his hand over his brow and in one or two soft quiet sentences commit the case to God, and I went out feeling refreshed and helped. Let us not forget that he was one whom God used mightily to the blessing of others. We have all recently read the testimony of that honoured servant of Christ, Archibald G. Brown, who, when a youth, was led through Sir Arthur Blackwood to Christ, and he in his turn has been the messenger whom God has used to carry the word of salvation to thousands in the East-end. And all over the country there are other servants of Christ at work to-day, who owe their first incentive and inspiration to the blessed ministry of this dear servant of Christ.

Last, but not least, let me say this of him that he had ever a tender heart for little children! My earliest recollection of him was of the interest he displayed in a number of my boys, and since he has gone to be with Christ one of the nurses who was with him in the earlier part of his illness came to obtain my advice about two destitute children, whose admission Sir Arthur had advised her to seek at the Homes. Let us pray for Mildmay, that God may raise up one qualified to step into the vacant place, and let us also remember those bereaved relatives whose loss is irreparable.

Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote: He was a leader of men: beyond all else a leader of men to Christ. He continually took time out of his lunch hour to seek souls. Twenty-seven years ago he had thus won the speaker to Christ. In 1875 he was invited to Cambridge to hold meetings among the undergraduates. His subject, Everlasting Joy. Every man in the University received a personal invitation, and more than half of them responded. Mr. Blackwood stood up, not offering prayer—had he done so many would have gone out. He had prayed before he came. He told them how God had given him everlasting life. Many of these men were led to God. The work then begun has been going on ever since. Some years after Mr. Moody was asked to Cambridge, but was unable then to go; Mr. Leite Rozas went, who was one of Sir Arthur's children in the faith, and many received Christ as their Saviour.

Mr. Henry Edwards, of Brighton, paid a warm tribute to the gracious and helpful way in which Sir Arthur always presided at the Mildmay Conference.

Mr. Stark related this interesting story. A Scotch gentleman was travelling from Glasgow to London with another whom he did not know. He got out at a station and ordered some soup, which was too hot for him to take before the bell rang. He threw down the money with some strong and profane expression, which his companion heard, and remonstrated with him. Soon they were on their knees, and before they reached London he had been led into peace with God. He returned to Glasgow, and at Christmas, instead of the usual party, asked two of his clerks who were Christians, and told them of the change that had taken place in him. This Scotch gentleman used to attend Mr. Moody's meetings, and would get into the gallery, and sit down by the side of a working man, and speak to him. Sometimes, if he found there was no family altar, he would go home with him and have family prayer with them for the first time. Thus the diligence and zeal of our brother were reproduced in his children in the faith.

Mr. R. C. Morgan said there were few things more pathetic in literature or more sublime in Christian life than the last writing of Sir Arthur Blackwood. With the responsibility of a great public department pressing upon him, he found his recreation and his rest in the visions of the Revelation. His "Apocalyptic Scenes" were written in pencil, in weakness, and weariness, and pain; the counsels and warnings of a dying man serving his generation according to the will of God, before he fell on sleep.

Rev. D. B. Hankin said he had for the first time asked to be permitted to say a few words—it was to urge the needs of Mildmay for its benevolent and beneficent work. £2000 might easily be raised; it was in the hall that night.

Mr. Hind Smith writes:—I was present at the deeply-interesting meeting at Mildmay in memory of our late beloved friend, and it struck me a word might be added about his earnest stand on Christian total abstinence. Few know better than myself how deep were his convictions on that point, and how uncompromisingly he carried them out. His little books, "Battlements" and "Look out for the Safest Path" (published by your firm), ought to be in the hands of every Christian who cherishes his memory. The cause of social purity was always deemed very important by him. He never flinched from his duty, and in public his testimony was uttered with no uncertain sound. His name as an open sympathiser in this long-fought battle gave courage to many a falterer, and his influential position was used to God's glory.

Baroness Langenau writes from Vienna:—

Though at a distance, like Mr. Archibald Brown, I also want to place a wreath upon the sacred memory of our departed brother. He was my dearest earthly friend, for I owe to him all that makes eternity bright. When I heard him for the first time in a London drawing-room, I was not at once converted; that took place in Vienna later. But my eyes were suddenly opened, and I saw that there was something higher, purer, stronger than the formal dogmatic Church Christianity which is preached in our country. How unselfishly did Sir Arthur labour here during the seven weeks of the Postal Conference in the spring of 1891! He preached every Friday night in my drawing-room, on Sundays in the American chapel, on Tuesdays in the German Governess Home, and that in spite of his overwhelming official work. But the place where he was the most eagerly welcomed was certainly the Stahrunbergergaren at the postmen's gatherings. They crowded round him. How they listened to the beautiful story of his own conversion, as he impressed upon them the necessity of deciding for Christ. When these meetings were forbidden, six months later, the Roman Catholics and Lutherans having joined hands to have them abolished, he did not forget us, but prayed morning and night that we might be allowed to take up our work among the postmen again. When I had to tell them of the heavy loss we had sustained the men sobbed like children. He has entered into glory, and when we shall join him there it will be known to us too how many souls have been won to the Master through his instrumentality, even in Austria.

DARKEST GLASGOW.

Glasgow received a rude shock some weeks ago, when the Salvation Army officials gave publicity to some facts and figures which they had collected. So much mission work is carried on in the city, and it has for years back been the scene of so many successful evangelistic campaigns, that most people were taken by surprise when the search light of the army revealed a state of matters in it which was appalling. When it was stated that within an hour on a Saturday evening, 2308 men and 365 women entered eight public-houses, situated in an area of 500 yards in a district of the East-end, and that since the opening of this year upwards of 67,000 women were dragged before the police courts for drunkenness, disorderly conduct, or simple assault, upwards of 13,000 of whom were convicted, Christian philanthropists hung their heads in shame, and put the question to each other—Can these things be?

There were other facts regarding immoral haunts, which were so gross that they could not be published, but were to be handed to the police; and this, too, awakened surprise, since so much has been done of late years by the authorities to banish indecency from the streets.

It was a painful revelation, and made a deep impression upon the public mind, which has not been weakened by the few attempts of some public men to minimise the facts and get the people to believe that Glasgow is no worse than other places. Their kindly sentiments could not get rid of the terrible facts, and they were soon silenced by others, who came forward and boldly declared that the evils rampant in the city had not been exaggerated. Earnest workers in the mission-field said that the whole truth had not been told regarding "darker Glasgow," and that the facts and figures adduced fell short of the mark.

The consequence was that several newspapers opened out on the subject, and, when the United Evangelistic Association summoned a conference on non-church-going in the Christian Institute, a large and representative assembly came together. Certainly there were fewer ministers present than might reasonably have been expected, but most of those who were there were men who had won for themselves a name for their zeal in aggressive work. At that meeting it was frankly admitted by all the speakers that non-church-going prevailed to an alarming extent, and that it was steadily on the increase. Mr. Howie, of Govan, an authority on the subject, declared that so far as church-attendance was considered, Glasgow stood at the bottom of the list of Scotch towns. A gentleman who had been an elder for thirty years in a congregation largely composed of working men and their families, startled the meeting by avowing his belief that but for the wish to have their children baptized, far fewer of that class would be in attendance on church.

Various suggestions were thrown out by the speakers as to the remedies for the admitted evil, such as the improving of the existing machinery by more Christ-honouring preaching, more lively services, and a kindlier treatment of strangers on entering a church, the introduction of new machinery, the union of churches, etc.; but it was generally felt that another conference was desirable, to which representative working men should be invited, who would speak for themselves and the class to which they belong. Accordingly, the directors of the Evangelistic Association intimated that such a conference would be held; and it is certain to draw out many, as the subject now has been voted urgent by all who are interested in the progress of Gospel work in the "second city of the Empire."

It will be to the hurt of the Christian cause if the present agitation end only in talk. Already, however, there are signs that action will follow. The remedies suggested are of a practical nature, and they are put before the executive of the Evangelistic Association, who are earnest Christians, admirable business men, and influential citizens. One thing is already plain, that to solve this problem the membership of the churches will require to furnish more volunteers for home mission work. More workers are imperatively needed, if there are to be more worshippers; and to get this an evangelistic association should be formed in each congregation. If this were done, and their forces were directed by some central executive, composed of representative men of all the evangelical churches, so as to cover the whole ground, then the beginning of the end of this dark problem might be seen. The development of this agitation will be watched with the keenest interest by all who are interested in the evangelisation of our large centres of population.

Preparation for Preaching.

Many young men ardent in service and eager to proclaim the Gospel, keenly feel their need for preparation. For such a Preacher's Preparation Class, on the lines of the one so usefully carried on by a united committee in Bristol, is most valuable. Several past members are now either successfully labouring in, or preparing for, the mission field. At the opening meeting for the present session held on Thursday week, Dr. Culross gave an address, stating that they had a big work, and needed "the joy of the Lord" for their strength. This fitted the disciples for their work. A downhearted preacher with a sour face, a bad temper, and who was always dealing with gloomy things, would not do much work. The Christian life had its bright times and its ecstasies, but apart from all raptures the law of Christian life is the joy of Christ.

Rev. W. J. Morgan, president of the class, gave an address on the subject of "Praying Always" (Eph. vi. 18), the seven divisions being:—1, pleading the promises; 2, rejoicing in conscious salvation; 3, aspiring for perfection; 4, yearning over lost souls; 5, intent upon getting at the meaning of God in his word; 6, never doubting; 7, glorying in the coming of Christ. The interest in this meeting was sustained throughout and must have cheered the president, whose untiring efforts to promote the spiritual and mental equipment of our village preachers have secured their warmest appreciation.

The Evangelist.

PILATE'S QUESTION.

BY D. L. MOODY.*

In the spring of 1871, along with Philip Phillips and the Rev. (now Bishop) J. H. Vincent, I went to California, and when I came back here hot weather had come, our audience had become scattered, and I came to Farwell Hall wanting to get back the audience. But nearly all had gone, and it seemed almost impossible to get them together again. After praying over it, the thought came to me, "Preach to them upon the Bible Characters." I advertised that I would speak so many nights on this subject, and inside of five weeks I had the largest congregation I had ever spoken to in Chicago. When I came to the Life of Christ I intended to devote six nights to it. I had followed Him from the manger along through his life to his arrest and trial, and on the fifth Sabbath night October 8*, I took for my text the words, "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" That night I made one of the greatest mistakes of my life. I closed up the sermon and said, "I wish you would take this text home with you and turn it over in your mind during the week, and next Sabbath we will come to Calvary and the cross, and we will decide what we will do with Jesus of Nazareth."

I have never seen that congregation since. I have hard work to keep back the tears to-day. I have looked over this audience, and not a single one is here that I preached to that night. One lesson I learned that night, which I have never forgotten, and that is, when I preach to press Christ upon the people then and there, and try to bring them to a decision on the spot. I would rather have that right hand cut off than give an audience a week to decide what to do with Jesus.

Pilate was just in the condition that my audience was that night—he had to decide what to do with Jesus. The thing was sprung upon him suddenly, although I do not think Jesus Christ could have been a stranger to Pilate. But there is not a child here to-day that has not a better knowledge of Christ than Pilate had. Pilate had his day, and I believe every man and every woman have their day of opportunity. If Pilate had decided according to his conscience, he might have had his name associated with that of Joseph of Arimathea, with the twelve disciples of the Lamb, and with those foremost to herald the name of Jesus. But there was another influence about him. The world came in, political preferment came in, the Roman Government came in, and he wanted to win the favour of the Cæsars. The Jews saw that he was vacillating, and knew they could get their own way. They said, "If you let that man go, you are not Cæsar's friend." Then he tried to shift the responsibility. What man is there here who has not tried in the same way to shift responsibility? But every one of you will have to decide for himself what he will do with Jesus. Your wife cannot decide it for you; no friend on earth can decide it for you.

What we want is men to stand up for the right, and even if you do suffer for a little while, the crowning day is coming. We want men to stand against the current, not to go with it; and not only to stand against the current, but to go right against it. There never will be a time when we can do more for Christ than now. God help us to take our stand in these dark days, when Christ is rejected by so many; when they are telling us that He is not the Saviour of the world, and are putting Him on a level with other men. Come out and take a high stand for Christ. Let others go on scoffing, but you come out and identify yourself with the disciples of Jesus Christ.

I would like to press upon you this one question: "What shall I do with Jesus Christ?" I cannot speak for the rest of you, but ever since that night of the great fire I have determined, as long as God spares my life, to make more of Christ than in the past. I thank God that He is a thousand times more to me to-day than He was twenty-two years ago.

I think when calamity comes to us we ought to get all we can out of it, and if God has a lesson for us to learn, let us take the lesson. It may be that God has a wonderful lesson for us. I will venture to say that many of you have been in this same state. You that are in the middle of life, look around you and ask yourself whether your life is what it ought to be. To-day look down along the way you have come. Do you not see some spot in your life where you have made a vow and have not kept it? You have said, "I will be a more consecrated man," or "I will be a Christian"; you have stood by the bedside of a dying mother and have said, "I will meet you in the better world." Are you going to make good that promise? Make up your minds that you will carry out that vow. It may be I am talking to a father or mother who has laid away a little child. When that child was taken away you said, "I am going to live a more consecrated life; I will not get rooted and grounded in things below, but I will rather set my affection on things above."

It is only a little while, a few months, a few years, and we will all be gone. God help us now to pay our vows in the presence of all his people. Come now and make a full, complete, and unconditional surrender to God, and say, "Here am I, Lord, take me and use me: let me have the privilege of being a co-worker with Thee." If you do there will be fires kindled here that will burn throughout eternity. This hour, this minute, make up your minds that you are going to be from this time on the Lord's side. Then go to your home, to your church, and give a ringing testimony for the Son of God. Do what you can for Christ, and there will be a blessed life for you here and hereafter.

* From a sermon preached in Chicago on the twenty second anniversary of the great Chicago fire, October 8.

[1132]

LONDON AND ITS NEEDS.

It is a hopeful omen that the churches of this great and unwieldy city are awaking to its social and spiritual needs. The first step towards improvement is a recognition of existing failure. A second conference, convened by the Nonconformist Council of London, was held on Wednesday week in the Mansion House. The gathering would have been more successful, we think, if the programme had been less ambitious. The moving and supporting of long and complicated resolutions, added to a lengthy speech from the chairman, and an equally lengthy report from the secretary, made it impossible that any portion of the subject should be adequately considered.

Mr. Percy Bunting, who presided, urged that though church-going is not to be regarded as the sole test of one's Christianity, it is important that sufficient church accommodation should be provided. The time is at hand when the churches and the local civic authorities must work hand in hand for the good of the people. Mr. Matthews, the hon. secretary, gave some statistics showing that the percentage of church seating-space to the population throughout London is much below that of our large cities, such as Manchester, Liverpool, Edinburgh, etc. Systematic house-to-house visitation is one of the pre-requisites to the further evangelisation of the people.

The first resolution, moved by Dr. T. B. Stephenson, invited the serious attention of London churches to the spiritual indifference of the masses and the people, and urged the adoption of adequate measures. Finding fault with the churches, in the view of the speaker, is of no use, but it is necessary to sound an alarm bell as to the actual state of things. We must recognise the fact that what has been achieved in the past has been the work of Christian communities, but these must go on to larger endeavours till the needs are fully met. In seconding the resolution Rev. W. J. Dawson said that many of the churches now existing had failed to attract the people because the work had been organised on preconceived notions of what was best for them. He denied that the labouring classes were hostile to Christ, though they might not be enamoured of some forms of modern Christianity. The same opinion was expressed by Rev. J. Hardy Harwood.

It was a hopeful and noteworthy fact that all these speakers had strongly emphasised the need of the workers being indwelt by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Parker's speech was the most effective, as it was the most loudly applauded. He contributed a sufficiently practical suggestion to the debate when he exclaimed that nothing could be done till every public-house had been destroyed as with fire. By some process or other the public-house must be eradicated. The churches might buy them up, and elbow the devil back into his proper quarters. It was a shame that all the best quarters should be reserved for these trap-doors to hell and sources of temptation to weak human nature. The Doctor did not quite agree with any mechanical plan of church extension. Let the present churches get crowded out first. He thought also that many a man might be a true follower of Christ whose name was not to be found on any church register. There ought to be a Christian centre or depôt in every street, where someone would always be on hand to give comfort and counsel to troubled souls. Dr. Parker also pleaded eloquently for a purified daily press.

The second resolution, advocating concerted house-to-house visitation and united special services, was briefly moved by Rev. J. R. Wood, and seconded by Rev. Dr. Pentecost, who described himself as "a hopeful pessimist." He urged that evangelistic preaching should have a much larger space in the pulpit, and that immediate results ought to be sought for and looked for. Then we want to set our church members to work; at present more than half of them do nothing, and the churches are largely ecclesiastical clubs. They must become aggressive, and must lay aside their wretched sectarianism if they would hope to reach and save the masses of London.

A third resolution condemning gambling, intemperance, and social impurity, calling on the authorities to suppress these, and advocating evening recreative schools, was spoken to by Mr. R. Whyte and Rev. C. Leach. The last resolution condemned sweating and one-room tenements, and invited the Government to secure better housing for the people and work for the unemployed. The speakers were Rev. J. B. Meharry and Rev. Allen Rees. The former, referring to the coal strike, said that if mining operations entail loss, part of it ought to be borne by the royalty owners. The last two resolutions, by the efflux of time, received very scant attention. Perhaps another conference may supply the lack.

WOMANLY CONVERSATION.

"She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness."—Prov. xxxi. 26.

"That I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary."—Isa. l. 4.

"Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment, for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—S. Matt. xii. 36, 37.

"The Lord hearkened and heard it."—Malachi iii. 16.

"Set a watch, O Lord, before my lips; keep the door of my mouth."—Psalm cxli. 3.

Keep a watch on your words, my sisters,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet, like the bees' fresh honey—
Like the bees, they have terrible stings!
They can bless, like the warm glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut, in the strife of anger,
Like an open two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged,
If their errand is true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind;
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompt the words, let them be unsaid;
They may flash through a brain like lightning,
Or fall on a heart like lead.

Keep them back, if they're cold and cruel,
Under bar and lock and seal;
The wounds they make, my sisters,
Are always slow to heal.
May Christ guard your lips, and ever,
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be the words of beautiful truth.

Copies in leaflet form of Charles Caswell, Edmund-street, Birmingham. Twenty-five copies, post-free, 4d.

A WALKING CONCORDANCE.—During the session recently at La Rochelle, of the General Synod of the Evangelical Reformed Churches of France, some of the delegates made the acquaintance of an aged Protestant, a pensioner in the Hospice of La Rochelle, who seems fully to answer the description of "a walking concordance." This old man, Jules Tostet by name, astonished all his interviewers by his prodigious memory. He knows by heart every verse of Holy Scripture! In the words of L'Eglise Libre: "You may ask him for such a verse from a given chapter of any book, and he answers without difficulty. One of those present asked him for verse 32 of a chapter which has only 31 verses; he at once indicated the error, and offered to recite verse 32 of the preceding chapter, 'which,' he said, 'has 33 verses,' a statement which was found to be correct."

African Missions Visited.—14.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

In my last letter I told of our visit to Magatu. MM. Creux and Rosselt bade us adieu next morning, and returned homewards on their horses. We proceeded, and travelled almost due west, skirting the base of the Zoutpansberg Mountains, of which we had a magnificent view from point to point. Two days' trekking brought us to Goedgedacht, a station of the Dutch Reformed Church, where Mr. Hogmeyr has laboured for well-nigh thirty years.

The station was commenced by Rev. Mr. McKidd, a Scotch minister, who gave up a good charge at home to work in the "regions beyond." Mr. McKidd was not long spared to carry on his work in the Zoutpansberg, but his memory and that of his wife, who predeceased him, remain as an inspiration with those who follow after.

Goedgedacht nestles prettily at the base of the mountains, in a sort of "horseshoe." The station is well watered, and neat huts run down in two lanes from the church. We went twice to service on Sunday. I could only make out the texts, but one felt there was earnestness and reality in the preaching. Quite a revival has taken place lately, and one of those recently converted came on with us as "touw-boy" as far as the Blauw Berg. I was struck with his apparent earnestness, and his diligence in endeavouring to master the alphabet was most creditable. Whenever an opportunity occurred, out came the spelling-book, and the lesson was conned over.

Between Goedgedacht and the Blauw Berg we commenced to experience the difficulties and troubles of waggon travelling more keenly than hitherto. Grass and water were both scarce, and this quickly tells on the oxen. Add to this long stretches of "road," which are soft sand, into which the wheels sink many inches, and you can realise to some extent how hard it is to get along. Over and over again one or two of the oxen lay down and refused to go on, so there was nothing for it but to put up and let them rest. To do this when one is miles away from water, and but little grass around, is anything but comforting. Several times were we brought into "strait places," but there is an Almighty Helper, and He has wonderfully answered prayer time and again. It took us four days from Goedgedacht to Mapenu's kraal in the Blauw Berg. Here there was a little water, but not a blade of grass to be seen. We had to camp on dry, dusty ground, and the oxen were driven to a distance each day, where they found a scanty picking of poor feeding. Mapenu's kraal is quite a large one. The chief himself is an insignificant-looking old man, one who seems to receive but little respect from his subjects, and who is a great beggar. This habit of begging, which is common to so many of the African natives, is a blot on their character.

At Mapenu there is an out-station of the German Mission, under charge of a native teacher. I rode round to see Mr. Sonutag, on the south side of the range, and spent the night at his house. Him and his wife I found earnest Christians, plodding away in a very isolated situation, with many discouragements to face. Were his station at Mapenu, instead of where it is, I think more could be accomplished. Those who think foreign mission work unnecessary, or worse than useless, should spend a few days at a kraal like Mapenu's. The sickness, consequent on filthiness and fearful immorality, is terrible. There is sadly needed a good medical missionary, and several lady missionaries to work among the girls. The people are intelligent and pushing, but need to be in constant touch with good European missionaries, in order to have really efficient work done.

After much trouble I managed to hire four native oxen to help me on as far as the Limpopo River, and so enable me to give some of mine a rest from the yoke. So we are off again still westwards, and hope soon to cross the Transvaal border.

CENTRAL AMERICA. — Mr. E. D. Nicols, of Sunderland, President of the Prayer and Information Union, having written to Rev. C. M. Wilbur words of cheer and encouragement, has received a bright letter telling of Gospel experiences in the Central American States. The Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica seem at last to be opening to the Gospel, while in San Salvador full liberty of worship has now been granted. Earnest prayer should be made for God's witnesses in lands long darkened by Papal superstition

SAVING BOYS FROM CRIME.

Business called us the other day to Mr. Wheatley's office, and while there we were much interested in two cases just then under consideration. The first was a lad who had got into bad company, had taken to betting, and had embezzled money belonging to his employer in order to pay his gambling losses. Being detected, he was arrested, and while awaiting his trial, Mr. Wheatley saw him in prison and found him realising sadly the wrong he had done. The magistrate before whom the case came, seeing the contrition of the poor boy, availed himself of the provisions of the First Offenders Act, and committed the lad to the care of the St. Giles's Christian Mission. He is now in one of the Homes, a situation has been found him, and there is hope he will make a fresh start in life.

The next to appear in the office was a gentleman who had come to ask the aid of the Mission on behalf of a lad caught and sent to prison for housebreaking. His time will soon be up, and his Sunday-school superintendent was anxious that measures should be concerted to prevent him pursuing dishonest courses. Grieving over his erring scholar, the visitor gave him a fairly good character in the past, but told how he fell among evil companions, hearkened to their suggestions, and ended in a sad fall. He hoped to find a situation for the lad on his discharge, but wished the help of the Mission in providing for a time a safe shelter where he would be kept out of temptation's way. This was willingly promised by Mr. Wheatley, who had already seen the boy in prison and resolved to do his best to save him. It was cheering to find the Sunday School superintendent willing to aid a fallen one in redeeming his character; but one also felt most thankful there was a mission such as this which could render the help needed at the right moment. Without such an agency this earnest helper would find much difficulty in securing for the boy that wise oversight and friendly shelter so sorely required.

There are not a few instances of apparent crime that cannot justly be regarded as crime. A case in point is told of a respectable-looking Scotchman who had been arrested for stealing a sausage. Inquiry on the part of Mr. Wheatley elicited the fact that this man had come to London in search of work, but failing in his quest, had been driven to such desperate straits that he purloined the sausage simply that he might be taken into custody. Mr. Wheatley is helping the poor fellow to return to Scotland, where it is hoped he will find work without any prison taint cleaving to him. Among the other cases met with one day this week at Holloway Prison was that of a man who, in circumstances of extreme want, had attempted to commit suicide. Here again a little timely help will restore the unhappy man to his family, and enable them, it is hoped, to escape starvation. Such sorrowful life stories are frequently met with by Mr. Wheatley in his rounds of prison visitation, and he ought to be liberally sustained in dealing with them.

This work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission in saving those who have been betrayed into crime from developing into regular criminals must commend itself to all. The Mission takes over those committed to its care by magistrates, and usually succeeds in setting them going in honest courses. There are now five Homes open for boys. Last year 617 situations were found for those who seemed bidding fair to become criminals.

The Daily Telegraph lately said of this work:—"The net result is that, bating less than five per cent. of the hundreds of erring lads saved from the perils of a first imprisonment, the St. Giles's Mission is able to give a good account of them all. That the returns made by the superintendent are absolutely reliable is guaranteed by the fact that the whole body of metropolitan magistrates, and many judges and chief prison officials, are unanimous in recognising the institution in question, and in availing themselves of the valuable help it affords them. Apart from the moral aspect of the matter, could it be ascertained what it costs to reinstate, say, five hundred boys who have made a first slip, and what would have been the expense to the country if, treated by the ordinary process, they had eventually joined the great criminal army, it might tend to an increase of the funds that voluntary contributors place at the disposal of this exceptionally useful mission." The St. Giles' Christian Mission, whose address is 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C., is in urgent need of help; for this important and fruitful service cannot be carried on without means to keep these Homes open.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHAN HOMES.

The annual meeting of these excellent institutions was held at Hawkstone Hall, Christ Church, under the genial presidency of Rev. F. B. Meyer. Encouraging addresses were given by Rev. W. Horne, who is a neighbouring clergyman, Mr. de Selincourt, and others. The report, which was read by Miss Sharman, opens with a reference to the trials of the past year which have driven those responsible to more entire dependence on God. "All through the year every need has been supplied. No debt has been incurred, and the daily manna has not once failed. There have, however, been times when faith has been tested, when ingenuity has been taxed, when patience has been called into exercise, and when the one sustaining assurance has been, 'Lo, I am with you all the days.'"

"Since the Home was opened in 1867 more than a thousand children have passed through it. We began the past year with 310 children under our care, and closed it with 314: forty-one children having left, and forty-five having been admitted during the twelve months. Our first aim is to train our dear children for Christ, and I am thankful to know that many of our elder girls are really walking as his disciples. Our next endeavour is to bring our girls up to be useful members of society. Already many who have left the Home are filling useful and honourable positions. Several have become matrons, teachers, or other helpers in the work, and are a constant source of comfort and joy to me. Others are in good situations, and some are married, and are bringing up their own children in the right way.

"The average cost of each child's support is £15 a year. This sum is contributed annually by many who like to feel that they are doing good in a very definite form. Sometimes a family or a few friends, a Bible-class, or the children of a Sunday-school, unite to maintain a little protégée in the Home."

Details follow of the seaside expenses defrayed by a special fund; also the Country Homes at Gravesend, Tunbridge Wells, and the Hastings House Fund. "The children maintained on this latter fund are mostly the orphans of professional men or others of the educated classes, and they are so taught and trained as to be able to take up the kind of work and the position in life for which their parents would have sought to fit them if those parents had lived. It often happens that the children of clergymen, medical men, and others, who have worked hard with heart and brain, are left in poverty, and to stretch out to them a helping hand is both a duty and a pleasure."

In conclusion a strong appeal is made for funds for a Seaside Home for delicate children, especially those with a tendency to consumption; for, as the superintendent says: "From the earliest days of the work I have never refused consumptive children, but for many years simply aimed at comforting their last days on earth, and teaching them the way to heaven. Latterly I have taken in such children with the distinct purpose of battling for them against disease and death, and winning for them a place among life's useful workers." This has been done with marked success. We cannot speak too highly of these unobtrusive but effective endeavours on behalf of our orphan girls.

Governesses.

A correspondent writes:—"I spoke lately to a lady who has one of the first agencies in England, and she said, "I cannot take names of governesses over thirty, as ladies will not have them." Now, I ask, what are those to do who have no homes, and their means of livelihood gone? Are there no kind ladies who could do with someone thoughtful and trustworthy about them? Would not many be repaid by having someone to be a comfort to them? And they would be doing something for the Master, and also cheering a lonely life."

A FIVE DAYS' MISSION in connection with the Good Templars' Lodge has been held at East Dereham by Mrs. Jennie Walker.

BRIDGE OF HOPE MISSION.

The development of the beneficent work carried on by Miss Steer and devoted helpers in the "Bridge of Hope" Mission and Ratcliff Highway Refuge, engages the deep interest of all who have a personal knowledge of its scope and character. The fifteenth anniversary was celebrated on Monday afternoon, a goodly number of friends finding their way to Betts-street, St. George's, E., first to hear words of encouragement by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith; secondly, to purchase some of the needlework, hosiery, and knitted goods made at the Refuge; and lastly, to attend the annual meeting, at which account is always rendered of exertions put forth in the name of Christ.

Mrs. Smith's address on the words, "God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved" (Ps. xlvi. 5) were highly appreciated. Miss Steer would gladly have welcomed more buyers of the excellent goods produced in the Refuge. A larger audience would have added to the heartiness of the meeting, over which Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided with evident sympathy.

The treasurer, Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., read a satisfactory report, the expenditure, in regard to the many undertakings of the Mission amounting to £4113, and the receipts being fairly equal. Special attention was directed to the fact that the inmates had earned £503 by laundry work, and £138 by knitting and needlework. Miss Macpherson having spoken of the difficulties of rescue effort, Miss Steer made a statement, reading some sentences from the new report. We trust our readers will secure copies of this for themselves. Meantime we make some brief extracts:—

"We have just closed the busiest year we have ever spent. There have been more knocks at our door, more calls upon our time during this year, than in any previous twelve months in the history of 'The Bridge of Hope,' and yet, I think, it has been one of the happiest years. Much true and we trust lasting, work has been accomplished; the developments of the Mission, though bringing additional anxiety, have been attended with much encouragement.

"Since the 30th of September, 1892, we have received into our homes 267 women and children. Of these 182 were rescue, and 85 preventive cases, which, with the numbers in the homes on the 30th of September last, makes a total of 449. Of this number, after a short stay in the Refuge, we have passed on forty to other homes. We have also found situations for 118 young women and girls, most of whom have passed through the laundry department or one of the training homes. In the Refuge we have fifty-six beds, which are always full, and in the Mothers' and Babies' Home beds for twelve adults.

"In the children's homes we have room for 125 children (besides some boarded out), and this has been our number always maintained throughout the year. We have had a much larger average in all our homes than before. The figures given by no means represent the increased work, as those whom we receive, both in the rescue and preventive homes, have remained with us a longer time. By far the greater number are in their teens; and for this reason we have a division in the Refuge for ten or twelve women over twenty-five, who have a separate dormitory and sitting-room.

"The difficulties in connection with rescue work are often dwelt upon, and there is no denying that the work in itself is essentially difficult; but we can, at the same time, honestly say we have met with very much encouragement. With so many young spirits unaccustomed to self-control of any kind, we cannot, of course, affirm that the work goes on without a hitch at any time; but it is no exaggeration to say that our household is a very happy one. There is a sense of hearty good-fellowship among us, and a feeling of good public opinion throughout the house which is very encouraging."

The vast majority of the cases received in the Refuge are from East London, and as they are necessarily admitted without charge, help from sympathisers at a distance is an essential condition of a continuance of the work. A pathetic interest attaches to every branch of the Mission, and particularly to that among wronged and neglected little children. During the year 845 individual cases were received in the Night Shelter; in all 4305 nights' shelter being given. Here special efforts were in every case made to stop the degraded and downcast in their wandering and despairing career.

Words of sympathy and cheer were spoken by Mr. D. McLaren, of Putney, and Mr. J. Williams Benn, M.P.

MISSIONARIES AT LIVERPOOL.

Gordon Hall, the head-quarters of the Y.W.C.A., Liverpool, presented a busy scene last Thursday and Friday, when all-day conferences were held in the interests of the missionary cause. On the platform were representatives of societies not a few, whose mission it is to send forth workers into the whitening fields; while behind them sat a long line of costumed deaconesses from Mrs. Stephen Menzies' Training Institute.

A word, by the way, regarding this may be of interest. The Home exists for the training of candidates already accepted by a society, or of ladies desiring to be equipped for Christian service at home or abroad, without as yet a clear call to any special sphere. They are mostly between the ages of twenty and twenty-five, and during their two years' stay engage in a variety of Gospel work, which affords a wide and all-round experience. Fifteen or sixteen have already proceeded to distant places in connection with the Church Missionary Society, China Inland Mission, Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, etc.; others expect to go out shortly. Meantime, nearly fifty remain behind, living in readiness for a summons to the front whenever the Master may make it clear. The Institute bears the honoured name of "Mildmay," and its work is effectively described in the pretty little report forthe current year, which also contains portraits of its past and present members. Mrs. Stephen Menzies (Glenmore, Princes Park, Liverpool) will gladly correspond with any friends desirous of further particulars.

The tone of the Conference was well sustained by chairmen and speakers alike. The former included Archdeacon Taylor, Canon Woodward, Rev. Chas. Garrett, and Messrs. T. A. Matheson, J.P., F. W. Crossley, and Reginald Radcliffe. It was a treat to feel once more the fervent grip of the last-named veteran's hand. Recovering slowly, but we trust surely, from prolonged prostration, his body is still very frail but his spirit as strong as ever for the cause that lies so near to his heart.

But not alone did hoar hairs crown with glory the heads of most of those who presided. The aged, and yet vigorous, "Apostle to the New Hebrides," Dr. John G. Paton, was there, and on three occasions unfolded the marvellous story of missionary heroism, and of the achieved in the islands of the sea. What could have been more inspiring to the high ambitions of hale and hearty youth, directed of God to the mission field, than to see and hear this venerable patriarch tell of what the Lord has done through the devoted men who have lived, and many of them died, for the souls of the cannibals whom Jesus came to save? A striking feature of his addresses were the appeals he interspersed for practical consistency in the Christian life, as again and again he was impelled to hold up as examples the once benighted savages now clothed and in their right mind at the feet of their Lord. If, for instance, English Christians were as thoroughgoing as these erstwhile cannibals for one year in giving up smoking, drinking, and dancing, there would be enough money saved to help every missionary society represented in all parts of the world.

TRIUMPHS OF THE CROSS OF CHRIST

Other speakers described the work undertaken by the societies with which their names are associated, viz., Rev. Hudson Taylor (C.I.M.), Rev. H. B. Macartney and Mr. F. C. Smith (C.M.S.), Rev. A. R. Cavalier (Z.B. & M.S.), Dr. Harry Guinness (Congo Balolo), Mr. Glenny (North Africa), Mr. H. G. Harris (Central Soudan), Miss Annie Taylor (Thibet), Mr. Spencer Walton (South Africa), Rev. Samuel Schor (the Jews), Dr. Harford Battersby (Medical Work), and Surgeon-General Partridge (Anti-opium).

Each address was characterised by a fervour born of intense conviction as to the needs of heathendom and the power of the Gospel to meet them, and while the speakers naturally referred more especially to those spheres with which they were best acquainted, their utterances blended well with those of others, so that the cause of missions was presented as a solid whole, the needs being equally great, whether in Africa, China, India, or wherever else

. . . in heathen darkness dwelling
Millions of souls for ever may be lost.

"If you have not wept over the heathen," urged one speaker, "your heart is not like that of Christ. When He saw Jerusalem, a doomed city, He wept, and can you contemplate doomed continents and shed no tear?"

Such words afforded food for thought in many minds, and represented many another well-directed bolt which, it is not too much to say, went home to many a heart.

The remarks of Mr. Hudson Taylor were pointed rather toward consecration to the service of God in whatever location. With thirty odd years' of missionary experience behind him, he testified to what he had seen of the power and faithfulness of God, and the following striking sentence which fell from his lips may practically sum up all the rest: "Whatever we might have done and have not done, whatever we might have suffered and have not suffered, whatever we might have given and have not given, this has been our real loss and not our gain."

Some of the practical hints given by Dr. Harry Guinness are worthy of attention, bearing in mind that they referred more especially to climatic exigencies of Central Africa. In offering for this sphere of labour candidates should have "good blood, good digestion, and good tempers." They should be "free from anæmia, dyspepsia, and crotchets"; yet "abounding in pluck and resolution, knowing both how to bend and to be inflexible." As one looked instinctively upon the group of bonny red-cheeked deaconesses one thought how few, if any, of them, judged by externals, would prove ineligible to take the Gospel message to those distant regions.

Dr. Guinness spoke also (followed by Dr. Battersby) of the experiment being made at Livingstone College, Bow, for the instruction of foreign missionaries in the elements of practical medicine, by which candidates not qualified as doctors may yet gain sufficient knowledge of physic and surgery "to look after their own health and do a little good to others when they are in isolated stations far from any qualified medical help." This is an excellent undertaking, fuller particulars of which may be obtained from the Principal, 33, Mornington-road, Bow, London, E.

The parting words of the Conference came from Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, who in quiet and earnest tones collected the various rays of thought into the one focus of a willing mind, a willing heart, and a ready response to the Master's call. It is believed that many a distant spot, as well as others nearer home will be blessed by the presence and help of some volunteers as the result of these gatherings. As a practical outcome in the immediate present it is gratifying to learn that over £220 were contributed by the visitors for missionary purposes. This, too, cannot but yield profitable fruit, and thus, as regards results, both temporal and spiritual, the Conference has been a means of grace and joy to many a waiting heart.

G. E. M.

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION.—The Riga Church Gazette contains the names of over thirty Lutheran pastors who have been fined, imprisoned, or dismissed from their posts during the last twelve months. The majority of the pastors were punished for administering the sacraments, according to the Lutheran rites, to people who were of the Orthodox Church. All pastors who leave the Greek Church are liable to fine, imprisonment, or transportation.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing to attend a mission in East London, to be conducted by F. S. Ball, of Evangelisation Society, in November. —For blessing on three weeks' special evangelistic services in Boroughbridge, Northmoor Green, and Stathe, near Bridgwater, fromNov.12 to the end of the month, by Revs. G. Parker and A. Sprague.—For young converts at Tintern, the fruit of a recent mission, that they may be strengthened; also for a mission about to be held at Whitelye, near Tintern. —On behalf of a father and mother, both over seventy, neither converted; also nine unconverted brothers and sisters.—For blessing on special missions to be conducted by Mr. Eyres in Cheshire and elsewhere.—For a two-weeks mission by Mr. H. Lakin at Brighton, from November 12 to 26.—For blessing on a mission to be held in Otley, Yorks., by Mr. Bryan Brown, from November 4th to 13th.—For blessing on services at Callington (Cornwall), by Mr. John Elliott, commencing Sunday next.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s.	7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„	„
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„	„
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols.	„	„

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per	annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„	„
12 „ „	6s.	„	„
24 „ „	12s.	„	„

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Robert Paton, of London, a well-known Christian worker.

Some of the greatest sufferers from the coal war are men of whom the public are not likely to think. When work ceases, the workman, the tradesman, and all who have business relations with the district are losers, and we all realise it; but so, too, are ministers of the Gospel who are dependent on the voluntary gifts of their people, and this we do not realise. We understand that there is much sacrifice, if not positive distress, among many of them. We read of one who had received only £6 during three months.

The conference at Westminster on the immoral condition of things in our Indian cantonments was of a very representative character and of great weight. The tone was that of intense conviction and of resolute determination. In the old struggle against state regulation of vice in England the same men and women—for they remain a singularly unbroken body—proved too strong for the Government; or, as they would prefer to express it, God, working through them, was too strong for it. Their cause will surely prevail again. The Government has fair warning given that they will not be put off.

When the question does come up, two new and important points will be pushed to the front. First, it will be insisted on that the will of Parliament shall be supreme in India as in every other part of the British Dominions, and shall not be evaded or trampled upon by the military authorities. The second point is penal prohibitive legislation, which shall make it impossible, except at the risk of fine or imprisonment, for any one to carry on such practices as have disgraced our rule in India. Periodical compulsory examination must in no case be allowed. And what applies to India must be enacted for every other part of the British Dominions where a similar need exists.

The power which moved the Westminster Conference was not political or social, but moral and spiritual. The mind of the most effective speakers constantly turned to the law of God for guidance and inspiration. The bad system was looked at in its bearing upon the highest welfare of human beings. To fight against a system is nothing, to fight and pray for its overthrow because it destroys souls and dishonours God, is the glory of the Christian.

The week commencing November 19 will be signalised among the friends of the London Missionary Society in the London district, as a season of simultaneous meetings on behalf of foreign missions. They are thus emulating the worthy example of our Church of England friends. We trust that similar results will follow, in a manifest swelling of the tide of missionary zeal, and in a speedy thrusting forth of many consecrated workers into the white harvest fields of the world. Particulars of this excellent movement may be had from the L.M.S. Mission House, 14, Blomfield-street, E.C.

In looking through the names and biographies of the last band of missionaries sent forth by the London Missionary Society, we are delighted to see that, out of fourteen, three are the children of ministers; one is a member of a family which, in its several branches, has contributed largely to Christian workers of all kinds; another is the sister of a missionary's wife. It would have been interesting to know how many were the children of believing parents. The desire for mission work would appear to have been early implanted in the hearts of several. Two facts here are important: parents who are themselves workers frequently have consecrated children: the guiding thought of life is often early imparted by the Spirit of God.

When Dr. R. F. Horton was recently interviewed by a representative of The Sunday Magazine, and asked if he felt free to speak on politics or social questions in the pulpit, as he might be moved to do, he replied:—

Yes, I have done this often, feeling called upon to speak out upon certain questions, and I have never done so without receiving the confirmation the old prophets had, namely, the opposition of man. I have always found that some left my congregation, and chiefly the wealthy.

We know that this is the experience of many other preachers. The possession of wealth never tends to humility. Grace may and can make a rich man humble, but facts, gathered from a wide area, show that the rich brother too often claims and has accorded to him a measure of influence far beyond his due. If he cannot have things exactly to suit his mind then he separates. "These things ought not so to be."

Said the secretary of a Christian Union, as he and two friends were talking of how to get at the people and win them for Christ:—

I often say to myself when I have been to committee meetings: "Should I not be doing much more to advance the Saviour's kingdom if I were to stay at home and go about among my neighbours speaking to them of Him? How much time and money we spend in going to meetings which do not seem to end in much good."

His two friends agreed with him. Meetings must be held, no doubt, because men need the stimulus and refreshment and enlightenment which come from fellowship. Nevertheless, we shall do well to watch, lest attending conferences to talk about work should become an excuse for neglecting work.

The fellowship of the saints in the truth of the Gospel runs on unbroken from generation to generation. How much of the deepest experience of all saints has St. Augustine crowded into these words:

Christ died for us. Surely, then, the bitterness of death is past, and nothing can be so grievous to human nature that it may not be mollified by this consideration. In that death of his is all my hope and trust; I plead no other merit, I ask no other refuge; this is my health, my life, nay, my second and better life, my resurrection from the dead. His power is no longer a terror, but my best security.

To lay hold on a great central truth, as Augustine does here, and then place all things in the light of it, is always a steadying and supporting thing to the heart.

Some ministers and others who have been closely associated with Mr. Blackham, the founder of the P.S.A. movement, and who have laboured with him in its extension, are now carefully considering the lines of its further development. They are grateful to God for the wonderful and rapid extension of the movement, but see in this amazing increase the necessity for wise spiritual direction, so that it may be kept true to the spirit in which it originated, and to the Christian and ethical aims which it should persistently further. Mr. Blackham and his friends earnestly desire the prayers of all who are profoundly interested in the building up of God's kingdom through the regenerating powers of Christ's Gospel and the Holy Spirit's ministry. Such prayer of multitudes of Christian people, who are agreed to ask for the clear vision of Divine wisdom in the direction of this great movement, will bring the blessing that is thus sought, and secure it from perils that might otherwise degrade and weaken it.

In his recent visitation charge the Archbishop of Canterbury delivered himself of some burning words condemning the freedom with which the Ritualistic clergy frequently depreciate the Reformation.

Was it a time (the Primate asked) to be fingering the trinkets of Rome when Rome was denying, not the power—that would be hopeless—but the authority of the English Church with an audacity never known before? Was it a time to be introducing among "our simple ones" the devotional life of such a body? And was it a time to run down the masculine sense and the unsurpassed knowledge and the keen historic insight of our Reformers?

There is plenty of occasion for this faithful utterance. It only needs to be carried to its logical conclusion in a personal reprimand of the offending parties.

We heard lately of the growing wisdom and tolerance of Romish ecclesiastics in the United States, and were tempted for the moment to dream that possibly the leopard was about to change his spots. We have soon been undeceived. The New York Independent has unearthed a missive sent some time ago by Roman Catholic archbishops in the States to the editors of the journals of their own communion. These editors are warned that they must not give rein to their critical faculty in referring to ecclesiastics, and, above all, to bishops; "nor must they constitute themselves judges of episcopal decisions." This is a tolerably cool instruction for the land of freedom par excellence; but the sting of the document, worthy of the old Inquisition times, is yet to come:—

And lest the present evil should continue to flourish, we judge well to meet it, not by cautions and advices merely, but also by ecclesiastical penalties.

No! the Ethiopian cannot change his skin, nor the leopard his spots. Semper Eadem.

An office has been newly created in Calcutta of "Instructor of Naval Volunteers." The first appointment has been given to an officer who has in recent years become a Romanist. Another straw showing the way the stream is flowing.

The news from South Africa that many hundreds of Matabele have been killed in war by the forces of the Chartered Company has saddened many a heart. In the daily press views of a very conflicting character are being expressed regarding recent events in South Africa. On the one hand they are described as constituting an unjustifiable massacre, on the other as being measures necessary to the very existence of the colonists. We shall, no doubt, by the publication of official documents, soon know the truth as to these sanguinary proceedings. Meantime, a fearful commentary is afforded by the present war on the somewhat hackneyed sentiment that the trader should precede the missionary and not the missionary the trader.

To deal with uncivilised tribes on the assumption that they are destitute of a knowledge of right and wrong, and have no faculty of adhering to righteous settlements as between man and man, is to seek an easy justification of some of the most outrageous wrongs that have cursed our world or decimated native races. Another reflection upon recent incidents has regard to the victors rather than the vanquished. Such scenes as the Colonist forces have of late witnessed will do much to extinguish their moral sense and give them a low estimate of the value of human life. Men are not fit for social and civil life after such experiences, and the very recital of such horrors as have been filling the newspapers must be the seed-sowing of an awful crop of crime and brutality.

At the International Christian Congress held at Chicago last month, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, many important topics were discussed. In an account of the proceedings in the New York Independent, we read that men of widely differing views were in agreement on the subject of the relation of the Church to present-day problems :—

Dr. Rainsford and Dr. Arthur T. Pierson are not likely to see eye to eye in all details of method till the Lord shall bring again Zion; but, speaking in separate halls, the former began his message, with the earnest, prophetic reiteration that judgment must begin at the house of God; and the latter, whose immediate angle of vision includes more than one nation and denomination, sounded as his opening blast, "The Church of God must reform herself, or she can never reform the world." And General Secretary Strong said, in his admirable report, that thousands of churches in the United States in the past thirty years have perished like extinct fauna and flora, because they have been unable to adapt themselves to a radically changed social environment.

On the subject of Christian Union and Co-operation, Dr. Strong advocated a cordial working together, which he styled "federation at the bottom." President Hyde described an Interdenominational Commission, which has for some years secured hearty co-operation in the State of Maine. Founded by a Methodist on broad Christian principles, this organisation has been influential of much good, and its regulations have never been known to be violated in letter or spirit. Other States of the Union are organising similar commissions. Call them by whatever name we may, such organisations might be useful in this country, especially in the promotion of efforts to extend and deepen religious work in villages and out-of-the-way places.

The Victoria Institute has organised many valuable discussions, philosophical and scientific, with the view of vindicating Holy Scripture, and showing the impregnable stability of Christianity. Its Transactions have now reached twenty-six complete volumes, in the pages of which there is stored a great wealth of information, supporting and illustrating the truth. Terms and conditions of membership of the Institute may be had from the secretary, Captain Francis W. H. Petrie, 8, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

Dr. Parker's new book, None Like It: a Plea for the Old Sword (Nisbet & Co.), is a striking contribution to a discussion of supreme importance. The Bible is, in these pages, deliberately and gratefully described as the Word of God, and its inspiration and authority boldly maintained. Battle is given to unbelievers of all types and degrees, and keen insight and cutting satire come to the support of a strong case, in the statement of which spiritual experience and discernment are properly estimated more highly than intellectual arguments.

Scientific men are great doubters. Although it has many times been proved that the gulf between living and non-living substance is impassable, there are yet those who seek to put being into dead matter. A Heidelberg professor has been engaged in making an artificial oil and water emulsion, drops of which he finds, under certain conditions, exhibit the streaming movements and changes of shape characteristic of minute jelly-like animals, which are scientifically esteemed to be Nature's first essays in life above the vegetable. The details of these experiments may be interesting, but they have no greater value. Scientific knowledge is where it long has been, for the professor has not made the emulsion live. And this it was not to be supposed he would do.

Dr. Stalker emphasised a very important point in his speech at a meeting in Glasgow, on Sabbath Protection. Having referred to the fact that most of the shops kept open in that city on the Sabbath were held by foreigners, he went on to state that the same was true in the case of objectionable books published here—they are sold by imported foreigners. Dr. Stalker said that if such persons show no respect for the manners, customs, and morality of the people of this country, he for one would like some sharp means taken to bring them to their senses. We heartily agree. We have a censor of public plays; quite as much we need a censor of published literature.

A New Daily Paper.

Just as we are closing up our pages for press we receive an early copy of Mr. W. T. Stead's Christmas number of The Review of Reviews, with which is bound up a sample copy of the new Daily Paper which he contemplates starting next year. As to the Christmas number, we can only say now that it is a characteristic "Steadian" deliverance on present-day commercial speculation in the form of a graphic narrative. The Daily Paper (to be) is a forty-page magazine of the same size page as The Review, and the contents seem, on a hurried glance, to be a great improvement in spirit and in form on the usual journalistic broad sheet. We are glad to see that all betting news is tabooed. We hope Mr. Stead will be able, with the help of the public, to launch his new venture; and if he could be induced to discard his ghostly vagaries, we could all the more heartily wish him success

Foundation Truths.

"What could have been done more unto my vineyard, that I have not done in it?"—Isa. v. 4.

Amidst our many Christian Conferences, Conventions and Congresses, is there not a need to consider the Builder of Zion; the foundation He has laid; the structure He has built upon it; the wealth wherewith He has endowed it; the bulwarks by which He has defended it; the palaces which are her dwelling-places; the exceeding great and precious promises, given by free grace and dying love, to her inhabitants; the trouble and travail-pains of the kings her enemies; the fear which took hold upon them as they marvelled and hasted away?

Our fathers pealed forth their Hallelujahs in such triumph songs as these:—

Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, city of our God!
He whose word cannot be broken
Formed thee for his own abode.
On the Rock of Ages founded,
What can shake thy sure repose?
By salvation's walls surrounded,
Thou may'st smile at all thy foes.

But now such songs are seldom sung. The kings of armies do not flee away as they behold the City of our God. Nor do the citizens walk round Zion, tell her towers, mark her bulwarks, and consider her palaces. Instead of telling to the generation following the glorious things which God has spoken of Zion in the Scriptures of truth, many of her representative preachers and papers proclaim "the Errancy of Scripture," "the Errors of the Bible." A man becomes famous, not as he lifts up axes upon the thick trees, but as he breaks down the carved work with axes and hammers; and the fragments strew the way to the Professor's Chair.

And not only so, but true and faithful men of God have preached that part of the Gospel which consists in forgiveness, justification, and eternal life, without repentance on the one hand, and without the promised gift of the Holy Spirit on the other. They who are blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ, to whom they are united as branches in the vine, are taught that they may have eternal life yet not enter the Kingdom of God; be saved yet not be sealed; be cleansed yet not anointed; be raised up together with Christ yet not have part in the first resurrection.

If the Spirit, and the anointing, and the sealing, and the Kingdom, and the first resurrection, are attained by conduct, and are not included in God's free gift, is not this very like salvation partly by grace and partly by works? The truth embodied in those triumphant songs of our fathers, is that God gives in Christ all He has to give, and that the moment we receive Him we possess all the treasures contained in Him.

It is most true that we stand in faith, and that every inch of the Land of Promise, spiritual as well as literal, must be taken possession of by faith and fighting. "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you." "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life." But there is all the difference between laying hold on that which is already ours, and fighting to make it ours. It is because Jesus has given us rest, that he bids us take his yoke, that we may find rest to our souls.

M.

LET IT BE REMEMBERED that each item of child life that is rescued from the streets by "sheltering institutions," is not merely a subtraction from the loss, but a positive addition to the profit side of the social ledger.—Dr. Barnardo.

The Sunday School.

How to Make it More Fruitful.

BY THOMAS HOGBEN.

A few weeks since, a friend was distributing tracts in a public-house in the centre of Portsmouth. Four men were drinking at the bar. One turned to the visitor to inquire if the superintendent of ——— Sunday school was still in the work. Immediately a second, addressing his companion, chimed in, "Did you go there? Why, I used to attend that Sunday-school." "And so did I," exclaimed Nos. 3 and 4. All four had been trained in an evangelical Sunday-school! All four had left the school unsaved! Now all four are in the bondage of drink! Not a quarter of a mile from this house stands another, where many are tempted and led astray. The publican, a few years since, was a Sunday-school boy, and his father a local preacher! One night we gathered off the streets, within five hundred yards of the Town railway-station, over a hundred fallen women for a midnight supper and meeting. Being astonished at the hearty way in which they sang Sankey's hymns, we inquired of one and another, "Where did you learn these words and tunes?" and found that all whom we questioned were old Sunday-school girls!

These sad illustrations do not, alas! stand alone. It is a terrible fact that at an early age many children leave our Sunday-schools to follow a course of sin and shame. How is it? This problem is of the greatest moment. We have in our land some ten millions of young people. These are all our children, and they are in the greatest possible danger, not only because of the inherited tendency to depravity in their nature, but because of their surroundings.

The streets of the city are full
Of poor little perishing souls;
Perishing, perishing every day.

A Roman poet has compared the birth of a child to the shipwreck of a sailor, and does not this illustrate the condition of child-life to-day? There is not a city, town, or village where these lost ones are not to be met with, surrounded by temptations. Before the eyes of children sin in all its vile seductive power is flaunted. Upon the ears of children the sounds of language fall that ought not to be heard, while the "free Press" fills the shop windows with a stream of literature that poisons every mind it touches. How can child-life be saved?

It is the first duty of Christian parents to secure the salvation of their offspring—a duty often sadly neglected! Our blessed Master again and again impresses upon us the value of children, and He expressly declares his tender love for them, and the fact that the will of our Father in heaven is their salvation. "He took a little child and set him in the midst of them; and taking him into his arms, He said unto them, Whosoever shall receive one of such little children in my Name receiveth Me, and whosoever receiveth Me receiveth not Me, but Him that sent Me." Also, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." The rainbow of God's gracious promises is over all child-life. Satan has no mortgage upon "these little ones." Whatever else is doubtful this is clear: God wants the children, and now is the day of salvation for them.

The importance of child-saving is increasingly recognised, and much is now being done for body and soul. There is a tremendous effort being made to get the young by Ritualists and Romanists, which many Evangelical Christians need to be informed upon. Yet, praise God, to-day a large proportion of our children are under the influence of evangelical teaching. But alas! for how short a time do we hold them; hence the necessity for definite soul-saving work. Perhaps none need to be remembered in prayer more than do Sunday-school teachers. Their work is surrounded with great difficulties, and is of the greatest importance. There is no higher or nobler work to-day than that of leading the children to Jesus Christ. Praise God, many have been saved in our Sunday-schools. But with the promises of our Divine Master before us, with the most impressionable material to deal with, and all the efforts of Sunday-school teachers, surely the harvest gathered is small. Is there not some worm gnawing at the root of the tree, hindering its fruit-bearing? What is it? How can we destroy it?

"Are you saved, teacher?" This question was artlessly put by a little girl. The teacher was startled, but silent for a moment, when she replied, "I hope I am." That teacher had never received conscious salvation; but God used this question to bring her to Himself, and the next Sunday she was a new teacher, because a "new creature in Christ Jesus." Is not one cause of defeat found in the fact that some teachers are not consciously saved, and cannot therefore introduce the children to their Saviour?

The very best in every way that the teacher possesses is needed in this work; but Jesus says of all this, "Bring it to Me," and our obedience secures his blessing, his increase, and a supply equal to the needs of all. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" is his promise. Yet are not many teachers working without the power for service?

Further, is not a definite object often lacking? An impulsive flush of zeal is not enough in this work. Children are acute observers; they know whether the teacher feels the truth and has a definite aim. Do not many teachers need to learn that to succeed they must begin at the beginning? The initial study in Scripture is saving truth. The first object is not to give the children information about Christ, but to secure their living union with Christ. Saving truth is not brought home to the heart by mere logical rules. The love of Christ rises superior to all rules, and strikes out a path for herself. Human systems of teaching are only candles. It is the light and life of Christ every child needs. The children are lost—dead! It is useless to try to feed dead creatures. The first thing is to make them live.

Common-sense teaches that the time has gone by for mere secular education in our Sunday-schools, but how many content themselves with imparting particulars about the Word of God, and forget that the chief work is to introduce the children to Jesus. Let us preach Jesus Christ as Lord; that truth suits the child as well as the man. Make clear to the child what sin is; that he is lost, and so lost that Christ only could find him; that God intended him to be his temple, but sin has defiled and alienated him from the life of God; point him to Jesus who died that he might live, and do not rest until Christ is formed in him the hope of glory.* This position must be mastered first. As a rule it is the most irksome, but it is always most profitable. Child teaching is a work more for the heart than for the head.

At what age should a child be consciously saved? At that point where it can make wilful personal choice of evil, and it is then and not a year later when we must get them saved.

Beloved in the Lord, set your heart upon the salvation of each child in your class. Go alone each day and talk to God about each child. Having sought private intercourse with God, do the same with each child. Remember that soul committed to you will spend eternity in heaven or hell, and upon you largely depends which! "Not by might nor by power, but my Spirit, Saith the Lord of hosts." Personal systematic intercession is wanted. "As soon as Zion travailed she brought forth children."

* The most helpful plan that we know for this definite soul-saving work, is that adopted by our "One by One Band," and if every teacher would follow this, soon ears of thousands of children would be the saved of the Lord. Particulars of the Band will be sent upon receipt of address and one penny stamp to Mr. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.

Thought Gems.

SELECTED FROM THE LATE DR. ANDREW BONAR'S SERMONS.

Faith is no part of the Gospel, the eye is no part of the sun. The first receives the good news, the other sees the glory.

Be done looking at your faith and look at the object of faith, and your rest has begun.

Thirst is no part of water and conviction is no part of Christ. Let a sense of need lead on to Him.

According as God alone is more and more our true portion, so is our progress in holiness.

Draughts of the water of life are just fresh views of Christ.

When Christ is made by a sinner only his medicine, not his meat, things are all wrong. He must be not only all our salvation but all our desire.

The experience of the glorified as given us by glimpses in the book of Revelation, shows us that Christ has increased so as to fill all their hearts and songs. Worthy is the Lamb.

When we ask in the morning to be filled with the Spirit, may we not expect to be filled all day long with thoughts of Christ?

The fulness of the Spirit does not manifest itself in mere feeling; it always shows itself in some grace.

Much of the Word without prayer leaves the soul unprofited and dry; much prayer without the Word makes it dreamy and vague.

As believers seeking to be holy, attend to small duties and to the mode of your doing them. Be thorough; what your hand finds to do, do it with your might. Done under the light of God's eye, how the meanest duties shine! Attend to holiness in its minutest details. Be truthful in small things. Avoid exaggerations in word or manner.

Let your kindness, your self-denial for others, be before Him only, saying nothing about them. The best service is that which no one knows but Himself, serve in your closet in praise and prayer, and your Father which seeth in secret shall reward you openly.

A Nazareth life of service is no small thing. Not by great efforts, but by watchful everyday living, holding fast Christ and his truth. Not great praying or great doing of any kind, but patient, faithful keeping his Word, and holding it fast in the little things and trials and temptations of daily life, seen and marked by no eye but his. Thus Jesus "grew up before the Lord."

METLAKATLA, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Dr. Vernon E. R. Ardagh, C.M.S. medical missionary, writes:—In spite of a bad fishing season, we have collected twenty dollars towards fitting up a reading room for our young men and bigger boys among the Indians. This sum will not go far, however, in a country where skilled labour and furniture cost a good deal, so it has been suggested that friends in the old country should be asked to help us, by sending suitable books and papers as a nucleus on which to work. Bound volumes of "The Sunday at Home," "Leisure Hour," "Quiver," "The British Workman," and "Boy's Own Paper" will be very welcome; also periodicals and magazines bearing on carpentering, boat-building, and other trades. This effort is being made at the request of the English-speaking Indians themselves. I shall be glad to acknowledge contributions. Goods should be invoiced for customs "Free of duty. For exclusive use of Indians, British Columbia, in the Metlakatla Agency of the Government Indian Department."

The Parliament of Religions.—2.

By Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

No doubt the chief superficial interest in the Parliament centred about the presence and utterances of the Orientals. It was this feature that made it unique among religious assemblies. We are familiar with Church Congresses, with General Assemblies, and great gatherings of a denominational character. We even know of certain catholic gatherings, such as the Evangelical Alliance, and the great missionary congress held in London a few years ago; but an assembly in which all the so-called Christian denominations were represented was a novelty and in some sense a wonder, and shows a great advance in the direction of Christian fraternity, and that kind of liberality which does not feel that any conviction is compromised in an honest discussion on points of difference or agreement. Hitherto debates between opposing or varying sects have been rather carried forward as between antagonists. In this assembly the desire was rather to promote fraternity, soften asperities, and seek points of agreement; to minimise differences, and make inquiry if unity might be had in any way without compromise of principle. But the Parliament was wider than that. In order to set its proceedings more clearly before the mind's eye of your readers, let me attempt a classification of the faiths represented.

I.—TRINITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

This phase of faith was represented by the great Protestant sects, the Roman Catholics, the Greek Church, and the Armenian or Old Gregorians. In this connection it is only fair to say that the scholarly and eloquent bishops and priests of the Roman Catholic Church presented and defended with singular force the cardinal doctrines of orthodox Christianity. That is, the doctrines of the Trinity, the essential Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Incarnation, the Atonement, and Resurrection from the dead. Listening to their papers and addresses, one could not but feel (though not going with their declarations and contentions in respect of those things peculiar to the Romish faith) that the real power of the Roman Church, and the reason for its survival, is to be found in the strong grasp it has upon these great fundamental truths of revelation and historical demonstration. I am sure that many an earnest Protestant must have felt his heart burn within him as he listened to his most cherished beliefs so ably and eloquently advocated by Romanists; and that whatever points of antagonism there are between us (and there are many and vital ones), we must still regard them, in so far as they stand in Christ, as our brethren.

II.—UNITARIAN CHRISTIANITY.

This school of belief was represented by the several branches or shades of Unitarianism, from that of the old Channing type, which was not much more than a protest against the severe and mechanical Trinitarianism, and hard, uncompromising, and loveless miscalled Calvinism of our Puritan ancestors, down to the most liberal (?) and unbelieving rationalism that passes muster under the name of Unitarianism. The papers and addresses of these delegates were more generally devoted to the humanities, and the various questions pertaining to social and political reform than to matters of Christian doctrine. It must be said that many of their utterances were most admirable and worthy of the spirit of Christ. I may not be invidious, but I have the greatest pleasure in mentioning a magnificent paper by Prof. Everett, of Harvard University, wherein he declared that there could be no reformation of society except so far as it was founded on the regeneration of the individual. He emphasised regeneration as over against reformation. His declaration concerning wealth and its obligation was packed into a sentence to this effect. "Not until rich men come to understand that they do not OWN their wealth, but OWE it, will the curse be taken off riches, and wealth in the hands of the individual be made a blessing to the world, and not an instrument of oppression."

III.—NON-CHRISTIAN UNITARIANS.

Of these the first to be reckoned were the Jews, who were represented by some of their ablest Rabbis. I need not define the faith of the Jew. In America there are two great branches: (a) The old Orthodox Jew who holds by the law of Moses in ceremonial, as far as possible, being minus temple, sacrificing priest, and sacrifice. They keep the Sabbath and observe the great feast days, and repudiate Jesus Christ with great vehemence. (b) The Reformed Jew, who has ceased to look for a personal Messiah, but finds that promise fulfilled in the better and larger social and political condition of things. They have substituted Sunday for the Sabbath as being in harmony with the trend of things, and upon the whole more convenient from business, social, and religious points of view. These speak reverently and even affectionately of Jesus. Both these schools hold to the Divine authority of the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and believe in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; the Orthodox party holding more nearly the accepted Christian view of inspiration, the Reformed party the more loose, liberal (?), and rationalistic view of the Scriptures and its historical records.

Next to these come the Mohammedan Unitarians. Here we have a great religious community numbering many more millions than the Jews, whose faith is in the God of the Old Testament, and whose creed is supposed to be based on the Old Testament writings and the Gospels, plus the revelations given to Mahomet, who also was the true interpreter and expounder of the Old Testament and the New, himself being the last and greatest of the prophets of God. Practically, their faith is founded on the Koran alone, and all authority for faith and practice was lodged with Mahomet. A strange medley of belief is this desert faith. It was represented by an American pervert, Mahomet-Webb by name, and I believe one or two papers sent to be read from the far East by a great Oriental Mussulman. Mahomet-Webb devoted himself largely to the vain attempt of justifying Mahomet's personal life and excusing and justifying his law of polygamy. He was not a conspicuous success.

After the Mohammedans, we should mention the Brahmo-Somaj Unitarians. The Brahmos are a large and influential sect chiefly in Bengal, India; a great cleavage from Brahminical Hinduism under the impact of Christianity, organised if not originally founded by Keshub Chunder Sen. A really great man, he was all but a Christian, but he stopped at the half-way house of Unitarianism, and then constructed a kind of eclectic faith from the faiths of the world, giving pre-eminence to the New Testament among religious books and to the peerless Christ among religious teachers, and throwing over all his teachings a thick veil of mysticism. This body of non-Christian Unitarians was represented by Babu Protab-Moozumda, a most eloquent and finished orator, who is the quasi leader of the Somaj at this time.

The representatives of the ancient Fire-Worshippers, more properly the Parsees, of Western India, may be classed as non-Christian Unitarians, inasmuch as they believe in one God, deny Jesus Christ, and eschew all forms of idolatry. They are not a very religious people, rather Epicurean in their mode of thinking and in their habits of life; but they cleave with more or less tenacity to their ancient teaching priesthood, which is still the practical head of the social as well as religious community. Hitherto they have been the most inaccessible people to Christianity of all others in the East.

IV.—PHILOSOPHICAL AND IDOLATROUS FAITHS.

I class these together because it is difficult without too much refinement to do otherwise. First among these must be mentioned the Brahminical Hindus. They represent both a philosophical faith and a vast idolatrous cult. The scholarly Brahmin is a philosopher pure and simple, though in order to enforce the rites of idolatry upon the masses he himself conforms to these rites. The philosophy of the Brahmin is a stupendous affair; it ranges over the whole field of philosophy, and includes everything, from the most subtle pantheism to the grossest materialism. It is an all-inclusive philosophy, and because it is so has arisen the popular notion of the extreme tolerance of Brahminism. On the other hand, Puranic Hinduism which prevails throughout India has culminated in the most multiform, gross, and universal idolatry known anywhere in the world. The whole land groans under the oppression of the idols, or rather the idol priests, and the whole land is defiled by them. The shady and seamy side of Hinduism was kept strictly out of view by the Brahminical representatives in the Parliament. I shall have something to say of Hinduism later.

Then we come to Buddhism. Buddhism was in force in Parliament. The fiery and eloquent Dharamapala was perhaps the most conspicuous Oriental present, and shared the sensational honours of the gathering and the public generally with the so-called Brahminical monk, Vivakanandra, of whom more anon. Buddhism is both a religion and a philosophy. Primarily it is a humanitarian philosophy, in which there is no recognition of God at all; the end of which is a final abstraction of existence. It is essentially and hopelessly pessimistic at the same time just, because people cannot get on without God, Buddhistic philosophy has among the masses degenerated into as gross a form of idolatry as may be found anywhere, only it is not bestial as is the idolatry of India. Buddha is the popular god of his modern followers. Though Buddha has long ceased to have any existence at all, yet his image is worshipped by four hundred millions of people in Ceylon, Burmah, China, and Japan. Every pagoda, of which there are thousands upon thousands, is crowded with stone and bronze images of the Buddha, in all his traditional postures. Down before these, millions of votaries bow, bringing offerings of flowers, rice, and gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. To this idol of a man who has long ceased to exist, millions of prayers are daily made. For the Buddhist is the most prayering man living. The Mohammedan is not in it with the Buddhist. He prays with his lips, he prays with wheels turned by hand, by machinery, by water, by flapping yards of calico upon which thousands of prayers are printed, and attached to tall poles, that by the action of the wind these prayers may be wafted to the extinct Buddha, who is not, in the eternal nowhere.

I asked once a Buddhist devotee, who was vigorously turning his prayer-wheel, to whom he was praying. His answer was: "To nobody," I suppose of course with a capital "N." I then asked him for what he was praying. To which he replied sententiously: "Nothing." Again I suppose with a capital "N." If worshipping an idol of an extinct man, and making millions of prayers to Nobody for Nothing can constitute a religion, then Buddhism in its popular form is very religious.

On the other hand, we have the Philosophical Buddhism represented by the scholarly priests in the countries where Buddhism or some of its sects or offshoots prevail. It is not within my purpose to discuss philosophical or esoteric Buddhism, but only to mention that it was represented most picturesquely by its representatives from Ceylon, China, and Japan.

Belonging to this school of philosophy or religion is the modern Theosophy, of which Mrs. Besant is the present high priestess. Of her and her latest faith I need hardly speak to an English public.

The list of Oriental faiths would not be complete without mentioning the representatives of Confucianism and Shintoism from China and Japan. Confucianism is scarcely a religion, being a mundane philosophy intended to promote the peace and prosperity of the people by the cultivation of right relations between friends, parents and children, brother and brother, husband and wife, and the cultivation of a studious etiquette, having for its models the ancient Kings of China. On the other hand, Shintoism is a nature and hero worship, the deities being worshipped and propitiated with offering of fruit, flowers, and music.

This may, for a general statement, complete the list of religions and philosophies represented in this remarkable Parliament. Is it any wonder that it excited a profound interest? Is it any wonder that thousands listened with eager attention to the exposition of the faith of some and even all of these Orientals? It was almost pitiful to look at the simple and earnest faces of these far-away brothers of ours, as with intense earnestness they unfolded their wisdom and laid the spoil of their philosophies at our feet. Especially was one struck with the simplicity of the Chinese Buddhists, and the Japanese Shintos. Of the Indians—well they were canny, subtle, clever, secretive, and decidedly Occidental withal.

In a concluding paper I shall hope to set forth some of the practical benefits which have resulted from this Parliament, and prick some of the Oriental bubbles blown over our heads and offered for our acceptance.

THE WELCOME HOME.—The anticipation of a hard winter among our seamen has already begun to be realised, and Miss Child has been thankful to be able to commence a series of soup suppers for such men. The first was given on Monday week, and God gave much blessing in the meeting afterwards. Any friends wishing to help in these suppers will be heartily welcomed by Miss Child at her Home for Sailors, 173, Ratcliff-highway, London, E.

THE ARMENIAN PERSECUTIONS.

The troubles in Armenia attracted great attention a few months ago, and earnest efforts were made on behalf of those suffering so unjustly. When, however, two of the prisoners, Professors Thoumaian and Kayayan, were released, the general impression appears to have been that the whole question was settled. This, however, is a grievous error; as the Armenian Christians are still enduring cruelties and oppressions beyond description. It is exceedingly important that the people of this country should be kept well informed on this point, as their voice has great weight with the Turkish Government, and the state of things at the present time, in Armenia, is such that it has become imperative that a strong protest should be raised.

A remarkable example of the influence exerted by English opinion is furnished by the action of the Turkish Government in view of the demonstration arranged to be held in London in July last. This meeting was called to raise a protest against the persecutions in Armenia, and particularly the savage sentences pronounced in the Angora case. As soon, however, as the Turkish rulers heard of this, they hastened to release two of the best known prisoners, doing this expressly to neutralise the effect of the Exeter Hall demonstration. In this they succeeded only too well, as many imagined that the whole crisis was over, while some papers actually stated that the Sultan had pardoned all the prisoners, whereas only two were pardoned and released, while about thirty were left to endure the cruelties of a Turkish prison. The term of imprisonment was, in some cases, reduced, but even one or two years in such gaols is quite sufficient to kill a prisoner. Those who know best the actual state of things consider that the five Armenians who were executed were more fortunate than those who were left alive to endure the horrors of a Turkish prison. The Angora case aroused special interest because of the American College of Marsovan concerned in it, and also because Professor Thoumaian's name was known in this country, while Angora itself is within range of, and in communication with, Europe. All this combined to bring the Angora trial into prominence. But in the interior the condition of the innocent Christians is ten times worse than it is in places where European opinion can make itself felt. In such towns as Aleppo, Van, Erzeroum, Erzinyan, Zeyton, Marash, and other cities in the more remote provinces, the gaols are choked with innocent and untried Christian prisoners—bishops, archbishops, priests, teachers, and educated men of all kinds are arrested on the feeblest pretences, and thrust into prison without anybody knowing anything about it.

These persecutions are going on all over Asia Minor and Armenia, and are becoming more and more severe. The places being far from the Turkish capital, there is practically no appeal, no hope of redress, and the sufferers are left at the mercy of the local rulers. The pretexts are of all kinds, political, religious, educational, and industrial; but at the bottom of all is the religious hatred. The Turkish Government dreads Christian progress and influence. It sees that the Mohammedans cannot keep up with the Christians, and therefore it has decided to stop all Christian work. This is the secret of the whole trouble. It is perfectly well known that the trial in such cases is merely a farce; the issue being pre-arranged.

Now things being in this state, can anything be done? If anything be done at all, it must be done by England, a Power which is bound by treaty obligation to protect the Christians of Turkey in Asia, and bring about some amelioration of their condition. It is now over fifteen years since the Isle of Cyprus was occupied by England as a guarantee of the fulfilment of that treaty, and still nothing has been done. Turkey in the past has been largely helped by England, from the idea that she is useful as a barrier against Russia. But to preserve the Turks is to perpetuate Turkish atrocities, so that, to call things by their right name, England may be said to be the author, or the unconscious abettor, of unutterable wrongs and frightful barbarities, inflicted without cause on hundreds of helpless Christians. England ought, therefore, to protect the Armenians, who look to her. These considerations must be pressed upon the attention of the British public. If once they are properly understood England's conscience will be aroused, and the voice of public opinion will make itself heard in the Foreign Office in such a way as to compel her representatives to adopt measures for the deliverance of the Armenians now so cruelly oppressed.

PROGRESS IN UGANDA.

The following extract from a letter, dated July 4, from Mr. Arthur B. Fisher, late of the Y.M.C.A., Dublin, and now a member of the C.M.S. Mission in Uganda, will be of peculiar interest at the present time.

"The Christians at Mingo gave us a warm welcome, coming out in hundreds to meet us. We found the work going on in a wonderful manner. A large church, holding some 5000 people, has been built by the natives, and is filled every Sunday, and 600 people come every day to classes and morning worship. We have had up this year eighty-four loads of books, each load weighing 65lb., and these have almost all been sold. There are now some 80,000 readers in Uganda, and the number is increasing every day. The Baruma tribe, living amongst the islands, have also commenced to read, and on many of the islands no one will be allowed to stay who has not got a book. Buganda Christians have gone to the islands to teach the Baruma to read. Stanley has written much about this tribe. In all the provinces round about, the Word is being sold, and people are learning to read.

"I went into Singo in April, and in little over a month sold 2000 books. A church and a house were built for us in five days. The church holds 600 people, and on the first Sunday we had 400 present. The number is increasing. Singo is a beautiful country, containing a lake of about eight square miles in extent, with three islands on it. We landed upon one of these, and within an hour sold all the books we brought—140. God has planted in the hearts of this people a longing after Himself. All want to read.

ALL WANT TO KNOW GOD.

"Sir Gerald Portal arrived here on St. Patrick's Day, and the Union Jack went up over the land on April 1. A land settlement has been made amongst the Romanists, who are not pleased, but still have agreed. The Mohammedans, who have been very impudent to the Consul, were refused any more power or land, and told they would be driven out if they did not keep quiet. After the Consul left on May 29 they refused to work for the king, which was an act of rebellion. When they did come in matters quickly reached a crisis on June 17. Captain MacDonald, who had been left in charge, received news from Ntebe, which is the Nubian quarter close to the lake, that Salem Bey, colonel in the Egyptian army and chief of the Nubians here, meant to fight with the Mohammedans against the Protestants. This was serious news, as the Nubians are the Government soldiers, and possess all the guns and twenty rounds of ammunition each. Captain MacDonald called all the Europeans to the fort, and commanded them to take arms and mount guard, while he called all the Nubian soldiers out upon parade, and asked those who were loyal to stand still, while all those who wished to join Salem Bey were to march out. Not one moved. Had any done so they would have been instantly shot. Thinking this was test enough, all were dismissed. Next day, however, news came in to the effect that if Captain MacDonald helped the Protestants the Nubians would help the Mohammedans. The Europeans were again called, and took arms as before; the two Maxim guns were mounted upon the walls, and Captain MacDonald called the Nubian soldiers and went out to them himself unarmed. He marched them into town, and soon made them prisoners. Two hours afterwards the Mohammedans made a wild rush upon the Protestants, who stood their ground, and soon sent the rebels flying before them. Everyone rejoices that they have been driven out; from day to day they had been killing people and robbing right and left. They once forced my door, and cut away my window at night during a storm. Every missionary has been robbed from time to time by them. Captain Mac Donald went down to Ntebe and disarmed all the Nubians there, which was a most daring thing to do, and succeeded in taking Salem Bey prisoner, together with three leading Mohammedan chiefs.

"Before Bishop Tucker left us he ordained six natives, all good, tried, and true men, full of love for souls. These, together with numbers of other Christians, will branch out into the country, and, we trust, gather in precious souls who are waiting to hear the truth. The work here is delightful; who would not spend and be spent here amongst this loving and grateful people? Oh that hundreds of our young men would lift up their eyes and look upon this great field—not as those interested, but as those responsible for the gathering in of the precious sheaves! But some will say, How can we go? I answer, Present yourselves, and leave the sending to God! I knew God would let me come to the heathens, but how I knew not. May God teach us all what He would have us do. I am thankful to say I have not had one moment's illness since I came to Africa over twelve months ago, and it is my opinion that, with care, Uganda is very healthy."

A WEEK AT A SOLDIERS' HOME.

It was a hot Saturday evening last summer that I arrived at the Soldiers' Home, Woolwich, to see for myself something of the work of which I had heard so much. At eight o'clock I found myself in a bright, cosy class-room, in the midst of the soldiers' prayer-meeting, led by a non-commissioned officer, and all were so simple and earnest in their prayers for themselves and their comrades, and for "the old folks at home"—for what soldier does not pray for his mother as soon as he learns to pray for himself?

A list of the meetings held at the Home may give you some idea of the work that is carried on. On Sunday a public Gospel meeting is held at 3 and 6.30; on Monday there is a mothers' meeting (with clothing club and lending library) in the afternoon, with an attendance of from thirty to forty women. Every evening except Saturday there is a night school for the men, and on Monday, Tuesday, and Friday a soldiers' Bible class. On Tuesday afternoon an officers' Bible reading is held, and on Wednesday the Band of Hope, with a public evangelistic meeting in the evening, while on Thursday evening there is a Gospel temperance meeting, which once a month is taken by the members themselves.

The ground-floor of the Home can boast of a large, cheerful reading-room, a smoking and games room, with bar attached; and now beyond these are three cubicles for men on furlough, two of which are already furnished, and in great request at 6d. a night, and two cubicles where baths will be fitted up as soon as funds permit. A donation of £8 8s. will cover the expenses of a cubicle. There is also a little room where a man can get alone for prayer, or take a friend for tea and talk. Before you come to these rooms is a small library where one of the ladies always sits from seven to eight o'clock in order to welcome new comers as they pass the door, and have a little talk with one and another as they come in. Many interesting interviews have taken place here! One man brings a letter from home that he wants advice about; another, perhaps, has never written to his friends since he enlisted, but, now he is saved, he feels he must do so, and wants someone to pray with him about it. Again, a word of sympathy and counsel is needed by those who have signed the pledge, and many have thus been led on step by step to cast all their sin and care upon Him who careth for them.

We find, too, that after the meetings in the evening, when the soldiers gather together in the class-room to sing hymns, or bring out their Bibles for a quiet "read," we have many precious opportunities of helping those who are cast down, and pointing the wanderer to the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." Thus the days fly past and jewels are won for the Master, who go out and tell their comrades all over the world what great things God hath done for them.

From time to time there are large teas, when over 100 soldiers sit down to tea, and many remain for a bright Gospel meeting afterwards.

Attached to the staff of workers is a devoted City Missionary who visits the barracks and hospital, and thus is the means of reaching numbers, who, as yet, have not found their way to the Home.

A rummage sale is to be held in November, and a sale of work on the 6th and 7th December, when friends would be warmly welcomed. One great need just now is a piano. Any help towards the Institution would be gratefully received by Miss Shubrick, Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich.

Alice Nangle.

THE REGULATION OF VICE.

A DEMAND FOR INDIAN LEGISLATION.

The two large and enthusiastic meetings in Westminster Town Hall on Wednesday last week show that the friends of national righteousness and social reform are awake to the duty of the moment. That duty is to secure from the Government the opportunity for a full discussion in Parliament of the recent doings in Indian military cantonments as revealed in the report of the Departmental Committee, appointed to consider the allegations of our two American sisters. The meetings last week were convened on the eve of the opening of the autumn session, and were designed to move public opinion in support of Parliamentary action in case the Government should prove unwilling to give the desired facilities. Both meetings, afternoon and evening, were presided over by that veteran social purity reformer, Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., and among other members of the House of Commons present were Professor Stuart, Mr. W. S. Caine, Sir W. Wedderburn, Mr. Walter McLaren, Mr. J. E. Ellis, Mr. F. Webb, Mr. Carvell Williams, Mr. Crossfield, Mr. J. C. Stevenson, and Mr. Naoroji. These and other gentlemen constitute a "Purity party" in the House that intends to make its influence felt.

At the afternoon gathering the chairman reviewed the recent history of the repeal agitation relating to India, leading up to the fact that a clear understanding was reached that the report of the Committee would be debated and voted on during the recent session of Parliament. That object was not attained, and now the advocates of total repeal in India are determined that matters shall be brought to an issue before Christmas. Mr. Stansfeld's words were weighty, well considered, and full of determination; and if he is properly backed up in the country and the House he may be trusted to secure, by formal vote, the sense of the people's representatives on this vital question of regulation versus repeal, in the military cantonments of our great Eastern dependency.

Several strong resolutions were submitted to the meetings, and passed with acclamation. The first, moved by Rev. J. P. Gledstone, expressed satisfaction at the report of the recent committee, and indignation at the contemptuous action of the Indian military officials in setting at nought the resolution of the House of Commons passed in 1888. Mr. Gledstone showed effectively how the official evidence given before the Departmental Committee had helped on the cause of repeal. He drew special attention to the glaring inconsistency between the evidence of Lord Roberts and that of his subordinate, Lieut.-General Chapman, and said it was not to be endured that administrators of the law in India should themselves break the law with impunity. In seconding the motion, Mr. W. McLaren roundly declared that for himself and other members this question would be regarded as paramount in importance over all other matters submitted to the House, and they could not support any Government that would tolerate the continuance of such evils in India. This Conference would be, he hoped, the beginning of an agitation all over the country, which would not cease till the abominable system of regulation is for ever swept away.

The resolution was supported by Mr. J. E. Ellis, who directed his remarks mainly to the unconstitutional action of the Indian military officials in setting at defiance the expressed will of the Imperial Parliament. Speaking as one of the supporters of the existing Government, he wished them to understand that such conduct on the part of our public servants in India could not be endured. Mrs. Henry Wilson, in a deeply earnest and womanly speech, gave various strong reasons for their feeling indignation on this question. Regarding it from the point of view of the soldier, she pointed out the demoralising effects on him of regulations which taught him that vice is a necessity. Mrs. Wilson wanted to know what punishment was going to be meted out to those officials who had been deliberately disregarding the behests of Parliament, and even disobeying the orders of their Commander-in-Chief. She drew attention to a recent leading article in an Exeter paper, in which it was stated that some clergymen at a conference had lamented the fact that the C.D. Acts had been repealed! The writer of the article, however, told these clergymen that such regrets were vain, for Mrs. Josephine Butler was perfectly invincible!

The next speaker was Rev. J. G. Cunningham who appeared as a representative of the Free Church of Scotland. For real pathos and for appreciation of the vital questions at stake, his speech was one of the most telling of the Conference. The evidence given before the committee had deeply moved his spirit, and he pleaded, in trembling, heartfelt tones, the cause of the poor Indian women beguiled into such a terrible life, and unable to protect themselves from indignity and even cruelty at the hands of hardened lustful men. Mr. W. S. Caine recurred to the important constitutional issue that had been raised and which would have to be thoroughly dealt with. The chief point of his address lay in his citation of Indian opinion on this question of vice regulation. Every week, he said, he perused twenty Indian papers representing all classes of native opinion. While the two English official organs sneered and laughed at the whole moral aspect of the question, the native papers were unanimous in favour of the thorough abolition of the so-called "regulation."

Sir Wm. Wedderburn, as an old Indian official, fully endorsed all that his fellow M.P.'s had said. He was severe in his strictures on the official hierarchy in India, and said the only hope of getting justice done was by arousing the national conscience of this country, which would react on Parliament. Official stories and reports are not to be credited, and we shall have to find out the real facts for ourselves. Speaking as an Irishman, Mr. Webb was most emphatic in describing the hateful regulations as subversive of all righteousness, truth, humanity, and Christianity.

Another resolution was moved by Mr. Percy Bunting, calling for legislation which should make such action as that of the Indian military officials a penal offence. He pointed out how military rules and regulations have largely been in the past apart from and independent of the law as embodied in Acts of Parliament. Moreover, there is in India no healthy public opinion that can act as a check on military despotism. The proposed legislation will have to be very skilfully framed, so as to prevent all possible infractions of the liberty of the subject. In seconding the resolution, Miss Whitehead read an extraordinary letter from Rev. H. Chapman, vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell, in The Pall Mall Gazette of the previous evening, in which he contended for the regulation of vice in London, by confining it to certain quarters of the city, so as to purify the streets.

On reassembling for the evening, the speaking was resumed by Mrs. Bramwell Booth in a brief address, in which she paid a warm sisterly tribute to the services rendered by Mrs. Butler. That lady herself next addressed the gathering. She did not think that their friends in the House of Commons needed any urging, as the resolution suggested; but that they do need the moral support of all the friends of purity and of righteousness throughout the country. So far as God gave her strength, she was resolved to arouse the nation to deep spiritual feeling and a holy determination that this battle should be fought and won. There are other members of Parliament who need urging and prompting, and that can be done by pressure from their constituents. Having recalled some stirring memories of bygone battles for purity in the House of Commons, Mrs. Butler said that it was foolish to deprecate public agitation on this question, as some half-hearted friends were inclined to do. It is good to be zealously affected in a good cause, and this is the cause of freedom, of law, of liberty, of woman—yea, it is the cause of God. Let us sustain our Parliamentary friends by constant prayer.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in supporting the resolution, made one of his fiery, hard-hitting speeches, calling a spade a spade and a lie a lie. He re-asserted the elementary maxim that what is morally wrong can never be physically or politically right. He maintained that this question, being a moral one, ought to have precedence in Parliament over all purely legislative affairs, and therefore it must be discussed at once. Mr. Chapman's suggestion in The Pall Mall Gazette received very severe treatment at the hands of Mr. Hughes, who indignantly asked if the writer was prepared to relegate the male tempters and sinners to special quarters. The great majority of our unhappy sisters have been betrayed by male scoundrels, and it is a monstrous and infamous proposal that they should be virtually imprisoned for the further gratification of these scoundrels, who should go scot free. Mr. Hughes commented severely and scathingly on the administrative irregularities of the Indian officials, and said that such things must be prohibited by law.

Rev. J. Dymock, another delegate from the Free Church of Scotland Committee, in an earnest speech moved a resolution expressing detestation of the whole system of regulation, and calling for its complete abolition. He was followed by Dr. Nevins, who quoted statistics culled from Government reports, showing clearly that disease in the army increased under the régime of the Acts, and sensibly decreased when the Acts were abolished in this country. Dr. Nevins went as far as to say that if the British Government continued to run counter to the feeling of native Indians in this matter, another mutiny might suddenly arise, worse and more disastrous than that of 1857. The closing speech was from Mr. Naoroji, who also impressively warned the people of this country as to the evil results that must follow if we held facilities for military vice to be superior in importance to the rights of woman.

Before the proceedings closed it was resolved to raise a fund of £1000 for the carrying on of this agitation. The treasurer of the fund is Professor Stuart, M.P., 1, King-street, Westminster, S.W.

BISHOP HILL AT EXETER HALL.

At the first of a series of missionary meetings under the auspices of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A., Bishop Hill (who leaves shortly for the Niger) and Bishop Oluwole, of Lagos, gave stirring addresses. Mr. John White, who presided, pointed out that the Y.M.C.A. was a huge missionary agency, as every member was supposed to be a missionary in the sphere of his daily calling.

Bishop Oluwole referred to the fact that he was a native of Abeokuta, and that his parents were heathen, who had since been brought to a knowledge of Christ. He showed in his own person the result of missionary labours in his native region. Missionary work in that district had been beset with many difficulties, but to-day they could point to a true missionary spirit pervading the church at Lagos, because there they trained native workers, who were sent out to different districts, so that now they had eleven mission stations in touch with the church at Lagos. They were not all self-supporting, but they were not far off it. Among the many difficulties of the work at the present day was the question of polygamy, which was one of the hardest customs to break down, owing to the lack of parental feeling on the part of the natives. Another serious stumbling-block was the drink traffic. Shiploads of spirits were poured into the country, and the character of the poison might be guessed when he told them that it was retailed there at sixpence a bottle; some years ago you could not see a drunken woman, now they were common. Another difficulty was the character of the European traders. If they could only get a good strong Christian body of traders and their agents, a large number of natives would become Christians, and the work would extend.

Bishop Hill followed with a touching and impassioned appeal to the young men present to give themselves up to missionary work of some kind, either at home or abroad, pointing out that men were working on God's lines when they were where God intended them.

A life, he said, is never perfected until it is under the control of the Holy Ghost. There are sixty millions in the Soudan without a missionary. Does God call you there? Twenty thousand die every day who have never heard the name of Christ. Does not this impress you as an awful fact? Do not, however, go out to the mission-field until you can place yourself unreservedly under the control of God the Holy Ghost, because temptations strong and deep come to those in the field. Africa was a land that worshipped demons, that gave itself up to demons, and the men become demons. You find there that you have a hand-to-hand fight in the horrible darkness of this earthly hell, and if you are not at one with the Holy One, you will fall deeper than you ever fell. Do not take up the work unless God has laid the burden of it on your heart. The mission field is not all romance, but a place of desperately hard work. Go out if you have a love for soul-winning, such a love as will give you no rest, and go out with a broken-heartedness about the state of the field. Only those who are broken-hearted about the souls of men will make any real or lasting impression on them.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The annual convention of the Sunday School Union was recently held in Birmingham. The introduction of a Christian Endeavour meeting into the conference is a new departure, and judging by the result of the experiment it is one that will not be regretted. The Sunday School Union have already done much for the Endeavour Movement, and this united gathering again testified to their thoughtful interest.

CARR'S LANE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

While a great public meeting on behalf of Sunday Schools was being held in the Town Hall, two or three delegates specially interested in Christian Endeavour stole away to the weekly meetings of the Carr's Lane Society. It chanced to be not only the night of the weekly prayer meeting but of the monthly consecration service. Dr. Dale, the pastor, and Mr. Barber, the co-pastor, are both cordially in sympathy with the Y.P.S.C.E., and it is evident the Church welcomes this new method of work among the young people. The Endeavour room is bright and cheery, with chairs so arranged as to take off the appearance of stilted formality. About eighty young people were present, not quite an average number, as the Town Hall meeting had taken off some of the workers, but sufficient to show that Christian Endeavour has got firm hold in a church the centre of much spiritual power and activity.

It was a gracious, helpful, inspiring hour. A young lady presided over the meeting, and after the opening exercises announced the subject, "Christian Courtesy." In a few brief sentences, all to the point, the nature of the service was emphasised, "Nearer to Christ" and "Reality in Consecration" being the key words. Most of the responses to the roll call bore on the subject for the evening, but they were wonderfully varied and telling. One of the members sang part of a hymn; probably eight or ten, five of whom were young ladies, responded by prayer, and these brief melting prayers some of us will not soon forget. Others gave a word of personal experience or testimony, and many an apt quotation from some writer suitable to the theme. Most of those compelled to be absent sent their loving messages to the service, only about ten in a society of a hundred members being absent unexcused, and that under circumstances of special liability to omission in view of the meeting elsewhere.

THE PUBLIC MEETING.

The meeting on Thursday evening was also held at Carr's-lane, but this time the large chapel had to be requisitioned, and at the appointed time many hundreds of people were assembled. The centre of the church was reserved for members of Endeavour societies, but they overflowed to the aisles and galleries, and themselves would have made an audience inspiring to almost any speaker. There were also many friends of Sunday-schools present, and apparently not a few of the general public interested to know what the new Society might mean.

In the Birmingham district, within a three or four miles radius, there are now about forty societies, most of which were represented at the meeting, and all of which are connected with the local Endeavour Union. These societies, by energetic propaganda work, are rapidly multiplying, and the metropolis of the Midlands promises to be one of the strongest centres in the British section. If the appeal "Birmingham '95" is regarded, and the national convention for that year meets there, it will receive a magnificent welcome.

The president, Rev. J. B. Morgan, of Chester, Chairman of the Christian Endeavour Council, in his address spoke on some possible dangers that may lie in the path of the movement. Mr. Charles Waters, joint secretary of the British section, saw in the Endeavour monogram, C.E., "Concentrated Energy" and "Consecrated Enthusiasm." Rev. E. R. Hassé, of Mirfield, near Leeds, dealt with the Endeavour Motto, "For Christ and the Church," and Rev. W. H. Towers, of Manchester, uttered some earnest words on "The Possibilities of Christian Endeavour." All the addresses were listened to with eager attention, and frequently punctuated by hearty applause. One of the most pleasing features was the fact that every appeal for a loftier type of spiritual life, every reference to prayer, consecration, and Bible study, was immediately endorsed, especially by the young Endeavourers.

The proceedings were fittingly brought to a close by a consecration service and roll-call of societies. About twenty-eight societies responded to the roll-call, some of them represented by fifty, sixty, and even eighty members. Then individual members of Christian Endeavour not represented there in society capacity stood up, and were led in a consecration prayer by Rev. W. Bainbridge, of Chester. It was a helpful gathering, full of power. Endeavourers had their faith strengthened, and probably not a few hitherto standing aloof were prompted to say, "This thing is of God."

MEDICAL WORK IN TRIPOLI.

A letter has reached the Secretary of the Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., from Mr. Joseph Cooksey, of the Central Soudan Mission, Tripoli, N. Africa. Any responses to the appeal he makes may be sent to the secretary of the Bureau. Mr. Cooksey says:—

Before I came to Tripoli I was kindly helped and encouraged by my friend, Dr. R. H. Fallon, of Bristol, who lately sailed for the Zambesi. By the liberality of himself and other friends I was presented with a small medicine chest (homœopathic) and a few useful instruments, the uses of which he taught me as far as he was able in the short time at my disposal, viz., three months. That little knowledge I have found of inestimable value, and have used it to the alleviation of many poor sufferers. But, as my knowledge is limited, my usefulness is curtailed. Had my means allowed, I should have brought some books, and continued my studies in homœopathy; but I was forced to content myself with a small volume of "Family Domestic Medicine," which is quite insufficient for our present needs and the acquisition of the knowledge necessary to treat successfully the various cases one is called upon to attend. Many of the Lord's servants at home could well spare things which to themselves are but of trifling worth, but in the mission-field are invaluable. I should find exceedingly useful a practical work on surgery, and a few modern standard homœopathic works.

I am urged to make this appeal because of the barbarous method the native doctors use to cure the multitude of ailments which come under their care. The one remedy is cauterisation, whether it be for a cold on the chest, an ulcer, or rheumatism. Cupping is practised also to such an absurd extent, and for purposes so utterly opposed to such treatment, that like cauterisation it is a prolific cause of suffering and misery.

Multitudes flock to the charm-sellers as a painless method—so they believe—of finding healing. These scamps by their lies make a fine living by working upon the credulity of the superstitious and ignorant, selling them small scraps of paper with a few words of the Koran written upon it, to be worn upon the person, and which is charged for in proportion to the means of the purchaser. Yet even these men are glad when ill to come to the English missionary for treatment. One came to me two or three weeks ago with sore eyes. I asked, "Why don't you write a charm?" "It is no good," he replied. I had previously had a talk with him upon the subject, with better results than I had anticipated. I cured his eyes, and am now treating him for a dog bite on the leg, and I believe am influencing him for Jesus. Thus you will see the need of medical knowledge here, and however small that might be, among these people with their barbarous and ignorant treatment it is a perfect boon, and a most potent means of procuring a hearing for the Gospel of our Saviour.

PASTOR CHINIQUY, writing to thank English friends for sympathy expressed with him, says:—"This morning (October 16), it was my great joy to send to the Pointe aux Trembles College, Canada, a young man, belonging to one of our best families, whom we persuaded to give up the errors of Rome only a few weeks ago. I am determined to work in Canada to the end of my life, now—for that end is very near—and the field is a very blessed one."

A TRAVELLING MISSION.—A correspondent writes:—A few days since I travelled by the workman's train from Edmonton at 6.15 a.m. Upon entering the carriage my ears were greeted by a familiar tune from "Sacred Songs and Solos." A band of men whose hearts the Lord had touched sing the Gospel each morning, with a brief prayer and address. They thus "let their light shine before men." I trust others will be stimulated to emulate the zeal of these hardfisted sons of toil, to go and do likewise on other lines of railway.

THE C.M.S. GLEANERS' UNION.

The seventh anniversary of the Gleaners' Union was celebrated last week, the proceedings extending over two days, Tuesday and Wednesday. There were prayer-meetings and conferences at the C.M.S. House and Sion College, interesting addresses being delivered by several friends. The proceedings were succinctly described in last week's Record. On the afternoon of Wednesday, at a gathering in Lower Exeter Hall, home and foreign workers spoke inspiring words.

Mr. Eugene Stock presided, and stated that during the year nearly eleven thousand new members had been enrolled, bringing the total up to 57,249. Seventy new branches had been added, and £2920 received in freewill offerings. The motto text chosen for 1894, is, "But thou, O man of God, flee . . . follow . . . fight . . . until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Tim. vi. 11-14). Three "Gleaners' own missionaries" were nominated as follows:—Rev. W. A. C. Fremantle, M.A. (and Mrs. Fremantle), North India; Rev. H. G. Warren, B.A., Japan; Miss A. Grieve, East Africa. Mr. Fremantle is a son of the Hon. and Rev. Canon Fremantle, of Canterbury, and Mr. Warren is a son of Archdeacon Warren, C.M.S. missionary in Japan.

Lady Dodsworth spoke helpfully on the words, "The Master is come and calleth for thee," the call being, of course, to souls at home and abroad. Miss Sophia M. Nugent followed with an address of deep spirituality on the words, "Our own God." The foreign workers who followed were Mrs. Hill, who spoke of the wide open doors in Western Equatorial Africa; Miss Tasca, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, who gave her message with tears in her eyes and a voice tremulous with emotion; and Miss Newcome, of the C.E.Z.M.S., who vividly pictured the evils of China, and repudiated the ordinary idea that the Chinese are a respectable and moral people.

The annual meeting was held in the evening in the Large Hall. Bishop Hill presided, and delivered a hearty address, in which he appealed for sympathy with him in his work on the Niger. "Two years ago," he said, "you saved Uganda, and I want to ask you to do something for our Mission." As a result of the Bishop's words, some heart was stirred to make an earnest response, for towards the close of the meeting an offer was sent up to the platform of £100 for Bishop Hill's work if nine others would give the same, but nothing further was heard of the proposal.

Mrs. Isabella Bishop, the well-known traveller, who had come straight from a sick bed to the hall, spoke with peculiar power, in spite of much physical weakness. She told of the awful need of the unchristianised world as she herself had seen it in her travels. Her word to the meeting was twofold, "Let go and help go." Very solemn was her appeal to Christian men and women to readjust their expenditure in the light of their increased knowledge, and as they looked upon their jewels and silver might they hear the Lord's voice, "Lovest thou Me more than these?"

Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, deepened the impression by urging that there must be holiness at home if there is to be holiness in the foreign field. Rev. W. A. C. Fremantle followed, and Bishop Hill offered some closing words. He begged them to seek inspiration from Jesus for their year's work; fellowship with Jesus in his sorrow for perishing souls; and sacrifice for Jesus. The fields were white unto harvest. In those fields they would find the altar; might God help them to be a sacrifice.

A SCHOOLMASTERS' CONFERENCE ON SCHOOL-BOY MORALITY was recently held at Finsbury Park, with the master of a large school in the chair. The head master of a public school gave an address. He has had this question specially brought under his notice, and has felt it his duty to issue a notice to the parents of each of his boys. His observation shows that injurious habits often begin at the age of eight without the evil consequences being known; that even good, religious boys are often slaves to it; that a boy should be instructed and warned by his parents or teachers. A conversation took place among the schoolmasters, some doubting the extent of the vice, some, on the other hand, saying it is 90 per cent. The Finsbury Park White Cross Society, which called the meeting, is about to issue a circular, with suggestions, to the whole of the schoolmasters in the north of London. T. F.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 12.—PSALM XCIV.

In lawless days we may rejoice that God is judge, and that He will inflict righteous punishment. His vengeance is the awarding of evil men their desert, and the relieving of the poor and needy. Throughout this psalm, there is a challenge to God to assert Himself. There are periods in which he seems to let evil men pursue their designs unchecked. Ear, eye, and heart are his gift to man, and in none of these can He be deficient. He knows the thoughts of those that hate us, and, if He choose, can intercept their murderous designs. He will be our help; He will hold us up; He will delight our souls with his comforts; He will be our high tower, and the rock of our refuge.

The persecution and hate of man are often the means of our chastisement and ennoblement. Hard as it is to bear the reproach of men, it is blessed indeed to look beyond it to Him who permits it, and to believe that when the pit is digged for the wicked, the righteous will be secured from the days of adversity. In the multitude of your thoughts and questionings, let considerations like these be the comfort and delight of your soul.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 13.—PSALM XCV.

No true minstrel is solitary. His songs awaken joy-notes in others. Let us sing; let us make a joyful noise. "O God, in thy presence is thanksgiving. Before Thee, thy saints sing Psalms. Give us more abiding consciousness of thy presence, that like Elijah we may ever stand before Thee."

How great is God! He is a great King. His greatness is gauged by the creation that has emanated from his thought. The valleys, and abysses of the earth, are but as the furrowed lines of his mighty hand; the mountains owe their strength to Him; the sea is his child; the dry land was shaped by his touch; He is the maker of men. In his presence there is but one becoming posture—to worship—to bow down—to kneel.

But God is not only great as Creator. He is tender as a Shepherd. He leads his people forth to pasture, and by his hand protects and guides them. The greatness of God, and the goodness of God are commensurate. Nay, there are greater marvels when Jesus dies as the Good Shepherd for his sheep, than in the line of the Himalaya, the crash of the iceberg, or the swell of the Atlantic. Alas! that He should have to complain of the hardened heart that keeps us out of rest—his rest. The rest of the seventh day of creation awaits us through faith. (Heb. iv.). Let us abide there, and may we never know the strife of Meribah, or the day of Marah, or the grieving of the wilderness.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 14.—PSALM XCVI.

It does us good to read these psalms. They strangely stir us. They break on our lethargy like the trumpet at dawn on the sleeping soldier. These psalmists had hearts burning with the sense of God's love. It is not remarkable how all the earth is now being summoned by the heralds of the Cross to join in the new song of redemption, as if in response to the challenge, "Sing unto the Lord, all the earth!"

New songs become new hearts. Have we been redeemed, then let us sing, bless God, and show forth daily what we are discovering Him to be. And that you may have best bread for the table, new incense for the altar, ponder deeply the meaning of his salvation. God's glory and his marvellous redeeming works shall yet be told among all the nations and peoples of the earth. This is the animating purpose of the missionary enterprise of the Church.

What a picture! God on the throne of the Heavens. Before Him as his Court are Honour and Majesty, Beauty and Strength. The populations of earth throng into his presence-chamber offering their glory and strength. His priests are before Him in holy array. Then the tidings go forth that He is King. Society settles itself calmly on the foundation of his equity. Hark! The welcoming chorus rolls in thunder from the glad heavens, the rejoicing earth. It is composed of the boom of the sea-billow, the bleat of the field, the rustle of the leaf. All creation is orchestra, and every voice is vocal with admiration. Rejoice greatly! the King cometh.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 15.—PSALM XCVII.

The reign of God over the heart of man is a glad thing. All the multitude of isles are one in the gladness of their song, when God reigns over the earth; of all the thoughts of the heart, rising along the sea of existence, each with its own note swells the song of welcome when the King comes to his own.

Of course, clouds and darkness enrobe Him with mystery, not otherwise could He be God. Mystery is one of the characteristics of Deity, but beneath all that is obscure in providence and our individual daily life, we must never forget that righteousness and judgment underpin all God's dealings.

He is like a consuming fire, but none need dread it save his foes. The forked lightning plays around Him, but they who dwell within his secret place are unscathed. The hills that hem us in with difficulty, melt before his presence. Heaven and earth are one great gallery, hung with the pictures, decorated with the frescoes, of his righteousness and glory.

The love of God carries with it, on its reverse side, the hatred of sin. The soul that He preserves is imbued with an instinctive sensitiveness of the approach of evil, and flees to Him for hiding. Light and gladness are sown: as the fire and light of our hearths were sown in the long ages of coal formation. Now are the autumn days, when in dark and rainy hours we are sowing seeds that are to bear fruit in joy and singing. Be glad and rejoice in anticipation of those days, and in entire trust in God's care.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 16.—PSALM XCVIII.

Again the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of his servant, calls for a new song. God is always performing fresh marvels. Each new heart is a fresh miracle. Therefore, as each scene of the Divine panorama unfolds, there must be the welcome of saintly rejoicing. Think how that right hand and holy arm won salvation as they were nailed to the tree! 2. Let us bless God for the disclosures of his grace. He hath unveiled his face in Jesus. We have known the Father. 3. He hath remembered! There is only one thing He forgets—our sins. But even though we believe not, He abides faithful to his covenant. In prophetic vision the Psalmist sees the end of the present age, and cries, as though it were fulfilled. All the ends of the earth have seen God's salvation. The time is at hand when that shall be literally true. 4-6. What glad conceptions these ancient singers had of God. Their joy was unspeakable, and full of glory. The shout of hallelujah was familiar to their lips, because their hearts were right with God. There is no such rapture as that which visits us when we are consciously in the presence of our King, Jehovah. 7-9. Too long has nature sighed like an imprisoned captive, and travailed, but she shall be set free, when the sons of God are publicly acknowledged, and their bodies raised, at the coming of Christ.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 17.—PSALM XCIX.

This psalm celebrates God's holiness. This ascription ends every stanza (3, 5, 9). How marvellous this constant reference to the whole world of men! (1-3) Exclusive as the Jew was, he seemed to have had prevision of the time when the whole earth would be moved by the religion that emanated from the narrow limits of Mount Zion. The little seed was presently to burst and give life to the world. The cherubim, between whom Jehovah sat enthroned, were a throne from which all mankind was to be judged. He was great in Zion, but He would also be high above all the peoples. Ah! cross of Calvary, thou mercy-seat shadowed by the cherubim, thou hast given the Lamb his pre-eminence. He was lifted up in dying agony, and to the glory of the Father; therefore He draws all men to Himself. He was slain; therefore the Lamb is in the midst of the throne.

4, 5. Let us exalt Christ by our lives and lips. He must be magnified in our body, whether by life or death. Though He is now at the right hand of God, it becomes each devout soul to promote his supremacy, not only in the inner realm of the heart, but in others.

6-9. It is wonderful to find Moses among the priests. Samuel was always notorious for his prayers. God always answers, but He speaks sometimes from the pillar of cloud. He always forgives, but He sometimes allows us to reap as we have sown. Once again we are reminded to seek in all things to glorify God, and to worship in Mount Zion, the city of the living God, clad in our beautiful garments of holy and blameless lives.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18.—PSALM C.

As the dawn goes round the world, especially on the morning of the Lord's day, it is like God's angel awaking all lands to make a joyful noise. Thus, Memnon's statue, struck by the sunbeams, uttered music. All the earth is included in God's love, in the redemption of the cross, and in the blessings of salvation. All parts of it are equally near Heaven, and the heaven of heavens which is God's heart.

2. God's is glad service. His presence is the home of song. Live there by the grace of the Holy Spirit, so will He wipe away all tears, and put a new song into our lips.

3. We are his because He made us, because we are included in the donation of the Father to the Son, and because we have been bought with his most precious blood. Oh let us live as his, yielding ourselves to Him. He will tend, and keep, and pasture us.

4. The gates of God stand always open. At any moment we may enter them. Day and night we may pass within the sacred portal, and find ourselves in the presence of Christ.

5. Yes, God is always good; even when we cannot understand his dealings, we must never doubt that He is love. And though we believe not, He remaineth faithful. The faithful God! Not one jot or tittle of his promise can fail.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

NOVEMBER 19.

Imitation of Christ—Eph. iv., 20-32.

Golden Text, Ver. 32.

This epistle was written in A.D. 62, during the latter part of Paul's imprisonment in his own hired house at Rome (Acts xxviii.). The work of Paul in Ephesus is described in Acts xviii. and xix. One of the messages of the risen Lord was to this Church (Rev. ii. 1-7). Ephesus, once a famous city, an important emporium for Asiatic trade, and the capital of Ionia, is now only a small Turkish village.

This epistle is thought by some not to have been written to the Ephesians alone, but to have been a kind of circular letter intended for several churches. Its contents mark it as one of the sublimest the Apostle ever wrote. He soars into the heavenlies, and reveals something of the blessing now possessed by those who are "in Christ."

The Christian in contrast with others (20-21). Who the "others" are, and what the life they live, can be seen in verses 17-19. To live amongst such people, and to have, of necessity, an amount of intercourse with them was perilous. Especially so since many of the Christians had once lived in the same manner. Do you not find it easy to fall into habits that are popular? If the many do not condemn them, why should you be so particular? Note that it was the teaching the Christians had received that was to make the difference in their life. The proof that they had been taught the truth was to be found in their conduct. From a debasing creed, such as that of the heathen, nothing but a corrupt life was to be expected. As bad food makes the body unhealthy and unfits a man for physical exertion, so does false teaching injure the mind, and express itself in the life. Do not be misled by those who say that it does not matter what you believe if you live right. You cannot be right in your conduct and wrong in your convictions. Jesus is the Truth that He may be the Life (Jno. xiv. 6).

The Christian in contrast with what he was (22-24). Our "former conversation," or manner of living, had its source in "the old man," our unconverted state with its tendencies and habits, see Rom. viii. 7. This "waxeth corrupt" (Rev. Ver.), growing naturally worse and worse. And its power lies in "the lusts of deceit"—desires and passions that imperiously demand gratification, but deceive and disappoint us at last. This is to be "put off"—not to be improved. God does not improve what is bad. He sets it aside altogether, and substitutes something altogether new in its place. You know the difference between mending an old ragged garment, and putting it off to be clothed with a new one.

The life contrasted with this begins with an inward renewal (23), corresponding to the new birth (Jno. iii. 5). This leads to the putting on of the new man, as the tree clothes itself anew from the new life within. To recognise this new life, and to yield to its influence, is the way to put on the new man.

The Christian in practical life (25-32). The evils he will avoid are: (1) Lying (25). A Christian's word will be as good as his oath. To speak of an untruthful Christian is like speaking of a dark light, or a cold fire. Every form of lying, whether by word or actions, is opposed to the Christian life. Ananias and Sapphira's doom shows how God hates it.

(2) Anger (26-27). There is an anger that is not sinful. Our Lord felt it (Mark iii. 5), so will every true Christian be indignant against everything base, and treacherous, and cruel. But unrestrained passion or anger against individuals nourished and strengthened is allied to murder (see Matt. v. 22). (3) Dishonesty (28). It had evidently been the custom of some to steal. There are modern forms of dishonesty, often overlooked, but none the less hateful to God. Every attempt to gain by taking advantage of another's ignorance—to represent an article to be what it is not—to make use of a master's time for our own purposes, to gamble—these are all acts of dishonesty. (4) Improper Speech (29, 31). Young men are exposed to severe temptation in this direction. Purity of speech is sneered at by some. It needs Christian manliness to refuse either to repeat or to countenance a lewd remark. When some young men in an office were sneering at the office boy because he was so small, the boy replied, "I am big enough to do what no other fellow in this office can do." "What's that?" said one. "Why, I can keep from swearing."

The most powerful motive for avoiding all these is "Grieve not," etc. (30). The Spirit who dwells within us is a living, loving person, deeply sensitive to all we do and say, capable both of anger and of grief. The tears of a mother can restrain a child from doing wrong more than a threatened punishment. Let everything that grieves Him grieve you. The opposite of all these evils is to be cultivated instead (32). How much Scripture says of this forgiving spirit (Matt. vi. 14, 15; xviii. 21—35).

For the Young.

FIVE KINGS.*

By Rev. George Milligan, D.D.,
Minister of St. Matthew's Church, Edinburgh.

Then said Joshua, Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out those five kings unto me out of the cave.—Joshua x. 22.

I daresay that some of you remember the story of those five kings. They had come out to war against Joshua and the children of Israel, and had been totally defeated. And as they fled together they had found a cave in the hillside where they thought they would be safe, and they had gone in and hid in the cave. But some of Joshua's soldiers had seen them going in. And they came to him and told him where the five kings were. But he said, "We have not time to attend to them just now. Go on and pursue after your enemies before they have escaped into their cities. And in the meantime roll great stones before the mouth of the cave, and set men to watch, so that the kings cannot escape." And the soldiers did what their leader told them. And then, when the pursuit of the enemy was over, Joshua bade them bring out the kings from the cave in which they had been safely imprisoned all this time, and put their feet on their necks to show them how helpless they were. And then he killed them and hanged them upon five trees.

Does that seem to you very cruel? But you must remember that long ago men had not been taught, as you have been, to be kind and merciful and forgiving, and to overcome evil with good. And you must remember, too, that these kings were the enemies of God's people, and that if Joshua had let them off they would have come again and again to fight against him, until they had succeeded in driving him and the people out of the promised land. So you see that there was no help for Joshua but just to kill the five kings outright.

And, children, you must do the same with the five kings that are fighting against you. Five kings fighting against us! I hear some one say—what does he mean? Well, I am just going to tell you. You all know something of a struggle that is continually going on in your own hearts between good and evil. You have all heard of the battle against sin. Well, the five kings are for us five sins, which day by day are warring against us. And, let us be quite sure of this: if we do not conquer them they will conquer us. What, then, are they? What are the five kings against whom we must fight, until, like Joshua, we have killed them?

1. Here is the first—King Anger.

Ah! you see now what I am driving at, don't you? What boy or girl is there who has not felt this king rising in his heart, and leading him on to unkind words and bad deeds? You remember the story of the first two brothers that ever lived in our world. How proud their mother must have been of them! How she must have wondered, just as your mother wonders, what kind of men they would be when they grew up! And, oh! they might have been so happy, if this evil king had not conquered poor Cain. If only, when the first angry thought rose, he had determined not to listen to it for a single minute. But no, he let it in, and like all bad thoughts, it grew and grew until it became too strong for him, and in a moment of passion he killed Abel. If you had told him a little before that he would do so, he wouldn't have believed you. He would have declared it was impossible. He didn't know until the terrible moment came how completely he was King Anger's servant. Be wise, then, children, in time. Kill the very first angry thought, and then it won't have time to grow into a great king to trouble you, and all near you.

2. "But," says some child, "I am not given to being angry. I have a very good temper. I'm not afraid of that king." Don't be too sure. He may turn up some time when you are not ready for him. And, in any case, I fear, from the way you speak, that there is another king you will have to keep a very sharp look-out against—King Pride.

Do you know what he is? Some one gave a very good description of pride when he said that pride was a great big I and a very little You. That is, the proud child is the child who is always thinking, "How great, how good, how strong I am! How much better in every way than you!" Some of you, I am sure, have read "Alice in Wonderland," and you remember what happened to Alice when she ate the piece of cake marked "Eat me." She found herself growing taller, and taller, and taller, until at length everything looked quite small beneath her. Now King Pride does for us all what the wonderful cake did for Alice. He puffs us up; he makes us very high and very great in our own sight. And the only way to deal with him is like Joshua's soldiers, to take this king and put our foot upon his neck, and crush him to the ground.

3. But we must pass on to our third king; and dangerous as were the first two, he is more dangerous still, for his name is King Falsehood.

I wish I could think that everyone who reads this had never met him—never given in to him at all. Have you ever told a lie—ever said what was not quite true to get your own way, or to save yourself from punishment? If you have, then you are letting King Falsehood reign over you, and a cruel, hard master you will soon find him to be. For one of the terrible things about this king is that if you once get into his clutches he goes on tightening and tightening his hold. The first lie—perhaps such a tiny one that it hardly seems a lie at all—is followed by a second, and the second by a third, and so on, until there is a whole chain of lies holding you fast. Who would wish to be in slavery like that? See to it, then, that you resist at the very beginning. Determine at all costs to say nothing but what is strictly true.

Once a great and good man was thrown into prison because he had written a paper which displeased King Charles I. He was tried and condemned to death for what he had written; but the King sent messengers to him in prison to say that if he would only deny having written the paper and signed it, he would be set free. And how do you think he answered? "I did sign that paper. I could save my life by telling a lie, but I would rather a thousand times tell the truth, even though my life must be the cost." That was noble. Be like that hero, Algernon Sidney. Do not give in to King Falsehood, but stand firm on the side of Truth.

4. Our fourth king need not detain us long—King Disobedience.

He needs no explanation, but perhaps you will remember best about him if I tell you how he was once conquered by a brave English boy. Henry Havelock was his name, and at twelve o'clock one day his father left him on London Bridge, and told him to wait till he came back. One hour, two hours, three hours passed, and still the father did not come; but King Disobedience did. "Why wait any longer?" he whispered to Henry. "Your father has forgotten you, and will not expect you to remain. It is quite excusable to disobey him now after all these hours. You had better run home." But the boy would not consent. He had been told to wait till his father came, and like a soldier's son, he drove the enemy back at every point. At seven o'clock that evening his wife asked General Havelock, "Where is Henry? I have not seen him all the afternoon." The General started up. "Oh," he said, "he's on London Bridge! I left him there at twelve o'clock, and told him to wait for me. In the hurry of business I quite forgot about him. But he's there still, I'm sure." And there indeed he was when his father went to fetch him. Seven long weary hours he had waited, and fought King Disobedience. And hard though the battle had been, he had won. You, children, will not have often so hard a battle to fight, I hope. But can you say that, in the little temptations to disobedience which are constantly meeting you, you have always been as faithful? What does St. Paul say: "Children, obey your parents in all things."

5. And now there remains only one king; but he is so big and so strong that I shall ask the printer to print his name in extra large letters—KING SELF.

Have you ever heard two voices inside you, one saying, "Please yourself, take your own way; why should you think about other people?" and the other saying, "No, be generous, be kind; give up what pleases yourself, and help others"? I think you have, and I think you know which is the voice of King Self, and what a poor sort of a king he is to follow. He can make no one happy. Somehow, the boy who is always trying to please himself is the boy who is never pleased at all. And, then, how uncomfortable he makes all around him! No, children, have nothing whatever to do with King Self. Do not let him lurk even in a corner of your hearts, but strive to drive him out altogether. It won't be an easy task, and the battle won't be won the first day. But if you go on bravely, trusting in God's might, the victory is certain, for then it will no longer be you who are fighting, but God who is fighting in you.

* From Golden Nails, and other Addresses to Children. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Nechells, Birmingham, Nov. 11-19; Bristol, 25 to Dec. 8; Rev. M. J. Hall, St. Philip's, Manchester, Nov. 18-27; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tunstead Schools, Nov. 12-19; (with Mr. Goodman) Spurgeon's Tabernacle, Croydon, 26 to Dec. 4; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Gresham Chapel, Brixton, Nov. 12-17; Drybrook, Nov. 19-24; Mr. T. Lewes Sayer, Chester, Nov. 9; Birmingham, 10; Walsall, 11; Stafford, 12; Grays, 14; Mr. George Goodman, Baptist Church, Putney, to Nov. 10; Powis Hall, Bayswater, Nov. 12-19; Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Baptist Chapel, Brockley, Nov. 19-24; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Cambridge, to Nov. 18; Brussels, Nov. 19-30; Mr. J. M. Wigner, Tewkesbury, Nov. 8-13.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Nov. 12, S., 1 Kings xii. 1-15; 13, xii. 16-30; 14, xiii. 1-10; 15, xiii. 11-22; 16, xiii. 23-34; 17, xvi. 23-34; 18, xvii. 1-16.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS.

Among the many excellent institutions of London for the care of young people, a high place must be assigned to the Homes for Working Girls. The first Home was opened in 1878, and the gradual development of the work has been fully recorded from time to time. Although only nine Homes appear on the list, they really represent fifteen houses, as six of them are double houses. The expansion of this interesting work has supplied a real need to no fewer than 17,094 working girls and young women, of both town and country birth, who were homeless, and in very numerous cases friendless also.

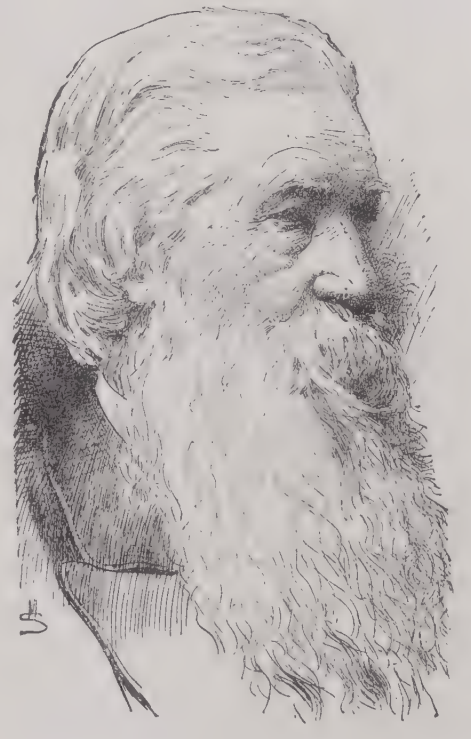
The report says:—"It has always been a leading feature in the work that the home-life should be not simply enjoyed by, but also instilled into the natures of, the young people who from time to time dwell in the Homes. The principle of self-help, which has likewise always been placed before them, must necessarily have educated many to respect their own capacities, and to care for themselves. Character, too, has been more esteemed among them, and has become to many a motive power that has elevated them in their positions of daily-life contest. Again, vast improvements have been noticeable in their dispositions. They have learned to love others; they have unconsciously accepted the mutual responsibilities in connection with their own sex; and generally their social life has benefited in all its phases. It is, therefore, impossible to gauge the importance and outcome of the work as an agency for the social improvement of many of the working girls of the nation.

"It is gratifying to be able to report that during the past year 2022 girls and young women have dwelt in these Homes for longer or shorter periods. Each year do the Homes appear to be of increased service to the class of wage-earners for whom they are established, and it is a delightful compensation for all the labour undertaken to learn how grateful the occupants are for the opportunities of protection and shelter afforded them during the most critical periods of their lives. It is a further pleasure to be able to state that during 1892 the sum of £3042 6s. has been received as rent for bedroom accommodation and the comforts of home-life, and a further sum of £3380 13s. 4d. for food, thus making a total of £6422 19s. 4d. towards the expense of supporting the nine homes. In mentioning these figures it must, however, be always borne in mind that the Homes cannot be made self-supporting if poorly paid wage-earning girls are admitted, and it is only for such that they are established; hence the need for the kind consideration of those concerned in their progress.

The hon. director of the Homes is Mr. John Shrimpton, Westminster Chambers, 3, Victoria-street, S.W. From him copies of the full and very readable report may be obtained; and a list of the Homes will be sent to any young person coming to the Metropolis, or to those interested in the welfare of young women.

A Missionary Patriarch.

AN INTERVIEW WITH DR. JOHN G. PATON.



The name of John G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, is a household word the wide world over. This is mainly due to the public favour which has been accorded to his Autobiography,* one of the most fascinating and heart-moving products of the teeming press of the present generation. That incomparable missionary story brings the reader down to Dr. Paton's departure, in October, 1885, for the far south, after some twenty months' stay in this part of the globe. Eight eventful years have passed since then, and the venerable missionary is once more with us. His coming has been anticipated with remarkable enthusiasm; a welcome sign that Christ's devoted servants are more deeply enshrined in the heart of the Christian world than the greatest of earth's monarchs, or statesmen, or warriors.

Our famous visitor will have addressed his first London meeting in Exeter Hall (Wednesday, Nov. 8) before these lines are read. Anxious, however, that our readers should have early information of Dr. Paton's recent labours and of his present plans, he was interviewed last Saturday on behalf of The Christian. Time has dealt gently with our friend since we parted with him, notwithstanding the incessant strain of work of many kinds these eight years past. His milk-white hair and flowing beard have not sensibly thinned, and the same earnest, eager tone of speech shows that his natural force is almost unabated, though he is nearing his three-score years and ten. An inquiry as to his health elicits the fact that he was somewhat troubled with fever in America in the spring when the frosts broke up, but on the whole he has been blessed with a fair share of bodily vigour.

Discarding the conventional question and answer of the modern interview, we summarise the intensely interesting statements made by Dr. Paton in response to the queries addressed to him. After returning to Melbourne in October, 1885, laden with the spoils of his northern campaign, he soon got permission to go back for a time to the scenes of his life work. It may as well be stated here that Dr. Paton still holds the post of missionary in full charge of the island of Aniwa, and carries the responsibility attaching to that office. During his long absences, the Chief of the island, Ruwawa, who is an elder in the native church, officiates in his room. At intervals a missionary from some other island in the group visits Aniwa, and discharges such duties as require, under the Presbyterian system, to be performed by a duly ordained worker. On revisiting the New Hebrides the doctor made the round of the islands, encouraging the lonely workers and gathering the last facts relating to the work; the rest of the time was spent on Aniwa. The visit extended over six months. At the end of that time he had to return to Australia. The Presbyterian Church of Victoria, under whose auspices these missions are sustained, appear to think that the work cannot be sustained unless Dr. Paton is withdrawn from the field from time to time, so as to keep the missionary zeal alive by visitation throughout the colony.

Having been elected Moderator of the Victorian Church, and having filled the duties of that high office, the missionary went among the churches, pleading the claims of the New Hebrides work, and raising funds for its support. He was formally appointed by his own church Foreign Mission Agent while in the colonies. Moreover, the Federal Assembly of the Presbyterian Churches of Australia (embracing New South Wales, South Australia, Victoria, Queensland, and Tasmania), also requested him to visit all the churches throughout these provinces as their accredited agent. He has fulfilled this commission, with the exception that his visit to Queensland was restricted to organising mission work among the Kanakas. One can but marvel at, and thank God for, the quenchless zeal that enabled the aged worker to undertake such tasks and carry them through. Three years ago another trip was made to the islands, each station being visited as before, and the balance of the eight months being given to a consolidation of the work in Aniwa. From that time until a year ago, Dr. Paton travelled through Australia, keeping alight the fires of missionary interest in the churches, and gathering the needed funds.

Twelve months since the veteran missionary apostle received another call which he was fain to obey, though he does not scruple to say that his heart is always in the field itself, and it is by no means from personal choice or inclination that he has made the world his parish. He was then commissioned to proceed to the United States to persuade the American Government, if possible, to give its adhesion to an international prohibition of trading with the New Hebrides natives in firearms, opium, and intoxicating liquors. When Dr. Paton reached America President Harrison was in office. He and his chief secretary were interviewed by the missionary, and were friendly enough. Soon after, they quitted office, and the process of persuasion had to be begun over again. Dr. Paton had a long conversation and repeated interviews with President Cleveland; while no direct pledges were secured, the whole tenour of the interviews led the missionary to conclude that the President was animated by the highest Christian ideas, and was so deeply interested that he would lend all his influence in the direction of prohibition.

REV. DR. J. G. PATON.

Britain, France, and Germany had in the first instance agreed to prohibit in the South Seas these curses of humanity, and our own Government had given practical effect to the treaty. When America hesitated, France and Germany drew back, not wishing to throw the trade into the hands of the United States. The negotiations, we understand, are still proceeding, and we must pray and hope that they will yet be carried to a true and successful result, in the best interests of the South Sea islanders. At all events, Dr. Paton has done what he could to enlighten and convince the American Government and the American people generally on this vital question.

His embassy to the United States, however, embraced the more direct missionary advocacy that brought him to our shores eight years ago. He was delegated by the Federal Assembly to the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Toronto in September of last year, and the Foreign Missions Committee of his own church authorised him to secure two (now three) new workers for the New Hebrides Mission. In pursuance of all these objects, Dr. Paton addressed meetings in many of the more northern cities in the States, and subsequently in different parts of the Canadian Dominion, including Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island. Space would fail us to take note of these earnest endeavours in any detail. Nova Scotia, it may be said, has a special interest in the New Hebrides. Four missionaries from that land had sealed their testimony with their lives in the group, and some of its sons are now working on the islands. In his visits through Nova Scotia Dr. Paton was able not only to quicken practical interest in his own special work, but to help the home churches there in a time of special need.

And now in the good providence of God our venerated and honoured friend has reached the land of his nativity, where he has already received some striking welcomes, and where, we doubt not, he will outdo the experiences of a former time. His immediate and primary commission in visiting Great Britain again is to secure the additional helpers for the mission and to raise funds towards maintaining the new mission vessel which is to be built. The money for this steamship (£6000) was collected during his last sojourn in this country, and the amount is meantime safely invested. It has been found that £1000 will annually be required for the working of the ship, and till the Australian churches have some substantial help guaranteed for this purpose they have deferred purchasing a vessel. The Christians of the Southern colony have already many heavy responsibilities connected with the New Hebrides Mission, and they naturally look to friends in the old country for co-operation. We feel sure this will not be denied. While he is with us, Dr. Paton will also take every suitable opportunity of educating and enlightening public opinion on the position of the Kanaka traffic and its abuses, which he declares to be very grave indeed. As to his future course, if God spares him to return to Australia, nothing certain can be said. The Victorian Church has promised to let him go back to Aniwa for a time, but their view is that he is serving the work more effectively in his capacity of visiting agent through the churches. Dr. Paton's own strong desire is to take up direct work on the islands, and spend there the remainder of his days. If workers cannot be had to open up new islands to the Gospel, he would fain set his face towards Tanna, from which he was driven a quarter of a century ago. The western part of that island is still unevangelised, and though at the age of seventy the Doctor is prepared to learn the language of those people, and settle down among them. He has one son in the field, and it is expected that others of his family will follow in their father's footsteps. The spirit of his youth seems still to rest on the old man, though he has never had a week's holiday or rest since he entered on this thrice blessed work of seeking the conversion of the heathen. We cannot doubt that his addresses up and down the United Kingdom will prove an inspiration to multitudes; they have already had that effect at Liverpool, Sunderland, Manchester, and Bristol, where he has spoken to great gatherings since his arrival from America. We are gratified to learn that in Manchester a general committee, representing all the churches, was formed in view of the doctor's visit; and that this committee will be maintained; the Manchester friends also contributed over £520 towards the work which Dr. Paton is advocating.

The veteran missionary was entertained on Wednesday morning at breakfast in Cannon-street Hotel, by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, publishers of his Autobiography; many of the friends of missions being invited to meet him.

* Hodder and Stoughton. Popular Edition, 6s. Also a Penny Edition, just published.

NINE ELMS MISSION.—This mission celebrated its anniversary last week in the institute, Millpond Bridge, Nine Elms, Battersea. For many years the Mission was carried on under the direction of Mr. J. Farmer, but lately the Wesleyans at Queen's-road have taken it over, while retaining the services of its founder. The report proved the need for the Mission. Three parts of the scholars are in the streets all day. The teachers are such as any school might be proud of, most of them coming at least two miles to teach and visit in all weathers, besides two or three evenings in the week. Rev. G. Sanderson addressed the meeting on Monday, in an earnest and sympathetic speech. He was preceded in a similar strain by Mr. T. Alex. Ibbetson and others.

MRS. RUNDLE-CHARLES,

AUTHOR OF "THE SCHÖNBERG-COTTA FAMILY."

WHEN "The Schönberg-Cotta Family" appeared, now many years ago, it sprang at a bound to a commanding place in its department of Christian literature, reminding one somewhat of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It has been followed by a series of books of similar character, which, if they have not surpassed the fame of the first, have varied and deepened its lessons, and shown the same brilliant qualities of thought and expression, and the same earnest desire for the development and advancement of the Christian life. It is less generally known that all along Mrs. Rundle-Charles has been a busy and devoted Christian worker, and has not only done a large measure of personal service, but in her circle of friends has given to many much stimulus and encouragement in the work of faith and labour of love.

Her childhood was spent under peculiarly interesting and happy influences, well fitted to develop her character on every side. She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. John Rundle, of Tavistock. Mr. Rundle was in many ways a remarkable man, a member of a firm, chiefly of relatives, who as bankers and owners of mills, farms, quays, and quarries, had a great influence in the place; he was much beloved and respected in the town, and was elected M.P. for Tavistock in the first Reformed Parliament. Wise in counsel, wide in his sympathies, full of the truest public spirit, with a clear and cultivated intellect, most retentive memory, keen wit, and sunny humour, he had much influence in the town and neighbourhood, whilst his personal qualities cheered and brightened his home. An unmarried sister of Mr. Rundle's, who was much with the family, closely resembled her brother in character, both being free from all pretension, self-seeking, or self-assertion; full of benevolence and active kindness; very sensitive, yet of the gayest and sweetest of tempers; ready to be pleased and amused by the ways of young people, and, from their abounding stores of fun and kindliness, almost incapable of being bored. Of Mr. Rundle it was said beautifully, that "he made many a hard heart tender, many a sad heart hopeful, and many a wearied heart fresh." Mrs. Rundle's influence also was strong for good. She took a wide interest in the questions of the day, religious, political, and literary, to the end of her long life; her deep and helpful sympathy made her dear to young and old, and she had a remarkable gift of ruling and organising. The circle of family and friends was large and bright. The scenes and people of Mrs. Charles's early life live again in her books, though never as mere portraits, and if any should desire a fuller account of her first home it may be seen in the childhood of Bride Danescombe, in the story "Against the Stream." Mrs. Charles has always had a lively sense of the happy conditions of her early life. She rejoiced much in the cordial relation between her father and those he employed; the problems of capital and labour being gently solved in his case by the capitalist sharing the profits among the labourers, in just and ample wages, with pleasant cottages and gardens, and by the constant intercourse of employers and employed.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker-street, W.)

The atmosphere of love and piety in which she was reared impressed her sympathetically, and she was touched by religious influences from many sides. Distress at "not being good" was an early form of serious thought; but in her seventeenth year, the forgiving love of the Father and the redeeming sacrifice of Christ were brought home to her heart with intense joy, with a great longing to make others partakers of the news which had been such "glad tidings" to her. It is under the influence of this experience that all her work has been done.

Her marriage to Mr. Andrew Paton Charles, who was in business in London, was a perfect union of heart and life in the love and service of Christ. His death in 1868, at the comparatively early age of forty-eight, darkened her earthly life, and put an end to sundry mutually cherished plans for improving the condition of his workmen, and brightening their relation to their employer. The only surviving brother of Mr. Charles is Sir Arthur Charles, one of Her Majesty's judges.

The earliest of Mrs. Charles's books was entitled "Sketches of Christian Life in Different Lands and Ages." This book having attracted the attention of the late Mr. Andrew Cameron (afterwards the Rev. Dr. Cameron, of Melbourne), editor of The Family Treasury, he entered into correspondence with Mrs. Charles, and requested her to contribute a story of the times of Luther to his magazine, which she did under the title of "Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." It should be said that Mrs. Charles had always delighted in imaginative writing, no doubt stimulated by personal contact with many persons of intellectual literary power. She had from the first a wide interest in history, especially on its biographical side. In her skilful hands "The Schönberg-Cotta Family" became a vehicle of Gospel teaching, made especially attractive by the vivid presentation of Luther. Of the other members of this series of books we cannot speak in detail. There were two books of history and travels, "The Voice of Christian Life in Song," and "Wanderings over Bible Lands and Seas." Books well known in England and America, and translated into every European language, are "The Diary of Mrs. Kitty Trevylyan," "Sketches of Christian Life in England," "The Draytons and the Davenants," a story of the Civil Wars; "On both Sides of the Sea," a story of the Commonwealth and the Restoration; "The Victory of the Vanquished," a story of the first century; "Winifred Bertram, and the World she lived in"; "Joan the Maid" (of Orleans); "Conquering and to Conquer," a story of Rome in the days of St. Jerome; "Lapsed, not Lost," a story of Roman and Christian Carthage; "Against the Stream," the story of an heroic age in England. Pursuing her favourite aim, to show the development of the Christian life in all manner of scenes and situations, she has written more recently, "Three Martyrs of the Nineteenth Century," being sketches of the lives of General Gordon, David Livingstone, and John Coleridge Patteson, remarking very truly that, whereas the present age is usually regarded as one of unbelief, worldliness, and self-indulgence, we find in these three men as remarkable instances of faith, self-denial, and consecration as the annals of the Christian Church can exhibit in any age. She has also written a volume of poems called, in the fifth and last edition, "Songs, New and Old," and a book of parable stories, "The Ravens and the Angels." Her latest books are: "Martyrs and Saints of the Twelve First Centuries," the last (now in the press), "Early Christian Missions of Ireland, Scotland, and England"; and nine smaller volumes, short studies in great subjects, "The Great Prayer of Christendom," "By the Mystery of Thy Holy Incarnation," "By Thy Cross and Passion," "By Thy Glorious Resurrection and Ascension," "By the Coming of the Holy Ghost," "The Beatitudes," "The True Vine," "Within the Veil," and "The Book of the Unveiling," embracing the great facts of the Christian creed and the character and source of true Christianity.

To anyone not familiar with these writings it would be difficult to convey a correct idea of the many portraits they present of distinguished historical characters, ancient and modern; the manifold historical scenes which they sketch in the early centuries, the Reformation, and the days of the Commonwealth, onward to the birth of the nineteenth century; the fictitious characters by which they exemplify types of common and Christian character; the enthusiasm for nature and art which finds a delightful interest in all manner of scenes; the great lessons to be derived from the manifold experiences of human life from childhood to old age and even to the grave; and last, not least, the developments of the spiritual life, conviction of sin, conversion, faith, hope, and charity, prayer, the communion of saints, here and hereafter. In calm, clear, beautiful words, with an infinite pathos over the sorrows of life, but an ever-joyous sense of the victory of faith; with a constant recognition of the person and the work of Jesus Christ, and the transfiguration of our life which comes from Him—these volumes present us with a succession of life-like scenes, and of animating thoughts and glowing anticipations of what is yet to come.

To those who value the pure gold of story-books more than the interest of the story, we recommend a volume entitled "Selections from the Writings of the Author of 'The Schönberg-Cotta Family.' By a Friend."

One might suppose that so voluminous a writer as Mrs. Charles must have confined her energies to that department of service, and could not have found time or strength, perhaps not even inclination, for the more common forms of Christian work: This, however, would be a great mistake. Before she was married she began at Tavistock to visit among the poor; she had a large Bible-class for poor children, and one for the daughters of tradesmen, the results of which are a blessed recollection to many of those who attended them to this day. For twenty years she worked in the East End of London, where she had a large mothers' meeting in connection with Mrs. Ranyard's Bible Women's Mission. In day school and Sunday classes also she was busy. When residing at Westminster, in the period of her early widowhood, in addition to her East-End work she superintended a Biblewoman nurse, and visited among her patients. Since she went to reside at Hampstead in 1874, she has taken a most lively and active interest in the North London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest.

She often visits the patients, and she conducts a service on alternate Sunday evenings. She also takes a particular interest in one poor parish in a crowded part of London, contributing largely to the necessities of those in need, not only there, but in her neighbourhood and throughout her large connection. Of the endless practical kindnesses and self-sacrificing deeds of love which mark her daily life, it would hardly be becoming for us to speak.

Combe Edge, Hampstead Heath, is a charming residence, built by Mrs. Charles nearly twenty years ago as a home for her mother and herself. There the last years of Mrs. Rundle's long and honoured life were spent; and there, four years since (1889), with an unspeakable joy, which was a blessed strengthening to the faith of all who witnessed it, Mrs. Rundle entered into the presence of her Saviour.

Though a distinguished writer, Mrs. Charles has not been so much in the public eye as many of our Christian women. We believe that this brief sketch will lead many readers of The Christian to give fervent thanks to God on her behalf, and will deepen their interest in her writings. We are sure that it will draw many benedictions on her head for what she has done, for what she is, and what she continues to do; perhaps by God's blessing it will quicken some languid workers, and even induce others who are standing idle in the market-place to go into the vineyard and share its blessed labour. W. G. B.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

"He performeth the thing that is appointed for me."—Job xxiii. 14.
"Thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass."—Job xiv. 5.

"Disappointment—His appointment,"
Change one letter, then I see
That the thwarting of my purpose
Is God's better choice for me.
His appointment must be blessing
Tho' it may come in disguise,
For the end from the beginning
Open to his wisdom lies.

"Disappointment—His appointment,"
Whose? The Lord's, who loves me best,
Understands and knows me fully,
Who my faith and love would test;
For, like loving earthly parent,
He rejoices when He knows
That his child accepts, unquestioned,
All that from his wisdom flows.

"Disappointment—His appointment,"
"No good thing will He withhold,"
From denials oft we gather
Treasures of his love untold;
Well He knows, each broken purpose
Leads to fuller, deeper trust,
And the end of all his dealings
Proves our God is wise and just.

"Disappointment—His appointment,"
Lord, I take it then as such,
Like the clay in hands of potter,
Yielding wholly to thy touch.
All my life's plan is thy moulding,
Not one single choice be mine,
Let me answer, unrepining—
Father—"Not my will, but thine."

L. S. S.

MR. AITKEN AT CHARING CROSS.

Since Rev. J. F. Kitto went to St. Martin-in-the-Fields the work at this fine old church has greatly revived, and fresh efforts have been put forth to reach the multitudes who throng the vicinity of Charing Cross, Pall Mall, and Trafalgar Square. Hence the mission now being held in St. Martin's by Rev. W. Hay Aitken has proved to some extent an ingathering of fruit from seed previously sown. Four services have been held daily, an address to business men from one to two, an address on spiritual life from three to four, an address by Rev. James Stephens to children at 4.30, and a mission service in the evening.

The business men have by no means assembled in the large numbers which but recently filled St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, day by day. This may possibly be due to the fact that at Charing Cross midday services are rare, and have not yet won the appreciation which is so evidently shown at Bow Church and other City centres. Those who last week made an effort to spare an hour for Mr. Aitken's midday service must have felt well repaid, for his addresses were pointed and pungent talks on the everyday trials and temptations of workaday life.

The afternoon addresses on Spiritual Life formed, last week, a sequence on the School of Grace, as the mission preacher loves to call the passage Titus ii. 11-14. On Monday he dwelt on the Epiphany and Mission of Grace as a Teacher; on Tuesday, the Negative Teaching of Grace, the denial of ungodliness and worldly lust; on Wednesday, the Positive Teaching, the sober and righteous life; on Thursday, the Godly Life, and the Blessed Hope; and on Friday, the Redemption from Lawlessness and the Purifying of a Peculiar People, with their practical results. These services were well attended, and must have proved singularly helpful to many.

Mr. Stephens was very happy with the children and young people, who were attracted in goodly numbers. The evening mission services were very encouraging, and the after meetings showed that real work was in progress. On Sunday Mr. Aitken preached morning and evening, besides addressing in the afternoon a large body of men.

MISSIONS IN CEYLON.

The work of the Lord in Ceylon seems to be progressing happily. Compared with places further East, there seems to be a great deal going on, some of it excellent work. The Church Missionary, the Wesleyan, Baptist, and other societies, are "toiling on," and not without much to encourage them. The Salvation Army appear to be doing good with their Prison Gate and Rescue Work. They have some devoted officers in the general work, but the accounts as to the results of their self-denying efforts are not so favourable as we could wish.

The recent death of Mrs. Arthur Liesching (better known to some as Miss Fanny Gregson) has, from the human standpoint, been a great loss. She was universally and highly respected. Her work in Ceylon, mainly among young women, has been much blessed, and will be a lasting and glorious memorial of her.

A most excellent work is being carried on by Mr. E. B. Lover amongst the soldiers. He is full of good works, and is a great example to many people out here.

Mr. Davidson's arrival with a batch of new missionaries for a new mission, is looked forward to with considerable misgiving in some of the best quarters. We may trust, however, that they will not be verified. If they go to the heathen, in places where no work is being carried on, they will be welcomed on all sides, and there is plenty of room; but if they purpose working in places already occupied, they will cause trouble to themselves and others. Rumour says they have taken a house in Colombo as headquarters, and this causes apprehension; but on the other hand, it is stated that they have taken headquarters in a small country town some distance from Colombo. May the Lord guide them and give them wisdom.

H. W. F.

THE MANCHESTER PALACE OF VARIETIES must continue to do without its drink licence. The proprietors have again applied, but applied in vain.

MR. MEYER'S WORK.

I desire to lay before the many friends whose faces I have never seen, but whom I count among my larger congregation, a few particulars of some branches of Christian work in which I am deeply interested, and for the maintenance of which I am largely responsible.

In the first place, there is our Evening Home for Girls, into which we are seeking to gather the working young women of our neighbourhood, and who come to us, in many cases, with scanty clothing and with the roughest of manners. A very earnest Christian lady, well qualified for the post, is in residence at the Home, and is acting towards these girls a sisterly part. The cost of efficiently carrying on this useful agency cannot be less than £150 a year.

We have also started an Institute for Workingmen, to accommodate the large numbers who have lately given up the public-house and have become Christians. At our Sunday afternoon meetings in Christ Church we have an average attendance of some 700 men; and it had become absolutely imperative to provide for them a place to which they could resort in the evenings, and where we might perpetuate during the week those holy influences which are making such blessed changes in their hearts and homes. The cost of maintaining this Institute will be very considerable, though we hope, as far as possible, to lead the men to help by small weekly payments.

Last, but not least, we are this week opening in Kennington Park, in connection with the Missionary Bureau, a Training College for young men who desire to serve God in the mission field, and who need some preparatory training, as many of them come to us fresh from the life of an artisan. Rev. J. Wintle, who has been selected as tutor, will help me in some of my work at Christ Church, and will devote the remainder of his time to these young men. In addition to the theological and other training which he will supply, they will be taught the varied methods of church work and philanthropic enterprise under my own direction in the slums of South Lambeth.

I calculate that the cost of this College cannot be less than £500 annually. Though I am not personally responsible for that amount, yet, as Director of the College, and as deeply interested in the operations of the Bureau, I feel anxious that the young institution should not be hampered in its development by lack of the needed funds. It has never been my habit to make personal appeals for money. I try to build on "the pattern shown in the Mount," believing that He who gives the plan will find the material. At the same time, I feel it my duty to set the needs of God's work be known to his people; and especially to those who derive benefit from my printed words.

F. B. Meyer.

Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, London, S.E.

FRIEDENHEIM.

"Friedenheim," a Home of Peace for those in the last stages of illness, is now in full working order; the nursing staff is all but completed, and the rooms for paying patients are ready for occupants. For these there are three bright, prettily-furnished rooms, with two beds in each. A guinea a week is charged for each bed, and if a patient requires a room to him or herself, from a guinea and a-half to two guineas is charged, according to circumstances. These rooms are reserved for ladies and gentlemen in advanced illness, without friends to nurse them and in reduced circumstances.

The general wards have been open for some time, and have been greatly appreciated. The work has been much blessed, and though it is sad to watch the suffering and growing weakness of the patients, it is very comforting to be able to minister to their relief, and, above all, to see one after another brought into saving contact with a living Saviour. Many have passed away in the "sure and certain hope of a blessed immortality."

Miss Davidson (Friedenheim, Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W.) is at home for business every morning from ten to twelve o'clock, and on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 2.30 to 5, when she will be glad to show visitors over the Home.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

HAGAR AND SARAH—VASHTI AND ESTHER.

Hagar—Mount Sinai—Jerusalem which now is = the Jewish Covenant which gendereth to bondage, and is in bondage with her children.

Sarah—Mount Zion—Jerusalem which is above = the New Covenant; "she is our mother," of whom we are born into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Ishmael, born of Hagar the bondwoman, who can only bring forth unto bondage because she is in bondage, is the type of that seed of Abraham which is born after the flesh—the Jews.

Isaac, born of Sarah the freewoman, who brings forth to freedom because she is free, the type of that seed of Abraham which is born after the Spirit—the Church.

Thus Hagar and Ishmael—Gentiles—typify the Jew under the Law as a Covenant of Works. Sarah and Isaac, ancestors of the Jews, typify the Gentile Church under Grace as a Covenant of Promise.

In like manner, if, as we believe, the Book of Esther is a microcosm of the Kingdom of God, Vashti, the Gentile (Persian) Queen, typifies the Jewish wife put away by the Great King; and Esther the Jewish maiden—a stranger and an alien as regarded the Persian kingdom—typifies the Church of this dispensation.

In accordance with this, Vashti was dealt with "according to law" (i. 15), because she had not kept the commandment (but compare Est. ii. 1 with Jer. ii. 2). Esther stands in grace (ii. 17), though she, like the Galatians, was so "foolish" as to put herself under law (iv. 11, 16) until she experimentally learned grace (v. 2, 3, with Heb. iv. 16, x. 19-22).

M.

MISSIONARY DAY IN MANCHESTER.

The work carried on at the Refuges and Homes, Strangeways, Manchester, has been signally owned of God. The practical interest taken in the great needs of the heathen world may to some extent account for this.

In the Conference Hall connected with this Institution a missionary day was held on Nov. 2. It opened with the leading ministers of various denominations meeting the speakers at breakfast. A prayer meeting followed which gave tone to the meetings of the day.

In the morning and afternoon Bishop Hill, of the Niger, earnestly pleaded the cause of Africa. Rev. S. Schor, of Jerusalem, told of successful labour among the Jews. Mr. Hudson Taylor spoke of the crying needs of China's millions. Miss Tasca, of the Indian Zenana Mission, pleaded the cause of the women of India. Miss Annie Taylor, of Thibet, told of her wonderful and dangerous journey across that isolated country.

Dr. Harry Guinness in a stirring address put forth the claims of the huge parish that lies south of the Congo river. Miss Jackson, of Ancoats, closed the evening meeting with an earnest appeal, urging the necessity of deeper personal consecration, and more prayer for fitness for service both at home and abroad.

Over £1100 was contributed during the day to the various objects named.

French Protestants of Quebec.

For some years there has been no Evangelical paper to represent the growing community of French Protestants in the province of Quebec. As most of the converts from Roman Catholicism are poor it is difficult to procure a paying circulation. This poverty of most of the converts is not to be wondered at when we know the persecution they have to bear. So great is this persecution that a majority of those who renounce allegiance to Rome prefer to leave and find their way to the United States, where they enjoy liberty. But their numbers are increasing in Quebec, and it is expected that there will soon be a French Protestant paper published for their benefit. It was at first thought that the paper would have a denominational character, but wiser counsels have prevailed, and, at the request of the French pastors, it has been resolved, "That the proposed paper shall be truly Catholic and Evangelical in spirit, and devoted to the work of education and evangelisation among the French Canadians." We trust the proposed paper may be able to fulfil its useful mission for many years, and prove a power for Christ in the historic province of Quebec.

J. M.

JEWISH NOTES.

God is bringing his ancient people, whom He has miraculously preserved throughout twenty-five centuries of persecution and exile, into striking prominence before the Church and the world at the present time. By a careful comparison of passing events with God's promises to Israel of restoration in the last days, many are led to believe that their restoration is at hand, and that the coming of the Lord is drawing very near.

THE CHOVEVI ZION.

This remarkable movement owes its origin to a few poor persecuted Continental Jews who, having sought refuge in the East of London, determined to band themselves together as a society to promote the restoration of Israel to their long-lost inheritance. These "Lovers of Zion" (as the name of the movement signifies) were indeed few in number at the outset, and in England they met with little sympathy from their more prosperous brethren, but the recent persecutions in Russia, and the rising tide of "anti-Semitism" in Germany and other countries, have fostered the growth of the organisation throughout the continents of Europe and America; and now, under the leadership of Colonel Goldsmid, their so-called "modern Joshua," the society is rapidly gaining adherents from all classes of the Jewish community, and is attracting the attention of even the most indifferent among them.

The avowed objects of the society are: (a) To foster the national idea in Israel. (b) To promote the colonisation of Palestine and neighbouring territories by Jews, by establishing new colonies or assisting those already established. (c) To diffuse the knowledge of Hebrew as a living language. (d) To further the moral, intellectual, and material status of Israel. Such a programme reminds us forcibly of Ezekiel's prophecy to the dry bones—"And as I prophesied there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone." Persecution is driving the Jews to the Jews, and the gathering together of their scattered interests and aims into international corporate organisation is taking place before our eyes.

In the course of a recent interview Colonel Goldsmid was asked, "Do you not think that the spread of the national idea will create a Judenhetze (Jew-baiting)?" He replied, "Judenhetze is never likely to be caused in civilised countries by the maintenance of our religion and a faithful adherence to the national idea. I have, perhaps, had greater opportunities of learning Christian opinion on such a question than anyone else. I find that the prevailing idea among religious non-Jews is that Jews are generally imbued with faith in the prophecies and their fulfilment, and the belief that Israel will become a nation, and all Christians understand that there is nothing unpatriotic in such a belief."

Commenting on the Chovevi Zion and Colonel Goldsmid's successful campaign on its behalf, The Jewish World observes:—"The standard that he has raised, which our brethren recognise, bears this

STRANGE YET EXPRESSIVE DEVICE,

'Israel is my father, Britannia is my mother.'" Have we not here a foreshadowing of the events predicted by Isaiah, "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, and kings shall be thy nursing-fathers, and their queens thy nursing-mothers" (Isaiah xlix. 22, 23).

From such a promise as this we may surely gather that, when the time comes for the "Jewish question" to be solved (and that time is near), the Christian Governments, especially those of Protestant countries, will welcome the proposed restoration of the Jew to Palestine as the only solution to a grave and perplexing international problem. Moreover, the crowned heads of Europe will manifest a personal interest in promoting the scheme. The "Lovers of Zion" have nothing to fear, because the question had been settled long ago in the counsels of the Most High, who ruleth in the kingdom of men.

A. S. D.

THE MAORIS.—Distribution of Scriptures by colportage among the Maoris of New Zealand is being carried on as opportunity allows. To the south of Auckland there is still much opposition to Christianity among the natives, and circulation is difficult.

MISSIONARIES AND OPIUM.

We are surprised to find that a portion of the public Press has endorsed a statement made by an official witness before the Royal Commission, to the effect that the missionary body in China, having signally failed to make converts among the Chinese, find it convenient to lay the blame on the opium traffic, rather than refer to the true cause, which lies nearer home.

To such a suggestion we give an emphatic denial; and cannot refrain from pointing it out as an unjustifiable reflection upon a great body of men and women whom the Christian community regard with high esteem.

The missionaries in China confess to no such want of success. They show, on the contrary, an evidence of increased prosperity in mission work from decade to decade, which is striking enough to make the Churches of Christ in this country rejoice.

That the missionary body in China covet and pray for very much more success is equally true, and it is that fact which has opened their eyes to this hindrance in their way, and made them eager for its removal. They would be traitors to their great Master's cause if it were otherwise. Those of them who have gone forth from the Churches of Great Britain and Ireland claim, however, to be quite as loyal to their country as the men who impeach them, and they believe that by putting their finger on a grave fault in their country's policy, they, at all events, are exhibiting true patriotism.

The missionaries occupy stations throughout nearly the whole of China from east to west, and from the Amoor in the extreme north to Pak-hoi in the far south. They number about 1,500, and are acquainted, as almost no others can be, with the daily lives and habits, the joys and sorrows of the people.

There is, therefore, special significance in the fact that from every quarter of that great Empire they bear testimony to the wide-spread suffering produced by the consumption of opium and the discredit thrown upon Christianity by our country's association with it. It is equally significant of the moral degradation which it entails, that the native Church in China has no option but to exclude from its membership all who are consumers or connected with the trade; whilst at home we have 5,000 members of the medical profession who have stated emphatically that the use of the drug, except as a medicine, is morally and physically debasing

No arguments as to the willingness or ability of the Chinese Government to prohibit home productions can possibly weaken the force of these facts, and we maintain that our country, which might stand forth as the exponent of Christianity to people who can be numbered by hundreds of millions, is throwing away this splendid opportunity by helping to uphold a trade which has proved to be their curse.

Fred. E. Wigram,
Eugene Stock,
Christopher C. Fenn, } Secretaries to Church Missionary Society.

J. Hudson Taylor, General Director, China Inland Mission.

B. Broomhall, General Secretary, China Inland Mission.

Alfred Henry Baynes, Secretary, Baptist Missionary Society.

George Wm. Olver, Wesleyan Missionary Society.

R. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary, London Missionary Society.

George Turner, General Missionary Secretary, United Methodist Free Churches.

J. K. Jackson, Foreign Missions Secretary, Methodist New Connexion.

Watson Grace, Secretary, Friends' Foreign Mission Association.

C. W. Tremenheere, Vice-President, Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.

W. S. Swanson, D.D., Missionary of the Presbyterian Church of England.

H. M. Matheson, English Presbyterian Missions.

PARIS.—The meetings for the deepening of spiritual life held here were full of interest and blessing. Revs. E. W. Moore and C. G. Moore were with us for the third time. Pastor Th. Monod, Revs. Anderson, Thurber, Hart, Gibson, etc., took part. The attendances were larger than in previous years. All who attended spoke with great thankfulness of the refreshment and blessing received W. Soltau..

IN THE NIZAM'S LAND.

Dear Sir,—You will be glad to hear that the Lord is blessing us in the work among the aborigines of the Nizam's Dominions and Bastor. Friends are coming forward to help us. About half the funds required for opening seven mission stations, in five of which must be hospitals and medical missionaries, are in sight. Dr. Batstone and wife are doing well at Jagdolpur, the capital of Bastor. We still need friends who want to help us build up these self-supporting mission stations. But we specially want some workers. We need four M.D.'s who will come out for Christ's sake to doctor bodies in order to reach souls.

The encouragements are very great in all parts of the field, but "where are the reapers?" England must have some some noble sons and daughters who will enter this needy field, and many other friends who will help their cause and help build up their stations.

Bishop Thoburn is among the most intrepid missionary leaders in the Indian field. The Methodists are the most widely diffused of any body in the field. The Bishop's Society is no longer able to supply the means needed for the work he is pushing forward. Yet he does not hesitate to lay plans for the conquest of immense new and hitherto unoccupied fields.

Staring the inevitable in the face, he has recently taken up several large pieces of real estate property in India and Burmah, looking forward to the development of necessitated funds for the growing Indian work. This course we think all successful missions will be driven to adopt in the near future.

A resolution in missionary methods and a change in part of the base of supplies is inevitable, and all this betokens good to India and the Church.

Yours, in the Lord's cause,
C. B. Ward.

Yellandu, India, Nizam's Dominions.

EDUCATION IN JAMAICA.

Permit me to call the attention of friends of the Negro to an effort which for the last eleven years has been in progress to supply education for the daughters of the black population of Jamaica. The Trelawny School, near Stewart Town, six miles from Brown's Town, on the north side of the island, was started, and has been sustained by personal friends of my husband, the late Rev. Dr. Trestrail, and my own, aided largely by members of the Society of Friends. The work is in every sense undenominational. The members having steadily increased from a beginning of six, the school has been placed under a committee of ladies and gentlemen in Jamaica, representing the different Christian committees, even as the pupils belong to the various denominations.

A Scotch lady of much experience is at the head of the school. Forty girls are now under tuition; others are waiting for admission, but the present dilapidated premises—the lease of which expires at Christmas—are too small to receive any more pupils. A new building is now nearing completion. Money has been contributed to the building fund, both in England and Jamaica, nearly to the amount required. Three months ago it was estimated that £400 would complete the work, and enable the school to enter the new premises early in next year. Towards this sum £150 has been obtained.

I am unwilling to think that the last £250 cannot be raised. A mortgage means interest to be paid, and, till the whole sum is repaid, debt. Free from this charge, the school would be self-supporting.

The school has proved a blessing which it is not easy to estimate. Many of the girls have opened schools of their own, or are filling other useful posts, one is a missionary on the Congo, another is preparing to join her brother in the same Mission, the A.B.M. One girl from Haiti has gone back with her heart set on the service of her ignorant sisters for Christ's sake. Since Dr. Trestrail's death, Dr. Underhill, Derwent Lodge, Thurlow-road, Hampstead, has kindly acted as treasurer to the building fund.

E. Ryland Trestrail, Hon. Sec.

Clydesdale, Malvern.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Thirty branches have been formed in different regiments and depôts during the past three months.

ITALIAN SCHOOLS.

Notwithstanding much local opposition, the Evangelical schools of Pisa, Cisanello, and San Michele have, through God's blessing and protection, been attended during this year by about 500 children and young people.

From the Italian Minister of Public Instruction, I received kind messages as to his goodwill, and the consideration in which these schools are held by the Government. A special Government Inspector reported on the Female Institute. That gentleman appeared much impressed by the very large number of girls, belonging chiefly to the working-classes, who are being educated in my Institute, "which, if it were to be closed," he said to me, "would necessitate the opening of at least five or six elementary schools, by the municipality, to supply its place."

I would earnestly invite Christian travellers in Italy to come and see the Institute (Piazza Garibaldi) any day except Thursday.

Owing to lessened income I have had to decide on serious retrenchments by reducing the classes from twelve to eight. Is there no lady who would take the place of the late Mrs. Filby, of Norwich, as collector and receiver in England? Should this meet the eye of any who subscribed through Mrs. Filby, I trust they will kindly communicate direct with myself. S. H. Carruthers.

Pisa, per Cisanello, Italy.

[Having visited these schools, we can only speak of them in terms of unqualified commendation. They deserve as much as they need to be generously sustained.—Ed.]

THE NEED OF ITALY.

In a booklet, "Italy for Christ," Rev. J. H. Eager, American Baptist missionary, of Florence, says:—

"The strongest argument in favour of Italian evangelisation is the sad fact that Italy is virtually without the Gospel. Of course, such a statement would call forth a vigorous protest from the priests. To them the sending of missionaries to Italy, and above all to Rome, the historic home of our 'Venerable Father and Lord, His Holiness the Pope'; the sacred capital of the Holy Catholic Church, the Heaven-appointed source and dispenser (as they claim) of every blessing, both temporal and spiritual, is the very climax of absurdity and presumption. This, however, does not in the least affect the truth of the above statement; rather the contrary.

"To be convinced that Romanism has not given Italy the Gospel, one needs only to live in this country, hear Catholic sermons, read Catholic books, and talk to the people on religious subjects. Everywhere one sees the form of godliness without the power thereof, slavish observance of the letter, but fatal ignorance of the spirit of the law, saying prayers without praying, men charmed and blinded by a gorgeous and awe-inspiring ritual, teachers ignorant of the Bible, and teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, and through their traditions making the Word of God of none effect.

"Not only so, but to many truth has become error and error truth, light has become darkness and darkness light. Those who have reached this stage become most intolerant towards all who differ from them, for only truth can afford to be tolerant. The Gospel heard everywhere in Italy is the Gospel of human merit, which is 'another Gospel,' and not that which Christ came to proclaim.

"Thousands of weary and heavy-laden ones in Italy are longing for the rest of the truth. But great tact and patience are required in dealing with them. They need sympathy and love, and fatherly care and direction. They must have line upon line and precept upon precept. They must unlearn all they have been taught in the past, and be brought to realise that they were fatally wrong, and that none but Christ can save. Those who deal with such cases will need much of the patience and forbearance of the Divine Saviour."

EVANGELICAL PREACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—Referring to the paragraph in our last issue on "Preparation for Preaching," details have been sent us of a society formed among Baptist and Congregational churches in North London, in order to aid young men wishing to preach the Gospel by providing opportunities for study. The inaugural meeting is to be held at Upper Holloway Chapel, on Thursday, January 4, 1894, when the president-elect, Rev. J. R. Wood, will deliver the address. The secretary is Mr. H. Worrall, 85, Woodstock-road, Finsbury Park, N.

MRS. HILTON'S CRÈCHE.

The annual report of this admirable institution for the past year appears under circumstances of peculiar interest. As Mrs. Hilton states, it has been to her "a year of exceptional trial and difficulty." An epidemic of scarlet fever caused the Crèche to be closed for some weeks. The Country Home at Feltham needed repairs, which cost £200. To crown all, Mrs. Hilton herself was laid aside by a three months' illness, from which she only recovered through what seemed a miraculous interposition. All these things rendered still more trying a work which, under the best possible conditions, is marked with difficulty and discouragement.

Yet Mrs. Hilton is able to tune her harp of thankful praise at the retrospect; she has been "enabled to comfort sad hearts and brighten the lives of the desolate." Looking back on the twenty-two years' history of the Crèche and Home, she says:—"Many of our children have gone out into the world's battlefield better fitted to conquer in the strife than if they had not been so cared for; and hundreds of mothers have been lifted out of extreme poverty who, but for the help given, would have gone among those who stumble and fall." An illustration of the first half of this cheering sentence comes to us as we write. On our first visit to the Crèche, now a good many years ago, we were specially charmed by a shy little maiden in the nursery; we have just seen a letter written by her (grown up, and making her own way in the world) in which she states that a dead sister's child has been left to her care; so that she is now endeavouring in her measure to further the kind of work from which she reaped such advantages in her childish days.

As we have observed in former years, this work of taking in and caring for the children of poverty and sorrow is carried on without any public éclat, and is therefore in danger of being overlooked by generous-hearted friends. Some of the incidents of it are strange enough and sadly romantic enough, but it were best to throw over them the veil of charitable oblivion. Old and tried supporters of the institution are passing away year by year, and new friends are needed to take their place, in order that this channel of timely help and of steady faithful nurture may be kept up in undiminished volume. We heartily commend it to our younger Christian readers—especially the ladies. At intervals Mrs. Hilton gives her helpers the privilege of contributing articles for a sale of work on behalf of the Crèche and Home, and we note in the report that such a sale is arranged for next spring. We hope that many loving hands will ply the needle or the brush during the intervening months, so that a good collection of saleable goods may be at our friend's disposal for the benefit of her youthful protégés. We gladly observe that some working parties have started operations; there are scope and time for the forming of many more. All parcels should be sent, when ready, to the Crèche, 12, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

The readers of The Christian make a fairly good show in the list of donations for the year; no doubt they will continue to sustain such a good reputation.

The Misses Luttman, of Durham College, South Hackney, held a public sale of fancy and useful articles in the College on Monday, Nov. 6, on behalf of the Crèche and branches. The articles were made and contributed by friends of the principals and the pupils. They were tastefully displayed, and we hear that the results were satisfactory.

COASTGUARD MISSION.—The hon. sec. of this mission, Miss E. M. Jackson, has changed her address from Weston-super-Mare to 321, Norwood-road, London, S.E. She would be grateful if readers of The Christian would kindly offer to send monthly packets of Gospel papers and an occasional letter to the men of H.M. Coastguard at their lonely posts of duty.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY.—Owing to the spread of dissent in the Russian Army (says a correspondent), M. Pobiedonostzeff has raised the question as to whether it is advisable to allow Nonconformists to attain even non-commissioned rank, as in the opinion of the Holy Synod such persons may have a pernicious moral and religious influence on the rank and file, and especially on recruits. In consequence of this inquiry the Minister of War has informed the Procurator of the Holy Synod that soldiers belonging to dissenting sects will not, in any case, be promoted.

HOME VISITING IN SPITALFIELDS.

In his new report, Mr. James Sharpless says:—"People having now to work early and late to earn a trifle, it is not surprising to find salvation matters crowded out of the mind. Under these trying circumstances, it is difficult to get the people to see that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Great Remedy for all evils. The Lord has enabled us to go on persevering from day to day, entering into rooms testifying of Jesus as the Friend who stands by his own under every shade and condition of life.

"Some interesting cases have come under our notice. Mothers are to be found burdened and pressed with family cares, sometimes with sickness in the house. How refreshing to such souls are a few helpful words from Christ, inviting the heavy laden and sin-burdened ones to find rest in Himself! Death, too, has been busy claiming one here and there. There are mourners in Zion still who need the consolation of God. Yet these cases must be sought out by the Lord's people, and ministered to. There is a constant demand made upon our sympathy and practical help.

"The relief kindly sent by friends is carefully distributed among the most needy cases, sometimes in cash, at others in bread and meat tickets. Where there are poorly-fed children food tickets are most useful, because the children are sure to come in for their share. Two ladies send a little help monthly for special cases they are interested in; and another sends quarterly for two aged sisters, who are over eighty years of age. The amount sent may seem but a trifle to the giver, but it is a great boon to the receiver, and often causes the song of thanksgiving to God."

Mr. Sharpless's address is 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.

Among the many organisations for foreign missionary enterprise, an important place must be assigned to the Evangelical Continental Society, which has done excellent work in a modest and unobtrusive way. The time for a wider publicity has come, not that the Society may be able to say with Jehu, "Come, see my zeal for the Lord," but rather that it may send out a fuller invitation to willing workers to enter on fields "white unto the harvest."

While the sympathies of Christian men and women have been stirred by the recital of heroic deeds and splendid triumphs in the uttermost parts of the world, little has been known of the romance of Gospel propaganda nearer home amongst the nations of the European Continent. For well nigh fifty years the light of the Gospel has been carried into the dark places of France, Italy, Spain, Belgium, and Bohemia through the agency of this Society. The story of this work has only to be simply told in order to awaken the sympathies of such as break the silence of each new-born day with the prayer, "Thy kingdom come." The Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," is wafted to our shores from the Waldensian valleys, from the land of the Huguenot, from priest-ridden Spain, from newly-enfranchised Italy, from the home of Huss and Jerome of Prague. In all these places men and women are simply hungering for the Gospel, and turn their wistful eyes to England, yearning for that liberty wherewith Christ and Christ alone can make them truly free.

We hope from time to time to furnish our readers with interesting incidents in connection with the work of this Society. Meanwhile, those who may desire to learn more of the work, or in any way to help it forward, may write to the secretary, Rev. George H. Giddins, 13, Blomfield-street, London Wall, E.C.

NATAL.—The writer wishes to testify as to the great blessing he derives from the perusal of your most charitable and helpful of Christian periodicals, and prays that God's blessing may follow it wherever it goes. In Natal especially, where there is a great lack of true spiritual life, The Christian is most helpful and stimulating. Some of us wish it were possible to have periodical visits from such men as Mr. Grubb and others. Natal is in a sad, sad state spiritually. Mr. Thomas Cook's mission last year was a success as far as it went, but it was too denominational to reach the prejudiced.

F. B. E. Conolly.

A PLEA FOR NURSES.

Dear Sir,—May a country member venture a suggestion? It is this—that a Provident Fund for Sick Nurses, or those out of employment, be started in connection with the Nurses' Union of the Y.W.C.A. If, in return for a fixed monthly or quarterly fee (and there is no reason that the scheme should not be entirely self-supporting), a sick nurse could be sure of Christian sympathy and kindness, as well as the weekly sum paid by an ordinary society, managed upon purely business principles, no words of mine could fairly estimate the blessing it would be to many a weary worker.

If an arrangement could also be made by which a nurse, ill and away from her home (if, indeed, she has any), could be cared for in some kindly haven, instead of receiving a weekly dole, how much anxiety it would spare a tired mind.

Then, as to holidays, or brief intervals between engagements (especially the latter), a member of the Nurses' Union could be received without payment at any Y.W.C.A., welcomed heartily, advised wisely, and cared for lovingly, not icily, until she could find a new sphere of work. How many a bright young worker might be kept from drifting down the "primrose path." After all, nurses are only women, and sometimes very winsome women too!

With very little money (and so many nurses have home claims to keep them poor, even if their salary is not an inadequate one), no immediate opening for fresh work, no open door to receive them away from their own friends, knowing best perhaps a few young and fashionable doctors, they are sometimes sorely in want of counsel and help. Is a uniform a sufficient safeguard for a desolate woman in a busy city? Nurses do not need charity excepting in its beautiful sense of "love," but they do need the practical sympathy of their sister women, and to be helped to help themselves.—Yours very truly,

District Nurse.

Criminal Children.

For practical purposes there ought to be a class of medical experts whose duty it should be to deal with the cases of apparently incurable criminals. Such criminals, when it has been scientifically decided that they are incurable, should be recognised as patients in hospitals or asylums. Their family history and their personal history should be carefully inquired into, and they should be put under a course of rational moral medicine at the expense of the State. In short, the habitual criminal's prison should be a hospital-school. In due time a certain number of congenital criminals would be so far improved that, like the boy with the cured bandy legs, they would be able to walk, on the whole, morally straight. Such as these should, at the proper time, be set at liberty to take care of themselves, on the understanding that they would be free to return to the hospital-school if they found the criminal tendency too strong for them.

A certain proportion of congenital criminals would be found to be permanently incurable. These would have to be confined to the school-hospital for the term of their natural life. Their lives should in that case be made as happy for themselves, and as profitable to the State, as possible—seeing that, though they are vicious and regardless of other people's rights, they are so by virtue of hereditary forces over which they have had no control, and which have proved too strong for them.—The Hospital.

Great Assembly Hall.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie (who recently returned from Chicago) has completed a five weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall last week. Ten days of this time Mr. Scroggie was laid aside with a very severe cold, when his place was ably filled by Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, Rev. J. F. Porter, and Rev. Newton Vanstone.

Mr. Scroggie has been greatly blessed in preaching the Gospel, and his stirring, solemn addresses fastened home on the hearts of many who are now among those who can rejoice in the new-born joy of realising their sins forgiven. His pointed appeals to God's children were not less powerful, and many have been the expressions of gratitude for spiritual life restored, and those who have hitherto been content to be known only as Christians have been induced to launch out into active work for the Master.

A large congregation gathered on the last night of his mission at Mile End, and at its close many came forward and wished him God speed, expressing a hope that it would not be long before he again returned for another month's services. Mr. Scroggie is followed this month by Mr. F. S. Ball, of the Evangelisation Society, who at one time was associated with the work of the Great Assembly Hall.

MISSIONARY TRAINING FOR LADIES.

Many ladies who are inspired by the missionary spirit write to me from time to time asking an important question. Can we enter your East-end Deaconess' House for a short period (they say), in order to acquire some practical experience and training in real mission work among the poor at home, so as to qualify ourselves eventually for labours in the missionary field abroad ?

Not a few of our experienced deaconesses have already devoted themselves to the service of the King in Africa, India, China, and elsewhere in the wide fields of heathendom, and they are now attached to various foreign missions. To these God has graciously given much success. But before entering upon their work abroad, all of them have worked in the East-end for prolonged periods, for it has hitherto been difficult, and, indeed, almost impossible, to accept candidates who could only remain with us for a short time.

I wish now, however, to intimate that as applications from ladies desiring to qualify as missionaries have of late become more numerous and pressing, we have decided upon a new departure, and henceforth we propose reserving a number of vacancies in our Deaconess' House in Bow-road for the special benefit of educated and devoted Christian ladies desiring to test themselves and to obtain experience before offering for, or engaging in, missionary labours abroad.

Applicants, therefore, who are prepared—

(1) To remain in training for not less than three months without a break in our East-end house ; who are willing—

(2) To place themselves during that time unreservedly under the directions of our lady superintendent ; and who are able also

(3) To defray a very moderate weekly charge for their maintenance, may apply at once to Miss Birtill, Deaconess House, 405, Mile-end Road, London, E.

It will be better that the application in the first instance shall be made in writing, and be accompanied by names and addresses of such referees as shall be able to assure us that the candidate is of decided Christian character and that she holds Evangelical views. There are some vacancies now; others will be ready for the reception of qualified candidates immediately after the Christmas recess.

If these are filled up it will be a great joy to us to know and feel that there are even stronger and more numerous links than at present between "The helpers in the war" among the heathen at home and the devoted ranks of those who, in the foreign field, are giving themselves to the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ. Thos. J. Barnardo.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Rescue Work in Sheffield.

Mr. W. Corbridge, of Sheffield, attended the noon prayer meeting at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Friday last, and gave some account of the work of the evangelistic and rescue mission. Afterwards to a group of friends he gave deeply interesting details. It seems that evangelisation is carried on with much vigour from six or seven centres, a goodly number of helpers strengthening Mr. Corbridge's hands. Conspicuous success has attended the rescue work of the mission, which is conducted on a method of its own.

In rescue, Mr. Corbridge's plan is to house the fallen and destitute in private houses, permitting the inmates liberty of movement, and trusting them to go freely about the town. The result has been that, without any particular effort on Mr. Corbridge's part, the premises at his disposal have been overcrowded with girls wishful to enter upon a respectable life. Some sixty per cent. of the cases undertaken have turned out satisfactory.

It is now in contemplation to obtain a group of cottages in which to continue this work on an enlarged scale. Mr. Richard Cory, J.P., of Cardiff, is president of the mission council, which includes several well-known names. Communications should be added to Mr. Corbridge, at 250, Duke-street, Sheffield.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Rev. Ernest Gill, clerical secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, offers to give a lecture, entitled "Work for Christ among the Waifs and Strays of our Streets," illustrated with first-rate limelight views, giving the best idea of what the Homes are like, that can be obtained without actually visiting them, in halls, schoolrooms, and other places, free of all charge, supplying lantern and all apparatus, a collection being taken for the Homes during the evening. Applications from the clergy, secretaries of temperance societies, missions, and other workers are invited, addressed to Rev. E. Gill, M.A., 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

MR. WOOKEY'S WELCOME.

Mr. J. B. Wookey, who met, as we have already mentioned, with a serious accident while travelling in America with Dr. Barnardo's handbell ringers, gave an address on Monday at the noon prayer meeting, Aldersgate-street, describing his experiences in connection with the accident. He told very simply how on the night preceding he and the boys had attended a service in a Canadian city, where the address was on "Holiness as the only preparation for Eternity," and most of them were very much solemnised. The next morning they started on their long journey to Chicago. Hours afterwards came a fearful crash, and for his own part he rolled out, he knew not how, bruised and battered, to find himself surrounded by wounded and dying. He found one of his boys hopelessly crushed, and how thankful he felt to know that lad was one whom he knew to be safe in the arms of Jesus. He died very shortly, calmly restful.

Another boy fearfully injured was well known in Scotland, where his singing was greatly liked. His mother, a true believer, died in great poverty ; her daughters are now, though poor, living godly lives. The boy was a happy follower of Jesus, and his singing of the words

He died that we might be forgiven,
He died to make us good,
That we might go at last to heaven,
Saved by his precious blood, had been blessed to many. Mr. Wookey thanked God that Dr. Barnardo's Homes had been the means, not only of saving thousands from rags, wretchedness, and ignorance, but also of winning many to Christ who, like these, are ready to witness a good confession.

The Missionary Bureau.

An Appeal for Workers.

Nearly fifty missionaries have been sent out into the foreign field by the Missionary Bureau during the past three years. There are openings for many others, but the following are urgently needed at once:—Three young men for evangelistic work amongst the aborigines of India. Two young men are also needed for Malaysia, able and willing to teach in native school with a view of ultimately becoming missionaries; also two Evangelical Churchmen for Bible work in the Straits Settlements ; one or two young women for Jamaica to take charge of native school.

A Scandinavian is wanted for Dunkirk to work amongst sailors ; another worker amongst seamen is needed for St. Malo, a man of fair education and preaching ability preferred. A lady is also required to assist in mission and orphanage work in South Arcot, India. For information apply to the secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

BACK FROM INDIA.—It seems but a week or two back that we reported the departure of the first of the troopships for India this season. The Serapis steamed into Portsmouth Harbour on Sunday morning, having completed her return voyage. She had on board over 1000 souls, besides her crew. Most of them were time-expired men; some 200 were invalided home, and went either to Netley Hospital or Woolwich. Tidings have reached us that a number of Christian soldiers were able to hold meetings on board every night going out, which resulted in blessing, and the same has occurred on the return voyage.

READING.—At the fair recently held in this town a united evangelistic effort was made by the open-air preachers of various denominations. This has been instrumental in drawing together in brotherly sympathy those formerly unknown to each other, and has found expression in a desire to form a local auxiliary of "The Open-air Mission." Accordingly, on Monday, October 23, a drawing-room meeting of a representative character was held. The chair was taken by Rev. F. Sumner, a member of the parent society, and Mr. F. Cockrem, the London secretary, explained the object and aims of the Mission. A resolution was carried that an auxiliary be formed, and a provisional committee elected to take the necessary steps.

LORD MAYOR'S DAY.—Sir,—For six years it has been our custom to give a meal to the very poor on November 9. This year we again appeal for assistance for our East-end banquet, more especially as terrible distress already prevails, and there are signs that this winter will be a very severe one for the poor of the East-end. The Lord Mayor Elect, Alderman Tyler, has most generously sent us £50 towards this object. The meal is followed by an entertainment and music, and the invitations are sent to the very poorest, irrespective of creed or denomination. Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by yours faithfully, Fredk. N. Charrington, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.

WORK IN HAITI.

Your readers may remember that in a previous letter I stated that I and a convert from Romanism were to appear on April 5, at the High Court, to stand our trial for daring to preach the Gospel on Good Friday evening at a place called Mt. Calvary. At the time stated in the summons we both made our appearance at the court. To our surprise our accusers, the priests, did not turn up as expected. The commissaire informed us that nothing could be done to us, inasmuch as the place referred to belonged to the people and not the priests, as alleged. "Continue prêcher" said this chief judge of the Black Republic, which I need not tell you we would have done had he spoken otherwise. Nevertheless, we are thankful for this declaration of freedom, notwithstanding the efforts of Rome to stifle us. He further told us that we could visit the prison in the city if we desired to do so ; not now, of course, as breakers of the law, or leaders of sedition, but the friends of the suffering, bearers of good tidings to the sad and sorrowful, and servants of God ; and if at any future time we were molested he would be glad to give us protection.

Before the temporary break-down of my health (which is now as good as ever), with some of the deacons I visited a few places in the interior, at which I preached by the aid of an interpreter. We need one or two mission-rooms at these centres, but the buildings cannot be undertaken until we complete our new chapel in Jacmel, which we expect, with the kind help of friends, to open about the end of November. There should be at least two brethren supported at each of our stations here, in addition to a male or female teacher to carry on a good school that should be established wherever possible. This is a very easy matter were suitable persons forthcoming, for the present liberal Government gives grants to the extent almost of what would be paid as salary. Surely there are young men and young women in Great Britain with a knowledge of French, and especially in ladies a little knowledge of medicine and nursing, with enough sympathy for their fellows and love for Christ and souls, to come and help. Rev. E. J. Hewitt (secretary of the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society), Mt. Carey, Anchovey, Jamaica, will, I am sure, be glad to hear from such.

L. Ion Evans.

Jacmel, Haiti, W. Indies.

The Strangers' Rest.

The monthly workers' meeting at 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, on Friday evening last, was a "season of grace and sweet delight." The work is still being carried on with vigour, and encouraging news was reported concerning the Zanzibar Rest, by the secretary, Mr. J. T. Isaacs, who is also anxious to provide bags of literature for seamen going on long voyages, and appealed for help from ladies who can make suitable bags, a description of which he will gladly furnish.

Rev. E. G. Gange delivered an earnest and sprightly address, urging the workers and friends to seek to possess the experience in their work that "the joy of the Lord" is their strength.

Mr. Torre, in referring to his Gospel work in Buenos Ayres, bore emphatic testimony to the valuable education for such work he had obtained years ago while engaged in Christian work at the Strangers' Rest and other East London Missions. He also declared that the saving influence of the work here was far reaching, and instanced the case of a seaman he met on the voyage who was converted at the Rest, doubtless a type of many others "that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters." Thus the Lord Jesus Christ is exalted in the salvation of our seafaring brothers.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the Yorkshire Women's Christian Temperance Union proved practical and interesting. Good solid bond fide temperance work is being done by this Union, which now consists of forty-five branches.

PROPHECY INVESTIGATION SOCIETY.—The subject for discussion at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, Nov. 21, at 2.30 p.m., is "The Scope of Prophecy," to be opened by Rev. J. J. B. Coles, M.A. It will be maintained that the præterist, the presentist, and the futurist schools of interpretation, all have a place in the general scope or range of prophecy. The syllabus says:—"The sacred name, 'Jehovah,' is the true key to the fuller grasp of the wide range of application of the prophetic word. This name is threefold in signification: future, present, and past. The relation of the title, 'He who is, and who was, and who is to come' of the Apocalypse to the name Jehovah, and the way this title is dealt with by the Holy Spirit in the last book of Scripture, is another proof that the scope of prophecy is threefold."

THE MISSIONARY PENNY.

REFERRING to the suggestion of Rev. Hubert Brooke made at the Baptist Missionary Meeting, that the funds of foreign missions could be largely increased by daily contributions of one penny, we are asked to state that the Missionary Pence Association has added a section for those who are willing to practise this small act of daily self-denial.

Originally founded to promote the giving of "Carey's weekly penny," the Association has during the past year gathered in many thousands of pennies which have helped the funds of all the leading missionary societies as well as of many smaller missions. The principle on which it is based, viz., the power of the penny, is being increasingly recognised, and the council feels that the time has come to invite subscriptions of one penny per day from all whose hearts are touched with the deep need of the perishing millions of heathendom. Members or subscribers are invited to name any society or mission to which they wish their gifts to be devoted; all such sums are remitted intact to the society specified without any deduction for working expenses. This being so, the council feel they can confidently appeal for this form of help for the great cause—so easily given and yet so valuable and so fruitful in results.

How many thousands spend much more than this trifling sum thoughtlessly every day and yet give far less than a penny a day to missions? How many thousands more could find various ways of economising to this small extent and not only be none the poorer but richer in the satisfaction of doing something daily to further the fulfilment of our Lord's great command?

A simple calculation gives an astounding result from this simple and feasible plan. Taking the number of church members in the United Kingdom as 2,400,000, a daily penny from each would produce the magnificent sum of upwards of three and a-half million pounds per annum, and so far as finance is concerned the great missionary problem would be solved.

Those willing to do their share in this matter are earnestly invited to forward their daily penny for three, six, or twelve months to Mr. John Jackson, Hon. Sec. Missionary Pence Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

Campana, Argentine Republic,

CAMPANA is a town of about 6000 inhabitants, comprising representatives of almost all European nations, in addition to Argentines, Uruguayans, Paraguayans, and Brazilians. The English community numbers about 800. The staple industries are the locomotive works of the Buenos Ayres and Rosario Railway, and the freezing works of the River Plate Fresh Meat Company.

Mission work is entirely in the hands of laymen. The Sunday-school is held in the railway lecture room, a favour for which we are indebted to the railway authorities. Services are held every Sunday evening in our mission room, a building capable of seating 120 persons. The services are entirely undenominational, and the room has recently been fitted with extra sitting accommodation. We are in want of a small organ or harmonium. A Bible-class is held every Wednesday, and a prayer and praise meeting on Friday evenings. These meetings are well attended, and have been wonderfully blessed; one of our Campana converts (Mr. Colin Bain) is now a student at the Bible Institute, Chicago; he contemplates returning here when his studies are completed.

A Band of Hope meetings are held fortnightly, and are much appreciated. All the ships that come to this port are visited, and meetings held aboard as opportunity offers. A fair proportion of the sailors attend our mission room meetings, and several of them have been induced to sign the pledge. Spanish work is carried on by our friends of the Salvation Army, with most happy results.

W. FOSTERJOHN, Hon. Sec.

Campana, Argentine Republic.

God's Vineyard.

"Thou shalt be like a watered garden."—Isa. lviii. 11.
Well placed—"on a fruitful hill."—Isa. v. 1.
Well protected—"a trench about it."—Isa. v. 2.
Well prepared—"stones gathered out."—Isa. v. 2.
Well planted—"with the choicest vine."—Isa. v. 2.
Well provided—"a winepress therein."—Isa. v. 2.
Well watched—"a tower in midst."—Isa. v. 2.
Well watered—"every moment."—Isa. xxvii. 3.
What shall the produce be, wild grapes—Isa. v. 2, much fruit?—Isa. xxvii. 6. Song of S. viii. 12.

J. G. L.

Letters to the Editor.

EDUCATION AND MISSIONS.

SIR,—In your paper of August 24, there appears an article on "Education and Missions," to which I feel constrained to send a reply. Allow me to make a few simple statements which I earnestly pray may throw some light on this vastly important subject, and remember they come from one who cannot be called an "educational missionary," for my work is chiefly that of evangelisation; but the fact is I cannot bear to hear the work of many of my devoted and God-guided fellow-missionaries in India spoken of in the way it has been spoken of in this article.

The educational work of missions is indispensable, and, so far as my experience goes, it is accomplishing wondrous results, and, by the blessing of God, it is preparing the high castes for the reception of the Gospel. It is true that it has produced few converts yet, but I do not know a single convert from the high caste who has not shared largely in the benefits of education. I am persuaded that education is being mightily used by God in the spread of the Gospel in this land.

Allow me further to say that there are hundreds of societies in India which oppose Christianity, in which there are few, if any, Hindu graduates. And although Hindu graduates were the only systematical opponents of Christianity, that would be no argument against educational work, for missionaries know that when opposition begins, it is a sign of hope, for opposition shows that conviction is working in the heart. I have personally been often greatly inspired with hope concerning those who have bitterly opposed Christianity.—Yours truly,

GEORGE WAUGH.

Panjab, India, Sept. 26th.

EVIL SPEAKING.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the admirable article on "Evil Speaking," in THE CHRISTIAN of Oct. 26, I should be glad to know if any of your numerous readers are members of an association I joined many years ago, at Gipsy Hill, Norwood, called "the Schweigen Society."

I lost the rules by lending them to a friend; but they forbade speaking ill of anyone in his or her absence; and, among many other salutary regulations, required that before making a remark of any kind, affecting other persons, the three questions should be mentally first asked, Is it true? Is it kind? Is it necessary? The effects of these barriers is effectually to stop a deal of gossip.—Yours faithfully,

C.F.J.

"GIGANTIC EMPORIUMS."

SIR,—In his letter to you, regarding your remarks on the treatment which smaller tradesmen receive from the larger houses, C. B. forgets, or seems to forget, that you were thinking of the "growths" which he admits to "have seen." It would be very interesting to myself and many others if C. B. would note down all the small tradesmen who have received from those who swallowed them up the "enlarged capital to make a fresh start." Since 1848, when business in London became familiar to me, my experience has been the opposite to C.B.'s. From personal experience in a "gigantic emporium" I can affirm that the work carried on there was merciless work. It was most inconvenient to have such an article in your possession as a conscience, when the interests of the emporium were in the balance. You had to put the ten commandments in your pocket or go outside.

Prominence and power are words that have a magical influence over some minds, and when energy and ingenuity go together nothing is allowed to stand in the way.

Even in large establishments where the principals fear God and seek to do right, constant watchfulness is needed to guard against the efforts of envy and malice. A swaggering go-ahead who covers his purpose by zeal for the establishment, rides roughshod over young men of uprightness who are not accustomed to bounce or swagger. Many young men of promise make "shipwreck of faith," and sometimes of "a good conscience," through the depressing influence around them.

My father told me when a boy that he lost his farm, with eleven other farmers, that the twelve might be turned into one "gigantic farm." I have seen the place often, and the man who held it wandering about, without power to do anything but eat what was given to him. He could not order anything; it must come through the manager. There are sad and painful histories behind those great houses; they too often illustrate the old word, "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption."—Yours truly,

AN OLD READER.

London November 6.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

THE annual sale of work in connection with the Missions to Seamen was held in the Guildhall on Thursday. Many undergraduates are keenly interested in this work. No college is without, at least, one schooner collecting-box.

The annual meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held in the Guildhall on Monday evening, Archdeacon Emery presiding. Great regret was expressed at the loss Cambridge will experience in the departure of Rev. J. Barton, vicar of Holy Trinity, to fill the secretaryship of the society.

An impetus has been given to Presbyterianism here by the recent advent of Rev. A. Halliday Douglas. A series of lectures have been arranged, the first of which was given on Sunday evening last by Principal Rainy, of New College, Edinburgh, on "Presbyterianism as a System of Church Life and Work." The attendance was largely composed of members of the University.

OXFORD.

REV. DR. WALTER C. SMITH, Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, has preached at Mansfield on the last two Sundays.

The weekly address at the Missionary Union last Tuesday week, was by Dr. Henry Guinness, whose recent visit to Africa was made the subject of the meeting.

The annual missionary services of the Free Methodist Church were held last week, when Rev. Silas Walmsley, of Leeds, preached and addressed meetings on the work in Africa. Mr. Walmsley was formerly in the Oxford Circuit.

A new and gratifying feature at Wycliffe Hall this term is a series of conferences on practical subjects open to all members of the University. The first was on "Inspiration," which was opened by Canon Girdlestone, and the second on "Private Prayer," opened by Rev. F. J. Chavasse.

Dr. Fairbairn gave a very powerful address at Mansfield last week on "The Church and the Working Classes," wherein he referred to the influence of the churches in labour and other social movements, and in particular to the alienation of working men from church life and interest. This latter was attributed to four causes:—(1) Political developments; (2) Social development, especially the tendency of society to separate into classes, and class interests; (3) Industrial development at the expense of human souls; (4) Intellectual development. The address close with a stirring appeal for thorough reality in all Christian, individual, and Church life.

Mr. George Holmes, missionary secretary of the Y.M.C.A., gave a most interesting and valuable account on Monday evening last, of his recent journey to Egypt, Palestine and India, in connection with Y.M.C.A. extension in the east. Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot-Rice presided over the crowded meeting. Mr. Holmes visited Oxford before leaving for the East, and his present visit was therefore doubly welcome. The new Principal of Pusey House (Rev. R. L. Ottley) has just concluded a short course of Sunday evening sermons to undergraduates at All Saints' Church on Christian life and warfare. Mr. Ottley is perhaps the most popular lecturer of the theological faculty, and his lectures on Old Testament Theology and the Incarnation are always attended by very large numbers. The teaching is always spiritual, and, except quite rarely, is acceptable even to men of other schools of thought than the lecturer's own.

The Shoreditch Mission.

To us, who visit and work amongst the poor of this district, it is heart-breaking to see them absolutely starving and to be unable to help them to the bare necessities of life. Men and women won for Christ from vice and wretchedness, are now, through depression in trade, reduced to the depth of poverty. We are haunted by the recollection of their haggard faces, with their pathetic attempts to look cheerful and hopeful.

One of our people, a sample only of scores, is a poor dressmaker, far gone in consumption, who has only tasted meat twice in nine weeks. The doctor attached to our Mission advises her to take nourishing things, while, as a matter of fact, she is scarcely able to buy bread. She is self-respecting and independent, and reveals her poverty to none. Only by visiting and kindly questioning have we discovered the facts of the case. Another family, sorely afflicted with ill-health, are now without work or any prospect of employment for some time to come. What the winter will bring in the way of further distress we dare not think.

Sister CHARITY and Sister FAITH, Deaconesses.

25, Bonner-road, Victoria Park, E.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Norwich annual meeting was a great success.

The Glasgow Central Association has enrolled three new branches.

The celebration of the semi-jubilee of the Grangemouth Association took place recently.

The Week of Prayer for young men opens on Sunday: special meetings will be held next week in most of the associations.

The membership of the West Hartlepool Y.M.C.A. has reached 298, being an increase of 100 during the past twelve months.

The Darlington Association has arranged a full and promising programme of winter's work. The evangelistic aim is evidently kept well to the front.

A correspondent writes: "The Doune (N.B.) Association is having good meetings, with about thirty-five young men present, on Sabbath mornings."

Rev. Louis Byrde, B.A., of the Student Volunteer Union, delivered the other evening, in Camden Town, an impressive lecture upon the needs of the Soudan.

At the annual meeting of the Kettering Association, Mr. W. Simpson took the chair, and addresses were delivered by Mr. J. H. Putterill and F. C. Bennett.

The Brandon, Manitoba, Association, at its recent annual meeting, showed gratifying progress, reporting a number of conversions, and increasing influence among the young men of the town.

The work of the Lincoln Association has been greatly revived since the appointment of Mr. Rankin to the secretaryship, and has an exceedingly good programme for the winter.

At Camden-road, the Sunday morning Prayer Meeting is enjoying a sense of revival, both in numbers and spiritual blessing; and so also is the Conversational Bible Class on Sunday afternoon.

Mr. D. Robertson, an old member of the Dundee Association, who has been some years working in China, is during his furlough delivering addresses in the north, on mission work in China.

At the recent prize distribution in Manchester, the Mayor stated that last session 1,300 young men employed in the warehouses and places of business, benefited by the Y.M.C.A. classes in the city alone.

The annual meeting of the Birmingham Association was attended by nearly 2000 persons. Mr. Richard Cadbury took the chair, and addresses were delivered by Canon Barker and Mr. W. R. Lane. The report showed that a large amount of active work is being carried on.

In New York State, summer work shows fruitful results. Exclusive of the Railroad, College, and Boys' Departments, 168 professed conversions were noted in the last three months, and 342 inquirers dealt with. There were also 120 additions to the church. These results were obtained in 35 instances through personal work.

The Darlington Y.M.C.A. have removed into larger premises, Granville House, Bondgate, and their membership is steadily increasing. A new feature in a forty-five minutes' Sunday social meeting has met with great success. An average attendance of seventy-five has been attained, and much spiritual good has resulted.

At the annual meeting of Brechin Association, Mr. James Gellatly occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. The report showed that during the past year the Association had had in operation a variety of useful agencies, which had been attended with a considerable degree of success. The membership is at present ninety-six.

On Thursday, the Hull Association held its annual meeting at the Royal Institution. Mr. James Willis occupied the chair. The speakers were Rev. J. G. Train, Messrs. E. J. Kennedy and H. Armstrong. The report, which was read by Mr. C. H. Fewlass, showed a total membership of 251. The audience was both large and enthusiastic.

Mrs. Baeyertz gave an address at the Bayswater Y.M.C.A., on Tuesday week, on the Unpardonable Sin. The hall was crowded to the doors. It was a most solemn and heart-searching time. Nearly the whole of the young men remained behind to the after meeting, and the workers were busy dealing with the anxious, up till nearly 11 o'clock. We had the joy of pointing many to the Lamb of God. Mrs. Baeyertz is just leaving London for a mission at Winchester. We hope, "if the Lord will," to be able to arrange for a mission for young men in Bayswater at the beginning of next year. Walter Wild, Sec.

DR. W. VALENTINE BIRD has issued (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.) an important pamphlet on "The Action of Alcohol on the Human Body," proving by unanswerable facts that alcohol is neither a food, a heat producer, nor a preventer of disease.

[1162]

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Y.W.C.A. has for some time carried on the work of visiting and befriending barmaids employed in railway refreshment rooms and restaurants. A little report of this useful work has been issued by Miss Gough, and may be had of her from the rooms of the branch, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

The Seaside Home, conducted by Miss Spearing at St. Leonards-on-Sea, has, during the summer, been quite full. If it can be partially used during the winter, when inmates are received on reduced terms, it will be self-supporting. Though affiliated to the Y.W.C.A., the Home is a private house, and open to other visitors willing to conform to its few simple rules. For particulars address Miss Spearing, Gunwalloe, 19, St. Margaret's-road, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

In connection with the Dublin Y.W.C.A. a drawing-room meeting was held on Tuesday week at the Institute, when, at the invitation of the committee, a large gathering of friends filled the rooms. Canon Wynne spoke in appreciation of the work carried on. Revs. J. S. Bird, W. Lumley, and T. Connellan also spoke, giving instances which had come under their own notice, when the practical help, sympathy, and time of the workers was given ungrudingly, and used of God to be a means of help and blessing. Mrs. Smith, President, described the growth of the Association during the last ten years, the two rooms in Nassau-street having given place to four Institutes and Homes, and the possibility of still further extension. Miss Wilson, Hon. Lady Superintendent, gave a short account of different branches of work, showing that the influence of the Institute extended not only through the city, but into all parts of Ireland. We understand that funds are much needed for the work of this Institute.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

At Wareham a branch of the Y.P.S.C.E. has been started, with much promise.

Crown-terrace Church, Aberdeen, started a Society with six members. It has now on the roll twenty-five active and fourteen associate members.

The C.E. Society at Tyndale Chapel, Bristol, has inaugurated the winter session with a special meeting, giving every promise of a successful season.

St. Mary's Church, Norwich, reports 130 Christian Endeavourers. Rev. J. H. Shakespeare states that no effort has met the needs of the young people so fully as this organisation.

The Malvern Society, started some three years ago, has proved a great blessing. There is now a membership of thirty-one, including fourteen Sunday-school teachers. The meetings are now nearly always conducted by members, and are bright and cheerful.

At Langholm (Dumfries), the first Scotch country town to take up the Y.P.S.C.E., the work has gone on successfully, and has proved itself to be a great spiritual blessing to many. Societies have recently been commenced in connection with the Free, North United Presbyterian, and Evangelical Union Churches.

A few days ago, in the Roman Catholic city of Quebec, the Provincial C.E. Convention was held. The meetings were marked by the unity of aim and intensity of purpose so characteristic of Christian Endeavour gatherings. The secretary's report showed that there were 133 Societies in the province, containing 6000 members. A large number have been added during the past year. In their meeting on Sunday afternoon, the Governor-General and Lady Aberdeen were present.

At the first annual meeting of the Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel Y.P.S.C.E. (pastor Rev. J. R. Wood), the report showed that the Society, commenced with twenty-eight active members, has now increased to fifty-four actives and three associates. Meetings for prayer, consecration, testimony, praise, and promise have been well sustained, with occasional public meetings in the temperance and missionary cause. The Prayer Union members pray daily for missionaries and their work, and subscribe a definite amount weekly with which to support a native preacher in Dacca at a cost of £20 per annum. Some twenty lady members meet monthly to make garments, and missionary periodicals are circulated amongst members. The Flower and Visiting Committee does good work in connection with the flower service and visiting sick folk. In fact, this branch of the Y.P.S.C.E. is active all round.

SAD ACCOUNTS have been published with regard to the amount of drinking on board the Orient liners, and really a case seems to have been made out for refusing permission to sell drink on board such vessels.

IRISH NOTES.

The Dublin Methodist Central Mission, which has been placed under the superintendence of Rev. Wm. Crawford, was formally opened under most encouraging auspices on Friday.

The fiftieth anniversary of Stephen's Green Methodist Church, Dublin, was observed during last week by a series of earnest devotional services, extending over four days, in which all the surviving ministers of the church took part. The anniversary was a season of great blessing.

The Laganview Mission, Belfast, which has almost reached its majority, is doing a good work among the lapsed masses. The neighbourhood is regularly visited, and evangelistic services held. The work is carried on by voluntary labour, under the superintendence of Mr. W. J. Marshall, a local merchant.

A five-weeks Gospel mission has been conducted by Mr. Samuel Miller, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, in a tent at Crossroads, near Dromore, co. Down, with excellent results. A similar mission, extending over a period of eight days, has been held in Athenry parish church by Rev. F. W. Gason, of Dublin. At Newry a mission has been conducted by Mr. S. G. Montgomery in the Presbyterian Church, Downshire-road, with much fruit.

Much indignation has been aroused among Protestants of all denominations in Limerick by the decision of the Privy Council to hand over to the Roman Catholics in that city the buildings and the greater portion of the endowments of the Leamy Schools, the money for the building and endowment of which was left by a Mr. Leamy, a Protestant, over a hundred years ago, in order to give a free education to the poor of the city and neighbourhood.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow has a "Church Planting Committee," whose labours have not been very onerous for some time back; but now they have resolved on erecting a new church in West Pollokshields, where the population is increasing fast.

The Railway Mission recently had a two days' conference in Glasgow, and the higher railway officials turned out in considerable numbers at a social meeting. The movement in Scotland is making decided strides, and is recognised by the railway managers as a power for good.

Mr. John Lintas, who acted for some time as assistant to the Professor of Hebrew in Glasgow F.C. College, has been appointed, by the Jewish committee of the Free Church missionary to Tiberias, in room of Rev. W. Ewing. He will proceed to his interesting field of labour about the beginning of December.

The new session in the Free Church Colleges at Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen began on November 1. Opening lectures were given in Edinburgh by Professor Blaikie, in Glasgow by Professor Lindsay, and in Aberdeen by Professor Salmond. Dr. Lindsay's subject was "The Ideal of the Corporate Church in the First Two Centuries." Earnest prayer was offered up in most of the churches the following Sabbath for a blessing on the winter's work.

An admirable plan for drawing out and stimulating the working power in a congregation is followed in Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, Rev. Dr. Stalker's congregation. The Wednesday evening after the quarterly communion is devoted to a workers' meeting, where not only are those already engaged encouraged to continue their labours, but an opportunity is offered to new members to indicate what service they will be prepared to render to the common cause.

At the 44th annual meeting of the Glasgow Sabbath Protection Society, which was held last week in the Religious Institution Rooms, Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P., presiding, it was stated that there were 2,458 shops open in the city on Sunday, showing a decrease in comparison with last year, when the number was 2,630. Earnest and vigorous speeches in defence of the sanctity of the Sabbath were delivered by the chairman, Drs. Stalker and Anderson, and Principal Douglas.

Rev. Robert Howie, of Govan, who recently published a pamphlet on "The Church and the Churchless," has been interviewed by a correspondent of The Scottish Weekly, and has affirmed that the churches are losing ground in Scotland. Among the causes of this state of matters he mentions the undermining of faith in the Bible, taking evangelistic work outside the Church and neglecting the old territorial system of house-to-house visitation, Saturday afternoon recreations, the enormous sums spent on drink, seat-rents, the tendency of churches to desert the poor and go after the rich, and the growing love for fiction and sensational literature. Mr. Howie's statements have produced a deep impression, as he is an acknowledged authority on this subject.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. „ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols. „ „
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols. „ „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 „ „	4s. „ „
12 „ „	6s. „ „
24 „ „	12s. „ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. John Horniman, Christian philanthropist.

Dr. Dale, in his "Lectures on Preaching," says:—"'We believe, and therefore speak' has been the device of the true minister of the Church from Apostolic times to our own." Judging from many sermons which are preached in our day, there are ministers who have taken a new motto, "We disbelieve, and therefore speak." But what results can come from a ministry which is almost wholly critical and destructive?

The following also is from Dr. Dale's "Lectures on Preaching":—"If you are to preach to any purpose, you must care more for men than for learning and literature. There are some ministers who think so much about their sermons, that they never seem to think about their congregations. They have so intense an intellectual delight in the exposition and defence of religious truth, that they do not remember that their business is to teach, to impress, to convert the living men and women that listen to them."

In The Expository Times as many as five columns are devoted to the exposition of the "great text," "The blood of Jesus, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." They are composed of beautiful extracts, some exegetical, some expository, some illustrative, taken from writers of various schools; yet out of this wealth only one line can be found which touches on that suggestive title, "His Son." Why did it not satisfy John to write, "The blood of Jesus cleanseth"? "His Son" shows the Father's satisfaction with what Jesus has done; his desire that we should be cleansed, and also his love for sinners; and thus "the name," slipped in as a kind of parenthesis, is a corrective of the thought that, though Jesus may love us, the Father's love has to be won for us. We come, in this "great text," at once to God in Christ.

There are numbers of Christian young men in situations of various kinds whom God's work requires in the mission-field. If a thousand went, their places in the commercial world could be immediately filled by others, who would bless them for going. Young men and women imperil their lives in climbing Alpine heights; they go to the ends of the earth for employment. How is it there is so little enterprise, so little courage, so little devotedness, so little ambition, while the very noblest work in which men and women can be engaged is crying out for workers, and the dark places of the earth remain full of the habitations of cruelty, because those "whose souls are lighted with wisdom from on high," to those benighted nations "the lamp of life deny?" God delights in the enterprise of those who, like Jonathan and his armour-bearer, like Livingstone and Gilmour, like Frederick Arnot and Annie Taylor, attack Philistine garrisons, endure hardness, explore unknown lands, casting themselves on God, with whom "there is no restraint to save by many or by few."

Dr. Harry Guinness, in addressing a meeting of men at Finsbury Park, showed that the plagues engendered by unholy associations are terrible beyond description in their effect, not only upon this but upon all coming generations. He quoted a saying of Sir Andrew Clark to the students in the London Hospital, "Gentlemen, Nature never forgives, and never forgets." Man cannot evade the penalties of breaking the laws of Nature, which are the laws of God. Every year we send out to India 10,000 men and boys who are encouraged and schooled in the degradation of themselves and of Indian women, and educated in the delusion that sin can be made safe. Every year 10,000 men return, after their seven years' service, a large proportion of them debauched by Governmental arrangement, hardened in heart, polluted in mind, corrupted in body, to debauch and harden, to pollute and corrupt the villages and hamlets, the towns and cities, to which they come.

What should the Government do, instead of trying to "take in God" by regulations which play into the hands of that old murderer and liar, the devil and Satan? It should send out lecturers to enlighten the soldiers as to the mechanism "so fearfully and wonderfully made and curiously wrought in the lower parts of the earth; whose substance was seen of God while yet unperfect, in whose book all its members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, while as yet there were none of them." But it should also facilitate marriage. A celibate army will, in the nature of things, carry a curse wherever it goes, as certainly as a celibate priesthood.

It is not strange that ungodly men, scientific or otherwise, should think and teach that the being made in the image of God can worship Baal-peor and escape the plague; but that men of God, medical or military, should not only be thus deceived, but lend themselves to advocate and work out the accursed system, with all its dehumanising concomitants and hideous paraphernalia, is not part of the mystery of God, but of the mystery of iniquity. Until the Christian conscience is convinced, there is not much hope that public opinion will be powerful enough to prevail on Parliament. The mightiest of the recent meetings at Westminster, to denounce the rebellion of the Indian Government and the military authorities against the resolution of Parliament, was the unreported prayer meeting, where a few men and more women gathered in their weakness to take hold of the strength of God, and to obey his command, "Concerning the works of my hand command ye Me."

One of the devices of the devil in the Babylonish mysteries, which date their origin from Babel, though their roots were in the antediluvian wickedness, was the system of caste. Out of that has grown the habit of regarding things from the point of view peculiar to the caste position. Thence comes the warped and twisted conscience, governmental, ecclesiastical, military, medical, commercial. The English or Indian Government official, the military or naval officer, the doctor, the man of business, as a rule, looks at everything through the spectacles of his own profession or calling. Even conversion to God does not always deliver men from a professional or conventional conscience; yet this deliverance surely is implied in the commission to win men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God.

In Germany there are Societies for Raising Public Morals, similar to the various kinds of Social Purity Societies we have at home. They include men of all sorts, but in Germany no woman can be a member of any society which seeks to influence legislation. Yet we are convinced that the movement so bravely inaugurated fifty years ago by Dr. Wardlaw failed because women were excluded. Satan seems to think the same; for no such fierce opposition was accorded to men at that time, as to the noble women led by Mrs. Josephine Butler in our own day.

The basis of the societies is the Gospel alone. Rev. Mr. Weber, president of their last conference, said: "We do keep up, nay, we have to try to regain, Christianity. Jesus Christ alone can destroy the serpent's head." He spoke of many of the newspapers being a disgrace to Germany. Christian feeling is aroused on this question as never before; even the teachings of science and literature on heredity are lending their aid.

Once more public attention has been called by one of our judges to the diminution of crime, especially juvenile crime. With an increasing population offences against the law are declining. This social improvement is unquestionably the result of Christian work and influence. The changed and changing state of society has a distinct relation to the Kingdom of Christ, and cannot but present multiplied and enlarged opportunities for earnest Gospel testimony.

The demands on liberality were never greater than they are to-day, and only that type of liberality which is commended by Paul in 2 Cor. viii. 1, 2, is equal to the strain, a liberality originating in the grace of God, pouring forth from a joyful heart, unchecked either by poverty or affliction. We may have faith, utterance, knowledge, earnestness, love for certain persons, and yet have need to take care and add this kind of liberality to them. The cynical and inhuman doctrine that as in warfare the starving of the enemy's garrison is recognised as necessary, so in the present industrial war the locked-out workmen and their families should be starved into acquiescence, should, by the law of reaction, elicit a sympathy and generosity never experienced before.

We are grieved to see the temper displayed last week at a mass meeting of boot and shoe operatives in Leicester, to consider the action to be taken in view of local distress. In spite of the protests of an alderman and official of the National Union, and also of the chairman and several officers of the Union, a resolution was carried by a large majority, which expressed the opinion that, unless something was done without delay, starving men would be compelled and would be justified in taking food by illegal means—in plain English, stealing it. The men could do nothing more unwise. It would, so far as adopted, turn them into bands of robbers who would never hold together; it would alienate public sympathy; and trades unions, which have, with their full share of human faults, done for their class good service, would be utterly discredited and seriously weakened. But we hope for better things. Even the starving colliers have seldom yielded to the temptation to steal, and their endurance is doing more for them than immoral violence.

A comparison between the social condition of Germany in the days of Martin Luther and the social condition of England to-day, between the thoughts that arose in the Reformer's mind and the thoughts that are coming up in the minds of Christian men now, is very striking. Great trading companies were at that time "oppressing and ruining small traders, as the pike does the smaller fish in the water"; the markets were "rigged," goods were "cornered." Of the great companies, Luther says: "If they remain, justice and honesty will be overthrown; and if justice and honesty are to remain the companies must fall." Adulteration of goods was common, and he thought it would be better to promote and extend agriculture, because so much land remained untilled.

Both the quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends of Birmingham and the Cromer branch of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society have protested against the slaughter of the Matabele, and against seeking to promote commerce at the expense of justice, humanity, and mercy. These words express the convictions and feelings of large numbers of Christians everywhere. The Wesleyans were especially plain and emphatic, calling upon the Government "to arrest the further progress of the armed bands of the Chartered Company, and to take possession of the affairs of Matabeleland and Mashonaland, and mete out to the invaders such retribution, and to the people dispossessed of their homes and their lands such satisfaction, as the laws of justice may require." Mr. Gladstone's reply to the Friends shows that things will be allowed to run their course. Missionary work seems likely to suffer. But God is over all.

The letters of James Russell Lowell give a few glimpses into his inner life, which harmonise with all that we know of him from his works. Of the Agnostic he says:

> When they tell me that I can't know certain things, I am apt to wonder how they can be sure of that, and whether there may be things which they can't know.

Is not that according to the teaching of our Lord, when he says that the world cannot receive the Spirit of truth "because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him"? When men proclaim themselves agnostics they are only saying of themselves what God has always said, and their testimony is really an unconscious support of Scripture. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

How to Read the Scriptures.

By REV. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D.*

There are two passages in the New Testament which may greatly assist us in our reading of the Scriptures. Perhaps by following out all their meaning we may be able to see how a claim may be set up even within the Bible itself for its own unity and its own inspiration. One of these passages occurs in the narrative of our Lord's Temptation in the Wilderness. When the tempter quoted a text, the tempted Saviour replied, "It is written AGAIN." Scripture completing itself is the best commentary. And that is the best answer to the infidel who is horrified by Exodus iv. 24, 26. Say to him: "It is written AGAIN." Do not blot out the passage in order to calm his perturbation, but set another passage beside it. The Bible is self-interpreting. Where the pool is bitter, the tree of healing is close at hand. Here the Concordance may be the best commentary. "Again, another scripture saith" (John xix. 37), is the greatest answer that can be returned to any inquirer. Within the Bible you will find both the enigma and the answer.

The second help to a right understanding of the Bible I find in such words as these:—"And his disciples remembered that it is written. . . When, therefore, He was risen from the dead his disciples remembered . . and they believed the scripture. . . When Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of Him. . . Then remembered I the word of the Lord." Thus the Word may remain a dead letter until experience gives it vitality and force and claim. In the interpretation of many scriptures, experience is the most efficient scholarship. We know the twenty-third Psalm, because our souls have passed through it line by line. We do not supersede grammar; we pass into a region it cannot enter. I venture to think that if we read the Scriptures in the light of experience and history, many an obscure or forgotten passage would become expressive and prophetic. We should be startled into many an exclamation! History is the amplification of Scripture. Experience is the corroboration of the Bible. "Then remembered they"! "When he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered"! So it is with ourselves. Memory is awakened within us every day. Deeds we had forgotten stand out in radiance. Words little heeded at the time have, years afterwards, given up their secret as the sea gives up its dead. Some texts are for the far-off centuries to explain. The explanation of other passages we shall find in heaven.

IS ALCOHOL A FOOD?—This important question was answered by Dr. David Cerna in a paper read before the Pan-American Medical Congress, whose sittings have just been concluded. Dr. Cerna differs in his judgment from other physicians of weight, in that he decides definitely that alcohol is undoubtedly a food. Among other things, he affirms that "alcohol in small amounts excites, in large amounts depresses the peripheral and sensory nerves," and that "excessive quantities cause degeneration of the axis cylinders of nerve fibres." With regard to the effect of alcohol upon the thought process, it is affirmed that "in small amounts the drug stimulates the cerebral functions, afterwards depressing, and finally abolishing them"; in other words, a little alcohol makes a man lively, whilst a great deal makes him "dead drunk."

* Extracted from None Like It, A Plea for the Old Sword. (Nisbet & Co.)

AN HONOURABLE MANDARIN.

In the end of May last the local magistrate was removed from Wan Hsien. As he was not managing affairs well, the head citizens sent in a petition to the Viceroy, who gave him another appointment in a less important district. He left this city, being succeeded by a man of strong will and administrative power.

This city of Wan Hsien is just halfway between Chang and Chungking, and is a large, important place. Lately it has grown more so, as the civil and military officials on their way up to the capital from Shanghai, or on their way down returning to Pekin, call here. The majority land at this place, continuing their journey overland to Chéntu, along the Great North Road from Pekin viâ Singan, or vice-versâ, instead of coming to Chéntu, they now take steamer all the way to Tch'ang, and native boats from there on here, thereby saving some ten or twenty days' travelling.

This city is situated in the south-east of Szchu'an, and surrounded by big markets, with a large population: the scenery is grand all round, and the great River Yangtsze adds much to the natural beauty. Two years ago there was an attempt made at a rebellion against the Government, and things reached rather a crisis, all business and trade being quite suspended for some days. Owing to the prompt action of the resident officials, and the voluntary muster of the militia, the leaders were captured and instantly beheaded. Thus what promised to be a severe break-out was put down, and in due time order and peace were regained. The subject of my present communication is the above-named new mandarin and his action in coming into office.

It was reported that he was a rigorous administrator of the law, and so the people were more or less ready for changes on his arrival. He has proved the truth of the rumour in issuing a number of rigid proclamations, which have had a salutary effect upon the whole city and district. Amongst these proclamations is one "prohibiting the opening of opium dens on any pretence." Now Wan Hsien had some three or four hundred such dens, which were on the increase, and doing, as they are wont, any amount of havoc amongst the populace, being the centres of all vice and sin. This new mandarin's name is Fung, and he has already gained a good name all around. His proclamation was seconded by two notices from the bell or town crier, giving all full warning of the penalty in store for any who dared to break his law after a given date. He gave them ten days, to end of the fourth moon, to settle up all, and then another five days, to the 5th of fifth moon, which was the Great Dragon festival, to find lawful business.

By this time I noticed a marked change in the streets as I walked through them. Every den was closed, and the well-known curtain in front of the doors, with sign board or signlamp, was nowhere to be seen. The constables of each division were charged on their honour to bring to justice any law-breaker, and to keep strict watch on all former den-openers and house proprietors. Such vigorous action has made, of course, a marked impression upon all around, only the poor opium slaves feeling its severity, having now to find satisfaction for their craving in some other direction. The landlords of the houses are also under the same restriction, together with all the neighbouring occupants.

Mandarins with the good of their countrymen at heart, and with the desire to prove their fidelity to the Emperor by putting down all open sin and warning miscreants and lawless people, can do an astounding amount of good to their country, and gain the respect of all classes. This Mr. Fung is such a man, and is winning the esteem of all. His puissant manner is not ephemeral either, but is such as will make his term of office here long remembered with the honour due to his name.

I have an object in thus writing about this mandarin, and that is to tell British residents in Shanghai, and to show the municipal council of that city what a Hsien magistrate thinks of these pernicious opium dens, and how he sets them a noble example. Alas! for my beloved country's honour, that in the Modern Settlement such dens of vice should be allowed to be kept open under the full cognisance of those in authority!—Yours respectfully,

W. Hope Gill.

C.I.M., Wan Hsien, W. China, July 26, 1893.

"MAY I?"

By the late C. H. SPURGEON.*

Faith in Christ is the simplest action that anybody ever performs. It is the action of a child; indeed, it is the action of a new-born babe in grace. Faith comes at the moment that the child is born into God's family. One of the first signs and tokens of being born again is faith; therefore it must be a very simple thing. I venture to put it very plainly when I say that faith in Christ differeth in no respect from faith in anybody else, except as to the person upon whom that faith is set. Thou believest in thy mother: thou mayest in the same manner believe in Jesus Christ, the Son of God. Thou believest in thy friend: it is the same act that thou hast to do toward thy higher and better Friend.

The reason why faith in the Lord Jesus is a superior act of faith in anyone else lies in this fact—that it is a superior person whom thou believest in. Thy natural heart is more averse to believing in Jesus than in believing in anyone else. The Holy Spirit must teach thy faith to grasp the high things of Christ Jesus; but that grasp is by the hand of a simple child-like faith. But it is the same faith; mark thou that. It is the gift of God in so far as this—that God gives thee the understanding and the judgment to exercise it upon his Son, and to receive Him. The faith of a child to his father is almost always a wonderful faith; just the faith that we would ask for our Lord Jesus. Many children believe that there is no other man in the world so great and good, and right and kind and rich, and everything else, as their father is; for if their father is not king, it is a mistake that he is not. Children think so of their parents, and that is the kind of faith we would have you exercise towards the Lord Jesus Christ, who deserves such confidence, and much more. We should give to Jesus a faith by which we do Him honour and magnify Him exceedingly. As the child never thinks where the bread and butter is to come from to-morrow morning, and it never enters its little head to fret about where it will get new socks when the present ones are worn out, so must you trust in Jesus Christ for everything you want between here and heaven—trust Him without asking questions. He can and will provide. Just give yourself up to Him entirely, as a child gives itself up to a parent's care, and feels itself to be at ease. Oh, what a simple act it is!—this act of faith. There are persons with no education whatever, who just know their Bibles true, and have an abundant faith: they are poor in this world, but rich in faith. Happy people! Alas, for those wise people whose wisdom prevents faith in Jesus! Oh, friend, do not think that faith is some difficult and puzzling thing. It is the simplest act that the mind can perform.

I do earnestly entreat you not to stay contentedly for a single hour without a full, complete, and saving faith in Christ. Your only safety lies in believing in the Lord Jesus Christ with all your heart, and obeying his commandments. Therefore use what common sense would suggest to you as the means for obtaining faith. Now if there be anything in the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ, or anything about himself that you question, let me invite you to read over the four Gospels again, especially the story of his crucifixion. That cross of his is a very wonderful thing, for not only does it save those who have faith in it, but it breeds faith in those who look at it.

> When I see Him wounded, bleeding,
> Dying on th' accursèd tree,
> Then I feel my heart believing
> That He suffered thus for me.

There is life in a look at Christ, because in the very considering of Christ there is the breeding of a living faith. We listen to the Word, and faith cometh by hearing. We read the Word, and picture the whole thing before our eyes, and we say, "Yes, I do believe it. I never saw it quite in this fashion before, but I now believe it, and I will risk my soul on it." I have known my Lord these five and thirty years, I have no other hope of salvation than I had when I first came to Christ. I had no merits of my own then, and I have none now. I place all that ever I have done under my feet, and desire, as far as it is good, to give to God the glory of it; but as far as it comes of myself, I would sink it in the sea. I am saved in Christ, by faith in Him; but confidence in myself is detestable to me. I dare believe in Jesus Christ as my all in all, but I am less than nothing before Him.

Come; we start fair, you see. If we start now you and I will start on a level, with the same confidence in the same Saviour, the same blood to cleanse us, and the same power to save us, and we will meet in heaven. As surely as we meet at the cross, we will meet where the Saviour wears the crown.

This woman said in her heart, "If I do touch the hem of his garment, I shall"—what? "I shall be made whole." It is not "If I may but touch I may be made whole." No; she had got over the may-be's in the first struggle. It is "If I may I shall." If you trust Christ you shall be made whole. If you do actually repose yourself in Christ, as the Lord liveth, you must live and be saved. He loved, and lived, and died that sinners might not die. He wrought a complete work, of which He said, as He expired, "It is finished." There is nothing for you to add to it, nothing for you to bring with you to make that work complete; but you yourself, stripped naked of every hope, black, foul, guilty, abominable, the worst of the worst, have only to come and look up to those five wounds, and to that bleeding, thorn-crowned head, and to say, "Into thy hands I commit my spirit," and you shall be saved. It is done. "Thy sins which are many are forgiven thee. Go, and sin no more." Thou art his child. Go and live to the glory of thy Father; and may the peace of God that passeth all understanding be with thee for ever and ever. Amen.

* From a sermon on Matt. ix. 21, entitled, "May I?" (Passmore & Alabaster. 6d.)

MADAGASCAR.

Night and darkness veil the glory
Of the earth and sea and sky;
Birds and beasts of evil omen
From their nests and coverts fly.

Till, from far beyond the mountain,
Sunlight flashes o'er the sea,
Gilding cupola and fountain,
Bidding clouds and shadows flee.

Waking earth to pristine beauty
By a new creative word,
While to sylvan songs of rapture
Nature's silences are stirred.

Such is Madagascar's story—
Moral darkness, crime's excess,
Vanishing beneath the glory
Of the Sun of Righteousness.

Savages of fiercest nature,
By the vilest sins enticed,
Changed into a new creation
Conquered by the love of Christ.

Hearts and homes made pure and peaceful
By the healing balm of prayer;
Holy songs instead of howlings;
Love where wrath and hatred were.

Honour to the Christian valour—
Noble chivalry of grace,
In whose loving, holy warfare,
Carnal weapons have no place.

To the pulling down of strongholds
More than conquerors, through his hand;
Who shall one day sit enthronéd
Monarch over every land.

M. N. Watts.

College Park, Belfast.

SIR ANDREW CLARK, whose death will be regretted by temperance reformers, will long be remembered for his address on alcohol as "an enemy of the human race."

A UNITED CONFERENCE of Nonconformist churches has been held at Northampton, attended by 280 delegates. Of these seventy were Wesleyan Methodists, eighty Congregationalists, and seventy Baptists. Rev. James Smith, of Kettering, opened the meeting with an address on "Mutual Helpfulness," and in the free conversation that followed a general desire was expressed for a closer union, especially in the villages. As the outcome of the Conference, a committee was appointed to obtain statistics of the population of the villages in the county, of the religious provision made for the villagers, the size and congregation of the present chapels, and the number of church members. When these statistics are obtained it is proposed, in cases where two chapels are struggling in a village that has only room for one, to endeavour to arrange their amalgamation.

STARTING FOR THE SOUDAN.

On Wednesday evening last week Mr. Hermann Harris, of the Central Soudan Mission, left London to continue his pioneering operations, after a four months' sojourn in this country. A member of our staff seized a few fleeting moments of interview on the preceding day to extract from Mr. Harris some particulars of his pioneer mission work and its immediate prospects.

"What have you been doing during your stay in Great Britain?"

"Stirring up interest in the Soudan; doing deputation work, and getting volunteers for the Mission. We have secured nine fresh workers, most of whom are hoping to raise their own outfit and passage, trusting to God to supply these as needed. Two have gone already; one goes with me to-morrow, a negro and a native of the Soudan. Two others start in a few days, and two more about New Year's Day. Two of our recruits are Scotch; one is from Harley House and two from Bethshan; three are from the Friends in Birmingham, and one from Bolton. All are young men, and the eldest is twenty-seven. Lady workers? Yes, we have several lady helpers in prospect, and some of the men are engaged to be married, but we cannot receive ladies until we have a station in the interior."

"What is the extent of your parish?"

"Our real parish measures two thousand miles from east to west and a thousand miles from north to south. In all this wide expanse there never has been and there is not at present a single Protestant missionary. As yet we are only on the route to our ultimate field, which is the Central Soudan and the countries lying around Lake Chad. In our three years of work, we have planted a station in Tripoli, and have taken a house in Gabes, in the province of Tunis."

"What are your special methods of work?"

"We have medical mission work; preaching with the magic lantern and Gospel slides; personal visitation; itinerating at markets and fairs, etc. We distribute quantities of Scriptures in Arabic, Turkish, Hebrew, French, and Italian. We are also engaged in the translation of the Hausa Scriptures for the negroes; it is the common language of the region."

"There are peculiar obstacles, I suppose, to your gaining entrance to the interior?"

"Yes; chiefly there are the political prejudices of the Turks; they object to the presence of Europeans, as they think their country is going to be stolen. I have already been arrested and sent back when only two days' journey inland; and I have no doubt they would send me back again if I went that way. At present I do not know for certain what further steps I will take."

"We hear a good deal about the progress of the Mohammedan faith; what view do you hold on the subject?"

"The system is spreading rapidly through Central Africa; but only by force of arms. They now have special terms to distinguish those who become followers of the Prophet as a result of conviction from those who do so through compulsion. The former is called Moumin and the latter Muslim. At Mecca, not long ago, a trial was held with reference to this very point, and the judge affirmed the distinction between the two designations."

"How do you purpose to sustain the interest in your work while you are at the front?"

"We have now got a Council, consisting of Mr. F. W. Crossley, Manchester; Rev. C. Musgrave Brown, Liverpool; Mr. Reader Harris; Prof. Rendel Harris, of Cambridge; Mr. Thomas Martin, Crowborough, Sussex; and Mr. R. Caldwell (of St. Martin's House, Gresham-street, E.C.), who is also secretary and treasurer for the present."

Time pressed with our visitor, and we farewelled him with a hearty "God speed." With a strain of asceticism Mr. Harris seems to mingle qualities that are needed for the making of an heroic pioneer. We can but pray and trust that he will be successful in piercing the ring of darkness that now surrounds the Soudan, so that the light of salvation may stream in upon virgin soil.

IT IS STATED that Lord Carlisle, who is a staunch total abstainer, has closed every public-house on his estate.

THE MEDICAL SUPERINTENDENT of the London County Asylum draws attention to the fact that since the abolition of beer from the patients' diet at the asylum the recovery rate amongst the patients has been much higher.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXIV.

THE WILD BEAST COMING UP OUT OF THE EARTH.

Another portent, terrible and mysterious, now passes before the eyes of the Seer, who beholds a wild beast rising from the ground, having two horns like a lamb, and speaking with the voice of a dragon, It appears to act as the deputy and representative of the monster that came up out of the sea. All its efforts and actions are directed to the glorification of the latter, whom it induces the dwellers on the earth even to worship by means of the miracles which it works. Its power is tremendous, extending over as wide a region as that of the seven-headed and ten-horned wild beast; and it first deceives, and then ferociously tyrannises over, all them that dwell on the earth. It is thus closely connected with the former power, and, under the name of "the false prophet" subsequently given to it, it is associated therewith in its terrible doom. For it is written that "the beast was taken and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped the image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." And that place of awful punishment is henceforth known as "the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are."

What was it that was denoted by this terrible apparition? Let us carefully mark its leading characteristics.

In the first place, as the first wild beast and its successive heads did not prefigure individuals, but powers, so are we bound to interpret the second. It is a power or system. Then it arises, not out of the sea, as the first did, but out of the earth; not out of a tumultuous, heaving, unsettled condition, but out of that which is solidified, stable, permanent. Next, it is endued with "all the power of the first beast," which, be it remembered, was nothing less than Satanic, and this power is exercised in the presence and for the magnification of the former. Again, we see that though gentle and innocent as a lamb in its appearance, it has the deceptive voice of a serpent, or dragon. Further, it assumes the office of a prophet, or divinely commissioned teacher of men. It invests the image of the beast with life, enabling it to utter decrees, and to persecute by excommunication and death those who refuse to give their homage and allegiance to the first beast, and who are afterwards seen as the enthroned priests of the Lord, and the associates of his millennial reign. These marks are very significant. The features of the second beast are surely so strikingly painted that recognition and identification are not difficult. Yet "here is wisdom."

The second beast clearly denotes some power which, under the guise of innocence and gentleness, conceals a fierce and persecuting spirit, and which exercises the function of a prophet, whose teaching is deceptive of the whole world (the limited "world" under notice). And its deceptive teaching is made effectual by means of false miracles, or "lying wonders."

Twice did our Lord most emphatically warn his disciples of the advent of false teachers, once at the commencement and again at the close of his ministry. In the Sermon on the Mount He bade them, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Here is the brutal nature disguised by the lamb-like appearance. And in his final prophecy on the Mount of Olives, He declared that "there shall arise false prophets, which shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Paul had told the Ephesian elders that "grievous wolves" should enter in among them, "not sparing the flock." He warned Timothy of the apostasy of those who should "depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of demons (or deified dead men), speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared with a hot iron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats" (1 Tim. iv. 1-3).

Peter speaks of the rise and work of such teachers of error in the plainest and most solemn terms:—"But there were false prophets among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them." "Through covetousness with feigned words shall they make merchandise of you"; "walking in the lust of uncleanness"; "despising governments, not afraid to speak evil of dignities, beguiling unstable souls, having hearts exercised with covetous practices, speaking great swelling words of vanity"; and following "the way of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness"; these destroyers of the souls of men were "as natural brute beasts ... utterly to perish in their own corruption" (2 Pet. ii. passim). And not less emphatic is the voice of Jude. "There are certain men, crept in unawares—ungodly men, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." They "defile the flesh, despise dominion, speak evil of dignities," and "run greedily after the error of Balaam for reward." They "walk after their own lusts—their mouth speaketh great swelling words." As "clouds without water," "trees without fruit, twice dead," "raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame," "wandering stars, to whom the blackness of darkness is reserved for ever," judgment was to be executed upon them at the coming of the Lord (Jude, passim).

It is impossible for words, symbolic and literal, to describe more plainly the rise of a body of men who, by diabolically bestowed energy, would by degrees become a regular system, or power, deceiving multitudes, and tyrannising over the masses of professing Christians commonly known as Christendom. Though the germs of this system existed in the Nicolaitanism of the days of John—for even in Paul's time it was said, "the mystery of iniquity doth already work"—it was not for some centuries that the monstrous evil was to assume the actual concrete form, and exercise the persecuting power manifested under the appearance of the second beast now beheld.

Not out of the tumultuous "sea" of the Gothic nations, but out of the more settled condition which supervened later—"the earth"—was this fearful creature of Satan to arise. It was to be subordinate to, but most closely co-operating with, the power ruling over the Roman Empire, and all its efforts and actions were to be directed towards the support and exaltation of the latter.

Has any such body of false teachers arisen in the professing Church? There can be but one reply. The hierarchy of Rome answers to every feature in the prophetic delineation. No less than one thousand bishops and half a million of priests—wolves in sheep's clothing—professed teachers of Christianity, but propagators in reality of darkest error—workers of pretended miracles (especially, as we have seen in respect of alleged "fire from heaven"). This vast organisation, spread everywhere, but compact and coherent in its principles, motives, and objects as one body, exists for the supreme purpose of magnifying the Papacy, and of bringing all under its authority and rule.

The character of this organisation was indeed truly described by Pope Gregory the Great himself, who, declaring his belief that "the King of Pride," or expected Antichrist, was "at hand," said that "an army of priests was prepared for him," and acknowledged with strange truthfulness that "beneath the meanest garment we conceal a haughty heart; under the aspect of sheep we nourish the fangs of the wolf." The subordination of this body of priests to its head at Rome, and its continued effort to exalt the same, is accurately described by the ecclesiastical historian, Mosheim, when he says: "The monks devoted themselves wholly to advance the interests and to maintain the dignity of the see of Rome. They made his cause their own, and represented him as a sort of God to the ignorant multitude." Thus they caused "the earth and them that dwell therein to worship (give supreme honour to) the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." It was "before him"—"in the sight of the beast," that is—in his presence, as his subordinates, deputies, administrators, and servants, that the action of this great hierarchy, or body of archbishops, bishops, priests, monks, and nuns, have for centuries performed, and still do perform, all their functions. No Eastern slaves could be more submissive to the despot that ruled them; any attempt at independence of thought or action being instantly quelled by the iron hand of the "Vicar of Christ." Witness the enforced recantation of the few who would not accept the dogma of Papal infallibility. When the present Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster was invested with the pallium, he solemnly swore that he would "with all his strength, obey, and would cause to be obeyed by others, the rules of the Holy Father and the decrees and orders of the Holy See."

And have they not with one voice been the false teachers of Christendom for centuries, performing their lying wonders every day and everywhere, even to the present moment, wearing the garb of superior sanctity, or lamb-like innocence, and at the same time exercising the most tyrannical authority and rule over the deluded followers of the great Apostacy?

And how subservient to their rule have been the "dwellers on the earth." Emperors and kings, governments and parliaments, feudal barons in their castles, and illiterate peasants in their cottages, have, for over a thousand years, submitted to their word, and given their servile allegiance to the Antichrist of Rome. The terrible instrument of the confessional, the assumed power of absolution, the craft and subtlety whereby the secrets of every home are searched out, the inhuman cruelties of the Inquisition, the excommunications and the curses of this dragon-like monster, have brought under Papal tyranny the minds and bodies of the unhappy millions who, deprived of the Scriptures, have fallen an easy prey to the machinations, the devices, and the hellish policy of the priesthood in the sheep's clothing.

Have they not "made merchandise" of the souls of men? Has not untold wealth flowed into their coffers? By the sale of masses and indulgences, and by every means which ingenuity and fraud could devise, by moneys forced from the hands of the dying.

Have they not appeared in sheep's clothing, or in the words of the prophecy, "with horns like a lamb"? The symbol is most striking. As, when a beast was flayed, the horns were not removed from the hide, but both remained together, so, though the horns alone are noticed, their mention would imply that the whole skin of the lamb—"sheep's clothing"—covered and concealed the wild beast. And with wonderful preciseness has Rome unconsciously illustrated, in one of her most important ceremonies, the figurative description of the prophecy. Every Romish Archbishop, is, or should be, invested with the pallium, which is the outward sign of their endowment with "the effulgence of apostolic and pastoral authority," and with power to exercise Papal authority and jurisdiction.

Now the pallium, or pall, is a "sacred" garment, specially manufactured for the Pope, and is obtained from the wool of two lambs slain on the eve of St. Agnes. It is declared to be the "symbol of the plenitude of ecclesiastical power," and, after due and general consecration, it is conferred by the Pope on those who are appointed to archiepiscopal dignity. Thus do the heads of the Romish hierarchy, throughout Christendom, assume, even in outward and material kind, the very mark and badge predicted. The investiture of the present Archbishop of Westminster with the pallium "marked," as Romish authorities declared, "an era in the Catholic ecclesiastical history of this country," signifying "the public recognition of the Catholic Church," as its absence had been "the prominent outward sign of the break with Rome, which had continued for nearly three centuries and a half."

When the character and work of the second wild beast are carefully compared with those of the extensive and mighty power which, by "wolves in sheep's clothing," and by false teachers, has throughout the period of the first beast's predicted sway, administered his dominions, exalted his authority, and deceived the dwellers on the earth, they will, I believe, be found to correspond in the most marvellous manner.

There remain, however, three crowning features showing the identity of both first and second beasts with the Romish system, which whether in its heads, the Popes, or in its ministers, the Papal clergy, has been the most terrible and successful adversary of the true Church of God. These three features are the Image, the Mark, and the Number of the beast. Their consideration must be reserved for the following paper.

A GIFT TO MISSIONS.—Amongst the offerings in the collecting boxes at the Conference Hall, Manchester, on the recent missionary-day, was a promise of £1000 for Africa and China. The following day the chairman, Mr. L. K. Shaw, received a cheque for that amount, the donor desiring that his name should be kept private. The Conference Committee are applying the amount in accordance with the donor's wishes.

ROME'S TACTICS IN EVANGELISM.

There is some instructive reading in the Catholic Times of the 27th ult., in which a "Paulist Father" narrates his experience as a missionary to "Non-Catholics" in the United States. His detailed description of the methods employed is refreshingly candid, being intended for readers of his own persuasion. But it may be profitable for "Non-Catholics" to note some of them. The adoption of "secular dress" brings him near to his audience and disarms "the old horror of a Catholic priest addressing them." He uses temperance and various social topics as "a good missionary go-between," "the best way to secure a hearing," for "these can be made bridges across the torrent of prejudice," "hatred of intemperance on the part of Catholics, especially if accompanied by the practice of total abstinence," being useful, "if only it be brought into public notice" (our italics)! A "question box" was provided, but this he found "needed to be baited"; so, he blandly says:—

I had a prominent non-Catholic read out publicly a couple of objections which had come to my ears, and I answered them. After that I had all the questions and objections I wanted. I treated them kindly, explained and developed them briefly when necessary, and quoted Scripture in my answers when I could recall a text. I adopted the expedient of asking questions of my own. This worked well, and as they pertained to the topics I was to lecture on they helped me to clear away difficulties beforehand. If I could have had someone to catechise me from the audience it would have been perfection. I had made arrangements with an educated Catholic layman to assist me as an interlocutor from the audience. But he was taken ill and was house-bound the whole week.

The reader is "entertained by one evening's harvest of questions," many of the bonâ fide ones being well directed at some of the monstrous presumptions and unscriptural burdens of the Papacy. But the replies, interesting as they must have been, are not vouchsafed to us, except that given to a more general query as to the origin of sin in the world. Being "suggestive of dense ignorance about Catholicity," the inquiries are characterised as "a jungle of delusions," to be "hewn away and burned up," in the comforting assurance that "if the pioneer's work is rude and tedious, the virgin soil, once uncovered and cultivated, produces the most abundant harvest." Unfortunately for this argument, the pioneers of "Catholicity" in bygone generations themselves planted the evil seeds upon the field of history.

But non-Catholics truly are ignorant of many things, and will readily agree with the disguised priest, who, "quite at home in coat tails," asserts sorrowfully that they do not know how profoundly we love the Bible, how intensely we trust in the continual guidance of the Holy Spirit. Let them but know as a preliminary that the Church stands and falls with the Bible.

Curiously enough in the same paper is reported a speech of Cardinal Vaughan, in which he claimed that the Roman Catholic Church is the most Scriptural and most Biblical institution that exists in the world. He could give many proofs of this, but would confine himself to one, the demonstration made by the Church during the month of October, when throughout the whole world the Rosary is recited in every Catholic church and also by a vast multitude of the Catholic faithful. The Rosary is a summary of the New Testament, an epitome of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, a compendium of all the great mysteries of the life and death of our Lord. Its essential part and chief characteristic are the contemplation of the fifteen mysteries, which are taken out of the Gospel; and the person who goes through the Rosary has contemplated on the whole of the Gospels. Hence what is the Rosary but an illustration that the Catholic Church is the most Biblical and most Scriptural institution in the world?

This strikes us as somewhat of a non sequitur, and all the more when his Eminence goes on to defend as follows the frequent repetition of the "Hail Mary":—

To produce a sound you put your finger on the note of the organ, and so long as you hold your finger the note is prolonged. But to prolong the musical note of a piano, which is a less perfect instrument than the organ, you strike it, and continue striking it to prolong the sound. Words are so imperfect, that when once said they pass and cease to strike the ear and the mind, so recourse is had to the same means as an imperfect instrument—the prayer is repeated again and again. Therefore never say that by repeating the "Hail Mary" you are engaged in useless repetition.

Ingenious truly! But how unlike the straightforward injunction of our Lord, taught in the self-same New Testament: "When ye pray, use not vain repetitions"! But this, perchance, may not be included in the "summary" that the Rosary represents, to say nothing of many another passage before the face of which Popery cannot stand.

The Paulist missionary substitutes an assumed name for the town which his narrative purports to describe. This is discreet, yet why this secresy, unless to prevent investigation as to facts, or a warning of those who are being thus cleverly beguiled? That the monk evangelist is a "smart" and able man none can doubt, "wise" undoubtedly, "harmless" perhaps. Non-Catholics in the United States and here at home will know now how to value, as merely a means to an end, the advocacy of temperance and social reform by Romish priests, clad though they be in the clothing of the flock.

PROGRESS IN MEXICO.

BY J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

After long and bitter struggles for civil and religious liberty, Mexico stands forth to-day the proud possessor of both, and bids fair, with a steadily rising credit, to assume ere long a leading place among the nations of the world. To one acquainted with Old Spain, comparison between its condition and that of New Spain is inevitable, and in considering the outlook of the two I feel no hesitation in pronouncing in favour of Mexico. Events may of course transpire here to overthrow what has been done, but this is hardly probable, now that the people are learning the blessings of peace. The only real danger is the conquered clerical party, and the only way to meet this danger is by spreading Gospel Light.

Here the power of the clergy is nothing compared to what it is in Spain. Primary schools have been established throughout the land, which are quite independent of, if not opposed to, the priest-craft. Indeed, so liberal is the Government to-day that Protestant mission schools are recognised by the authorities, and, in some cases, receive their share of official and pecuniary support, in consideration of their teaching a given number of pupils free. Think of that in priest-ridden Spain! It could not be.

As far as I have been able to ascertain, absolute religious equality is maintained for every creed, and Protestants are subject to few of the restrictions imposed in Spain, in spite of an undying priestly opposition. They may advertise their work, and write up their announcements outside their churches unmolested, though in Spain this is forbidden. All they may not do is to preach in the streets, though the law forbidding this was passed, not to hamper them, but to put a stop to Roman Catholic processions. The position is such that one can accept the statement made to me by a prominent mine-owner, that "Roman Catholic influence is less in Mexico to-day than in the United States, where there is hardly a statesman who dare open his lips against the Pope." There the Protestant masses are ignorant of Popish wiles, and believe what is said to them; here the masses have tasted and know. The lives and families of the priests have taught them what a "celibate" clergy means; the still-remembered tortures of the Inquisition, and the relics of its martyrs, brought to light of recent years, have taught them what it means to offer power to Rome.

Half a century ago eighty per cent. of the property belonged to the Church, whose power was proportionately great. This has all been secularised, and, shorn of its glories, Romanism flourishes, but on the superstitious native ignorance, which is being steadily dispelled by spreading education, which is, after the Gospel, its greatest foe.

The Christians of the United States have nobly accepted their duty to lighten Mexican darkness. No less than eleven Evangelical denominations are in the field, supporting last year 177 foreign and 512 native workers, distributed over eighty-seven centres and 469 congregations. There are over 16,000 communicants to show for twenty years of work, and the total number of adherents is estimated at about 50,000. There are seven theological schools, twenty-three boarding schools, and 164 common schools, providing instruction in all for over 7000. There are eleven Christian papers published, and 118 church buildings are owned by the Protestants, valued at £80,000, while the total value of missionary property in the Republic, amounts to nearly £170,000.

All this has not been accomplished without long and bitter opposition, and fifty-eight of these pioneer workers have suffered martyrdom, all but one of the victims being natives. In 1888 a grand assembly was held in the capital of representatives of the various churches, with all the good results which follow Evangelical Alliance Conferences everywhere; the work received fresh impetus. The Mexicans are by nature a deeply religious people, and only require to accept the truth to make as good servants of Christ as they now are of the Pope.

One of the greatest needs of the work is literature, and from every part come applications for tracts and booklets to place in the hands of those whom the schools have taught to read. The American Bible Society sells 25,000 to 30,000 Bibles and portions every year, and the sales are steadily increasing. Evidences still continue to come to light of fruit borne by volumes introduced at great risk into the country five-and-forty years ago.

Among the English-speaking residents, too, work is being done, and Y.M.C.A.'s are being planted throughout the country.

GRATEFUL EMIGRANTS.

By Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

I am constantly receiving evidence that the young people I send out to the Colonies are neither unmindful nor forgetful of the kindness shown them in their time of need. In our second party of emigrants for the year 1888, Jack T., a little lad of about fifteen, was included, who had formerly been boarded out with Mrs. P., a worthy woman in Suffolk. While there he greatly endeared himself to his foster-mother—a widow with several children of her own. Jack had no remembrance of his own mother, but all his pent-up love he transferred to the kind woman who had had him in her charge. After Jack's departure for Canada, matters began to go hard with his foster-mother, and in the letters which passed regularly between this humble home in England and the farmstead in Canada Jack learned from time to time of the difficulties which his old friends were encountering.

One day I received a letter from our agent in Canada—Mr. Owen—who wrote as follows:—"I have just heard from Jack T., who came out in the second party in 1888. He completed his five years' engagement on the 1st of April last, when the sum of 100 dols. was paid in to his account by his employer. He has drawn 25 dols. of this amount for clothing, and he now wishes to devote the whole of the balance—75 dols.—to assist his foster-mother, Mrs. P. I have written to tell him that we have forwarded the amount to you."

I lost no time in sending some one down to Mrs. P.'s home to inquire into her circumstances. I found that she was a thoroughly respectable and deserving woman, and it was a great pleasure to be able to hand her the sum which Jack had forwarded, knowing that it would be well applied. "I hope that will pay her debts," Jack himself wrote me, "and put dear mother's mind at rest. I wish I could do more for dear mother, but I hope to do so some day." I believe my readers will share with me in the pleasure with which I learnt of Jack's kind thoughts of those who had once been kind to him. By the way, such an incident is a further proof, if one were needed, of the immense value of the boarding-out system in developing the affections of these poor waifs.

People often ask me if the boys and girls I send to Canada should not, when they succeed, endeavour to repay to the Homes some part of the cost of their emigration? It was found in experience very difficult to make and carry out any fixed rule on this subject, so far as related to young children, whose wages were nil, or even to the girls of larger growth, who required for some years all their earnings for clothing, and in such cases as these I had to be content with such free-will offerings as they were disposed to volunteer, the average yearly sum received from this source being between £200 and £300.

But I felt that with the older lads who soon began to earn a larger wage, a better and more productive system could be set on foot, and it is interesting now to look back upon the returns already realised from these older lads, who, however, form the minority of those emigrated.

The plan was only begun in April, 1890, in which year I received from Labour House youths emigrated to Manitoba, £279 11s. 2d. In 1891 I received £526 5s. 6d. In 1892 I received £709 16s. 1d., and for the first six months in this year I have had £158 7s. 6d.; or a total from April, 1890, to June, 1893, of £1674 0s. 3d. If to this amount is added £663 9s. 6d., received during the same period from all the others, we arrive at a total of £2337 9s. 9d., repaid by my young emigrants in less than four years. Truly a notable and gratifying result!

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

ISRAEL AND THE KINGDOM.

When the disciples asked the Lord Jesus on the eve of his Ascension, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" He replied, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power." But what was denied to those who stood at the threshold of the Christian dispensation will, we have reason to believe, be graciously revealed to those who stand at the close.

In the last chapter of the Book of Daniel—a book which deals almost exclusively with times and seasons—we read, "Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end"; and then it is added, "the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand."

Fifty years ago, Rev. T. R. Birks, a well-known prophetic expositor, wrote as follows: "As Daniel, when the time drew near to its close, understood by books the number and date of the seventy years' captivity, so when the times of the Gentiles have nearly run their course the Church may expect the mysterious dates to be gradually unsealed, and again be stirred up to prayer and hope by the distinct assurance that her redemption is drawing nigh."

Nor was he mistaken, for it is now agreed by many who search the Scriptures that "the times of the Gentiles," which are prefigured in the great image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, and which cover the period of Gentile supremacy over Israel, consist of seven prophetic "times" of 360 years each, or a total period of 2520 years, and that this period synchronises at its starting point with the commencement of the seventy years' captivity in Babylon, viz., B.C. 606.

Should this view be correct, we are now within twenty years of the end of that period, and we should in that case expect to see some signs of its approaching termination. The question arises, What signs, so far as Israel is concerned, should we be justified in expecting? and, further, Are such signs visible at the present time?

In his memorable prophecy uttered by the Lord on Mount Olivet just before his crucifixion, these words occur, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, UNTIL the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke xxi. 24). If, therefore, we are nearing the end of those "times," we should expect to see Jerusalem beginning to rise from the dust, and to use preparations in the land for the return of the Jews, and preparations among the Jews for a return to their land. Can anyone who is acquainted with passing events deny that this is actually taking place at the present moment?

Again. The Apostle Paul, writing to the church at Rome, made this remarkable statement: "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, UNTIL the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Romans xi. 25). If, then, we are nearing the end of the dispensation, we should reasonably expect to see some indications of the approaching removal of the blindness and unbelief which have characterised the Jew hitherto. And may we not say, without fear of contradiction, that the world-wide distribution of the New Testament among the Jews, which is now steadily going forward, is a marvellous work of God for preparing the hearts of the people? And has not a change come over the attitude of many Jewish leaders towards Christ, so that respect and admiration for his character and teaching are taking the place of their former hostility and hatred?

That the Jews as a nation will not be converted till the Lord Jesus is seen descending in the clouds over Mount Olivet is evident from Christ's own words: "Behold your house is left unto you desolate, and verily I say unto you, ye shall not see Me UNTIL the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." But "the remnant according to the election of grace" are fast being gathered out of the nation. In some places whole synagogues are calling upon the Name, and many striking conversions to Christ have taken place amongst some of the very straitest of the sect, who are now powerful preachers of the faith which once they denied.

We may, therefore, divide the present Jewish signs into two classes, viz., politico-religious, as affecting the nation and the land; and spiritual, as affecting the elect remnant and the efforts of the Christian Church to gather them out. May the Lord Himself guide us into all truth, and may we heed his gracious injunction, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

JEWISH NOTES.

The distribution of the New Testament, which is being carried out by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, is going steadily forward all over the world, and will receive a great impetus from Mr. Russell's legacy to that mission. This consists of about twenty to twenty-five thousand pounds, and will, as far as possible, be devoted to the free and world-wide distribution of the New Testament in various languages among the Jews of all nations.

The following workers, who left England last month, will be engaged in the work of distribution, in addition to preaching Christ to the Jews: Messrs. Dressler and Goldstein have gone to the Levant for three months, Messrs. Day and Malbert to South Africa for a similar period, and Dr. and Mrs. Rocha to Brazil for a period of three years.

Mr. Goldstein, writing from quarantine in Turkey, speaks of opportunities they had for New Testament distribution at Vienna, and of the readiness with which they were received, many evincing surprise at the freeness of the gift. At Budapest they were kindly received by Rabbi Lichtenstein and his wife. Here also they visited Rev. Andrew Moody, of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, and attended a fair at which his Bible carriage stood, thronged by eager buyers of tracts of all sorts and some New Testaments. Mr. Goldstein concludes by earnestly asking prayer for Mr. Dressler and himself.

Pastor Jacob, of Ooromiah, Persia, has been preaching to Jews in their synagogues. They are looking for a temporal Messiah. Many Mohammedans were eager to obtain Testaments, but were disappointed, as the supply had run short.

The work of New Testament distribution is, however, carried out often under great difficulties, and the worker among Jews, especially if a Jew himself, is liable to be scorned and reviled as a heretic and a deceiver. Such was the case with a missionary in Russia, who, after a week of apparently futile attempts to reach his brethren, was at length rewarded. Having given a New Testament to a Jew he met in the street on the Day of Atonement, he got into conversation with him on the subject of the High Priesthood of Jesus. The Jew became interested and promised to call on the missionary. The Testament was blessed to him, and the result was that many other Jews called, anxiously inquiring for New Testaments. So great was the throng that the police interfered, but on discovering the cause gave full permission to the missionary to continue his work, and at the time of writing he had exhaus ted his stock of Testaments.

Such is the activity among the Jews to-day that they are to be found on almost every large vessel that leaves our shores. This is especially the case with steamers bound for South Africa or America, and Messrs. Day and Malbert have had ample opportunity for individual conversations with the many Israelites who formed a large proportion of their fellow-passengers en route to the Cape.

In like manner, Mr. Cohn, who sailed on September 15 to assist Mr. Warszawiak, at New York, found 300 fellow Israelites on board. He writes: "What a grand opportunity I had this day to proclaim the Gospel! I had such a large audience, larger than ever in Glasgow. My Jewish brethren were astonished to hear such things. One Jew said: 'Why do our Rabbis never tell us these things?'"

A. S. D.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW held last Tuesday its muster at Miss Child's Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, when Churchmen and Nonconformists of many denominations took part in the meeting. Rev. H. Coate in addressing the crew, told the story of his conversion in a very helpful way. Amongst others who took part were Misses Child and Tuck; also a young ship's engineer, who on his way to the meeting had a narrow escape from death. The text for the month is "Learn of Me."

AMONG JEWS IN NEW YORK.

The Jewish quarter of New York is situated near the east end of the River Hudson. In all there are about 200,000 Hebrews in the city, and they possess thirty synagogues, and twice as many smaller places of public worship. During a recent visit, in company with my sister, Dr. Catherine Urquhart, I looked in upon Mr. Hermann Warszawiak at the De Witt Memorial Church, 280, Rivington-street. It was Saturday, the Sabbath, when the Jew pays special heed to the needs of his spiritual welfare.

In the morning Mr. Warszawiak, accompanied by his assistant workers, goes out into the streets, and personally invites people to come to the afternoon service. By one o'clock a good many people are waiting for admission. When the door is finally opened there is quite a rush for the front seats. Soon the church was filled to its utmost capacity, and, as we afterwards learned, a notice had to be posted outside in these terms: "All seats taken; the church is full. Come next Saturday earlier." Mr. Warszawiak opened the proceedings with a few hearty words of welcome to the new comers. After the reading of Scripture, and prayer, came the sermon, in the German language. Those of us who have heard Mr. Warszawiak preach in English, have doubtless been much impressed and pleased, but we had failed to gather any idea of his power in the tongue of his own people. His power of oratory, and the way in which he manages to sway the hearts of his audience, is something marvellous. The sermon was based on the parable of the Prodigal Son, and the attention throughout was very marked, tears falling from many eyes.

The closing prayer was in Hebrew. Persons who were anxious about their souls were asked to follow the preacher into the inquiry-room, and a large number—about one hundred and fifty—immediately filled a side hall. It was a touching scene, and we could not but blush to contrast the earnest hungering and thirsting after the truth shown by these Jewish men and women, with the cold indifferenco of the so-called Christian Gentile; and this smaller audience was urged to accept the Saviour, and those who had done this were besought to confess Chris before men.

(Miss) Christian E. Urquhart.

31, Lauder-road, Grange, Edinburgh.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

Faded, fallen leaves of Autumn,
Rustling sadly at my feet;
I can never, never love you,
Nor November changes greet.

"We were fair," I hear you answer,
"We were young, and fresh, and bright,
Dancing once, from pure enjoyment,
In the Springtime's sunny light."

Ah! but leaves, ye now are dying,
And ye nevermore can be Happy in each passing zephyr
On the grand old forest tree!

Still ye rustle! Would ye tell me
In that strangely mournful voice,
Ye fulfilled a high commission,
For ye made the earth rejoice?

Autumn leaves, I bow before you
With a contrite, humbled heart;
Have I done my Master's bidding,
Have I, too, fulfilled my part?

Since ye all were first unfolding
Have I grown each day in grace?
Have I made some spot the brighter?
Have I filled my little space?

Now, O faded leaves, I love you,
And the lessons ye have given;
Yea, though old, and brown, and withered,
Ye are messengers of heaven!

Charlotte Murray.

EVANGELISATION IN MYSORE.—Mr. H. Gnanamitra, evangelist of the Wesleyan Mission, Mysore, writes: "During the last nine months I have preached the Gospel to about 3000 souls, and though none of these have openly given themselves to Christ, yet many have in their hearts accepted Him. I beg you and those who labour with you, to remember these in your prayers. The labourers in India are very few, and we can only trust that you will continue to help on the work by means of your wealth, your counsels, and your prayers."

SOMETHING MUST BE DONE.

Yes, something must be done. They come to our doors in wet, reeking rags, with matted hair and bloodshot eyes, with hacking coughs and festering feet, scarcely able to keep awake for want of sleep, or to stand for want of food, the "waste products" of our much-vaunted nineteenth-century civilisation, our home heathen, in grosser depravity than many living in the rude plenty and reckless abandon of a savage state.

It is easy to ferret out their faux pas, and dismiss them as "undeserving" according to the code of our smug respectability; but this brings terrible retribution. May God keep those who know his pardoning mercy from such an un-Christ-like mind! Here I sit and listen to their life stories, told in tearful entreaty or hang-dog callousness, with now and then a matter-of-fact sentence which throws a lurid light, or a touch of pathos which bears out (if theology can give any poetic licence) the sad but hopeful thought:—

Down in the human heart, crushed by the tempter,
Feelings lie buried which grace can restore.
Touched by a loving heart, wakened by kindness,
Chords that were broken will vibrate once more.

T. R., 15. Lost his father, a painter, seven years ago. Mother a dressmaker, very consumptive, has to do her work in bed. Can only get up in the afternoon for a little at times. Was sent to a workhouse school, and afterwards apprenticed to a tailor, but did not like the trade. Tramped to Portsmouth to get into Gordon Home. Stayed down there doing odd jobs in the streets; walked back to London, and had been sleeping out constantly till he heard of the Home. In a famished, filthy condition.

A. T., 14. Lost his mother when one year old. His father, a bricklayer, a dreadful drunkard; eight brothers and sisters had all to leave home. Has been living in tramps' kitchens occasionally for the last two years, but most nights has been sleeping out in vans, etc. Has been in custody on charges of theft and gambling. An ill-used, dull-witted lad.

C. K., 14. His father, a confectioner's hand, died last March. His mother went into the workhouse a month ago, suffering from bronchitis. Has two sisters in a workhouse school, and an elder one, living with another girl, works at collar-making. Has been on the streets since their home was broken up, and suffered much, as he was not used to the mode of life. Pushed a barrow for a man who sold coke, as he did not know other ways of picking up a living. A bright, intelligent boy.

H. W., 16. Never knew his father. Mother died a year ago of consumption and internal ailment in London Hospital; she used to "finish trousers," put in linings and pockets, do herring-bone stitching at back, make six buttonholes, sow on twelve buttons, and press the garment—for 3½d.! On his mother's death went to live with an aunt, but was taken ill with pneumonia, and when he recovered, could only get work at a coal-shop. Was taken from there to infirmary with rheumatism, could not lodge at his aunt's any longer, so was cast upon the world, and after tramping up to Ipswich, made his way back to London, and noticing the name on our windows, appealed for shelter. A dogged, morose youth.

D. C., 16. Father died six years ago. Last heard of his mother in Colney Hatch Asylum. She was a tramp, and lived by begging, till he was taken from her and sent to industrial school. On his discharge worked for a little while for a man selling pastry in the streets, then made his way up from Bridgwater to London. Was told by a tramp to apply at the Church Army Home in Spitalfields, but on asking a gentleman the way was stopped by a detective on suspicion of begging, and on clearing himself was sent here by the detective. A quiet, pleasant lad.

D. P., 16. His father, a labourer, died four years ago; his mother married again shortly after, and died in a few months, buried by parish. Stepfather then deserted the boy, who has ever since been homeless. Travelled with an elder brother, till he enlisted, selling song-books, etc., sleeping in lodging houses, casual wards, under hedges, etc. Directed to the Home by a policeman in Whitechapel. In a shocking plight.

J. D., 15. His father, a carman, died five years ago. Mother only gets work occasionally—has two sisters in the workhouse and a younger brother with his mother, turned out to pick up his own living five years ago. Has been staying in lodging-houses, or sleeping out in carts, etc., since. Sweeping a crossing, carrying parcels at railway stations, etc. Been locked up for sleeping out and for gambling, but discharged with caution. A strong lad, but of low type.

T. H., 16. Mother died six years ago. Father, a tinplate worker, died four years ago. Was sent to workhouse school and apprenticed to japanner, but left trade through its affecting his health (white-lead poisoning, etc.). Was sheltered by a woman where his father used to lodge for a while, but had to turn out on the streets as he could not get work. Has been leading a street life, sleeping out at times for three months. A sturdy, promising lad.

What's to be done? It is unquestionably our duty in the first place to give these boys a home. In the name of mere humanity we should gather them under a roof, provide them with food, clothing, etc., and give them a start in life—but it is our Christian privilege and obligation to do more—to love them in the spirit in which God loved us when we were in "filthy rags," "gone astray," "wounds and bruises and putrifying sores" in his holy sight—to reflect on them a few rays of the grace streaming upon us, and to watch their souls "as they that must give account."

Will you pray for them and for us; that our Homes may be harvest fields this winter?

J. W. C. Fegan.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

THE RESCUED NUN.

The difficulties with which Miss Golding had to contend in the Shaftesbury Hall, at Bournemouth, on Saturday last were peculiarly great. The so-called "documentary evidence" produced by Romanists at their meeting gave her no trouble. That document gave what purported to be an official denial of Miss Golding's official statements, and affirmed that only two nuns died in the convent during her twenty-five years' residence there. Miss Golding gave the only answer that could be of any value to such a document, by mentioning the names of more than twenty nuns whose deaths occurred during her convent life, most of them showing symptoms of having died from the effects of the "drug penance." Her statement, which was read in order to avoid mistake, was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

A letter of Miss Cusack's, published during the week in the Bournemouth Observer, increased Miss Golding's difficulty. This, however, was dealt with by Mr. W. Walsh, editor of the Protestant Observer, who is personally acquainted with Miss Cusack. The difference between the experiences of the two was explained by the fact that Miss Cusack was connected with a convent on which the eyes of Protestantism looked. Miss Golding's experience was gained in Continental convents, where such restraining influence did not exist to the same extent.

The published report of an interview held with Miss Golding's sister has done much to shake the confidence even of her friends in Miss Golding's statements. This constituted the greatest difficulty of all. But an authentic letter from Mrs. de Meilhac entirely disposed of this evidence, and proved it to be almost entirely a fabrication. The following quotations from her letter will show how the alleged statement was obtained:—"I was almost beside myself with other troubles when the reporter was writing, and hardly knew what I was doing. I crossed out with my own hand the most important passages in the report, which I was astonished to find he had written, especially those about poisoning and immorality. . . . I believe all my sister says about her experiences and convents, and shall be most proud of her if she proves helpful by her arduous labours in bringing about their inspection."

This letter, signed by Miss Golding's sister, and witnessed by a lady of position in Hull, disposed of the chief difficulty, and let in some light upon the extraordinary methods by which the Romanists are seeking to oppose Miss Golding.

There were some very noisy and ill-behaved Roman Catholics present, who seriously disturbed the meeting. Some of these retired early, while others remained to interrupt the speakers. Yet when Mr. Walsh proposed, and Pastor Geo. Wainwright seconded, a vote of confidence in Miss Golding, only three hands were held up against it. In such a crowded audience the result was highly satisfactory.

Thus far the attempt to discredit Miss Golding has only increased the value of her testimony.

THE GOSPEL IN BASUTOLAND.

The story of the advance of the Gospel in Basutoland is one of extreme interest. It is strikingly outlined in a little book just written by Rev. R. Henry Dyke, for sixteen years a worker in the field, entitled The Switzerland of South Africa (1s. Morgan & Scott). The many fine illustrations afford a good idea of the extent of the mission operations, and the conditions of life in South Africa.

The work described is connected with the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society, and Mr. Dyke is at present in Great Britain endeavouring to enlist increased sympathy therewith. In the preface introducing Mr. Dyke to the British public, the Paris Committee says:—"The work in Basutoland was begun about sixty years ago, and we have never thought of giving it up, although no national ties unite our French churches with the Basuto tribe. But, guided by the Lord and by circumstances, we have been induced to undertake missionary work on the Upper Zambesi, in the French Congo State, in Senegal, in Algeria, and in the South Seas; so that we are obliged to ask our British brethren to help us to carry on the work in Basutoland, which has a special claim on their interest."

The mission has a grand record. There are 3,500 Basutos on the church roll, 7000 children in the day schools, eighteen European missionaries, and 240 native workers are engaged. There is complete machinery for training teachers and evangelists, and men who have been training in the mission institutions are now preaching the Gospel in the Cape Colony, Orange Free State, Transvaal, Mashonaland, Bechuanaland, Delagoa Bay, and even to the Barotsi, north of the Zambezi. £10 a year will maintain an evangelist. £600 is needed to build new class-rooms at the Morija Training Institution; £150 to complete a dormitory at the same institution. £300 is required to erect additional accommodation in connection with the Girls' Industrial Institution at Thaba Bosigo.

There are still nearly 200,000 heathens in the region waiting for the Gospel. Morija, with its printing press and schools, is the centre whence the light should radiate; and Mr. Dyke hopes to hear from many who are able to help his Mission. There are auxiliary committees in London and other cities. While Mr. Dyke is travelling and of uncertain address, letters for him may be addressed to the care of the Editor of The Christian.

THE LATE HENRY COOK'S WORK.

The work established and carried on for forty years by my husband, the late Henry Cook, is still going forward both at home and in France. The recent visit of the ss. Good News to Deauville has been attended with the Divine blessing, some of the first converts testifying to renewed strength, while many more have been added to their numbers. At the Mission House the French missionary is actively at work. A school has been opened that not only the children may be won, but that through them the parents may more easily be reached.

At Gosport we are encouraged by the ingathering of several who have hitherto led godless lives, but who are now full of praise to our God for his mercy to them. One man, whose family had been in a starving condition, said to one of our workers, "What a difference it makes when we give up the drink. My children have shoes now, and are comfortably clothed and fed." This is only one case. Our work is among the very poorest. Many at this time are out of work, and their wives and children are suffering great privation. We would follow the example of our Lord and Master, and while seeking to win their souls for Him, would also minister to their bodily needs. Opportunities for such service are many. I ask for help that this necessary part of the work may continue. On behalf of our poor and very deserving ones, gifts in clothing and provisions, Gospel books, etc., for our seamen, and money, are needed.

S. A. Cook.

47, Stoke-road, Gosport.

ILLICIT SALES OF BEER.—In order to stop this evil on Sundays at Cardiff, the police have proceeded against those who were found drinking the beer. One woman was fined £50 and costs for violation of the Sunday Closing Act by selling beer on Sunday; and a man was fined £10 for assisting her. Twenty-six persons were found by the police in one shebeen, and all such will in future be procceded against.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19.—PSALM CI.

David's home was no easy place in which to show the noblest and holiest qualities. But he walked in the integrity of his heart, allowing no base thing or unfaithful work to lurk within its precincts.

It is very important that we should watch ourselves in our homes. It is there that we reveal our real character. The secret life of our heart expresses itself more truly when there is no restraint from the presence of strangers. Our influence then should not only be negative, but positive. There must be the perfect heart, and the perfect way. There must be the voice of song, commemorating the mercy and judgment which pervade our lives, and make up the warp and woof of our existence. There must be the constant outlook for God to come and abide with us. There must be also the persistent effort to put away evil things, and to check their manifestation.

The closing verses of the psalm suggest that so far as possible we should choose humble and faithful men to be our servants, to minister to us, and to assist us in the working out of our plans. Christian men should do what they can to find employment for their fellow-believers. A house and a business are likely to be much better ordered and more successful, when the whole family are animated by the one principle of devotion to a common Lord.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 20.—PSALM CII.

This psalm is the outpouring of the heart of the afflicted One, the Man of Sorrows, to whom God responds with words of comfort.

1-2. A cry of distress. Jubilant as some of the psalms are, how bitterly sad are others. We might think that the Miserere cannot come from the heart that so often cries Jubilate. Yet probably in many instances it is the same, for such is the experience of us all. Now on the mountain heights, then in the shadowed valley. But probably to the outward look these alternations of experience would be hidden. An air of unconcerned composure might be maintained, whilst in secret the soul was comparing itself, as here, to the smoke of a hearth; to withered grass; to the lonesome bird of the waste; to the solitary twitter of the sparrow in the eaves; to the long stretched-out shadow of declining day.

12-22. Ah! how comfortable it is to look from out the darkened windows of our life to God and his unfailing care of his own. Our little lives may run out their course in tears, but the Zion of the living God shall be built up, nations and kings shall come to her light, new peoples shall be embued by her spirit. Because of her, prisoners shall cease to sigh, captives shall loose their bonds, and men shall understand God's name and character.

23-25. Then, in contrast to our weakness, we turn at last to God's eternity, and address to Christ (Heb. i.) these great words about his unchangeableness. All nature is but his robe, which may be laid aside without affecting the identity of his being. The same to-day as in the yesterday of Calvary. Changing all things, Himself unchanged.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 21.—PSALM CIII.

1-6. The pendulum swings back into the sunlight. Listen to the lay of the man of God. My soul is a choir, in which every faculty sings to the blessing and praise of God. I tell the heads of his benefits; my iniquities are under the blood; the discases of my soul are being healed; my life has been redeemed from the pit, and is being redeemed from the dominion of self; my brow is girt with a crown woven of love and tenderness; I am satisfied, and though the outward man perishes, the inner is made new and young again.

7-12. Moses knew his ways, but the children of Israel only his acts. Sin is no obstacle to the love of God, when once the will opens the floodgates to the fulness of his compassion and the plenteousness of his mercy. When God forgives, He does not keep his anger. When God deals with us, it is according to the grace of Christ. When God shows mercy, it is fathomless as the azure. When God puts away sin, it is as impossible to recover it, as to recall the beams of morn at sunset.

13-22. What a contrast between man's frame and duration, compared with the mercy, and righteousness of our God! Would that we might keep his covenant and remember his precepts, fulfilling his word, doing his pleasure, in all places blessing his name.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 22.—PSALM CIV.

1-4. A psalm of creation. The man who is near God finds God everywhere, and to him God always lives in the present tense. It is not his habit to think of God as an absentee, as having wound up the clock of creation, and left it to go by itself; but as perpetually engaged in creative processes. Each morning He puts on a new robe of light, and stretches the tent of the heavens. The clouds and the wind waft Him nearer. Each breath brings some message from Him, and the flash of every spark tells of the energy and purity of his life.

5-18. Old ocean dares not pass the ancient bound set by its Creator, when at his voice its waters sped to their appointed bed. And every little rill that sings amongst the hills is fed from his perpetual cisterns. How thoughtful God is for the wild asses and the fowls, for the storks and the wild goats. Will He be less so for his child?

19. The night is made by Him, fear it not. The morning breaks with its call to labour, do not dread it; there is nothing in it that He does not know. The sea, with its storms and its depths, waits his bidding. All loving things are satisfied at the opening of his hand, and He will not keep it shut against thee, his child. Does He renew nature, and can He not revive thy heart? Sing to Him, meditate on Him, rejoice in Him, praise Him, rise from the creature to the Creator, from nature to nature's God.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 23.—PSALM CV.

1-6. A narration of God's dealings with Israel. Make his doings known, the Psalmist cries, and he does his best to advertise them. Sing praises to Him, he says; and he does what he can to afford material for song. Talk about God—the rabbis taught that it was a sin to sit at table without conversing on God and his truth. Seek Him—the very search will make the heart glad. Remember what He has done, and it will drive away anxiety.

7-22. The covenant is the theme here, as it is the underlying foundation of all God's dealings with his people. Our fewness, and wanderings, and trials, and failures cannot undo those terms of everlasting love by which He has bound Himself. If He has promised to give the land, then though all Egypt interpose itself to thwart his purpose, He will carry it through. Happy is the man who, like Joseph, is chosen to be the organ through whom the Divine purpose is consummated. He may suffer tribulation, but he shall rise as from the grave, and come forth to save.

23-45. Plague to Egypt, blessing to Israel. The cloud was darkness to the one and light to the other. God is always the same God, and what He will show Himself is determined by our attitude towards Him. To the froward He shows Himself froward; to those that fear Him, an unfailing comforter and help. And all his mercy is to lead us to keep his statutes and observe his laws (45, and 1 Pet. i. 2).

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 24.—PSALM CVI.

1-5. If the former psalm recounted the mercy of God, this narrates the story of the sins of his people. His enduring mercy is the background of blue sky, on which the dark clouds of Israel's sins are set forth in relief. "Remember me," the singer cries, before he enters on his narration, "and visit me." A double prayer, which may be often on our lips.

6-39. What a catalogue of sins! It will well serve as our guide in self-examination. Not understanding; not remembering; not obeying; forgetting his marvellous deliverances; refusing to wait for his counsel; lusting exceedingly; envying; worshipping other gods; forgetting our Saviour; despising his gifts; murmuring in our tent; hearkening not to his voice; joining in the licence of the world; angering God at the waters of strife; sacrificing weaker brethren to our whim; and allowing our heart to be unfaithful to the great Lover of men. What an enumeration of sin is here. O, my soul, of how many of them hast thou been guilty? This page might well be blotted with thy tears.

40-48. What could we expect otherwise than that God should turn from us in just displeasure? But He still delivers, and remembers his covenant, and pities us in our captivity, raising up friends when we had least expected them. Let us ask Him to save us, and recover us, and put again into our hearts the olden songs of happier and better days.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25.—PSALM CVII.

1-3. The everlasting mercy of God was the never-failing topic on which these minstrel saints delighted to dilate. And in this psalm the redeemed are bidden to discover and magnify his face, as unfolded in several different episodes and incidents.

4-9. The caravan that is sinking of exhaustion on the desert sands is delivered and led. Thus God is always leading human souls across time's waste to their true city. On their way thither He satisfies and fills each longing and hungry pilgrim.

10-16. The prisoner who sits in darkness, whether his bars be iron bolts, or doubt and mental distress, may look up to Him as the emancipator and deliverer, sure that He will shatter all restraints, and bring him out as He did Peter and Thomas.

17-22. Those that are sick, and draw nigh to death, will find in answer to prayer that the springs of health are touched again, and their mortal body quickened by the indwelling Spirit.

23-32. Those who do business in great waters shall find his presence making a calm, as when Jesus said "Peace, be still."

All through the varying episodes of human life we should never know his true character, or the fulness of salvation, if it were not for trial and distress. None so praise Him as those that have been delivered.

F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

NOVEMBER 26.

The Christian Home—Col. iii. 12-25.

Golden Text, Psa. ci. 2.

Colosse was a city of Phrygia, in Asia Minor, and was situated in the valley of the Lycus, not far from Laodicea and Hierapolis. Formerly a city of great importance, in the apostle's day it was inferior to Laodicea. It has now sunk into utter insignificance.

Paul never visited the city (ii. 1), but the formation of the church was one of the indirect results either of his work at Ephesus (Acts xix.), the seaport of Colosse, or of his tour through Phrygia (Acts xvi. 6). Epaphras was probably the pastor of the church (Col. i. 7, 8; iv. 12), and Philemon and Onesimus were connected with it (iv. 9). This epistle was written in A.D. 62, during Paul's first imprisonment in Rome. Its aim was to correct certain errors which had crept in (iv. 12, 13).

The title of this lesson suggests its very practical aim. Wherever the counsels given here are observed the ideal Christian home is realised. They are counsels for Christians—to urge them upon others would be vain. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth such good fruit. You must be before you can live. Do not mistake: you are not to obey these injunctions in order to be a Christian; but you are to become a Christian in order that such obedience may be possible. Are you Christ's? Then heed these counsels.

Some are general (12-17). They are applicable to all Christians, whatever station they occupy. The Christian character is not merely negative—putting off things that are wrong (8). It requires the practice of such virtues as appeared in Jesus Christ. Explanation is needless; it will be best to illustrate by referring to the life of Christ. In Him compassion was the active expression of the love of God which dwelt in Him, and prompted Him to pity and to relieve all forms of distress. The same love in us must pity and relieve the distress of others. Kindness means active benevolence. Compassion in Christ did not waste itself in feeling; it led Him to continual acts of kindness. With the next two qualities compare Matt. xi. 29, and the incident of Jno. xiii., especially in contrast with the pride and contention of the apostles (Luke xxii. 24-26). His long-suffering appears in the question (Luke ix. 41). It is one of the manifestations of love (1 Cor. xiii. 4). The conduct of others towards us will furnish numerous opportunities for the display of this grace. And forbearance (13) will be its constant companion. It has been often said that "the two bears" needful for peace are "bear and forbear." That there may be complaints (R.V.) of Christians against one another is assumed. They occurred in the early Church (Acts xv. 39). The example of Christ in dealing with us is our pattern. His forgiveness of our offences supplies the motive for our forgiveness of others. Love (14) is to bind us all as a girdle.

Three means of attaining these various graces are given:—(1) Peace of Christ (15, R.V.). This is his legacy (John xiv. 27). It is to be in us to rule, restraining and controlling every power. Is this possible? You are "called" unto it. God's calling carries with it the assurance of that to which He calls us. (2) Word of Christ (16). Not heard occasionally, but dwelling in us as at home. Compare Eph. v. 18-20, where a similar effect is attributed to being filled with the Spirit. The Word is the instrument used by the Spirit. (3) The name of Christ (17). To do anything in the name of another is to act with his authority. David met Goliath in "the name of the Lord God of Hosts" (1 Sam. xvii. 45). We are baptized into the name of Jesus Christ, and are permitted to use that name in prayer (John xiv. 13) and in daily life. Note how the spirit of thanksgiving is connected with each of these three (15-17).

Special applications to different relationships follow (18-25). First, that of husband and wife (18, 19). These two are like the mythical bird Juftak, of which we are told that it has only one wing. But on the wingless side the male bird has a hook and the female a ring. When thus joined together they can soar. The husband's love is his hook, and the wife's submission is her ring.

Next, children and fathers (20, 21). There are duties on both sides. Is it not possible for fathers unwisely to provoke and discourage their children? Children will find it to their present and future interest to be obedient to their parents. See Eph. vi. 1-3. The promise appended to this duty (Exod. xx. 12) is not out of date.

Next, to servants and masters (22-25). These counsels to servants become more wonderful when we remember that they were written to some whose service was slavery. They might regard their duties as service rendered to Christ, and might look for a recompense of reward (24). Every service becomes an act of worship if done in this spirit.

G. W.

For the Young.

FREIDA AND OTHER RUSSIAN CHILDREN.

Dear children, I would like to tell you something about the children in Russia. Perhaps you know already that these little children are taught to bow before pictures of saints, and to pray to them. I have seen mothers teach their babies to make the sign of the cross when they have passed a picture or a church. Now we have established a home called the Baby Home in St. Petersburg, 27, Flugoff, Pereouloc, Viborg Side. In this Home are at present seven different nationalities, Jewish, Russian, Swedish, German, Polish, Finnish, and Esthonian. Some are orphans, some have parents, and some have only father or mother, but all are destitute, and in need of care and love. Praise God, with me, that these children have learned about Jesus, and many have given their hearts to Him, and have become very bright little witnesses for Him.

Jesus tells us grown-up people that if we do not become as little children, we shall in no wise enter into heaven; meaning that we ought to believe and trust Him as simply as a little child, and that when we pray we ought to believe that we have what we have asked, because He has promised. Little children, do you believe this?

Now I will tell you a few facts about the Russian children that have been brought to the Baby Home, and will begin with a Jewish child, who was sent in answer to prayer, for I might first tell you that I love the Jews very much, hoping you also love them.

When little Freida Hasina was brought, her mother's only wish was that we should not baptize her, which we promised not to do. But she said nothing about teaching her to trust and love Jesus. Poor little Freida knew nothing good about the dear Saviour, so when the children began to tell her about Him she said, "Jesus is a drunkard." This took place when all the children had gone to bed, and when little Freida told them this they all shouted and cried so loudly that I had to go into the bedroom, and when they saw me they began to tell me, all speaking at the same time. When at last they got quiet I found out what it was about. I wish you had been there, and seen and heard these poor little ones. I told them that I was very sorry that little Freida had said such a wicked thing, but she had never heard any good about Jesus, and yet Jesus loved her as much as ever, or as much as He loved other children, and longed for Freida's love. I told them, too, that Jesus is sorry when He sees that little children do not love Him. That the dear little children could not bear; they all cried. I told them they ought to tell Jesus about little Freida, and pray for her, which they immediately did, all standing upright in their little beds, folding their hands praying:

"Dear Jesus, do forgive Freida for calling you a drunkard, but she does not know you; but we know that you love her. Make her your little child. Amen."

"Now Jesus smiles!" they exclaimed. Jesus would not weep any longer, because they had prayed. Freida had hid herself under the quilt, but she heard it all, and Jesus was there, for she became his little child from that very evening, and is the brightest little Christian in the Home. Pray for one another, children, for Jesus loves to hear you.

A little Russian girl, Marousia, lost her mother, and an English lady found her in a room where only men lived, and brought her to the Home. She only prayed to pictures, but soon learned to trust and love the Saviour. Her father married again after some time, and when she was told that she had got a new mamma, she said "How good Jesus is. He has made me very rich, for now I have four mammas." We asked what she meant? She said "I have one mamma in heaven, a new one with papa, and mamma Wemberg and mamma Grundberg —four mammas": the two last mammas being my friend and myself, for all the children call us mamma. Dear children, if we take all from Jesus's hands, He will give us a blessing.

Now about a little boy, Pantoleimon Gorochoff, who was brought in a very miserable state, but is now strong and healthy, but from neglect will always have a crooked mouth. He, too, prays. He prays more about seen things than unseen. So one evening I went my round, as usual, and came into the boys' apartment, when I heard this boy pray.

"Dear Jesus, do give us horses, cows, goats, hens, cocks, and—pigs. Amen!"

Then I heard another voice cry out, "Pantoleimon, you did not ask Jesus to give you a clean heart." Little Pavel Engel knew what that meant: "But seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." This, little Pantoleimon has yet got to learn, and he will learn it, too. How is it with you English children? Do you love and trust Jesus? Think about it, and then pray for the children in Russia and for the Baby Home.

I could tell you much more about the children, but it would take too much time and space. Only this must I tell you, that all these children have learned to depend on Jesus for everything; so when there is no bread and no money, we tell them, and then we all pray. Then they go into the playroom, and turn that into a house of prayer, one of the children presiding, and many prayers are offered up to Jesus.

Laura Grundberg.

102, Regent's Park-road, N.W.

"BRING ME A PENNY."

Mark xii. 15.

Just a penny a day
For the sad and the sighing,
In lands far away.
Just a penny a day!
Oh, give while you may,
In darkness they're dying.
Just a penny a day
For the sad and the sighing.
Just a penny a day!
You have sympathy; show it!
Oh, give while you pray
Just a penny a day.
Think of souls far away,
Redeemed, and don't know it.
Just a penny a day,
You have sympathy: show it.

S. S. McC.

[Copies may be had on a neat card, 3d. per dozen, or 1s. 6d. per hundred, from the Missionary Secretary, Y.M.C.A., Abbey-street, Dublin.]

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Nechells, Birmingham, to Nov. 20; Bristol, 25 to Dec. 8; Rev. M. J. Hall, St. Philip's, Manchester, Nov. 18-27; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tunstead Schools, to Nov. 20; (with Mr. Goodman) Spurgeon's Tabernacle, Croydon, 26 to Dec. 4; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Gresham Chapel, Brixton, to Nov. 17; Drybrook, Nov. 19-24; Mr. George Goodman, Powis Hall, Bayswater, to Nov. 19; Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Baptist Chapel, Brockley, Nov. 19-24; Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Cambridge, to Nov. 18; Brussels, Nov. 19-30.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Nov. 19, S., 1 Kings xvii. 17-24; 20, xviii. 1-16; 21, xviii. 17-29; 22, xviii. 30-46; 23, xix. 1-8; 24, xix. 9-21; 25, xx. 1-14.

DISTRESSED LADIES.

Poor ladies are a difficult class to help, by reason of their privations being hidden, and in many cases of incapacity for earning their living. The Society for the Assistance of Ladies in Reduced Circumstances seeks to help by selling their needlework. There are on the books about fifty ladies, and a greater number cannot be helped without a decided increase in funds. Gifts of needlework are much valued. At the present time, a special appeal is being made for work to be sent to the secretary by March 1, 1894, to be sold for the benefit of the Society. A lady will often constitute herself a "friend" to a poor lady, to whom she will write letters, send gifts of game, flowers, or fruit, and perhaps lend books. Thus, one lonely life is brightened by a little sympathy. Others receive a lady as a visitor at their homes for a few holidays. Another way of helping is by giving concerts, or by lending rooms in which sales may be held. There are some very sad cases on the books. One lady, suffering from an internal complaint, is seldom, if ever, out of pain, yet she struggles bravely on, working whenever she is able. Another, with two children to support, earns her living by teaching and marking pocket-handkerchiefs; she has nothing to depend upon but what she can earn. Another, suffering from chronic rheumatism, spends her time in making beautful shawls. There are many more equally poor and deserving. Four are nearly blind and almost helpless. Were every reader to give one shilling, the sum realised would be large. I shall be glad to furnish further particulars to those who care to know more about it, also a paper containing a list of the beautiful work, plain and fancy, that can be ordered, suitable for Christmas presents.

Edith Smallwood, Hon. Sec.

The Lees, Great Malvern.

LITTLE "PINK."

Within a few minutes' walk of one of the fashionable parts of South London is a district where wickedness and vice reign, and where, after nightfall, it is dangerous even for the police to venture single-handed.

Curiosity overcame my better feelings on one occasion, and at the invitation of a friend also interested in the problem, "how to raise the submerged tenth," I ventured to go at midnight to see for myself. On approaching the spot the cry as of a woman in distress greeted our ears, and on turning the corner of a low narrow street we encountered an infuriated mob rushing hither and thither in wild frenzy—a very pandemonium of lawless mankind.

At first a feeling of fear stole over me, and doubts crept into my mind as to whether the protection of God could be claimed under such circumstances, or whether, on the other hand, it would not be presumption to expect it; but as I was thus musing, my attention was attracted to a man and woman fighting, the latter using a boot, with which she was striking the man across the head, bringing streams of blood. Instantly my friend stepped between them, with the result that he received an ugly blow on the face, from which he did not recover for some weeks. Not to be daunted, we proceeded further amidst the seething crowd to see whether nothing could be done to stop such a state of things, when we found that the fury of the woman had been caused by her husband ill-treating a little girl of about six summers.

As we looked upon the scene our hearts bled to think of a father being so hardened as to treat his own child in such a manner that the details cannot be mentioned here—but so it was.

A few friendly words worked wonders on the little dirty-faced, half-clad child, and she held her face up for a kiss, with the words, "Good gen'man, take me away." Now this was more than I had expected, and my haughty spirit rebelled at the thought of such a thing; but the pleading look found the spot that, methinks, resembled somewhat the heart of the Friend of Sinners who took the little ones in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

Poor little mite! must she be left there to be brought up as a criminal, or perhaps to a worse fate? What could be done? To take a "street arab" would be too great a responsibility to impose upon ourselves, so we were obliged to leave the horrible storm, still in its height.

We met a policeman a street or two away, and informed him of what we had seen, to which he replied with a smile, "It is a nightly occurrence, and I dare not go alone, even if it were worth while."

For months I tried to erase the scene from my memory, but without success. Again and again the question came to my mind, whether it was right for me to live in comparative ease whilst one of Christ's little lambs was perishing amongst wolves far more ferocious than those of the forest. I tried to get comfort from the Scriptures, but the more I prayed the worse became the feeling, until I determined, some months after, to go and make inquiries, with the hope that a change had come over the parents.

On tracing the family again I found even a worse state of affairs, and could plainly see that unless the child were removed nothing but moral ruin could be the result, and to add to the difficulty she clung to me with an awful tenacity, until I had promised to take her away from those who should have been her best earthly friends.

It would have been difficult to have carried out my promise had not circumstances of a painful character intervened. The ill-treatment of the father caused the death of the mother, and with the help of kind friends I was able to place the child in a home under kind care, to be brought up as a domestic servant.

Several years have passed since my first acquaintance with little "Pink," and she is now very useful, attends church and Sunday-school regularly, prays daily for her fallen sisters, with the result that they also have been rescued, tries daily to get the mastery of the evil propensities that she inherits, and gives promise of becoming a good Christian servant, as many who have been similarly rescued have done.

This is only an example of many cases of rescue in connection with Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

E. W.

DR. J. G. PATON IN LONDON.

Those who attended the meeting of welcome to Dr. J. G. Paton, held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening, could not but realise that they had a part in memorable proceedings. A good while before the hour for beginning, the spacious room was crowded, and the platform supporters included many prominent Christian workers. After the singing of "From Greenland's icy mountains," and prayer, led by Rev. F. B. Meyer, some cordial words were spoken by the chairman of the evening, Sir Mark J. Stewart, Bart., M.P., a native of a neighbouring Scotch parish to Torthorwald, where Dr. Paton's early years were spent. He moved a resolution of welcome, congratulation, and God-speed, which was seconded by Dr. Oswald Dykes, who, in pleasing terms, recalled the days when Dr. Paton was a schoolfellow of his at Dumfries Academy.

Dr. Paton's address, which occupied about forty minutes in delivery, was a recital of thrilling incidents and touching appeals. At the outset he allowed his memory to run over the period of thirty-five years which has elapsed since he first went to the New Hebrides. Then, he said, the islands were in heathen darkness; had penetrated them. Two missionaries had preceded me and had begun work on Aneityum. They were honoured of God in bringing 3500 cannibals to the feet of Jesus. They gave the Word of God—the complete Bible—to the people, and the work has been steady and progressive ever since. I went to Tanna with hopes that the inhabitants would embrace the Gospel. But the people showed fierce opposition; a colleague was murdered at my side, and my own life was attempted continually from day to day. We looked up to the blessed Saviour; and when muskets were levelled around us, or tomahawks or clubs raised, we stood still and prayed that the Lord would either take us to Himself, or spare us for his blessed work, according as it might please Him. Had I not believed in, and loved, the Lord Jesus Christ, and realised that I had a personal Saviour to fall back upon, my reason must have gone. I often felt this; and then the promise would come to mind, "Lo, I am with you alway." Thereupon our fear would vanish, and we would feel calmed. I remained at the post of duty until I saw it was hopeless to continue; and then I made my escape to tell the sad story of the death of my wife and child and my fellow missionaries.

NO RAY OF GOSPEL LIGHT

I found my way to Australia, and determined not to leave the work, though I had been driven away from it. After travelling through the colonies and visiting Britain, I returned with eight more missionaries, and have lived to see the dark cloud roll away from over the New Hebrides. There are now twenty islands occupied by missionaries, and life and property are safe. When I first went to the South Seas, white men could not set foot on one of these islands without risk of being

KILLED AND EATEN.

The blessed Gospel has so moved and enlightened the once savage natives that now there are fifteen thousand converts. In every family represented by that number there is morning and evening worship, and in no case is a meal sat down to without the Divine blessing being asked. Judging by the Lord's standard, "By their fruits ye shall know them," the people bear very favourable comparison with Christians in Britain. Every convert is in his place in church on the Lord's Day when Divine service begins, and no weariness is shown if the sermon should be a little longer than usual. All cooking is done on Saturday, which is "the preparation for the Sabbath," so that the Lord's Day is entirely free for the worship of God. A good while before the hour of public assembly praise is being sung and prayer offered in the homes, and other exercises engaged in to bring souls nearer to the Saviour and to rejoice in his salvation.

Proceeding, the speaker remembered the labours of those who had reduced the languages of the group to writing, and translated the Scriptures, in whole or in part, into sixteen different languages. The Aneityumese not only built their own churches and schools, but wrought for fifteen years, producing arrowroot, which was sold for £1200, to pay for Scriptures supplied by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Dr. Paton continued: We are not tired of the Bible in the South Seas. We have no doubts about its inspiration. When, through the teaching of the Book, we see savages converted and made sons and daughters of the Lord, and men who were cannibals made to lead pure and peaceful lives; we adore God for the light and power of his Holy Word, which will, we believe, go on conquering and to conquer.

Describing Erromanga with its incidents of martyrdom and devotion, he said that the island is there being two thousand converts. The people are not satisfied with having the Gospel themselves, they want to send it to every island they can reach. Adverting to the work on Nguna, the speaker related how, after thirteen years' labour, Rev. Peter Milne and his wife were chased from the island. An enraged chief called after them, "Come back, or I'll shoot you." The wife reasoned with her husband: "We have suffered much already. It may be God's voice that says 'Come back!' Let us again commit ourselves to God and leave the results with Him." They prayed, and the boat's bow was turned. As they landed, the old savage ran up to them and flourished his great club. He drove them up to the mission house, determined to visit them in vengeance on the morrow. The night was spent in prayer, and in the morning the missionaries were calm and resigned, "safe in the arms of Jesus."

NOW CONQUERED FOR CHRIST,

The old chief went to them in pursuance of his evil purpose, but at the outset asked: "How could you come on shore yesterday when you saw us there to murder you? Tell me that before I do anything." They replied, "Our God, Jehovah, helped us. We came back at your request; and now you may murder us. But remember, you murder those who love you, and would die for you." The man sat down and said:—"Tell me of the God that helped you so in your time of danger and difficulty." They told him of God's love and mercy, and of Christ's death for sinners. The old man was exercised in mind, and asked that the matter should be made plain to him. In tears and prayers the day was spent, and the Holy Spirit wrought upon the heart of the savage, who at length said, "I think I see it now. The God that enabled you to come back, I will worship. He shall be mine, and I will not leave you, but we will conquer the island for Him." To-day, a good number of years having gone by, there is a large church on the island, built by men who were once cannibals, but are now Christians, the aggregate of the converts on Nguna being over two thousand.

Mentioning the fact that Great Britain has forbidden traffic in strong drink and firearms in the group, and expressing a hope that the United States Government would join in the prohibition, Dr. Paton proceeded to expose the which he styled "slavery of the worst kind." It has swept away more than one-third of the population of the islands. To regulate the traffic is like regulating theft. The recently-published statement, made by way of retaliation on the part of these traders in human life, that the missionaries sell strong drink to the natives, the venerable missionary denied in terms of righteous indignation. He explained that the missionary supplies are sometimes sent from Australia packed in old casks and cases, the original contents of which have been "burned" upon them; enemies have taken advantage of this to say that the casks contained brandy, &c., when sent to the missionaries. Of the horrors of the Kanaka traffic heaven keeps a record, and in retributive justice God will reckon with those who spread sorrow and devastation in the islands. He longed for the day when the shield of British protection may be cast over the group. Many and often have petitions to this end been sent from the islands, and the natives all say they are subjects of Queen Victoria.

KANAKA LABOUR TRAFFIC,

Setting forth the subjects of his present tour, Dr. Paton appealed for five more missionaries and means to support them. He said: All the islands are fifty thousand people being in heathen darkness. When I was down there last, as we approached an island, we saw armed men moving in all directions. After we had for some time been endeavouring to communicate with the natives, two lads came towards us. Having satisfied themselves that we were missionaries, and without firearms, they came on board. The people on shore being assured that no evil was contemplated, piled up their rifles, and then we landed. News of the peaceful arrival had spread rapidly, and among the first to accost us was a repulsive-looking savage, who took my hand and pressing it warmly said, in the pigeon English of the region: "Me no got missionary; me die no missionary! Teachy me! Me no savez! (i.e., I am ignorant). Me die, no missionary teachy me." If you could have heard that man, you would have sent him a missionary to satisfy his soul's hunger.

WAITING TO RECEIVE THE GOSPEL,

Aggressive Work.—1.

We read in 1 Peter v. 8, "Satan walketh about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour," and our idea is to meet him on his own ground, and prowl about, seeking whom we may save by personal words and conversation. Of course preaching to every creature is literally impossible, but speaking to persons individually as you meet them is one way of doing it, and, humanly speaking, the most effective and hopeful way of reaching the unsaved. A word to the many, rather than many words to the few. I think this is one answer to the question How to reach the masses—Go to them. Besides, is it not the word, or text, or sentence, which God mostly uses in men's conversion?

This work really means speaking to everyone you come in contact with about their soul's salvation, when the opportunity offers, and sometimes by making the opportunity. I believe the opportunity is the command to do it. The Apostle says: "In season, out of season" (2 Tim. iv. 2), not in season and out of season, but in seasons when it appears to be out of season. In fact, at all times, for as the greatest question of our life is concerned, Paul appears to think everything should be swept away to make room for it. There is a time for everything, and every time is the time for this, of course whilst using jndgment and common sense.

In a railway carriage, on an omnibus or steamboat, or whilst walking, we may join ourselves to someone as Philip did to the cunuch; and the Master did to Cleopas and his friend as they journeyed to Emmaus; or stop a man in the street, present a tract, and then ask if his soul is saved, or if he loves the Saviour. It matters little whether he answers or not, he has got to deal with the question, and the Lord has promised to give the blessing.

Of course, there are many other ways of preaching the Gospel, but this personal and individual work appears to me the most powerful, as you come face to face with the man and he cannot evade the question. I have often taken a supply of tracts and booklets, and sallied out into the crowded streets on Sunday evenings during church hours, when not otherwise engaged, and in about two hours' time spoken individually to something like 200 men. What would the effect be if all Christians unemployed did the same sort of thing between the hours of 6.30 and eight o'clock each Sunday evening! The minister might prefer to see his people in their pews, but their absence would be the means of scattering the corner men, arresting the careless ones, and helping to fill the churches. A man said to me lately, "You asked me that question twenty-four years ago down at the Wapping Dock," and another said, "You spoke to me sixteen years ago elsewhere; don't you remember?" Remember! when I had been doing the work almost daily for nearly thirty years. Two policemen were standing on one of the dock bridges, and as I passed I stopped and said, "Have you both got your souls saved?" One, who was an inspector, said, "We were just talking about that. Let me see," he continued; "is it not Mr. ——?" I replied "Yes." "Well," he said, "I have good news for you, for nine years ago you were looking at some timber under that shed yonder, and you put your hand on my shoulder, and said, 'Young man, live for God!' Ah, I never forgot those words, and now I am living for God." Yes, these questions stick and turn up again.

Then consider the blessing to ourselves and the reward hereafter. It has been a source of great blessing to me, and has helped largely to keep alive my own soul, for whilst trying to water others we get watered. Besides, it is work always at hand—no room or gathering is needed, and no address to get ready, but just go forth into the busy thoroughfares, and the work is all around you. You are independent of everybody, and can thrash Satan in your own way, regardless of your fault-finding brother. And it is most fascinating work, and full of incident and encouragement, by evidences of good done all along the line.

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

The Late MR. ROBERT PATON,

OF LONDON, A WELL-KNOWN CHRISTIAN WORKER.

THE Lord has been calling away many of his faithful servants of late, and familiar faces are passing from our midst. Among the more notable of these Mr. Robert Paton held for many years an almost unique position in connection with Christian work in and around London. Few will be more missed than he in the multiform evangelistic and philanthropic agencies of the great metropolis. Most Christian workers have a groove; Robert Paton had none, but wherever he found real earnest work for God, whether it was after his own fashion or not, it met with his true sympathy and ready aid.

Robert Paton was born in 1831, at Cleavelands, his father's farm, on the Dundonald hills, about five miles from Kilmarnock. Here he spent his boyhood, riding in every day on his pony to Kilmarnock Academy. The blood of the Covenanters flowed in his veins, and though he never referred to it, a picture of his ancestor John Paton, the martyr, sitting in a cave reading his Bible, adorns the wall in his house at Highbury. Robert lived in happier days, but he was made of that same stern stuff, and doubtless would have witnessed the same "good confession" had he lived in those troublous times.

At the age of fourteen he went to Glasgow University, passing the course there creditably, and, having chosen civil engineering for his profession, was articled to a firm in the same city. As a youth he loved the world, but his mother's prayers prevailed, and gradually he was brought under the power of the Gospel. He had, however, a severe conflict with unbelief, trying to solve the knotty points of Scotch theology; but at last it dawned upon him that it was not dry doctrines he had to deal with, but a living, loving God of sovereign grace and a personal Saviour, and from the moment he realised this his mind was at rest—from henceforth stayed upon God. This laid the foundation for his strong adherence to and vigorous advocacy of the old fundamental truths all through his after life.

In his early manhood he went to India as assistant engineer in the construction of the Madras Railway, under Sir George (then Mr.) Bruce. While he was there an incident occurred showing at once the promptitude, decision, and tenderness of his character. His chief being compelled to return to England on account of his health, Mr. Paton, who was much attached to him, made all the arrangements for conveying him on board the steamer. At the last moment Mr. Bruce was so ill that Mr. Paton thought he would not live many days, and not liking to leave him to strangers, his mind was immediately made up, and he started off upon the steamer with little or no luggage, that he might tend his friend in his dying hours. Contrary to expectation, the sea voyage was so beneficial to the invalid that when they reached Suez, Mr. Bruce was able to proceed to England alone, and Mr. Paton returned to Madras. He was severely censured by his employers, but was too valuable a servant to fall out with, so the matter blew over.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Lombardi & Co., Pall Mall East, S.W.)

About this time he married Miss Rice, the daughter of the Rev. Benjamin Rice, L.M.S. missionary at Bangalore. Shortly afterwards he was appointed chief engineer in the construction of the Thull Ghaut portion of the G.I.P. Railway, near Bombay. This line passes through magnificent mountain scenery, and required much skill in the construction, the gradients in some places being very steep. The writer well remembers, when travelling along this line, the slow and cautious manner in which the train had to be driven down the steep declines, especially near one point, the changing station, where, two years before, the driver of a passenger train lost control of the engine, and the brakes being powerless to stop the impetus of the train, it rushed with fearful velocity over the precipice into a ravine 200 feet below. After this terrible accident, two relief sidings were made at different points and pointsmen always stationed there, so that upon a signal from the driver, they could turn the train up the slope and thus bring it to a standstill. This was before the days of cog-wheels for mountain railways. The railway authorities never allow drivers to work this part of the line more than three months in the year, the strain upon the mind being so great.

Mr. Paton's next, and perhaps greatest, work was the construction of the Calcutta waterworks, which cost over a quarter of a million sterling, and which have so improved the sanitation of Calcutta, that it is now said to be one of the healthiest cities in our Indian empire. This work was beset with great difficulty, but was carried out so successfully, and with so much energy, that it called forth special mention from the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

Throughout all his Indian career Mr. Paton was ever the friend of the poor man; he was determined that every one who was willing should have opportunity for work, and that the poorest should have justice and protection. He therefore ignored all caste prejudice—which is only the essence of selfishness —and though on this score a great deal of resistance had to be overcome, yet in the end the rupee proved to be as "mighty" in India as the dollar in America, while the highest and the lowest of his employés always found in him a friend, as well as a master.

Returning home, he shortly afterwards joined a firm of English engineers in Germany, and resided for a time with his family in Berlin. But fourteen years of life in India, lived at high tension, had so told upon his constitution that in a year he returned to England, and retired altogether from business at the early age of forty-two, having already secured a competency.

All through his business career he had shown that he was made in the true Covenanter mould; he had resolutely opposed Sabbath labour, had always taken a deep interest in missionary work, and had not been unmindful of the spiritual wants of those under him.

Now God had something higher to call him to. About this time a trifling incident occurred, which probably changed the whole course of his life. A young man called at his house—a London costermonger who had recently been converted, and who was now carrying Bibles and Gospel books for sale from house to house. Entering into conversation with him, and finding the young man was really an earnest missionary, the thought flashed in upon Mr. Paton's mind, what a splendid agency this would be for "getting into every house in London and preaching the Gospel." Following up the thought, he ultimately resolved to form a Colportage Society, although he was then in a very feeble state of health, and very soon the Christian Colportage Association was launched, a society which has been greatly owned and blessed of God, having been the means of circulating over ten millions of Bibles and Christian books and magazines throughout England. In this society, Mr. Paton, who was hon. secretary till the time of his death, took the deepest interest and laboured with untiring zeal.

Shortly after this, the first memorable visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to London took place. Mr. Paton joined the committee, and was chosen hon. secretary. Into this work he threw himself body and soul, so to speak, devoting more time to it by day and night than he had ever done to any of his engineering undertakings. Few have any conception of the labour and anxiety involved in carrying out the arrangements for such immense gatherings, and the success which attended the Mission was due in no small measure to his forethought, business capacity, energy, and wonderful organising powers. But not only did Mr. Paton take upon himself the chief burden of the business arrangements; he also took a large share in the spiritual part, especially in the after-meetings, in which he had singular success. On the subsequent mission of the American evangelists he was chosen to the same post, and fulfilled the duties with similar devotion and fruitful result.

He was thus brought into contact with many Christian workers, ministers, and leaders of missions, and ever since, his presence, counsel, and aid were eagerly sought in connection with evangelistic work all over London, as well as in other places. He was an impressive speaker, a wise counsellor, and a splendid chairman, and in these capacities he is particularly missed at the daily noon prayer-meeting held at the Y.M.C.A. in Aldersgate-street, at which he presided with much acceptance every Monday for many years.

He was indefatigable in his labours in connection with the committees of the Religious Tract Society and the London City Mission, and although not officially connected with the Y.M.C.A., he always took a deep interest in its welfare, especially that in Aldersgate-street, where his presence and help at the meetings were greatly valued.

He was not, however, merely a "platform man," he took special delight in personal dealing, and eagerly sought opportunities for this "in season, out of season." He had a great love for working men, and when travelling about London by rail liked to get into a carriage with a lot of rough "sons of toil," speedily drawing them into conversation and then speaking plain truths about eternity. For some years he used every Sunday evening to visit the public-houses in his own neighbourhood, giving Gospel tracts and talking to the men he found there whenever he could get an opportunity. His bright cheery manner and direct home thrusts few could resist, and many a deeply interesting incident occurred while he was thus seeking to "rescue the perishing."

He suffered much pain during his life with such fortitude that few were aware of it; but those who knew him well were wont to mark the closed eyes and pained look, and understood that he was silently enduring. He was essentially "a man of war from his youth," but "the fining pot" brought out the pure gold, and when he knew the summons had come, knew too that he must pass through a fiery portal, he received the message with perfect peace, ready for all the will of the Lord. During the last four weeks that remained it was delightful to visit and converse with him. Although suffering spasms of terrible agony, and his body growing rapidly weaker and weaker, in his spirit he "rejoiced as a strong man to run a race." Realising that he was on the borderland of eternity, things of earthly interest into which he used to enter with great zest entirely dropped out of sight, and all his thoughts were directed forward.

His table was strewn with books, the reading of which he greatly enjoyed, his favourite being "Rutherford's Letters." But his chief delight was in the Psalms of David; he had to the last a deep realisation of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and of the greatness of the mercy of God, and he loved to repeat over and over the inspired words of "the sweet singer of Israel"; even when lying very prostrate he would begin a Psalm, and one of his children, with open Bible, would prompt his failing memory. Towards the end he had a time of delirium, but at the last, after lying for about two days in an almost unconscious state, suddenly a sweet smile overspread his countenance, as if he had heard the Master's voice saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord"; and so he fell asleep, and his spirit passed from earth to heaven.

A PENITENTIAL PRAYER.

Saviour, beneath thy cross I stand,
Laden with sin and doubt and care,
Downcast, repentant, with my hand
Upraised to lay my burden there.

Saviour, forgive me when I plead
Thy love, thy death, thy power to save,
And grant me faith when most I need
To hide my burden in thy grave.

Saviour, oh, teach me of thy love
When kneeling at the throne of prayer,
That all thy fulness I may prove
And in the joy of heaven may share.

Saviour, receive me home at last,
When, fast upborne on angel's wing,
Earth and its phantom joys all past,
I come to where the angels sing.

E. Vyvyan Kingdon.

THE EVANGELICAL SOCIETY OF GENEVA has distributed by its colporteurs during the past year: 2733 Bibles, 21,393 New Testaments, 11,306 portions of Holy Scripture.

WAREHAM CONGREGATIONAL TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY.—Speaking at the opening meeting last week, the Mayor expressed his belief that if the churches only did their duty, the temperance cause would be in a more prosperous condition.

WORKHOUSE VISITATION.

By ONE WHO ENJOYS IT.

Workhouse visitation has not received from Christian workers the measure of attention it deserves. As a quiet sphere of usefulness for women I know of few to equal it. Many of the inmates of our workhouses know very little of the Gospel. Perhaps as a class the women Catholics are the most religious; but, of course, after their own fashion. It would be difficult to reach some of these persons in their own homes, and the workhouse is more accessible, being clean and well ventilated. Besides, house-to-house visitation requires more time than many ladies can spare from their own homes, and, if the heads of the family are to be reached, at hours inconvenient to most visitors.

As one who has been accustomed to workhouse visitation for some thirty years or more, may I be allowed to offer one or two suggestions? The first is that a number of women of different religious denominations should agree to take up this duty. After obtaining permission from the Guardians, let them apportion certain wards to each visitor, by which arrangement they will avoid what occasionally takes place, ladies treading on one another's heels in some wards, whilst other wards are totally neglected. Another advantage which would result from a proper division of the work is, that each visitor would become better acquainted with the inmates of the wards apportioned to her care. Thus she will often be able to lend a helping hand to persons about to quit the hospital. Situations may be procured for some, or a little temporary help afforded to others who have work to go to, but have no means of subsistence for the time being. Whether it is desirable to bestow little gifts, is a question not easy to answer; they are sometimes the occasion of jealousy and strife, and the bestower has to consider the welfare of the recipients more than their wishes. Real Christian sympathy is what is chiefly needed, which should always be accompanied with the joyous tidings of a Saviour's love.

Words cannot depict the dreadful sense of loneliness felt by some who have for years been immured within the walls of a workhouse. Well do I remember the bitter complaints of one old man, who, with two or three imbeciles, was confined in a small bedroom. For years he had not been twenty yards from the spot where he lay, and rarely did a friend approach him. At times, even in the wards of a workhouse, men and women may be found of whom the world is not worthy. May I refer to one such case? On entering a room, I once noticed a stranger whose features betokened intense and long-continued suffering, but combined with a countenance of unearthly sweetness. She had been a sufferer from infancy, and could not remember one wakeful hour's exemption from pain. The reply which she gave to a friend, who objected to her entering the workhouse, was truly characteristic: "I shall have the same Saviour with me there as here." Her patience and holy joy converted the spot where she lay into hallowed ground.

The visits of a number of observant, sensible women would tend to check abuses which exist in some workhouses. The officials are not always upright in conduct and attentive to duty. In one instance, where the most horrible immoralities were being practised by an official, I was reluctantly compelled to give a hint to one of the Guardians, and the evil was speedily rectified. Such cases are, of course, exceptional.

HOMES OF HOPE, 4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.—Since these Homes were first established in 1860, no fewer than 3216 cases have been admitted; of this number 1211 belonged to the class of young mothers, who were thus saved from falling into deeper and continued sin; 360 were rescued from surroundings of great temptation unfallen. In almost every case the mothers, and those admitted unfallen and from prison, have turned out well, and about 70 per cent. of the others. While inmates of the Homes, the young women are trained in household and domestic duties, with a view to their becoming good and useful members of society. The great object, however, kept most anxiously before the committee is, to afford them opportunities of religious instruction, and to impress upon them the extreme importance of turning to God with all their hearts. The applications for admission are painfully urgent, and the charity is wholly dependent upon voluntary contributions. The secretary is Mr. W. Hornibrook, 17, Bloomsbury-street, Oxford-street, W.C.

Notes to Workers.

"The Spirit of Counsel."

Professor Nicholson, in his recent presidential address to the Economic Section of the British Association, grimly remarked that if his economic doctrines for the relief of the poor sounded cold and hard, the retort was easy: "If Christian charity realised a tithe of its ideal, there would be no need for relief on the part of the State. . . . I would say, Go to the ant, thou sluggard! It does not take ten ants to relieve another ant, and in this land of ours there are more than ten professed Christians to every pauper."

Whether this is a true and fair statement or not, it is a charge which all of us must sorrowfully admit comes home to a large extent. The mass of professed Christians have dropped so far beneath their ideal relation to their neighbours that only a blurred dim consciousness of such an ideal remains to them.

But with this material side of the question I am not here concerned; rather would I ask the reader to interpret the economist's words spiritually, and to consider whether we who are Christian workers, who make such boast of our benevolent societies, have realised a twentieth part of our ideal as regards our spiritual relief to spiritual paupers. I would give a few suggestions which are simply the outcome of actual experiences in this matter, and which, if we take the "spirit of counsel" in its fullest and deepest sense, are only illustrations of this gift.

I would start with the carelessness we workers show in some of the apparent trifles of living.

A worker who had always flattered herself that she was a highly virtuous, charitable, and respected member of society, was walking one morning behind an individual whom she had mentally judged to be frivolous, self-absorbed, heedless of other's needs. Suddenly the "butterfly" stopped, and turning to an old crossing-sweeper (whom, be it said, the professed Christian had passed day after day without word or notice), said quietly, "You will come and have your Christmas dinner at my house, won't you?" As a whole, the incident was a very trifle, and yet it had taught that worker the hard and valuable lesson that it is well to attend all sorts of meetings and the like for the social and religious welfare of the abstract poor, but it is also well to be first in touch with the concrete poor in one's daily walk.

Pass to more direct applications of this spiritual help, and see how the same carelessness again appears. See how, in our dealings with those about us, we hide away the great deep motives, and shuffle into their place the lower, flimsier reasons for our conduct. We do not help others from the storehouse of our deeper nature. We make the "spirit of counsel" a mere name. Do not let me be misunderstood. I do not mean that we should force religious phrases on our lips at every turn, so that to others who are strangers to our shibboleth our presence is a disagreeable constraint. But I do contend that to others it should be apparent what are the real springs of our life. When they seek us for advice, when they tell us of their concerns and expect us to enter into their interests, how dare we be other than perfectly true in the counsel we give? They may not ask us for direct advice; that matters not; the case is the same if they only tell us their story, and watch its effect on us. Unconsciously, whether we like it or not, we use this spirit of counsel and wield the mighty weapon of influence. As Emerson puts it, "If you act, you show character; if you sit still, you show it; if you sleep, you show it. You think because you have spoken nothing your verdict is still expected. Far otherwise; your silence answers very loud. You have no oracle to utter, and your fellow-men have learned that you cannot help them."

This being so, how is it that so many professed Christians lightly put aside their deepest convictions, and speak in an uncongenial atmosphere from secondary and shallower motives. A tells B of her approaching marriage with a man who is an unbeliever, and invites her to the wedding. Now B as a Christian is assured that it is a sin for her friend to marry such, that the command against it is as plain as the command not to steal; and yet, though she may utter a feeble "What a pity he does not believe!" and a hope that her friend will change him, in nine cases out of ten she offers her congratulations and accepts the invitation! What if one day that friend were to turn round on her with the bitter cry, "Why did you not tell me I was doing wrong? why did you come and join in my happiness as if you considered I was quite right?"

It is the curse of our religious as well as our social life that we are so terribly unreal. We plaster up truth under all manner of devices not to offend those we are among. Hence it is small wonder that our religion is ignored by sceptics as a pretty harmless delusion which hurts no one, and may comfort us.

I said our religious and social life, but the spirit of unreality enters into far more than that. It tinctures a great mass of our literature.

Let anyone speak out from his heart what he believes eternal verities, let his counsel ring with an absolute integrity, and he will find that with the crowd, though he loses popularity, yet in the end he will leave a deeper impress on the hearts ready for him; and there will be a strength in his words that will force men to listen to them, though they may not like them. "Be earnest, earnest, earnest; mad if you will."

I. M. M. Kenward.

IN THE AUSTRIAN ALPS.

During the past summer my husband has visited a number of towns, villages, and hamlets in the Tyrol and Styria, and everywhere his message was more or less joyfully received. In nearly all the places visited, a Protestant pastor is never seen, nor a Gospel service held, except when my husband is able to gather a few into a room lent by one of the more courageous, for it needs great courage, in the Tyrol especially, to confess that one is a "heretic." All the more are the visits of the evangelist prized, and the little gatherings for prayers and study of the Word are "times of refreshing" to many a discouraged and persecuted soul.

Requests for "something to read" are very numerous, and we would gladly send, periodically, parcels of Gospel literature to such thirsty souls if we only had the means to do so. We have received this year a most valuable grant of illustrated leaflets from Stirling for general distribution, and these have proved very useful during summer travels, but at the present moment we need small Gospel treatises or books, such as "Moody's Gospel Addresses," Spurgeon's helpful and rousing appeals; in short, anything thoroughly scriptural and presenting the plan of salvation clearly and unmistakably. Christmas letters and text-cards will also be very welcome.

The Lord has now added a second evangelist, who is at present itinerating in the beautiful province of Carinthia. On Sunday last, November 5, we had the joy of welcoming over 200 persons to the first Gospel service in our new hall, which we were obliged to build, not being able to obtain any room large enough for our Bible readings. Our poor people have taken great interest in the building. One undertook the decoration of the ceiling at his own expense. Another one, who was among the firstfruits of our labours in this city, painted the texts on the walls.

Will you join us in prayer that the little hall may be the birthplace of many souls, as well as in praise to our Father for those who, during the past seven years of our labours here, have been brought out of darkness into light? The other portion of the house, including rooms for the workers, deaconess, convalescents, and servants out of place, are all approaching completion, but will not be ready for occupation until next spring. During the winter these are all accommodated in a neighbouring house, which we trust later, if the Lord will, to devote entirely to the nursing, deaconess, and rescue work.

Through the kindness of two friends, who advanced the necessary capital, we have been enabled to purchase and build the very much-needed accommodation for all the branches of our work, rendering us independent of Roman Catholic landlords. We have received some few donations towards paying off this capital, but only a very small sum has as yet been given. Meanwhile we are personally responsible for interest, taxes, etc., to the amount of about £200 per annum, exclusive of working expenses.

Any friends willing to help in any way in the evangelisation of this great empire may communicate direct with the writer, or with our friend, Mr. W. McCluer, 6, Balfour-road, Highbury New Park, N.—Yours in Christ's service,

Mary A. Reinmuth.

Leechgasse 28, Gratz, Styria, Austria, Nov. 7.

AGRA MEDICAL MISSION.

Rev. Dr. Colin Valentine, principal of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institute, has returned to his work in India. In a letter notifying his departure from Marseilles by P. and O. ss. Carthage, on November 4, he says:—

"This time two-and-thirty years ago I was on the ocean, going to India for the first time. All these years I have been at work in India, and hope, if the Lord will, still to be able to do a little for Him there. My wife came home about eighteen months ago in bad health, and is not able to return with me. May I ask for an interest in the prayers of God's people?

"Recently, when I was speaking in Dundee, a young woman came up at the close of the meeting, and said, 'Sir, I am myself prevented from going to India, but I am anxious to support a student in your Agra Institute.' I expressed my thankfulness for her desire, thinking at the same time that she would assist perhaps in collecting something for us. She added, 'I would like to give you the first instalment now,' which she did, adding, 'If the Lord prospers me, I will continue to send the same sum annually.' On inquiry, I found that she is a pupil-teacher, earning her own living. I was greatly touched by her liberality and strong faith."

In a published account of the work of the Institute we read:—"Its object is to impart to native Christian young men a systematic knowledge of Divine truth, to prepare them for the work of medical missionaries—healing the sick and preaching the Gospel. The students live in the Institute, and receive their professional education and diploma of the Agra Government Medical College. In the Institute regular tutorial classes are conducted by Dr. Valentine and his assistant. The medical curriculum extends over a period of four years. During the eleven years that the Institute has been in existence, eighteen regularly appointed medical missionaries have been sent out. Most of these are filling important positions in connection with the different missionary societies labouring in India.

"There are at present eighteen students in the Institute: Methodists, seven; Gossner's Mission, five; Presbyterians, three; Church Missionary Society, two; S.P.G. Society, one. The cost of a student is £16 a year. For this sum a fully-qualified medical missionary is trained, and sent forth to preach the Gospel to his fellow-countrymen, and heal their diseases.

"Friends wishing to adopt a student, or otherwise assist the Institute, should communicate with Dr. Sargood Fry, Superintendent Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, George-square, Edinburgh, or to Rev. Dr. Valentine, Agra."

PERSECUTION OF THE STUNDISTS.

The Evangelical Alliance has during the past year raised privately amongst its own members a sum of nearly £900, specially for the relief of the sufferings of the families of the Russian Stundists who have been banished from their homes in Russia; and nearly the whole of this amount has been already distributed by trustworthy agents, some resident in Russia, and others visiting the country for the purpose.

During the past two or three years special efforts have also been made by the Evangelical Alliance to bring influence to bear in the highest quarters, with the view of mitigating the terrible persecution from which the Stundists and other Christians dissenting from the orthodox Church of Russia are suffering. Other agencies have also been at work with the same laudable object; and the references to the subject made in The Christian, The Christian World, and other papers have attracted public attention to the matter. Funds have also been supplied through the readers of these two papers with the same object as that of the Evangelical Alliance.

It is well that these facts should be widely published, as it is believed that there are unaccredited individuals seeking to obtain money without any satisfactory guarantee of its proper distribution.

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance hope shortly to publish a statement with reference to the steps they have taken regarding this whole subject, and in the meantime they will gladly receive any contributions towards their fund for the relief of the physical sufferings of the Stundist families. The office of the Alliance is 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

Miss Brewster held good temperance meetings at Poole last week.

[1183]

THE FRIENDS' MISSIONARY HOME.

This new training home, founded and endowed by the late John Horniman, has been opened at 77, Downs-park-road, Clapton. At the opening meeting, James Hack Tuke, who presided, said the words, "He loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue," seemed very appropriate. Forty-seven years ago the Society of Friends was startled with a legacy of £50,000 for the education and training of teachers, since which time he believed there had been no very large legacy for somewhat similar purposes until this recent one of the late John Horniman.

Watson Grace said that the six young men now in the Home preparing for missionary work were Albert Taylor, who expects to go to India; Walter Cox (China), Leonard Lucas (China), William Harley Clark (Syria), Francis Kilbey (India), and Benjamin H. Jackson (China).

H. Tuke Mennell said that during the last few years it had been his privilege to assist John Horniman in carrying out his many schemes of benevolence. One marked feature of their late friend was that he liked to have all the details of a scheme strictly laid down, so that he might know exactly how the money would be spent. He was not a loose giver. He had a remarkably clear judgment and a wonderful grasp of details almost to the last. John Horniman gave under a strong sense of duty and stewardship. Such gifts were far more lasting in their influence than any indiscriminate charity. Foreign missions had always the warmest place in his heart, and this led to the establishment of the Missionary Home, which would be most helpful to young men who had not the means for preparation for missionary work.

The Chairman, in the course of a thoughtful address, traced the unity in spirit between the work of George Fox and this, the latest development of Friends, to aid the great work of missions. He claimed that the Home must be recognised as a Quaker institution, and in full harmony with all that is best in Quakerism.

William Wilson said he had always made it a practice to get to know of the missionary efforts in other fields besides his own in Madagascar. He believed this would be accomplished by the Home.

J. Fyfe Stewart said it was the aim of the Committee of Management to be thoroughly practical. They were trying to train the young men so that they would be missed at home when the time came for them to leave this country. As an instance of the thoroughly practical character of the training, he mentioned that two young men were attending a carpentry class, two others were having a course of medical lectures at Livingstone College, whilst another was engaged in business. It was what would be called in other denominations training from a "lay" point of view. He thought that it was very important that the young men should have a thorough knowledge of Holy Scripture. A series of meetings was to be held on Friday evenings for Biblical instruction, or the consideration of some subject that would help them in their work, and he hoped this meeting would become a recognised part of their work.

William C. Allen, who spoke on behalf of the Syrian Committee, thought that this Home would draw together in one centre the interests of foreign and home mission work.

George Cousins felt that the Home had been laid on wise and broad lines. He rejoiced in the growth of the F.F.M.A., and did not know what the L.M.S. would do in Madagascar if it were not for the strong staff of Friends there, with whom they heartily co-operated. In Chung-king also the two societies were most cordial in their relations one to the other.

William Baker briefly expressed the sense of responsibility under which his wife and himself had taken up the superintendence of the Home, and their own deep interest in foreign mission work.

SUNDAY OPENING OF MUSEUMS.—The committee of the Lord's Day Observance Society, 20, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C., are seeking to elicit the opinion of "religious working-men" on the question of the Sunday opening of museums. A circular is therefore being sent out, inviting the co-operation of clergy, ministers, and workers who are brought much into contact with the working classes. Any who have not received the circular, but are in a position to supply the desired information, are asked to communicate with Rev. Dr. F. Peake, secretary of the Society.

[1184]

RESCUING THE CHILDREN.

Children are our one theme and object in life; children of all ages, both sexes, orphans, motherless, fatherless, disobedient to parents, truants, ill-used, having drunken parents, on the way to utter ruin owing to the godlessness of their home surroundings, and so on. My sister, Mrs. Birt, of the Sheltering Home, Liverpool, would join with me in saying we have no special power or gift, but we have lived with such as these for the past twenty years, and for years before that in our father's industrial schools, preparing for stepping out as pioneers of children's work in Canada. Upwards of 10,000 grown-up and growing-up young people testify to what our own God can do with weak things. The blessed Gospel has been our power, and is so still, united with a practical loving-kindness, which the youngest soon understand, and their gratitude has ever been most touching. Our joy during the past summer has been not only to see hundreds of photographs, but (Mrs. Birt in one province, and I in another) the veritable children we had received ten or twenty years ago, now respected citizens. Where they discovered gift they found their opportunity. Those who were worthy have been called, and are now labouring among the heathen. Hundreds of them are diligent tradesmen, whilst many own their own farms, are virtuously married, and actively working in the churches to which they belong. Marvellous is the contrast now in all their circumstances, yet it is as nothing compared with what the grace of God did when they became new creatures in Christ Jesus. We bow with grateful and adoring gratitude for all the continued goodness of the Lord to us as a band of workers, and ask prayer for these thousands of young men and young women now started in life. We ask not great things, but that they keep low at the Master's feet. Pray also that these poor half-starved boys and girls now under our care, and those coming in, may be won into the Saviour's fold. One such cheered us by telling us, in boyish confidence, "that his heart was broke whilst thinking how cruel he had been to Jesus." He was no orphan, but the favourite son of a Christian woman struggling in life, her husband being ill with softening of the brain. The pittance of support was 7s. weekly, the wages of another of her boys; and, worst of all, the poor husband had such a ravenous appetite! The conversion of her boy had lifted her terrible load; now his body thrives, and his cheeks gather colour. The possibilities latent within these shrewd lads, to be developed by brave, noble Canadians, calls for thanksgiving. Remember, £10 saves one more.—Yours, to serve the children,

Annie Macpherson.

Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

The Strangers' Rest.

The real work being carried on here was well exemplified on Friday evening, when a tea was given to over 300 seamen. Tea being over, a meeting was arranged for the Scandinavians, who sang the choruses of some of Sankey's hymns in their own language. We rejoice to know that not a few of these are earnest, consistent Christians.

After the tables were removed, however, the chief meeting was held in the Hall downstairs, Every corner was occupied. The chair was taken by Mr. John McCall, who had very kindly given this tea. After prayer, Mr. J. T. Isaac asked the men if they would like in future the additional privilege of the "Rest" being opened each day at eleven o'clock, instead of two o'clock, to which they all assented. Short, earnest addresses followed from the chairman, Miss Wrex, and others. Not the least interesting part of the meeting was the testimony to the preciousness of their Saviour from the men themselves, one giving his experience of fifteen years.

We cannot well overestimate the importance of such a work, reaching as it does, through these men when brought to Christ, to the ends of the earth. We earnestly appeal to those able to help of their substance, but better still, by personally sharing in the labour.

A Worker.

A CONFERENCE of representatives of the various branches of the Protestant Episcopal Church Temperance Society in the South of Ireland has just been held in Dublin, when addresses on Temperance work were delivered by Rev. Henry Martin, of Stockton-on-Tees, and others, and many valuable hints for increasing its efficiency and success were thrown out.

MISSIONS AT PUTNEY.

A most blessed work of God seems to have begun in Putney. The mission which closed on Thursday, Nov. 9, was prepared for by a committee which informally represented all the Putney churches. There was perhaps even more than the usual cordiality among the various organisations. The only available building practically was a public-hall, holding 350, and very costly. But this was secured for ten days. There were tokens of blessing in an eight days' mission, held by the Presbyterian Church in the same hall in April. Still larger and most cheering results followed a mission conducted in October by Mr. Balgarnie at the "Union" Church (Congregational), when a large number of the young people seem to have come out for Christ.

Mr. Clarke's mission began on October 29, Sunday, with a full room, and soon there was no room for those who sought admission. The success seems to be due, under God, not so much to the powers of speech of the evangelist as to the method in which he presented the Gospel. His appeal was not so often "Come, for Christ can pardon," as "Yield utter submission, for God owns you, Christ has bought you; and absolute submission and surrender are the only terms on which He can bless." But he did certainly lay tremendous emphasis on the failure of much that passes for religion, and on the blessings which in this life accompany faith and repentance. Perhaps it was for this reason that so many backsliders seem to have been restored, and so many desponding Christians came to the inquiry-room wretched about their unsubdued temper, or other failures. Mr. Clarke's faith in a personal Satan is strong, and constantly influences his preaching. The address to new converts on the last night was full of sound sense and deep earnestness. Perhaps nothing characterised the mission more than the silence.

D. M.

THE GOSPEL ON THE ZAMBESI.

Rev. R. Henry Dyke, of the French Mission in Basutoland, now in this country on furlough, asks for special prayer on behalf of the Mission on the Zambesi, under the direction of M. Coillard. He writes:—"The last news we have received dates back to March 2, and therefore before the Matabele raid, which, it seems, was successful, for we hear that the impi, which returned just in time to take part in the present war, brought back cattle captured from the Barotsi. The fact that these Matabele took the small-pox home with them is also a proof that they crossed the Zambesi, for we know that the dreadful disease has been raging around the stations of our dear missionaries. Should the Matabele be driven out of their country it is probable that they will fall back upon the land of the Barotsi. The statement recently published, that the Barotsi were stockading their forts, has given the misleading impression that they are preparing to resist the Matabele at the present crisis; whereas it was some eight or nine months ago that they were doing this, and later accounts prove that they have not been able to resist the attack."

LAUNCH OF A MISSIONARY STEAMSHIP.—A steel screw steamship was launched on Saturday at Govan, Glasgow, for the work of the London Missionary Society among its South Sea Missions, and to maintain communication between the Samoan and Cook Islands and New Guinea and the Australian colonies. Since the sailing ship Duff made its first successful voyage to Tahiti in 1796-7, several vessels, purchased and maintained by means of funds specially raised by the young people of Great Britain, have been engaged in this service. Although the need of a steamship has been felt for many years, the consideration of expense has hitherto prevented the directors from meeting the requirements of the service in this particular. The steamship launched on Saturday (to be named the John Williams, after the martyr of Erromanga) is being built for the sum of £17,000, which the young people interested in the Society's work are being asked to raise as their centenary offering. She will have cabin accommodation for twelve European missionaries and for thirty native teachers; will be provided with sails of such dimensions as to allow her to rely on them alone on the longer stretches when the wind is in her favour, and will be able to use full steam power when the wind is against her, and for her special work of island visitation.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRLS.

In a miserable cellar at the rear of a house in a slum district of West London, there slept for several nights, unknown to the sanitary inspector, an old man, and his wife, who was several years his junior. With them were four children of tender age—three girls and a boy—the illegitimate offspring of the woman. The man had been a "bookmaker," the woman was a confirmed drunkard. They sold their few "sticks" some weeks before, and went hopping, and returned to the big city homeless and penniless. The cheerless cellar was placed at their disposal, and for a time they availed themselves of the shelter it afforded.

Early one morning the children, half-starved, ill-clad, and filthy, were sent in search of food. They were observed by the missionary of the "Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission," rummaging over some heaps of rubbish in Covent Garden market, picking out refuse only fit for the manure pit. In the spirit of the Master who came "to seek and to save that which was lost," the missionary invited the four children into a building close by, and provided them with a hearty meal, which was eagerly devoured.

Pity for the wee lasses led this servant of Christ to visit the miserable mother, and with her consent the three girls were transferred to the Home for waif children at Clacton-on-Sea, the country branch of this estimable Society. Here they are being fed, clothed, and educated, and will subsequently be trained for domestic service.

Another girl, twelve years of age, was one of six children left fatherless, and had not passed the first standard at school! Being the eldest, she was left in charge of the younger members of the family, while her poor delicate mother, a flower-seller, went out to earn their bread. Headstrong and defiant, the girl neglected her brothers and sisters, and falling in with evil companions who frequented the streets was found upon the very verge of ruin. She was taken in hand by one of the officers of the Mission, sent to the Home at Clacton, where she is being cared for and educated, and will, by and by, be prepared for service.

A remarkable case is that of a poor country girl, fourteen years of age, who, when work failed at the factory in her native village, came to London to seek employment. She sought in vain, however, and in despair resorted to the streets for a living. She was discovered by the Biblewoman of the Flower Girls' Mission in her wretched lodgings, and invited to the mission-house in Clerkenwell. Kind enquiries by the superintendent, Mr. Groom, only elicited the indignant reply:

"I'D RATHER GO TO PRISON THAN TO SERVICE."

She realised, however, that she was in the midst of friends who were interested in her welfare, and was induced to set herself to learn artificial-flower making. But it was soon discovered that her coarse hands were not adapted to this occupation, and by a little tact on the part of those over her she was by degrees introduced to domestic work, for which she showed no little aptitude. Not only was her prejudice for service completely dissipated, but she actually asked that a situation might be found for her. She has for some months past been in a comfortable home, and is giving entire satisfaction.

Crippled girls are frequently taken from the streets by the agents of this admirable institution, and, not being fit for service, are taught some business—such as artificial flower or fancy box making, and in a few cases bookfolding. Thus, in a variety of ways, the "Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission" is performing an excellent work amongst girls of all ages; a class, too, which is practically untouched by any other Christian enterprise.

The twenty-seventh annual report has recently been issued, which records that a large number of street hawkers have been removed from the streets, and set to be properly trained, and then to be placed in service; and when it is remembered that thousands besides have been brought under the influences of the Gospel of Christ, the extent of the blessing conferred safed to the girls themselves, and the benefit to society at large, are simply incalculable. The Mission deserves the hearty support of every section of the Church, and we warmly commend it to the practical sympathy of our readers. Contributions may be sent to our care; or to the Hon. Superintendent, Mr. J. A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, London, who will also thankfully acknowledge gifts of clothing, food, flowers, or books.

MRS. MACALPINE'S HOMES.

The report of the work in Manchester so long and closely associated with the late Mrs. Macalpine has just reached us, and we rejoice in the continuance and prosperity of an institution which God has been pleased greatly to bless. The report says:—

"Our work here has offered this year less variety than usual; a quieter and more settled spirit has pervaded the Home. Last year we reported that forty-eight women, of whom some stayed but a short time, had sought the shelter of the Home; only twenty-eight have come to us this year, and of these seventeen are still with us. Ten of the other eleven would not be persuaded to remain, but we trust that the faithful words spoken as they came and went will not be lost. Of the remaining one we can speak with joy and gratitude. She came to us a wreck through drink, having been saved with difficulty from attempted self-destruction. She was a poor, weak-willed creature, and her cry of despair still rings in our ears, 'Why did you not let me go? There is nothing for me to live for; no hope for me either here or in the next world.' For days we wondered who would be the victor as we saw evidence of an intensely earnest struggle. She has gone on splendidly, and has been very helpful in the work, is now living with her husband in a comfortable little cottage a few doors from where she lived before, and has spoken at the outdoor service to her own neighbours who know all her past life. She is thus a living testimony of the mercy of God." Other and similarly cheering cases are given in the report.

The work at the Preventive Home has also gone on well, and while the girls have often required great patience and forbearance, the results have been most cheering. There are sixteen girls now in the Home. The Maternity Home has done valuable work, and the large majority of those who have passed through it are now leading honourable lives.

We observe with much regret that the lack of funds has lately been sorely felt. We trust that many will come to the help of these faithful workers. Communications should be addressed, Mrs. Coller, 39, Higher Cambridge-street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester. The report closes:—

"How many are speeding on carelessly towards the shoals and hidden rocks that have been fatal to others! We in Christ's name are on the watch to rescue, if it may be, one here and there of these, and as we work on, now succeeding, now seeming to fail, we hear ever and anon words of wondrous music, 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these . . . even the least, ye did it unto Me.'"

RITUALISM IN VILLAGES.

A worker in charge of one of the Church Association Protestant vans sends a few facts sadly illustrative of the prevalence of ritualism in the country villages. We give one:—Visiting one church, he found the doors of the chancel fastened. Asking the sexton "Why that was?" the reply was "Because it is not to be profaned." I said, "Can you not let me through?" and he opened the doors, or rather gates, but remarked "If the vicar was to come in and see you, he would go into a fit." When I got to the so-called altar, on which was a crucifix, with also a little closed carved marble door, inside of which the host is supposed to dwell, but we found a spring, which, being touched, the door flew open, and nothing was to be seen; then, on the altar, were candles, seven in number, nearly two yards long, and about as thick as my wrist, with a little ticket on each. I asked what they meant, and was told they were the initials of the saints the candles were dedicated to, and were lighted on the days dedicated to those saints, and I was told it was quite a pantomime to see the clergyman performing strange rites when he is offering incense. This gentleman, I understand, had his living purchased for him by his wife's father, who was a titled Earl. The wife has now become a Roman Catholic, while two young women in the village have lately become Roman Catholics. What is the state of the parish? Why, as one might expect, the people are driven from the church. Some have become Dissenters, others will not go to this parish church, and become indifferent, and go nowhere at all.

A little while since I called on a clergyman, and he was making excuses, and thinking that the work was not needed, and did not see what good it was going to do. I said to him, "Last night my van was drawn up right opposite the public-house in the next parish to yours, and I spoke from the van. The people all came out of the public-house, and listened, with the landlord and his wife, and I had a most attentive audience. Now," I said, "that is what you have never done in your parish." "Well," he said, "I must own that I never have, and if that is the work you are doing you may come into my parish and do all the good you can." I am writing from a small village in Sussex, putting up at a public-house, the landlord of which showed me great favour, and removed some of the gigs and gave me permission to draw up in front of this building—a grand place to speak from. I have been to two schools very near to tell the children, so that they may take the news to their homes. This is my method of advertisement.

SENTENCES ON DRUNKARDS.

I want your readers to help all they can (everybody can do something) to get an alternative treatment for the short terms of imprisonment now given to wretched inebriate women; 262 times one of them has been in the police-court for this one offence! Is it not very unwise of our legislators to let this go on? Perhaps they forget the loss of money that such judicial treatment involves. If they do, the ratepayers should remind them of the waste that is going on. This is the very lowest consideration to bring forward, and Christians are bound to call attention to the solemn responsibility of not using the things ordained of God to better purpose.

The law that affects these sinners must be changed, and as in duty bound, and, above all, as a Prison Mission working for the salvation of their souls, we took the first steps towards changing it at a conference we held last Friday.

Lady Elizabeth Biddulph presided, and among those present were Mrs. Meredith, Sir W. T. Charley, Q.C., Mrs. W. S. Caine, Dr. Annie McCall, Miss Caroline Cavendish, Miss Lloyd, and Miss Penrose (hon. managers of the Mission and of the Princess Mary Village Homes).

Lady Biddulph referred to the cases in which women had been convicted time after time for drunkenness, some of them as many as 200 times, and said that in face of the terrible examples they had before them it was obvious that the present system of dealing with such cases had wholly failed. They had been much disappointed by the action of the House of Lords in rejecting two temperance measures during the present year, and they looked upon it as a proof that public opinion had not yet been sufficiently educated with respect to the use of intoxicating liquors, and was not yet ripe for restrictive legislation. She asked them to consider gravely the condition of their country at this moment, and believed that legislation on the subject before the conference would be most beneficial.

Sir W. Charley moved: "That the imprisonment of drunken women for short terms fails to do them any good, and an alternative treatment is indispensable." He quoted the opinion of a Select Committee of the House of Commons that small fines and short terms of imprisonment had been a failure, but thought the reverse of that would shock the public mind, and cause a great revulsion of feeling. It was not imprisonment which was needed, but curative treatment, and every magistrate should have the option of sending a drunkard of either sex to an inebriate home for curative purposes, which homes should be supported from imperial funds. A departmental committee of the Home Office had presented a report, which embodied every one of the points for which they were contending, and he trusted that at an early date an endeavour would be made to carry out these recommendations.

Mrs. R. C. Brown, M.D., seconded the resolution, and spoke of the utter hopelessness of trying to deal with intemperance whilst the public-houses were allowed to remain open.—The resolution was adopted with one dissentient.— Further resolutions were adopted, inviting persons of experience to formulate schemes for a new system of judicial treatment, affirming the desirability of forming a committee to consider schemes for the better dealing with women drunkards than the present law provides, suggesting that a public meeting should be held in the Mansion House, or elsewhere, to bring the matter before the country, and appointing an honorary secretary to carry out the resolutions and form a committee.

I want the prayers of your readers to go up for the success of the endeavour to "minister true justice to the people."

A strong enactment for the treatment of drunkards would go farther to suppress the vice than all the regulations of drink, on which we spend our time. We propose to begin at the bottom and work on, being assured that the influence will rise up and find the highest level before long. Discipline and penalties, etc., would not be borne by the ranks over our poor culprits, and no law-maker would be bold enough to propose it.

May we not hope that if the reform be granted, and benefit result, there may be a general improvement that will glorify God as the work of his servants?

Susanna Meredith.

Letters to the Editor.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUCCESS.

Dear Sir,—Reading your very interesting article on "The Sunday-School," the thought naturally arises, "Why is it so?" May I suggest that the key is found in the question put by a scholar to her Sunday-school teacher, "Are you saved, teacher?" Here is the secret of all Sunday-school success or failure, I firmly believe. What more common than the offer to the minister of a church or chapel from some member of his congregation to "take a class in the Sunday-school." Without wishing in any way to detract from the value of offered help, I maintain that no man or woman should be accepted as a Sunday-school teacher unless known to be converted to God.

In our own Sunday-school, I sincerely thank God, every teacher, man and woman, is a saved soul! What is the result? Our classes are large, necessarily so; but the definite decision of the children for Christ, from ages varying from twelve to sixteen, takes place frequently. At the close of our monthly special children's service, decision is pressed home upon them, in the simplest language, and two prayer meetings, one for boys and one for girls, are held. At our last two services six young people resolved to serve God, and, visiting one of the mothers a fortnight after, she said, "He is not like the same boy." Another dear lad is now one of the first to lead in prayer.

I thank God for your article; may it stir one and all of us to set our hearts on the individual salvation of the members of our classes, with renewed zeal and faith to remember indeed that God wants the children, and wants them now. B.

THE SUSTENANCE OF MISSIONARY WORK.

There never was a time, I think, when there was more need for self-examination concerning the privilege, responsibility, and debtorship of all God's children. And in view of the lamentable lack of adequate means to carry on even ordinary missionary work (not to mention the openings for aggressive movements), one feels solemnly led to ask, What is the matter? There must be a reason for this. Either Christians at home have lost faith in us, or they feel deeper interest in other schemes or newer methods.

Perhaps neither is true. It may be we are misunderstanding the voice of God. I am sure the thoughtful and prayerful flock of God desire to know the Shepherd's mind above all. It will be most helpful if, by conference, correspondence, and prayer, the views of others may be obtained. Surely it is high time to awake out of sleep. Either the giving of the Lord's people will need remodelling, or the work in foreign lands will be retarded in such a way as to be a positive disgrace to the household of faith.

I take it for granted that the professing Church of Christ is well able to sustain all the God-planned enterprise in every heathen centre. I do not think this can be denied. The enormous sums raised of late years, and the special efforts of jubilee or centenary celebrations, prove one solid fact—that there is wealth enough to meet every real need.

This being so, we must look for other reasons. I know of no plan more honouring to God than a week of humiliation and prayer; seeking to know his mind as to the present state of affairs. Why not a New Year's week at Mildmay for this special purpose? I believe untold blessing would result. I am quite aware that many will not see the need of this. Others, again, will say—let us pray at home, and have faith in God. Let this certainly be done, but do not let the other be undone. It is a grand thing to have a living faith in God. "Those who trust Him wholly find Him wholly true."

Yet it is a disgrace, I take it, to know that the daily needs of the Lord's workers are barely met by the present gifts. The appeals we read are heart-rending, and those who do not appeal, but simply live on "faith lines," might tell of sadly-straitened exchequers every month, and workers' portions frequently lessened. One does not mention this to evoke pity, but to show Christians at home that these are facts, and that the Christian Church is largely responsible for this state of things.

We have had a number of conferences for mutual fellowship and stirring up. Let there be now more "waiting upon God" and sincere humiliation with respect to the present condition (financially) of the older missions and societies. We would one and all rejoice to hear of a "waking up" along these lines.

I see no reason why scores of friends might not support their own representatives on the field, in addition to those who have adopted this plan for many years. There are hundreds beside who might begin to give to the Lord up to the point of "real self-sacrifice." How very little is seen of this style of giving? In addition to these, thousands might begin systematically to lay by for Him. There is a great deal of spasmodic giving, but the plan most glorifying to God seems to me to be "laying up" for His sake.

Whatever is done, I am convinced we need to look into the question of responsibility. It will never do to be a laughing-stock to unbelievers. Let us arise and seek to mend our ways, for Christ's dear sake.

A Missionary.

GIGANTIC EMPORIUMS.

Sir,—Anonymous letter-writers are generally best left alone, but by allowing them the use of your columns a certain amount of weight is given to the remarks they make. I ask permission to challenge the statements appearing in this week's Christian respecting "Gigantic Emporiums," and to assert that, in these days, at all events, in large English business houses such a state of things as "An Old Reader" speaks of is quite an exception rather than the rule. I commend to the attention of "An Old Reader" in particular, and to anonymous letter-writers in general, the letter you print, perhaps purposely, just over that of "An Old Reader," headed "Evil Speaking," especially that portion thereof which reads as follows: "Before making a remark affecting other persons three questions should be mentally first—Is it true? Is it kind? Is it necessary?"—Yours faithfully,

George M. Chamberlin.

Bixley Lodge, Norwich, Nov. 12.

[This correspondence must now close. In the consideration of the question we should distinguish between persons and systems; and this some of our correspondents do not seem to have done.—Ed.]

VISITING PUBLIC HOUSES.

A "note" in The Christian has revived an old thought:—During a stay in England and Scotland, 1876-77, a sister of mine and I visited some 3000 public-houses. Having seen their abominations, particularly on Saturdays, the question arose: "What is being done on that particular day to check the devil's obvious plan of destroying beforehand, to millions of people, the Lord's Day?" The answer, alas, came prompt: "Next to nothing!"

Now, should it be impossible to get on foot a system of holding meetings, all through Saturday afternoons and evenings, in evangelistic churches, chapels and other meeting places, one place after another in each district taking its turn in regulated order, and beginning respectively at, say one, three, five, seven, nine o'clock? Untiring invitations, bells ringing, plenty of light, cheerful singing, etc.—would they not combine to draw multitudes from those infernal dens and bring them under the sound of the blessed Gospel, thus helping to "pave the way" for the Lord and his people and his servants.—Yours in Him our Master, C. L. B.

IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

Letters have recently been received from Mrs. Aitchison, giving the sad news that a tribal war had again broken out in Pondoland, and was causing much alarm. Several battles had been fought in the neighbourhood, and guns were heard in the distance. The destruction of houses and property had been very great, the poor women and children barely escaping with their lives, and were now starving in the bush.

Mrs. Aitchison says this Pondo war is the one subject uppermost, both with the native and white people, and they are anxiously watching and waiting the issue, as it may go on for months. It greatly interferes with ploughing and sowing, which means no harvest. It is both wonderful and terrible that such a state of affairs should be allowed to exist, with English eyes looking on.

So far the workers have not felt in any great danger as to their safety, but they ask for the earnest prayers of Christian friends, that they may be permitted to go forward with their work for the Master.

MEDICAL MISSIONARIES.—The Quarterly Paper of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society says:—"In spite of the number of our students now qualifying, we have received a number of applications for men whom we have no means of supplying. A man is wanted to take Dr. Pirie's place in China (Church of Scotland Mission); another to fill up the absence on furlough of Dr. Shrubshall, also of China (Methodist New Connexion); a third to co-operate with the two medical missionaries at the capital of Madagascar (Friends, and L.M.S. Mission), while they alternately come home on furlough; another to go out to Africa (Cape General Mission); another for the Congo (Congo Balolo Mission); while, lastly, Major-General Haig is extremely anxious that a married medical missionary should go out to begin work at Suakin."

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

We who know the life of city children do not wonder that some of them become criminals. I often try to picture to myself what my life might have become had my early lot been cast amid such surroundings.—J. R. Diggle.

To protect his boy in purity, to arm him against temptation, to train him for God and for an honest and useful sphere in the work of the world, a father should deal with his son, not by delegated authority, but by loving, steady, personal influence.

A young lady gave a piece of her mind to a little lad who had robbed a bird's nest. "Think of the poor mother," she said, "what must she have felt!" "If that's her," said the boy, "that you've got on your hat, she doesn't seem to mind it a bit!"

When shall we see the false economy—to put it on the lowest ground—after having spent no end of money on educational and philanthropic agencies, of allowing the children recklessly to drift back to fill prisons, workhouses, and hospitals?—Miss Steer.

The Protection of Children Act, 1889, under section 6, says that any one Justice, under certain circumstances, may issue a warrant authorising any person named therein to search for a child alleged to be ill-treated, and to take it to a workhouse for temporary shelter.

What, a child of many prayers! But no immediate answer had been expected or watched for, and innumerable evils had been growing in the child's temper and habits, while parents were dwelling upon a large blessing to be bestowed in some distant future.—Sophia Wilson.

There is no higher, more enviable state of mind and conscience than that of a man who can say to himself at each day's close: "To-day I have planted a new idea, have awaked a noble sentiment, have corrected a defect, have sown a seed for good, in the heart of a child."

There are possibilities in character-building for the young that will soon be closed by the limitations of fixed habits, by the pressure of new and strong temptations, by the weakened power or loss of the best aims. It is the sowing time, the March and April of life.—Rev. E. W. Shalders.

If you would be a true friend to any child you must pay the price:—time, thought, prayer, practice will have to be given. You must study its intellectual and moral nature, and frame your plans accordingly. That is the sure and certain way to success.—F. J. Gladman.

If we have forgotten our childhood, then imagination and sympathy must supplement the deficiences of memory. Though we may have put away childish things, yet we shall not teach or train children successfully unless we manage sometime to feel as a child and think as a child.—L. S. Renshawe.

Oh the heartlessness of women whom the drink has debased! I know several lodging-houses where babies are on hire from fourpence to a shilling a day. The prettier the child the better; should it happen to be a cripple or have particularly thin arms and face, it is always worth a shilling.—Dr. Barnardo.

When the children are round your knee is character-forming time. It is then the twig is bent, the first channels dug of those life-currents that may become deep and swift, the first aspirations lifted heavenward that are either evaporated under worldly hearts, or become habits of prayer and hope.—L. S. Renshawe.

Long Lane, Borough.

In this district, one of the poorest and most thickly populated in London, a most successful mission has, for several years, been carried on. An old, disused Welsh chapel in Crosby-row, with accommodation for about 500 persons, has been leased and turned into a mission hall, and has become the centre of earnest evangelistic work under the superintendence of Mr. W. Baker, one of the missionaries of the London City Mission. The work has been attended with many tokens of Divine favour.

At the anniversary meeting recently held, presided over by Rev. S. G. Green, D.D., president of the mission, it was stated that the Sunday evening services attract large congregations. Bible classes for men and women are largely attended, and a mothers' meeting, numbering 200 mothers, is having a good influence upon the hearts and homes of many. Nearly all the Sunday school teachers and the members of the choir have been led to Christ through the work of the mission. The homes of the people are regularly visited by Mr. Baker and by lady helpers, who are thus able to do good work among the sick poor.

The expenses of the mission amount to about £200 per annum. The hon. secretary is Mr. Waltham, 45, Christ Church-road, Streatham

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department,
Bouverie House,
Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland	..	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	..	8s. 10d. " "
For United States and Canada	..	2¼ dols. " "
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	..	2½ dols. " "

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	..	2s. per annum.
8 " "	..	4s. " "
12 " "	..	6s. " "
24 " "	..	12s. " "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Caine.

We hope that our readers, whether they agree with the late Sir Arthur Blackwood's interpretation or not, will not shut their eyes and ears to the unquestionable facts in his paper this week. For ourselves, we think his exposition of the fire from heaven is a most legitimate explanation of the symbol used.

Our readers will not, we hope, pass over the pathetic "Believer's Appeal" on p. 21. While evidently written with reference to one body of Christians, it is an appeal in which all are interested. We have printed three lines in italic which seem specially worthy of remark: "It is cruel to souls, often tired in body by toil, to have their minds perplexed by questions which they cannot understand, and never will." Some questions most pertinaciously discussed, are academic or speculative, and quite out of the range of nine out of ten ordinary Christian people.

The ending of the coal war has given universal satisfaction. The manner of its ending has marked a new departure in our industrial life. Government interfered, very delicately and very skilfully, but it interfered, and commercial struggles will never be quite the same again. A strike used to be spoken of as something which all respectable people must frown upon; now we see that painful and undesirable as such a mode of settling wages may be, there may be a deep sense of justice underneath it. The men have spoken on terms of perfect equality with their masters, and reason and good feeling have prevailed on both sides, though after a weary delay.

Let us hope that the determination to establish a Board of Conciliation will save the coal trade from any repetition of the scenes of the last four months. Rightly constituted, and with masters and men honestly determined to use it, it ought to prove a success. Much depends upon the spirit in which it is taken up. Christian masters and men should be earnest in working for peace.

The fierce gales of Saturday night wrought great havoc around our coasts, and the reported death-roll of seamen is a long one. Such calamitous occasions ought to evoke general sympathy with those who carry on our commerce at the hazard of their lives; and steady contributions should flow into the coffers of the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society and similar agencies.

The Opium Commission has begun its sittings at Calcutta, and the first day's evidence was distinctly of a pro-opium character. That was only to be expected from Government official witnesses. Subsequent evidence from disinterested parties will certainly redress the balance. We observe that The Times correspondent at Calcutta is doing his best to prejudice the Commission, and to predict "serious results." We trust the results will be serious, but in a very different sense from that desired by this heartless writer.

If politicians would meditate upon God's inspired book of history and prophecy, they would understand the situation better, and the nations would be better governed. And not only politicians—business men, heads of families, men and women in every position of authority over others, would find the Word of God a lamp to their feet, a light to their path. For whence comes this continual unrest, this universal revolt against authority? Anarchism, Nihilism, Socialism, Labour Wars, Woman's Suffrage — all are the natural revolt against authority abused; the protest of the weaker against the stronger, whose strength has been used for self-aggrandisement or ease, not for the help of those whose weakness was their claim. Giving honour to the weaker vessel is one of God's principles, on which society will be built up when Jesus reigns.

Why did the gold of royal prerogative in the monarch's dream degenerate to the clay of popular rule? Because the kings did not obey the Prophet's admonition, to break off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by showing mercy to the poor. The prerogative which they abused, in the nature of things declined. Royal prerogative is almost dead.

The great discoveries of the forces of nature put power into the hands of men of brain and men of wealth. But the seething discontent among "the hands," will go on increasing unless the brains and wealth are recognised as gifts from God to be used for the welfare of the whole body politic. Brains and wealth are powerless without hands. In God's everlasting circles wealth and hands are needed to work out what the brain works in. God's circles, the wheels of Ezekiel's vision, are "so high that they are dreadful." Beware of being crushed by them.

"Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" the so-called law of so-called political economy, which, stripped to its native nakedness, is discovered to be > the good old plan,

> That they may take who have the power,
> And they may keep who can.

Is it not by a mischief-framing law, and therefore a devil's law, that the competition of labour enables the sweater to screw down the hire of the sempstress to a starvation wage? Hood's pathetic "Song of the Shirt" has become an English classic, and England is proud of her poet son, but is not ashamed of her oppressed daughter; for the original singer still sings on—

> Stitch, stitch, stitch.
> In poverty, hunger, and dirt;
> And still, with a voice of dolorous pitch,
> She sings this Song of the Shirt.

"Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" No. "Righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne."

Upholders of wickedness have made ghastly merriment by slandering the noblest of women as "the shrieking sisterhood." Let us hear the shrieking brotherhood lifting up their voice in The Times:—

> The colonists must be begged to extend a little toleration to rhodomontade which is undoubtedly irritating. Let them try to realise what is suffered by this country from the wild enthusiasts who have temporarily turned their attention to South Africa. We have them always with us—these generous dispensers of good things at other people's expense. They call loudly for a living wage for miners, which somebody else is to pay. They demand the abolition of the Indian opium revenue, and leave the Indian taxpayer to bear the burden. They are always discovering some new thing to shriek about, but the last idea that enters their mind is to bear the cost of the reforms they demand. When they call for Imperial interference in Matabeleland at the expense of the Chartered Company or of Cape Colony, they are only indulging a general habit. They would be the first to denounce the Imperial expenditure required to administer Matabeleland from Downing-street. Let our Cape friends think what it is for the poor mother country to have this sort of thing always going on in half-a-dozen shapes, and then they will take a more calm and kindly view of the attitude of the English people at large, which, they may rest assured, is not the attitude of the sentimentalists.

We cannot expect those who write like this to be quite sure that all they say is true. It is not true that "those who demand the abolition of the Indian opium revenue leave the Indian taxpayer to bear the burden." On the contrary, Sir Joseph Pease explained long ago how the burden might be borne by this country without feeling it. Nor is it true that any "call for a living wage for miners, which somebody else is to pay." Presumably they will still use coal, and if the living wage raises the price they will bear their share. Does The Times, which claims to be "the leading journal," advocate less than a living wage for the miner, or for any other of his fellow-creatures? The Pall Mall Gazette, which is certainly not among the sentimentalists, and is as much a defender of opium as The Times itself, has maintained the "call for imperial interference in Matabeleland." The writer of the above thoughtless words, though no "sentimentalist," might possibly be mistaken for a "wild enthusiast" in his own particular line.

"Covet earnestly the best gifts." There are few gifts better than love for little children, "for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." It is a gift which may be cultivated as well as coveted, and it well repays its possessor. We spent a few hours recently in the East End with Mr. C. L. Boyer, and heard his name shouted with affectionate enthusiasm by the children's voices whenever they recognised him at the head of their street. Very touching is it to see the happiness of the crippled children, so sorely handicapped for life; but perhaps by their very helplessness driven all the more to think as well as sing about the life to come; the Home above; the Saviour's love to little children. Why should there not be a children's special friend for every street?

Someone who signs himself "X." writes in The Fortnightly Review that from one-fifth to one-third or a-half of the male population of a village or district in Ireland, large enough to have a tied house, is body and soul at the service of the publican. It is a rare village which the publican cannot control. "Where the priest is in antagonism with the publican, the priest's influence may be written down at zero." The pothouse loafers and corner-boys corrupt the youth and make the future of Ireland very dark.

This is a reproach to all the churches, but chiefly to the Romish Church, which has had the guidance of these people in her hands for so long. For a minister of religion to be beaten by the publican is a disgrace. We know a Yorkshire town where the Independent minister determined to prevent a brewer being put upon the town council, and he succeeded. But then he was known and trusted by men of all parties; his battle was won before it was fought. The moral obviously is, that the more we can weaken the publican, the more we shall weaken the priest, and vice versa. There are signs of blessing for Ireland which do not come under the eyes of statesmen and magazine writers.

When Barnabas, a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, went to Antioch, and had seen the grace of God in those who had believed and turned to the Lord, he was glad. There was doubtless much of human weakness and ignorance, but Barnabas, being good, saw the good; being full of the Holy Ghost, he perceived the manifestation of the Spirit in the disciples. He fostered it by his own exhortation that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. And, still more, he went to Tarsus and brought Saul to Antioch; so that with Saul's teaching and Barnabas's exhortation during a whole year, the disciples became so Christ-like that they were first called Christians, not at Jerusalem, but at far-away Gentile Antioch. We see what we have the capacity of seeing, and our action and influence will agree thereto.

Unlike Barnabas, Judas Iscariot was "the traitor." He could not see the grace of God even in that advanced saint Mary, who anointed the feet of Jesus and wiped them with her hair. He was a thief and had the bag; and all he had the capacity to see in Mary's act was the loss of three hundred pence to the bag, which he carried ostensibly in the interest of the poor, really in his own. And all the effect it had on Judas was that Satan could within six days put it into his heart to betray Jesus, and that after the sop Satan entered into him. Yet heaven's estimate of Mary's deed was that in anointing Him for his burial she had wrought a good work on Him whom the angels worship; and He testified that "wheresoever this Gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this that this woman hath done be told for a memorial of her." Truly, we see what we are intent upon seeing, and our action and influence will agree thereto.

Will those dear brethren who are so anxious in their charity to whitewash Judas Iscariot, observe that he is never named without the mention of his betrayal of the Lord? And that when the other Judas is mentioned the Inspiring Spirit is careful to add, "not Iscariot," or to distinguish him as "the brother of James?"

The Lord's Supper.

By a Presbyterian Minister.

The principal Scriptures relating to this ordinance are Matt. xxvi. 26-29, Mark xiv. 22-25, Luke xxii. 19, 20, 1 Cor. ii. 23-29. These inspired writings agree in their description of the way in which it was instituted and its object; but very different meanings have been put on their language. It cannot be doubted that the First Supper was not given to men who were fasting, for it is emphatically said by Matthew and Mark that while they were eating the Passover Jesus took bread and wine, and told them thereafter to break bread, to eat it, and to drink wine, in remembrance of Him. And Paul tells the Corinthians to make a meal at home, so as not to come fasting to the Lord's Supper. Jesus, at the time He instituted the Supper, was about to leave his disciples, and He wished his followers, by a significant act, to keep fresh in their memories and affections the death He was to undergo for them.

From the most remote antiquity among the Semitic races, the partaking of bread and wine jointly, in the manner of the Lord's Supper, was the sign of brotherhood even unto death. It is practised still among those Arabs who roam within or around the Holy Land. Jesus and his disciples understood that this act represented the covenant of a perpetual brotherhood, full of tender affection, in which each was bound to risk life for the other, and the eating was the seal of that covenant; for, as the Arabs say, "The bread never leaves the true heart." How soon, how faithfully, our Lord kept his side of this covenant was seen in the awful sufferings of the following day, and in due time the eleven proved that they were faithful also.

This feast of remembrance did not secure in it the personal presence of Jesus; on the contrary, it provided expressly for his absence. He said, "This do ye in remembrance of Me." Not "in remembrance of my actions, but of Myself—of Me." Now, it is an abuse of language to say that you remember one who is present with you. When your friend is with you, memory, as a matter of necessity, is dormant; it is neither required nor exercised. But if he is personally absent, then by a mental act you call him to remembrance—you think of him and of all that he is to you. In such remembrance you study more his character, and are conscious of a deeper sympathy and affection than while he is actually present, and you are enjoying his society. This loving remembrance has its chief influence on your own mind; it fits you for welcoming his return, while, when he hears of it, the heart of your friend rejoices.

Further, the Apostle Paul (1 Cor. xi. 26) expressly shows that the Lord will not be personally present in the Supper, for it is to be celebrated as a remembrance until He comes. When the Lord comes the Supper will cease. There cannot be at the same time a personal presence and a memorial feast. In another place (2 Cor. v. 16) he confirms this view by saying, "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we Him so no more."

It is of still more importance to learn that the Lord Jesus Christ hath Himself made a Divine arrangement by which it is rendered impossible that He should be personally present in the Supper. He promised that the Holy Spirit should come to abide with them and teach them. Jesus taught that the Holy Spirit could not come so long as He was with them. Jesus must be absent so that the Spirit might be present to bring Jesus to their remembrance. Thus it is impossible that the Lord Christ can be personally present in the bread and wine of the Supper. There is a most blessed, grateful, adoring remembrance of Him in his atoning death, which draws the soul nearer to Him while it strengthens for duty or for trial.

This false doctrine of the presence of Christ in the bread and wine, or in any way except as one remembered, is insulting and injurious to the Holy Spirit. It sets aside his special work, which is to bring Christ to the remembrance of his people (John xiv. 26). In order that that may be done, Jesus said, "It is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you" (John xvi. 7). The personal absence of Christ is essential to the well-being both of the Church collectively and of individual believers. This is the time of the Spirit's work. Christ hath declared his work in salvation to be finished, and God the Spirit hath come to testify of Him, to call Him to remembrance, to give power unto believers that they may set forth Christ. When this false doctrine of the presence of Christ in the Sacrament is proclaimed, the Holy Spirit is grieved and insulted. He withdraws Himself, and the gifts and graces of believers become feeble. When men depart from the teaching of the written Word and venture to appoint unto the persons of the Godhead their places in the plan of salvation, they exhibit a presumptuous spirit which can only produce evil consequences to themselves and to the Church.

It is argued that Jesus took bread and broke it, saying, "Take, eat; this is my body, broken for you." Now, if these words are taken literally, we are brought to the face of a difficulty so stupendous that it can only be stated with reverence and awe. The sacred body of our Lord was not at that time broken; He was not yet in the hands of his enemies, and their deeds of cruelty did not begin for several hours later. How, then, can the literal statement be reconciled with fact? Are we to suppose that the Lord broke off a portion of his holy body, and made it into bread? Or, that there were two Christs, one holding the other in his hands, breaking Him and distributing Him to be eaten? The mere statement of the difficulties surrounding a literal interpretation show that it is even monstrously unreal. The Lord said "This is my body," and not one of the Syrians there misunderstood Him any more than when He said, "I am the Way," "I am the Door," "I am the True Vine." If one passage is literal, so are all the rest, and the result is not merely confusion, but blank nothingness.

I would further ask, if the words "This is my body" are to be taken literally, what body is meant now in this nineteenth century? Is it the body Christ wore upon earth, or is it the glorified body which sits upon the eternal throne?

How bewildering, how unsatisfactory, are the ways of men! How comforting, how perfect, are the plans of God! The Lord hath provided for his people by teaching them through a striking and ancient figure that He is their Brother, their Eternal Friend. In effect, He said, "My body is to be cruelly torn, my blood shed for you; yet you will often forget, often sin against Me. I know your weakness, but I give you a help. Meet together to break bread, to drink wine, in remembrance of my death. Revive your love. Be not afraid. I thus assure you beforehand of my full forgiveness for all your follies, for all your sins."

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXV.

FIRE FROM HEAVEN.

"And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven upon the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast" (Rev. xiii. 13, 14). "Whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness" (2 Th. ii. 9, 10).

False miracles were then to be a notable phenomenon connected with the bestial, the monstrous, the diabolical power, whose character and history we have seen prefigured in the page of prophecy, and traced by the pen of history. And if a crowning mark of identification of that power with the great Roman Antichrist were needed, it is supplied by the well-known and loudly-vaunted pretensions of the Apostate Church, that at her shrines and altars miracles have been and are still wrought.

It has been largely by the means of such "lying wonders" that the minds of the ignorant and credulous peoples of Christendom have been influenced, so that they have yielded their slavish allegiance to the claims of the Great Babylon which, enthroned upon the seven hills, has for more than a thousand years exercised supreme spiritual and temporal authority over "multitudes and nations and tongues."

The speaking images, the winking Madonnas, the cures said to be effected by pieces of the cross, holy rags and bones of dead men and women, that have been paraded and extolled wherever the Romish Church has extended her sway, are notorious. And that the delusions wrought thereby were not confined to the dark ages is equally well known. Not only did the benighted crowds of those days fall down and worship at the shrines, and give themselves over body and soul to the false priesthood that ruled over them and hugely profited by these lying wonders. The same delusion prevails even in the enlightened nineteenth century, when the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius at Naples, the apparitions of the Virgin at Knock and at Lourdes, still attract the homage of crowds both of the ignorant and the educated, and give rise to pilgrimages.

The testimony of history, ancient and modern, is emphatic on this subject. As Mosheim records of the clergy of the seventh century, "Every objection was silenced by them with appeal to two things—the authority of the Churchand miracles." Miracles wrought by the man, alive or dead, were essential before he could be recognised and canonised as a saint.

But in the passage in Rev. xiii. one particular lying wonder is selected for special notice—namely, that of fire being made to come down from heaven, and it is this which now demands our attention.

It has been expected by some that this prediction would receive a literal fulfilment, and that some individual man, prefigured by the wild beast with lamb-like horns and dragon-like voice (though I have never gathered from such expositors how they distinguish him from the personal Antichrist whom they regard as the first wild beast), is to bring down actual fire from heaven to the earth. But this is to confound the sign with the thing signified. The expressions are all symbolic. The fire is just as much a symbol as the first and second beasts are symbols. Actual fire is no more to be expected than an actual wild beast with lamb-like horns.

The question is, what is the pretended miracle which is signified by the fire from heaven, whereby they that dwell upon the earth were to be deluded? Employing again the two keys—of Scripture usage and history—we shall find the meaning to be perfectly simple, almost more so than that of any other symbol in the book. If we search the Scriptures we shall find that fire coming down from heaven in the sight of men denoted three things: (1) Divine acceptance of a propitiatory sacrifice; (2) Infliction of Divine judgment; (3) Enduement with Divine power.

Of the first the following are examples:—

When the sacrifices were offered at the consecration of Aaron and his sons, "there came fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt offering and the fat; which, when all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces" (Lev. ix. 24). When Gideon laid the flesh of the slain kid upon the rock, as enjoined, "there rose up fire out of the rock, and consumed the flesh" (Jud. vi. 21). When Manoah offered the kid unto the Lord, "the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, and Manoah and his wife looked on, and fell on their faces to the ground" (Jud. xiii. 20). When David offered burnt offerings to God in the threshing-floor of Araunah as a propitiation for his sin, "the Lord answered him from heaven by fire upon the altar of burnt offering" (1 Ch. xxi. 26). When Solomon dedicated the Temple "the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering and the sacrifices" (2 Ch. vii. 1). When Elijah offered the sacrifice on Mount Carmel, and invoked an answer by fire in attestation of Jehovah's deity, "then the fire of the Lord fell and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and when all the people saw it they fell on their face, and they said, The Lord, He is the God; the Lord, He is the God" (1 Kings xviii. 38, 39). And we may assume that the approval of Abel's sacrifice, an approval so visible that Cain could see it, was manifested in the same way. In all these cases the supernatural fire denoted Divine satisfaction with, and acceptance of, propitiatory or atoning sacrifices.

Of the second we may note as instances:—The destruction of the cities of the plain: "Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven" (Gen. xix. 24). The plague upon Egypt: "The Lord sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground" (Ex. ix. 23). The judgment inflicted upon Nadab and Abihu: "There went out fire from the Lord and devoured them" (Lev. x. 2). The overthrow of the murmurers in the wilderness: "And the fire of the Lord burnt among them and consumed them" (Num. xi. 1). The punishment of the abettors in Korah's rebellion: "There came a fire from the Lord and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense" (Nu. xvi. 35). The detention of the two captains with their fifties who sought to arrest Elijah: "And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty" (2 Ki. i. 10, 12). In these cases it is evident that fire from heaven was the instrument of Divine punishment.

Of the third, that is of fire as the symbol of enduement with Divine power, we have one grand and one memorable instance: "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost" (Act ii. 3, 4). It was the baptism of the Spirit.

Now, it is the power of invoking, nay, of compelling, the descent of fire from heaven, that Rome has asserted with blasphemous effrontery to be hers. And it has been precisely by this assertion that she has deceived and enslaved them that dwell upon the earth. Herein has lain her great strength. Without it she would have been utterly powerless.

For what is it that takes place, and has taken place, every day in every year in every Romish cathedral, church, and chapel throughout Christendom for more than twelve centuries? No sooner has the officiating priest pronounced the words of consecration over the sacrifice of the Mass, which he claims to offer as a propitiation for the living and the dead, than it is changed, as he asserts, by the descending influence of Deity itself, of Him who is a "consuming fire," into the very body and blood of Christ, and is accepted by God as an atonement for the sins of the people. The deluded congregation bow their heads and worship. They believe implicitly that their priest is commissioned by God to offer the sacrifice for them, and that it is accepted on their behalf. Were it not for this belief, the belief that the Romish priesthood has power to make such propitiation for the sins of the people as to procure for them forgiveness, release from purgatory, and ultimate salvation, the great usurper of the dignity and prerogatives of Christ would have no hold upon them whatever. But fire is brought down from heaven in the sight of men, the lying wonder is wrought, and the souls of millions are enslaved. This is her impious claim. As Isychius, Bishop of Jerusalem, contemporary of Gregory I., wrote: "The Church holds both these fires, the one for the completion of the sacrifices, the other for the punishment of the ungodly."

For she also assumes the right of inflicting Divine penalties. What else did the anathemas, the excommunications, the interdicts of Rome pretend to be? What was the effect of a Papal interdict? Throughout a whole kingdom the churches were closed, the services stopped, the sacraments unadministered, the dead unburied. Excommunication filled everyone with fear. What did a contemporary historian record of the impression of awe and terror produced upon the bystanders on the occasion of the solemn excommunication of the Emperor Frederick by Pope Innocent at the first Council of Lyons? "These words, uttered in the midst of the Council, struck the hearers with terror, as might the flashing thunderbolt. When, with candles lighted and flung down, the Lord Pope and his assistant prelates flashed their lightning fire terribly against the Emperor Frederick, now no longer to be called Emperor, his procurators and friends burst into a bitter wailing and struck the thigh or breast." An individual thus excommunicated, or a kingdom placed under interdict, was deemed accursed of God, scathed, as it were, with the lightning fire of heaven itself.

And does not Rome claim, in the third place, the right of conferring the Holy Ghost upon her so-called priests? What is the figment of Apostolical Succession but the assertion that the Episcopate has the power of transmitting the Spirit of God, even that gracious Spirit who descended upon the early Church as in cloven tongues of fire, to whomsoever it chooses? "Receive ye the Holy Ghost" are the solemn words uttered at consecration, and from that moment the supposed recipient is regarded as invested with power from on high to bind or to loose, to offer sacrifices for living and dead, to open heaven and hell, to forgive sins, and to act as God. And it is because these claims have been acquiesced in both by those who knew no better and by those who were glad to commit their consciences and souls to the keeping of a so-called priesthood, that Rome has exercised such fatal influence over the millions whom she has enslaved. The supreme "lying wonder" of fire brought down from heaven—supernatural, yea Divine, power wielded for the acceptance of the sacrifice, the infliction of judgment, and the enduement with the Holy Ghost, has been wrought and is still wrought, with all its delusive and destructive effect. It is indeed "after the working of Satan."

Would that it could be said that this "deceivableness of unrighteousness" were confined to Rome. But she has her daughters; for she is "the mother of harlots." Throughout so-called Protestant Churches, in which the leaven of Popish forms and phrases has been allowed to remain, the blasphemous assumptions of Divine prerogatives are, alas! widely made. Men, claiming to be, and calling themselves, "priests" have crept in on every side, and have exalted themselves into the position of mediators with God, receiving the confessions of sinners, professing to communicate forgiveness to them, and offering daily sacrifices for sins. Sacramentarianism and sacerdotalism are making rapid and terrible progress throughout our once Protestant country. Ritualism, the daughter of Rome, and so like her mother as hardly to be distinguishable from her, is spreading on every side. Every dogma of Romish error (with the exception of Papal Infallibility and the Immaculate Conception) is unblushingly taught in thousands of our churches. The rising generation in a multitude of parishes is being surely instructed in the ways which their forefathers abjured, and to resist which they laid down their lives. And the people love to have it so. Oh! for a Wycliffe, a Latimer, a Ridley, to arise, and in the strength of God to turn the heart of this people, so blessed of Him in its possession and propagation of the truths of the Gospel, back to the purer paths of days gone by. Now, if ever, do we need a fresh Reformation. Let us unitedly and earnestly pray that the real, the living, fire may come down from heaven; no "lying wonder," but a glorious reality, baptizing ministers and people alike with life from on high, and kindling such love to God, such zeal for the Gospel, and such unflinching adherence to the truth, as shall maintain the honour of the Saviour's name, draw multitudes to Him, and hasten the day of his blessed and longed-for return.

Oh, for the living flame,
From his own altar brought,
To touch our lips, our minds inspire,
And wing to heaven our thought.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A new Institute for the use of sailors frequenting Par, in Cornwall, was opened by Mrs. Gott last Thursday. Dr. Gott, the Bishop of the diocese, very warmly commended the work of the Society, under whose auspices the Institute will be worked.

The Parliament of Religions.—3.

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

The most frequent question asked in reference to the Parliament of Religions is: Cui bono? What good did it do? What benefit, if any, was there in it for the cause of Christ? Not a few of our friends answered this question to themselves before the Parliament assembled, saying, "No good can come of it," and so they stayed away. Some have answered in the same way since. Some have said that the Parliament has resulted in compromising the great truth of the Gospel, and putting it on a level with pagan religions and philosophies. On the other hand, some have been throwing their hats up in the air, and shouting that the millennium has certainly now been ushered in—that the Gospel of goodwill and sincerity (no matter what you believe, so long as you are sincere) has now been substituted for the old dogmas of the Christian creed, and henceforth religious unity is secured to the world, not in a unity of belief, but in a universal tolerance of and respect for all religious beliefs, be they atheistic, pantheistic, polytheistic, monotheistic, idolatrous, or non-idolatrous.

Of course, these latter optimists represent that class of so-called Christians who only regard the Gospel as one of many forms of true religion—a little better than some, and possibly not quite so good as others: the best for our country and our people, as Hinduism is best for the Hindus, and Mohammedanism best for Arabs. But, turning from these extreme critics, I think the sober second thought concerning the results of the Parliament will be that upon the whole great good has already come out of it, and more good will follow. I venture to point out some of the good results of the Parliament as I perceive them.

First.—It was a good thing and a grand thought for believers in Christ to summon by invitation the representatives of all religious beliefs to a Christian country, to hear what we have to tell them of Christ, and to bid them consider the message of the Gospel. As I said in a former article, in this respect this Parliament just missed of realising another great day of Pentecost. Hitherto it has been difficult for our missionaries throughout the world, and especially throughout the Orient, to get the leaders of paganism and Oriental philosophy to listen to them, much less to enter into a friendly discussion of the comparative claims of Christ and anti-Christian systems. But now the great leaders of these hoary faiths have voluntarily accepted our challenge, and come across seas and continents to "reason together" with us concerning the things of God. It will no longer be infra dig. for an Oriental teacher of religion to listen to or enter into debate with a Christian missionary in his own land, and before his own people, since he has crossed half the world to do this same thing in Chicago. If the great representatives of these old-world faiths will sit for weeks together and listen to carefully-prepared papers and addresses in defence and advocacy of Christianity, it cannot be wrong or censurable for the common people in their own countries to listen to the heralds of the Cross who have come to them.

The fact of the Parliament, and that their leaders were present at it, will become known throughout the Oriental world, and will certainly excite curiosity to know what the religion of Christ is. Thus the Parliament will have opened new doors for our missionaries abroad, and will have prepared much ground for their sowing. In this connection I think it not too much to say that the representatives of the great Oriental peoples and religions will certainly have "suffered" some enlargement of mind in respect of the Christian people among whom they have sojourned as guests. The travelling expenses and all expenses of entertainment were paid by the Christian promoters of the Parliament. Orientals are conceited in regard to their supposed exclusive possession of wisdom and truth. Western nations and peoples are to them barbarians and "foreign devils." These men from India, China, and Japan, will scarcely carry back that idea, but, on the contrary, they will have great and good things to report of Western peoples, manners, and customs. With my own ears I heard many an expression of surprise and deep appreciation of the courtesy, kindness, and broad-spirited generosity of mind with which the Orientals were received.

Second.—The converse of everything said under the first head is true. At this Parliament the followers of Christ had a splendid opportunity of preaching the Gospel to all nations, and sending the news of God's great love back to the Orient by their own representatives, an opportunity such as never before has been offered in the history of the Christian Church. How well or how faithfully that opportunity was embraced, I must leave my readers to judge for themselves after having read the reports of the proceedings (now being published in full). That the Gospel of the Son of God was fully preached needs hardly to be said. Scores of papers and addresses, presenting the revelation of God in Christ from as many different points of view, were delivered. The Bible, its origin, its inspiration, its antiquity, the incomparable excellence of its ethical and religious truth, its historical authenticity, its unimpeachable veracity, its mighty triumphs—all this was brought forward. Jesus Christ, the Son of God and of man; the suffering Saviour, his high office as the Redeemer and Reconciler of man to God; his resurrection and the certainty and guarantee of immortality resting on that stupendous fact; the universality of Christian philanthropy; the effect of the Gospel upon the morals of the people generally, its vast and unique benevolence, its all-encompassing humanity, leading up to the abolition of slavery; the amelioration of the distressing conditions of all men; its sanctifying influence in and over family life, especially as seen in the protection of children and the elevation of women; its care for the poor, the sick, and unfortunate; its presence on the battle-field softening and assuaging some of the worst features of cruel war, while, in the meantime, its spirit is making for its complete abolition; its compassion for dumb animals; and, indeed, its all-encompassing love—these were all advanced. Its magnificent missionary enthusiasm was well brought out, in contrast with the sluggish life (?) of the Oriental faiths; its peaceful methods; its toleration, coupled with its uncompromising determination to throw down every high place on the earth and bring all into subjection to Christ. To this end it is sending forth its heralds and soldiers throughout the world, to stand at the door and porch of every temple and fane and call for surrender, and offer life, peace, and pardon in the name of God and his Son Jesus Christ. I assure you it was an inspiration to sit day by day and catch the high life notes of the Gospel as they sounded forth from the lips of many able men from many lands. And I can also assure you that those Oriental representatives who could understand our tongue (and many of them could) listened with profound interest, and I believe with not a little conviction, to the "defence of the Gospel."

Third.—I have already briefly spoken of the wide revival of interest in religious subjects which the Parliament awakened in America, a few echoes of which are being heard at last on this side of the water. This interest will be cumulative for years to come, and extend over a much wider area. The published volumes of proceedings will be widely read, and will suggest a thousand themes for address and discussion. The representatives from all countries and lands, Christian and non-Christian, will go back to their homes, and will tell over again the story of this remarkable religious gathering, and thus religion will come afresh to the fore.

Fourth.—The bogey of Oriental light has been exposed. Ever since I can remember, there have been floating about in current literature, especially periodical literature, vague hints that somewhere in the East, hidden away in Himalayan monasteries, and buried in untranslated and untranslatable Sanscrit, Pali, and Chinese literature, a religious revelation and philosophy which, when opened to the Western world, would cause the light of Christ and the Gospel to pale as the moon before the rising sun. We have all heard over and over again that Christianity was such an infant of days beside ancient Brahminical Hinduism, and the religions of the farther East, that its best things were but plagiarisms from those more ancient revelations, and not only plagiarised, but diluted in worth and power. It was only necessary for us to come to know the sublime philosophies of the Vedas and the Upanishads, and especially the wisdom of the Buddha, we have been informed, to see how thin and shallow a religion Christianity is, and how far behind the Orientals we are in intellectual and religious culture. These religious bogey have been used to frighten and alarm uneducated and unthinking people, and not a few timid Christians have always been more than half afraid that some day Madame Blavatsky or Edwin Arnold would finally produce some Mahatma, or flash some search-light of Oriental wisdom and religion upon the world, which would for ever eclipse our little taper-light of Christianity!

I am positive that many people attended the Parliament of Religions with a kind of bated breath, waiting for some astounding Oriental revelation. Hitherto we have had our knowledge of Oriental religions and philosophies largely from our missionaries and other Christian scholars; but we have been told again and again that such knowledge was second-hand knowledge, and at best sifted through Christian prejudice, and certainly not a sufficient one. For we were told again (I have been many times so told in India) that the revelation of God is only to be found in the Sanscrit writing of India; that no Western mind is capable of understanding the Sanscrit; and that Sanscrit itself is incapable of translation into any other language, for the reason that no other language has its equivalent of wisdom signs, or words. This, indeed, is to lock the knowledge of God away from the world. It is to hide the light of the Orient in a cave, as deep, dark, and inaccessible as are the Mahatmas and sacred writings of the Theosophists in the mysterious monasteries of Thibet. But now, at last, lo! the Orientals themselves are come to tell us the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth concerning the religions of the East. We are to have no missionary second-hand misrepresentations of the truth; no feeble and inadequate presentation of the Sanscrit wisdom by incompetent Western scholars. The native, high-bred, twice-born Brahmin priests, pundits, and monks themselves were come. The veil that has hitherto excluded the Light of the Orient from the ignorant and superficial West is to be taken down, and its effulgence burst upon us and dazzle Christianity into darkness.

Well, we listened with bated breath to hear. We strained our eyes and shaded them, lest when the veil was drawn aside by Vivakanandra and Dharamapela we should be struck down, as was Saul before the vision at Damascus. But, lo! the light from the Orient turned out to be but moonlight. The long-expected and longed-for gems of wisdom from the ancient caves of revelation were but the uncut diamonds which, in the hands of Jesus, had been taken and cut into a thousand facets, and held up in the track of the sunbeams which streamed from the moral glory of his character. These native monks and pundits had nothing to tell us that we did not know, and only demonstrated again what Max Müller has told us—that we have discovered and learned all there is to be learned from the literature of the East.

Theosophy stepped forth to open up to us the wisdom-religion of the Buddha and the mysterious Mahatmas, and lo! Theosophy turned out, as some one well said, to be a combination of "mist and moonshine," principally mist. When I listened to the native Buddhist quoting three texts from Christ to one from the writings of Buddha to illustrate and enforce his doctrine, I said, "This is the true measurement of the whole matter." Whatever of religious truth there is in the Oriental systems, it is but the faint and dawning rays of Him who is the Light of the World, that lighteth every man that cometh into it, or the last remains of some earlier revelations of God to man, handed down but much obscured and overlaid by the traditions and superstitions of men. The last reserve of Orientalism has been brought forward, and it is nothing. The whole land lieth before us, and those sons of Anak, after all, are doomed to be bread for us. Our feeblest missionaries, with the truth of the Gospel in their hands, shall do to them what David did to Goliath.

Ragged School Union.

There is not a superabundance of Christian effort in the Isle of Dogs. Thirteen years ago or more some working men began an aggressive work among the children in the Tobago-street Mission, Millwall. A good record was made for the past year at the meeting held in the Seamen's Institute on Monday.

A special meeting was convened at the Lansdowne-place Ragged School to clear off the debt of £260 remaining on the new building. Many devoted friends braved the elements in order to attend. Mr. Frederick Fisher detailed the operations carried on, and Mr. John Wilson, the president, spoke of the changes which had arisen since first he went to the school, forty-one years ago. Addresses followed from Mr. Geo. Williams (chairman), Mr. F. W. N. Lloyd, Pastor Thos. Spurgeon, and Mr. John Kirk.

The Evangelist.

THE PENITENT'S PRAYER.

By the late PRINCIPAL CAIRNS.

"Lord, remember me, when thou comest into thy kingdom."

Never in the history of supplication did a more wonderful prayer force its way—a prayer in which humility contends with faith for the mastery, and in which the sorrows of a broken heart mingle their deep and plaintive undertones with the importunities of desire and the aspirations of hope. And mark the answer, which comes swift and gracious while the penitent yet spake. Truly, if the prayer was wonderful, more wonderful was the reply, "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise."

O memorable answer! O eventful day! At morning-tide out of Christ; with noontide in Christ; ere eventide with Christ! The extremes of ruin and redemption here fall together, and the work of grace is completed almost ere it is begun. Christ contracts the distance between life and death to a single step; and, with an arm of love that stretches over the whole tremendous interval raises while it fits those who else had dwelt in darkness to be companions of Himself and the holy angels.

Who shall say that, amazing as this marvel of grace is, it must still fall short of the dread exigencies of their own case? Your sin, you sorrowfully urge, is greater, your heart harder than his could have been. Thus does each awakened sinner place himself on the very limit of despair. But no. The wall of Paradise cannot seem to you more great and high than at one point it did to him; its glory cannot be fenced round with more adamantine bulwarks, its light more awfully remote and inaccessible. And yet to him Christ became the way that brought all near—the door that set all open. For you this monument of mercy rises by the side of the Saviour's cross, on the verge of doom and almost within the floodmark of despair, to testify to you and to all generations that the prayer of penitence is not unheard, and that whosoever will call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

O the might of prayer, were it but the first prayer offered in weakness and fear and trembling! That prayer is mighty as the Cross of Christ, for it is clothed with all its might. That prayer abolishes guilt; it annihilates depravity; it shakes off the pains of hell and lays hold on immortality. Let it be yours and mine, and it should carry all these blessings in its train. It shall enclose a miraculous draught of blessings, which time shall not count nor eternity exhaust.

In the solemn scene thus grouped together on Calvary we have all the three possible forms of death. We have the death of the Sinless; we have the death of the sinner who repents; and we have the death of the sinner who puts away repentance. Which of the three shall yours be? It cannot be the death of the Sinless. That belongs to Jesus alone. Therefore your death, as that of a sinner, is limited to two possibilities—that of the penitent and that of the impenitent. How awful is that of the latter, close beside the former, and Christ as near to the one as to the other, only to be put wilfully and, as far as we see, hopelessly away. In that other criminal, as near the opened fountain, as welcome had he asked it to the living water, no conversion is seen; in his last end there is no testimony and no prayer, and if he believed not that Christ was He, must he not have died in his sins? It is as fixed as destiny, but it is fixed by choice.

Were it not for the equal promise, revived by the record of all the great sinners whom the Cross has saved, we should all despair; but as it is we all may and, if we believe it, must hope. He who remembered that penitent in his own hour of mortal sorrow, will not forget us, now that He has entered into his kingdom.

Dear dying Lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power,
Till all the ransomed Church of God
Be saved, to sin no more.

THE LAMBETH BATHS WINTER MEETINGS are to commence for the season on Saturday next.

GIPSY GOSPEL WAGGON MISSION.—This is a thoroughly undenominational mission, and not, as appeared from a recent mention in our paper, a Wesleyan effort. It arose in a large measure through the blessing granted on Gipsy Smith's work, and is chiefly carried on by means of a Gospel waggon. Communications should be made to Mr. B. F. Byrom, Brookland Lodge, Delph, Oldham.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.

The twenty-second annual meeting of friends of the Orphan Homes of Scotland was held last week in the Christian Institute, Glasgow. There was a large attendance. Provost Binnie, Gourock, presided. He said it was very gratifying to find from the report of the past year's operations that there had been success all along the line. The income from all sources had amounted to about £20,000, and the Homes had maintained about 1200 children at a cost of about £10 each, showing the Homes to be the most economically managed institution of the kind he ever heard of. Mr. Quarrier's principal object was also to seek the spiritual welfare of the destitute ones, and that also was accomplished with remarkable success. Let them unite as much as they could, both by prayer and by temporal means, in assisting Mr. Quarrier in this truly Christian work.

Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang said the fact that between £11,000 and £12,000 had been received during the past year in donations and legacies proved the extent and the intensity of the interest taken in the working of the Orphan Homes. They had in this work one of the agencies that fell into line with what was best in the social aspiration and endeavour of their day. That aspiration, that endeavour, was to lift up those who were down, to lessen the interval between the extremes, and make a higher mean and level of comfort and respectability over all. They were desirous that every person who had the mind to work should be able to realise a decent and comfortable living. There were three words in the report that touched his heart. One was "Home," a second was "Destitution," and the third was "Emigration." Those of them who had been abroad knew that emigration was not the terrible word that it was sometimes supposed to be. They did not want to send away any who were favourably surrounded, but they did want to detach those who were good from what was bad, and give them a better chance in the world. He was there to express what he was sure was the inmost feeling of all present—their appreciation of the noble, self-sacrificing efforts made by Mr. Quarrier. Bailie Chisholm having spoken in support of the work,

Mr. Quarrier addressed the meeting. The year had been a laborious one, with continuous work. As they grew older their numbers became larger, and larger numbers meant increased work. From the smallest beginnings the inmates at Bridge of Weir Homes had increased to over 1100, who had to be cared for day by day and week by week; so that the growth of the work had just been a steady progress for the last twenty-two years, although in that time nearly 4000 children had been hived off to Canada. To the praise of God he said that the means to keep them had kept steady pace with the increase of the children. This was a remarkable fact that ought to impress itself upon all God's children's hearts: that the Father of all knew what things they had need of before He was asked. Nothing but the Divine guiding hand could accomplish that which had been accomplished, and looking back on the past year they could say, "What hath God wrought!" A better idea of the size of the family at the Homes than the bald statement of figures conveyed might be obtained when he said that they had more mouths to fill daily than the Western, the Royal, and the Victoria Infirmaries, and the Children's Hospital combined; and that the Homes had helped during the year a larger number of children than all the four industrial schools, including the Empress training ship, put together. At Bridge of Weir he and the helpers worked seven days a week and eighteen hours a day. If God's work was ever to be done in the world, they would require to take off their coats to do it. The ministers were not to blame for the lapsed masses. In all the reformations in the Bible the people "went for" their idols first, and then they served God afterwards. Scotland would have to "go for" her idols in the way of drink, in the way of theatre-going, in the way of gambling, in the way of social circles, if Scotland was to become what she should be—a land honoured of God. When she has done that, there would be no lapsed masses. As to the Consumptives' Home, £170 had been sent in for it, and he wanted £6000 to begin the work. There was a farm wanted. This time last year he had 17s. 6d. for it, and he requested £10,000. Some of the papers joked him over it, saying he was a very happy beggar. Well, that 17s. 6d. had turned into over £2000, and it might be that next year he would be able to tell them that he had got the £10,000 wanted, and that he had got the land as well. He gave some striking instances of the sources from which the money comes, and mentioned that the little children had built one of the most beautiful houses among the forty-six buildings at the Bridge of Weir. He referred to the Sabbath School Children's Home, which they had built with their halfpennies and pennies. There was an open door at the Homes for the orphans from any part of Scotland. No child that was deprived of its father, whether it was a healthy or a sick one, and if the mother could not keep it, would ever be shut out of the National Homes of Scotland.

THE EDINBURGH CONVENTION.

The past week has seen fulfilled a long-cherished desire to have in Edinburgh a similar convention to those held every year with such blessed results at Keswick and elsewhere. A large local committee convened by Rev. George Wilson, of St. Michael's, undertook all the business arrangements, and the familiar form of Mr. Robert Wilson occupied the chair. The meetings were held in the Free Assembly Hall.

From the first it was abundantly evident that God was waiting to answer the many prayers of his waiting people. The attendance was both large and representative. Leaders in Christian work, venerable servants of God, large numbers of students, the poor and the unlearned, all came, ready to hear gladly. A ministers' meeting of more than a hundred showed that they who taught others would gladly know if there was more that they might learn and thereafter teach.

A large and varied company of speakers was gathered from all parts, most of whom were able to remain for the whole of the meetings; they included Revs. Evan Hopkins, Dr. Elder Cumming, H. B. Macartney (Melbourne), F. B. Meyer, J. J. Luce, Hudson Taylor, C. G. Moore, G. C. McGregor, Charles Inwood, and Dr. White. The first two days proved a time of great heart-searching and humbling. Then came calls to unreserved consecration, and a revealing of the power that worketh in the yielded heart both to will and to do of God's pleasure. What the results of such a week's teaching in the lives of the Christians of Edinburgh shall be cannot be estimated, but that there will be results of a very blessed kind cannot be doubted. In the course of the week many striking remarks were made in the addresses, but we have no space to particularise. The convention closed with a praise meeting on Saturday morning, and a missionary meeting in the forenoon, addressed by twelve missionaries of different churches.

McALL MISSION.—A sale of useful and fancy work for the benefit of this Mission will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 6 and 7, from three till seven o'clock, at the Dowager Lady Congleton's residence, 53, Cumberland-place, W. All friends of the Mission and those interested in the spread of the Gospel in France are invited.

ROME'S "RANSOMERS."—There was not a little disorder on Friday night at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on the occasion of a lecture on "Rome's Duplicity versus Protestant Simplicity," when a number of "Ransomers" attended, and did their utmost to break up the meeting. Mr. J. M. Rundell, who occupied the chair, said the "Ransomers" of Rome were welcome to stay if they so wished, but he would not allow either interruption or discussion. We owe all that we have as Englishmen to Protestantism. Spain 300 years ago was a mighty nation, now it is suffering under the withering curse of God; England 300 years ago was a poor little place, yet to-day she leads the nations. What, then, do we owe to that great Protestant Reformation? Let us, therefore, hold fast to our blessings. Rev A. E. Baxter then proceeded to deliver the lecture, and pointed out that the battle was not against persons, but against principles. It was by Rome's duplicity that she had attained her position, and Protestant simplicity—under the plea of liberty—had allowed Rome to creep in in order to destroy liberty. While he was speaking, the Ransomers kept up an interruption, till at last he stopped. Mr. Baxter afterwards traced the duplicity of Rome all through the ages. The proceedings being again interrupted, several of the Ransomers were asked to leave, and in doing so one threatened to "bosh up the next Protestant meeting there." Several of the Ransomers still remained, and every now and then caused annoyance.

THE CHICAGO CAMPAIGN.

CLOSE OF MR. MOODY'S MISSION.

By Mr. Henry Varley.

The latest weeks in Chicago of the great Evangelistic Mission have been marked with increasing interest, despite the strength of the current which has carried hundreds of thousands to the World's Fair. During October, the meetings grew still larger, and on the last two Lord's Days high-water mark was reached. The Bible Institute has been a kind of engine-house, where prayer has been made, steam has been generated, and the fires of zeal maintained. An incessant stream of workers, including Dr. A. T. Pierson, Dr. Brookes, Dr. Munhall, Dr. Joseph Cook, Dr. Hall, Dr. Wharton, Revs. A. C. Dixon and Geo. Needham, Mr. Chas. Inglis, and others, have come and gone.

The lectures given to the students have been greatly valued and well attended. The assembly for prayer, praise, and address, from eleven till one daily, has filled the Central Music Hall. On certain days it has been necessary to close the doors against the people, so anxious were they to get into the building. On two occasions Mr. Moody announced protracted meetings, which commenced at ten and closed at three. Many hundreds stayed the whole time, and the deepest interest was manifested. Directly any retired the vacant places were filled from the surging crowd without. No doubt many came to hear Mr. Moody and Rev. John McNeill.

These brethren addressed the audiences daily, and there can be no question that the strongly-marked individuality that pertains to them has had to do with the increasing interest which has made the music-hall the best-patronised house in Chicago. The surprising silence of the daily press as a whole did not avail to diminish the enthusiasm; and, indeed, it is an open secret that the theatres and houses of public entertainment in the city have not in numbers equalled "the Moody meetings," as they have been called.

In the judgment of many the largest blessing has rested upon believers. Thousands have come from all parts of the States and Canada. They have filled the largest buildings in the city; numbers of these have expressed themselves as greatly strengthened and established in the faith of Christ. We believe that some have gone back all on fire; they have carried the tidings home, and already gratifying news comes of reviving. Oh that the fire may spread throughout the States!

Our beloved brother, John McNeill, has done excellent service; his "broad Scotch" has a peculiar charm for our American cousins. His strong and sanctified common-sense, his terse way of putting things, and his native wit, have made him not only a general favourite, but eminently useful. His striking addresses will never be forgotten by many. Oh that the Holy Spirit may make the words of these honoured brethren "living and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword."

As many as 109 meetings have been held throughout the great city in a single week, with an aggregate attendance of more than 100,000 persons. Mr. Moody has never appeared to be tired; his energy seems inexhaustible. He is not only chief in command, but chiefest in work also. The last two Sundays his three congregations must have reached 9000 persons each day. Overflow meetings are simply a necessity.

Nevertheless, there has been very much to encourage, and without question the six months' campaign in Chicago has been one of the most remarkable that this half-century has seen. At the closing meeting on Tuesday half the people could not obtain entrance. The platform was packed, and a considerable number of the ministers of the city were present. The testimony given by Drs. Noble, Goodwin, and Gifford, was greatly valued. With many expressions of grateful interest in, and love for, Mr. Moody, their evident desire was to recognise with profound thankfulness the good hand of God in the mission. To magnify God in his servant and the manly brethren who have assisted in the campaign was the temper of the great assembly.

Seldom have more impressive and powerful addresses been given than those delivered on the two days of the protracted meetings. When an appeal was made as to the fact of personal faith in Christ and the recognition of his Lordship, at least four-fifths of the whole assembly rose to give that witness. From the theatres, public halls, churches, and tents has come the testimony that the Lord Jesus has been exalted, and the power of the sword of the Spirit felt.

Thousands have professed in different ways their personal interest in spiritual truth. Our confidence is that real conviction of sin has been produced, and that Christ has been received into many hearts. Anything like tabulation of results has been avoided. There has been the wide diffusion of the good and incorruptible seed of the Word, sown ofttimes in weakness, in the strength of dependence, and with tears. We rest assured that much fruit will abound, for is it not written that "those who sow in tears shall reap in joy"? and yet again, "shall return with rejoicing, bringing their sheaves with them?"

Now that the Great Fair is closed, there is a general exodus from the city. It has been a wonderful scene. More than 20,000,000 of paid admissions prove what universal interest has been taken in the Columbian Exposition. The last days of the enterprise, however, have been shrouded with a gloom that suddenly overspread the entire community, through the murder of the Mayor.

The unparalleled success of this remarkable city has not failed to produce a spirit of boasting which is neither graceful nor noble, whether seen in the individual, the city, or the nation. There is no doubt that the phenomenal success of the World's Fair has given an impetus to that kind of "tall talk" which is America's weakness and danger. Saturday last was what is known as Mayor's Day, and a large number of the civic magistrates were being entertained by Mr. Carter Harrison, the Mayor of Chicago. In the course of his remarks, that gentleman said, "I believe that I will live to see the day when Chicago will be the biggest city in America. I don't count the past. I have taken a new lease of life, and I intend to live more than half a century, and at the end of that half-century London will be trembling lest Chicago should surpass her, and New York will say, 'Let it go to the metropolis of America.' It is but a little while, when I expect to get on a magnificent steamer at Chicago's wharf and go to a suburb, New Orleans, the crescent city of the globe." Within eight hours the bullet of the assassin had in ten brief minutes finished the earthly career of the author of the words I have quoted.

Probably the most widely known and popular man in the city was Mr. Carter Harrison. He was the central figure of interest and attraction at the World's Fair, and now he is gone. The city has been stunned and hushed into silence, save that the strains of the "Dead March" in Saul made the streets of the city yesterday vocal concerning life's awful uncertainty. The public funeral procession was seen by hundreds of thousands, and the Great Fair has closed amid profound and ominous silence—I had almost said with an awful reproof to Chicago's ungodly spirit of boasting.

Surely at such a time we need, with bowed hearts, to hear the quiet and dignified teaching from "the Word of God which liveth and abideth for ever." May the reading of these singularly apposite words be blessed to all. "Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and buy, and sell, and get gain! Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. What is your life? For it is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will we shall live, and do this or that. But now ye glory in your boastings. All such glorying is evil" (Jas. iv. 13—16). Will your readers remember, in fervent and effectual prayer, this great city and the work in which so many have taken part? To Him who ever liveth, and is God over all, blessed for ever, be the praise and glory of all our work.

AT A WEEK'S TEMPERANCE MISSION in the County Hall, Salisbury, about sixty pledges were taken. Among the speakers were Canon Barker and Rev. J. H. Horsley.

DRINKING ON ORIENT LINERS.—In a recent issue we stated that sad accounts had been published as to the amount of drinking on these steamers (which, however, did not relate to "first-cabin" passengers). We are glad to hear that the directors repudiate the allegations as "malicious and damaging" to the company's reputation, and protest that every precaution is taken by rules, instructions, and supervision, to suppress sternly any approach to excess. The correspondence (which appeared in The Temperance Record), is now under investigation by the company.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN CEYLON.

We give some extracts from a communication dated Chavakachcheri, Northern Province, Ceylon, recently received from the Misses Mary and Margaret Leitch:—

We have now the oversight of a district called Chavakachcheri, in North Ceylon, which contains 100 square miles, and has a population of 40,000 people, among whom we are the only resident missionaries. We have in this district about twenty native helpers as catechists, preachers, and Bible-women. There are thirty-eight teachers and 1,137 children in village schools.

The Jaffna College, which is situated in a district eighteen miles distant from us, and is under the care of Rev. S. W. Howland, D.D., president, and an able staff of professors and teachers, is now in a very flourishing condition, having between 300 and 400 students in the High School, and 143 in the College proper. The Christian character of the College has not been unfavourably affected by affiliation with the Calcutta University; all the Bible-classes, church services, Sunday School work and Y.M.C.A. meetings are maintained. The graduates who go out from the College are many of them continuing to find places as Mission teachers and helpers in Ceylon and India.

Rev. T. B. Scott and Mrs. Scott, who came out with us to take charge of the General Medical Mission for men at Manippay, are now hard at work. They have on Tuesdays and Fridays as many as 120 or 125 present at their dispensary. They have some twelve or fifteen hospital patients, a considerable number of office (paying) patients, and also many calls to go out into the villages and treat serious cases in the patients' own homes. Within a few years there has been much opposition shown to Christianity by the Hindus here, a weekly paper and tracts against Christianity have been circulated, and opposition meetings for Sivite preaching are being held in many parts of the province. Also eighty opposition Hindu village day-schools have been started, and a Hindu High School in Jaffna town. We believe the Medical Mission Agency will be the best possible means of meeting this opposition. Dr. and Mrs. Scott have treated at their dispensary 700 cases in the first two and a-half months since their arrival, of whom 388 were males and 312 were females.

Several young men connected with the Hindu society formed to oppose Christianity are now coming to the dispensary as patients. They confess that the sinful lives they have been leading have destroyed their health and happiness.

Of course the best results are seen in the cases of hospital patients, who receive religious instruction from day to day, and with whom the doctors hold special meetings. At present, from want of a hospital for women and a staff of trained nurses, Mrs. Scott is obliged to turn away many women who come to her (suffering from the results of the barbarous mistreatment they have received at the hands of ignorant heathen nurses), and who are urgently needing careful hospital treatment.

When the Medical Mission for Women is established, and the Hospital for Women and Children and the Training Home for Nurses are built and opened under the care of two fully-qualified lady doctors and two trained nurses, then we hope that many native women who are now great sufferers may receive skilful and loving treatment.

We expect three of these ladies to arrive in Ceylon before the end of the year, to be followed by a fourth in 1894. While considerable sums have been given and promised towards the support of these ladies and the erection of the needed buildings, there is one need which has not yet been met, viz., the supply of the medical instruments, books, and medicines required as a medical outfit.

A TEMPERANCE CONVENTION was held last week in the Christians' Meeting House, Ilkeston, when Mr. A. Black gave an address on "Temperance Work: Its Relation to the Church and the Young." In the evening a public meeting was held, when addresses were delivered by Messrs. Bradbury and Black. There was a good attendance.

ARMENIAN CHRISTIANS.—The Board of Congregational Ministers of London have passed a resolution unanimously sympathising with the persecuted Christians in Armenia, calling the attention of the Government to the matter, and urging that everything possible may be done to effect the relief of the oppressed. The resolution is to be forwarded to Lord Rosebery.

African Missions Visited.—15.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

I wish I could plan a cheap excursion to Palapye for the special benefit of honest supporters of Missions, and honest disbelievers in missions, that the former might be encouraged, and the latter have their opinions changed, by what they would see.

Palapye is a town of some 20,000 to 30,000 inhabitants. It is now about four years since the inhabitants of old Shoshong burned their town and moved en masse to their new capital. It covers a very large area. Unlike our towns, it is not built in streets and squares, but is composed really of a large number of small villages of kraals. Each kraal has a stockade or fence round it, and has its quota of huts and head man.

KING KHAMA'S KRAAL

is situated about the centre of the town, and just opposite the entrance to the Courtla. This Courtla is a large circular space, enclosed with a very strong stockade. Here king and indunas meet in council. It is, so to speak, the parliament house of the tribe.

I witnessed a very interesting scene there on Saturday, when I went down with Rev. W. C. Willoughby, the L.M.S. missionary stationed at Palapye. Khama has issued an order for compulsory vaccination, and Mr. Willoughby does the work. When we arrived, king and indunas were seated under a tree in the Courtla, and, after shaking hands, we were motioned to seats by the king. Then one man, who acted as M.C., brought up the children in groups to be operated upon. The stock of lymph had run out, but there were several arms with a good supply of lymph from the previous Saturday's operations.

The little people bore it most stoically, and went off fanning the wounds with their hands to keep off the flies. Flies, numerous and troublesome, I have seen in other lands, but Palapye seems to be the place par excellence for them.

Khama himself is perhaps the chief centre of interest in Palapye. He is a tall thin man, about sixty years of age, but looking younger, with goodness and satisfaction shining in his face, which stamp him the true Christian that he is. His kindly, courtly manners and dignified bearing fit him to move in any rank of civilised society. He is a man who knows his own mind, too, and once his decision has been given on any point, it is useless to try and alter it. His only answer to further appeal is "I have spoken." This decision of character has, doubtless, helped to make him the strong type of Christian he is, and to accomplish so much for the welfare of his people.

The king will allow no intoxicating drinks to be imported into or sold in his country, nor will he even allow his own people to make their native beer. Hence there is and no drunkenness. There is a prison, but no prisoners to put into it. He has seen the great evils which have arisen among the tribes south of him through their selling and conceding their land to the white man, and has taken a very firm stand on this point. The land belongs to the tribe, and no one may buy a single foot of it. There are three or four large stores in Palapye, but Khama put up the buildings at his own cost, and rents them to the storekeepers, whose tenancy he can terminate at a day's notice. Even the British Government has not been able to purchase the land on which the Residency has been built.

NO CANTEEN IN PALAPYE,

Efforts are frequently made to thwart the king on these two points—liquor and land. Some of them, I regret to learn, proceed from high official quarters, and are wrapped up in such diplomatic language as to try and outwit this noble guardian of his people's welfare. Well will it be for the honour of Great Britain if she backs him up in his noble purpose.

Mr. John Moffat, son of the late Dr. Moffat, is British Resident at Palapye, and is a valiant champion of the right. He will see neither Khama nor his people wronged, so long as it is in his power to prevent it; but Christians at home ought to use their influence in the House of Commons and out of it, to see that our dealings with the natives of this and other lands are righteous.

Clocks and watches are but little known among the natives in Africa, so that punctuality is a virtue yet to be cultivated. They judge the time of day by the sun. Hence it is there is no fixed hour for in the large native church of Palapye. The people keep on mustering over quite a time, and when they think all who are coming have arrived, a message is sent to the missionary that they are ready for him.

SUNDAY SERVICE

The church is a large, handsome building, built of burnt bricks, with a corrugated iron roof. It was built during the time Mr. Hepburn was missionary at Palapye, and the natives raised among themselves £3000 to pay for it.

What strikes a stranger on entering the church when it is empty is the entire absence of seats or pews. Crowded as it was on Sunday, this was not so apparent, for the people sit on the floor, as they are accustomed to do in their own homes. A few of the indunas have their own chairs or stools, and the king sat in a chair on the left of the preacher, facing the congregation.

Mr. Moffat conducted the service and preached. I could only follow the reading of the lessons and the text. The congregation was both attentive and devout, and the bright faces of boys and girls were very pleasing to see.

After service I was introduced to two indunas whose sons are now at Lovedale being educated. They charged me to tell their boys to be very diligent in their studies, and not to learn any of the bad habits of the white people. Khama's own son was also at Lovedale for a short period. This is another proof of how far-reaching the influence of such an institution is.

A large hut has been fitted up to serve as a church for the English-speaking community. I was asked to conduct service there on Sunday afternoon.

On Monday we saw the remarkable sight of the king and his army setting forth from Palapye. We went down to the town soon after sunrise and found it all astir. Men with their distinguishing regimental colours round their hats, were hurrying hither and thither, armed with all sorts of guns, and some with spear and shield. It was a strange scene, the like of which I had never before witnessed.

By-and-by the king came out, and all the troops formed up to listen to his words of instruction. He very kindly gave me the opportunity of photographing himself and his army just before he addressed them. The reason for this is, that the men of a tribe south of Khama, crossed his border and drove his men and cattle away from their cattle post, the intruders occupying it themselves. Khama hopes that the strong force he takes with him will enable him to settle the trouble and reinstate his people without bloodshed.

WARLIKE EXPEDITION

I was much interested to meet at Palapye Rev. C. D. Helm, the L.M.S. missionary, from Hopefountain, in Matabeleland. He is living with his wife and daughter in their waggon, pending the development of the Matabele trouble. Mrs. Helm had gone south to meet her daughter returning from England. When they got near the Matebele border on their way back to Hopefountain, Mr. Helm drove down to meet them. Just then the trouble broke out, and they had to abandon the idea of going to their station, and so came back to Palapye. Their house and goods are all at the mercy of the Matabele.

Mr. Helm does not speak such hard things of Lobengula as some do. He does not fear him, but fears the young men, who revel in war and bloodshed, and whom Lobengula is not strong enough to control.

If any native in Matabeleland shows the least inclination to become a Christian he is accused of having bewitched someone, and promptly disappears. Hence the work of missions in that land has been a very uphill one with but few results showing.

Without doubt God will bring good out of the pending trouble, and prepare a more open door for the Gospel among the Matabele.

May the seed which has been sown so long and so patiently spring up speedily, and bear an abundant harvest!

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—The second day of January has been fixed for the entertainment that, by the kind permission of the Corporation, is to be given at Guildhall by the Ragged School Union, to the children coming under the influence of the schools and missions associated with the Union. The gathering will be organised on the lines of the very successful gatherings held a year ago in the city.

JEWS IN DUBLIN.

In connection with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel amongst the Jews, a very important work is at present being carried on amongst Hebrews who have within the last year or so settled down in Dublin. But a few years ago there were only about fifty Jews in the city, and one synagogue; now, owing to persecutions on the Continent, and to the fact that the United States has, to a large extent, closed her doors to the immigration of foreign Jews, great numbers have arrived in the Emerald Isle, and there are nearly 3000 Jews in Dublin, and five synagogues. Dublin folk speak of the district round about the South Circular-road, where the new-comers mostly reside, as "New Jerusalem," and any day one walks down into that neighbourhood he will be quite struck with the unmistakable caste of countenance which distinguishes the Israelite.

Amongst all these Mr. Philip Cohen, a very earnest convert from Judaism, labours incessantly. It was chiefly through the medium of the Salvation Army that Mr. Cohen, some years ago, was brought under conviction of sin, and he possesses all the heartiness and enthusiasm of a Salvationist in his work amongst his own people.

During the past summer a very successful open-air meeting was carried on by Mr. Cohen every Sunday afternoon upon the banks of the canal, which is close to the Jewish quarters. Large numbers of Jews assembled, accompanied by their wives and children. They were most attentive, and took part in the singing, and only once or twice was there any disturbance, when a few rowdy Irish Roman Catholics were disposed to give trouble. Notwithstanding that the Rabbis have opposed this work with all the power that their ecclesiastical position gives them, the interest has been unabated; and the attendance at the open-air meetings kept increasing until the advent of the cold weather caused the gatherings out-of-doors to be discontinued.

A new departure has now been in operation for some weeks with similar good success. The Abercorn Hall, in Harcourt-road, which is adjacent to the Jewish district, has been rented by Mr. Cohen, assisted by several Gentile Christians. Here a Gospel meeting is conducted every Sunday afternoon from 4 till 5, the service being partly in English and partly in Judæo-German. A special feature is the music, which appears to be greatly appreciated. On three nights in the week, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, the hall is open from 6 till 8 as a reading and recreation-room. Chess and other similar games are provided, together with a supply of home and foreign newspapers, as a means of drawing in strangers and making them feel "at home," if we may use the phrase in connection with an Israelite. There are ample opportunities on the part of inquirers for friendly conversation with Mr. Cohen on the all-important subject of Jesus being the Messiah.

It is chiefly, however, at his home in 4, Grosvenor-square, Rathmines, that Mr. Cohen has the privilege of dealing with many a "Nicodemus," who has come to ask, How can these things be? and at the present time there are a number who, at the invitation of Mr. Cohen, are coming again and again and reading with him the Old Testament in conjunction with the New. When, at 8 o'clock, the recreation time of the evening concludes, educational classes commence. It has been arranged that all poor Jews who are ailing may obtain medical advice gratis upon two nights in the week. This is a department of the work which might be very usefully strengthened.

S. S. McC.

Poverty in Hoxton.

Our friend Mr. W. Noble reports great and prevalent distress in the Hoxton district of the East End. Many who have usually been able to keep their heads above water are succumbing to the stress of want. One poor woman was recently met with who had pawned some of her fire-irons for bread.

The death of Mr. W. I. Palmer has seriously hampered the resources of Hoxton Hall, so that now when it is specially needed there is a difficulty in providing warm clothing for the women and children and the customary Christmas fare. In order to raise the desired funds, Mr. Noble has agreed to give two Gough recitals at Hoxton Hall, on the evenings of Saturday, December 2nd, and Monday, December 4th. Reserved tickets, price 6d., may be had from Mr. J. T. Rae, 33, Paternoster-row. We hope many friends will lend their countenance and help.

[1203]

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 26.—PSALM CVIII.

The strain with which this psalm begins (1-6) has already awaked our heart-responses. See Psa. lvii. 1-5. But it is sweet enough to bear many a repetition. We all need the fixed heart: not moved about by every wind, but permanent in its intentions, settled in its resolves, steadfast to the polestar of the will of God. It is such a heart that can sing and awake dead matter, and even the dawn, to kindred melody (2). No measure but infinitude can adequately comprehend the mercy and truth of God (4). But how helpful it is to know that the exaltation of our blessed Lord above all heavens is combined with the deliverance of his beloved. Be of good cheer, oh troubled saint, God rideth on the heaven of heavens to thy help.

The closing strain of this psalm (7-13) has also been embodied in another (Ps. lx. 5-12). When we are right with God, we participate in his victories and possessions. Gilead and Manasseh and Ephraim, all things are ours, because we are Christ's, and Christ is God's. Oh! to realise and appropriate our possessions! And all the foes that used to torment and tyrannise over us, Edom and Philistia, are beneath our feet, because they are beneath Christ's. Through Christ, our Emmanuel, we shall indeed do valiantly. It is He who fights, not we. He treads down our adversaries, whilst we hold our peace. The secret of victory is to abide in the all-victorious Son of God.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 27.—PSALM CIX.

A terrible psalm is this! It is like a patch of Sahara amid a smiling garden. These words were written by the man who, on two occasions, spared the life of his cruel persecutor, and who, when the fields of Gilboa were wet with Saul's life-blood, sang the loveliest of elegiacs. Here David seems to anticipate the wrath of the Lamb.

We must not take these maledictions as being the expression of personal vindictiveness. David here writes as the mouthpiece of the Holy God. The Apostle Peter, quoting this psalm, expressly says, "The Holy Ghost spake before by the mouth of David concerning Judas, who was guide to them that took Jesus" (Acts i. 16).

Notice the attitude of the good man, in dark and evil times:—"I—— prayer." (4). Omit the italicised words, and you have good sense. It is as though every moment of the Psalmist's life were mingled with prayer, so that his existence was one long entreaty. And such prayer ever ends in praise and thanksgiving (30). We have good reason to rejoice, who, to the cursings of the foe can oppose the Advocate with the Father (31).

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28.—PSALM CX.

The application of this psalm is indubitable. Our Lord does not hesitate to apply it to Himself (Matt. xxii. 45). Was it not at the Ascension that Jehovah set our Lord at his right hand (Acts v. 31)? And is not the present age dedicated to the sublime enterprise of putting down all rule, and authority, and power, until all enemies become the footstool of his feet (1 Cor. xv. 24)? The end is sure, because God the Father has passed his word to his Son.

Christ's people are a consecrated people; they are a freewill offering (3). They are a holy people; in the beauties of holiness (3). They are refreshing and numerous as the dew-drops bespangling the morning meadows (3). There is an infinite attraction between Christ and young life: "Thy youth."

Note how all redemption begins and ends with God. He constitutes our Saviour a priest, he strikes down his foes. This reference to Melchizedec looked back to the far-away past (Gen. xiv.), and looked on to Hebrews v. It is wonderful to find this central pier of the double arch in this Temple-song, sung midway between type and anti-type. But remember that it is expressly attributed to the Father speaking by the Spirit to the Son (Heb. v. 5).

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 29.—PSALM CXI.

A song by an unknown minstrel. How gay the opening words: "Hallelujah! I will give thanks with my whole heart." The faculties of our being, like a well-trained choir, should be as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and blessing God; then the heart will be filled with the cloud of the Divine Presence.

Let us, as the second verse suggests, take pleasure in God's works, and seek them out. It is well for each to have a knowledge of some one branch of natural investigation, and to follow it out. But, above all, the wealth of truth hidden in the Word of God will well repay searching out. The pleasure and search act and react on one another; each provokes each.

What precious words are these for meditation: "Full of compassion"; "Meat for his own"; "Ever mindful of his covenant"; "Redemption sent forth to his people"; "The covenant commanded for ever," and therefore ordered in all things and sure. What "strong consolation" to those "who have fled for refuge"!

In the closing verses wisdom is used as in Solomon's time. It seems equivalent to that intuitive judgment and knowledge which characterise the God-fearing man. The fear to grieve the Lord because He is so tender and good breeds all kinds of good.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30.—PSALM CXII.

Two conditions of the Blessed Life: 1st, to fear the Lord; 2nd, to delight greatly in his commandments. And then the consequent results: a mighty seed: a blessed generation: wealth and riches: enduring influence for righteousness: light amid darkness: and many more such like things. The whole psalm is taken up with an enumeration of the beatitudes that alight on the head of the man who lives for God alone.

Around there is the hemisphere of encircling darkness, in which evil tidings and evil men lurk, as savages in the shadow of the forest, but within there is the circle of light from the presence of God. The soul is at rest, because secure (7). And all the time the voice of God whispers to it the deep sweet lullaby, "shall never be moved" (6). So the heart is established, and is not even afraid. It calmly waits to see the wicked melt away (10).

In the meanwhile the righteous man goes on deliberately with his well doing. He is gracious and full of compassion; he lends: he gives to the poor: he goes to and fro about his appointed work: he knows that he is immortal till his work is done. His life rings with the opening word of the psalm, Hallelujah!

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 1.—PSALM CXIII.

We detect the voice of Samuel's mother in this sweet psalm. She sang the Old Testament Magnificat; and here it has passed into the Psalter of the church. It was worth her pain to be able to give such strains to the world.

He who composed the psalm had scant knowledge of the deep mysteries which are household words to us. If he sang thus, how much more should we. Here is a thrice ascription of praise. For all time (2), and throughout all space (3), let the name of God be revered, honoured, loved. Because that name to us is Jesus.

So great is God that He must stoop to notice the largest of his works. He dwells in the high and holy place. Is it not wonderful, therefore, that He can find a home and dwelling-place in humble and contrite hearts? But largeness is not greatness. The babe in the cot is more important than the palace. The soul is more than the world.

God is not impressed or influenced by the distinctions of which we make so much. If the poor man is faithful, and the needy obedient, He will raise these to the positions of loftiest influence. Moral qualities are all-important in his sight. Do barren souls read these words? Like Hannah, do you pine for spiritual children? Tell it to God, as she did her agony, and, when patience has had her perfect work, you shall be a joyful mother of children.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2.—PSALM CXIV.

We all have been in Egypt. Egypt represents the tyranny of sin. But we have been redeemed. Like Israel, we have gone forth. We no more belong to the present world, with its strange tongue. Ours is the language of Canaan. And through this exodus we have become the temple and sanctuary of God Himself, his kingdom and dominion.

When once we realise this, our life, being God-possessed, becomes irresistible. Seas flee, rivers start back and give us passage, mountains are removed into the depths of the sea, and the hills cleave. The word "Impossible" is blotted from our vocabulary. When once God moves forward in us to accomplish his purpose, our course is unvarying and victorious.

The earth may be said to have trembled when Sinai shook greatly at the giving of the law. But the same presence that carried trembling into the solid earth gave water-springs to the people of his choice. Trust him, springs shall arise to refresh you in most unlikely places. Flinty hearts shall become fountains.

F. B. M.

Y.W.C.A. TEMPERANCE CRUSADE.—A series of temperance meetings will be held as follows, when lectures will be given, illustrated by lime-light dissolving views:—Nov. 27, Kilburn Town Hall, Mr. Campbell on "Why Abstain?"; Nov. 29, Metropolitan Tabernacle Lecture Hall, Mr. Menzies on "A Temperance Voyage Round the World"; Nov. 30, Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., Mr. Robinson on "The Temperance Sketch Book"; Dec. 4, Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end, Mr. Campbell on "The Temperance Pocket Book"; Dec. 6, Finsbury-square Y.W.C.A., Mr. Campbell; Dec. 7, Burlington Hall, 23, Savile-row, W., Mr. Menzies; Dec. 12, Holloway Hall, Holloway-road, N., Mr. Campbell. Though the meetings are specially intended for young women, all ages of both sexes will be heartily welcomed. Meetings to commence at eight.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 3.

Obedience—James i. 16-27.

Golden Text, 1 Jno. iv. 19.

The author of this epistle was James, the Lord's brother. He must not be confounded with James, the son of Zebedee, who had been put to death by Herod (Acts xii. 2). Some have sought to identify him with James the son of Alpheus; but there is no proof that he was one of the Apostles. He was the first bishop of the church at Jerusalem. According to Josephus, he suffered martyrdom by stoning in November, A.D. 61, when about sixty-three years old.

The epistle was written from Jerusalem, in what year cannot be known. It was addressed to Christian Jews in all places (i. 1), to whom James, by his position in the Church at Jerusalem, would be well known. They were evidently enduring great afflictions (i. 2); yet the tone of the epistle is not doctrinal but practical.

The title "Grateful Obedience" will guide in enforcing the teaching of these verses.

I. The Motive of Obedience (16-18).—As the title reminds us, it must be inspired by gratitude if it is to be acceptable to God. The obedience of the slave, which is rendered only to avoid the lash, or that of the self-righteous man which is supposed to be meritorious before God, is worthless. Recall what God has given us. "Do not err" (16) by charging Him with responsibility concerning our sin (13-15). It would add greatly to the enjoyment of every blessing if we distinctly recognised it as a gift from God. All men, whether his children or not, owe Him their gratitude on this account (Matt. v. 45).

A Christian has further cause for gratitude (18). His new birth is entirely the work of God, accomplished through the Word of God, constituting him part of the peculiar treasure of God. He is twice born that he may not twice die (Rev. xx.). Gratitude for this becomes the most powerful motive for obedience. Should we not obey Him who made us anew? See Psa. cxix. 73; Isa. xliii. 21.

II. The Exhortation to Obedience (19-25).—This is enforced by several interesting contrasts:—(1) The talkative (19). The Rabbis were wont to say that two ears are given to us, but only one tongue. The ears are opened and exposed, the tongue is walled in behind the teeth. He who does not use his ears well cannot make good use of his tongue. "Give me the benefit of your convictions, if you have any, but keep your doubts to yourself, for I have enough of my own."—Goethe.

(2) The wrathful (19, 20). This evil is connected with the other. When the spirit is angry it is easy for the lips to offend (Psa. cvi. 33). The cause of God is not helped by angry disputes. Dr. Manton speaks of a Manichee who contested with Augustine, and with importunate clamour cried, "Hear me! hear me!" Augustine modestly replied, "Neither let me hear thee, nor do thou hear me, but let us both hear the apostle."

(3) The corrupt (21). As the impure in heart cannot see God (Matt. v. 8), so the man whose mind is polluted, and who is full of malice towards others, cannot learn the truth. Note that these evil things are not to be suppressed, but cast aside, put away (R.V.). The true learner is neither hasty nor corrupt, but meek. As the stock receives the graft, so do we receive the Word, and become fruitful.

(4) The self-deceived (22-25). These are the men who hear, but do not. The prophet had such in his congregation (Ezek. xxxiii. 30-33). Jesus described them at the close of his Sermon on the Mount (Matt. vii. 24-27). There was never greater danger of this than now. Hearing sermons has become to many a kind of Sunday entertainment. "Is the sermon done?" said a mother to her boy as he came home from the service. "No, mother, it's preached; but the people have to do it." To get the mind instructed and the emotions stirred, and yet to remain inactive and disobedient, is to be injured rather than helped. The illustration (23-25) is a striking one. No mirror more truthfully reflects the countenance than the Word of God shows a man himself. Beware of transient impressions. Beware also of the folly of the Indian woman who destroyed the mirror because it revealed her ugliness.

III. The Life of Obedience (26, 27).—It is expressed in two ways: (1) By the proper control of the tongue (26; iii. 2—10). Tried by this test, would not James condemn as vain many a person's religion? (2) By a pure and useful life (27). Widows and orphans are used as representatives of all in need. An orthodox creed is valueless if unaccompanied by this practical life. The Christian life is not only negative, but positive. It manifests itself in practical benevolence. It not only sends to the distressed, but it visits them, and seeks to minister to their comfort. Is our religion like this?

G. W.

For the Young.

TWO FERNS AND THEIR LESSONS.

"How is it that one fern has grown so beautifully, and the other has not grown at all?"

So asked a boy who had for some time been watching the growth of two ferns. The ferns had been bought together, and had been carefully tended all the while, but only one had grown properly. While it had a lot of lovely foliage, the other was still small, and looked like dying. What was the reason?

To give it every chance of life, this fern had been cared for daily, and watered at proper seasons, but it seemed almost lifeless. How was it?

To find out the reason it was handed over to a gardener, that he might see what he could do for it. After taking it to his home, he found out that in the root was a small insect, which had been eating its way and stopping the plant from growing. Only a tiny insect, but enough to kill the plant.

What should this teach us? Can boys and girls learn a lesson from it? There were two boys who went together to Sunday-school. As each Sunday came round they could be seen together with their Bibles, going to learn more about Jesus Christ and his love for men. They were both taught the same lessons, and both sang:

Jesus is our Shepherd,
Wiping every tear;
Folded in his bosom,
What have we to fear?

But both of them did not grow up to love the Saviour—only one did. How was that?

Well, you remember there was something in the plant which stopped it from growing and killed it. There was something also in the heart of one of those boys, which sent away all his thoughts of God and prevented him from growing in the spiritual life, and that was—the sin which he loved.

One boy made up his mind to hate sin and to love Christ, and he asked Christ to take away his sins and live in his heart. He tried to be better every day, as Jesus would have us do; and he grew up into a manly Christian; but the other boy loved sin, and would not give it up.

Which are you going to do? Jesus says that all who come to him may have "life"—everlasting life. But sin eats away, as it were, all holiness, and stops a man from growing good, just as the insect in the plant stopped its growth.

It is God's will that we should give our hearts to Him, that He may reign in us as our King, that He may rule our lives so that we may "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." This is the kind of growing I want you to think of! Growing in favour with God day by day and trying to please Him; growing in the knowledge of Christ, knowing more and more about Him from what He is to us.

But there are a great number of things which tempt us away from Christ, and we must seek to overcome them, for we cannot grow good and be sinful too. We may be asked to cheat, but don't forget that we cannot do so and at the same time please God. We may be tempted to tell falsehoods and try to deceive our parents or teachers, but Christ can never own a lie. He is the truth itself, and in Him is no darkness at all.

Perhaps, too, you have been tempted to be unkind to brothers, sisters, or friends, but, wherever you are, always remember this—that these things are all sinful, and it is just sin that makes man miserable and separates him from God, so we must not give way to it.

Jesus came. What for? That we might no longer live in sin, but trust Him for salvation, and live to Him, through the power which He gives us to thrust sin from our hearts.

But supposing that we have already been very sinful? Are we to get cast down and think that God will not listen to us? Oh, no! It was just because we were sinful that Jesus came, and if we look to Him we may have the joy of knowing that our sins are forgiven. Jesus will accept us as his friends.

Let us be glad, because God sent his Son into the world for our sakes, that we, through Him, might be saved. And let us take Him to cleanse us from all sin, and give us strength, while we are young, to be his real disciples, so that we may grow up to be true children of the kingdom. And whenever we are tempted to do wrong, let us at once offer a prayer to Him asking for help, that we may keep pure in heart. H. G. J.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Brussels, to Nov. 30; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Bristol, Nov. 25 to Dec. 8; Rev. Martin J. Hall, St. Philip's, Manchester, to Nov. 27; Altrincham, Dec. 2-3; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Drybrook, to Nov. 24; York, Dec. 3; Waterhouses, co. Durham, Dec. 4 to 17; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Spurgeon's Tabernacle, Croydon, Nov. 26 to Dec. 4 (with Mr. Goodman); Mission Hall, Gay-street, Scotland-road, Liverpool, Dec. 9 to 20; Mr. George Goodman, Bow, Dec. 10 to 17.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Nov. 26, S., 1 Kings xx. 19-30; 27, xxi. 1-19; 28, xxii. 1-14; 29, xxii. 15-29; 30, xxii. 30-40; Dec. 1, Malachi i. 1-14; 2, ii. 1-12.

"FOLLOW ME."

How far from Thee the nearest
Of those who track thy path,
How much of imperfection
Each dear believer hath;
Unlike Thyself—the Perfect—
The Holy, Undefiled;
O draw me nearer, Saviour,
So oft by sin beguiled!

How low, alas! the highest
Of those who rise, to Thee,
On eagle's wings now soaring,
Then low—so low—to be,
Upon the mount delighting,
Then gloomy in the vale;
O raise me, raise me, Saviour,
And let not sins prevail!

How cold, alas! the warmest
Of those whose spirits glow
With bright celestial fervour
And love's effulgent flow;
Yet soon to feel the chillness
Of this poor dying scene;
Inspire, inspire me, Saviour,
Lest deadness intervene!

How slow, alas! the fleetest
Of those who speed their way
Along the path Thou treadest,
Whose goings nought could stay;
What haltings in life's journey,
How slow the onward pace;
O speed me, speed me, Saviour,
Bestowing quickening grace!

O keep my eye still gazing
Upon Thee on the throne;
Faith's only bright exemplar,
To copy Thee alone;
All here—the best—are failing,
To Thee alone I fly;
O help me, help me, Saviour,
Thy name to glorify.

Albert Midlane.

CRIPPLES' HOME, MARYLEBONE-ROAD.

On a recent occasion I found collected in the Cripples' Home and Industrial School for Girls, Marylebone-road, W., in addition to the superintendent and matrons, ninety-five young girls and women. Of these, thirty are healthy girls being trained for domestic service, sixty-five are cripples. The sight is unique. Some walk with crutches, others wheel themselves in chairs; many, though short of stature, are endowed with quick mental powers; all need tender nurturing and loving care.

I was glad to find that there is a seaside home at West Marina, St. Leonards, as a change of air and residence beside the sea during some weeks must be very powerful for good. The Home in the Marylebone-road has large workrooms, well adapted to the useful industries of these helpless girls; but the House at St. Leonards leaves much to be desired, and funds are needed to enable the committee to get one better and more healthy, and more suited to the purpose.

The girls are trained to make straw hats and bonnets, to sew, and cut out, and make their own clothes. Besides these occupations and their lessons they devote some days to working for missionary purposes, and at the sale, recently held at Morley Hall, most of their work was sold off at once. They are thus taught to be interested in others, to pray for their benefactors, and to be thankful for the ameliorations in their lot which the Cripples' Home affords.

The honorary secretary, Miss Wellesley, will thankfully give information about the work and its needs. Communications should be addressed to her, at 17A, Marylebone-road, W. C. L. H. D.

NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

Dear Sir,—We desire to praise God for permitting his servants to continue their labours in Algeria, notwithstanding the serious difficulties that threatened the work at the beginning of the year. The Spanish Mission, under Mr. Patrick's care, in Tangier, has also been maintained, in spite of fierce persecution in the past and threats in the present. We are also thankful for the few converts won from Mohammedanism, and for the reports of considerable and deep interest among others of whom it is not expedient to give details. Notwithstanding the commercial depression the funds of the Mission have been more abundant than for some time past.

The need of more labourers, especially well-qualified men, is keenly felt. We are praying that God will raise up and send many more, and the means to sustain them.

I am now on my way to Morocco, accompanied by a few missionaries and helpers, and would ask the prayers of your readers that my visit may be very manifestly for the furtherance of the Gospel. One of the number is a Scotch gardener of experience who is going to try an experiment as to an industrial mission on the coast at Casablanca. He will have many difficulties, but if the experiment should succeed it will be a matter of considerable importance. The cost of this will not come from this general funds of the mission, but those interested can help by special gifts.

Any communications with regard to the work may be sent as usual to the office of the Mission, 21, Linton-road, Barking.

Yours heartily in Christ,
Edward H. Glenny.

S.s. Thames, English Channel, Nov. 16.

BUSINESS:

A Sphere for Nurturing Parts of the Divine Character.

We work, nay, toil, in the daily life, and in the first instance most of us do so in order thereby to provide maintenance for ourselves and our families. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" is in some form the appointed lot of us all, now that sin has entered into the world, and it is good for us, best for us, in the existing circumstances. One who is only partially occupied, deteriorates, and if he is without any occupation he becomes by degrees merely a consumer, instead of being a producer, which all true workers are. It is the capability of doing well, and the actual exercise of that capability, that makes a substantial character.

The business of life affords a sphere for forming, developing, and maturing within us the character of God. To be definite, take the life of a lawyer for illustration. He goes to his office, opens a dozen letters or so, some perhaps honest, some delusive, some vexatious, some pleasant, and on various subjects. He sees persons of different characters—some want to take him in, some want counsel in their affairs, and preservation from wrong. He mixes with diverse persons—some honourable, some selfish, some crafty. He devises, arranges, purposes, advises, acts. For all this, wisdom, understanding, penetration, unselfishness, faithfulness, firmness, kindness, forbearance, discrimination, endurance, are needed. And these are some of the attributes of God Himself. Also, in his need, the worker can briefly seek the vitalising help of God continually.

I have sometimes alluded to this view of the business of life in semi-public speeches, and it has been appreciated. It has seemed to raise the tone of working life. Yes, we are not living worldly lives in a bad sense because we work in the world. Let us encourage one another—encourage the young in particular—to make much of the daily life, seeking to be thoroughly fitted for whatever duties we undertake, and to perform them in a Christian spirit.

Sn.

A BOSTON CONVENTION.—The influence of one spiritual church in a large city, and even extending throughout the entire land, is beautifully demonstrated in Dr. Gordon's Church in Boston. A four days' convention (Nov. 2-5) has been exceedingly helpful to a large number of God's people. Dr. Pierson, Dr. Simpson, and Dr. Gordon richly opened the Scriptures, and much time was given to prayer. The last day was given to missionary interests, which led many to greater consecration and sacrifice.

THE Y.M.C.A.'S OF IRELAND.

It was the writer's privilege last week to spend a few days in Ireland, when he had an opportunity of addressing several meetings in Dublin, and attending the Southern district Y.M.C.A. Conference held in Cork. The work in the metropolis has an air of "go" about it, and under the guidance of Mr. Boyd good work is being done. It was quite refreshing to see the numbers of bright young fellows in the various passages and rooms of the building in Lower Abbey-street all wearing badges. Special services were held all last week in connection with the universal week of prayer for young men. Father Connellan had large audiences on both Sundays, and the meetings on the week-nights were well attended. Special mention might be made of the large gathering on Wednesday night, when the lesser hall was nearly filled with men, and a large number at the close requested prayer.

On the way to Cork we welcomed several of the delegates who were going to the conference, and had pleasant intercourse about the work. One member told us that in his town, with two or three exceptions, all the Protestant young men are connected with the Y.M.C.A. The work is spreading, and taking a firm hold of the spiritually-minded young men.

We arrived in Cork amid a storm of drenching rain, but the welcome of the brethren made us forget the dampness all around. The Conference was not a big affair, only about seventeen delegates and visitors being present. But the representatives who were there were "valiant men," including Rev. J. W. Harrison (of Arklow), George Williams (late of Rathmines) (who is as enthusiastic and popular as ever), Commander Sanderson (of Waterford) (a loyal supporter of the Y.M.C.A.), Mr. G. F. Trench, J.P. (Ardfert), Oliver H. McCowen (of Tralee), W. A. Boyd (of Dublin), and the energetic general secretary of the local association, F. A. Bailey. The public meetings were well attended and most inspiring. The hearty welcome extended to Mr. Harrison was very striking, and he gave two manly and helpful addresses that are sure to bear fruit.

The district work is well organised, and bids fair for a rapid extension of the Y.M.C.A. in the South of Ireland.

Special mention must be made of the discussion introduced by Rev. J. O. Park, B.A., of the Wesleyan body, on "The Relations Between the Y.M.C.A. and the Churches." Mr. Park is a vice-president of the Cork Y.M.C.A., and has been a true friend of the association. But the impeachment that he brought forward against the Y.M.C.A. was a great surprise to the delegates present. His utterance was calm and argumentative, and all ssociation men will be glad to have this clear and manly statement, because it is the feeling of many of our ministers who, up till now, have not given expression to their convictions. Mr. Park maintained at the outset that the balance of help on the part of the Y.M.C.A. to the churches was not on the right side. He tried to prove that the Y.M.C.A. was a rival to the Church, and was itself fast becoming a Church. He refused to discuss the question upon the results of the past, and pictured to the conference what he considered the Y.M.C.A. was, and was fast drifting to. Under the following five heads he attempted to show up the work of the Y.M.C.A., and from these premises prove the association a "church," and therefore a rival to the ecclesiastical bodies of to-day:—

(1) The Y.M.C.A. is a society acknowledging Christ for its head.

(2) Its direct object is to extend his kingdom.

(3) It has stated assemblies for worship and teaching.

(4) It has disciplinary powers more stringent than any Church in Ireland.

(5) There is no logical reason why its members should not join together in the sacraments.

He suggested that the Y.M.C.A. was largely influenced by the principles of the "Society of Friends," and by the "Plymouth Brethren." Before concluding Mr. Park said there was a great future before the Y.M.C.A., if it only ceased to be a Church.

Several ministers present said bitter things against the Y.M.C.A., and it was only in the afternoon diet that the delegates had their "innings." While the ministers were united as to their position so were the representatives. One feels that much of the misunderstanding arises from ignorance of the principles and work of the Y.M.C.A. All this clears the atmosphere, and will ultimately do good.

Special sermons were preached in various churches on Sunday, and a mass meeting at 8.15 p.m. for men only.

The new Y.M.C.A. building in Cork is almost ready for occupancy, and will be a great help for the work and blessing to the city.

W. M. O.

A VISIT TO CANADIAN PRISONS.

By CHAS. COOK.

To find oneself wandering through the gloomy corridors of a prison, and hear the sorrowful tales of those who are suffering for their wrong-doing, directly after you have gazed upon the majestic grandeur of Niagara, and heard the deep music of the Falls, is a contrast so great that you are led to think of the lines—

> Where every prospect pleases,
> And only man is vile.

Reaching Hamilton, Ont., we were soon under the hospitable roof of our old friend the Hon. Captain Moreton, and then, with the governor of the gaol as our guide, we visited the prison.

Here were many victims of intemperance; one man has passed through this place 239 times. Another prisoner said to me, "I am glad I was sent here, for I had no power to abstain from drink outside whilst I could get it, and now I hope to be able to do so." "What will mother say?" was the exclamation of a murderer, who when sober awoke to the fact that when drunk he had taken the life of his fellow. There appeared to be more liberty accorded to the prisoners here than in "the old country," religious papers being permitted, and a photograph or two of loved friends adorned some of the cells, which certainly could only have a good effect upon the inmates.

KINGSTON.

Arrangements were made for my visiting the Penitentiary or Convict Station of Ontario, at Kingston. Here, under the care of Warden (or Governor) Lavell, were some 600 men and women. The Warden is charged with leniency, and prisoners often ask the judge to send them to this prison in preference to the Central Prison, though it may mean a longer sentence. The prison is a model of order and cleanliness, the men well behaved, and all busy at work. "Men are just how you treat them," said the Governor; and as I remarked to him of the men in the blacksmiths' shop, "I'd hardly know by their dress that these men are convicts." "Why should you?" he replied; and added, "A few years ago they wore a hideous dress; now we have three grades of men, and on entrance all are put into the second class, from which they can rise to the first or fall to the third, and it is a great incentive to them to aspire to the first grade, when they are dressed in ordinary grey tweed suiting. We find that anything which tends to create and foster self-respect in the men is good for them; all that can be done to elevate a man we do."

This is a vast improvement on England. I know of nothing in convict life there which tends to elevate the men. We punish, and punish severely, but there is little in our English system to improve or correct, and less to convert a sinner from the errors of his way. About an ounce and a-half of tobacco per week is supplied to each man in this prison (it strikes me that is why this place is preferred), which they may chew, but must not smoke.

There are over 500 men here, many for life; the food is good, and the bread equally as good as sold by the bakers in the city; and to my surprise was white, not brown, bread. This continent is the only place, I think, where this luxury is permitted. Weekly religious papers are allowed. There are one or two things which need altering, and one is the size of the cells. They are by far the smallest cells in the world, being only eight feet long by twenty-eight inches wide. This is cruel and unmerciful, and though they are used principally for sleeping in, yet the men go in them all day Sunday and part of Saturday. The Warden has begun to build some large cells, and is doing all he can to alter the existing system of the association of prisoners.

TORONTO.

Our next visit was to Toronto, where, in the gaol we found the Warden attempting to classify prisoners, but here, we noticed, were cells which were used for two prisoners to sleep in. It was at the Central Prison, however, that I saw so much to admire. Here there are no dark cells used, and under the firm but Christian discipline of Warden Massey, the men seemed contented and well behaved. By work which they do, they are able to earn money and send it home to their friends, one man usually sends home about ten dollars a month, another lately had 100 dollars to take when he left the gaol. Industries of many kinds are in full swing within the prison; the place clean, healthy, and a pattern for others. England needs to learn one lesson from Canada in respect to prison reformation.

On going to the place on Sunday morning I met thirty gentlemen who were there to conduct thirty classes, in what is called a Sunday school among the convicts. They seemed an intelligent, level-headed, well-to-do set of men, with warm, loving hearts, there to do their Master's work of carrying the Gospel to the "outcasts of Israel," and my soul rejoiced in their mission. If this liberty were accorded to similar gentlemen in English prisons we should expect to see similar results. Crime has greatly decreased in Canada recently—nor need we wonder at it. Why should we not agitate in England for more liberty in English prisons to do the Lord's work? There is no stated chaplain in this gaol. The Prisoners' Aid Association arranges to fill the pulpit by the ministers of the town and others. They say: "If we had a regular chaplain, the work might be done in a mere perfunctory spirit; and then, being an official of the Government, he would not have the same chance of becoming a real friend to the men." They know that those who take the services do it out of love for them.

Now comes a remarkable incident. I was announced to take the service, and the Warden, who is a magnificent specimen of a whole-hearted Christian, said: "The Roman Catholic priest, who is a man devoted to his work, has elected to have his own flock hear you, and he will also be here himself, so that all the prisoners in the prison will be in the church."

It was most inspiriting to hear some hearty "Amens" from the teachers referred to above, when something was said to which they agreed. We had a good Gospel address, in which the Lord's love to all mankind was set forth. Father Walsh began with the Lord's Prayer, a hymn was sung, and Christ was uplifted to these criminals—our fallen fellow men. The priest thanked me for my words, and I thanked God for the priest's liberality.

DR. R. F. HORTON AT PLYMOUTH.

During the week, from November 6—12, a remarkable series of mission services, conducted by Dr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, was held in Sherwell Congregational Chapel, Plymouth. Dr. Horton's plan was to have a Bible-reading in the afternoon, in the schoolroom, and a preaching service at night in the chapel itself. Those who had the privilege of attending the readings felt that new light was shed on many a well-known passage, and that the Word of God became in very truth a word of life.

On the successive evenings Dr. Horton dwelt on the successive steps of the Christian life, from its beginning in a change of mind, to its consummation in union with Christ. There was a special service for children on Saturday afternoon, and on Sunday morning a communion service was held, when most of those who had received blessing during the week sat down at the Lord's table. In the evening the large chapel was crowded in every part.

This week will be long remembered as marking an epoch in the lives of many, and will, we believe, prove productive of future good.

We cannot but hope that other churches may be blessed as the Sherwell church has been, and that many more may come under the stimulating influence of what we have felt to be a consecrated life.

One feature of the mission seems to call for special notice. Amongst the most attentive and appreciative of the hearers were found the professors of the Western College, and many of the Nonconformist ministers of the town, while the students of the college worked heart and soul for the success of the effort. T. S. M.

[☞ We are conscious that the insertion of the above report will grieve some of our readers, who have the deepest sympathy with the work of the Gospel, because it may seem like an endorsement of the writings by which Dr. Horton is widely known. We therefore feel obliged to state that while we rejoice in his, as in every, work, which blesses the souls of men through the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, we feel as painfully as ever the serious mischief which has been, and is still being, done by the circulation of Dr. Horton's books on Inspiration and Revelation.—Ed.]

The Late MR. JOHN HORNIMAN,

CHRISTIAN PHILANTHROPIST.

THE important question of the duties and responsibilities of the wealthy is one which claims and receives much attention at the present time; and it offers many aspects, according as it is viewed from the Christian and Scriptural, or from the economic and temporal, standpoints. It is not our intention here to enter upon these comprehensive relations of the subject, but only to note briefly how some of them have been practically regarded by a prosperous and generous member of the Society of Friends, who recently passed away, at Croydon, at the advanced age of ninety years.

From childhood, John Horniman had to make his own way in the world, under the blessing of God. He was eminently a business man. As the founder and builder-up of a large business, of world-wide reputation, he had constantly to ponder and devise the adaptation of the means to the ends. That is to say, he had first to consider what commercial results he desired to attain; then, secondly, he carefully adapted his modes of action so as to promote, or secure, those results. And this important fundamental principle is one which as much requires to be observed by the Christian, in his religious and social endeavours for the good of others, as by the merchant or trader. Indeed, many of the disappointing failures of the preacher and the philanthropist arise from a neglect of this simple and universally operative truth.

For example, how often it has occurred that when extensive gifts of money have been made, with comparatively indiscriminating readiness, amongst a multitude of destitute applicants, the only visible result has been a subsequent worse condition of improvidence and helplessness than before. If the Duke of Westminster poured out all his vast fortune, in a week, upon East London, in the form merely of pecuniary gifts to all destitute applicants, can any sensible person doubt the result? It would occasion such a frightful saturnalia of drunkenness, profligacy, and riot, that years would hardly suffice to remove the disastrous consequences of the same. Whereas comparatively small sums devoted to the moral, religious, and sanitary elevation of such a district, are often seen to produce most encouraging results, especially in the direction of helping the poor to help themselves. It is a never-to-be-forgotten maxim that, in the aid of destitution and in the application of beneficence, "The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul."

By the extension of churches and missions; by the promotion of religious education, handicraft training, and spiritual and intellectual instruction; by medical aid to the diseased poor; by the support of hospitals for the injured and the helpless; by refuges for the aged and worn-out worker; by the erection of healthy dwellings; by the establishment of convalescent institutions for invalids; by aids for the training of students of limited means, for useful careers; by the distribution of tracts and good books; by the extension of inducements to temperance, purity, thrift, and kindliness to man and beast—it is by such means as these that the chief ends of benevolence, and of a fruitful distribution of money, are secured. And it was precisely into such channels of usefulness that Mr. Horniman directed his wealth, generously and continuously.

(From a Photograph by Mr. W. H. Mason, 89, George Street, Croydon).

The extension of his vast business in the City was largely secured by a liberal use of the Press. And it was therefore one of the special features of Mr. Horniman's shrewd philanthropy, to encourage a similar use of the Press in the interests of moral and philanthropic aims. Thus, as a valued member of the committee of the Peace Society, he repeatedly urged his colleagues to a wide and liberal distribution of literature exposing the evils of war, and advocating the advantages of International Arbitration and conciliatory diplomacy. He furnished hundreds, and even thousands, of pounds to that Society during his lifetime for this special service. He offered a number of prizes for a series of Illustrated Peace Tracts, of which a very large circulation was secured; and at his decease he left the munificent legacy of £10,000 to the same Society, having shortly before expressed his wish that it should continue actively to utilise the Press for its important objects. He took a similar interest in the systematic endeavours of the Howard Association to enlist the co-operation of the conductors of public journals in the diffusion of information on the best methods of the treatment and prevention of crime.

Mr. Horniman was a great traveller, and visited many distant lands. During these journeys he used to look up and encourage the workers in mission establishments and schools. Many persons who go abroad do not trouble themselves with such matters, and yet presume to speak contemptuously of missions, and to deny their usefulness. A gentleman who has recently visited India remarked, after his return to England, "I was six months in India; and during all that time I never saw a single snake, although there are certainly millions of them in that land. So, some people who have been to India say that they never saw any converts resulting from mission efforts; and, for a good reason, because such visitors kept out of the way of both converts and missionaries." Mr. Horniman was more thoroughly observant. Thus, during his travels in Syria and the Holy Land, he took occasion to visit the Friends' Syrian Mission at Brumana, on Mount Lebanon, near Beyrout, and was so much pleased with the group of religious, educational, and medical activities which he there found in operation, that he not only continued a liberal support to the expenditure during the remainder of his life, but also left that mission a legacy of £12,500. So that for long years to come the inhabitants of "that goodly mountain, even Lebanon," will have cause to cherish gratefully the memory of John Horniman. To other foreign and home missions of the Friends he left about £30,000, in addition to previous generous assistance.

Nor did he limit his help to the work of his own religious denomination. He had taken note, in particular, of the wonderful devotedness of the Moravian Church to foreign missions. That body is almost the smallest of the religious denominations, and consists, for the most part, of poor persons, or of those of very limited means; and yet, leaning more on prayer and the Divine Spirit than on money, its members have been eminently (may we not almost say pre-eminently?) blessed in their world-wide work of evangelisation. To the Moravian Missions, therefore, Mr. Horniman also left £10,000. But whilst he lived he had extensively distributed his encouragements to mission workers of various churches. When visiting a mission school in Africa he observed one of the teachers wearing a dress which indicated very straitened means. Returning to his hotel, he despatched a trusty messenger with a purse of gold, for the personal help of the teachers whom he had just seen. His observations were practically sympathetic.

One of the elements of missionary success consists in a careful and somewhat prolonged training of suitable candidates for the work. Mr. Horniman was fully sensible of this need; and, therefore, before he died, he had given £20,000 to institute a training home at Hackney Downs for young men intending to labour in the mission establishments of the Society of Friends.

There are few channels in which pecuniary aid can be made to flow with more certainty of real usefulness than that of assistance to Hospitals. Neither vice, drunkenness, nor improvidence is fostered by these valuable institutions. They are for the succour of some of the most truly pitiable amongst human sufferers. They render eminently desirable help to the restoration of the temporarily helpless. And they tend to produce and train a large class of devoted and intelligent nurses (one of the most useful and honourable sections of the community), in addition to the encouragement which they furnish for the extension of medical science and skill. Possessors of wealth can hardly find more genuinely worthy objects for its bestowment than the increasingly numerous (but still very inadequately supported) public hospitals. The shrewd and wisely cautious charity of Mr. Horniman was therefore liberally extended to some of these noble institutions. He bequeathed £10,000 to the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, and £5000 to the London Temperance Hospital. And knowing the importance of preventing illness, if possible, on the one hand, and of speedily restoring the invalid, on the other, by change of air and healthy surroundings, he devoted £30,000 during his life-time to the founding and endownment of a Children's Convalescent Home at Worthing.

So that, in very many ways, Mr. Horniman was earnestly solicitous to > Scatter seeds of kindness

> For the reaping by-and-by.

Indeed, for years and generations yet to come, the seeds of beneficent result so generously scattered and placed in all directions by this "faithful steward," will produce harvests of varied blossom and fruitage, to the blessing of thousands, both temporally and spiritually. It must not be overlooked that Mr. Horniman was largely his own executor, and that he spent more in charity during his life than he bequeathed for it at his decease.

One other feature in his career claims attention. Whilst, under a sense of responsibility to the Highest, wealth may be utilised as a real gift and talent from God, yet unless accompanied by this religious influence, it is peculiarly apt to produce pride and hardness in its possessor. Those who, by their own labours, have accumulated large fortunes and estates, are liable to feel something of the arrogance of King Nebuchadnezzar, when he exclaimed: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built, by the might of my power?" But such altogether forget their own entire indebtedness to God for the life, the health, the ability, the perseverance, which have enabled them to achieve their success. To them, as to everyone, are profoundly applicable the words "What hast thou, that thou didst not receive?" But John Horniman, living and dying in the fear of the Lord, was not thus uplifted. As a friend and relative at home, and in the duties of public worship, he was, by Divine grace, and doubtless by the instrumentality of prayer, enabled to continue humble and reverent to the end. And we may confidently hope that, through the infinite merits of the Saviour, Jesus Christ, he has been permitted to enter, as a good and faithful servant, into the eternal joy of his Lord.

But very, very few Christians are able to accumulate wealth like his. Hence many excellent souls may feel it hardly fair that "millionaires" like John Horniman, or Samuel Morley, or George Peabody, should have such peculiar prominence given to them by the honour of the Church, as well as of the world. For the time present, and for general benefit, this special honour has its wide use. But for eternity, and for every Christian as an individual, the Divine standard of gracious recognition and favour knows no difference between the poorest and the richest, except spiritual distinction. The sacred principle abides, which is involved in our Lord's own words, "Whether is greater, the gift or the altar [with its humble, prayerful, devotion to Christ] that sanctifieth the gift?" The "cup of cold water," to a disciple, Christ will not forget. And the poor widow's two mites were declared by Him to be "more than all they which have cast into the treasury."

GOD'S WILL.

His Will is our Peace.—Dante.

How long a time my self-willed soul
Hath vainly sought to have her way,
Whilst passion's waves in tumult roll,
A stormy night, a darkened day!

I fought against my God, my Lord;
My will alone seemed right and best;
I would not heed his whispered word,
"Submit to Me, and be at rest."

Weary, at last to Him I cried,
A mariner in sore distress;
He came, He bade the storm subside,
So great his love, his tenderness!

His perfect will is now my peace,
His gracious, all-controlling will;
From self and sin in Him I cease,
And my once troubled heart lies still.

Hid ever in my Saviour's breast,
His only will the life I know—
His will, my happiness, my rest,
My constant paradise below!

E. A. W.

THE LONDON FACTORY LADS' INSTITUTE held its fifth annual meeting on the evening of Wednesday week, at the Hampstead Vestry Hall. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., was in the chair, and commended the work of the Institute. In the course of a short speech he pointed out the necessity of extending this kind of work in the large towns of England, where he grieved to say there was perhaps more human degradation to be found than in any other country of the world. Messrs. A. Evershed and W. J. Wetenhall spoke, and the lads from the Institute in Kentish-town gave a gymnastic display.

CONVENTION AT LAUSANNE.

Just as the approaching winter was beginning to shut us up from further communication with the shores of England, we were delighted to hear that there was to be a five days' Convention at Lausanne. Those of us who were present were not sent away empty. Rev. F. Paynter gave some very helpful Bible expositions; and many upon whose ears the news of this "fuller life" probably fell for the first time, must have been impressed with the intense conviction with which the speakers delivered their message. Their faces spoke for them. The meetings were not largely attended, though there are over 1000 English in Lausanne alone.

On Wednesday, November 1st, Rev. W. Houghton gave an introductory address, based upon Ps. xxi. 6. "What is this blessed life?" he asked. Compared with the past, it is like comparing a day in July with a day in April. It is not a life of "perfection," but of "blamelessness." He spoke of this life as (i)., a state of pardon and acceptance on the ground of Christ's sacrifice; (ii.), a state of soul-cleanness; (iii.), a state of peace and rest. There are Christians whose life is a song, and there are Christians whose life is a sigh. Rev. E. W. Moore gave some helpful thoughts upon 1 Cor. iii. 16—"the Temple." Many, he said, have given their hearts for salvation, who have not given their bodies for service.

On Thursday, the speakers were Mr. Houghton and Mr. Moore, who gave a striking address upon Matt. iii. 11, 12. He divided his subject into the fan, the fire, and the floor. There was the fan of persecution, of tribulation (tribulum—flail), and of affliction. The fan brings us into that state in which God can bless us.

On Friday afternoon there was a larger gathering. Mr. Houghton spoke upon "Rest" (Matt. xi. 28), and Rev. C. G. Moore gave his well-known address on "Law and Grace," dealing with the opening chapters of the Epistle to the Romans. Illustrating the thought that we may be doing right without knowing it, he said that when at college the students attended some lectures upon elocution, but some of them found they had been using their voice properly, so that all they obtained for their fee was the advice, "You are right; keep on doing it." But this knowledge and advice were worth having.

I must repeat a story Mr. Houghton told in an address upon Jer. xxxi. 12, "Their soul shall be as a watered garden." A rich man suddenly became poor. A friend asked him the secret of his patience and restfulness under the trial. "When I was rich," he said, "I enjoyed God in all things; now I have learnt to enjoy all things in God." All the addresses were marked with spiritual power, and we may rest assured that God's Holy Spirit was in our midst.

John Best, Chaplain at Neuchâtel.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

At the workers' meeting on Wednesday, last week, under the presidency of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, treasurer of the Homes, Miss Annie Taylor, the intrepid Thibetan traveller, gave a most interesting account of her journeyings through that almost inaccessible land. She related how "in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the wilderness, in perils among false friends, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness," God had graciously spared her, and had again and again given her the lives of those who journeyed with her.

Mr. E. Glenny spoke in behalf of the North Africa Mission, and asked prayer for guidance in the crisis in Morocco, and for a party of three who were starting with him to the field on the following day. He hopes to return after taking counsel with the superintendents of the various districts occupied by the mission.

THE ANNUAL MEETINGS of the Scottish Christian Union branch of the B.W.T.A. were held at Edinburgh on Wednesday week, when delegates from forty branches were present. Reports respecting the various departments of the work were presented. There was a numerous attendance at the public meeting, which was addressed by Mrs. Blaikie, Miss Wigham, Mrs. Mackinnon, Rev. A. Sutherland, and Mrs. Pearsall Smith.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	" "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols.	" "
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols.	" "

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 " "	4s.	" "
12 " "	6s.	" "
24 " "	12s.	" "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Major-General Howard, of the United States Army.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive The Christian direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

On another page we describe the aims and plans of the Tibetan Pioneer Mission. We understand that Miss Taylor is hopeful of hearing from devoted workers who have passed their novitiate in Christian service. She will, we trust, hear from such, and be enabled, without needless delay, to see her mission launched.

The London Y.M.C.A. is bestirring itself in view of the Jubilee Celebration of next June. An extensive programme of arrangements is in progress of formation; the carrying out of the details has been entrusted to Mr. J. H. Putterill, financial secretary of the Aldersgate Association.

As our readers may be requiring appropriate volumes for presentation during the coming season, they will be glad to know that our publishers are clearing out at a very reduced price their stock of "The Christian Portrait Gallery." This elegant volume contains over one hundred striking portraits and biographic sketches of eminent Christian men and women. Originally published at half-a-guinea, it is now offered at 3s. 6d., post free.

It is the rule in places of worship that notices (sometimes extending to a dozen different announcements) are made during the service. If given out before the preaching they either preoccupy the mind or are forgotten. If after, they divert the attention, and tend to do away with any impression made. Could they not be restricted to those absolutely necessary, or could not some other way be found of conveying this information? And could not the collection, except on special occasions, be made before the sermon, particularly at distinctly evangelistic meetings?

This raises another question. As the bulk of all congregations are unconverted, is it right, even on Sunday mornings, to address believers only, without a word to the undecided? Ought not every address to answer, however concisely, the question burning in many hearts, "What must I do to be saved?"

The distinction drawn by Dr. Pentecost (p. 11) between Christianity and Christendom, between the followers of Christ, and the inhabitants of so-called Christian countries, is of the utmost importance. The drink and opium traffic, the legalisation of vice, and other forms of evil, are not Christian, but heathen. There is no Christian nation in the world, in the sense in which the word Christian is used in that classical passage which declares that "the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch."

When the heathen charge upon Christian missionaries, that the same vessel that brought them brought the firewater, the answer should be that such commerce is not Christian, but heathen, and that Christians at home seek the regeneration of their heathen fellow-countrymen just as they seek the regeneration of the heathen in India, or China, or Africa.

Now that the coal war is over, we are delighted to see that in many cases the masters are making advances of money to the men to help them over present troubles. The representatives of the men also are resolutely striving after "the things that make for peace." We hear from many quarters that no bitterness has been left behind. There will, no doubt, be an earnest effort on both sides to smooth the way for the formation of a Conciliation Board, and to make its future action easy and effective. We can all do something to create that atmosphere of good will in which alone a right understanding can live and grow.

A meeting was convened in Holborn Town Hall, on Tuesday, to affirm that the Christian organisation of labour involves the maintenance of such wages as shall enable workers to support healthy and human homes; that this will be in the interests of the whole community as tending to greater efficiency of work, and that on Boards of Conciliation labour and capital should be assisted by independent members representing the best conscience of the community, with provision for a final appeal. This is a satisfactory evidence that the public is waking up to see that the welfare of each member of the community is the welfare of all, and should therefore be the care of all. "If one member suffers, all the members suffer with it." Another illustration that the Bible is the only safe guide in political and social economy.

The British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society have brought a serious and just complaint against the Government in connection with the African slave trade. Owing to recent territorial rearrangements, it appears that the administration of the province of Witu has passed from the British East Africa Company to the Imperial authorities. Under the régime of the Company the status of slavery was abolished, though a period of five years was to elapse before the abolition came fully and finally into force. The Government have now permitted the Sultan of Zanzibar to issue regulations revoking these former agreements, so that the status of slavery is practically reimposed, and there is no definite prospect among the Witus of any return to freedom, though they are living nominally under British protection. The Times of Tuesday is justified in saying that "such an extraordinary departure from national precedent is difficult to believe." We hope some member of the House of Commons will interrogate the Government at once on the subject.

Captain Lugard has a kind word to say of missionaries in his new book on "The Rise of our East African Empire." He does not "indiscriminately admire all missionaries," but he did not meet one Scotch missionary in Nyassaland whom he did not esteem. He has nothing but praise for them and their methods. He considers that a missionary must, above all things, be a gentleman, "for no one is more quick to realise a real gentleman than the African savage." The Captain evidently means both the spirit and manner of living of the missionary, and, of course, not anything in a merely conventional sense; as he adds that the dwelling-house of the missionary should be as superior to those of the natives as he himself is superior to them.

A correspondent says, in reply to a recent paragraph with regard to young men and missions:—

> I do not believe that either courage or devotedness is lacking in the ranks of Christian young men, but is not the reason many do not "go" to be found in the fact that there is no organisation ready to receive and support many who would? I can speak feelingly on this point, as I have been more than once informed that "only self-supporting missionaries can be received." When recruits are needed in the army the fact is abundantly advertised, and all particulars can easily be obtained; but while we hear much about the need of workers in foreign lands, the way is not made clear or easy to hundreds of willing hearts.

It is quite true there are more willing to go than there are willing to send.

In Mr. Bush's "Life and Times of Chrysostom" there is a sentence on the effects of the famous preacher's early ascetic habits, which is worthy of attention by others than monks or nuns:—

> There can be no doubt that during this time he seriously injured his bodily constitution, weakened his vital powers, and created that irritability of temper to which he was not unfrequently subject, and to which, as to a cause, many of the principal miseries of his subsequent life may be fairly attributed.

The same remark will apply to the rush, the strain, the overwork, and the broken nerves of some Christians now.

A correspondent of The Westminster Gazette, who is interested in the subject of the corporal punishment of children, has bethought him that, while it is all very well to know the views of teachers and officials, it would be worth knowing what the children have to say. So he has visited a large Board School when the scholars were playing, and had an "interview" with some of them. One boy, who admitted that he deserved to be punished sometimes, and who approved of the deliberate floggings his father gives him, strongly objected to be "banged about" by his teacher at any and every time: it made him "silly." The girls were of opinion that they had not been treated fairly, and yet "they ought to act fair to you here." The moral of the interview seems to be that justice, absolute fairness, is the quality which wins children. However they may be punished, the rankling and deadly thing is not the blow but the injustice in it, when such is the case.

Charity voting is an enormous expense to applicants' friends, a burdensome labour, and a tedious delay. Were the money spent on getting votes given to the charities, it would be better used. The efforts of some reformers to get each case settled on its own merits by the managing committee, deserve all encouragement. That there will be occasional mistakes, and that there will be need of constant vigilance in order to prevent abuses and favouritism, is certain; but these disadvantages are nothing when compared with those of canvassing.

The Manchester Guardian throws much light upon the character and the ways of our modern navvy. He can read; he has a kind heart for all men of his own class; he is generous in aiding those who are poor and out of work; he is courteous to ladies when they chance to come in his way; he is attached to his "Parson Slasher," or his "Parson Ganger," the gentleman who is the head of the Navvy Mission. Now that most of the 20,000 navvies who have worked at the Manchester Ship Canal have departed, the people of the district are sorry to lose them. Surely we have here a remarkable testimony to the labours of such workers as Miss Marsh and Lady Hope. The word of God does not return to Him void.

It struck us as a remarkable fact, when we had the pleasure of hearing a Christian worker among actors and actresses, that in every case where anyone following that profession was converted, he or she left the stage and sought some work more congenial to the new-born life. Quite as remarkable, on the other side, is the desire of many professing Christians to go to the theatre. What conclusion are we to draw? That the converted actors do not know what a useful profession they are leaving? or that the professing Christians do not know what an injurious pleasure they are permitting themselves? One would suppose that he who has walked the stage knows better than an outsider what a theatre is when judged by a Christian standard.

The advocacy of theatre-going is maintained by a contemporary, who calls hell a "theological locality." This will be a delightful piece of writing for the young men and women who are more anxious to serve God and pleasure than God alone. Strange to say, this paper has the following curious illustration in defence of its position:—

> But if the Puritan, by the force of logic and of life, is driven to accept the theatre as he accepts the army and the navy, the institution in its turn will have to reckon with him. If he comes into the concern it will not be as a sleeping or irresponsible partner. He will carry into it his conscience and his ideals. That conscience which in the army is putting down State-regulated vice, and in the navy is working to make Jack an abstainer, will inevitably make its force felt in the world behind the curtain.

Now this paper utterly refused to give the least aid towards abolishing State regulation of vice in England. A different style of Christianity than the theatre nourishes, is needed for such hard work as attacking these gigantic and terrible sins.

The influence of Christianity over women was one of the first things which led the more thoughtful Pagans of the earliest times to believe that the Gospel would destroy the old faith. They knew that husbands, fathers, and sons would come under it in the home, and that no efforts of the advocates of heathenism could withstand this persuasive teaching. Julian attributed the failure of his scheme for bringing Antioch back to heathenism to the influence of Christian women over their male relatives. We have not yet exhausted this rich vein of the influence of women. How many of our societies might be immensely strengthened by the admission of women to their management? Some of the best are greatly indebted to women for their success. Let others follow their example.

In an address on social purity, delivered at Montreal, Rev. Dr. Douglas asserts that as surely as the Indians are dying out of the west, the great New England race is dying out of the east. To prove this he points to the fact that 100 families in Worcester, Nashawa, and Fall River, record 750 children; 100 families in West Boston have 55 children; 100 families in West Montreal have 300 children; whereas 100 families amid the proletaria of the East-end [of Montreal] have 800 children. He thinks that "the outcasts of Europe and the inferior races of this continent are going, in two generations, to possess the land." If the Puritanic race is, according to Dr. Douglas, dying of social vice, it can be no loss; and the other races may show themselves more worthy of life. "The first shall be last, and the last first."

Preparations for the International Workmen's Exhibition, to be held in Milan next year, are, we see, proceeding apace. The Exhibition will bring together some of the ablest and most intelligent workmen from all countries. Cannot this occasion be laid hold upon by Christians, as the Chicago Exhibition was laid hold upon by Mr. Moody, for the diffusion of the Gospel? The Bible Society, the Evangelical Continental Society, the Peace Society, etc., will have a golden opportunity of influencing the leaders of the working men with Christian truth. Salvation may, by the grace of God, be brought to many a house.

Jonathan Dymond says in his valuable essays on the Principles of Morality:—

> He who sets no other limit to his possessions or accumulations than inability or indisposition to obtain more, does not conform to the will of God. Assuredly, if any specific thing is declared by Christianity to be highly likely to obstruct our advancement in goodness, and to endanger our final felicity, against that thing, whatever it be, it is imperative for us to guard with wakeful solicitude. And, therefore, without affirming that no circumstance can justify a great accumulation of property, it may safely be concluded, that far the greater number of those who accumulate it do wrong; nor do I see any reason to be deterred from ranking the distribution of a portion of great wealth, or a refusal to accumulate it, amongst the imperative duties which are imposed by the moral law.

A wise word against "the gospel of getting on."

"An Aggressive Believer" suggests in the columns of The Independent that the London Missionary Society should open a room in some central place in London, to which Christians could go at any hour from six a.m. to ten p.m. to pray for the success of missionary work. There ought to be no difficulty in obtaining a room, when we think of all the chapels and churches which are closed from Monday till Saturday. Provided the spirit of prayer be felt, there might be a constant stream of supplicants; but London is a terribly busy place, and gives small leisure to any who either frequent or occasionally visit its streets. It would be a satisfaction to see the suggestion succeed. But the provision of a room is not the first thing. The desire for prayer would soon lead to the providing of a room.

It was in 1843 that Robert Murray M'Cheyne entered into his rest. Few men have left a sweeter fragrance behind them. He was only twenty-nine years old, yet what a storehouse of holy thought is in his written words, what a wealth of experience is in his letters and in the sentences which fell from his lips! No one can read his "Memoir" without feeling that he is in the light of burning holiness and absorbing love. In a paper called "Personal Reformation" he has, among many precious passages, these words: "I ought to study the Comforter more—his Godhead, his love, his almightiness. I have found by experience that nothing sanctifies me so much as meditating on the Comforter, as John xiv. 16. And yet how seldom I do this!"

Few books search the heart like M'Cheyne's, and yet one feels that he is so truly like ourselves in infirmity and failures. "And yet how seldom I do this!" He knew where help was to be found, but was conscious of not sufficiently using it. So are all who long for a higher life. He says:—

> I feel persuaded that if I could follow the Lord more deeply myself, my ministry would be used to make a deeper impression than it has yet done.

Even in his dying delirium he spoke the wisdom of God: "Mind the text, 1 Cor. xv. 58. 'Be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.'" He dwelt with much emphasis on the last clause, "For as much as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." With uplifted hands, as if in the attitude of pronouncing the benediction, he ended his life. May the Head of the Church give us many like him!

What is the secret of patience in well-doing? To know that God has called us to our work, and not that we have undertaken it of our own motion or fancy. Also to know that because He has called us He will not allow us to fail. And failure and success, to such as labour for God and by the grace of God, are not determined always by outward signs. We knew a consecrated minister called to a very corrupt church, who set to work at once to cleanse the place. When he had done this he was called to other service, and then another minister came and filled his place, and great good was done. Jesus cleansed the Temple at the beginning of his ministry; He cleansed it also a second time just before the end of his ministry. Dust and cobwebs soon accumulate in a room; impurities of all sorts soon accumulate in churches. We must be always at work.

BRAZIL.—In an "occasional paper" on the work of Pastor Fanstone in Brazil, we learn that the revolution has involved the people in much suffering. We make a brief extract:—"Up to the last accounts, the believers on both sides of Rio harbour have been preserved from personal injury, though loss has been suffered from the destruction of property. We also thank God that these sad events in the south in no way hinder the work of Mr. M'Call in Pernambuco. Indeed, even as regards the work about Rio, letters written in the midst of the sounds of war tell of encouraging meetings in inland towns, which are reached as easily as before. In one of those most recently entered for evangelistic work, Bangú (two and a-half hours distant from Rio by rail (gatherings are reported in the last letters to hand of over fifty interested hearers." Mr. Fanstone would be glad to receive invitations to address meetings on Brazil and its needs. The Mission Council is in correspondence with candidates whose hearts' desire is to labour for the Lord in Brazil, but as yet the funds do not permit a rapid onward movement. Communications to Mr. Fanstone should be addressed, care of Mrs. R. R. Kalley, Campo Verde, Tipperlinn-road, Edinburgh.

Part-sight.

Part-sight is the condition, at least in certain connections, of all the people of God. Our knowledge at farthest is but a part-knowledge, "We know in part and we prophesy in part." There are few subjects, if any, which our plumb-line has explored throughout. Even in the words of life best known to us, to which we can append our T and P—tried and proved—knowledge must yield to faith; for our history does not exactly repeat itself; and altered circumstance, and, above all, the process of becoming in ourselves, develope meanings and applications that we wist not of. It is the infirmity of knowledge, very largely, that furnishes sea-room for faith. Had Job thoroughly penetrated the secret of his trial, he would not, it is true, have known the fluctuations of experience which he betrays. But, on the other hand, faith would not have been called to the rescue, nor would the darkness have been glorified by hope's far-reaching beam. As it is, it is the sight only in part that draws out and exercises the measure of grace which he has. Even so to-day. God trains us, not by lifting us out of limitation, but by making the limitation that we feel subservient to the exercise of grace and the development of faith.

There is, therefore, quite as much kindness shown in what God hides, for the time being, from his children, as in what He reveals to them. Be thankful for the sight given; but be thankful also for the limit which He has set to it. Faith is in training now; it will have its reward in terms of sight by-and-by. But meanwhile the sacred nursling must grow, precious faith must fructify and expand; like the almond tree, it has to yield buds, blossom, and fruit, and for this, part-sight is called for. As the sun must set to bring out the stars, so knowledge must pale that faith may trim her lamp and shine.

In speaking of Part-sight as the occasion of faith, we must not forget the reverse side of it, and the part which this plays as the occasion of fear. David reveals the snare incident to part-sight in his hasty exclamation, "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul." Such-like conclusions are part of the small change in which most of us deal. They are more than "lapsus linguæ," or slips of the tongue; they are obscurations of faith itself. The sight, which after all is but in part, has, for the moment, such terror lodged in it that we forget or refuse, in the energy of faith, to look beyond and above. Hence the need of adding to faith, courage. We suppose we have seen a ghost, and cry out in fear. But why fear? Who can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord? Can that barque sink that carries a greater than Cæsar and his fortunes? Part-sight may bristle with foes, and oppositions, and dangers; nevertheless let faith courageously step forward. It is not necessary to awake the Master. He is more awake than we are.

"O fearful! O faithless!" in mercy He cries,
"My promise, my truth, are they light in thine eyes?
Still, still I am with thee, my promise shall stand,
Through tempest and tossing I'll bring thee to land."

The subject of Part-sight has yet another aspect. In addition to the part-sight of knowledge or of sense, there is the part-sight that is due to the verifying faculty of faith itself. There is a knowledge which faith quarries for itself, a sight which it acquires. True, this sight is only in part; it does not go all the way. But it has this twofold advantage, that it never tends to raise terror but always to allay it; and, in the second place, the sight gained serves as a whet-stone to stimulate to further acquisition. If faith be in exercise it will have a present reward in verification. It will add to knowledge, and add to it in such a way as needs no revision, only amplification; while, in the process, it will open springs in the desert, and distil God's own peace on the heart. An ounce of this part-knowledge is worth a ton of the learning of the schools; and those are the true doctors of divinity who are well versed here. "It is wonderful," cried Louis Harms, the founder of the Hermannsburg Mission, "when one has nothing, and 10,000 crowns are laid in his hand by the dear Lord." But that matter of wonder was so often repeated in reply to the faith of Harms, that it speedily constituted the regular law of demand and supply. And this is only one application, out of many, of this aspect of Part-sight. If it is sweet to know of his bountiful care, whose are the cattle on a thousand hills, how much sweeter to know Himself, to see his face and live, yea, to eat and drink with Him! Here also faith is a merchantman acquiring goodly pearls. Faith developes and enlarges the knowledge of Christ considered in Himself, and in doing this supplies the spur to richer acquisitions; so that the soul, as in Paul's case, is ever on the stretch of expanding desire and on the wing of further exploration —"that I may know Him." It is this Part-sight that is heaven's earnest; it is this Part-knowledge that is glory's coin; for love enfolds it, and what love keeps, not even death itself can take away. Love is stronger than death, and the knowledge that faith wins, though it be but in part, love assimilates for ever.

James Douglas.

Brixton, S.W.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

I have lately had the privilege of visiting many mission halls in connection with the McAll Mission in France, and I think it may interest some of your readers to hear something of the work of the Lord carried on in them. My first visit was to Capecure, Boulogne, where I was much struck with the attention and deep interest displayed by the poor fisherfolk, who eagerly listened to the truth of the Gospel preached by M. Mabboux. A meeting for children, held the next morning in the same hall, when fifty-two were present, was intensely interesting. A father, mother, and five children were present to receive a family Bible as a souvenir on leaving Boulogne.

In Paris I found the meetings very well attended. In some of the halls the large proportion of men present was most gratifying, but nothing interested me more than the children's meetings, held on Sunday and Thursday afternoons (the latter the children's holiday). On the afternoon of October 15, I had the pleasure of attending the Sunday-school at the Rue St. Antoine; 137 children were present, and after the usual lessons by the teachers Rev. C. Greig gave them an admirable lesson, using a blackboard to illustrate his subject. In the interval between the Sunday-school and the evangelistic service we sat down to tea in an adjoining room with between twenty-five and thirty teachers, who had themselves been pupils in the Sunday-schools, and were now endeavouring to lead the little ones to Jesus. One of the most striking of the meetings was the gathering of the Christian Endeavour Society in the beautiful hall in the Rue Rivoli. About 300 people were present, and addresses were given by Pastor Theodore Monod and Rev. C. Greig. Hymns and sacred music were sung by a choir of young girls, themselves the fruit of the Mission, and young men from Mr. Greig's church at Bercy. There was also some excellent instrumental music. Mr. and Miss Brown, to whom this hall is much indebted for their indefatigable work, took part in the proceedings.

If space permitted, I would gladly describe the meetings of the Medical Mission, where the Gospel is preached on each occasion to the patients while waiting to have their bodily wants attended to. The Mission sadly needs more lady workers, as three or four are absent owing to ill-health, and two have left Paris owing to advancing years.

Finch White, Colonel.

4, Trafalgar-square, Charing Cross, W.C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION,

The following editorial notes from the December issue of China's Millions will be read with interest:—

We look back at God's goodness, and at many signal mercies received during the year, and feel constrained to praise Him. Hundreds of souls have been saved in China; many have testified to blessing through our meetings held at home and through our publications, and we have been prospered in more ways than we can here enumerate.

The way in which funds have been supplied in answer to prayer, from month to month, has strengthened our hearts; outfits and passages, too, have been provided as the need has required; and safe journeys out and home have been vouchsafed in answer to many petitions. Many difficulties and hindrances have been removed, and we look forward hopefully, and are seeking guidance as to a definite forward movement in the coming year! Will our readers ask specially that we may be guided?

The work at this time urgently needs a hundred men—men of unreserved consecration, men who mean to live for Christ and not for self, for eternity and not for time, men who are full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, who feel that Christ is worthy, and who are utterly devoted to Him.

Our dear brother Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner thinks that we should pray definitely for two hundred such men; and who that takes part in the consecration meetings at Keswick and elsewhere can doubt that Britain has the men, and would be blessed in giving them? Personally, however, we feel that we must wait upon God for fuller light as to the exact form that our forward movement should take. When we sought for "the seventy," we were so assured of the will of God that we were able to praise Him for them before we wrote to England to ask for them. And when we appealed for a hundred workers in a single year, we knew before the year began that we had the petition, and the additional £10,000 necessary for outfits, passage-money, and first year's support, while as yet none of it was given.

We now see with joy God's hand preparing for greater things. A kind friend desiring to assist us in building without delay our Missionary Home, and also the new offices so urgently needed, wished to put money at our disposal at a low rate of interest for the purpose; we have thus been enabled to begin, and the excavators are already at work. The building will contain a large prayer-meeting room, and rooms that will be used for the present as offices; besides a residential part for the accommodation of returned missionaries and of candidates. We are now erecting only three-fourths of the proposed building, but believe that the Lord will in his own good time supply what is requisite for the whole.

When this building is completed and occupied we shall have room for an enlarged number of candidates, as well as for the returned missionaries, and also facilities for carrying on together the various branches of the Home work more efficiently than is now possible. Furniture to the value of some hundreds of pounds has already been promised. There will be over thirty bedrooms.

A few years ago the Lord graciously gave us, without cost to the Mission, ample premises in Shanghai, and immediately sent us reinforcements that could not have been received and cared for without them. We now see a great need in China, and an early possibility here of being ready for what the Lord shall have in store for us.

Several of our earnest and successful workers are about coming home on furlough, and others are now at home. There are many parts of the country which we have hitherto been unable to visit. The story of the Mission cannot be told without spiritual profit as well as deep interest. We should be glad to hear from any friends who would assist us in arranging for meetings.

"WHERE WILL TEACHER BE?"—The telling narrative with this title, which appeared in our columns recently, and for copies of which in separate form there were many inquiries, is now published as a leaflet by Mr. G. Stoneman, 21, Warwick-lane, E.C., price 1s. 6d. per 100.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXVI.

THE IMAGE, THE MARK, AND THE NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

There remain still three particulars foretold in this marvellous prophecy concerning the wild beast from the sea which need to be examined. And these three are of immense importance.

The identification of the monstrous symbol with Rome has been, it is submitted, most exhaustive. The facts of history have corresponded to every prediction of the Scriptures of truth. But the portrait is not yet complete. Three further and most striking points are noticed in conclusion; the last of them is preceded by the emphatic call of the Spirit, "Here is wisdom"; and they combine in supplying the crowning proof that in the two wild beasts, the first and the second, we have the divinely-drawn picture of the great Antichrist, which, during the long centuries specified, has exercised the terrible power "given unto him" by the enemy, and permitted by the all-wise providence of God.

These three points are the Image of the beast, the Mark of the beast, and the Number of his name. The wildest and most fanciful interpretations, some of them sensational and extravagant to the last degree, have been given of these particulars in the prophecy. Forgetfulness of the symbolic character of the Revelation, and a consequent attempt to prove a literal interpretation (though resulting in the greatest anomalies and contradictions), together with an ignoring of the facts of history, which is but prophecy read backward, must be regarded as mainly responsible for the strange, and, alas! delusive schemes of Apocalyptic Exposition which have obtained such currency in these last days. And, all the while, the key is in our hands.

The image of the beast. Literally understood, it might indeed be expected that something like the golden image set up on the plains of Dura would be constructed, and miraculously endowed with life and power of speech. But if the "image" is to be construed literally, then must "the beast" be similarly expounded. And I am not aware that even the most literal of latter-day interpreters have gone to the length of teaching that a real seven-headed, ten-horned wild beast is to appear from the sea, or the abyss. All agree that it is a symbolic expression, whether denoting an individual or a system. Similarly, then, must "the image" be understood. The expression is symbolic. It is not an actual image which is to be looked for, but that which the term describes.

Now, an image is a representation of something else. If, then, the first wild beast be Rome in its various aspects, territorial, political, and ecclesiastical, the image of that Antichristian system or power must be that which is representative thereof.

And what is it that represents a people, a political organisation, or a church? It is a representative assembly. Thus the people of Great Britain are represented by Parliament, the Church of England (however inadequately) by Convocation. And in like manner has the Church of Rome, or Roman Catholic Christendom, been represented by Œcumenical Councils, i.e., Councils consisting of deputies from the oikoumenē, or inhabited world ("the dwellers on the earth"). The image of the beast—that is, the representation of Rome Catholic—is, then, the Council. Such, indeed, was the description given of those assemblies by Tertullian, who called them "the very representation of the whole Christian body," and Gibbon speaks of the Provincial Synods, the precursors of the œcumenical gatherings, as having been founded on the model of the representative councils of Greece. Or, to quote the language of more recent days, we find that, alluding to the House of Commons, as reconstituted by the Reform Bill of 1832, a leading statesman spoke of it as "the real and express image and representation of the country." In the ancient councils themselves the deputies were declared to be "the image" of them that sent them. And in the graphic description of the Œcumenical Council held at Rome in 1869, which appeared in The Times, it was said that "never had there been a gathering that approached so near to a representation of Christendom as this."

Now, as we have seen that the second wild beast prefigured the Papal hierarchy as the subservient administrators of the Papacy itself, so we learn that the invitations to a General Council were communicated by the archbishops, bishops, abbots, deans, chapters, presbyters, and convents. Thus it was the false prophet, or body of false teachers by whom Rome ruled the world, who said "to them that dwelt on the earth that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword and did live" (Rev. xiii, 14).

But not only was the image to be made; it was also to speak. That is, this representative assembly was to issue decrees and to pass and promulgate laws which were to bind all to obedience under the most heavy penalties.

According to Canon Mozley, "the Romans say that a Council is without form and void, till the Pope give it order, life, and law." And it was the votes of the assembled clerical representatives of Christendom, ratified by their head, the Pope, that gave the utterances of the Council their binding force. Its edicts, or general decisions, then became canons. The Council was said to have "spoken." Thus was it when, at the Lateran Council of 1869, between the terrific rolls of thunder that shook the mighty structure, and amid the thick darkness that filled it, the successive "Placets" of the Romish hierarchy affirmed and promulgated the blasphemous dogma of Papal Infallibility. The Image spoke.

And the Mark of the beast. How are we to understand it? It was the common practice at the time of St. John, and, indeed, both long before and long after, for slaves, soldiers, and devotees of this or that heathen god to have certain marks of appropriation imprinted on them; such marks being generally on the forehead or the hand, and consisting of either the name or characteristic emblem of the master or the god, or of the particular god's hieroglyphic number. Thus Roman slaves were marked, or "stigmatised" on their foreheads, and Roman soldiers bore the Emperor's name or mark imprinted on the hand. And the practice exists even at the present day, when soldiers bear on headdress or shoulder the number or symbol of the corps to which they belong, and servants wear on their livery their master's crest or family sign. The mark denoted appropriation on the one side and allegiance on the other.

We are not, therefore, to understand the expression in a literal sense. As in the case of "the beast," and "the image," "the mark" is a symbol. We find the same symbol employed in the next vision, where the redeemed of the Lord are seen, with the Lamb on Mount Zion, "having his Father's name written in their foreheads." In that case it denotes not only appropriation and allegiance, but also resemblance in character, or what we call family likeness; and we are taught that the followers of Christ are like Christ.

So here the mark in the forehead or the right hand signifies the claim of the great Antichrist, whose image, or representative body of Œcumenical Councils, speaks and issues decrees to the absolute and entire possession, as his votaries, of the deluded multitudes who have acknowledged, and still do acknowledge his usurped and blasphemous authority. It describes the willing, yea, the slavish surrender of brain and will, of hand and heart, the abnegation of the right of private judgment, the making over of soul and conscience to the keeping of the Satanic power which energizes the fearful system, by all who, not receiving the love of the truth, believe the lie, the greatest and most seductive as well as destructive lie, because of its marvellous counterfeit of the truth, that has ever been forged.

Yes! destructive indeed; for upon the devotees of the beast and his image, the receivers of his mark in forehead and hand, the indignation of a justly offended God is visited. They shall drink the unmixed wine of his wrath, who have willingly drunk of the wine of the fornication of the great apostasy (cf. ch. xiv. 10, with ch. xviii. 8). For again is it written that "the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." On them that "had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image" is to fall the terrible judgment set forth under the first of the seven last plagues of the wrath of God (ch. xvi. 2). And it is they who have "not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither have received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands"—the faithful and steadfast witnesses of Jesus—of whom it is said that "they lived and reigned with Christ athousand years." From this terrible and world-wide delusion, from the acceptance of Romish error in any shape or form, and from that adultery with the world which she and her harlot daughters have so fatally promoted and spread, "Good Lord, deliver us!"

The dire decrees of excommunication, the interdicts on monarchs and subjects "small and great, rich and poor, free and bond," whosoever attempted to assert spiritual or even bodily independence of Romish rule, are too well known to require to be dwelt upon here. Striking illustrations of the tyrannical engine of "exclusive dealing," wielded by priestly power, are occurring even in the present days and under our very eyes.

Lastly, what is the Number of the beast? "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is, Six hundred threescore and six."

Passing by the number of ingenious interpretations which have been given, some more or less plausible, some fanciful, and others wild and even ridiculous, we may, I believe, accept that suggested so early as the second century by Irenæus, the disciple of Polycarp, who was the disciple of the Seer of Patmos.

It is a human name, for it is "the number of a man." It denotes the geographical, the political, the ecclesiastical entity signified by the monster from the sea, for it is "the number of the beast." The Greek numerals consisting of the letters of the alphabet, a proper name must be sought for, the numerical value of whose constituent letters shall amount to 666. Such a name is to be found—the name or number of a man, for it is a proper name in the masculine gender—the very name of the power above described—in the word Λατεινος—Latinus, or "the Latin man," the letters of which make up the enigmatical number, as follows:—λ=30, α=1, τ=300, ε=5, ι=10, ν=50, ο=70, ς=200; total, 666.

Concerning this name, Irenæus observes that "it seems very probable; for this is a name of the last of Daniel's kingdoms; they being Latins that now reign." And Hippolytus, the disciple of Irenæus, says, "It is manifest to all that they who now reign are Latins, and the name transmuted into that of an individual becomes Λατεινος." Of the first three great world-empires, Daniel gives the names, Babylon, Persia, Greece. The fourth, Rome, is not named. Here it is supplied, in an enigma. We have counted its number, and find it to be Latin, that is ROMAN.

And how striking is the fulfilment. But a few centuries after Irenæus, the name of Latin began to be regularly applied by writers like Jerome, and in Papal Bulls and Conciliar Edicts, to the kingdoms of the Western Roman Empire. And Gibbon adopts it as their distinctive appellation after the division of the Empire into Eastern and Western. So that the term became the peculiar title of the fourth and last great earthly power, in both its territorial and its ecclesiastical aspect. It was the Latin world, the Latin kingdoms, the Latin Church, the Latin patriarch, the Latin clergy, the Latin councils. All was Latinized. Mass, prayers, hymns, litanies, canons, decretals, bulls, were all conceived and couched in Latin. The Papal councils spoke in Latin. Priests and people prayed and still pray in Latin, witness the Breviary, the Mass, the Paternoster, the Ave Maria, etc. The Scriptures were read only in Latin. In short, all was Latin. Six hundred threescore and six was, and still is, the hieroglyphic, the enigmatical number, of the great Antichrist, the wild beast from the abyss.

Thus have we traced the predicted character and career of the fourth and greatest of the bestial powers, or world-empires, shown first to Daniel in Babylon, and then revealed in fuller detail to John in Patmos. We have seen the marvellously accurate fulfilment of the Divine prefiguration in the events recorded by history. And it may well be asked whether it is possible for prophetic delineation, in the mysterious language of symbol, and historical fact to correspond more closely? Granted that mistakes have frequently been made, and that in a natural anxiety to discover exact fulfilments, interpreters have now and again been betrayed into far-fetched expositions, yet, taken as a whole, it is submitted that the key of history has, with a most extraordinary fitness, opened the many-warded lock of prophecy. Symbol and thing signified, heraldic emblem and actual fact, details of events that were to come to pass, features geographical, political, and ecclesiastical, have all combined to present to view hat monstrous, weird, and Satanic portent which he second sign exhibited to the Apostle.

Here, then, this vision concludes. Some further ention of the actors in those scenes of the pro-hetic drama represented in chapters xii. and xiii. made later in the book.

The Parliament of Religions.—4.

ORIENTAL CRITICISMS.

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

Some of our Oriental friends came to the Parliament evidently big with a purpose. It was not to consider the claims of Christianity upon the nations, or to find a common basis of religion; but to demolish Christianity by exposing its frightful inconsistencies, its organised wickedness, what they considered its utter inhumanity, and its general inferiority to the faith of the Brahmin and the Buddhist. The two champions were the Buddhist priest, Dharamapala, and the Hindu monk, Vivakanadra.

These Oriental strictures and criticisms have found their way into both the secular and religious press of Great Britain. Except in one instance I have not noticed that any Christian writer has taken note of them. Lest silence should be taken as consent, I venture now to notice them and make some remarks anent them.

These gentlemen called my courtesy in question in the Parliament because I ventured to answer them there; they suggested that it was most unchristian to refer to the shady sides of Oriental religions in a Parliament where it was supposed that no words save those of "softness" and "kindness were to be uttered," forgetting that they themselves were the first to "break the peace" by their attacks upon Christianity.

I do not think it is a matter of regret that these Oriental gentlemen broke out upon us as they did, inasmuch as it has afforded an admirable opportunity to put some matters right. I may say in this connection, that while upon the whole the members of the Parliament maintained a wonderful spirit of patience and charity throughout towards each other, the Christian portion of the assembly was called upon to exercise its grace in this direction more largely than those members of other faiths, who were in a sense our guests, and who seemed to feel it was a part of their mission to "show up" the inconsistencies, and even wickedness, of the followers of Christ. Christian missionaries and scholars in the East were openly charged with hypocrisy, violence, dishonesty, and deliberate misrepresentation of the faiths of the Orient. We must suppose, in charity, that the general accusations were made in ignorance rather than in malice, and so in the main we let them pass. But there were a few things said which in the interests of truth and righteousness call for remark.

I.—AS TO CHRISTIAN IGNORANCE AND PREJUDICE.

The Buddhist Dharamapala, in the very opening of the Parliament, treated us to a fiery and eloquent speech, in which he charged Christians with being ignorant of the religious literature of the East, and yet presumptuous and prejudiced enough to sit in judgment upon a faith of which they could know nothing. In a very dramatic passage he challenged the members of the Parliament, and the vast audience gathered to hear his address, as to their knowledge of the Bible of Buddha. In substance he cried out: "How many of you here present have ever read the Bible of Buddha? Show your hands! Let us see how well qualified you are to judge of the faith of Buddha," etc. After repeating the challenge there were five hands uplifted. This meagre show of hands seemed to electrify him. He appealed to the audience to know if, out of so great a company (say three thousand) only five persons could be found who had read the writing ascribed to Buddha, it was at all competent for Western people to pass any judgment upon that faith?

In answer to this I would only remark that it was a wonder to me that so many as five were found who could say that they had read the vast tomes of literature which make up the Buddhist Bible. It does not follow, however, that the greater portion of the three thousand present were not acquainted with the substance of the teaching of Buddha, or the underlying philosophy of Buddhism. The great mass of Buddhists and Hindus are illiterate, and themselves totally ignorant of the writings of their sages, and few of the priests either of the Hindu or Buddhist faith are familiar with their writings. The further fact is, that though many of the young priests are required to read certain portions of their sacred books, and memorise them so that they can recite many passages off by rote, few of these, though so well drilled in the letter, have any idea of the meaning. I have myself talked with many Brahmin and Buddhist priests concerning their Scriptures, asking them to translate to me or explain to me what the meaning was of that which they were reciting. Almost invariably I was told that it was a passage from the writings of Buddha or one of the Vedas. They did not know the meaning; it was incapable of translation; and the merit lay, not in the understanding, but simply in the recitation of the words.

More than one educated Brahmin has told me that the Hindu is vastly indebted to the Christian missionary for a knowledge of his own religious faith, especially in so far as a literary knowledge of it is concerned. Until the Christian missionary inaugurated educational methods, and searched out and translated the lost and buried literature of the East, the great mass of the people, and even the Brahmins themselves, were sunken in the deepest and darkest superstitions of their idol-worship, knowing little or nothing of the teachings of their ancient philosophers and religious sages.

II.—THE CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

It was the monk Vivakanadra who arraigned Christianity for its 'crimes, for its vice and immoralities; who professed horror at the violence, bloodshed, and general wickedness of the propagators of the Gospel; who charged them with coming with a sword in one hand to kill and destroy, and a Bible in the other to convert the mild and gentle, the pure and spotless Hindus to the gross, carnal, and drunken habits of the Christians. The acts of so-called Christian Governments, in their war of conquest against the gentle Orientals; their inhumanity in forcing opium and alcoholic liquors upon an unwilling and innocent people; the battle, war, and spoil waged by Western nations, were all charged upon Christianity. The drunkenness, immorality, and violence visible and open to view in Western Christian lands were all alleged to be a part and parcel of Christianity and a direct result of the religion of Christ.

What is to be said to all this? First.—That the unrighteous acts of Government are in no sense a product of Christianity. There is no such thing as a Christian Government, in the sense that the State is directed and its actions authorised by the Church of Christ. Every war of conquest, every oppressive act of Government, every iniquity, such as the opium trade, the liquor traffic, the legalisation of vice, and such like things, are the objects of sternest protest by the Church of Christ in all lands. These are not only acts outside the pale of Christianity, but acts committed in the face of Christian protest. What Christian missionary ever went forth to heathen lands to conquer the people to the Christian faith by the help of the sword or any other carnal weapon? What Christian missionary ever enforced either the opium or the liquor traffic? What Christian missionary was ever tolerated by any missionary society if he himself were a drunkard, an opium-eater, an unclean person, or one who did any violence to the people to whom he was sent with a message of Christ?

Second.—The drunkenness, the violence, the immoralities, the depredation seen in the cities and countries called Christian, are all outside Christianity, and are the sins and crimes against which the whole Christian ministry lifts its voice in the name of God and Christ. The victims of these sins are they to whom the Gospel of forgiveness, regeneration, and sanctification are directed. As well charge upon the medical profession responsibility for smallpox, cholera, yellow fever, and leprosy, as to charge these worst works of the flesh upon the Gospel of Christ, who came to seek and save men from their sins.

Moreover, these Oriental friends seem to have entirely overlooked a fact which, according to their systems, they can hardly understand: that Christianity stands in the individuality of faith, and not in national and race communities. Christianity is a selective and elective system. A man is not a Christian because he is born in a country where Christianity is the dominant faith. All men are born sinners, and if one becomes a Christian he becomes so as a matter of personal conviction and choice. The non-believing and non-Christ-confessing and Christ-living man is as much outside the pale of Christianity as any man born in heathendom. On the other hand, a man born of Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan parents and inducted into the rites of these faiths, is Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan, whatever his life or character may be. The answer to this is, that there are good Hindus and bad Hindus. It is not so with Christianity. There may be good and better Christians, but there are no bad Christians. No drunkard, no liar, no whoremonger, no thief, no murderer, can be at the same time a Christian. So that the criticism of the Orientals upon the wickedness of wicked people in Christian countries falls to the ground.

The Evangelist.

"A BROKEN AND A CONTRITE HEART."

By Rev. T. G. Selby.*

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." That truth gets into the affections, and puts mystic fire at their service. "I am He that blotteth out thine iniquities for my name's sake." That discovers a sensitive point in our moral structure, and makes it thrill again. We have no scientific intimation of the fact that "He telleth the number of the stars.' The experimental proof of a conception like that is beyond us. But there is a strange responsive movement at the centre of our being when we read that "He bindeth up the broken in heart and healeth all their wounds." Science fails to track God as He moves to and fro in the expanse of the ages, spreading out the realms of infinite time as a curtain for his habitation. But a blessed and a conscious experience is called up within us as we read that "He dwells with the humble and the contrite."

This is a mystery of condescension, but it is a self-consistent mystery. The revival and homeward return of the life that came from God is the clue to this enigma of pity and gentleness. It is no slight thing to recover and restore that life. By this inhabitation of contrite hearts the Eternal will add at least a new kingdom to the high and holy place where He is enshrined. Through his redeeming visitations of the sons of men, He will educe God-glorifying qualities of love unknown before even there. From those to whom He so strangely bows Himself, He will attract a devotion of which those never needing a Saviour may be incapable. "We love Him because He first loved us"—true for angels, but uniquely true for us.

In the first pang of sorrow, in the first blush of shame, in the cry of relenting that comes up out of the discords of human rebellion, in the bitter sense of weakness, frailty, failure, God comes near, and possesses the heart with his healing love, as expressly as He fills the high and holy place. If you are poor in spirit, humble, abject, expect his instant indwelling. He comes to the penitent man or woman who mourns apart, as well as to the collective Israel.

Remember what a sacred thing contrition is. God broods in its earliest forms. Do not despise it, either in yourselves or others. Never say it is unmanly vacillation, as you see how mistaken you have been, and confess for the hundredth time the sin that still cleaves to you. All this is the first step of a process that culminates in the enthronement of God within you, and heralds a new advent. God is as truly present in the first sigh, in the speechless, sin-forsaking vow, in the home-look of the prodigal, as before the mercy-seat. He comes to religious life in its lowliest forms. "We are saved by faith," but the Presence that makes faith saving enters the opening heart long before penitence has matured into faith. You have not to wait for an afflatus of Divine power, which will make your faith saving. If you mourn for sin, God is with and in you, and the faith you put forth will be God-helped. Dost thou mourn for sin, however faintly? Blessed art thou, for thou shalt be comforted. Sorrow is godly if He be in it, and shall work life through Him. Oh, the reviving power of his indwelling! Sorrow shall be lifted into rejoicing faith, and faith shall be so richly illumined by the God who shines upon it, that it shall not be less than sight, but more.

* From a sermon entitled, "God in the Soul," contained in The Lesson of a Dilemma, and other Sermons. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Priesthood—False and True.

By Mr. J. E. MATHIESON.

The world has been familiarised with the idea of priesthood from very early ages. Men in vestments, divinely prescribed or of human invention, have been set apart, or have set themselves apart, to offer sacrifice and to stand as mediators between God and men. Both in the Jewish dispensation and in pagan lands, priesthood, true or false, has been recognised. How is sin-stricken humanity, in sore need of reconciliation and of mediation, to know what is true and what is false priesthood? The answer can only be found in Holy Writ if it is to satisfy the truth-loving soul; and here we are left in no doubt or uncertainty; for, speaking of the Great High Priest of this present age, the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews declares, "No man taketh the honour unto himself, but when he is called of God, even as was Aaron." So Christ also glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest, but He that spake unto Him—

Thou art My Son,
This day have I begotten Thee:
As He saith also in another place,
Thou art a Priest for ever,
After the order of Melchizedek. (Hebrews v. 4-6.)

If the great High Priest had his credentials—and they are indisputable—how much more must an order of priests professing to serve under Him, furnish us with the authority from which they derive their claim to offer sacrifice or to mediate—an authority to be sought for in the New Testament records? No such authority can be furnished; it is non-existent; and those who assert it and venture to assume priestly functions, unbidden by the Most High, place themselves in extreme peril of the displeasure of a Holy and Jealous God.

Such displeasure was once manifested in the great tragedy which overtook Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, when they presumptuously sought to exercise the functions which were specifically reserved for Aaron and his sons; the rebels against the ordinance of the God of Israel, "with all that appertained to them went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them, and they perished from among the assembly" (Num. xvi. 33).

We have in Christendom, to-day, our modern Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, a confederacy of evil as portentous and as ruinous to those who take part with them, as were these three Israelites, whose end was so disastrous. We refer to the false priesthood of the Roman Church, the Greek Church, and that portion of the Church of England which follows their pernicious ways.

If we search New Testament Scripture, we find under the four terms, "priest," "priests," "high priests," and "priesthood," reference made once to pagan priesthood (Acts xiv. 13), twice to Melchizedek, fifty-two times to the Jewish priesthood, and fifteen times to our Blessed Lord and Saviour. There is not even one suggestion in the Gospels or the Epistles of an order of sacrificing priests having been instituted by our Lord. What purpose indeed could such an order of priests have fulfilled after our Saviour had said (Jno. xvii. 4), "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do," announcing the close of his three years of active ministry; and again (Jno. xix. 30), "It is finished," declaring in the supreme moment of his agony that redemption was complete, and that all the Jewish types, throughout ages of ceaseless sacrifice, were then summed up and brought to an end? Oh! the dishonour put upon this perfect and all-sufficient atonement when rash and presumptuous man dares to imitate or repeat, in whatever fashion, the one spotless Sacrifice of Calvary, and by so doing casts doubt upon its sufficiency to cover the sin of the whole world.

In the pastoral Epistles to Timothy and Titus we seek in vain for any warrant for the notion that there is Apostolic sanction for an order of sacrificing priests; and, what is still more significant, when we scan the list of good and perfect gifts bestowed by our ascended Lord, and twice enumerated (1 Cor. xii. and Eph. iv.), there is not a trace of any word which perverse ingenuity could torture into the equivalent of sacrificing priest. Whatever the exigencies of a corrupt and corrupting Church may have demanded in the appointment of this order of priests, so dishonouring to God, so flattering to the pride and brief authority of sinful man, nothing can be discovered in the New Testament, whether in selected passages or in the whole scope and intention of its inspired pages, to satisfy the man or woman who bows reverently to the utterance "thus saith the Lord," that any order of human priesthood was in the mind of Christ or of his specially chosen Apostles.

It remains for us, however, to mention the true priesthood of all believers, thrice referred to in the Apocalypse (i. 6; v. 10; xx. 6), and in each case associated with the glorious thought of reigning together with Christ; a royal priesthood. Now it is manifest that believers in this age are not yet reigning with Christ; now they are suffering with Christ, but they know they will reign with Him by-and-by, and this hope and the hope of his appearing cheer them amid the trials of this little while. Moreover, we claim the Apostle Peter as having most to say about all the Lord's people being priests (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9), he, too, insisting upon Christ being the only Rock and Foundation.

In the Jewish dispensation the central object of worshippers was an altar of sacrifice with the attendant priest, pointing backwards across all the intervening generations to the beginning of human sin; pointing forwards to the completion of sacrifice in the cross of Christ upon Calvary. In contrast with this the Christian age presents to us not an altar, but a Table, at which the believer looks backward with thanksgiving to that same cross, and the finished work of our adorable Redeemer, and forward to his return in power and great glory. "It is finished" closed the earlier dispensation and ushered in the new, and we can yield no submission to Judaizing teachers in the garb of pseudo-priesthood, whether they be Roman, or Greek, or Anglican in name.

The sacrifices enjoined in the Epistles are very comprehensive indeed, but they have no reference to atonement; they follow, or ought to follow, our acceptance of the reconciliation made by Christ; the sacrifice of our persons, our purses, and our praises; they pre-suppose forgiveness and regeneration. Thus the Apostle Paul writes (Rom. xii. 1), "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." Again (Phil. iv. 18), "I am filled, having received from Epaphroditus the things that came from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God." Once more (Heb. xiii. 15), "Through Him then let us offer a sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of lips which make confession of his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

[This paper may be obtained for distribution from Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co.]

INDIA'S WOMEN.

Nay, tell me not the name of man
To him may rightfully belong
Who would not hasten to the van
Where chivalry fights woman's wrong.

Ye Britons, who forbid the sale
Of sable flesh and savage blood,
How can ye hear unmoved the tale
Of India's outraged womanhood?

O England, hath thy conquest given
The right to traverse God's decree,
'Till swarthy victims cry to heaven
Against thy heartless cruelty?

Ten thousand Christian bosoms burn
With indignation's sevenfold flame,
While Truth's heroic daughters turn
Their search-light on the scenes of shame.

Where, under cover of thy guns,
Within the shrines of sanctioned vice,
Thou dost seduce thy warrior sons
To whoredom's impious sacrifice.

Can this be Britain's law? we ask;
Let blushing statesmen answer, No!
And justice smite, through mail and mask,
The loathsome and nefarious foe.

Till, 'neath our empire's ample shield,
Her daughters find a sure defence,
And men shall rightful honour yield
To woman's virtuous innocence.

Belfast. W. Maxwell.

TAUNTON.—The Gloucester-street Mission, East Peach, Taunton, is a work having many useful features. The evangelist, Mr. Alfred Butcher, enjoys the sympathy and co-operation of many friends. Communications to him may be addressed Quantock View, Taunton.

Aggressive Work.—2.

Somebody asks, Is it not an impertinent thing to stop a stranger and offer him a tract, and ask him if his soul is saved? I don't think so, if done in a polite and respectful manner. Very few would object to your stopping them and offering a £5 note. A dignitary once declined to take a tract from me, saying he required an introduction before taking papers from strangers. We don't need an introduction to save a drowning man. This all-important matter of our soul's salvation often dispenses with the ordinary laws of etiquette, and overrules some of the customs of modern society.

Another asks, "Don't you offend people and do more harm than good?" I know the world says you do, but it is not an authority upon such matters. It is the subject, not the person, that offends, and resentment is usually an evidence that the question has gone home. The harpoon has struck, and only the Great Physician can heal the wound. I have had people apologising weeks afterwards for unkind answers given me.

Unless your words do offend some, you do not really get their attention. There is opposition in their hearts, and when they express it good is done, and their weak place revealed. Oh, these chicken-hearted people, who are always crying out, "Mind you don't do harm"! You cannot do a dead man harm.

Yet another says, "Don't people insult you?" No, not as a rule, although at times they do, because "the carnal mind is enmity against God;" and there are Goths about, therefore we must expect it now and then, for the Master said, "If they have persecuted Me they will also persecute you." Surely we can suffer a little for the loving Saviour who suffered so much for us! But the power in such cases is not in retaliation, but in silence or a kindly answer.

And yet another asks, "Are not these abrupt questions a mistake? Would it not be better to introduce the matter gradually, gently, and cautiously?" There is no reason why this slow and cautious system should not be pursued when thought desirable, and found possible, yet your sphere of operations will be greatly limited if you adopt no other course. The abrupt way opens a much wider field of usefulness, as you can see, and it is really greatly needed, because multitudes are asleep in sin, and only by some uncommon act will they be aroused, humanly speaking. In my judgment nothing is better calculated to arrest their attention and cause serious thought than a sudden question. The great difficulty in Gospel work is in getting men to think seriously.

And still another says, "Is it not very difficult work to do?" Well, as a rule, like most other things, it needs practice, and practice makes perfect, and then to be able to do anything well gives one a liking for it. Some people are born with gifts which others acquire by perseverance.

Someone has said that genius is the faculty for taking pains, and I feel sure a good deal of what we call gift is just the result of determined effort. I was never conscious of having a gift in this direction, for my extreme bashfulness years ago prevented my ever thinking that I could do such work, or make a public speaker of any sort. But we never know what we can do until we try. I quite believe it is "to every man his work," but this special work is undoubtedly the work of a great many who are not doing it, and most of us can do it if we are willing to become fools for the sake of Christ.

No doubt at first we may fail and become disheartened, and perhaps suffer considerably by shame and want of nerve, yet with prayer and trust and perseverance, we shall not fail ultimately. We may feel ashamed, be misunderstood, get perplexed by people's questions, and hurt with their unkind remarks, yet, looking unto Jesus, we must progress and be made a blessing, as well as receive a blessing. Shame troubled me greatly at first, but gradually its power weakened. It is the grandest preparation possible for preaching to the masses, the grandest college training and education; as you learn the difficulties and necessities of men, their reasons, excuses, and errors.

This work need not interfere with other Christian effort we may have in hand; for one can be done, and the other not left undone. We can do it in parenthesis if we like, only let us do it at once, as it is undoubtedly the crying need of the day.

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

DR. BAEDEKER'S SIBERIAN TOUR.

Once more I have reached the Eastern extremity of the Asiatic Continent; after visiting the many prisons in the Russian Empire, proclaiming the glorious Gospel to the many thousands who are kept bound. This has been my third visit to Siberia. In the year 1889 I went as far as Tomsk, and then travelled by the river Volga to the Caspian, and thus to Transcaucasia. In 1890 I travelled all across the Siberian continent, and visited the prison island, Saghalien, and now, three years later, I have accomplished my third visit, and I hope yet to visit Saghalien again in a few days.

Access to the prisons having been granted by high authority in Petersburg, I meet everywhere with a ready reception, and local authorities are generally helpful. It has been my great privilege to carry some gleam of light into many dark, dark hearts, by proclaiming the Gospel of God's grace to sinners of various shades of darkness. One thing is very certain, that not a sound of Gospel truth does ever reach them, and many whom I had spoken to three years ago, remembered my visit with deep gratitude, and welcomed me with gladness. Many of the prisoners had treasured up the books I had given them on that last visit, and in several prisons grateful and glad testimony was given before all the other prisoners to the blessing which they had derived from the books.

The journey through Siberia is long and tedious; European comforts are not to be had; sleeping accommodation and meals are of the most primitive character; yet the mode of travelling by tarantass may be made easy. The hardships one has to endure are accompanied with so much that is cheering and refreshing, that one readily forgets the unpleasant and dangerous incidents. Nature is always refreshing, and Siberian nature has the great charm of being yet in its primeval state, little touched by man. Those who know the great joy that is found in serving the Lord, and in proclaiming his glad tidings to sad and oppressed hearts, will surely appreciate the joyful service in having new congregations of real sinners in every place, and even in every ward; sometimes also hundreds together in the corridor or in the yard eagerly catch the sound of the Gospel which they have never heard before.

Generally speaking, the priests of the Greek Church trouble themselves very little about the prisoners, or, if they pay them visits, it is only to perform a so-called Divine service, which consists in a liturgy and in confession and sacrament,—no preaching or conversation. The prisoners are generally left to themselves or to their companions, and "evil communications corrupt good manners"—the prisons too often prove to be the training school for criminals.

My time is running out: I am now seventy years of age; consequently I can scarcely hope to repeat my visit to Siberia. I therefore wish to stir up the holy ambition of my younger brethren to take up this glorious work of carrying the light into the darkest places of the world, where sin rules over men, and where nothing but the Gospel of redemption by the blood of Jesus can be of any avail.

Our journey by tarantass commenced at Tjumen, where a tarantass was bought for 200 roubles. We travelled to Omsk, Tomsk, Krasnojarsk, Irkutsk, Chita, Nertchinsk, the silver-mining district of Nertchinski-Savod, to Stretinsk, a distance of 4741 versts (equal to 3160 English miles), and we paid for horses and drivers a sum of 370 roubles 60 kopecks (equal to about £37). The tarantass was sold at Stretinsk with a small profit. At Stretinsk the Amoor steamboats start for Blagovestchensk, and from Blagovestchensk for Nikolaevsk. The Amoor Steamboat Company generously granted us free passage on their boats, giving us first-class tickets. The Amoor is a noble river, and may be compared with the Mississippi, only as yet it flows through a waste land of woods and mountains, not inhabited.

At the end of my expedition I can only once more say "Ebenezer," as I have had occasion to say many times before—"hitherto the Lord has helped us!" My faithful companion and interpreter has been a great comfort to me; he will now return to his wife and children in Transcaucasia until he may be called again to enjoy a similar privilege of scattering the seeds of the Gospel in fallow ground.

Through the liberality of the British and Foreign Bible Society, I have been enabled to give Holy Scriptures in various languages to those prisoners who were able to read, the Society supplying the books at a greatly reduced price. The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures generously supplied the funds for acquiring the books, and the agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society have been most helpful in forwarding supplies of books to the localities where they were required.

I gratefully acknowledge the help given us by the prayers of many brethren and sisters who abide at home by the stuff; surely they will be sharers of the spoil! I now proceed by English ship to Chefoo, and thence to Shanghai and homeward.

F. W. Baedeker.

Nikolaevsk, Mouth of the Amoor, Sept. 24.

[We have already (November 16) recorded Dr. Baedeker's arrival at Chefoo.]

GLASGOW EVANGELISM.

Sir,—It is now twenty years since the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association was formed and began work in Glasgow, and we are thankful that the memorable spiritual movement of 1874, which originated the Association, so stirred the community and the life of all our churches that during these years we have never lacked earnest workers or the means for carrying on our labours.

We have had continuous testimony from all parts of our city as to the softening and elevating influence of our evangelistic and ameliorative agencies. Yet in spite of all that is being done both inside and outside of Church organisation, the need of aggressive work is as great as ever, and we dare not relax our efforts. The forces of evil and unbelief never call for a truce, and as yet they greatly outnumber all the remedial agencies of the city.

During recent years there has happily been an increase in the aggressive work carried on by our Churches, but we well know that our Association—whose forty-two directors, composed of ministers and laymen representing all the Evangelical Churches—can carry on a united work which no individual church or denomination could do. The directors fear that while our work has been steadily and quietly carried on all those years, the general public are not aware of its magnitude and value.

While, with very few exceptions, all the workers are volunteers—giving time and labour unrewarded—the necessary outlay, as shown by our published accounts, amounts to over £6000 a year, without taking into account the Children's Fresh Air Fund, which receives and spends annually about £7000 in sending the children of the city slums to the country and seaside for a fortnight.

Although we have many generous contributors to our funds, both great and small, we regret to say that within a short period we have lost by death many who were a tower of strength to the Association, and we estimate that, from this cause alone, our annual contributions have suffered to the extent of fully £1200, and the Directors make this appeal for help to the friends of aggressive work in Glasgow and throughout the country, in the confident belief that, rather than allow our operations to be curtailed, they will come at once to our help, and take the place of those who have passed away.

At present we have a deficit of nearly £2000, and our financial year closes in December. Unless, therefore, we can promptly meet this deficit and greatly increase our regular income, it will be impossible to continue our present work.

For the first time in twenty years the funds of our Sabbath Free Breakfast and Children's Dinner have failed us, and as most of our ameliorative agencies have sprung from these—children's day refuges, children's homes at Saltcoats, children's fresh-air fortnight, girls' home, etc.—we are sure that many who desire to rescue our fallen brothers and sisters, and save many a little child from woe, will help us, and so receive a blessing from those that are ready to perish.

Our work covers a large field. Our chief aim is to save the souls of men by the Gospel of Christ, but we seek as well to save their lives by stretching out a loving hand to them, and thus make them a blessing to the community in place of a curse. We seek to feed the hungry and follow up cases of misery, to rescue and reclaim the drunkard, and have been gladdened by being able, through careful following up, to restore many young people from the brink of ruin to their homes. Many who have been rescued are now rescuing others, and some are now esteemed members and office-bearers in the church of Christ.

Within the last year we have opened a Bible institute in Blythswood-square for the training of evangelists and Christian workers. We have already twenty-seven resident students, all of whom pay a board—which does not, however, cover the cost—and the superintendent, Mr. John Anderson, conducts classes, which are regularly attended by nearly 300. The Directors contemplate seeking funds to enable them still further to extend this important branch of the work.

In the name, and by the authority, of our Directors, I now appeal to the Christian community for money to enable us not only to maintain but to extend our work, which has already been so greatly blessed, and has never been more fruitful than now.

Our secretaries, Mr. J. R. Miller and Mr. Pratt, at the Christian Institute, 70, Bothwell-street, will be happy to send our illustrated report to any one who desires to see the interesting details of our work, and they, or the treasurer, Mr. J. H. N. Graham, 55, Cathedral-street, or myself, will be glad to receive and acknowledge contributions. We are sure that when our needs are made known we shall not appeal in vain to the generous public, who ever appreciate solid work done for the benefit of our great city.—Yours truly,

Overtoun.

7, West George-street, Glasgow.

CEYLON AND INDIAN GENERAL MISSION.

Since I last wrote to you the work of this Mission has been carried on at home in various parts of the country with much blessing. Our first party reached Colombo on Nov. 3.

Mr. Davidson, writing from Port Said, reports a spirit of unity and love among the workers, and says: "Last night a number of the native sailors gathered round us as we were singing, and afterwards we had a talk with them for about two hours. Some of them argue very keenly and know their Koran; they are no mean opponents! It was the best insight our party has had of the real difficulties of the work they are going to. It showed us our own weakness and our need of the Holy Spirit, who alone can convict of sin. Praise God for enabling us to lay a good deal of truth before them. Our steward, a Welshman, has received Jesus as his Saviour."

The aim of our brethren is to preach the Gospel where Christ has not been named, and for this reason, and this alone, they have left their own country and gone to the heathen. No "headquarters" were decided upon before leaving England, but our friends are looking out for, and by now have probably found, a suitable place where they may settle down and learn the language, and from there go on to other parts of Ceylon and India as the Lord may direct.

We have no intention of interfering with the work carried on by missions already in the field, but look forward, when brought together, to happy fellowship with all. God's work is one blessed whole, and if we "walk in the Spirit" no friction can occur, for one life and one spirit will be visible throughout. I trust these few lines will, in some degree, reassure those who are doubtful as to our intentions, as recently suggested by a correspondent.

Chas. A. Ewbank, Secretary.

39, Beresford-road, Mildmay, N.

A SUNDAY-CLOSING CANVASS of the householders of Teignmouth, Shaldon, etc., has resulted as follows: For Sunday closing, 777; against, 101; neutral, 53.

CEYLON.—In No. 4 of Gleams of Light, Mr. H. W. Fry refers to the work of Mr. E. B. Lover amongst the soldiers in Colombo. He says:—"Mr. Lover is a conspicuous instance of what a whole-hearted business man may do both for the Lord and for his fellow-men. He is a plain man, earning his living as foreman in the Wharfage Company here. His qualification for his work consists in his wholeheartedness, his love for God and man, and his trust in God. He is taking up much other work in one way and another. Would there were a score of men in business, self-supporting missionaries in the best sense of the term, in Colombo, to carry on work as he does. Why should there not be?" Copies of the successive issues of Gleams may be had from Mr. F. W. Crossley, Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3.—PSALM CXV.

One of the psalms of the Restoration. The returned exiles realise again the unity of Israel, and in the ecstasy of their restoration contrast Jehovah with the gods of the heathen.

Whenever we have been concerned in some great manifestation of God's power let us repeat this old refrain, "Not unto us, not unto us." The glory of the name of God, that men should think highly of Him, should be a purpose of each regenerated soul. Live to maintain the family honour! Beside God we have an advocate; the Lamb is amid the throne; God's good pleasure is redemption; no absentee God is ours. When men are asking, Where is He? Faith answers, Lo, He is here.

The remainder of the psalm (9-18) is full of exhortations to trustfulness. Israel (its scattered people considered as one great host) trust thou. Aaron, including Levites and priests; ye that fear the Lord, including proselytes from the Gentiles—for each and all, God is equally help and shield, making them strong in the battle, and casting the mantle of his protection as a shield around them. Argue from the past to the future. Has He been mindful? Then He will bless. Once more the Psalmist enumerates the three classes whom he had before exhorted to trust, and assures them of God's blessing. "He will bless" (12). "We will bless" (18).

MONDAY, DECEMBER 4.—PSALM CXVI.

This, with the three preceding and the two following psalms, constituted the great Hallel, and there is peculiar beauty in appropriating its expressions to the usage of our Lord as He rose from the supper to face Gethsemane. It is as if his soul were already anticipating its victories, and rejoicing in its assured answer, and, as it has been used through eighteen centuries, this psalm has expressed the hopes, resolves, and songs of myriads who have trodden the same path and passed ultimately into the same light, as they are now rejoicing in the same land of life. Take heart! Your time will come presently. There are no expressions that so well befit the emergence of the soul from darkness, whether of trouble or of earth's brief night.

The cup of life was once one of anguish and pain, such as Christ drank in the garden. But He has drained it to the dregs, and returned it brimming with salvation. Drink deep draughts of this, it is the blood of the new covenant, and call on the name of God, in thankful joy.

How remarkable it is that the bond-servant of God describes himself as loosed. There is no freedom comparable to that which comes to such as are his slaves and bear his brand-marks. None can enslave or trouble those who confess themselves absolutely his. The Son has made them free indeed.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5.—PSALM CXVII.

When the Jew truly loved God, he awoke to love the world of men, and wished that all should join in praise. St. Paul quotes this psalm (Rom. xv. 11) to show that the time is coming when the Gentiles shall be admitted into covenant relationship with the God of Israel. And as the Church, which, in the present day, is so largely composed of Gentiles, recites this psalm in her daily worship, there is a fulfilment of the anticipation of the Hebrew minstrel. As Christians use this psalm they fulfil it.

The theme for praise, which is as fresh to-day as when these words were first written, is the mercy and truth of God—his great mercy, his everlasting truth. But we need the anointed eye to detect these strands woven into the web of universal life. Oh, for grace to see the love of God where others descry only the reign of law! Oh, for the strength of purpose that does not require mercy, unless it is associated with truth! Oh, for the faith that trusts where it cannot see, and believes where it cannot understand! The last word is Hallelujah! Such is the outcome of all meditation on the nature and acts of God. "The four-and-twenty elders worshipped God, saying, Amen! Alleluia!" (Rev. xix. 4).

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6.—PSALM CXVIII.

It is thought by some that this psalm dates from the defeat of Haman's plot (Esther viii. 9). In any case it suits the gladness of a great deliverance. The three classes noticed in Ps. xv. who were then bidden to trust and bless, are now summoned to attest the enduring mercy of God.

Again, we have the themes of holy praise (5, etc.) To have been answered when in distress; to be set in a large place; to know that God is on your side, this makes the soul fearless and glad.

When the tide of emotion is high we cannot stay to pick our words. Mark the tumult with which the rapture of the delivered soul expresses itself! Again and yet again it uses the same words; it prefers God to man and princes; it threatens destruction to whole nations; it recalls the assaults of the foe, only to compare his overthrow to the rapid fire that burns out in thorns; it quotes from Moses' song snatches of inspired expression as if its own words were not strong enough; it magnifies the right hand of God—the right hand where Jesus sits.

Still higher the strain rises, the chastened soul passes in its white robes from its sickness and darkness into the temple (19, etc.); through the open gate of righteousness it enters on its work of praise; it sees how God selects rejected men to be his foundation stones; it expects and receives a welcome from the residents in the house of God. Nor is this all, the priest and minstrel becomes a sacrifice, bound to the altar, ready for service or suffering, and finding through each its sufficient motive for thanksgiving and praise.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7.—PSALM CXIX.

It has been the practice of eminent saints to turn to this psalm for heart quickening; and, indeed, if instead of merely reading it with the sense of the irksomeness of its length, each reader of these words would take it for meditation in an hour of solitude, it would be impossible to rise from its devout consideration without feeling the pulses of the heart-throb quickened.

The personal element is its characteristic, every sentence revolves around the personality of the Psalmist—I, my, mine, me; and there is no true dealing with God unless the depths of the individual life are unbared, and secrets told into his ear, which the soul dare not whisper to even the dearest. In prayer, as in heaven, it should not be through a glass darkly, but face to face. The Word of God is not less characteristic of the Psalmist's thought; under many different titles he refers to it. As the lover is never weary of addressing the same endearing terms to his love, so the Psalmist must needs speak of the Word of God with reiterated mention of the various epithets which he has coined for it.

Notice the frequent recurrence of the phrases, teach me thy statutes; quicken me; make me. There are others which will repay search; indeed, the characteristic words of this psalm, that ring through it melodiously, would furnish suggestions for ejaculatory prayer, such as would greatly enrich the quiver of the soul for the demands of the battle of life.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8.—PSALM CXX.

The first of the Songs of Degrees, composed after the return from exile, and probably sung as the pious Israelites ascended from all parts of the land to the Temple Festivals. These songs well become the several gradations of the soul in its passage upwards.

We all start in our ascents from the lowest. Distress, lying lips, deceitful tongue, Meshech, Kedar; those that hate peace and make for war. Many of those who read these words have daily experiences which they can read into those ancient phrases. Meshech and Kedar, the habitations of wandering tribes, with their flimsy tents, aptly symbolise uncertainty and instability.

Let us not forget that even there it is possible to utter cries which will bring answers from God. His deliverances will not tarry; his vindication will not fail; He will silence the deceitful tongue; He will give peace to the soul that yearns for it; and out of all the darkness the believer shall come at length, as the pilgrim leaves behind him the valley where malaria and mist hold sway. You cannot ascend unless you first descend. You cannot fill all things unless you go into the nethermost parts of the earth; you cannot reach the holy city except by way of the valley of Baca; you cannot know the light unless you have tasted darkness; there is no way to the throne except by the sepulchre.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9.—PSALM CXXI.

The mountains are not high enough, look higher, child of God, for help to the God who made the mountains, and earth and heaven. From his throne He will succour thee.

Thou hast put down thy foot to take possession of his promises. Man and devil seek to move it back. He will not suffer them to prevail. Like a sentry he keeps watch and ward about thee, so that none shall take thee by surprise. It is not thou that keepest Him, but He that keepeth thee; nay, He keeps not thee alone, but his Israel, like a flock browsing on the green pastures, or passing through the deep ravine haunted by ravenous beasts.

Does the sun smite thee with his sword, emblem of the temptations of prosperity? Thy God will interpose his shadow. Does the moon shed on thy sleeping moments her baleful influence? His care shall curtain thee. Does evil, like the blue mist of malaria, threaten to wither thy life? He shall screen thee from its noxious vapours. Dost thou go out to work, or war, or to the temptations of the wilderness? He will encompass thee with his protection. Dost thou come in to ease and rest and home? He will deliver thee from the subtle temptations that wait to dart from out every fireside. He will do this for thee, not to-day, or to-morrow only, but henceforth and for evermore.

F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 10.

The Heavenly Inheritance.—1 Peter i. 1-12.

Golden Text, Col. i. 12.

Peter wrote this epistle during the great persecution of Christians in the reign of Nero. It was written from Babylon (v. 13), which some have considered a disguised name for Rome. It has been suggested that such means were resorted to by the early Christians for purposes of concealment. Notwithstanding this suggestion, it appears to us more probable that the name applies to the city of Babylon, on the Euphrates. Peter wrote to the Christians in various parts of Asia Minor (1). These are called "strangers," a term which accurately describes their attitude towards this world. Their citizenship is in heaven (Heb. xi. 9-16; xiii. 14). The purpose of the epistle may be gathered from the following description of the life of Christians under the Neronian persecution:—"They were accused of being evil-doers, of preaching revolutionary doctrines (iii. 15, 16). The very name of Christian exposed them to odium and outrage" (iv. 16) . . . . "When a wave of fanatic hatred against the name of Christian was flowing well-nigh over the length and breadth of the empire, rulers in the provinces were but too likely to follow the example which Nero set them in the capital." The aim of the epistle is to minister comfort and encouragement to those who were exposed to the fury of this persecution.

The Salutation (2) was exactly suited to this design. Two things would oppress the Christians:—First, the power of the Roman Empire seeking to crush them; and next, the imperfection of their own obedience in face of such fearful temptation. Both are provided for here. What is the power of Rome against that of the whole Trinity? Napoleon used to say, "God is on the side of the strongest battalions." It is not so. Christians with God on their side are mightier than Nero (Rome viii. 31). Their other need is met by the blood of sprinkling, which is applied, not only to their sins, but to their "obedience." Chosen by the Father, sanctified by the Spirit, cleansed by the Son, they need not fear.

The Heavenly Inheritance (3-5). The hope of this gives further cause for encouragement. The hope is well grounded (3). We are born to it. Our second birth brings us into the family of God, and makes us heirs to the inheritance. Do not indulge the hope until you know you are "born again." An adopted child who had been put among the children, and dealt with as a child, was cruelly taunted by a schoolmate with not being the child of her whom she called mother. She was afterwards found in deep distress in her room, and cried out again and again, "Am I not your child, and are you not my mother?" And when she received only evasive replies, she put the question in her own significant way, "But did you born me?" Be as eager to know the truth as to your new birth. It is a hope of a worthy inheritance (4). It contrasts with every earthly inheritance. The present enjoyment of what a man has is often marred by the thought that it may not continue. And often the most favourable surroundings are a curse to a man because they are defiled. This is not so (Matt. vi. 19-21). And the hope will not be disappointed (4, 5). God keeps the inheritance for you, and keeps you for the inheritance. Nero could banish them, separate them from friends, torture them, and even take away their life; but he could not rob them of their heavenly inheritance. Meet the temptations which beset you, not with the thought of what you can do, but of what God can do. It is "the power of God" which is engaged to keep you.

Their Present Experience (6-9). The Apostle does not ignore their severe sufferings; but several considerations are mentioned to mitigate them. They are only "for a season," there is a "needs be" for them (6), and they will serve to try and prove their faith (7). The bitter persecutions of their enemies assume altogether a new character when seen as overruled by God for the discipline and ultimate benefit of his people. And even in their sufferings they can rejoice greatly (6-8). This joy was the strength which enabled the martyrs to endure persecution without flinching. The joy of the Christian life is not all in reserve. The more our sufferings for Christ abound, the more will our consolation also abound by Him.

The closing verses (10-12) reveal the Value of the Gospel. It was foretold by prophets, and was communicated to them by the Spirit of Christ. Their theme was, not the glory of Christ alone, but the glory as resulting from the suffering. Through suffering to glory was as true of Him as of them. The predictions became the subject of the prophet's devout inquiry; and even angels saw in the whole theme of their message a wisdom they desired to fathom. What were present sufferings in comparison with such a salvation?

G. W.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

"BAPTIZED FOR THE DEAD."

1 Cor. xv. 29.—"Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

The difficulty of this passage arises very much from want of close attention to the Apostle's own explanation of his meaning. He is refuting the error of those who denied the resurrection. He first shows (ver. 13) that such a denial involves a denial of Christ's resurrection, and with it of the whole hope of a Christian. After a short digression (23—28), in which he traces out the various stages of resurrection history in the future, he returns to another argument derived from the well-known teaching of baptism as symbolical of death and resurrection. If resurrection be denied, then only death remains; and baptism becomes a baptism for death alone, not for death and resurrection. But instead of putting it thus in the abstract, he treats it personally. "Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead (as one may call it) if the dead rise not at all?" He is contemplating the case of all Christians who are baptized in hope of the resurrection, and describes them as "baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all." That is, they are baptized for fellowship or association with the dead, for enrolment amongst the dead, "if so be that the dead are not raised." (R.V.) Well may he ask, "Why then are they baptized for them?" (R.V.) What sort of privilege would baptism be if it only reminds you of fellowship with the dead, and there leaves you?

But baptism not only sets forth in symbol the hope of the future resurrection grounded on Christ's death and resurrection, but it teaches a present participation in spirit in the likeness of his death and resurrection; so the Apostle goes on to speak of his present experience, "I die daily . . . . . what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Abolish the hope of resurrection, and there remains only the hope of those who say, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Thus the whole context confirms this interpretation, and shows that in arguing from baptism as the ordained initiatory rite of Christianity, St. Paul is urging that instead of being (as the two acts of immersion and emersion declare) a consignment of the believer to the fellowship of those who "died with Christ" and "believe that (they) shall also live with Him," it becomes, if there is no resurrection, a being "baptized for the dead."

There is really no difficulty in the Greek preposition rendered "for." No doubt its primary meaning is "over," and its usual metaphorical meaning "in behalf of"; but, as Canon Evans says in the "Speaker's Commentary": "Frequent in Greek are uses of this preposition denoting not only 'in behalf of,' but also on 'account of,' 'with an interest in,' 'concerning,' 'with a view to,' or simply 'in relation to.'" Perhaps the last would best explain its use here, "baptised for (or 'in relation to') the dead."

The late Dr. Tregelles suggested a change in the punctuation which conveys much the same meaning. He proposed ("History of Printed Text," p. 216) to read it thus: "Else what shall the baptized do? (It is) for the dead, if the dead rise not at all; why then are they baptized for them?" The meaning obtained, however, being much the same, it is perhaps better to retain the ordinary punctuation.

The main point is this: by "baptized for the dead" St. Paul uses an expression to denote what baptism would be if the resurrection were not true. Thank God it is true, and baptism assures its true recipients (repentance and faith being required of those that are baptized) that their portion is not with the dead, but with those who through the grave and gate of Christ's death pass to their joyful resurrection, in spirit now, in body hereafter.

The common explanation which so many modern commentators adopt—for the ancient writers explain it much as above—is grounded on a superstitious practice, which prevailed among some early heretics, of what is called vicarious baptism, or baptizing a living person over one who died without baptism, that the dead person might thus obtain the supposed benefit of baptism! Of this gross superstition Bishop Wordsworth says, "As far as we know there was no such usage then practised at Corinth or anywhere else in the Church of that age," and Godet says, "We have no instance which can lead us to suppose that such a custom had a place in the life of the primitive churches. It was not till after the apostolic period that the idea of the magical virtue of the sacraments began to corrupt the primitive spirituality."

Godet himself takes "baptized for the dead" to mean martyrdom, but the infrequency of martyrdom at that early time seems to make this view improbable.

H. E. B.

For the Young.

TRUE CHARITY.

"Mother dear, I'm going to be so good to-day," said nine-year-old Dora Winstone, running into her mother's room one summer morning, and throwing her arms around her mother's neck.

"And so am I," said little Chris, who was but seven, who had followed Dora in. "We're going to be charitable, mother."

"Do my darling children know what that long word means?" asked Mrs. Winstone, looking down at her children's eager faces with a loving smile.

"Oh yes, we know quite well," answered Dora; "don't we, Chris? You know, mother, our portion for this morning was the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, and that's all about charity. Nurse explained it to us, for we didn't quite understand at first; and, mother, she said that we could be charitable without giving away things; I'm so glad, for I don't often have anything to give."

"You are never without something to give, my child," said Mrs. Winstone. "A kind word or look will not cost anything. I am so glad, darling, that you understand the chapter so well, for I remember one day long ago——"

"Is it a story, mother?" And little Chris looked so pleased that Mrs. Winstone could not resist the temptation of making her experience into a "story."

"It was years ago, dears," she said, "when I was very little. I remember going to church one Sunday morning, and sitting by my mother's side in our pew, with my father's kind face looking down at me now and again from the pulpit, where he was preaching from the last verse of the chapter you have read this morning. I don't remember ever having read that verse before, so it was quite new to me.

"'Oh,' I thought, 'I have tried so many times to be good and obedient, and very often I have failed; but I shall succeed this time, for it's easy enough to be charitable.'

"I didn't listen to the sermon, for my head was full of my own ideas about charity; as soon as I reached home I made secret plans for giving away half I possessed. The next day I managed to steal out of the house without anyone knowing, and very soon meeting a beggar I pressed my new bright shilling, the only coin I possessed, into his hand. The man looked so pleased that I was delighted with my experiment, and was hastening home when the thought struck me that I should have to leave off being charitable when I had nothing more to give. I suppose this made me look very downcast, for meeting my father just then, he asked me 'what was the matter,' and 'why was I out alone.'

"Then I had to tell him all, and how glad I was afterwards that I did so! For he explained to me, as nurse did to you, that charity does not only mean giving away, but that in its old English sense, as well as in Scripture, it meant love, love to God and to those around us. He went on to say that the possession of this love makes us more and more like Him who is Love. I believe that from that very day I have tried to love and please God and all around me, for charity or love distinguishes itself by forbearance, sympathy, and helpfulness. And oh, my darling children," added Mrs. Winstone, as she stooped to kiss them, "remember that you can do nothing without God's help, ask Him for it every day, and He will surely give it you, and help you to grow more like Himself."

A. C. G.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Brussels, to Nov. 30; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Stoke's Croft Chapel, Bristol, Nov. 25 to Dec. 10; Rev. Martin J. Hall, St. Philip's, Manchester, to Nov. 27; Altrincham, Dec. 2-3; Mr. J. S. Tyler, York, Dec. 3; Waterhouses, co. Durham, Dec. 4 to 17; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tabernacle Schools, Croydon, Nov. 26 to Dec. 4 (with Mr. Goodman); Mission Hall, Gay-street, Scotland-road, Liverpool, Dec. 9 to 20; Mr. George Goodman, Bow, Dec. 10 to 17; Mr. J. M. Wigner, St. John's, Hatcham, Dec. 11; Mr. H. Hankinson, Harringay, Dec. 12.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Malachi, Dec. 3, S., iii. 1-9; 4, iii. 10-18; 5, iv. 1-6; 6. Psalms cxxxvi. 1-12; 7, cxxxvi. 13-26; 8, cxxxviii. 1-8; 9 cxxxix. 1-16.

THE PRECIOUS BUTTON.

By Rev. Thomas Champness.

During the recent coal strike, among the many curious things that happened was the story I am about to tell.

We have working in South Wales a grandson of old John Preston, whom Dr. Gregory likes to talk about. He is not a bit like his grandfather, only in one thing—he knows how to get a hearing, go where he will. He has been made a wondrous blessing, and has many spiritual children from those who were counted heirs of damnation. Gamblers, drunkards, wife-beaters, and pigeon-flyers came to hear him, and, having so much of the raw material, it is easy for him to do business for the Lord Jesus.

Among his converts is a young fellow whose employment is down the pit. As you know, there have been riots and rows such as one hoped would never disgrace this country again, but then selfishness is a sad disturber of both private and public peace. I don't know what this youngster was doing, but he was not one of the rioters. Perhaps it would have been better if he had been at home, but more than likely he was not the only Methodist in the row. I have been in one or two myself—one since I became a minister, only that time I helped the police when they were in sore straits.

It is not very easy to account for it, but some men will find a fight as easily as ducks find water, and peaceable man as every one knows me to be, I have not been able to keep out of scrimmages, so I am not at all inclined to blame this youngster.

When the rioters fired this young fellow was hit, but the shot struck one of his trouser buttons, and glanced off without wounding him. The shock, however, was so severe that he was knocked down by the force of the ball! He must have been killed but for the button.

Mr. Preston called to see him, and found his mother in great glee that her lad had not been killed. She might have had to bury her son, and I daresay has told him in future to keep out of mobs and far from riotous men. But the young man himself says he was doing nothing wrong, and feels that if the button had not stopped the ball he would have gone to heaven hurriedly, yet to heaven sure enough.

The mother said: "Mr. Preston, you were the instrument of saving his soul, and the button of saving his body, so I think you ought to be both together." Accordingly she cut off the button, and handed it over to the evangelist, who sure enough prizes that which was between his convert and death.—Methodist Recorder.

TWILIGHT.

Great clouds across the western vale
Like clustering opals, slowly sail,
Whose dusty splendours sweep away
The smouldering fires of dying day.

And through the pines the moon's white beam
Falls feebly on the darkling stream;
It rose up faintly from the deep,
Before the wild birds went to sleep.

I am a wild bird, 'neath the skies
There is not one, O God, that flies,
So yearning for thy love's caress,
So needful of thy tenderness.

Sustain me with thy Living Breath,
Lest, sleeping, I should sleep in death;
Through shadow'd eve and night of fear,
My Father, O my Father, hear.

I know the night, the gloom, the shade,
Make not thy nestling ones afraid;
For safely on thy shelt'ring breast,
Thy faltering fledgelings sink to rest.

'Tis even so. Then come, O eve,
Come sleep, come death, I will not grieve;
But still support me, Love divine;
Blest "Light of life," arise and shine.

Caroline Tickner.

FULHAM.—Services for young people have been held at Fulham Congregational Church in connection with the Guild Christian Union. They commenced by a powerful address on "The New Birth," given by Mr. Oscar Owers, who conducted the services through the week. Blessing has followed his work at Fulham, and the spiritual life of many has been quickened and deepened.

A NOBLE MAN IN HUMBLE LIFE.

By Rev. JOHN R. BRUCE, GLASGOW.

"Strongest minds
Are often those of whom the noisy world
Hears least."

These words remind me of a good man and true, whom I knew, and whose example and sayings I can never forget. He was a person in humble circumstances in life, who cultivated some twenty acres of land, and, at certain seasons of the year, followed the occupation of a fisherman, in a remote place in Scotland. In his life there was little wasted time; for when he was not fishing or farming, he was reading, or visiting the sick and the aged, or preparing addresses for district meetings which he was in the habit of conducting.

He was well read in history, especially in Church history. When a friend, calling at his house one evening, found him poring over D'Aubigné's History of the Reformation, and asked if he did not get tired of studying those dry chronicles, the reply was: "No; the past has much to teach us, if we approach it with reverence." But above all he studied the Bible, which he believed told him, straight from the lips of God, all that he ought to do, and needed to know. He lived so fully in the spirit of the Bible, and so thoroughly understood the human heart, that he could touch life successfully with truth.

As he moved about among the people, and became acquainted with their difficulties and views, he uttered words that passed as proverbs in the place. When parties talked about their conversion his remark was, "The reason for seeds is that flowers may be. In the degree in which the Spirit of Christ rises up and lives in us we know that we belong to Him." When he found one affecting great spirituality and despising knowledge, he said, "The spirituality that would exalt itself and glory over knowledge is certainly the most offensive kind of pride, and the hollowest." To a woman complaining one day about her servant he said, "There is only one way of making good servants, that is to

BE WORTHY OF BEING WELL SERVED."

When he heard people speculating about heaven, he told them that we knew nothing definitely of the heavenly world, except that it will be free from sorrow and pure from sin. When he was asked questions of a speculative nature about God and Christ and immortality, his usual reply was: "The best way to be sure there is a God is to admit Him into the soul; the only way to be persuaded there is a Saviour is to accept his help; the only way to have the hope of a blessed immortality is to have something in our souls which we can reasonably wish to be immortal."

When people complained of their hard lot in life his usual reply was: "The best position in the world is that which is most fitted to nourish good principles and to press the soul ever nearer to God." With those who were sincere, but at times felt weak and weary in the life of faith, he showed great tenderness and spoke very encouragingly. If they would only cling to the cross and person of the crucified Son of God the bending reed would become a pillar in the temple of God, and the glimmering wick would shine like the sun in the kingdom of our Father.

The nearer one got to the man the more beautiful did his character appear; consequently it was in his own family circle where he was seen to the greatest advantage. It goes without saying that he did all that a good man should do to make his children loyal to Christ. The truth that he never tired of pressing on his children was this:—"Try both how devout you can be, and how well stored and educated your mind can be, and you will be a power in the world for good." He also insisted on this lesson, that faithful prayer implies always corresponding exertion; and that when they prayed to be delivered from temptation, and strengthened for duty, they should firmly determine to be kept out of it, and to do with their might what God gave them to do.

When he returned from the fishing, he no sooner entered his home than he gathered his family around him and engaged in family worship. No matter however tired he might be, no matter what the hour, or the duties of the hour—it might be twelve o'clock at night, when all were in bed, or eleven o'clock in the busiest harvest day, the duty of thanking God for his preserving care was never neglected.

As his children grew up and were able to read, he gave each two strongly-bound Bibles. One was to be taken with them wherever they went, and if possible kept to the last day of their life. The other was kept for family worship, and laid aside morning and evening with the big Bible that the father used on those occasions. After some of his children had left the old home, and some had died, all the Bibles were put on the table at the time of worship. As the old man looked on those Bibles that little hands had used, and thought how the good Book had guided some of his children to the better home, and was guiding others, his soul was kindled into greater intensity in pleading with God.

In the evening of life trials crowded on him thick and fast, but these only led him to fasten his hands more firmly on God's throne, and so stand firm, not only in character but in hope. When his dearest possessions withered at the touch of death, like flowers that blacken in an early frost, he did not deafen those around him with piteous personal lamentation, as though everything had perished. As he said himself, it only led him to go away more frequently in thought to the quiet hills of God, and rest more fully in the everlasting love of his unchanging Friend. In those days he had but he could bear them all, for he did not bid farewell to God; and he felt that to live with Him was to possess the hope which would restore all he meanwhile lost. Two of his sons sailed away one morning in a fishing-boat, along with four neighbours, and returned no more. A third son died in a distant land; while a married daughter died in childbirth. In those days of trial he realised that while all things here below change, God changeth not; that while his life was full of trouble, yet in Christ he had peace. So he lived a happy, hopeful old age, certain that he had not long here to stay, but interested to the very last in the best things of life, in the cause of God and men.

MANY BITTER FAREWELLS,

When he was no longer able to go to church, he spent part of the Sabbath praying for the congregation, the most of whom he personally knew, in all of whom he was interested. He read the promises of God to the church, and then in thought went from pew to pew in the place where he had worshipped for fully sixty years, praying for the people individually. When a friend asked him if he did not find this exercise too much for his strength, the reply was: "I have always found that while true prayer is the most complete rest of the soul, the most entire confession of weakness, it is the most real and absorbing work. But," said the old man, as the big tear fell from his eye,

"IT IS ALL THAT I CAN DO

to help the church now, and I like to do it."

Early one June morning he got the call to come home. To the few friends in the chamber of death he said little. At his request one read the last chapter of the Book of Revelation, and they sang "The Happy Land." After this hymn had been sung, he said in a low, solemn voice, "Simply to thy cross I cling," and then fell asleep. Those who were present long remembered the heavenly calmness on the dying face, and the felt near presence of God. One who was there used to say: "When I came out of the house on that beautiful summer morning everything was lovely; but nature in all her beauty compared poorly with what I had left—the dying saint and the near presence of God."

A few days after, all that remained of this eminent servant of God was followed to the grave by a large multitude of mourners, many of whom specially knew his worth, not a few of whom he had led to live a good life. There in the lonely churchyard of his native parish his mortal remains were laid to rest till the resurrection of the just. No stone marks his grave; but the example of his holy and beautiful life will long live in the memories of those who knew his worth. If his friends felt as they returned from his grave that there was one arm less to defend the truth, and another name added to the roll of the mighty dead, they might have been comforted by his own words: "We need not fear for the Gospel of Christ whoever may be taken away. Calvary has still its Olivet; the shadow of the cross its ascension glory."

SANDGATE.—The annual meeting of Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute was held on Thursday, when addresses were given by Mr. J. H. Du Baulay, Surgeon-Major Alston, Major Stirling, Captain Hill, and others. A branch of the Soldiers' Christian Association was formed. Branches have also been formed at Hythe and Dover during the week.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

Pasteur Fontayne writes from Sens, in the Department of Yonne:—

"Our winter campaign promises well, if we may judge by the beginning. The ladies' working party has recommenced, and each of the ten members present not only brought her needle, but also various articles of clothing to be worked out for the poor.

"Our catechumens interest us greatly. There are three here at Sens, who come every Friday for instruction. I find them most attentive and studious, and feel that my labour is not in vain with regard to them. Three others live too far off to attend the class, so I go to them, and give each a separate lesson at their homes. My bicycle is very useful on those occasions, as the distances are great (from twelve to fifteen miles). As a rule, the portions to be studied are well prepared, and the parents generally sit by to listen, and sometimes ask questions. The teaching given to a single boy or girl has thus a wider range, and the Lord may bless it to all the family.

"At Sens our Protestants belong partly to the well-to-do, partly to the working classes. Many are Swiss, who rejoice to find here a Protestant church and pastor. Others were won from Romanism several years ago. There are also inquirers, who will, we trust, join our ranks sooner or later. In the meantime we try to exercise an Evangelical influence upon them.

"The meetings at St. Maurice are well frequented by old converts, who are bringing up their children in the fear of God. Lately, on the occasion of the funeral of an Englishman, I preached the Gospel to a crowd of persons who rarely have an opportunity of hearing it. Thus in various ways the knowledge of the Gospel is extending quietly, but surely. How much good has been done by the Société Evangélique de France in our department alone! Forty-five years ago there was not in it a single church or pastor, and very few Protestants. Now there are pastors in six towns, with their churches and parsonages; and every year souls are gained from unbelief or superstition to the Gospel of Christ."

N.E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held on Tuesday, November 21, at Earlham Hall, Islington, which was densely crowded. Mr. Samuel Causton presided.

Mr. Chorley, who has superintended the work for more than twenty years, gave an encouraging account of souls being ingathered from tent, indoor and outdoor services. Joyful notes were also struck in recording the work among factory girls and gutter lads. The work at the large Seaside Home at Lancing came in for special mention; the freehold has now been secured for the mission. The balance-sheet shows that the amount received, including £500 brought into account from a deposit at bankers', was £3000 19s. 3d., while the outgoings, including part purchase-money for Lancing Home, amounted to £2991 10s.

Various workers, speaking from their practicall experience, gave details of a deeply interesting character. Dr. Neatby gave a weighty and helpfug address to the Lord's servants present. "Ned" Wright and other workers followed in prayer or testimony.

A VILLAGE LIBRARY.

Sir,—For a long time I have felt the need of some place in our village as a meeting-place for young men, to counteract the influence of the three public-houses, which are always open to tempt them within their doors. At last I have secured a double cottage, which has been altered to suit our convenience, and I have opened a coffee-house and reading-room, and secured a Christian man and wife to manage it, the man to act as colporteur during the day. Already sixty young men have joined the reading-room, which is very gratifying. I am writing to ask your readers for a few books to form a small library. As our expenses will be about £2 a week, we shall, on account of the smallness of the village and the slackness of work, require help of from 10s. to 15s. a week at least until the month of April or May. After that I have no doubt it will be self-supporting.

Yours faithfully,

J. H. Marshall, Pastor, Union Chapel.

Crockenhill, Swanley, Kent.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIER'S LIST.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS. By Rev. A. SCOTT MATHESON, Author "The Gospel and Modern Substitutes." Crown 8vo, 5s.
The Contents include:—The Duty of the Church in Relation to Social Problems—Political Economy, Old and New — Landlordism and Land Reform — The Labour Question(Hours and Wages)—The Liquor Question—Poverty —Better Housing—Sweating—Child Life, and Rescue— Woman's Place and Influence—The Co-operative Movement—Commonwealth, Ideal and Actual—The City of God.

FIFTEENTH THOUSAND.

BUNYAN CHARACTERS. Lectures delivered in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh. By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

BUNYAN'S HOLY WAR. With Prefatory Note by Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D., and Frontispiece by Mrs. Traquair. Price 2s. cloth extra.

GOLDEN NAILS, and other addresses to Children. By Rev. GEORGE MILLIGAN, B.D. 1s. 6d.
"Very fresh and interesting sermons to children."—British Weekly.

THE YOUNG PREACHER. By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D., 1s. 6d. cloth.
"Running over with good practical advice to young preachers."—Sword and Trowel.

THE LAST SCOTTISH MARTYR.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF JAMES RENWICK, the last Scottish Martyr. By Rev. W. H. CARSLAW, M.A., Helensburgh. With Vignette and Fac-simile Letter, Post 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE FIFTH GOSPEL; or, The Land where Jesus Lived. By the Rev. J. M. P. OTTS, D.D., LL.D. With Maps, Plans, and Numerous Illustrations. 5s.
"We can commend the book as being really illustrative of the Gospel story."—Record.

PRINCETON SERMONS. Chiefly by the Professors in Princeton Theological Seminary. Crown 8vo. 5s.

THE COVENANTERS OF THE MERSE; their History and Sufferings as found in the Records of that Time. By the Rev. J. WOOD BROWN. Post 8vo. 2s. 6d.
"The book unfolds stories of modern heroism and spiritual fidelity which it does one good to read to-day."—Christian.

MRS. A. R. SIMPSON'S NEW BOOKLET.

DRIED ROSE-LEAVES. In pretty Enamelled Cover, Embossed in Gold, with wrapper. Price 6d.
"Incident, illustration, and quotation, in prose and poetry, combine to make it as welcome as it is useful."—Christian.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIER,
LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

Wanted, Help to place additional Agents in the field.

The Society scatters Scripture truth along undenominational and non-controversial lines.
Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Sir William Quartus Ewart, Bart., Belfast. c2483

THE SHIVERING AND SUFFERING POOR.

MR. ROBERT GLADSTONE and ED. DOBREE, Esq., are heartily thanked for their Donations for Food, Coals, and Blankets for the sick and needy. Further help greatly required.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING, for local committee, Vicar, etc., thirty-four years St. Paul's, Clerkenwell.—45, Colebrooke-row, N. Bankers: London and County.

Water-cress and Flower Girls' Mission,

CLERKENWELL CLOSE, E.C.

The cry of little Children, Friendless Girls and Women, is most distressing as the advent of winter deprives them of their means of livelihood. Our doors are besieged by those who are anxious for admission to our Orphanage, Servants' Training Homes and Refuges.

In order to meet these distressing claims we earnestly solicit the Christian sympathy of our friends and helpers. The 27th Annual Report will be forwarded on application.—JOHN GROOM, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE WELCOME HOME

FOR SAILORS of VARIOUS NATIONS.

FREE SUPPERS ARE GIVEN TO THE DESTITUTE & UNEMPLOYED

as often as funds permit. Donations will be received by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Friends always welcome.

Homeward Bound!
THE UNLOADING OF
The Christmas Boat,

Laden with gifts for Sailors, their Wives and Children will (God willing) take place Saturday, December 30, 1893.
Friends wishing to contribute Cargo are requested to communicate with MISS CHILD, at The Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, London, E.

— THE —

RESCUE SOCIETY,

—79,—

Finsbury Pavement,

LONDON, E.C.

THE need of help is now most urgent, and one of the Homes must be closed shortly if liberal help is not forthcoming speedily.

16,176 young women and girls have been admitted to the Homes since the Society was established in 1853.

Nine Homes are supported, accommodating 250 inmates at the same time.

The object is to reclaim from and to prevent falling into a life of sin; special Maternity cases are admitted; while a small Lock Hospital is also maintained.

Over 700 applications for admission have been received in nine months, testifying most abundantly to the need of all the Homes.

A generous response to this appeal is earnestly solicited to avoid so sad a calamity as reducing the number of the Homes.

Contributions may be forwarded to the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

C. STUART THORPE.

79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Fifty years' Triumphs of the Gospel among the Jews.

JUBILEE CELEBRATION
OF THE
BRITISH SOCIETY,
1893.

President - Rev. J. HILES HITCHENS, D.D.

Jubilee Motto: "The World for Christ through the Jew."

This Society was founded and fostered by such saintly men as the Revs. Ridley Herschell, Andrew A. Bonar, and Robert Murray McCheyne. Thousands of Jewish souls have been won for Christ, such as Lydia Montefiore, aunt of Sir Moses Montefiore.

A Jubilee Challenge—The offer of £100.

"A Poor Man," who has been a Subscriber for twenty-seven years, has kindly offered to give £100 when the amount of the Jubilee Fund reaches £4,950.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Rev. J. DUNLOP, at the Offices of the Society, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C., and by the Editor of "THE CHRISTIAN."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

All-night Shelter Rescue Work
(Thrawl Street, Spitalfields).

ALREADY, since this work began, 45,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with the most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual pressure, and from present appearances a very hard season is apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

JAS. ATKINSON, Secretary.

28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, London, N. c2754

LONDON CITY MISSION.

Nearly 500 Missionaries are now employed in beseeching the masses in the Metropolis to be reconciled to God through Jesus Christ our Lord, and to unite themselves with some section of the visible Church. House to House visitation; personal dealing; work purely undenominational.

FUNDS MUCH NEEDED.

Communications to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., or to the Secretaries, ROBERT DAWSON, B.A., T. HUTCHINSON, M.A., 3, Bridewell Place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

"BRIDGE OF HOPE,"
Ratcliff Highway, St. George's, E.

Miss Steer will be thankful if friends will send for parcels of Hosiery and Knitted Goods, or Useful Garments, made by the young women in the Refuge, suitable for distribution at Christmas. Carriage paid to any Railway Station for parcels over £1.
Discount allowed for Sales.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Object.—To spread the knowledge of Christ in heathen lands.
Fields of Labour.—China, from chief centres; North India, South India, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia; New Guinea.
Forward Movement.—One hundred additional workers before 1895, when the Society's centenary will be celebrated. Forty-five of these have gone, others are appointed. Prayer, men and women fitted for the work, and money are needed; Contributions, remittances, and payments to be made to Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., Home Secretary, 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

"I'm not hungry, Mother."

Among many touching stories we have listened to lately was that of a Christian mother. That morning found the family fireless, and with nothing more than a small crust for herself and four children, two of whom are of school age. When told how matters stood, the elder child spoke up, saying, "Give baby the crust, mother, I'm not hungry!" and contentedly went to school a-fasting. This is only one of many sorrowful cases daily met with by the visitors of the North-East London Gospel Mission. Help for these would be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Princes Gate, South Kensington, S.W., or by the Director, WILLIAM CHORLEY, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N., or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

"WHAT TO EAT AND WHAT TO AVOID."

This Valuable Book is written by a London Physician for the guidance of those who suffer from Weak Stomach or any form of Indigestion, Sluggish Liver, and Nervousness. It shows how strength may be Speedily Regained, and gives a deal of Sound and Sensible Advice. Sent Gratis and Post Free by Guy's Tonic Company, 6, Sloane-square, London, S.W. Name The Christian when writing.

The Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

(MISS ANNIE R. TAYLOR.)

The origin of the Mission was Miss Annie R. Taylor's journey in 1892-93 into Tibet proper, in the course of which she proved the possibility of gaining an entrance for the Gospel into that country, so long believed to be closed to the emissaries of Christ.

The object of the Mission is to evangelise Tibet, and so remove one of the last barriers to the fulfilment of our Lord's words, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

The field of the projected operations is in the country of Tibet itself, and not the border tribes amongst whom work is already commenced. Tibet, which lies north of India and west of China, is a large country, covering an area about ten times as great as England and Scotland together, and yet without a single Protestant Missionary (so far as known) within its border.

The field is in some senses not a difficult one, as there is no marked hostility to Englishmen; but, on the contrary, the Tibetans have a more favourable opinion of the English than of any other Europeans.

The climate is undoubtedly very cold, but dry and healthy; and anyone proposing to offer for the work should possess a good circulation, and a constitution favourable to withstanding cold.

The language to be acquired is by no means difficult when compared with Chinese, Arabic, and other Eastern languages. The Moravians labouring in Little Tibet (which is under English protection) have compiled a dictionary and grammar of the Tibetan language; and have translated into Tibetan all the New and part of the Old Testament—thus removing at once one of the greatest difficulties generally experienced in entering a new country.

The proposal is, to start with a band of twelve or more men, waiting until a foothold has been obtained in the country, and some of the rough places made smooth, before inviting women to face the serious difficulties and dangers that must inevitably exist in any pioneer work such as this. The band of men, when ready, will go to Darjeeling in the Himalayas, near the frontier of Tibet, and within a few days' journey of Llassa, the capital of Tibet, there to learn the language from Tibetan teachers before seeking entrance into the country. That when they are thus ready, God will open the door, there is no manner of doubt. It is encouraging to be able to say that friends in Darjeeling are looking forward to the arrival of this first band; and are generously arranging to secure and pay the rent of a house for their use, for the year that they will probably be there.

Already three or four men have been accepted for this work; one of them—Mr. Evan Mackenzie of Dingwall, who is married—taking his wife with him, so that Miss Annie Taylor will not be the only woman in the band. The offers of others are under consideration.

The principles upon which it is proposed to work will be those of the China Inland Mission (with which Mission Miss Annie Taylor became associated when first going to China several years ago), so far as they can apply to a work just at its commencement, and except as modified by what follows. As these principles are already widely known, it will only be necessary here to shortly mention the leading ones amongst them.

1. As the work is primarily that of Evangelisation, true-hearted and humble men of God, experienced in Gospel work at home, and holding the doctrinal truths mentioned in clause 4, will be welcomed, irrespective of what branch of the Church of Christ they may belong to at home.

2. So far as headship or leadership is concerned, it is proposed to be guided by the principle enunciated by our Lord—"he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." Subject to this Miss Annie Taylor will lead the work until such time as God manifestly places the responsibility upon some other. In all cases requiring special consideration or involving important issues, she will take counsel with all her fellow-workers. There will be no home Board of Management, unless God should clearly indicate such to be his will; when the assistance of friends in full sympathy with the work might be sought for. Such home correspondence and work as may be necessary will, for the present, becarried on by the Hon. Secretary and Treasurer.

3. Relying absolutely on God's Word, "the labourer is worthy of his hire," and "take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed? for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things;"—and believing further that the essential difference, intended to be shown in this regard, between heathen and Christians, was, that whilst all these things are sought after by the Gentiles (or heathen), the Christian is to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness,—it is not proposed to seek any sort of guarantee of support, or ask for any collections, or apply elsewhere than direct to God for money; consequently the workers will not be guaranteed anything in the nature of a salary. It is desired to have none in the Mission who are unprepared to cast themselves wholly upon God in this matter. He who feedeth the sparrows will not fail to meet the needs of those He counts much better than they. At the same time, all freewill gifts received for this work will be used in meeting the needs of those whose steps are led of God to go forth to this work in Christ's name.

4. It will be required that those who seek to join the Mission be sound in the faith on all the main points of Christian doctrine, which may be particularised as follows:—1. The Divine Inspiration of the Scriptures; 2. The Trinity of the Godhead; 3. The Fall of Man, and his consequent need of Regeneration; 4. The Atonement for man's sin; 5. Justification by Faith in Christ alone; 6. The Resurrection of the Dead; 7. The Eternity of Reward and Punishment. They will also be asked their views on the guidance of the Holy Spirit and the efficacy of prayer, as being points of importance in relation to the Christian life of the missionary.

It will be interesting to those who have read Miss Annie Taylor's letter about the Mission in The Christian of October 19th last, as well as to those who have kindly invited her to take part in Conferences and Meetings in several places throughout the kingdom, and to the many who have so readily contributed to the launching of the Mission, to know that sufficient money has already been received to take out to India and support for some time whilst there, all those who have already been accepted. The need is still for men; and it is specially hoped in writing this paper that it may come into the hands of some who are already prepared by God for this work. Men of God, who habitually study God's Word as their rule of life, who enjoy strengthening themselves in God by prayer and meditation, who do not look for any arm of flesh on which to rest in going forth to God's work—these are they who will be warmly welcomed into this part of God's great harvest field. Any reader of this, unable to give himself to the work, but desiring nevertheless to have partnership in this Gospel enterprise, can greatly aid by bearing up the work, and the needy field, continually before God in prayer; or where it is desired to assist by money gift, by sending such to Miss Annie Taylor or the Hon. Treasurer.

It remains to say that the pioneer party expect to leave England for India, in February next. Besides other Meetings in and about London, a final farewell Meeting will (D.V.) be held in Exeter Hall, of which due notice will be given direct to each subscriber and also in the columns of The Christian.

Brethren and sisters, "the harvest truly is great, but the labourers few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest." Such prayer made in relation to this work will be most highly valued. A weekly meeting for prayer and conversation in regard to the work will be held (D.V.) on Friday evenings at eight o'clock at the address at Ayers Villa, Church Road, Upper Norwood. The house adjoins the Queen's Hotel. All friends of foreign missions are cordially invited.

November 15th, 1893.

MISS ANNIE R. TAYLOR'S

ADDRESS IN ENGLAND (until Feb. 15th, 1894), is Ayers Villa, Church Road, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

ADDRESS IN INDIA—c/o Pastor H. Rylands-Brown, The Manse, Darjeeling, India.

The following have kindly consented to act as Referees.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, China Inland Mission, Mildmay, London.
Dr. T. J. BARNARDO, Stepney Causeway, London, E.
F. W. CROSSLEY, Esq., Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester.
Rev. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D., 2, Newton Terrace, Glasgow.
Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, Melbourne, Victoria.
Miss MACPHERSON, Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green Road, London, E.
JAMES E. MATHIESON, Esq., 47, Phillimore Gardens, London, W.
R. C. MORGAN, Esq. (Editor of The Christian), 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.
Pastor H. RYLANDS-BROWN, The Manse, Darjeeling, India.
ROBERT WILSON, Esq., Broughton Grange, Cockermouth.

Hon. Treasurer:
Mr. WILLIAM SHARP, 13, Walbrook, London, E.C. (All Letters to be marked "Tibetan Mission.")

Hon. Secretary (pro tem.)
Mrs. WILLIAM SHARP, "Roswyn," Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

Bankers:
Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM, BOUVERIE, & Co., 54, Lombard Street, London.

5000 Children needing Bread.

It distresses me to have to remind the Friends of Waif Children everywhere that the recent falling off in our receipts has been so persistently maintained that we are now in urgent need of help to pay the daily food bills.

I cannot, however, believe that my Great Family of Orphan Children will be allowed to suffer actual want, and I am persuaded that our Heavenly Father is prompting me now to send forth this statement of our urgently pressing needs, as a fresh call to service, to His Stewards.

To stimulate and encourage others to give, "A Friend" (S.) offers £100 if I can secure Forty-nine similar gifts at once; and "Beta" promises £50 if Fifty others will follow his example. He will also give £10 if One Hundred others will give the same amount. If these gifts can only be secured, the deficiency would be made up at once.

Gratefully will even the smallest donations be received and acknowledged by our Treasurer, Mr. Wm. Fowler; by the Chairman of our Committee, Mr. Samuel G. Sheppard; by our Bankers, London and South-Western Bank (Bow Branch); or by

Yours, for Christ's sake, among the Children of the Streets,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

Macready House, Henrietta St., Covent Garden.

Founded in 1876 by Courthope Todd.

The Institute was built in the year 1885, at the cost of £5,600.

Patron: H.R.H. Princess Christian.
President: His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Dublin.
Vice-Patrons:
H.R.H. Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck.
H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

Home for Fatherless Children of "the Profession."
Maternity Boxes. Clothing Club.

Contributions for Home and Foreign Work may be sent to the Treasurer, Joseph Peters, Esq. (as above), or to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, office of The Christian.

AN ANTIDOTE TO "BORDERLAND."
In Crown 8vo, Five Shillings.

DEMONOLOGY AND WITCHCRAFT:
With special reference to modern "Spiritualism," so called; and the "Doctrines of Demons," by

ROBERT BROWN,

Author of "Outlines of Prophetic Truth;" "The Hidden Mystery: or, the Revelations of the Word;" "The Personality and History of Satan;" "Gleanings from the Book of Ruth;" etc., etc., etc. c2091

London: JOHN F. SHAW & Co., Paternoster Row.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co.'s
BOOK SALOON,
9, PATERNOSTER ROW

(UP THE PASSAGE).

Contains one of the largest and most varied collections of
NEW BOOKS FOR THE SEASON,
ANNUALS, CHRISTMAS CARDS, etc.
CONVENIENTLY ARRANGED FOR INSPECTION.

NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

THE ROYAL SEA BATHING INFIRMARY.—Founded at Margate, 1791.—For the Scrofulous poor of all England. Patron.—THE QUEEN.
FUNDS are most URGENTLY NEEDED. The Directors have been compelled to close 140 beds. Bankers, Messrs. Coutts and Co. R. RUTHVEN PYM, Treasurer.
A. PEIRCE, Secretary.
Offices, 30, Charing-cross, S.W. c2792

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

WINTER OF 1893-4.

During this depressing and inclement season MEETINGS are being HELD by the Committee in the most POPULOUS and DISTRESSED DISTRICTS of London, especially at the East end, where so much degradation and suffering are found.
The MEETINGS, both afternoon and night, are WELL ATTENDED by Fallen and Distressed Girls, and from every Meeting YOUNG WOMEN have been SENT to the HOMES.
The NIGHT MISSIONARY still missions the streets during these trying nights in order to RESCUE any poor PENITENT WANDERER. Copies of the Gospel, suitable Tracts, &c., are judiciously distributed.
FUNDS are most urgently needed.
£5 Donation will defray the NECESSARY COST of missioning a district and providing a plain meal for the poor half-famished Girls, giving them an opportunity of listening to the Gospel of Salvation, and offering facility for a return to a life of virtue and industry.
Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, offices of The Christian, will receive contributions.

J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Superintendent.
8A, Red Lion Square, Holborn, E.C. C. WILSON McCREE, Secretary.

STRANGERS' REST FOR SAILORS,

163, ST. GEORGE'S STREET, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY, E.

THE SIXTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING

WILL BE HELD (D.V.) ON

Tuesday, December 12th, 1893.

The Chair will be taken at 6.30 by

JAMES E. MATHIESON, Esq., J.P.,

SUPPORTED AMONG OTHERS BY

JOHN CORY, Esq., J.P.; ALGERNON C. P. COOTE, Esq.; W. H. MATTHEWS, Esq.; JOHN McCALL, Esq.; W. H. SEAGRAM, Esq.; J. HERBERT TRITTON, Esq.; Colonel H. G. MACGREGOR; Colonel J. F. MORTON; and Dr. NEATBY.

ADDRESSES by Dr. BARNARDO, Mrs. M. BAXTER, Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH, Rev. Dr. MOORE, and others.

TEA AND COFFEE AT 5.30. THE LORD'S SUPPER AT 8.30.

Cards, with map showing how to reach the "Rest," (free) on application to J. T. Isaac, Hon. Sec.
Articles for the SAILORS' CHRISTMAS TREE, such as Cuffs, Helmets, Mufflers, Steering Gloves Needlebooks, &c., &c., are greatly needed, and should be sent to the Hon. Sec. at the "Rest," by Dec. 20.

c2831 J. THEO. ISAAC, Hon. Sec.

HOME TEACHING SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND.

New Contributions will be thankfully received. 16 blind teachers and guides itinerate with Moon's books daily. St. Luke xiv. 14.
Bankers: Barclay & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.
Ralph Tait, Secretary, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Just Ready. Published by subscription only. Price 2s. 6d. post free.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CONVENT LIFE.

By MISS CUSACK.

Formerly known as the Nun of Kenmare. Convent Life fully described. With an Appendix on Miss Golding's case.

Send orders to Miss Cusack, Castle Court, Bournemouth East.

MR. AND MRS. W. S. CAINE.

MR. CAINE is so well known in public life that all will read with pleasure of his earnestness and devotion in the religious and philanthropic spheres. The son of a Liverpool merchant, he was but eighteen years of age when he started a Gospel Mission in Egremont, and worked there indefatigably until changing circumstances compelled him to leave the neighbourhood, so he transferred it to the Presbyterian body. It is encouraging to know that it is still prospering and doing much good service.

Mrs. CAINE was born at Liverpool, being a daughter of the Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, pastor of Myrtle St. Church. Though only nineteen when married, she started her new life with the earnest purpose of living for others, determining to make some folks happier every day of her life. Into her husband's mission work she entered heartily, taking a personal share in the Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and Mothers' Meeting. In those days it was more difficult than at present to cultivate total abstinence, but Mr. and Mrs. Caine began life together as abstainers, though they supplied friends visiting them with their favourite alcoholic beverages. But being convinced of the inconsistency of this, they had the courage a few years later to banish alcohol from their cellars. Not only did they give up the use of it in every form themselves, and try to discontinue its use among their friends, but they did all in their power to help those who had fallen under the disastrous spell of drink, by starting a Home for Inebriate Women at Seacombe, choosing those in whom they were personally interested.

(From Photograph by the Cameron Studio, 70, Mortimer Street, Regent Street.)

(From Photograph by Mr. Albert Sachs, Bradford.)

On their removal from Seacombe to Liverpool the Home was transferred also, and some time later it passed into the hands of the Ladies' Temperance Association, of which Mrs. Caine has been for many years a hard-working promoter. The ladies of this society visit the police courts, and are very successful in rescue work, cottage meetings, drawing-room meetings, etc. The Home has recently been enlarged, and is called the Vergmont Sanatorium. It is in splendid working order, and the loving care and thoughtful kindness shown by the ladies in charge of patients are greatly blessed in the cure of souls as well as bodies. First and second class patients are taken, and the fees thus procured help to maintain some in the Home who cannot afford a fee, and who, without this help, would have no refuge from their special temptation. This Sanatorium can be safely recommended to anyone seeking such for unfortunate friends.

While living at Liverpool Mr. and Mrs. Caine were constantly engaged in service of various kinds at the nine mission halls in connection with Myrtle-street Church.

In 1880 Mr. Caine stood for Parliament, was returned for Scarborough, and the same year made his permanent residence in London. By his thoroughgoing earnest attention to public duties his time was fully occupied, but he had grown so accustomed to care for the spiritual welfare of others, that he could not rest without some special work of this kind. In 1884 he took an old villa in South Lambeth, called Wheatsheaf House, and converted it into a mission hall. His coadjutors in this undertaking were eighteen working men. In six months' time it had to be enlarged to meet the requirements of the people thronging to it. Now it seats about 500 persons, and is a grand rallying point for all kinds of work in the neighbourhood. Sundays and week days it is continuously open. Prayer meetings commence as early as 7 a.m. Mrs. Caine conducts a Sunday afternoon Bible-class for women, and Mr. Caine preaches every Sunday evening, and presides at the communion on the last Sunday of each month. There are about 250 members.

This is done in an entirely unsectarian spirit, because it is realised that the Church of Christ is greater than all churches, and includes those who are not adherents to any ecclesiastical system. "All are welcome to join who avow their belief in God as their Father, in Jesus Christ as their Saviour, in the Holy Spirit as their Comforter and Guide, and in the Bible as the one authority as to religious faith. All must promise to work in brotherly love for the spread of Christ's kingdom." That last clause contains much wisdom, and is probably the reason that things move happily, healthily, and harmoniously, with little of that fault-finding and petty jealousy by which even Christian work is sometimes marred.

Besides the Sunday services, which include open-air meetings, Sunday-school, Bible classes, prayer meetings, and other occasional services, there are temperance and mothers' meetings; the last is fortunate in having Mrs. Caine as president. A Girls' Guild of Good Life has been started by Miss Caine, and is wonderfully appreciated by the young women of the neighbourhood.

A Young Men's Association is in a strong and vigorous condition, practical Christianity being its mainstay, the Christ-life lived daily in workshop and home, with no mere namby pamby sentiment that ends in talk. Mr. Caine's eldest son takes great interest in this part of the work, though the keeping of Oxford terms prevents him from giving as much time to it as he wishes. There is also a flourishing Band of Hope with 500 members, and various friendly societies. Lectures are given on social topics, and slate clubs exist for both men and women.

All the members at Wheatsheaf Hall are workers. The superintendence and direction and much hard work lie with the leaders, but they are helped not only by a few influential people of their own class, but by the bulk of the working people around them. There are twenty secretaries in the work, and these have many helpers in carrying out projects. Thus, throughout all its branches the circles widen, spreading interest and keeping all in touch. One of the great points insisted upon is that having experienced a change of life themselves, they must pray and work for others, and not remain babes in faith requiring continual nursing. They are taught to pray and speak in private and public, to live for Christ and to support their work by such contributions as their means allow.

Fervent zeal begets activity, and this has necessitated the opening of a sub-mission in Vauxhall, called Caine Hall. This was started in a coal-shed, until increasing numbers made a move necessary. Mr. Caine raised the funds for this and for another sub-mission at Hartington House.

One great source of work in these missions is the district visiting. 4000 families are visited monthly, and supplied with "The Wheatsheaf," a forceful, lively little paper containing much wholesome knowledge for the everyday conduct of life, combined with the word in season which goes straight home to the higher nature of the readers.

A library of 5000 volumes, accumulated at Wheatsheaf House (many of them being left by Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown to his daughter), formed a nucleus of the present Lambeth Free Public Library.

All this growing and increasing work, combined with heavy parliamentary duties, and much service given to the temperance cause by speech and pen in England, India, and elsewhere, has caused Mr. Caine to feel he must lighten his labours by extending his responsibility, and he has therefore invited the Congregational Union to share some of his labours in connection with these Missions, and his work in future will be identified with that body.

Mr. Caine is president of the British Temperance League, vice-president of the National Temperance League, president of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association, and probably the only Nonconformist vice-president of the Church of England Temperance Society. He is the founder and hon. sec. of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, in connection with which he has twice visited India, and formed 131 branches in that dependency. Many people say "The Englishman's home is his castle." Mr. Caine does not give this its usual insular meaning. His home is not only for his own enjoyment, but for God's glory and the help and benefit of others. His mission people are at times freely invited, while temperance meetings and drawing-room meetings for all kinds of philanthropic work are of common occurrence.

It is rare to find a man and his wife so united on all points. This is so much the case in this instance that it is difficult to speak of them apart. Mrs. Caine is not only ready to buckle on her husband's armour, but is also ready to go forth and fight if need be. She believes that women should first do the duty lying nearest in their own homes, and, having done so, turn to the duty to their neighbour, which is an expansion of that, binding upon all. Where a woman is universally loved by her own sex, strong proof is given of much genuine ability and real goodness lying beneath any charm of presence or manner which these more critical judges are quicker to penetrate. Mrs. Caine has the unbounded confidence of her sister workers in the variety of work in which she is interested. Not only to the very poor is her thoughtful love shown, but to that much more tried and needy class whose patient silence under the daily fret and worry of sordid but respectable poverty so often found amongst curates, dissenting Ministers, Missionaries and others.

The great strength of her life lies in her perpetual possession of a quiet mind. She does not rush from temperance meeting to prayer meeting or committee in a ferment of hurry. God's next bit of work awaits her in its appointed time; whether social, secular or spiritual, it is all his work, and she knows that, "in quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

Mrs. Caine is specially interested, and has done much work for, those victims of our social customs known as barmaids, in connection with the society of which Miss Morley is hon. sec. Some people are surprised to learn that not less than 120,000 women in our land are employed in and about public-houses. All of these need the help and sympathy of their more fortunate sisters. Many schemes for the betterment of the lives and homes of factory girls, and the improved condition of young people in shops and business houses, receive warm support from Mrs. Caine, as does also the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants. She and her husband, who is chairman, are both members of the executive committee of the Metropolitan and National Nursing Association, a branch of which exists in Clapham under the name of the South London District Nursing Association. This society is exceedingly useful in nursing the sick poor in their own homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Caine's eldest daughter was recently married to Mr. J. H. Roberts, M.P. Their second daughter is studying for the medical profession, and bringing her healing art to bear upon many sufferers in a very poor district of South London. The third daughter has just left Newnham to aid her mother in the many duties devolving upon her in the home circle.

A NEW INSTITUTE has been opened in Pear Tree-road, Derby, in connection with the Normanton Working Men's Temperance Association.

MR. MOODY AND CHICAGO.

The following interview, recorded in the Chicago Inter Ocean, was held with Mr. Moody at his office in the Bible Institute just before his departure for Cincinnati:—

"Mr. Moody, you have been working for the World's Fair people this summer; what would induce you to come back to Chicago and hold a campaign in behalf of the people of Chicago themselves?"

"Only one thing would induce me to come back to Chicago. If the business men of Chicago would ask me back and promise that if I should come they would erect a building somewhere near the corner of Madison and Halsted streets on the West Side, for the benefit of the working people, I think I should come and lead in the movement. My idea is a building in which there should be a large audience-room, where the working people could gather together and hear Gospel addresses and music and lectures. Another part of the building should be given to a coffee palace, where men could congregate for a pleasant evening without the harmful surroundings of the saloon. Other parts of the building should be devoted to rooms in which various organisations of labouring people could meet to discuss the issues in which they are interested. I am told that a saloon-keeper on the West Side has fitted up a place where various bodies of workingmen meet, and that in order to meet the heads of six of the leading labour organisations of this city one must visit that saloon. The new university is doing a grand work for a certain class of our people in the south part of the city.

"Mr. Armour's institute and mission are doing and going to do a magnificent work for another class on the South Side, but the West Side is a part where most of the labouring people live. The very heart of the West Side is the corner of Madison and Halsted streets, and in this part of the city very little is being done. Nothing will lift up the large portion of the population of this part of our city but the Gospel, and there is no place to proclaim it on a large scale. We must get in touch with the masses and show our sympathy with them if we are to help them."

"What are you trying to do in the Bible Institute?"

"One great purpose is to raise up men for just this sort of work—men who will be willing to lay their lives alongside of the labouring class and the poor, and bring the Gospel to bear upon their lives; and in order to do this satisfactorily we need a place where they can be trained by actual experience. We have a mission hall on Madison-street, just west of Halsted, that costs us about 2000dols. a year rent, but it will only accommodate 250 people. We keep it running with the various meetings until midnight, but it does not meet the demands of the neighbourhood."

"I understand that you intend to go to London next fall. What is your reason for going instead of working here in America?"

"I go to London because the people are accessible. In the most neglected sections of London there are houses seating from three to five thousand people. There are masses to be reached here in Chicago, but they are not accessible because of the lack of suitable buildings."

REV. JOHN YAIR, who is labouring as pastor of four small Baptist churches in the parish of Clarendon, Jamaica, writes that notwithstanding many difficulties, God is blessing the work and saving souls. He has much building on hand, and has to do a good deal of it himself, which, having learned in past years the joiner trade in Scotland, he is able to do. His wife has suffered much from fever by reason of the condition of the old hut in which they have now to live. His address is Tophill, Chapelton P.O., Jamaica.

AN APPEAL FROM MR. MOODY.

Dear Friends,—Throughout the summer the special evangelistic services in Chicago have been laid before the readers of The Christian. They have learned of increase of interest and attendance beyond my highest expectations. During October we held over one hundred meetings every Sunday, gathering from seventy to seventy-three thousand people and as many more during the week. This compelled us to hire five or six theatres and a number of large halls, holding from one to three meetings in each daily.

I have been much cheered by the eagerness of the people to hear the simple Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. From all over this country have come encouraging words from those who have been helped in these services.

In response to several appeals, God has moved the Christians of America and Great Britain to send in money, so that we have been able to meet the most of the indebtedness. I have been especially touched by the gifts of the Sunday-school children, the Christian Endeavour Societies, and the Young Men's Christian Associations. One lady gave up her visit to the Fair, and sent the money to us. Another gave the price of a new dress and wore her old one. When Christians have made such sacrifices, it is not strange that God has blessed the work.

The work could never have reached such proportions without the Bible Institute as a nucleus. Its teachers and students have strained every nerve to meet this great emergency, its doors have been open to receive those who have come to help us. But now, with winter before us, and the country financially depressed, the Bible Institute faces an empty treasury. I ask the friends who have rejoiced with us over the summer's victory, Shall this fountain-head be crippled in its work for the ensuing year? Will you not come to our aid with funds, so that the three hundred young men and women within our doors may be equipped for efficient Christian service? Do not hesitate to send a gift because it is small.—Yours in the work,

D. L. Moody.

80, Institute-place, Chicago.

A CONVERSATIONAL BIBLE CLASS.

For some years a conversational Bible class has been held every Sunday afternoon in the Town Hall, Brixton, presided over by Mr. Schofield. It has been the means of great blessing to numbers of visitors, who have, year after year, attended these meetings, and given testimony to the help they have received. Numbers of persons who have come to take the "waters" have gone away rejoicing, having found the "water of life" that never fails to heal the sin-sick soul.

During the summer months Mr. Schofield and his helpers have held some thirty open-air services, attended by thousands of people, and we believe a good work has been done. This is the fifteenth year of open-air work. A praise meeting was recently held in the Town Hall to praise the Lord for the season's work. A most enjoyable evening was spent, an interesting programme gone through, and several addresses were given.

Through the summer months valuable help has been rendered by the members of the Village Mission. We trust the Lord will continue to bless the work carried on in Brixton.

Effie Schofield.

Boys' Home, Southwark.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan writes:—"We have been passing through a time of heavy trial and great anxiety. We have had a most serious outbreak of scarlet fever here. Our Home is very full, and the public hospitals are so crowded that we cannot get cases away promptly, so the risk of infection is greatly increased by the delay. We are to-day burying a poor boy who was carried off with fearful rapidity by a most malignant type—only ill on Saturday and died on Monday night.

"The amount of illness in London now is very serious, and the conditions of life generally in this forthcoming winter are a cause for grave concern and humiliation before God, and prayer for his gracious interposition at such a climax."

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN'S WORK.

Very interesting letters have been received from Rabbi Lichtenstein since his removal from Tapio Szele to Budapest in August last. For the sake of the many who are, with prayerful interest, following this noble witness for Christ, I make a few extracts before I go on to speak of this last pamphlet. It seems that the Jewish community in the Hungarian capital did not relish the idea of this disturber of their false peace settling in their midst, and brought pressure to bear on the Jewish landlord to prevent the Rabbi from taking possession of the house he had hired. "At the last hour," he says, "when we arrived on the scene with our furniture, the landlord offered me three times the earnest money that I should forego the contract, but as I resolutely rejected it, he made pretext that the present sanitary condition of the dwelling would make it impossible for me to take possession."

They did at last establish themselves in the house, and, to quote again from one of his letters, he says: "Just now the landlord was here, and assured me of his personal esteem, and regretted much to have been under compulsion to put every hindrance in my way." Speaking of the beginning of his work in Budapest, the Rabbi says: "The afternoon of the day before yesterday (the Sabbath) I gave an address in one of the synagogues on the weekly Haphtorah (portion appointed for the day), which happened to be Isaiah liv. The substance of my address was that Israel, notwithstanding his true mission to be a teacher of the nations, has been unfruitful, while the children of the desert (Gentile Christians) are straining with all might to glorify and sanctify the name of God. But Israel, too, is enlarging his tents, thousands of his noblest and best children are striving to bring in the neglected, to teach the unbelieving, to instruct sinners, and to lead Israel as a nation back to his high calling. The applause at the end was extraordinary, and the congregation decided to honour me by inviting me in advance to preach during the approaching festivals."

A few days later, he writes: "It seems, however, that my times of trial are not yet over, for yesterday the president of the above-mentioned synagogue called on me, and regretted to tell me that they were threatened from influential quarters that the place would be closed if they even allowed me a seat there. This news troubled, but did not discourage me. Should it come to the worst, a separate congregation will be formed, where I can hope to speak undisturbed." Writing at the end of last month, he says, speaking of a visit to Peczel, where he had been invited by a certain Jewish doctor, who turned out to be a convert to Romanism: "In that place I had a strange experience. I actually met two cathedral clergy from Waitzen, who, together with Dr. H——, tried to induce me by alluring offers to the Bishop's residence in Waitzen, to take charge of the Hebrew MSS. of the Archiepiscopal Palace. The special inducements held out reminded me of Satan."

Already the way is opening before him in that city, where there are about 80,000 Jews, and by his spoken testimony and personal example some are being influenced for Christ, but, as it was manifest from the beginning, the work of Rabbi Lichtenstein is not merely to gather out individual Jews from here or there to a knowledge of the truth now, but, like Joseph Rabinowitch, to be a prophet preparing the way of Christ among the Jewish nation. His chief means of usefulness is his pen, in the wielding of which God has given him special power. It is, therefore, with great interest and thankfulness that the friends of Israel everywhere will welcome this fresh powerful "appeal," which is, in many ways, in advance of anything he has written before. I hope that before long there will be an English edition, but meanwhile I give a translation of a few fragments from the German. He asks the Jews to read and examine his words without prejudice, giving no heed to the deceiving voices of their many false leaders, and then continues:—

"It is true I have penetrated to the Holy of Holies, I have boldly (my enemies say rashly) crossed the Rubicon. I walk in an hitherto untrodden path, which Jews, and especially Rabbis, have avoided as they would the plague. I have ventured to pay homage to the Founder of Christianity. I have called Him the Redeemer of the World, the Saviour, but more especially our Redeemer and long-expected Messiah. Yes, I have done all this, but can any less drastic means effect Israel's salvation? Israel, scattered in all the world, dismembered and disunited, who has so long and with such yearning waited, but in vain, the coming of the Angel of the Covenant. What, who, can effect the regeneration and resurrection of Israel? Who and what shall bring to pass the prophesied miracle of Ezekiel xxxvii?"

After quoting Mal. iii. 1, he says: "I would first of all make my full and honest confession, that it is my unalterable conviction, after earnest search, that Christ, and none but He, is intended in this prophetic passage. As a Rabbi grown grey in office, I affirm that Jesus is the prophesied Messiah of Israel; Christ, and no other, is the Angel of the Covenant, for whom we long, and whose coming has been the constant expectation of our people. He is come! This is now my cry of rejoicing, which my tongue and pen, and, if God will, my prolonged life, shall serve to make known."

David Baron.

23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

(To be concluded.)

AMONG THE MINERS.

Dear Sir,—My present sphere of labour is among a population composed almost exclusively of miners and their families. The appeal to which you have so kindly responded was sent out when I was crushed by the failure of the London conference. After eleven trying and exhausting weeks of relief work, we seemed then to have all our work to do over again, with the terrible disadvantage of having drained all our friends. Every day brings new demands upon us. Thrifty, sober, pious people, who had no need of aid in the early stages of the struggle, are now under the painful necessity of applying for charitable help.

I rejoice to state that the response to my appeal has enabled me to do much to alleviate the prevailing distress. I have just returned from a distribution of provisions to one hundred women. Three hours earlier I was present at another, at which three hundred women were relieved. This morning at 11.30, the scholars of the Blackbrook British School (numbering 360) received a dinner of soup and bread, paid for out of money sent in response to the appeal. It is the sober truth to say that everyone was destitute, and many were absolutely without food until we relieved them.

As I referred to wages in the P.S. of my appeal, permit me here to add what I wish I had stated there, as it is a very important consideration—or should be, to those who want to arrive at facts. To the general public, the word "miner" defines any person working in or about the mines, whether actual coal-getter, fireman, drawer, etc. Now all but the coal-getter are paid a fixed daily wage, drawers being paid by the coal-getter, and the others by the coal-owner. All these men employed by the master are called day-wage men, and in this township they form at least 50 per cent. of the total number of persons working in or about the mines. Their wages in this township vary from 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d. per day, or an average of 4s. 6d. per day. Probably the greater number are receiving less than this average.

These men, as well as the actual coal-getters, were called upon to accept the proposed reductions. They would have been great sufferers had the original terms of the masters been accepted. Five days a week being the usual time the men are required to work, the average wage per week under the old scale was £1 2s. 6d., subject to deductions for oil, fines, club, etc.

I have possibly trespassed upon your patience, but as facts are not over-abundant in this great industrial controversy, I could not restrain my pen.—Faithfully yours, J. H. Riddette.

Haydock, St. Helens.

OPEN-AIR MISSION FOR IRELAND.—The executive committee of this mission has appointed Mr. George Williams, of Dublin, organising secretary, who already has established a branch in Cork, which has received the hearty support of the best clergymen and Christian workers in that city. On Sunday, November 19, four open-air services were held in the principal streets, attended by many hundreds of Roman Catholics. Excepting a few roughs, the crowd were, on the whole, willing to listen. Rev. F. W Ainley, of the Free Church, gave valuable assistance. It is intended to continue this street-preaching in Cork every Sunday, and prayer is requested for blessing.

THE L.M.S. MEETINGS.

During the past week a series of simultaneous missionary meetings, intended to awaken and deepen interest in missions, has been held in Congregational churches, chiefly (though not exclusively) in the metropolitan area. The Watchers' Band (a body somewhat analogous to the Gleaners' Union of the C.M.S.) held a special meeting on Monday evening at the Memorial Hall. Rev. A. Rowland presided, and Mr. J. E. Liddiard, one of the secretaries, stated that the branches of the Band now number 261; and that the present membership, exclusive of the Australasian Colonies, is 8240; 1000 having joined since October 1. Miss Winterbotham, of Tientsin, spoke of the help and strength to the missionary from the prayers of those at home, and urged her hearers to be constant in their prayers, which they would be if they remembered that the King for whom they watched was a watcher too. Mrs. de Selincourt urged attendance at the all-day prayer-meeting to be held at the Mission House on Monday, Dec. 4, for she felt that in prayer would be found the solution of all difficulties. Rev. H. T. Johnson, of Madagascar, spoke of the encouragement the missionaries experienced in the consciousness that they were being continually remembered in the prayers of friends at home. Mr. T. E. B. Wilson, organising secretary in Sheffield, told of objections that had been made to the Band, and of difficulties overcome. Rev. T. Grear testified how much the work at home had been helped by the members becoming definite in their prayers.

The final meeting of the series was held on Friday evening in Exeter Hall. Mr. W. Crosfield, M.P., who presided, rejoiced in the fact that during the week no fewer than 250 missionary meetings had been held in connection with the L.M.S., and with a view to rousing fresh interest in missions. There are, it must be confessed, difficulties and discouragements; yet looking back on the past, we learn that delay does not necessarily mean defeat.

Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary, said it was often hinted that straitened finances conduced to economy; but while there is some truth in this, there is a great deal to be said on the other side. Everything has to be viewed from the financial side, and countless opportunities are lost while the question of means is being considered. Proceeding, he explained that though the annual income of the L.M.S. had steadily increased during the past thirteen years, the work, and consequently the expenditure, had increased more rapidly. Thus, last year, although the contributions of the churches for ordinary purposes amounted to £67,342, and the donations for special purposes to £30,400, there was a deficiency of £22,000. It was expected that the present year would show a similar deficit, and as there was an adverse balance from the previous accounts, and as the Society's assets were mortgaged to the bank, the outlook was full of anxiety. He trusted the state of things he had revealed would arrest the attention of the churches, whose further help would surely not be wanting when they were reminded that during the period to which he had referred ninety-eight European and 3146 native workers had been added to the staff.

Rev. Charles Jukes, in the course of a stirring speech, sought to dissipate the idea that Madagascar has been Christianised. True, God has done great things in that island, but even yet the vast majority of the people are in gross heathen darkness. The rum dealer has found them, if the missionary has not; and they are being decimated by strong drink without a ray of Gospel light. The missionaries are seeking after these. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw in one part of the island and other noble workers in other parts are labouring devotedly, not among the Christianised Malagasy, but among the idolatrous and besotted savages of the heathen districts.

Rev. Jonathan Lees, of Tientsin, illustrated the progress of the Gospel in China by a number of delightful incidents, showing how the good news is spreading into remote corners and winning a way to many hearts. He (the speaker) believed that God's set time to favour China is dawning, and that the seed sown will soon be seen in a glorious harvest; but even now there are wonderful results, for which God must be praised.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers followed, devoting himself largely to finance, and calling for an advance of 50 per cent. in missionary contributions. He held that everyone who gave a pound annually might quite easily make it 30s., and many might make it £5 without feeling it at all. We never give to the point of blessing until our giving involves some sacrifice and self-denial.

Rev. M. Phillips, of Madras, gave a number of facts and figures showing how Christianity is spreading in India. The change he himself had seen in thirty-two years might well be regarded as marvellous.

Captain Turpie, the veteran commander of the "John Williams," concluded the proceedings with a sailor's talk on Missionary voyaging in the South Seas.

DR. J. G. PATON'S EMBASSY.

The progress in and around London of this venerable and venerated missionary has been like the triumphal march of a conqueror. Everywhere large throngs have greeted him, and have sat spell-bound by his native eloquence. After the great Exeter Hall meeting, he spoke to deeply interested crowds at Woodford in the East and Croydon in the South. On Sabbath, November 12, he preached three times (which seems to be his customary way of spending the Day of Rest) at Belgravia, the Regent-street Polytechnic, and Rev. F. B. Meyer's Church.

The same week he spoke at Blackheath, Eastbourne, Upper Norwood, Kensington, and Lower Norwood. On the Saturday evening, in the midst of the great storm, he crossed over to Ryde, I.W., where he preached on the Sunday. Monday found him at Brighton, where he faced two large companies in Hove Town Hall and the Dome. At this latter meeting one young man, inspired by the glowing appeals of the aged worker, offered himself for foreign work.

A drawing-room meeting at the house of Mr. T. A. Denny and Lady Hope was followed last week by visits to Reading, Southsea, Mildmay, and Birmingham. The great Town Hall of the midland city was crowded, and the occasion was a unique one. Last Sunday a return visit was paid to Manchester, when Dr. Paton pleaded the cause of the New Hebrides in Dr. Maclaren's church, Prebendary Macdonald's church, and one of the leading Congregational churches.

This week he fills appointments at Bradford and Newcastle; after a flying visit of a day to Glasgow, he crosses on Friday to Ireland, where he will remain till December 22, holding meetings at Belfast, Londonderry, Coleraine, Dublin, and elsewhere.

The Exeter Hall meeting will yield nearly £300; the Brighton friends contributed over £200, while larger or smaller collections have been made at the other places visited.

THE MILDMAY INSTITUTIONS.

A MEMORIAL TO THE LATE SIR S. A. BLACKWOOD.

Dear Sir,—It has been suggested that the memorial to the late Sir Arthur Blackwood, in connection with the work at Mildmay, should take some definite form. It is therefore proposed, with the full concurrence of his widow and family, and the hearty approval of the Mildmay authorities, that an effort be made to raise the sum of some £3000 as a tribute to the memory of our honoured and beloved friend, for the purpose of endowing two beds, one in the Cottage Hospital, which stands in the grounds adjoining the Conference Hall, in which hospital the remains of the late Sir Arthur were received and tenderly watched over previous to their interment; and one in the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green. Of both these hospitals Sir Arthur was a trustee.

As it is against the custom of Mildmay to appeal for itself, I venture to lay this matter before your many readers, who knew and valued the late Sir Arthur, in the belief that a liberal response will be forthcoming, and the sum asked for be speedily raised. Contributions may be sent to Colonel J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., or to me. It would be well for donors to specify that their contributions are for the "Sir Arthur Blackwood Mildmay Memorial Fund."—Yours faithfully,

Algernon C. P. Coote.

24, Powis-square, London, W.

SHEFFIELD.—The Open-Air Temperance Workers' Union is giving on Sunday mornings free breakfasts to hungry children. The guests usually number about a thousand.

MANCHESTER WESLEYAN MISSION.

The seventh anniversary of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission was celebrated last week, when large meetings were held in the Central Hall, Oldham-street. The past year was one of progress in all the most important respects. In the social department two hundred and forty-two men have passed through the "home" and "labour yard." Hundreds of men and women have been relieved with clothing and food, and work has been found for the majority. The rescue work of the Mission has been carried on with increasing vigour. In the Sunday-schools, children's services, and ragged schools over 3000 children attend every week. Congregations in the old chapels have increased so satisfactorily that every place may now be considered a success, and the prospect is said to be bright for the coming year.

The Sisters of the People delivered cheering addresses, and a stirring sermon was preached by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. In the evening, at a meeting in the Free Trade Hall, the president of the Conference (Rev. H. J. Pope) gave details of the work. He said there had been no diminution in the great spiritual success which had hitherto attended the Mission. During the year just closed the committee had taken over the old chapel in Great Ancoats-street. The congregation there had fallen to 100 or 150, although the chapel would hold a thousand, but in the few months that had elapsed since the chapel was taken over an entirely new face had been put upon operations there, and he fully expected before the year was out they would have the place crowded. Another good work was being done in the Red Bank district. These chapels were in the midst of a population of 85,000 people, who were the humiliation and the despair of the churches in Manchester, and amongst them they had got a foothold. Touching the question of finance, the president stated that the work all round had cost £4900, and there was a deficit of about £800. The committee therefore asked for £1000. At the close of the meeting it was announced that £882 had been promised towards the amount required.

South Wales.

Writing from Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mr. T. M. Wintle says:—We have given over 20,000 free meals to children, and about 8000 to parents, and are still giving meals to children daily at Pontnewydd and Pontymoile, and three times a week to parents. I think these works will all go on again when trade improves, and the price of coal again reaches its normal position. I am organising a labour party for the unemployed factory girls, and sending them out to do a day's washing, cleaning, etc. I am also seeking to fit up accommodation for five or six girls in the institute, to give them three months' training for domestic service, limiting the age from fifteen to eighteen. The cost per bed for two girls will be £4, and cost per week for each girl's maintenance 5s.

A Notable Victory.

Speaking of the defeat of the corrupt party in recent State elections, the New York Independent says:—

"It is a great and notable victory. The forces of evil have been routed; bosses, rings, race-track gamblers, unrighteous judges and the horde who delight in wrong-doing have been swept by the terrible wrath of a long-suffering people out of the public sight. The day of reckoning was long delayed. Wrong after wrong was done in high places, crime after crime was committed against justice and honour and good government, and the power of the law to punish seemed to be paralysed. But vengeance has come at last, and the American system of self-government has nobly vindicated itself. The people have risen in their might and majesty and scattered the enemies of honest rule like chaff. Thanks be to Him who ever worketh to deliver the people from the dominance of wrong."

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW, NEW BRIGHTON.—Mr. C. R. Capel, formerly a worker in Ratcliff-highway, but now engaged in Liverpool, reports the starting of a branch of the Christian Lifeboat Crew among the fishermen and lifeboat men of New Brighton. The meetings are well attended, and have been fruitful of encouraging spiritual results. Last year local friends sent in mufflers, scarves, and helmets to distribute among the sailors at Christmas time. This year things are straitened, and a more wide-spread appeal is necessary; although if wool and yarn were supplied Mr. Capel could get it made up. He also needs some bags in which to place books and papers for sailors leaving port.—Address, Mr. C. R. Capel, 33, Egerton-street, New Brighton.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	" "
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols.	" "
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	" "

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 " "	4s.	" "
12 " "	6s.	" "
24 " "	12s.	" "

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. R. BRUCE, D.D., C.M.S. Missionary in Persia.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions for the ensuing year. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if friends will kindly note the particulars.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

The full tale of lives lost through the recent terrible gales is yet untold; the fate of numbers of ships reported missing is still uncertain. But enough is revealed to make the storm take rank with the most fierce and fatal of late years. The additional burdens thrown on the resources of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society are very large, and there is a loud call for greater public support of this admirable institution. Its organisation is so perfect that the immediate relief of survivors is at hand in all ascertained cases of bereavement by loss of life at sea. The Society is a great national—indeed international—benefactor, and ought to be well provided with means.

It is very encouraging to notice that the Week of Prayer, uniting as it does Evangelical Christians of all bodies, has been more extensively observed during the last few years. With the increased observance there has also been more manifest blessing in the districts where united prayer has been offered. The case of our persecuted brethren in Russia and Asia Minor will give a special interest to the intercessions to be offered next January. In neighbourhoods where it is impossible to rally together the members of all the churches, let as many as possible unite in carrying out the programme: where no meetings can be held, much may be done by bringing the specially suggested subjects before God in family prayers as well as in the private intercession of his people.

The Christians in Glasgow are taking counsel as to the causes and the cure of the non-church-going which we have to deplore in all our great cities, and in which Glasgow carries an unwelcome pre-eminence. At an open conference last week, Lord Overtoun gave an address dealing in a practical spirit with the situation. He thought that the blame might be equally distributed between outsiders, the pew, and the pulpit. Scepticism, indifference, and over-indulgence in Saturday amusement keep many away from church. On the other hand, there is much preaching that fails to interest the hearers. To this we may add the decadence of pastoral visitation; so that of some ministers it has been said that "for six days they are invisible, and for the seventh incomprehensible." Finally, as to the pew, only an infinitesimal proportion of church members do any Christian work at all; the masses will never be reached till the words Christian and worker are interchangeable.

Coming to the question of remedial action, Lord Overtoun advocated the "territorial system" for large cities, but admitted that denominational divisions are unfavourable to this. He laid the greatest stress, however, on the point already alluded to—the co-operation of all church members under the lead of the pastor. Aggressive temperance work must also have a greater place. So far as we recollect, the P.S.A. movement has not taken any extensive root in Scotland; we would direct the attention of our Scotch friends to the manifesto on a succeeding page, as to the possibilities of this movement. In all our Christian endeavour we must have regard to adaptation.

The conference at the Holborn Town Hall on the Christian organisation of labour emphasised a point which should always be kept in view, viz., that men ought not to be mere working machines, but should have time and opportunity to live as men, cultivating mind and heart, enjoying their homes, and serving society and the Church. This doctrine needs to be applied all round. Men are too often turned into working machines, and masters into business machines, and so the Kingdom of God can find no room in them. How many Christian employers are giving an undue amount of time and strength to business, and then giving the paltry leavings of a tired body, of an exhausted brain, and of a fretted heart, to their Lord!

Archdeacon Farrar has been pouring out, in Westminster Abbey, his passionate desire for our youths and young men to escape being average men in character and influence, and to rise above "the conventional which they see in most of us, and in which more or less nearly all of us live." Is not this to be gained by patiently holding up the example of our Saviour, who was as high as heaven above even the grandest of men? Let us by all means see "the goodly fellowship of the prophets," "the glorious company of the apostles," and "the noble army of martyrs," the devoted and the saintly, who, in every age, have glorified God, for then we see what the grace of God can do; but it is Jesus before us and in us who alone can uplift and ennoble us. No man can continue to be commonplace who is much with Him.

The Archdeacon cried out for a prophet for our age:—

> Oh that God would give us only one real saint among the conventional echoes of artificial Churchiness; one living voice among the 20,000 priests; if He would give us but one prophet! Oh, that He might raise up one or two such to save England, and to save the Church of England, among the younger at least of those who hear me.

We may be optimistic as to the future, pessimistic as to the present. Our children and our grandchildren will look back on these times with wonder, and say that we had saints and prophets. We must not fall into Elijah's mistake, in our ardour to see a higher standard of life and character. But how are we to get prophets? We must simply follow the Spirit of God. There is no other way of gaining courage to burst the bonds of a fettering conventionalism, to reprove the sins of the church and the world, and then to endure the inevitable penalty that will follow.

Mr. Hodgson Pratt says in The Echo that there is in Paris a strong feeling of antipathy towards England, and that of late years it has steadily increased. It is deep down in the hearts of the people, and is not manifested only in the Press:—

> The term hypocrite is the favourite expression, and most generally expresses the widespread conviction that, while we make pretensions to be eminently religious, and profess the highest standard of morality, we are the most selfish, greedy, and unprincipled of all nations in dealing with the rights of weaker races.

Mr. Pratt hopes that a better feeling will be born when we know each other better, and co-operate more. He thinks that by the inauguration of an "International Alliance of Universities," and also by an alliance between industrial co-operators of various nationalities, much may be done. The shortest way might be to desist from oppressing the weak.

Lord Wolseley gave a shock to the conscience of Christians when he wrote in the "Soldiers' Pocket-book," p. 169:—

> As a nation we are bred up to feel it a disgrace even to succeed by falsehood. The word spy conveys something as repulsive as slave. We will keep hammering along with the conviction that "honesty is the best policy," and that truth always wins in the long run. These pretty little sentences do very well for a child's copybook, but the man who acts upon them in war had better sheathe his sword for ever.

Lord Charles Beresford seems to have a code of morals like Lord Wolseley's; for he has been telling a representative of The Idler that in such a thing as the Nile expedition, "just when everything seems up with you, and you feel you're in a tight place, it's the 'scallywags,' the worst fellows in the ship, who come out the best. I'd sooner have the boy who robbed the orchard with me, if I got into a row, than the fellow who was always first at Sunday-school." There can be no doubt that an enlightened conscience is a check upon a man, and therefore is troublesome in certain circumstances. That Lord C. Beresford's disparagement of Sunday-school trained boys ought to make us desist from our training is not quite apparent.

The Christian World Pulpit publishes a sermon on "The Christian and the Theatre," by Rev. W. H. Parr, in which the usual arguments against Christians frequenting the theatre are stated with force, but without any touch of bitterness or uncharitableness. More stress, we think, might have been laid on the pernicious influence of the stage on actors and actresses themselves, and the argumentum ad hominem might have been applied to some purpose. Will those Christian fathers and mothers who are pleading for this indulgence train their own daughters for the

and deadly thing is not the blow but the injustice in it, when such is the case.

Charity voting is an enormous expense to applicants' friends, a burdensome labour, and a tedious delay. Were the money spent on getting votes given to the charities, it would be better used. The efforts of some reformers to get each case settled on its own merits by the managing committee, deserve all encouragement. That there will be occasional mistakes, and that there will be need of constant vigilance in order to prevent abuses and favouritism, is certain; but these disadvantages are nothing when compared with those of canvassing.

The Manchester Guardian throws much light upon the character and the ways of our modern navvy. He can read; he has a kind heart for all men of his own class; he is generous in aiding those who are poor and out of work; he is courteous to ladies when they chance to come in his way; he is attached to his "Parson Slasher," or his "Parson Ganger," the gentleman who is the head of the Navvy Mission. Now that most of the 20,000 navvies who have worked at the Manchester Ship Canal have departed, the people of the district are sorry to lose them. Surely we have here a remarkable testimony to the labours of such workers as Miss Marsh and Lady Hope. The word of God does not return to Him void.

It struck us as a remarkable fact, when we had the pleasure of hearing a Christian worker among actors and actresses, that in every case where anyone following that profession was converted, he or she left the stage and sought some work more congenial to the new-born life. Quite as remarkable, on the other side, is the desire of many professing Christians to go to the theatre. What conclusion are we to draw? That the converted actors do not know what a useful profession they are leaving? or that the professing Christians do not know what an injurious pleasure they are permitting themselves? One would suppose that he who has walked the stage knows better than an outsider what a theatre is when judged by a Christian standard.

The advocacy of theatre-going is maintained by a contemporary, who calls hell a "theological locality." This will be a delightful piece of writing for the young men and women who are more anxious to serve God and pleasure than God alone. Strange to say, this paper has the following curious illustration in defence of its position:—

> But if the Puritan, by the force of logic and of life, is driven to accept the theatre as he accepts the army and the navy, the institution in its turn will have to reckon with him. If he comes into the concern it will not be as a sleeping or irresponsible partner. He will carry into it his conscience and his ideals. That conscience which in the army is putting down State-regulated vice, and in the navy is working to make Jack an abstainer, will inevitably make its force felt in the world behind the curtain.

Now this paper utterly refused to give the least aid towards abolishing State regulation of vice in England. A different style of Christianity than the theatre nourishes, is needed for such hard work as attacking these gigantic and terrible sins.

The influence of Christianity over women was one of the first things which led the more thoughtful Pagans of the earliest times to believe that the Gospel would destroy the old faith. They knew that husbands, fathers, and sons would come under it in the home, and that no efforts of the advocates of heathenism could withstand this persuasive teaching. Julian attributed the failure of his scheme for bringing Antioch back to heathenism to the influence of Christian women over their male relatives. We have not yet exhausted this rich vein of the influence of women. How many of our societies might be immensely strengthened by the admission of women to their management? Some of the best are greatly indebted to women for their success. Let others follow their example.

In an address on social purity, delivered at Montreal, Rev. Dr. Douglas asserts that as surely as the Indians are dying out of the west, the great New England race is dying out of the east. To prove this he points to the fact that 100 families in Worcester, Nashawa, and Fall River, record 750 children; 100 families in West Boston have 55 children; 100 families in West Montreal have 300 children; whereas 100 families amid the proletaria of the East-end [of Montreal] have 800 children. He thinks that "the outcasts of Europe and the inferior races of this continent are going, in two generations, to possess the land." If the Puritanic race is, according to Dr. Douglas, dying of social vice, it can be no loss; and the other races may show themselves more worthy of life. "The first shall be last, and the last first."

Preparations for the International Workmen's Exhibition, to be held in Milan next year, are, we see, proceeding apace. The Exhibition will bring together some of the ablest and most intelligent workmen from all countries. Cannot this occasion be laid hold upon by Christians, as the Chicago Exhibition was laid hold upon by Mr. Moody, for the diffusion of the Gospel? The Bible Society, the Evangelical Continental Society, the Peace Society, etc., will have a golden opportunity of influencing the leaders of the working men with Christian truth. Salvation may, by the grace of God, be brought to many a house.

Jonathan Dymond says in his valuable essays on the Principles of Morality:—

> He who sets no other limit to his possessions or accumulations than inability or indisposition to obtain more, does not conform to the will of God. Assuredly, if any specific thing is declared by Christianity to be highly likely to obstruct our advancement in goodness, and to endanger our final felicity, against that thing, whatever it be, it is imperative for us to guard with wakeful solicitude. And, therefore, without affirming that no circumstance can justify a great accumulation of property, it may safely be concluded, that far the greater number of those who accumulate it do wrong; nor do I see any reason to be deterred from ranking the distribution of a portion of great wealth, or a refusal to accumulate it, amongst the imperative duties which are imposed by the moral law.

A wise word against "the gospel of getting on."

"An Aggressive Believer" suggests in the columns of The Independent that the London Missionary Society should open a room in some central place in London, to which Christians could go at any hour from six a.m. to ten p.m. to pray for the success of missionary work. There ought to be no difficulty in obtaining a room, when we think of all the chapels and churches which are closed from Monday till Saturday. Provided the spirit of prayer be felt, there might be a constant stream of supplicants; but London is a terribly busy place, and gives small leisure to any who either frequent or occasionally visit its streets. It would be a satisfaction to see the suggestion succeed. But the provision of a room is not the first thing. The desire for prayer would soon lead to the providing of a room.

It was in 1843 that Robert Murray M'Cheyne entered into his rest. Few men have left a sweeter fragrance behind them. He was only twenty-nine years old, yet what a storehouse of holy thought is in his written words, what a wealth of experience is in his letters and in the sentences which fell from his lips! No one can read his "Memoir" without feeling that he is in the light of burning holiness and absorbing love. In a paper called "Personal Reformation" he has, among many precious passages, these words: "I ought to study the Comforter more—his Godhead, his love, his almightiness. I have found by experience that nothing sanctifies me so much as meditating on the Comforter, as John xiv. 16. And yet how seldom I do this!"

Few books search the heart like M'Cheyne's, and yet one feels that he is so truly like ourselves in infirmity and failures. "And yet how seldom I do this!" He knew where help was to be found, but was conscious of not sufficiently using it. So are all who long for a higher life. He says:—

> I feel persuaded that if I could follow the Lord more deeply myself, my ministry would be used to make a deeper impression than it has yet done.

Even in his dying delirium he spoke the wisdom of God: "Mind the text, 1 Cor. xv. 58. 'Be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.'" He dwelt with much emphasis on the last clause, "For as much as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord." With uplifted hands, as if in the attitude of pronouncing the benediction, he ended his life. May the Head of the Church give us many like him!

What is the secret of patience in well-doing? To know that God has called us to our work, and not that we have undertaken it of our own motion or fancy. Also to know that because He has called us He will not allow us to fail. And failure and success, to such as labour for God and by the grace of God, are not determined always by outward signs. We knew a consecrated minister called to a very corrupt church, who set to work at once to cleanse the place. When he had done this he was called to other service, and then another minister came and filled his place, and great good was done. Jesus cleansed the Temple at the beginning of his ministry; He cleansed it also a second time just before the end of his ministry. Dust and cobwebs soon accumulate in a room; impurities of all sorts soon accumulate in churches. We must be always at work.

BRAZIL.—In an "occasional paper" on the work of Pastor Fanstone in Brazil, we learn that the revolution has involved the people in much suffering. We make a brief extract:—"Up to the last accounts, the believers on both sides of Rio harbour have been preserved from personal injury, though loss has been suffered from the destruction of property. We also thank God that these sad events in the south in no way hinder the work of Mr. M'Call in Pernambuco. Indeed, even as regards the work about Rio, letters written in the midst of the sounds of war tell of encouraging meetings in inland towns, which are reached as easily as before. In one of those most recently entered for evangelistic work, Bangú (two and a-half hours distant from Rio by rail (gatherings are reported in the last letters to hand of over fifty interested hearers." Mr. Fanstone would be glad to receive invitations to address meetings on Brazil and its needs. The Mission Council is in correspondence with candidates whose hearts' desire is to labour for the Lord in Brazil, but as yet the funds do not permit a rapid onward movement. Communications to Mr. Fanstone should be addressed, care of Mrs. R. R. Kalley, Campo Verde, Tipperlinn-road, Edinburgh.

Part-sight.

Part-sight is the condition, at least in certain connections, of all the people of God. Our knowledge at farthest is but a part-knowledge, "We know in part and we prophesy in part." There are few subjects, if any, which our plumb-line has explored throughout. Even in the words of life best known to us, to which we can append our T and P—tried and proved—knowledge must yield to faith; for our history does not exactly repeat itself; and altered circumstance, and, above all, the process of becoming in ourselves, develope meanings and applications that we wist not of. It is the infirmity of knowledge, very largely, that furnishes sea-room for faith. Had Job thoroughly penetrated the secret of his trial, he would not, it is true, have known the fluctuations of experience which he betrays. But, on the other hand, faith would not have been called to the rescue, nor would the darkness have been glorified by hope's far-reaching beam. As it is, it is the sight only in part that draws out and exercises the measure of grace which he has. Even so to-day. God trains us, not by lifting us out of limitation, but by making the limitation that we feel subservient to the exercise of grace and the development of faith.

There is, therefore, quite as much kindness shown in what God hides, for the time being, from his children, as in what He reveals to them. Be thankful for the sight given; but be thankful also for the limit which He has set to it. Faith is in training now; it will have its reward in terms of sight by-and-by. But meanwhile the sacred nursling must grow, precious faith must fructify and expand; like the almond tree, it has to yield buds, blossom, and fruit, and for this, part-sight is called for. As the sun must set to bring out the stars, so knowledge must pale that faith may trim her lamp and shine.

In speaking of Part-sight as the occasion of faith, we must not forget the reverse side of it, and the part which this plays as the occasion of fear. David reveals the snare incident to part-sight in his hasty exclamation, "I shall one day perish by the hand of Saul." Such-like conclusions are part of the small change in which most of us deal. They are more than "lapsus linguæ," or slips of the tongue; they are obscurations of faith itself. The sight, which after all is but in part, has, for the moment, such terror lodged in it that we forget or refuse, in the energy of faith, to look beyond and above. Hence the need of adding to faith, courage. We suppose we have seen a ghost, and cry out in fear. But why fear? Who can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord? Can that barque sink that carries a greater than Cæsar and his fortunes? Part-sight may bristle with foes, and oppositions, and dangers; nevertheless let faith courageously step forward. It is not necessary to awake the Master. He is more awake than we are.

"O fearful! O faithless!" in mercy He cries,
"My promise, my truth, are they light in thine eyes?
Still, still I am with thee, my promise shall stand,
Through tempest and tossing I'll bring thee to land."

The subject of Part-sight has yet another aspect. In addition to the part-sight of knowledge or of sense, there is the part-sight that is due to the verifying faculty of faith itself. There is a knowledge which faith quarries for itself, a sight which it acquires. True, this sight is only in part; it does not go all the way. But it has this twofold advantage, that it never tends to raise terror but always to allay it; and, in the second place, the sight gained serves as a whet-stone to stimulate to further acquisition. If faith be in exercise it will have a present reward in verification. It will add to knowledge, and add to it in such a way as needs no revision, only amplification; while, in the process, it will open springs in the desert, and distil God's own peace on the heart. An ounce of this part-knowledge is worth a ton of the learning of the schools; and those are the true doctors of divinity who are well versed here. "It is wonderful," cried Louis Harms, the founder of the Hermannsburg Mission, "when one has nothing, and 10,000 crowns are laid in his hand by the dear Lord." But that matter of wonder was so often repeated in reply to the faith of Harms, that it speedily constituted the regular law of demand and supply. And this is only one application, out of many, of this aspect of Part-sight. If it is sweet to know of his bountiful care, whose are the cattle on a thousand hills, how much sweeter to know Himself, to see his face and live, yea, to eat and drink with Him! Here also faith is a merchantman acquiring goodly pearls. Faith developes and enlarges the knowledge of Christ considered in Himself, and in doing this supplies the spur to richer acquisitions; so that the soul, as in Paul's case, is ever on the stretch of expanding desire and on the wing of further exploration —"that I may know Him." It is this Part-sight that is heaven's earnest; it is this Part-knowledge that is glory's coin; for love enfolds it, and what love keeps, not even death itself can take away. Love is stronger than death, and the knowledge that faith wins, though it be but in part, love assimilates for ever.

James Douglas.

Brixton, S.W.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

I have lately had the privilege of visiting many mission halls in connection with the McAll Mission in France, and I think it may interest some of your readers to hear something of the work of the Lord carried on in them. My first visit was to Capecure, Boulogne, where I was much struck with the attention and deep interest displayed by the poor fisherfolk, who eagerly listened to the truth of the Gospel preached by M. Mabboux. A meeting for children, held the next morning in the same hall, when fifty-two were present, was intensely interesting. A father, mother, and five children were present to receive a family Bible as a souvenir on leaving Boulogne.

In Paris I found the meetings very well attended. In some of the halls the large proportion of men present was most gratifying, but nothing interested me more than the children's meetings, held on Sunday and Thursday afternoons (the latter the children's holiday). On the afternoon of October 15, I had the pleasure of attending the Sunday-school at the Rue St. Antoine; 137 children were present, and after the usual lessons by the teachers Rev. C. Greig gave them an admirable lesson, using a blackboard to illustrate his subject. In the interval between the Sunday-school and the evangelistic service we sat down to tea in an adjoining room with between twenty-five and thirty teachers, who had themselves been pupils in the Sunday-schools, and were now endeavouring to lead the little ones to Jesus. One of the most striking of the meetings was the gathering of the Christian Endeavour Society in the beautiful hall in the Rue Rivoli. About 300 people were present, and addresses were given by Pastor Theodore Monod and Rev. C. Greig. Hymns and sacred music were sung by a choir of young girls, themselves the fruit of the Mission, and young men from Mr. Greig's church at Bercy. There was also some excellent instrumental music. Mr. and Miss Brown, to whom this hall is much indebted for their indefatigable work, took part in the proceedings.

If space permitted, I would gladly describe the meetings of the Medical Mission, where the Gospel is preached on each occasion to the patients while waiting to have their bodily wants attended to. The Mission sadly needs more lady workers, as three or four are absent owing to ill-health, and two have left Paris owing to advancing years.

Finch White, Colonel.

4, Trafalgar-square, Charing Cross, W.C.

CHINA INLAND MISSION,

The following editorial notes from the December issue of China's Millions will be read with interest:—

We look back at God's goodness, and at many signal mercies received during the year, and feel constrained to praise Him. Hundreds of souls have been saved in China; many have testified to blessing through our meetings held at home and through our publications, and we have been prospered in more ways than we can here enumerate.

The way in which funds have been supplied in answer to prayer, from month to month, has strengthened our hearts; outfits and passages, too, have been provided as the need has required; and safe journeys out and home have been vouchsafed in answer to many petitions. Many difficulties and hindrances have been removed, and we look forward hopefully, and are seeking guidance as to a definite forward movement in the coming year! Will our readers ask specially that we may be guided?

The work at this time urgently needs a hundred men—men of unreserved consecration, men who mean to live for Christ and not for self, for eternity and not for time, men who are full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, who feel that Christ is worthy, and who are utterly devoted to Him.

Our dear brother Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner thinks that we should pray definitely for two hundred such men; and who that takes part in the consecration meetings at Keswick and elsewhere can doubt that Britain has the men, and would be blessed in giving them? Personally, however, we feel that we must wait upon God for fuller light as to the exact form that our forward movement should take. When we sought for "the seventy," we were so assured of the will of God that we were able to praise Him for them before we wrote to England to ask for them. And when we appealed for a hundred workers in a single year, we knew before the year began that we had the petition, and the additional £10,000 necessary for outfits, passage-money, and first year's support, while as yet none of it was given.

We now see with joy God's hand preparing for greater things. A kind friend desiring to assist us in building without delay our Missionary Home, and also the new offices so urgently needed, wished to put money at our disposal at a low rate of interest for the purpose; we have thus been enabled to begin, and the excavators are already at work. The building will contain a large prayer-meeting room, and rooms that will be used for the present as offices; besides a residential part for the accommodation of returned missionaries and of candidates. We are now erecting only three-fourths of the proposed building, but believe that the Lord will in his own good time supply what is requisite for the whole.

When this building is completed and occupied we shall have room for an enlarged number of candidates, as well as for the returned missionaries, and also facilities for carrying on together the various branches of the Home work more efficiently than is now possible. Furniture to the value of some hundreds of pounds has already been promised. There will be over thirty bedrooms.

A few years ago the Lord graciously gave us, without cost to the Mission, ample premises in Shanghai, and immediately sent us reinforcements that could not have been received and cared for without them. We now see a great need in China, and an early possibility here of being ready for what the Lord shall have in store for us.

Several of our earnest and successful workers are about coming home on furlough, and others are now at home. There are many parts of the country which we have hitherto been unable to visit. The story of the Mission cannot be told without spiritual profit as well as deep interest. We should be glad to hear from any friends who would assist us in arranging for meetings.

"WHERE WILL TEACHER BE?"—The telling narrative with this title, which appeared in our columns recently, and for copies of which in separate form there were many inquiries, is now published as a leaflet by Mr. G. Stoneman, 21, Warwick-lane, E.C., price 1s. 6d. per 100.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXVI.

THE IMAGE, THE MARK, AND THE NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

There remain still three particulars foretold in this marvellous prophecy concerning the wild beast from the sea which need to be examined. And these three are of immense importance.

The identification of the monstrous symbol with Rome has been, it is submitted, most exhaustive. The facts of history have corresponded to every prediction of the Scriptures of truth. But the portrait is not yet complete. Three further and most striking points are noticed in conclusion; the last of them is preceded by the emphatic call of the Spirit, "Here is wisdom"; and they combine in supplying the crowning proof that in the two wild beasts, the first and the second, we have the divinely-drawn picture of the great Antichrist, which, during the long centuries specified, has exercised the terrible power "given unto him" by the enemy, and permitted by the all-wise providence of God.

These three points are the Image of the beast, the Mark of the beast, and the Number of his name. The wildest and most fanciful interpretations, some of them sensational and extravagant to the last degree, have been given of these particulars in the prophecy. Forgetfulness of the symbolic character of the Revelation, and a consequent attempt to prove a literal interpretation (though resulting in the greatest anomalies and contradictions), together with an ignoring of the facts of history, which is but prophecy read backward, must be regarded as mainly responsible for the strange, and, alas! delusive schemes of Apocalyptic Exposition which have obtained such currency in these last days. And, all the while, the key is in our hands.

The image of the beast. Literally understood, it might indeed be expected that something like the golden image set up on the plains of Dura would be constructed, and miraculously endowed with life and power of speech. But if the "image" is to be construed literally, then must "the beast" be similarly expounded. And I am not aware that even the most literal of latter-day interpreters have gone to the length of teaching that a real seven-headed, ten-horned wild beast is to appear from the sea, or the abyss. All agree that it is a symbolic expression, whether denoting an individual or a system. Similarly, then, must "the image" be understood. The expression is symbolic. It is not an actual image which is to be looked for, but that which the term describes.

Now, an image is a representation of something else. If, then, the first wild beast be Rome in its various aspects, territorial, political, and ecclesiastical, the image of that Antichristian system or power must be that which is representative thereof.

And what is it that represents a people, a political organisation, or a church? It is a representative assembly. Thus the people of Great Britain are represented by Parliament, the Church of England (however inadequately) by Convocation. And in like manner has the Church of Rome, or Roman Catholic Christendom, been represented by Œcumenical Councils, i.e., Councils consisting of deputies from the oikoumenē, or inhabited world ("the dwellers on the earth"). The image of the beast—that is, the representation of Rome Catholic—is, then, the Council. Such, indeed, was the description given of those assemblies by Tertullian, who called them "the very representation of the whole Christian body," and Gibbon speaks of the Provincial Synods, the precursors of the œcumenical gatherings, as having been founded on the model of the representative councils of Greece. Or, to quote the language of more recent days, we find that, alluding to the House of Commons, as reconstituted by the Reform Bill of 1832, a leading statesman spoke of it as "the real and express image and representation of the country." In the ancient councils themselves the deputies were declared to be "the image" of them that sent them. And in the graphic description of the Œcumenical Council held at Rome in 1869, which appeared in The Times, it was said that "never had there been a gathering that approached so near to a representation of Christendom as this."

Now, as we have seen that the second wild beast prefigured the Papal hierarchy as the subservient administrators of the Papacy itself, so we learn that the invitations to a General Council were communicated by the archbishops, bishops, abbots, deans, chapters, presbyters, and convents. Thus it was the false prophet, or body of false teachers by whom Rome ruled the world, who said "to them that dwelt on the earth that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword and did live" (Rev. xiii. 14).

But not only was the image to be made; it was also to speak. That is, this representative assembly was to issue decrees and to pass and promulgate laws which were to bind all to obedience under the most heavy penalties.

According to Canon Mozley, "the Romans say that a Council is without form and void, till the Pope give it order, life, and law." And it was the votes of the assembled clerical representatives of Christendom, ratified by their head, the Pope, that gave the utterances of the Council their binding force. Its edicts, or general decisions, then became canons. The Council was said to have "spoken." Thus was it when, at the Lateran Council of 1869, between the terrific rolls of thunder that shook the mighty structure, and amid the thick darkness that filled it, the successive "Placets" of the Romish hierarchy affirmed and promulgated the blasphemous dogma of Papal Infallibility. The Image spoke.

And the Mark of the beast. How are we to understand it? It was the common practice at the time of St. John, and, indeed, both long before and long after, for slaves, soldiers, and devotees of this or that heathen god to have certain marks of appropriation imprinted on them; such marks being generally on the forehead or the hand, and consisting of either the name or characteristic emblem of the master or the god, or of the particular god's hieroglyphic number. Thus Roman slaves were marked, or "stigmatised" on their foreheads, and Roman soldiers bore the Emperor's name or mark imprinted on the hand. And the practice exists even at the present day, when soldiers bear on headdress or shoulder the number or symbol of the corps to which they belong, and servants wear on their livery their master's crest or family sign. The mark denoted appropriation on the one side and allegiance on the other.

We are not, therefore, to understand the expression in a literal sense. As in the case of "the beast," and "the image," "the mark" is a symbol. We find the same symbol employed in the next vision, where the redeemed of the Lord are seen, with the Lamb on Mount Zion, "having his Father's name written in their foreheads." In that case it denotes not only appropriation and allegiance, but also resemblance in character, or what we call family likeness; and we are taught that the followers of Christ are like Christ.

So here the mark in the forehead or the right hand signifies the claim of the great Antichrist, whose image, or representative body of Œcumenical Councils, speaks and issues decrees to the absolute and entire possession, as his votaries, of the deluded multitudes who have acknowledged, and still do acknowledge his usurped and blasphemous authority. It describes the willing, yea, the slavish surrender of brain and will, of hand and heart, the abnegation of the right of private judgment, the making over of soul and conscience to the keeping of the Satanic power which energizes the fearful system, by all who, not receiving the love of the truth, believe the lie, the greatest and most seductive as well as destructive lie, because of its marvellous counterfeit of the truth, that has ever been forged.

Yes! destructive indeed; for upon the devotees of the beast and his image, the receivers of his mark in forehead and hand, the indignation of a justly offended God is visited. They shall drink the unmixed wine of his wrath, who have willingly drunk of the wine of the fornication of the great apostasy (cf. ch. xiv. 10, with ch. xviii. 8). For again is it written that "the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." On them that "had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image" is to fall the terrible judgment set forth under the first of the seven last plagues of the wrath of God (ch. xvi. 2). And it is they who have "not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither have received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands"—the faithful and steadfast witnesses of Jesus—of whom it is said that "they lived and reigned with Christ athousand years." From this terrible and world-wide delusion, from the acceptance of Romish error in any shape or form, and from that adultery with the world which she and her harlot daughters have so fatally promoted and spread, "Good Lord, deliver us!"

The dire decrees of excommunication, the interdicts on monarchs and subjects "small and great, rich and poor, free and bond," whosoever attempted to assert spiritual or even bodily independence of Romish rule, are too well known to require to be dwelt upon here. Striking illustrations of the tyrannical engine of "exclusive dealing," wielded by priestly power, are occurring even in the present days and under our very eyes.

Lastly, what is the Number of the beast? "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man; and his number is, Six hundred threescore and six."

Passing by the number of ingenious interpretations which have been given, some more or less plausible, some fanciful, and others wild and even ridiculous, we may, I believe, accept that suggested so early as the second century by Irenæus, the disciple of Polycarp, who was the disciple of the Seer of Patmos.

It is a human name, for it is "the number of a man." It denotes the geographical, the political, the ecclesiastical entity signified by the monster from the sea, for it is "the number of the beast." The Greek numerals consisting of the letters of the alphabet, a proper name must be sought for, the numerical value of whose constituent letters shall amount to 666. Such a name is to be found—the name or number of a man, for it is a proper name in the masculine gender—the very name of the power above described—in the word Λατεινος—Latinus, or "the Latin man," the letters of which make up the enigmatical number, as follows:—λ=30, α=1, τ=300, ε=5, ι=10, ν=50, ο=70, ς=200; total, 666.

Concerning this name, Irenæus observes that "it seems very probable; for this is a name of the last of Daniel's kingdoms; they being Latins that now reign." And Hippolytus, the disciple of Irenæus, says, "It is manifest to all that they who now reign are Latins, and the name transmuted into that of an individual becomes Λατεινος." Of the first three great world-empires, Daniel gives the names, Babylon, Persia, Greece. The fourth, Rome, is not named. Here it is supplied, in an enigma. We have counted its number, and find it to be Latin, that is ROMAN.

And how striking is the fulfilment. But a few centuries after Irenæus, the name of Latin began to be regularly applied by writers like Jerome, and in Papal Bulls and Conciliar Edicts, to the kingdoms of the Western Roman Empire. And Gibbon adopts it as their distinctive appellation after the division of the Empire into Eastern and Western. So that the term became the peculiar title of the fourth and last great earthly power, in both its territorial and its ecclesiastical aspect. It was the Latin world, the Latin kingdoms, the Latin Church, the Latin patriarch, the Latin clergy, the Latin councils. All was Latinized. Mass, prayers, hymns, litanies, canons, decretals, bulls, were all conceived and couched in Latin. The Papal councils spoke in Latin. Priests and people prayed and still pray in Latin, witness the Breviary, the Mass, the Paternoster, the Ave Maria, etc. The Scriptures were read only in Latin. In short, all was Latin. Six hundred threescore and six was, and still is, the hieroglyphic, the enigmatical number, of the great Antichrist, the wild beast from the abyss.

Thus have we traced the predicted character and career of the fourth and greatest of the bestial powers, or world-empires, shown first to Daniel in Babylon, and then revealed in fuller detail to John in Patmos. We have seen the marvellously accurate fulfilment of the Divine prefiguration in the events recorded by history. And it may well be asked whether it is possible for prophetic delineation, in the mysterious language of symbol, and historical fact to correspond more closely? Granted that mistakes have frequently been made, and that in a natural anxiety to discover exact fulfilments, interpreters have now and again been betrayed into far-fetched expositions, yet, taken as a whole, it is submitted that the key of history has, with a most extraordinary fitness, opened the many-warded lock of prophecy. Symbol and thing signified, heraldic emblem and actual fact, details of events that were to come to pass, features geographical, political, and ecclesiastical, have all combined to present to view that monstrous, weird, and Satanic portent which the second sign exhibited to the Apostle.

Here, then, this vision concludes. Some further mention of the actors in those scenes of the prophetic drama represented in chapters xii. and xiii. is made later in the book.

The Parliament of Religions.—4.

ORIENTAL CRITICISMS.

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

Some of our Oriental friends came to the Parliament evidently big with a purpose. It was not to consider the claims of Christianity upon the nations, nor to find a common basis of religion; but to demolish Christianity by exposing its frightful inconsistencies, its organised wickedness, what they considered its utter inhumanity, and its general inferiority to the faith of the Brahmin and the Buddhist. The two champions were the Buddhist priest, Dharamapala, and the Hindu monk, Vivakanadra.

These Oriental strictures and criticisms have found their way into both the secular and religious press of Great Britain. Except in one instance I have not noticed that any Christian writer has taken note of them. Lest silence should be taken as consent, I venture now to notice them and make some remarks anent them.

These gentlemen called my courtesy in question in the Parliament because I ventured to answer them there; they suggested that it was most unchristian to refer to the shady sides of Oriental religions in a Parliament where it was supposed that no words save those of "softness" and "kindness were to be uttered," forgetting that they themselves were the first to "break the peace" by their attacks upon Christianity.

I do not think it is a matter of regret that these Oriental gentlemen broke out upon us as they did, inasmuch as it has afforded an admirable opportunity to put some matters right. I may say in this connection, that while upon the whole the members of the Parliament maintained a wonderful spirit of patience and charity throughout towards each other, the Christian portion of the assembly was called upon to exercise its grace in this direction more largely than those members of other faiths, who were in a sense our guests, and who seemed to feel it was a part of their mission to "show up" the inconsistencies, and even wickedness, of the followers of Christ. Christian missionaries and scholars in the East were openly charged with hypocrisy, violence, dishonesty, and deliberate misrepresentation of the faiths of the Orient. We must suppose, in charity, that the general accusations were made in ignorance rather than in malice, and so in the main we let them pass. But there were a few things said which in the interests of truth and righteousness call for remark.

I.—AS TO CHRISTIAN IGNORANCE AND PREJUDICE.

The Buddhist Dharamapala, in the very opening of the Parliament, treated us to a fiery and eloquent speech, in which he charged Christians with being ignorant of the religious literature of the East, and yet presumptuous and prejudiced enough to sit in judgment upon a faith of which they could know nothing. In a very dramatic passage he challenged the members of the Parliament, and the vast audience gathered to hear his address, as to their knowledge of the Bible of Buddha. In substance he cried out: "How many of you here present have ever read the Bible of Buddha? Show your hands! Let us see how well qualified you are to judge of the faith of Buddha," etc. After repeating the challenge there were five hands uplifted. This meagre show of hands seemed to electrify him. He appealed to the audience to know if, out of so great a company (say three thousand) only five persons could be found who had read the writing ascribed to Buddha, it was at all competent for Western people to pass any judgment upon that faith?

In answer to this I would only remark that it was a wonder to me that so many as five were found who could say that they had read the vast tomes of literature which make up the Buddhist Bible. It does not follow, however, that the greater portion of the three thousand present were not acquainted with the substance of the teaching of Buddha, or the underlying philosophy of Buddhism. The great mass of Buddhists and Hindus are illiterate, and themselves totally ignorant of the writings of their sages, and few of the priests either of the Hindu or Buddhist faith are familiar with their writings. The further fact is, that though many of the young priests are required to read certain portions of their sacred books, and memorise them so that they can recite many passages off by rote, few of these, though so well drilled in the letter, have any idea of the meaning. I have myself talked with many Brahmin and Buddhist priests concerning their Scriptures, asking them to translate to me or explain to me what the meaning was of that which they were reciting. Almost invariably I was told that it was a passage from the writings of Buddha or one of the Vedas. They did not know the meaning; it was incapable of translation; and the merit lay, not in the understanding, but simply in the recitation of the words.

More than one educated Brahmin has told me that the Hindu is vastly indebted to the Christian missionary for a knowledge of his own religious faith, especially in so far as a literary knowledge of it is concerned. Until the Christian missionary inaugurated educational methods, and searched out and translated the lost and buried literature of the East, the great mass of the people, and even the Brahmins themselves, were sunken in the deepest and darkest superstitions of their idol-worship, knowing little or nothing of the teachings of their ancient philosophers and religious sages.

II.—THE CRIMES OF CHRISTIANITY.

It was the monk Vivakanadra who arraigned Christianity for its 'crimes, for its vice and immoralities; who professed horror at the violence, bloodshed, and general wickedness of the propagators of the Gospel; who charged them with coming with a sword in one hand to kill and destroy, and a Bible in the other to convert the mild and gentle, the pure and spotless Hindus to the gross, carnal, and drunken habits of the Christians. The acts of so-called Christian Governments, in their war of conquest against the gentle Orientals; their inhumanity in forcing opium and alcoholic liquors upon an unwilling and innocent people; the battle, war, and spoil waged by Western nations, were all charged upon Christianity. The drunkenness, immorality, and violence visible and open to view in Western Christian lands were all alleged to be a part and parcel of Christianity and a direct result of the religion of Christ.

What is to be said to all this? First.—That the unrighteous acts of Government are in no sense a product of Christianity. There is no such thing as a Christian Government, in the sense that the State is directed and its actions authorised by the Church of Christ. Every war of conquest, every oppressive act of Government, every iniquity, such as the opium trade, the liquor traffic, the legalisation of vice, and such like things, are the objects of sternest protest by the Church of Christ in all lands. These are not only acts outside the pale of Christianity, but acts committed in the face of Christian protest. What Christian missionary ever went forth to heathen lands to conquer the people to the Christian faith by the help of the sword or any other carnal weapon? What Christian missionary ever enforced either the opium or the liquor traffic? What Christian missionary was ever tolerated by any missionary society if he himself were a drunkard, an opium-eater, an unclean person, or one who did any violence to the people to whom he was sent with a message of Christ?

Second.—The drunkenness, the violence, the immoralities, the depredation seen in the cities and countries called Christian, are all outside Christianity, and are the sins and crimes against which the whole Christian ministry lifts its voice in the name of God and Christ. The victims of these sins are they to whom the Gospel of forgiveness, regeneration, and sanctification are directed. As well charge upon the medical profession responsibility for smallpox, cholera, yellow fever, and leprosy, as to charge these worst works of the flesh upon the Gospel of Christ, who came to seek and save men from their sins.

Moreover, these Oriental friends seem to have entirely overlooked a fact which, according to their systems, they can hardly understand: that Christianity stands in the individuality of faith, and not in national and race communities. Christianity is a selective and elective system. A man is not a Christian because he is born in a country where Christianity is the dominant faith. All men are born sinners, and if one becomes a Christian he becomes so as a matter of personal conviction and choice. The non-believing and non-Christ-confessing and Christ-living man is as much outside the pale of Christianity as any man born in heathendom. On the other hand, a man born of Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan parents and inducted into the rites of these faiths, is Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan, whatever his life or character may be. The answer to this is, that there are good Hindus and bad Hindus. It is not so with Christianity. There may be good and better Christians, but there are no bad Christians. No drunkard, no liar, no whoremonger, no thief, no murderer, can be at the same time a Christian. So that the criticism of the Orientals upon the wickedness of wicked people in Christian countries falls to the ground.

The Evangelist.

"A BROKEN AND A CONTRITE HEART."

By Rev. T. G. Selby.*

"Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." That truth gets into the affections, and puts mystic fire at their service. "I am He that blotteth out thine iniquities for my name's sake." That discovers a sensitive point in our moral structure, and makes it thrill again. We have no scientific intimation of the fact that "He telleth the number of the stars.' The experimental proof of a conception like that is beyond us. But there is a strange responsive movement at the centre of our being when we read that "He bindeth up the broken in heart and healeth all their wounds." Science fails to track God as He moves to and fro in the expanse of the ages, spreading out the realms of infinite time as a curtain for his habitation. But a blessed and a conscious experience is called up within us as we read that "He dwells with the humble and the contrite."

This is a mystery of condescension, but it is a self-consistent mystery. The revival and homeward return of the life that came from God is the clue to this enigma of pity and gentleness. It is no slight thing to recover and restore that life. By this inhabitation of contrite hearts the Eternal will add at least a new kingdom to the high and holy place where He is enshrined. Through his redeeming visitations of the sons of men, He will educe God-glorifying qualities of love unknown before even there. From those to whom He so strangely bows Himself, He will attract a devotion of which those never needing a Saviour may be incapable. "We love Him because He first loved us"—true for angels, but uniquely true for us.

In the first pang of sorrow, in the first blush of shame, in the cry of relenting that comes up out of the discords of human rebellion, in the bitter sense of weakness, frailty, failure, God comes near, and possesses the heart with his healing love, as expressly as He fills the high and holy place. If you are poor in spirit, humble, abject, expect his instant indwelling. He comes to the penitent man or woman who mourns apart, as well as to the collective Israel.

Remember what a sacred thing contrition is. God broods in its earliest forms. Do not despise it, either in yourselves or others. Never say it is unmanly vacillation, as you see how mistaken you have been, and confess for the hundredth time the sin that still cleaves to you. All this is the first step of a process that culminates in the enthronement of God within you, and heralds a new advent. God is as truly present in the first sigh, in the speechless, sin-forsaking vow, in the home-look of the prodigal, as before the mercy-seat. He comes to religious life in its lowliest forms. "We are saved by faith," but the Presence that makes faith saving enters the opening heart long before penitence has matured into faith. You have not to wait for an afflatus of Divine power, which will make your faith saving. If you mourn for sin, God is with and in you, and the faith you put forth will be God-helped. Dost thou mourn for sin, however faintly? Blessed art thou, for thou shalt be comforted. Sorrow is godly if He be in it, and shall work life through Him. Oh, the reviving power of his indwelling! Sorrow shall be lifted into rejoicing faith, and faith shall be so richly illumined by the God who shines upon it, that it shall not be less than sight, but more.

* From a sermon entitled, "God in the Soul," contained in The Lesson of a Dilemma, and other Sermons. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Priesthood—False and True.

By Mr. J. E. MATHIESON.

The world has been familiarised with the idea of priesthood from very early ages. Men in vestments, divinely prescribed or of human invention, have been set apart, or have set themselves apart, to offer sacrifice and to stand as mediators between God and men. Both in the Jewish dispensation and in pagan lands, priesthood, true or false, has been recognised. How is sin-stricken humanity, in sore need of reconciliation and of mediation, to know what is true and what is false priesthood? The answer can only be found in Holy Writ if it is to satisfy the truth-loving soul; and here we are left in no doubt or uncertainty; for, speaking of the Great High Priest of this present age, the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews declares, "No man taketh the honour unto himself, but when he is called of God, even as was Aaron." So Christ also glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest, but He that spake unto Him—

Thou art My Son,
This day have I begotten Thee:
As He saith also in another place,
Thou art a Priest for ever,
After the order of Melchizedek. (Hebrews v. 4-6.)

If the great High Priest had his credentials—and they are indisputable—how much more must an order of priests professing to serve under Him, furnish us with the authority from which they derive their claim to offer sacrifice or to mediate—an authority to be sought for in the New Testament records? No such authority can be furnished; it is non-existent; and those who assert it and venture to assume priestly functions, unbidden by the Most High, place themselves in extreme peril of the displeasure of a Holy and Jealous God.

Such displeasure was once manifested in the great tragedy which overtook Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, when they presumptuously sought to exercise the functions which were specifically reserved for Aaron and his sons; the rebels against the ordinance of the God of Israel, "with all that appertained to them went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them, and they perished from among the assembly" (Num. xvi. 33).

We have in Christendom, to-day, our modern Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, a confederacy of evil as portentous and as ruinous to those who take part with them, as were these three Israelites, whose end was so disastrous. We refer to the false priesthood of the Roman Church, the Greek Church, and that portion of the Church of England which follows their pernicious ways.

If we search New Testament Scripture, we find under the four terms, "priest," "priests," "high priests," and "priesthood," reference made once to pagan priesthood (Acts xiv. 13), twice to Melchizedek, fifty-two times to the Jewish priesthood, and fifteen times to our Blessed Lord and Saviour. There is not even one suggestion in the Gospels or the Epistles of an order of sacrificing priests having been instituted by our Lord. What purpose indeed could such an order of priests have fulfilled after our Saviour had said (Jno. xvii. 4), "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do," announcing the close of his three years of active ministry; and again (Jno. xix. 30), "It is finished," declaring in the supreme moment of his agony that redemption was complete, and that all the Jewish types, throughout ages of ceaseless sacrifice, were then summed up and brought to an end? Oh! the dishonour put upon this perfect and all-sufficient atonement when rash and presumptuous man dares to imitate or repeat, in whatever fashion, the one spotless Sacrifice of Calvary, and by so doing casts doubt upon its sufficiency to cover the sin of the whole world.

In the pastoral Epistles to Timothy and Titus we seek in vain for any warrant for the notion that there is Apostolic sanction for an order of sacrificing priests; and, what is still more significant, when we scan the list of good and perfect gifts bestowed by our ascended Lord, and twice enumerated (1 Cor. xii. and Eph. iv.), there is not a trace of any word which perverse ingenuity could torture into the equivalent of sacrificing priest. Whatever the exigencies of a corrupt and corrupting Church may have demanded in the appointment of this order of priests, so dishonouring to God, so flattering to the pride and brief authority of sinful man, nothing can be discovered in the New Testament, whether in selected passages or in the whole scope and intention of its inspired pages, to satisfy the man or woman who bows reverently to the utterance "thus saith the Lord," that any order of human priesthood was in the mind of Christ or of his specially chosen Apostles.

It remains for us, however, to mention the true priesthood of all believers, thrice referred to in the Apocalypse (i. 6; v. 10; xx. 6), and in each case associated with the glorious thought of reigning together with Christ; a royal priesthood. Now it is manifest that believers in this age are not yet reigning with Christ; now they are suffering with Christ, but they know they will reign with Him by-and-by, and this hope and the hope of his appearing cheer them amid the trials of this little while. Moreover, we claim the Apostle Peter as having most to say about all the Lord's people being priests (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9), he, too, insisting upon Christ being the only Rock and Foundation.

In the Jewish dispensation the central object of worshippers was an altar of sacrifice with the attendant priest, pointing backwards across all the intervening generations to the beginning of human sin; pointing forwards to the completion of sacrifice in the cross of Christ upon Calvary. In contrast with this the Christian age presents to us not an altar, but a Table, at which the believer looks backward with thanksgiving to that same cross, and the finished work of our adorable Redeemer, and forward to his return in power and great glory. "It is finished" closed the earlier dispensation and ushered in the new, and we can yield no submission to Judaizing teachers in the garb of pseudo-priesthood, whether they be Roman, or Greek, or Anglican in name.

The sacrifices enjoined in the Epistles are very comprehensive indeed, but they have no reference to atonement; they follow, or ought to follow, our acceptance of the reconciliation made by Christ; the sacrifice of our persons, our purses, and our praises; they pre-suppose forgiveness and regeneration. Thus the Apostle Paul writes (Rom. xii. 1), "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." Again (Phil. iv. 18), "I am filled, having received from Epaphroditus the things that came from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God." Once more (Heb. xiii. 15), "Through Him then let us offer a sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of lips which make confession of his name. But to do good and to communicate forget not, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased."

[This paper may be obtained for distribution from Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co.]

INDIA'S WOMEN.

Nay, tell me not the name of man
To him may rightfully belong
Who would not hasten to the van
Where chivalry fights woman's wrong.

Ye Britons, who forbid the sale
Of sable flesh and savage blood,
How can ye hear unmoved the tale
Of India's outraged womanhood?

O England, hath thy conquest given
The right to traverse God's decree,
'Till swarthy victims cry to heaven
Against thy heartless cruelty?

Ten thousand Christian bosoms burn
With indignation's sevenfold flame,
While Truth's heroic daughters turn
Their search-light on the scenes of shame.

Where, under cover of thy guns,
Within the shrines of sanctioned vice,
Thou dost seduce thy warrior sons
To whoredom's impious sacrifice.

Can this be Britain's law? we ask;
Let blushing statesmen answer, No!
And justice smite, through mail and mask,
The loathsome and nefarious foe.

Till, 'neath our empire's ample shield,
Her daughters find a sure defence,
And men shall rightful honour yield
To woman's virtuous innocence.

Belfast. W. Maxwell.

TAUNTON.—The Gloucester-street Mission, East Peach, Taunton, is a work having many useful features. The evangelist, Mr. Alfred Butcher, enjoys the sympathy and co-operation of many friends. Communications to him may be addressed Quantock View, Taunton.

Aggressive Work.—2.

Somebody asks, Is it not an impertinent thing to stop a stranger and offer him a tract, and ask him if his soul is saved? I don't think so, if done in a polite and respectful manner. Very few would object to your stopping them and offering a £5 note. A dignitary once declined to take a tract from me, saying he required an introduction before taking papers from strangers. We don't need an introduction to save a drowning man. This all-important matter of our soul's salvation often dispenses with the ordinary laws of etiquette, and overrules some of the customs of modern society.

Another asks, "Don't you offend people and do more harm than good?" I know the world says you do, but it is not an authority upon such matters. It is the subject, not the person, that offends, and resentment is usually an evidence that the question has gone home. The harpoon has struck, and only the Great Physician can heal the wound. I have had people apologising weeks afterwards for unkind answers given me.

Unless your words do offend some, you do not really get their attention. There is opposition in their hearts, and when they express it good is done, and their weak place revealed. Oh, these chicken-hearted people, who are always crying out, "Mind you don't do harm"! You cannot do a dead man harm.

Yet another says, "Don't people insult you?" No, not as a rule, although at times they do, because "the carnal mind is enmity against God;" and there are Goths about, therefore we must expect it now and then, for the Master said, "If they have persecuted Me they will also persecute you." Surely we can suffer a little for the loving Saviour who suffered so much for us! But the power in such cases is not in retaliation, but in silence or a kindly answer.

And yet another asks, "Are not these abrupt questions a mistake? Would it not be better to introduce the matter gradually, gently, and cautiously?" There is no reason why this slow and cautious system should not be pursued when thought desirable, and found possible, yet your sphere of operations will be greatly limited if you adopt no other course. The abrupt way opens a much wider field of usefulness, as you can see, and it is really greatly needed, because multitudes are asleep in sin, and only by some uncommon act will they be aroused, humanly speaking. In my judgment nothing is better calculated to arrest their attention and cause serious thought than a sudden question. The great difficulty in Gospel work is in getting men to think seriously.

And still another says, "Is it not very difficult work to do?" Well, as a rule, like most other things, it needs practice, and practice makes perfect, and then to be able to do anything well gives one a liking for it. Some people are born with gifts which others acquire by perseverance.

Someone has said that genius is the faculty for taking pains, and I feel sure a good deal of what we call gift is just the result of determined effort. I was never conscious of having a gift in this direction, for my extreme bashfulness years ago prevented my ever thinking that I could do such work, or make a public speaker of any sort. But we never know what we can do until we try. I quite believe it is "to every man his work," but this special work is undoubtedly the work of a great many who are not doing it, and most of us can do it if we are willing to become fools for the sake of Christ.

No doubt at first we may fail and become disheartened, and perhaps suffer considerably by shame and want of nerve, yet with prayer and trust and perseverance, we shall not fail ultimately. We may feel ashamed, be misunderstood, get perplexed by people's questions, and hurt with their unkind remarks, yet, looking unto Jesus, we must progress and be made a blessing, as well as receive a blessing. Shame troubled me greatly at first, but gradually its power weakened. It is the grandest preparation possible for preaching to the masses, the grandest college training and education; as you learn the difficulties and necessities of men, their reasons, excuses, and errors.

This work need not interfere with other Christian effort we may have in hand; for one can be done, and the other not left undone. We can do it in parenthesis if we like, only let us do it at once, as it is undoubtedly the crying need of the day.

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

DR. BAEDEKER'S SIBERIAN TOUR.

Once more I have reached the Eastern extremity of the Asiatic Continent; after visiting the many prisons in the Russian Empire, proclaiming the glorious Gospel to the many thousands who are kept bound. This has been my third visit to Siberia. In the year 1889 I went as far as Tomsk, and then travelled by the river Volga to the Caspian, and thus to Transcaucasia. In 1890 I travelled all across the Siberian continent, and visited the prison island, Saghalien, and now, three years later, I have accomplished my third visit, and I hope yet to visit Saghalien again in a few days.

Access to the prisons having been granted by high authority in Petersburg, I meet everywhere with a ready reception, and local authorities are generally helpful. It has been my great privilege to carry some gleam of light into many dark, dark hearts, by proclaiming the Gospel of God's grace to sinners of various shades of darkness. One thing is very certain, that not a sound of Gospel truth does ever reach them, and many whom I had spoken to three years ago, remembered my visit with deep gratitude, and welcomed me with gladness. Many of the prisoners had treasured up the books I had given them on that last visit, and in several prisons grateful and glad testimony was given before all the other prisoners to the blessing which they had derived from the books.

The journey through Siberia is long and tedious; European comforts are not to be had; sleeping accommodation and meals are of the most primitive character; yet the mode of travelling by tarantass may be made easy. The hardships one has to endure are accompanied with so much that is cheering and refreshing, that one readily forgets the unpleasant and dangerous incidents. Nature is always refreshing, and Siberian nature has the great charm of being yet in its primeval state, little touched by man. Those who know the great joy that is found in serving the Lord, and in proclaiming his glad tidings to sad and oppressed hearts, will surely appreciate the joyful service in having new congregations of real sinners in every place, and even in every ward; sometimes also hundreds together in the corridor or in the yard eagerly catch the sound of the Gospel which they have never heard before.

Generally speaking, the priests of the Greek Church trouble themselves very little about the prisoners, or, if they pay them visits, it is only to perform a so-called Divine service, which consists in a liturgy and in confession and sacrament,—no preaching or conversation. The prisoners are generally left to themselves or to their companions, and "evil communications corrupt good manners"—the prisons too often prove to be the training school for criminals.

My time is running out: I am now seventy years of age; consequently I can scarcely hope to repeat my visit to Siberia. I therefore wish to stir up the holy ambition of my younger brethren to take up this glorious work of carrying the light into the darkest places of the world, where sin rules over men, and where nothing but the Gospel of redemption by the blood of Jesus can be of any avail.

Our journey by tarantass commenced at Tjumen, where a tarantass was bought for 200 roubles. We travelled to Omsk, Tomsk, Krasnojarsk, Irkutsk, Chita, Nertchinsk, the silver-mining district of Nertchinski-Savod, to Stretinsk, a distance of 4741 versts (equal to 3160 English miles), and we paid for horses and drivers a sum of 370 roubles 60 kopecks (equal to about £37). The tarantass was sold at Stretinsk with a small profit. At Stretinsk the Amoor steamboats start for Blagovestchensk, and from Blagovestchensk for Nikolaevsk. The Amoor Steamboat Company generously granted us free passage on their boats, giving us first-class tickets. The Amoor is a noble river, and may be compared with the Mississippi, only as yet it flows through a waste land of woods and mountains, not inhabited.

At the end of my expedition I can only once more say "Ebenezer," as I have had occasion to say many times before—"hitherto the Lord has helped us!" My faithful companion and interpreter has been a great comfort to me; he will now return to his wife and children in Transcaucasia until he may be called again to enjoy a similar privilege of scattering the seeds of the Gospel in fallow ground.

Through the liberality of the British and Foreign Bible Society, I have been enabled to give Holy Scriptures in various languages to those prisoners who were able to read, the Society supplying the books at a greatly reduced price. The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures generously supplied the funds for acquiring the books, and the agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society have been most helpful in forwarding supplies of books to the localities where they were required.

I gratefully acknowledge the help given us by the prayers of many brethren and sisters who abide at home by the stuff; surely they will be sharers of the spoil! I now proceed by English ship to Chefoo, and thence to Shanghai and homeward.

F. W. Baedeker.

Nikolaevsk, Mouth of the Amoor, Sept. 24.

[We have already (November 16) recorded Dr. Baedeker's arrival at Chefoo.]

GLASGOW EVANGELISM.

Sir,—It is now twenty years since the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association was formed and began work in Glasgow, and we are thankful that the memorable spiritual movement of 1874, which originated the Association, so stirred the community and the life of all our churches that during these years we have never lacked earnest workers or the means for carrying on our labours.

We have had continuous testimony from all parts of our city as to the softening and elevating influence of our evangelistic and ameliorative agencies. Yet in spite of all that is being done both inside and outside of Church organisation, the need of aggressive work is as great as ever, and we dare not relax our efforts. The forces of evil and unbelief never call for a truce, and as yet they greatly outnumber all the remedial agencies of the city.

During recent years there has happily been an increase in the aggressive work carried on by our Churches, but we well know that our Association—whose forty-two directors, composed of ministers and laymen representing all the Evangelical Churches—can carry on a united work which no individual church or denomination could do. The directors fear that while our work has been steadily and quietly carried on all those years, the general public are not aware of its magnitude and value.

While, with very few exceptions, all the workers are volunteers—giving time and labour unrewarded—the necessary outlay, as shown by our published accounts, amounts to over £6000 a year, without taking into account the Children's Fresh Air Fund, which receives and spends annually about £7000 in sending the children of the city slums to the country and seaside for a fortnight.

Although we have many generous contributors to our funds, both great and small, we regret to say that within a short period we have lost by death many who were a tower of strength to the Association, and we estimate that, from this cause alone, our annual contributions have suffered to the extent of fully £1200, and the Directors make this appeal for help to the friends of aggressive work in Glasgow and throughout the country, in the confident belief that, rather than allow our operations to be curtailed, they will come at once to our help, and take the place of those who have passed away.

At present we have a deficit of nearly £2000, and our financial year closes in December. Unless, therefore, we can promptly meet this deficit and greatly increase our regular income, it will be impossible to continue our present work.

For the first time in twenty years the funds of our Sabbath Free Breakfast and Children's Dinner have failed us, and as most of our ameliorative agencies have sprung from these—children's day refuges, children's homes at Saltcoats, children's fresh-air fortnight, girls' home, etc.—we are sure that many who desire to rescue our fallen brothers and sisters, and save many a little child from woe, will help us, and so receive a blessing from those that are ready to perish.

Our work covers a large field. Our chief aim is to save the souls of men by the Gospel of Christ, but we seek as well to save their lives by stretching out a loving hand to them, and thus make them a blessing to the community in place of a curse. We seek to feed the hungry and follow up cases of misery, to rescue and reclaim the drunkard, and have been gladdened by being able, through careful following up, to restore many young people from the brink of ruin to their homes. Many who have been rescued are now rescuing others, and some are now esteemed members and office-bearers in the church of Christ.

Within the last year we have opened a Bible institute in Blythswood-square for the training of evangelists and Christian workers. We have already twenty-seven resident students, all of whom pay a board—which does not, however, cover the cost—and the superintendent, Mr. John Anderson, conducts classes, which are regularly attended by nearly 300. The Directors contemplate seeking funds to enable them still further to extend this important branch of the work.

In the name, and by the authority, of our Directors, I now appeal to the Christian community for money to enable us not only to maintain but to extend our work, which has already been so greatly blessed, and has never been more fruitful than now.

Our secretaries, Mr. J. R. Miller and Mr. Pratt, at the Christian Institute, 70, Bothwell-street, will be happy to send our illustrated report to any one who desires to see the interesting details of our work, and they, or the treasurer, Mr. J. H. N. Graham, 55, Cathedral-street, or myself, will be glad to receive and acknowledge contributions. We are sure that when our needs are made known we shall not appeal in vain to the generous public, who ever appreciate solid work done for the benefit of our great city.—Yours truly,

Overtoun.

7, West George-street, Glasgow.

CEYLON AND INDIAN GENERAL MISSION.

Since I last wrote to you the work of this Mission has been carried on at home in various parts of the country with much blessing. Our first party reached Colombo on Nov. 3.

Mr. Davidson, writing from Port Said, reports a spirit of unity and love among the workers, and says: "Last night a number of the native sailors gathered round us as we were singing, and afterwards we had a talk with them for about two hours. Some of them argue very keenly and know their Koran; they are no mean opponents! It was the best insight our party has had of the real difficulties of the work they are going to. It showed us our own weakness and our need of the Holy Spirit, who alone can convict of sin. Praise God for enabling us to lay a good deal of truth before them. Our steward, a Welshman, has received Jesus as his Saviour."

The aim of our brethren is to preach the Gospel where Christ has not been named, and for this reason, and this alone, they have left their own country and gone to the heathen. No "headquarters" were decided upon before leaving England, but our friends are looking out for, and by now have probably found, a suitable place where they may settle down and learn the language, and from there go on to other parts of Ceylon and India as the Lord may direct.

We have no intention of interfering with the work carried on by missions already in the field, but look forward, when brought together, to happy fellowship with all. God's work is one blessed whole, and if we "walk in the Spirit" no friction can occur, for one life and one spirit will be visible throughout. I trust these few lines will, in some degree, reassure those who are doubtful as to our intentions, as recently suggested by a correspondent.

Chas. A. Ewbank, Secretary.

39, Beresford-road, Mildmay, N.

A SUNDAY-CLOSING CANVASS of the householders of Teignmouth, Shaldon, etc., has resulted as follows: For Sunday closing, 777; against, 101; neutral, 53.

CEYLON.—In No. 4 of Gleams of Light, Mr. H. W. Fry refers to the work of Mr. E. B. Lover amongst the soldiers in Colombo. He says:—"Mr. Lover is a conspicuous instance of what a whole-hearted business man may do both for the Lord and for his fellow-men. He is a plain man, earning his living as foreman in the Wharfage Company here. His qualification for his work consists in his wholeheartedness, his love for God and man, and his trust in God. He is taking up much other work in one way and another. Would there were a score of men in business, self-supporting missionaries in the best sense of the term, in Colombo, to carry on work as he does. Why should there not be?" Copies of the successive issues of Gleams may be had from Mr. F. W. Crossley, Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3.—PSALM CXV.

One of the psalms of the Restoration. The returned exiles realise again the unity of Israel, and in the ecstasy of their restoration contrast Jehovah with the gods of the heathen.

Whenever we have been concerned in some great manifestation of God's power let us repeat this old refrain, "Not unto us, not unto us." The glory of the name of God, that men should think highly of Him, should be a purpose of each regenerated soul. Live to maintain the family honour! Beside God we have an advocate; the Lamb is amid the throne; God's good pleasure is redemption; no absentee God is ours. When men are asking, Where is He? Faith answers, Lo, He is here.

The remainder of the psalm (9-18) is full of exhortations to trustfulness. Israel (its scattered people considered as one great host) trust thou. Aaron, including Levites and priests; ye that fear the Lord, including proselytes from the Gentiles—for each and all, God is equally help and shield, making them strong in the battle, and casting the mantle of his protection as a shield around them. Argue from the past to the future. Has He been mindful? Then He will bless. Once more the Psalmist enumerates the three classes whom he had before exhorted to trust, and assures them of God's blessing. "He will bless" (12). "We will bless" (18).

MONDAY, DECEMBER 4.—PSALM CXVI.

This, with the three preceding and the two following psalms, constituted the great Hallel, and there is peculiar beauty in appropriating its expressions to the usage of our Lord as He rose from the supper to face Gethsemane. It is as if his soul were already anticipating its victories, and rejoicing in its assured answer, and, as it has been used through eighteen centuries, this psalm has expressed the hopes, resolves, and songs of myriads who have trodden the same path and passed ultimately into the same light, as they are now rejoicing in the same land of life. Take heart! Your time will come presently. There are no expressions that so well befit the emergence of the soul from darkness, whether of trouble or of earth's brief night.

The cup of life was once one of anguish and pain, such as Christ drank in the garden. But He has drained it to the dregs, and returned it brimming with salvation. Drink deep draughts of this, it is the blood of the new covenant, and call on the name of God, in thankful joy.

How remarkable it is that the bond-servant of God describes himself as loosed. There is no freedom comparable to that which comes to such as are his slaves and bear his brand-marks. None can enslave or trouble those who confess themselves absolutely his. The Son has made them free indeed.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 5.—PSALM CXVII.

When the Jew truly loved God, he awoke to love the world of men, and wished that all should join in praise. St. Paul quotes this psalm (Rom. xv. 11) to show that the time is coming when the Gentiles shall be admitted into covenant relationship with the God of Israel. And as the Church, which, in the present day, is so largely composed of Gentiles, recites this psalm in her daily worship, there is a fulfilment of the anticipation of the Hebrew minstrel. As Christians use this psalm they fulfil it.

The theme for praise, which is as fresh to-day as when these words were first written, is the mercy and truth of God—his great mercy, his everlasting truth. But we need the anointed eye to detect these strands woven into the web of universal life. Oh, for grace to see the love of God where others descry only the reign of law! Oh, for the strength of purpose that does not require mercy, unless it is associated with truth! Oh, for the faith that trusts where it cannot see, and believes where it cannot understand! The last word is Hallelujah! Such is the outcome of all meditation on the nature and acts of God. "The four-and-twenty elders worshipped God, saying, Amen! Alleluia!" (Rev. xix. 4).

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6.—PSALM CXVIII.

It is thought by some that this psalm dates from the defeat of Haman's plot (Esther viii. 9). In any case it suits the gladness of a great deliverance. The three classes noticed in Ps. xv. who were then bidden to trust and bless, are now summoned to attest the enduring mercy of God.

Again, we have the themes of holy praise (5, etc.) To have been answered when in distress; to be set in a large place; to know that God is on your side, this makes the soul fearless and glad.

When the tide of emotion is high we cannot stay to pick our words. Mark the tumult with which the rapture of the delivered soul expresses itself! Again and yet again it uses the same words; it prefers God to man and princes; it threatens destruction to whole nations; it recalls the assaults of the foe, only to compare his overthrow to the rapid fire that burns out in thorns; it quotes from Moses' song snatches of inspired expression as if its own words were not strong enough; it magnifies the right hand of God—the right hand where Jesus sits.

Still higher the strain rises, the chastened soul passes in its white robes from its sickness and darkness into the temple (19, etc.); through the open gate of righteousness it enters on its work of praise; it sees how God selects rejected men to be his foundation stones; it expects and receives a welcome from the residents in the house of God. Nor is this all, the priest and minstrel becomes a sacrifice, bound to the altar, ready for service or suffering, and finding through each its sufficient motive for thanksgiving and praise.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7.—PSALM CXIX.

It has been the practice of eminent saints to turn to this psalm for heart quickening; and, indeed, if instead of merely reading it with the sense of the irksomeness of its length, each reader of these words would take it for meditation in an hour of solitude, it would be impossible to rise from its devout consideration without feeling the pulses of the heart-throb quickened.

The personal element is its characteristic, every sentence revolves around the personality of the Psalmist—I, my, mine, me; and there is no true dealing with God unless the depths of the individual life are unbared, and secrets told into his ear, which the soul dare not whisper to even the dearest. In prayer, as in heaven, it should not be through a glass darkly, but face to face. The Word of God is not less characteristic of the Psalmist's thought; under many different titles he refers to it. As the lover is never weary of addressing the same endearing terms to his love, so the Psalmist must needs speak of the Word of God with reiterated mention of the various epithets which he has coined for it.

Notice the frequent recurrence of the phrases, teach me thy statutes; quicken me; make me. There are others which will repay search; indeed, the characteristic words of this psalm, that ring through it melodiously, would furnish suggestions for ejaculatory prayer, such as would greatly enrich the quiver of the soul for the demands of the battle of life.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8.—PSALM CXX.

The first of the Songs of Degrees, composed after the return from exile, and probably sung as the pious Israelites ascended from all parts of the land to the Temple Festivals. These songs well become the several gradations of the soul in its passage upwards.

We all start in our ascents from the lowest. Distress, lying lips, deceitful tongue, Meshech, Kedar; those that hate peace and make for war. Many of those who read these words have daily experiences which they can read into those ancient phrases. Meshech and Kedar, the habitations of wandering tribes, with their flimsy tents, aptly symbolise uncertainty and instability.

Let us not forget that even there it is possible to utter cries which will bring answers from God. His deliverances will not tarry; his vindication will not fail; He will silence the deceitful tongue; He will give peace to the soul that yearns for it; and out of all the darkness the believer shall come at length, as the pilgrim leaves behind him the valley where malaria and mist hold sway. You cannot ascend unless you first descend. You cannot fill all things unless you go into the nethermost parts of the earth; you cannot reach the holy city except by way of the valley of Baca; you cannot know the light unless you have tasted darkness; there is no way to the throne except by the sepulchre.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9.—PSALM CXXI.

The mountains are not high enough, look higher, child of God, for help to the God who made the mountains, and earth and heaven. From his throne He will succour thee.

Thou hast put down thy foot to take possession of his promises. Man and devil seek to move it back. He will not suffer them to prevail. Like a sentry he keeps watch and ward about thee, so that none shall take thee by surprise. It is not thou that keepest Him, but He that keepeth thee; nay, He keeps not thee alone, but his Israel, like a flock browsing on the green pastures, or passing through the deep ravine haunted by ravenous beasts.

Does the sun smite thee with his sword, emblem of the temptations of prosperity? Thy God will interpose his shadow. Does the moon shed on thy sleeping moments her baleful influence? His care shall curtain thee. Does evil, like the blue mist of malaria, threaten to wither thy life? He shall screen thee from its noxious vapours. Dost thou go out to work, or war, or to the temptations of the wilderness? He will encompass thee with his protection. Dost thou come in to ease and rest and home? He will deliver thee from the subtle temptations that wait to dart from out every fireside. He will do this for thee, not to-day, or to-morrow only, but henceforth and for evermore.

F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 10.

The Heavenly Inheritance.—1 Peter i. 1-12.

Golden Text, Col. i. 12.

Peter wrote this epistle during the great persecution of Christians in the reign of Nero. It was written from Babylon (v. 13), which some have considered a disguised name for Rome. It has been suggested that such means were resorted to by the early Christians for purposes of concealment. Notwithstanding this suggestion, it appears to us more probable that the name applies to the city of Babylon, on the Euphrates. Peter wrote to the Christians in various parts of Asia Minor (1). These are called "strangers," a term which accurately describes their attitude towards this world. Their citizenship is in heaven (Heb. xi. 9-16; xiii. 14). The purpose of the epistle may be gathered from the following description of the life of Christians under the Neronian persecution:—"They were accused of being evil-doers, of preaching revolutionary doctrines (iii. 15, 16). The very name of Christian exposed them to odium and outrage" (iv. 16) .... "When a wave of fanatic hatred against the name of Christian was flowing well-nigh over the length and breadth of the empire, rulers in the provinces were but too likely to follow the example which Nero set them in the capital." The aim of the epistle is to minister comfort and encouragement to those who were exposed to the fury of this persecution.

The Salutation (2) was exactly suited to this design. Two things would oppress the Christians:—First, the power of the Roman Empire seeking to crush them; and next, the imperfection of their own obedience in face of such fearful temptation. Both are provided for here. What is the power of Rome against that of the whole Trinity? Napoleon used to say, "God is on the side of the strongest battalions." It is not so. Christians with God on their side are mightier than Nero (Rome viii. 31). Their other need is met by the blood of sprinkling, which is applied, not only to their sins, but to their "obedience." Chosen by the Father, sanctified by the Spirit, cleansed by the Son, they need not fear.

The Heavenly Inheritance (3-5). The hope of this gives further cause for encouragement. The hope is well grounded (3). We are born to it. Our second birth brings us into the family of God, and makes us heirs to the inheritance. Do not indulge the hope until you know you are "born again." An adopted child who had been put among the children, and dealt with as a child, was cruelly taunted by a schoolmate with not being the child of her whom she called mother. She was afterwards found in deep distress in her room, and cried out again and again, "Am I not your child, and are you not my mother?" And when she received only evasive replies, she put the question in her own significant way, "But did you born me?" Be as eager to know the truth as to your new birth. It is a hope of a worthy inheritance (4). It contrasts with every earthly inheritance. The present enjoyment of what a man has is often marred by the thought that it may not continue. And often the most favourable surroundings are a curse to a man because they are defiled. This is not so (Matt. vi. 19-21). And the hope will not be disappointed (4, 5). God keeps the inheritance for you, and keeps you for the inheritance. Nero could banish them, separate them from friends, torture them, and even take away their life; but he could not rob them of their heavenly inheritance. Meet the temptations which beset you, not with the thought of what you can do, but of what God can do. It is "the power of God" which is engaged to keep you.

Their Present Experience (6-9). The Apostle does not ignore their severe sufferings; but several considerations are mentioned to mitigate them. They are only "for a season," there is a "needs be" for them (6), and they will serve to try and prove their faith (7). The bitter persecutions of their enemies assume altogether a new character when seen as overruled by God for the discipline and ultimate benefit of his people. And even in their sufferings they can rejoice greatly (6-8). This joy was the strength which enabled the martyrs to endure persecution without flinching. The joy of the Christian life is not all in reserve. The more our sufferings for Christ abound, the more will our consolation also abound by Him.

The closing verses (10-12) reveal the Value of the Gospel. It was foretold by prophets, and was communicated to them by the Spirit of Christ. Their theme was, not the glory of Christ alone, but the glory as resulting from the suffering. Through suffering to glory was as true of Him as of them. The predictions became the subject of the prophet's devout inquiry; and even angels saw in the whole theme of their message a wisdom they desired to fathom. What were present sufferings in comparison with such a salvation?

G. W.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

"BAPTIZED FOR THE DEAD."

1 Cor. xv. 29.—"Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?"

The difficulty of this passage arises very much from want of close attention to the Apostle's own explanation of his meaning. He is refuting the error of those who denied the resurrection. He first shows (ver. 13) that such a denial involves a denial of Christ's resurrection, and with it of the whole hope of a Christian. After a short digression (23—28), in which he traces out the various stages of resurrection history in the future, he returns to another argument derived from the well-known teaching of baptism as symbolical of death and resurrection. If resurrection be denied, then only death remains; and baptism becomes a baptism for death alone, not for death and resurrection. But instead of putting it thus in the abstract, he treats it personally. "Else what shall they do who are baptized for the dead (as one may call it) if the dead rise not at all?" He is contemplating the case of all Christians who are baptized in hope of the resurrection, and describes them as "baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all." That is, they are baptized for fellowship or association with the dead, for enrolment amongst the dead, "if so be that the dead are not raised." (R.V.) Well may he ask, "Why then are they baptized for them?" (R.V.) What sort of privilege would baptism be if it only reminds you of fellowship with the dead, and there leaves you?

But baptism not only sets forth in symbol the hope of the future resurrection grounded on Christ's death and resurrection, but it teaches a present participation in spirit in the likeness of his death and resurrection; so the Apostle goes on to speak of his present experience, "I die daily . . . . . what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Abolish the hope of resurrection, and there remains only the hope of those who say, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Thus the whole context confirms this interpretation, and shows that in arguing from baptism as the ordained initiatory rite of Christianity, St. Paul is urging that instead of being (as the two acts of immersion and emersion declare) a consignment of the believer to the fellowship of those who "died with Christ" and "believe that (they) shall also live with Him," it becomes, if there is no resurrection, a being "baptized for the dead."

There is really no difficulty in the Greek preposition rendered "for." No doubt its primary meaning is "over," and its usual metaphorical meaning "in behalf of"; but, as Canon Evans says in the "Speaker's Commentary": "Frequent in Greek are uses of this preposition denoting not only 'in behalf of,' but also on 'account of,' 'with an interest in,' 'concerning,' 'with a view to,' or simply 'in relation to.'" Perhaps the last would best explain its use here, "baptised for (or 'in relation to') the dead."

The late Dr. Tregelles suggested a change in the punctuation which conveys much the same meaning. He proposed ("History of Printed Text," p. 216) to read it thus: "Else what shall the baptized do? (It is) for the dead, if the dead rise not at all; why then are they baptized for them?" The meaning obtained, however, being much the same, it is perhaps better to retain the ordinary punctuation.

The main point is this: by "baptized for the dead" St. Paul uses an expression to denote what baptism would be if the resurrection were not true. Thank God it is true, and baptism assures its true recipients (repentance and faith being required of those that are baptized) that their portion is not with the dead, but with those who through the grave and gate of Christ's death pass to their joyful resurrection, in spirit now, in body hereafter.

The common explanation which so many modern commentators adopt—for the ancient writers explain it much as above—is grounded on a superstitious practice, which prevailed among some early heretics, of what is called vicarious baptism, or baptizing a living person over one who died without baptism, that the dead person might thus obtain the supposed benefit of baptism! Of this gross superstition Bishop Wordsworth says, "As far as we know there was no such usage then practised at Corinth or anywhere else in the Church of that age," and Godet says, "We have no instance which can lead us to suppose that such a custom had a place in the life of the primitive churches. It was not till after the apostolic period that the idea of the magical virtue of the sacraments began to corrupt the primitive spirituality."

Godet himself takes "baptized for the dead" to mean martyrdom, but the infrequency of martyrdom at that early time seems to make this view improbable. H. E. B.

For the Young.

TRUE CHARITY.

"Mother dear, I'm going to be so good to-day," said nine-year-old Dora Winstone, running into her mother's room one summer morning, and throwing her arms around her mother's neck.

"And so am I," said little Chris, who was but seven, who had followed Dora in. "We're going to be charitable, mother."

"Do my darling children know what that long word means?" asked Mrs. Winstone, looking down at her children's eager faces with a loving smile.

"Oh yes, we know quite well," answered Dora; "don't we, Chris? You know, mother, our portion for this morning was the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, and that's all about charity. Nurse explained it to us, for we didn't quite understand at first; and, mother, she said that we could be charitable without giving away things; I'm so glad, for I don't often have anything to give."

"You are never without something to give, my child," said Mrs. Winstone. "A kind word or look will not cost anything. I am so glad, darling, that you understand the chapter so well, for I remember one day long ago——"

"Is it a story, mother?" And little Chris looked so pleased that Mrs. Winstone could not resist the temptation of making her experience into a "story."

"It was years ago, dears," she said, "when I was very little. I remember going to church one Sunday morning, and sitting by my mother's side in our pew, with my father's kind face looking down at me now and again from the pulpit, where he was preaching from the last verse of the chapter you have read this morning. I don't remember ever having read that verse before, so it was quite new to me.

"'Oh,' I thought, 'I have tried so many times to be good and obedient, and very often I have failed; but I shall succeed this time, for it's easy enough to be charitable.'

"I didn't listen to the sermon, for my head was full of my own ideas about charity; as soon as I reached home I made secret plans for giving away half I possessed. The next day I managed to steal out of the house without anyone knowing, and very soon meeting a beggar I pressed my new bright shilling, the only coin I possessed, into his hand. The man looked so pleased that I was delighted with my experiment, and was hastening home when the thought struck me that I should have to leave off being charitable when I had nothing more to give. I suppose this made me look very downcast, for meeting my father just then, he asked me 'what was the matter,' and 'why was I out alone.'

"Then I had to tell him all, and how glad I was afterwards that I did so! For he explained to me, as nurse did to you, that charity does not only mean giving away, but that in its old English sense, as well as in Scripture, it meant love, love to God and to those around us. He went on to say that the possession of this love makes us more and more like Him who is Love. I believe that from that very day I have tried to love and please God and all around me, for charity or love distinguishes itself by forbearance, sympathy, and helpfulness. And oh, my darling children," added Mrs. Winstone, as she stooped to kiss them, "remember that you can do nothing without God's help, ask Him for it every day, and He will surely give it you, and help you to grow more like Himself."

A. C. G.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Brussels, to Nov. 30; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Stoke's Croft Chapel, Bristol, Nov. 25 to Dec. 10; Rev. Martin J. Hall, St. Philip's, Manchester, to Nov. 27; Altrincham, Dec. 2-3; Mr. J. S. Tyler, York, Dec. 3; Waterhouses, co. Durham, Dec. 4 to 17; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Tabernacle Schools, Croydon, Nov. 26 to Dec. 4 (with Mr. Goodman); Mission Hall, Gay-street, Scotland-road, Liverpool, Dec. 9 to 20; Mr. George Goodman, Bow, Dec. 10 to 17; Mr. J. M. Wigner, St. John's, Hatcham, Dec. 11; Mr. H. Hankinson, Harringay, Dec. 12.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Malachi, Dec. 3, S., iii. 1-9; 4, iii. 10-18; 5, iv. 1-6; 6. Psalms cxxxvi. 1-12; 7, cxxxvi. 13-26; 8, cxxxviii. 1-8; 9 cxxxix. 1-16.

THE PRECIOUS BUTTON.

By Rev. Thomas Champness.

During the recent coal strike, among the many curious things that happened was the story I am about to tell.

We have working in South Wales a grandson of old John Preston, whom Dr. Gregory likes to talk about. He is not a bit like his grandfather, only in one thing—he knows how to get a hearing, go where he will. He has been made a wondrous blessing, and has many spiritual children from those who were counted heirs of damnation. Gamblers, drunkards, wife-beaters, and pigeon-flyers came to hear him, and, having so much of the raw material, it is easy for him to do business for the Lord Jesus.

Among his converts is a young fellow whose employment is down the pit. As you know, there have been riots and rows such as one hoped would never disgrace this country again, but then selfishness is a sad disturber of both private and public peace. I don't know what this youngster was doing, but he was not one of the rioters. Perhaps it would have been better if he had been at home, but more than likely he was not the only Methodist in the row. I have been in one or two myself—one since I became a minister, only that time I helped the police when they were in sore straits.

It is not very easy to account for it, but some men will find a fight as easily as ducks find water, and peaceable man as every one knows me to be, I have not been able to keep out of scrimmages, so I am not at all inclined to blame this youngster.

When the rioters fired this young fellow was hit, but the shot struck one of his trouser buttons, and glanced off without wounding him. The shock, however, was so severe that he was knocked down by the force of the ball! He must have been killed but for the button.

Mr. Preston called to see him, and found his mother in great glee that her lad had not been killed. She might have had to bury her son, and I daresay has told him in future to keep out of mobs and far from riotous men. But the young man himself says he was doing nothing wrong, and feels that if the button had not stopped the ball he would have gone to heaven hurriedly, yet to heaven sure enough.

The mother said: "Mr. Preston, you were the instrument of saving his soul, and the button of saving his body, so I think you ought to be both together." Accordingly she cut off the button, and handed it over to the evangelist, who sure enough prizes that which was between his convert and death.—Methodist Recorder.

TWILIGHT.

Great clouds across the western vale
Like clustering opals, slowly sail,
Whose dusty splendours sweep away
The smouldering fires of dying day.

And through the pines the moon's white beam
Falls feebly on the darkling stream;
It rose up faintly from the deep,
Before the wild birds went to sleep.

I am a wild bird, 'neath the skies
There is not one, O God, that flies,
So yearning for thy love's caress,
So needful of thy tenderness.

Sustain me with thy Living Breath,
Lest, sleeping, I should sleep in death;
Through shadow'd eve and night of fear,
My Father, O my Father, hear.

I know the night, the gloom, the shade,
Make not thy nestling ones afraid;
For safely on thy shelt'ring breast,
Thy faltering fledgelings sink to rest.

'Tis even so. Then come, O eve,
Come sleep, come death, I will not grieve;
But still support me, Love divine;
Blest "Light of life," arise and shine.

Caroline Tickner.

FULHAM.—Services for young people have been held at Fulham Congregational Church in connection with the Guild Christian Union. They commenced by a powerful address on "The New Birth," given by Mr. Oscar Owers, who conducted the services through the week. Blessing has followed his work at Fulham, and the spiritual life of many has been quickened and deepened.

A NOBLE MAN IN HUMBLE LIFE.

By Rev. JOHN R. BRUCE, GLASGOW.

"Strongest minds
Are often those of whom the noisy world
Hears least."

These words remind me of a good man and true, whom I knew, and whose example and sayings I can never forget. He was a person in humble circumstances in life, who cultivated some twenty acres of land, and, at certain seasons of the year, followed the occupation of a fisherman, in a remote place in Scotland. In his life there was little wasted time; for when he was not fishing or farming, he was reading, or visiting the sick and the aged, or preparing addresses for district meetings which he was in the habit of conducting.

He was well read in history, especially in Church history. When a friend, calling at his house one evening, found him poring over D'Aubigné's History of the Reformation, and asked if he did not get tired of studying those dry chronicles, the reply was: "No; the past has much to teach us, if we approach it with reverence." But above all he studied the Bible, which he believed told him, straight from the lips of God, all that he ought to do, and needed to know. He lived so fully in the spirit of the Bible, and so thoroughly understood the human heart, that he could touch life successfully with truth.

As he moved about among the people, and became acquainted with their difficulties and views, he uttered words that passed as proverbs in the place. When parties talked about their conversion his remark was, "The reason for seeds is that flowers may be. In the degree in which the Spirit of Christ rises up and lives in us we know that we belong to Him." When he found one affecting great spirituality and despising knowledge, he said, "The spirituality that would exalt itself and glory over knowledge is certainly the most offensive kind of pride, and the hollowest." To a woman complaining one day about her servant he said, "There is only one way of making good servants, that is to

BE WORTHY OF BEING WELL SERVED."

When he heard people speculating about heaven, he told them that we knew nothing definitely of the heavenly world, except that it will be free from sorrow and pure from sin. When he was asked questions of a speculative nature about God and Christ and immortality, his usual reply was: "The best way to be sure there is a God is to admit Him into the soul; the only way to be persuaded there is a Saviour is to accept his help; the only way to have the hope of a blessed immortality is to have something in our souls which we can reasonably wish to be immortal."

When people complained of their hard lot in life his usual reply was: "The best position in the world is that which is most fitted to nourish good principles and to press the soul ever nearer to God." With those who were sincere, but at times felt weak and weary in the life of faith, he showed great tenderness and spoke very encouragingly. If they would only cling to the cross and person of the crucified Son of God the bending reed would become a pillar in the temple of God, and the glimmering wick would shine like the sun in the kingdom of our Father.

The nearer one got to the man the more beautiful did his character appear; consequently it was in his own family circle where he was seen to the greatest advantage. It goes without saying that he did all that a good man should do to make his children loyal to Christ. The truth that he never tired of pressing on his children was this:—"Try both how devout you can be, and how well stored and educated your mind can be, and you will be a power in the world for good." He also insisted on this lesson, that faithful prayer implies always corresponding exertion; and that when they prayed to be delivered from temptation, and strengthened for duty, they should firmly determine to be kept out of it, and to do with their might what God gave them to do.

When he returned from the fishing, he no sooner entered his home than he gathered his family around him and engaged in family worship. No matter however tired he might be, no matter what the hour, or the duties of the hour—it might be twelve o'clock at night, when all were in bed, or eleven o'clock in the busiest harvest day, the duty of thanking God for his preserving care was never neglected.

As his children grew up and were able to read, he gave each two strongly-bound Bibles. One was to be taken with them wherever they went, and if possible kept to the last day of their life. The other was kept for family worship, and laid aside morning and evening with the big Bible that the father used on those occasions. After some of his children had left the old home, and some had died, all the Bibles were put on the table at the time of worship. As the old man looked on those Bibles that little hands had used, and thought how the good Book had guided some of his children to the better home, and was guiding others, his soul was kindled into greater intensity in pleading with God.

In the evening of life trials crowded on him thick and fast, but these only led him to fasten his hands more firmly on God's throne, and so stand firm, not only in character but in hope. When his dearest possessions withered at the touch of death, like flowers that blacken in an early frost, he did not deafen those around him with piteous personal lamentation, as though everything had perished. As he said himself, it only led him to go away more frequently in thought to the quiet hills of God, and rest more fully in the everlasting love of his unchanging Friend. In those days he had but he could bear them all, for he did not bid farewell to God; and he felt that to live with Him was to possess the hope which would restore all he meanwhile lost. Two of his sons sailed away one morning in a fishing-boat, along with four neighbours, and returned no more. A third son died in a distant land; while a married daughter died in childbirth. In those days of trial he realised that while all things here below change, God changeth not; that while his life was full of trouble, yet in Christ he had peace. So he lived a happy, hopeful old age, certain that he had not long here to stay, but interested to the very last in the best things of life, in the cause of God and men.

MANY BITTER FAREWELLS,

When he was no longer able to go to church, he spent part of the Sabbath praying for the congregation, the most of whom he personally knew, in all of whom he was interested. He read the promises of God to the church, and then in thought went from pew to pew in the place where he had worshipped for fully sixty years, praying for the people individually. When a friend asked him if he did not find this exercise too much for his strength, the reply was: "I have always found that while true prayer is the most complete rest of the soul, the most entire confession of weakness, it is the most real and absorbing work. But," said the old man, as the big tear fell from his eye, to help the church now, and I like to do it."

"IT IS ALL THAT I CAN DO

Early one June morning he got the call to come home. To the few friends in the chamber of death he said little. At his request one read the last chapter of the Book of Revelation, and they sang "The Happy Land." After this hymn had been sung, he said in a low, solemn voice, "Simply to thy cross I cling," and then fell asleep. Those who were present long remembered the heavenly calmness on the dying face, and the felt near presence of God. One who was there used to say: "When I came out of the house on that beautiful summer morning everything was lovely; but nature in all her beauty compared poorly with what I had left—the dying saint and the near presence of God."

A few days after, all that remained of this eminent servant of God was followed to the grave by a large multitude of mourners, many of whom specially knew his worth, not a few of whom he had led to live a good life. There in the lonely churchyard of his native parish his mortal remains were laid to rest till the resurrection of the just. No stone marks his grave; but the example of his holy and beautiful life will long live in the memories of those who knew his worth. If his friends felt as they returned from his grave that there was one arm less to defend the truth, and another name added to the roll of the mighty dead, they might have been comforted by his own words: "We need not fear for the Gospel of Christ whoever may be taken away. Calvary has still its Olivet; the shadow of the cross its ascension glory."

SANDGATE.—The annual meeting of Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute was held on Thursday, when addresses were given by Mr. J. H. Du Baulay, Surgeon-Major Alston, Major Stirling, Captain Hill, and others. A branch of the Soldiers' Christian Association was formed. Branches have also been formed at Hythe and Dover during the week.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

Pasteur Fontayne writes from Sens, in the Department of Yonne:—

"Our winter campaign promises well, if we may judge by the beginning. The ladies' working party has recommenced, and each of the ten members present not only brought her needle, but also various articles of clothing to be worked out for the poor.

"Our catechumens interest us greatly. There are three here at Sens, who come every Friday for instruction. I find them most attentive and studious, and feel that my labour is not in vain with regard to them. Three others live too far off to attend the class, so I go to them, and give each a separate lesson at their homes. My bicycle is very useful on those occasions, as the distances are great (from twelve to fifteen miles). As a rule, the portions to be studied are well prepared, and the parents generally sit by to listen, and sometimes ask questions. The teaching given to a single boy or girl has thus a wider range, and the Lord may bless it to all the family.

"At Sens our Protestants belong partly to the well-to-do, partly to the working classes. Many are Swiss, who rejoice to find here a Protestant church and pastor. Others were won from Romanism several years ago. There are also inquirers, who will, we trust, join our ranks sooner or later. In the meantime we try to exercise an Evangelical influence upon them.

"The meetings at St. Maurice are well frequented by old converts, who are bringing up their children in the fear of God. Lately, on the occasion of the funeral of an Englishman, I preached the Gospel to a crowd of persons who rarely have an opportunity of hearing it. Thus in various ways the knowledge of the Gospel is extending quietly, but surely. How much good has been done by the Société Evangélique de France in our department alone! Forty-five years ago there was not in it a single church or pastor, and very few Protestants. Now there are pastors in six towns, with their churches and parsonages; and every year souls are gained from unbelief or superstition to the Gospel of Christ."

N.E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held on Tuesday, November 21, at Earlham Hall, Islington, which was densely crowded. Mr. Samuel Causton presided.

Mr. Chorley, who has superintended the work for more than twenty years, gave an encouraging account of souls being ingathered from tent, indoor and outdoor services. Joyful notes were also struck in recording the work among factory girls and gutter lads. The work at the large Seaside Home at Lancing came in for special mention; the freehold has now been secured for the mission. The balance-sheet shows that the amount received, including £500 brought into account from a deposit at bankers', was £3000 19s. 3d., while the outgoings, including part purchase-money for Lancing Home, amounted to £2991 10s.

Various workers, speaking from their practicall experience, gave details of a deeply interesting character. Dr. Neatby gave a weighty and helpfug address to the Lord's servants present. "Ned" Wright and other workers followed in prayer or testimony.

A VILLAGE LIBRARY.

Sir,—For a long time I have felt the need of some place in our village as a meeting-place for young men, to counteract the influence of the three public-houses, which are always open to tempt them within their doors. At last I have secured a double cottage, which has been altered to suit our convenience, and I have opened a coffee-house and reading-room, and secured a Christian man and wife to manage it, the man to act as colporteur during the day. Already sixty young men have joined the reading-room, which is very gratifying. I am writing to ask your readers for a few books to form a small library. As our expenses will be about £2 a week, we shall, on account of the smallness of the village and the slackness of work, require help of from 10s. to 15s. a week at least until the month of April or May. After that I have no doubt it will be self-supporting.

Yours faithfully,

J. H. Marshall, Pastor, Union Chapel.

Crockenhill, Swanley, Kent.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIER'S LIST.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS. By Rev. A. SCOTT MATHESON, Author "The Gospel and Modern Substitutes." Crown 8vo, 5s.
The Contents include:—The Duty of the Church in Relation to Social Problems—Political Economy, Old and New — Landlordism and Land Reform — The Labour Question(Hours and Wages)—The Liquor Question—Poverty —Better Housing—Sweating—Child Life, and Rescue— Woman's Place and Influence—The Co-operative Movement—Commonwealth, Ideal and Actual—The City of God.

FIFTEENTH THOUSAND.

BUNYAN CHARACTERS. Lectures delivered in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh. By Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

BUNYAN'S HOLY WAR. With Prefatory Note by Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D., and Frontispiece by Mrs. Traquair. Price 2s. cloth extra.

GOLDEN NAILS, and other addresses to Children. By Rev. GEORGE MILLIGAN, B.D. 1s. 6d.
"Very fresh and interesting sermons to children."—British Weekly.

THE YOUNG PREACHER. By THEODORE L. COYLER, D.D., 1s. 6d. cloth.
"Running over with good practical advice to young preachers."—Sword and Trowel.

THE LAST SCOTTISH MARTYR.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF JAMES RENWICK, the last Scottish Martyr. By Rev. W. H. CARSLAW, M.A., Helensburgh. With Vignette and Fac-simile Letter, Post 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE FIFTH GOSPEL; or, The Land where Jesus Lived. By the Rev. J. M. P. OTTS, D.D., LL.D. With Maps, Plans, and Numerous Illustrations. 5s.
"We can commend the book as being really illustrative of the Gospel story."—Record.

PRINCETON SERMONS. Chiefly by the Professors in Princeton Theological Seminary. Crown 8vo. 5s.

THE COVENANTERS OF THE MERSE; their History and Sufferings as found in the Records of that Time. By the Rev. J. WOOD BROWN. Post 8vo. 2s. 6d.
"The book unfolds stories of modern heroism and spiritual fidelity which it does one good to read to-day."—Christian.

MRS. A. R. SIMPSON'S NEW BOOKLET.

DRIED ROSE-LEAVES. In pretty Enamelled Cover, Embossed in Gold, with wrapper. Price 6d.
"Incident, illustration, and quotation, in prose and poetry, combine to make it as welcome as it is useful."—Christian.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIER,
LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

Wanted, Help to place additional Agents in the field.

The Society scatters Scripture truth along undenominational and non-controversial lines.
Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Sir William Quartus Ewart, Bart., Belfast. c2483

THE SHIVERING AND SUFFERING POOR.

MR. ROBERT GLADSTONE and ED. DOBREE, Esq., are heartily thanked for their Donations for Food, Coals, and Blankets for the sick and needy. Further help greatly required.—A. STYLEMAN HERRING, for local committee, Vicar, etc., thirty-four years St. Paul's, Clerkenwell.—45, Colebrooke-row, N. Bankers: London and County.

Water-cress and Flower Girls' Mission,

CLERKENWELL CLOSE, E.C.

The cry of little Children, Friendless Girls and Women, is most distressing as the advent of winter deprives them of their means of livelihood. Our doors are besieged by those who are anxious for admission to our Orphanage, Servants' Training Homes and Refuges.

In order to meet these distressing claims we earnestly solicit the Christian sympathy of our friends and helpers. The 27th Annual Report will be forwarded on application.—JOHN GROOM, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

THE WELCOME HOME

FOR SAILORS of VARIOUS NATIONS.

FREE SUPPERS ARE GIVEN TO THE DESTITUTE & UNEMPLOYED

as often as funds permit. Donations will be received by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Friends always welcome.

Homeward Bound!
THE UNLOADING OF
The Christmas Boat,

Laden with gifts for Sailors, their Wives and Children will (God willing) take place Saturday, December 30, 1893.
Friends wishing to contribute Cargo are requested to communicate with Miss CHILD, at The Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, London, E.

— THE —

RESCUE SOCIETY,

— 79, —

Finsbury Pavement,

LONDON, E.C.

THE need of help is now most urgent, and one of the Homes must be closed shortly if liberal help is not forthcoming speedily.

16,176 young women and girls have been admitted to the Homes since the Society was established in 1853.

Nine Homes are supported, accommodating 250 inmates at the same time.

The object is to reclaim from and to prevent falling into a life of sin; special Maternity cases are admitted; while a small Lock Hospital is also maintained.

Over 700 applications for admission have been received in nine months, testifying most abundantly to the need of all the Homes.

A generous response to this appeal is earnestly solicited to avoid so sad a calamity as reducing the number of the Homes.

Contributions may be forwarded to the Bankers, Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT; or will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to the Secretary,

C. STUART THORPE.

79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Fifty years' Triumphs of the Gospel among the Jews.

JUBILEE CELEBRATION
OF THE
BRITISH SOCIETY,
1893.

President - Rev. J. HILES HITCHENS, D.D.

Jubilee Motto: "The World for Christ through the Jew."

This Society was founded and fostered by such saintly men as the Revs. Ridley Herschell, Andrew A. Bonar, and Robert Murray McCheyne.
Thousands of Jewish souls have been won for Christ, such as Lydia Montefiore, aunt of Sir Moses Montefiore.

A Jubilee Challenge—The offer of £100.

"A Poor Man," who has been a Subscriber for twenty-seven years, has kindly offered to give £100 when the amount of the Jubilee Fund reaches £4,900.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Rev. J. DUNLOP, at the Offices of the Society, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C., and by the Editor of "THE CHRISTIAN."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

All-night Shelter Rescue Work
(Thrawl Street, Spitalfields).

ALREADY, since this work began, 45,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with the most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual pressure, and from present appearances a very hard season is apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

JAS. ATKINSON, Secretary.

28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, London, N. c2754

LONDON CITY MISSION.

Nearly 500 Missionaries are now employed in beseeching the masses in the Metropolis to be reconciled to God through Jesus Christ our Lord, and to unite themselves with some section of the visible Church. House to House visitation; personal dealing; work purely undenominational.

FUNDS MUCH NEEDED.

Communications to the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., or to the Secretaries, ROBERT DAWSON, B.A., T. HUTCHINSON, M.A., 3, Bridewell Place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

"BRIDGE OF HOPE,"
Ratcliff Highway, St. George's, E.

Miss Steer will be thankful if friends will send for parcels of Hosiery and Knitted Goods, or Useful Garments, made by the young women in the Refuge, suitable for distribution at Christmas. Carriage paid to any Railway Station for parcels over £1.
Discount allowed for Sales.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Object.—To spread the knowledge of Christ in heathen lands.
Fields of Labour.—China, from chief centres; North India, South India, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia; New Guinea.
Forward Movement.—One hundred additional workers before 1895, when the Society's centenary will be celebrated. Forty-five of these have gone, others are appointed. Prayer, men and women fitted for the work, and money are needed; Contributions, remittances, and payments to be made to Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., Home Secretary, 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

"I'm not hungry, Mother."

Among many touching stories we have listened to lately was that of a Christian mother. That morning found the family fireless, and with nothing more than a small crust for herself and four children, two of whom are of school age. When told how matters stood, the elder child spoke up, saying, "Give baby the crust, mother, I'm not hungry!" and contentedly went to school a-fasting. This is only one of many sorrowful cases daily met with by the visitors of the North-East London Gospel Mission. Help for these would be gratefully received by Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Princes Gate, South Kensington, S.W., or by the Director, WILLIAM CHORLEY, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, London, N., or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

"WHAT TO EAT AND WHAT TO AVOID."

This Valuable Book is written by a London Physician for the guidance of those who suffer from Weak Stomach or any form of Indigestion, Sluggish Liver, and Nervousness. It shows how strength may be Speedily Regained, and gives a deal of Sound and Sensible Advice. Sent Gratis and Post Free by Guy's Tonic Company, 6, Sloane-square, London, S.W. Name The Christian when writing.

The Tibetan Pioneer Mission.

(MISS ANNIE R. TAYLOR.)

The origin of the Mission was Miss Annie R. Taylor's journey in 1892-93 into Tibet proper, in the course of which she proved the possibility of gaining an entrance for the Gospel into that country, so long believed to be closed to the emissaries of Christ.

The object of the Mission is to evangelise Tibet, and so remove one of the last barriers to the fulfilment of our Lord's words, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

The field of the projected operations is in the country of Tibet itself, and not the border tribes amongst whom work is already commenced. Tibet, which lies north of India and west of China, is a large country, covering an area about ten times as great as England and Scotland together, and yet without a single Protestant Missionary (so far as known) within its border.

The field is in some senses not a difficult one, as there is no marked hostility to Englishmen; but, on the contrary, the Tibetans have a more favourable opinion of the English than of any other Europeans.

The climate is undoubtedly very cold, but dry and healthy; and anyone proposing to offer for the work should possess a good circulation, and a constitution favourable to withstanding cold.

The language to be acquired is by no means difficult when compared with Chinese, Arabic, and other Eastern languages. The Moravians labouring in Little Tibet (which is under English protection) have compiled a dictionary and grammar of the Tibetan language; and have translated into Tibetan all the New and part of the Old Testament—thus removing at once one of the greatest difficulties generally experienced in entering a new country.

The proposal is, to start with a band of twelve or more men, waiting until a foothold has been obtained in the country, and some of the rough places made smooth, before inviting women to face the serious difficulties and dangers that must inevitably exist in any pioneer work such as this. The band of men, when ready, will go to Darjeeling in the Himalayas, near the frontier of Tibet, and within a few days' journey of Llassa, the capital of Tibet, there to learn the language from Tibetan teachers before seeking entrance into the country. That when they are thus ready, God will open the door, there is no manner of doubt. It is encouraging to be able to say that friends in Darjeeling are looking forward to the arrival of this first band; and are generously arranging to secure and pay the rent of a house for their use, for the year that they will probably be there.

Already three or four men have been accepted for this work; one of them—Mr. Evan Mackenzie of Dingwall, who is married—taking his wife with him, so that Miss Annie Taylor will not be the only woman in the band. The offers of others are under consideration.

The principles upon which it is proposed to work will be those of the China Inland Mission (with which Mission Miss Annie Taylor became associated when first going to China several years ago), so far as they can apply to a work just at its commencement, and except as modified by what follows. As these principles are already widely known, it will only be necessary here to shortly mention the leading ones amongst them.

1. As the work is primarily that of Evangelisation, true-hearted and humble men of God, experienced in Gospel work at home, and holding the doctrinal truths mentioned in clause 4, will be welcomed, irrespective of what branch of the Church of Christ they may belong to at home.

2. So far as headship or leadership is concerned, it is proposed to be guided by the principle enunciated by our Lord—"he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." Subject to this Miss Annie Taylor will lead the work until such time as God manifestly places the responsibility upon some other. In all cases requiring special consideration or involving important issues, she will take counsel with all her fellow-workers. There will be no home Board of Management, unless God should clearly indicate such to be his will; when the assistance of friends in full sympathy with the work might be sought for. Such home correspondence and work as may be necessary will, for the present, becarried on by the Hon. Secretary and Treasurer.

3. Relying absolutely on God's Word, "the labourer is worthy of his hire," and "take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed? for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things;"—and believing further that the essential difference, intended to be shown in this regard, between heathen and Christians, was, that whilst all these things are sought after by the Gentiles (or heathen), the Christian is to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness,—it is not proposed to seek any sort of guarantee of support, or ask for any collections, or apply elsewhere than direct to God for money; consequently the workers will not be guaranteed anything in the nature of a salary. It is desired to have none in the Mission who are unprepared to cast themselves wholly upon God in this matter. He who feedeth the sparrows will not fail to meet the needs of those He counts much better than they. At the same time, all freewill gifts received for this work will be used in meeting the needs of those whose steps are led of God to go forth to this work in Christ's name.

4. It will be required that those who seek to join the Mission be sound in the faith on all the main points of Christian doctrine, which may be particularised as follows:—1. The Divine Inspiration of the Scriptures; 2. The Trinity of the Godhead; 3. The Fall of Man, and his consequent need of Regeneration; 4. The Atonement for man's sin; 5. Justification by Faith in Christ alone; 6. The Resurrection of the Dead; 7. The Eternity of Reward and Punishment. They will also be asked their views on the guidance of the Holy Spirit and the efficacy of prayer, as being points of importance in relation to the Christian life of the missionary.

It will be interesting to those who have read Miss Annie Taylor's letter about the Mission in The Christian of October 19th last, as well as to those who have kindly invited her to take part in Conferences and Meetings in several places throughout the kingdom, and to the many who have so readily contributed to the launching of the Mission, to know that sufficient money has already been received to take out to India and support for some time whilst there, all those who have already been accepted. The need is still for men; and it is specially hoped in writing this paper that it may come into the hands of some who are already prepared by God for this work. Men of God, who habitually study God's Word as their rule of life, who enjoy strengthening themselves in God by prayer and meditation, who do not look for any arm of flesh on which to rest in going forth to God's work—these are they who will be warmly welcomed into this part of God's great harvest field. Any reader of this, unable to give himself to the work, but desiring nevertheless to have partnership in this Gospel enterprise, can greatly aid by bearing up the work, and the needy field, continually before God in prayer; or where it is desired to assist by money gift, by sending such to Miss Annie Taylor or the Hon. Treasurer.

It remains to say that the pioneer party expect to leave England for India, in February next. Besides other Meetings in and about London, a final farewell Meeting will (D.V.) be held in Exeter Hall, of which due notice will be given direct to each subscriber and also in the columns of The Christian.

Brethren and sisters, "the harvest truly is great, but the labourers few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest." Such prayer made in relation to this work will be most highly valued. A weekly meeting for prayer and conversation in regard to the work will be held (D.V.) on Friday evenings at eight o'clock at the address at Ayers Villa, Church Road, Upper Norwood. The house adjoins the Queen's Hotel. All friends of foreign missions are cordially invited.

November 15th, 1893.

MISS ANNIE R. TAYLOR'S

ADDRESS IN ENGLAND (until Feb. 15th, 1894), is Ayers Villa, Church Road, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

ADDRESS IN INDIA—c/o Pastor H. Rylands-Brown, The Manse, Darjeeling, India.

The following have kindly consented to act as Referees.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, China Inland Mission, Mildmay, London.
Dr. T. J. BARNARDO, Stepney Causeway, London, E.
F. W. CROSSLEY, Esq., Star Hall, Ancoats, Manchester.
Rev. J. ELDER CUMMING, D.D., 2, Newton Terrace, Glasgow.
Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, Melbourne, Victoria.
Miss MACPHERSON, Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green Road, London, E.
JAMES E. MATHIESON, Esq., 47, Phillimore Gardens, London, W.
R. C. MORGAN, Esq. (Editor of The Christian), 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.
Pastor H. RYLANDS-BROWN, The Manse, Darjeeling, India.
ROBERT WILSON, Esq., Broughton Grange, Cockermouth.

Hon. Treasurer:
Mr. WILLIAM SHARP, 13, Walbrook, London, E.C. (All Letters to be marked "Tibetan Mission.")

Hon. Secretary (pro tem.)
Mrs. WILLIAM SHARP, "Roswyn," Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

Bankers:
Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM, BOUVERIE, & Co., 54, Lombard Street, London.

5000 Children needing Bread.

It distresses me to have to remind the Friends of Waif Children everywhere that the recent falling off in our receipts has been so persistently maintained that we are now in urgent need of help to pay the daily food bills.

I cannot, however, believe that my Great Family of Orphan Children will be allowed to suffer actual want, and I am persuaded that our Heavenly Father is prompting me now to send forth this statement of our urgently pressing needs, as a fresh call to service, to His Stewards.

To stimulate and encourage others to give, "A Friend" (S.) offers £100 if I can secure Forty-nine similar gifts at once; and "Beta" promises £50 if Fifty others will follow his example. He will also give £10 if One Hundred others will give the same amount. If these gifts can only be secured, the deficiency would be made up at once.

Gratefully will even the smallest donations be received and acknowledged by our Treasurer, Mr. Wm. Fowler; by the Chairman of our Committee, Mr. Samuel G. Sheppard; by our Bankers, London and South-Western Bank (Bow Branch); or by

Yours, for Christ's sake, among the Children of the Streets,

Thos. J. Barnardo.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

Macready House, Henrietta St., Covent Garden.

Founded in 1876 by Courthope Todd.

The Institute was built in the year 1885, at the cost of £5,600.

Patron: H.R.H. Princess Christian.
President: His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Dublin.
Vice-Patrons:
H.R.H. Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck.
H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

Home for Fatherless Children of "the Profession."
Maternity Boxes. Clothing Club.

Contributions for Home and Foreign Work may be sent to the Treasurer, Joseph Peters, Esq. (as above), or to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, office of The Christian.

AN ANTIDOTE TO "BORDERLAND."
In Crown 8vo, Five Shillings.

DEMONOLOGY AND WITCHCRAFT:
With special reference to modern "Spiritualism," so called; and the "Doctrines of Demons," by

ROBERT BROWN,

Author of "Outlines of Prophetic Truth;" "The Hidden Mystery: or, the Revelations of the Word;" "The Personality and History of Satan;" "Gleanings from the Book of Ruth;" etc., etc., etc. c2091

London: JOHN F. SHAW & Co., Paternoster Row.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co.'s
BOOK SALOON,
9, PATERNOSTER ROW

(UP THE PASSAGE).

Contains one of the largest and most varied collections of
NEW BOOKS FOR THE SEASON,
ANNUALS, CHRISTMAS CARDS, etc.
CONVENIENTLY ARRANGED FOR INSPECTION.

NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, POST FREE.

THE ROYAL SEA BATHING INFIRMARY.—Founded at Margate, 1791.—For the Scrofulous poor of all England. Patron.—THE QUEEN.
FUNDS are most URGENTLY NEEDED. The Directors have been compelled to close 140 beds. Bankers, Messrs. Coutts and Co. R. RUTHVEN PYM, Treasurer.
A. PEIRCE, Secretary.
Offices, 30, Charing-cross, S.W. c2752

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

WINTER OF 1893-4.

During this depressing and inclement season MEETINGS are being HELD by the Committee in the most POPULOUS and DISTRESSED DISTRICTS of London, especially at the East end, where so much degradation and suffering are found.

The MEETINGS, both afternoon and night, are WELL ATTENDED by Fallen and Distressed Girls, and from every Meeting YOUNG WOMEN have been SENT to the HOMES.

The NIGHT MISSIONARY still missions the streets during these trying nights in order to RESCUE any poor PENITENT WANDERER. Copies of the Gospel, suitable Tracts, &c., are judiciously distributed.

FUNDS are most urgently needed.

£5 Donation will defray the NECESSARY COST of missioning a district and providing a plain meal for the poor half-famished Girls, giving them an opportunity of listening to the Gospel of Salvation, and offering facility for a return to a life of virtue and industry.

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, offices of The Christian, will receive contributions.

J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Superintendent.
8A, Red Lion Square, Holborn, E.C. C. WILSON McCREE, Secretary.

STRANGERS' REST FOR SAILORS,

163, ST. GEORGE'S STREET, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY, E.

THE SIXTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING

WILL BE HELD (D.V.) ON

Tuesday, December 12th, 1893.

The Chair will be taken at 6.30 by

JAMES E. MATHIESON, Esq., J.P.,

SUPPORTED AMONG OTHERS BY

JOHN CORY, Esq., J.P.; ALGERNON C. P. COOTE, Esq.; W. H. MATTHEWS, Esq.; JOHN McCALL, Esq.; W. H. SEAGRAM, Esq.; J. HERBERT TRITTON, Esq.; Colonel H. G. MACGREGOR; Colonel J. F. MORTON; and Dr. NEATBY.

ADDRESSES by Dr. BARNARDO, Mrs. M. BAXTER, Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH, Rev. Dr. MOORE, and others.

TEA AND COFFEE AT 5.30. THE LORD'S SUPPER AT 8.30.

Cards, with map showing how to reach the "Rest," (free) on application to J. T. Isaac, Hon. Sec.

Articles for the SAILORS' CHRISTMAS TREE, such as Cuffs, Helmets, Mufflers, Steering Gloves Needlebooks, &c., &c., are greatly needed, and should be sent to the Hon. Sec. at the "Rest," by Dec. 20.

c2831 J. THEO. ISAAC, Hon. Sec.

HOME TEACHING SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND.

New Contributions will be thankfully received. 16 blind teachers and guides itinerate with Moon's books daily. St. Luke xiv. 14.

Bankers: Barclay & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Ralph Tait, Secretary, 81, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Just Ready. Published by subscription only. Price 2s. 6d. post free.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CONVENT LIFE.

By MISS CUSACK.

Formerly known as the Nun of Kenmare. Convent Life fully described. With an Appendix on Miss Golding's case.

Send orders to Miss Cusack, Castle Court, Bournemouth East.

MR. AND MRS. W. S. CAINE.

MR. CAINE is so well known in public life that all will read with pleasure of his earnestness and devotion in the religious and philanthropic spheres. The son of a Liverpool merchant, he was but eighteen years of age when he started a Gospel Mission in Egremont, and worked there indefatigably until changing circumstances compelled him to leave the neighbourhood, so he transferred it to the Presbyterian body. It is encouraging to know that it is still prospering and doing much good service.

Mrs. CAINE was born at Liverpool, being a daughter of the Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, pastor of Myrtle St. Church. Though only nineteen when married, she started her new life with the earnest purpose of living for others, determining to make some folks happier every day of her life. Into her husband's mission work she entered heartily, taking a personal share in the Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and Mothers' Meeting. In those days it was more difficult than at present to cultivate total abstinence, but Mr. and Mrs. Caine began life together as abstainers, though they supplied friends visiting them with their favourite alcoholic beverages. But being convinced of the inconsistency of this, they had the courage a few years later to banish alcohol from their cellars. Not only did they give up the use of it in every form themselves, and try to discontinue its use among their friends, but they did all in their power to help those who had fallen under the disastrous spell of drink, by starting a Home for Inebriate Women at Seacombe, choosing those in whom they were personally interested.

On their removal from Seacombe to Liverpool the Home was transferred also, and some time later it passed into the hands of the Ladies' Temperance Association, of which Mrs. Caine has been for many years a hard-working promoter. The ladies of this society visit the police courts, and are very successful in rescue work, cottage meetings, drawing-room meetings, etc. The Home has recently been enlarged, and is called the Vergmont Sanatorium. It is in splendid working order, and the loving care and thoughtful kindness shown by the ladies in charge of patients are greatly blessed in the cure of souls as well as bodies. First and second class patients are taken, and the fees thus procured help to maintain some in the Home who cannot afford a fee, and who, without this help, would have no refuge from their special temptation. This Sanatorium can be safely recommended to anyone seeking such for unfortunate friends.

While living at Liverpool Mr. and Mrs. Caine were constantly engaged in service of various kinds at the nine mission halls in connection with Myrtle-street Church.

In 1880 Mr. Caine stood for Parliament, was returned for Scarborough, and the same year made his permanent residence in London. By his thoroughgoing earnest attention to public duties his time was fully occupied, but he had grown so accustomed to care for the spiritual welfare of others, that he could not rest without some special work of this kind. In 1884 he took an old villa in South Lambeth, called Wheatsheaf House, and converted it into a mission hall. His coadjutors in this undertaking were eighteen working men. In six months' time it had to be enlarged to meet the requirements of the people thronging to it. Now it seats about 500 persons, and is a grand rallying point for all kinds of work in the neighbourhood. Sundays and week days it is continuously open. Prayer meetings commence as early as 7 a.m. Mrs. Caine conducts a Sunday afternoon Bible-class for women, and Mr. Caine preaches every Sunday evening, and presides at the communion on the last Sunday of each month. There are about 250 members.

This is done in an entirely unsectarian spirit, because it is realised that the Church of Christ is greater than all churches, and includes those who are not adherents to any ecclesiastical system. "All are welcome to join who avow their belief in God as their Father, in Jesus Christ as their Saviour, in the Holy Spirit as their Comforter and Guide, and in the Bible as the one authority as to religious faith. All must promise to work in brotherly love for the spread of Christ's kingdom." That last clause contains much wisdom, and is probably the reason that things move happily, healthily, and harmoniously, with little of that fault-finding and petty jealousy by which even Christian work is sometimes marred.

Besides the Sunday services, which include open-air meetings, Sunday-school, Bible classes, prayer meetings, and other occasional services, there are temperance and mothers' meetings; the last is fortunate in having Mrs. Caine as president. A Girls' Guild of Good Life has been started by Miss Caine, and is wonderfully appreciated by the young women of the neighbourhood.

A Young Men's Association is in a strong and vigorous condition, practical Christianity being its mainstay, the Christ-life lived daily in workshop and home, with no mere namby pamby sentiment that ends in talk. Mr. Caine's eldest son takes great interest in this part of the work, though the keeping of Oxford terms prevents him from giving as much time to it as he wishes. There is also a flourishing Band of Hope with 500 members, and various friendly societies. Lectures are given on social topics, and slate clubs exist for both men and women.

(From Photograph by the Cameron Studio, 70, Mortimer Street, Regent Street.)

(From Photograph by Mr. Albert Sachs, Bradford.)

All the members at Wheatsheaf Hall are workers. The superintendence and direction and much hard work lie with the leaders, but they are helped not only by a few influential people of their own class, but by the bulk of the working people around them. There are twenty secretaries in the work, and these have many helpers in carrying out projects. Thus, throughout all its branches the circles widen, spreading interest and keeping all in touch. One of the great points insisted upon is that having experienced a change of life themselves, they must pray and work for others, and not remain babes in faith requiring continual nursing. They are taught to pray and speak in private and public, to live for Christ and to support their work by such contributions as their means allow.

Fervent zeal begets activity, and this has necessitated the opening of a sub-mission in Vauxhall, called Caine Hall. This was started in a coal-shed, until increasing numbers made a move necessary. Mr. Caine raised the funds for this and for another sub-mission at Hartington House.

One great source of work in these missions is the district visiting. 4000 families are visited monthly, and supplied with "The Wheatsheaf," a forceful, lively little paper containing much wholesome knowledge for the everyday conduct of life, combined with the word in season which goes straight home to the higher nature of the readers.

A library of 5000 volumes, accumulated at Wheatsheaf House (many of them being left by Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown to his daughter), formed a nucleus of the present Lambeth Free Public Library.

All this growing and increasing work, combined with heavy parliamentary duties, and much service given to the temperance cause by speech and pen in England, India, and elsewhere, has caused Mr. Caine to feel he must lighten his labours by extending his responsibility, and he has therefore invited the Congregational Union to share some of his labours in connection with these Missions, and his work in future will be identified with that body.

Mr. Caine is president of the British Temperance League, vice-president of the National Temperance League, president of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association, and probably the only Nonconformist vice-president of the Church of England Temperance Society. He is the founder and hon. sec. of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, in connection with which he has twice visited India, and formed 131 branches in that dependency. Many people say "The Englishman's home is his castle." Mr. Caine does not give this its usual insular meaning. His home is not only for his own enjoyment, but for God's glory and the help and benefit of others. His mission people are at times freely invited, while temperance meetings and drawing-room meetings for all kinds of philanthropic work are of common occurrence.

It is rare to find a man and his wife so united on all points. This is so much the case in this instance that it is difficult to speak of them apart. Mrs. Caine is not only ready to buckle on her husband's armour, but is also ready to go forth and fight if need be. She believes that women should first do the duty lying nearest in their own homes, and, having done so, turn to the duty to their neighbour, which is an expansion of that, binding upon all. Where a woman is universally loved by her own sex, strong proof is given of much genuine ability and real goodness lying beneath any charm of presence or manner which these more critical judges are quicker to penetrate. Mrs. Caine has the unbounded confidence of her sister workers in the variety of work in which she is interested. Not only to the very poor is her thoughtful love shown, but to that much more tried and needy class whose patient silence under the daily fret and worry of sordid but respectable poverty so often found amongst curates, dissenting Ministers, Missionaries and others.

The great strength of her life lies in her perpetual possession of a quiet mind. She does not rush from temperance meeting to prayer meeting or committee in a ferment of hurry. God's next bit of work awaits her in its appointed time; whether social, secular or spiritual, it is all his work, and she knows that, "in quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

Mrs. Caine is specially interested, and has done much work for, those victims of our social customs known as barmaids, in connection with the society of which Miss Morley is hon. sec. Some people are surprised to learn that not less than 120,000 women in our land are employed in and about public-houses. All of these need the help and sympathy of their more fortunate sisters. Many schemes for the betterment of the lives and homes of factory girls, and the improved condition of young people in shops and business houses, receive warm support from Mrs. Caine, as does also the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants. She and her husband, who is chairman, are both members of the executive committee of the Metropolitan and National Nursing Association, a branch of which exists in Clapham under the name of the South London District Nursing Association. This society is exceedingly useful in nursing the sick poor in their own homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Caine's eldest daughter was recently married to Mr. J. H. Roberts, M.P. Their second daughter is studying for the medical profession, and bringing her healing art to bear upon many sufferers in a very poor district of South London. The third daughter has just left Newnham to aid her mother in the many duties devolving upon her in the home circle.

A NEW INSTITUTE has been opened in Pear Tree-road, Derby, in connection with the Normanton Working Men's Temperance Association.

MR. MOODY AND CHICAGO.

The following interview, recorded in the Chicago Inter Ocean, was held with Mr. Moody at his office in the Bible Institute just before his departure for Cincinnati:—

"Mr. Moody, you have been working for the World's Fair people this summer; what would induce you to come back to Chicago and hold a campaign in behalf of the people of Chicago themselves?"

"Only one thing would induce me to come back to Chicago. If the business men of Chicago would ask me back and promise that if I should come they would erect a building somewhere near the corner of Madison and Halsted streets on the West Side, for the benefit of the working people, I think I should come and lead in the movement. My idea is a building in which there should be a large audience-room, where the working people could gather together and hear Gospel addresses and music and lectures. Another part of the building should be given to a coffee palace, where men could congregate for a pleasant evening without the harmful surroundings of the saloon. Other parts of the building should be devoted to rooms in which various organisations of labouring people could meet to discuss the issues in which they are interested. I am told that a saloon-keeper on the West Side has fitted up a place where various bodies of working-men meet, and that in order to meet the heads of six of the leading labour organisations of this city one must visit that saloon. The new university is doing a grand work for a certain class of our people in the south part of the city.

"Mr. Armour's institute and mission are doing and going to do a magnificent work for another class on the South Side, but the West Side is a part where most of the labouring people live. The very heart of the West Side is the corner of Madison and Halsted streets, and in this part of the city very little is being done. Nothing will lift up the large portion of the population of this part of our city but the Gospel, and there is no place to proclaim it on a large scale. We must get in touch with the masses and show our sympathy with them if we are to help them."

"What are you trying to do in the Bible Institute?"

"One great purpose is to raise up men for just this sort of work—men who will be willing to lay their lives alongside of the labouring class and the poor, and bring the Gospel to bear upon their lives; and in order to do this satisfactorily we need a place where they can be trained by actual experience. We have a mission hall on Madison-street, just west of Halsted, that costs us about 2000dols. a year rent, but it will only accommodate 250 people. We keep it running with the various meetings until midnight, but it does not meet the demands of the neighbourhood."

"I understand that you intend to go to London next fall. What is your reason for going instead of working here in America?"

"I go to London because the people are accessible. In the most neglected sections of London there are houses seating from three to five thousand people. There are masses to be reached here in Chicago, but they are not accessible because of the lack of suitable buildings."

REV. JOHN YAIR, who is labouring as pastor of four small Baptist churches in the parish of Clarendon, Jamaica, writes that notwithstanding many difficulties, God is blessing the work and saving souls. He has much building on hand, and has to do a good deal of it himself, which, having learned in past years the joiner trade in Scotland, he is able to do. His wife has suffered much from fever by reason of the condition of the old hut in which they have now to live. His address is Tophill, Chapelton P.O., Jamaica.

AN APPEAL FROM MR. MOODY.

Dear Friends,—Throughout the summer the special evangelistic services in Chicago have been laid before the readers of The Christian. They have learned of increase of interest and attendance beyond my highest expectations. During October we held over one hundred meetings every Sunday, gathering from seventy to seventy-three thousand people and as many more during the week. This compelled us to hire five or six theatres and a number of large halls, holding from one to three meetings in each daily.

I have been much cheered by the eagerness of the people to hear the simple Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. From all over this country have come encouraging words from those who have been helped in these services.

In response to several appeals, God has moved the Christians of America and Great Britain to send in money, so that we have been able to meet the most of the indebtedness. I have been especially touched by the gifts of the Sunday-school children, the Christian Endeavour Societies, and the Young Men's Christian Associations. One lady gave up her visit to the Fair, and sent the money to us. Another gave the price of a new dress and wore her old one. When Christians have made such sacrifices, it is not strange that God has blessed the work.

The work could never have reached such proportions without the Bible Institute as a nucleus. Its teachers and students have strained every nerve to meet this great emergency, its doors have been open to receive those who have come to help us. But now, with winter before us, and the country financially depressed, the Bible Institute faces an empty treasury. I ask the friends who have rejoiced with us over the summer's victory, Shall this fountain-head be crippled in its work for the ensuing year? Will you not come to our aid with funds, so that the three hundred young men and women within our doors may be equipped for efficient Christian service? Do not hesitate to send a gift because it is small.—Yours in the work,

D. L. Moody.

80, Institute-place, Chicago.

A CONVERSATIONAL BIBLE CLASS.

For some years a conversational Bible class has been held every Sunday afternoon in the Town Hall, Brixton, presided over by Mr. Schofield. It has been the means of great blessing to numbers of visitors, who have, year after year, attended these meetings, and given testimony to the help they have received. Numbers of persons who have come to take the "waters" have gone away rejoicing, having found the "water of life" that never fails to heal the sin-sick soul.

During the summer months Mr. Schofield and his helpers have held some thirty open-air services, attended by thousands of people, and we believe a good work has been done. This is the fifteenth year of open-air work. A praise meeting was recently held in the Town Hall to praise the Lord for the season's work. A most enjoyable evening was spent, an interesting programme gone through, and several addresses were given.

Through the summer months valuable help has been rendered by the members of the Village Mission. We trust the Lord will continue to bless the work carried on in Brixton.

Effie Schofield.

Boys' Home, Southwark.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan writes:—"We have been passing through a time of heavy trial and great anxiety. We have had a most serious outbreak of scarlet fever here. Our Home is very full, and the public hospitals are so crowded that we cannot get cases away promptly, so the risk of infection is greatly increased by the delay. We are to-day burying a poor boy who was carried off with fearful rapidity by a most malignant type—only ill on Saturday and died on Monday night.

"The amount of illness in London now is very serious, and the conditions of life generally in this forthcoming winter are a cause for grave concern and humiliation before God, and prayer for his gracious interposition at such a climax."

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN'S WORK.

Very interesting letters have been received from Rabbi Lichtenstein since his removal from Tapio Szele to Budapest in August last. For the sake of the many who are, with prayerful interest, following this noble witness for Christ, I make a few extracts before I go on to speak of this last pamphlet. It seems that the Jewish community in the Hungarian capital did not relish the idea of this disturber of their false peace settling in their midst, and brought pressure to bear on the Jewish landlord to prevent the Rabbi from taking possession of the house he had hired. "At the last hour," he says, "when we arrived on the scene with our furniture, the landlord offered me three times the earnest money that I should forego the contract, but as I resolutely rejected it, he made pretext that the present sanitary condition of the dwelling would make it impossible for me to take possession."

They did at last establish themselves in the house, and, to quote again from one of his letters, he says: "Just now the landlord was here, and assured me of his personal esteem, and regretted much to have been under compulsion to put every hindrance in my way." Speaking of the beginning of his work in Budapest, the Rabbi says: "The afternoon of the day before yesterday (the Sabbath) I gave an address in one of the synagogues on the weekly Haphtorah (portion appointed for the day), which happened to be Isaiah liv. The substance of my address was that Israel, notwithstanding his true mission to be a teacher of the nations, has been unfruitful, while the children of the desert (Gentile Christians) are straining with all might to glorify and sanctify the name of God. But Israel, too, is enlarging his tents, thousands of his noblest and best children are striving to bring in the neglected, to teach the unbelieving, to instruct sinners, and to lead Israel as a nation back to his high calling. The applause at the end was extraordinary, and the congregation decided to honour me by inviting me in advance to preach during the approaching festivals."

A few days later, he writes: "It seems, however, that my times of trial are not yet over, for yesterday the president of the above-mentioned synagogue called on me, and regretted to tell me that they were threatened from influential quarters that the place would be closed if they even allowed me a seat there. This news troubled, but did not discourage me. Should it come to the worst, a separate congregation will be formed, where I can hope to speak undisturbed." Writing at the end of last month, he says, speaking of a visit to Peczel, where he had been invited by a certain Jewish doctor, who turned out to be a convert to Romanism: "In that place I had a strange experience. I actually met two cathedral clergy from Waitzen, who, together with Dr. H——, tried to induce me by alluring offers to the Bishop's residence in Waitzen, to take charge of the Hebrew MSS. of the Archiepiscopal Palace. The special inducements held out reminded me of Satan."

Already the way is opening before him in that city, where there are about 80,000 Jews, and by his spoken testimony and personal example some are being influenced for Christ, but, as it was manifest from the beginning, the work of Rabbi Lichtenstein is not merely to gather out individual Jews from here or there to a knowledge of the truth now, but, like Joseph Rabinowitch, to be a prophet preparing the way of Christ among the Jewish nation. His chief means of usefulness is his pen, in the wielding of which God has given him special power. It is, therefore, with great interest and thankfulness that the friends of Israel everywhere will welcome this fresh powerful "appeal," which is, in many ways, in advance of anything he has written before. I hope that before long there will be an English edition, but meanwhile I give a translation of a few fragments from the German. He asks the Jews to read and examine his words without prejudice, giving no heed to the deceiving voices of their many false leaders, and then continues:—

"It is true I have penetrated to the Holy of Holies, I have boldly (my enemies say rashly) crossed the Rubicon. I walk in an hitherto untrodden path, which Jews, and especially Rabbis, have avoided as they would the plague. I have ventured to pay homage to the Founder of Christianity. I have called Him the Redeemer of the World, the Saviour, but more especially our Redeemer and long-expected Messiah. Yes, I have done all this, but can any less drastic means effect Israel's salvation? Israel, scattered in all the world, dismembered and disunited, who has so long and with such yearning waited, but in vain, the coming of the Angel of the Covenant. What, who, can effect the regeneration and resurrection of Israel? Who and what shall bring to pass the prophesied miracle of Ezekiel xxxvii?"

After quoting Mal. iii. 1, he says: "I would first of all make my full and honest confession, that it is my unalterable conviction, after earnest search, that Christ, and none but He, is intended in this prophetic passage. As a Rabbi grown grey in office, I affirm that Jesus is the prophesied Messiah of Israel; Christ, and no other, is the Angel of the Covenant, for whom we long, and whose coming has been the constant expectation of our people. He is come! This is now my cry of rejoicing, which my tongue and pen, and, if God will, my prolonged life, shall serve to make known."

David Baron.

23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

(To be concluded.)

AMONG THE MINERS.

Dear Sir,—My present sphere of labour is among a population composed almost exclusively of miners and their families. The appeal to which you have so kindly responded was sent out when I was crushed by the failure of the London conference. After eleven trying and exhausting weeks of relief work, we seemed then to have all our work to do over again, with the terrible disadvantage of having drained all our friends. Every day brings new demands upon us. Thrifty, sober, pious people, who had no need of aid in the early stages of the struggle, are now under the painful necessity of applying for charitable help.

I rejoice to state that the response to my appeal has enabled me to do much to alleviate the prevailing distress. I have just returned from a distribution of provisions to one hundred women. Three hours earlier I was present at another, at which three hundred women were relieved. This morning at 11.30, the scholars of the Blackbrook British School (numbering 360) received a dinner of soup and bread, paid for out of money sent in response to the appeal. It is the sober truth to say that everyone was destitute, and many were absolutely without food until we relieved them.

As I referred to wages in the P.S. of my appeal, permit me here to add what I wish I had stated there, as it is a very important consideration—or should be, to those who want to arrive at facts. To the general public, the word "miner" defines any person working in or about the mines, whether actual coal-getter, fireman, drawer, etc. Now all but the coal-getter are paid a fixed daily wage, drawers being paid by the coal-getter, and the others by the coal-owner. All these men employed by the master are called day-wage men, and in this township they form at least 50 per cent. of the total number of persons working in or about the mines. Their wages in this township vary from 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d. per day, or an average of 4s. 6d. per day. Probably the greater number are receiving less than this average.

These men, as well as the actual coal-getters, were called upon to accept the proposed reductions. They would have been great sufferers had the original terms of the masters been accepted. Five days a week being the usual time the men are required to work, the average wage per week under the old scale was £1 2s. 6d., subject to deductions for oil, fines, club, etc.

I have possibly trespassed upon your patience, but as facts are not over-abundant in this great industrial controversy, I could not restrain my pen.—Faithfully yours,

J. H. Riddette.

Haydock, St. Helens.

OPEN-AIR MISSION FOR IRELAND.—The executive committee of this mission has appointed Mr. George Williams, of Dublin, organising secretary, who already has established a branch in Cork, which has received the hearty support of the best clergymen and Christian workers in that city. On Sunday, November 19, four open-air services were held in the principal streets, attended by many hundreds of Roman Catholics. Excepting a few roughs, the crowd were, on the whole, willing to listen. Rev. F. W Ainley, of the Free Church, gave valuable assistance. It is intended to continue this street-preaching in Cork every Sunday, and prayer is requested for blessing.

[1235

THE L.M.S. MEETINGS.

During the past week a series of simultaneous missionary meetings, intended to awaken and deepen interest in missions, has been held in Congregational churches, chiefly (though not exclusively) in the metropolitan area. The Watchers' Band (a body somewhat analogous to the Gleaners' Union of the C.M.S.) held a special meeting on Monday evening at the Memorial Hall. Rev. A. Rowland presided, and Mr. J. E. Liddiard, one of the secretaries, stated that the branches of the Band now number 261; and that the present membership, exclusive of the Australasian Colonies, is 8240; 1000 having joined since October 1. Miss Winterbotham, of Tientsin, spoke of the help and strength to the missionary from the prayers of those at home, and urged her hearers to be constant in their prayers, which they would be if they remembered that the King for whom they watched was a watcher too. Mrs. de Selincourt urged attendance at the all-day prayer-meeting to be held at the Mission House on Monday, Dec. 4, for she felt that in prayer would be found the solution of all difficulties. Rev. H. T. Johnson, of Madagascar, spoke of the encouragement the missionaries experienced in the consciousness that they were being continually remembered in the prayers of friends at home. Mr. T. E. B. Wilson, organising secretary in Sheffield, told of objections that had been made to the Band, and of difficulties overcome. Rev. T. Grear testified how much the work at home had been helped by the members becoming definite in their prayers.

The final meeting of the series was held on Friday evening in Exeter Hall. Mr. W. Crosfield, M.P., who presided, rejoiced in the fact that during the week no fewer than 250 missionary meetings had been held in connection with the L.M.S., and with a view to rousing fresh interest in missions. There are, it must be confessed, difficulties and discouragements; yet looking back on the past, we learn that delay does not necessarily mean defeat.

Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary, said it was often hinted that straitened finances conduced to economy; but while there is some truth in this, there is a great deal to be said on the other side. Everything has to be viewed from the financial side, and countless opportunities are lost while the question of means is being considered. Proceeding, he explained that though the annual income of the L.M.S. had steadily increased during the past thirteen years, the work, and consequently the expenditure, had increased more rapidly. Thus, last year, although the contributions of the churches for ordinary purposes amounted to £67,342, and the donations for special purposes to £30,400, there was a deficiency of £22,000. It was expected that the present year would show a similar deficit, and as there was an adverse balance from the previous accounts, and as the Society's assets were mortgaged to the bank, the outlook was full of anxiety. He trusted the state of things he had revealed would arrest the attention of the churches, whose further help would surely not be wanting when they were reminded that during the period to which he had referred ninety-eight European and 3146 native workers had been added to the staff.

Rev. Charles Jukes, in the course of a stirring speech, sought to dissipate the idea that Madagascar has been Christianised. True, God has done great things in that island, but even yet the vast majority of the people are in gross heathen darkness. The rum dealer has found them, if the missionary has not; and they are being decimated by strong drink without a ray of Gospel light. The missionaries are seeking after these. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw in one part of the island and other noble workers in other parts are labouring devotedly, not among the Christianised Malagasy, but among the idolatrous and besotted savages of the heathen districts.

Rev. Jonathan Lees, of Tientsin, illustrated the progress of the Gospel in China by a number of delightful incidents, showing how the good news is spreading into remote corners and winning a way to many hearts. He (the speaker) believed that God's set time to favour China is dawning, and that the seed sown will soon be seen in a glorious harvest; but even now there are wonderful results, for which God must be praised.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers followed, devoting himself largely to finance, and calling for an advance of 50 per cent. in missionary contributions. He held that everyone who gave a pound annually might quite easily make it 30s., and many might make it £5 without feeling it at all. We never give to the point of blessing until our giving involves some sacrifice and self-denial.

Rev. M. Phillips, of Madras, gave a number of facts and figures showing how Christianity is spreading in India. The change he himself had seen in thirty-two years might well be regarded as marvellous.

Captain Turpie, the veteran commander of the "John Williams," concluded the proceedings with a sailor's talk on Missionary voyaging in the South Seas.

DR. J. G. PATON'S EMBASSY.

The progress in and around London of this venerable and venerated missionary has been like the triumphal march of a conqueror. Everywhere large throngs have greeted him, and have sat spell-bound by his native eloquence. After the great Exeter Hall meeting, he spoke to deeply interested crowds at Woodford in the East and Croydon in the South. On Sabbath, November 12, he preached three times (which seems to be his customary way of spending the Day of Rest) at Belgravia, the Regent-street Polytechnic, and Rev. F. B. Meyer's Church.

The same week he spoke at Blackheath, Eastbourne, Upper Norwood, Kensington, and Lower Norwood. On the Saturday evening, in the midst of the great storm, he crossed over to Ryde, I.W., where he preached on the Sunday. Monday found him at Brighton, where he faced two large companies in Hove Town Hall and the Dome. At this latter meeting one young man, inspired by the glowing appeals of the aged worker, offered himself for foreign work.

A drawing-room meeting at the house of Mr. T. A. Denny and Lady Hope was followed last week by visits to Reading, Southsea, Mildmay, and Birmingham. The great Town Hall of the midland city was crowded, and the occasion was a unique one. Last Sunday a return visit was paid to Manchester, when Dr. Paton pleaded the cause of the New Hebrides in Dr. Maclaren's church, Prebendary Macdonald's church, and one of the leading Congregational churches.

This week he fills appointments at Bradford and Newcastle; after a flying visit of a day to Glasgow, he crosses on Friday to Ireland, where he will remain till December 22, holding meetings at Belfast, Londonderry, Coleraine, Dublin, and elsewhere.

The Exeter Hall meeting will yield nearly £300; the Brighton friends contributed over £200, while larger or smaller collections have been made at the other places visited.

THE MILDMAY INSTITUTIONS.

A MEMORIAL TO THE LATE SIR S. A. BLACKWOOD.

Dear Sir,—It has been suggested that the memorial to the late Sir Arthur Blackwood, in connection with the work at Mildmay, should take some definite form. It is therefore proposed, with the full concurrence of his widow and family, and the hearty approval of the Mildmay authorities, that an effort be made to raise the sum of some £3000 as a tribute to the memory of our honoured and beloved friend, for the purpose of endowing two beds, one in the Cottage Hospital, which stands in the grounds adjoining the Conference Hall, in which hospital the remains of the late Sir Arthur were received and tenderly watched over previous to their interment; and one in the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green. Of both these hospitals Sir Arthur was a trustee.

As it is against the custom of Mildmay to appeal for itself, I venture to lay this matter before your many readers, who knew and valued the late Sir Arthur, in the belief that a liberal response will be forthcoming, and the sum asked for be speedily raised. Contributions may be sent to Colonel J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., or to me. It would be well for donors to specify that their contributions are for the "Sir Arthur Blackwood Mildmay Memorial Fund."—Yours faithfully,

Algernon C. P. Coote.

24, Powis-square, London, W.

SHEFFIELD.—The Open-Air Temperance Workers' Union is giving on Sunday mornings free breakfasts to hungry children. The guests usually number about a thousand

MANCHESTER WESLEYAN MISSION.

The seventh anniversary of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission was celebrated last week, when large meetings were held in the Central Hall, Oldham-street. The past year was one of progress in all the most important respects. In the social department two hundred and forty-two men have passed through the "home" and "labour yard." Hundreds of men and women have been relieved with clothing and food, and work has been found for the majority. The rescue work of the Mission has been carried on with increasing vigour. In the Sunday-schools, children's services, and ragged schools over 3000 children attend every week. Congregations in the old chapels have increased so satisfactorily that every place may now be considered a success, and the prospect is said to be bright for the coming year.

The Sisters of the People delivered cheering addresses, and a stirring sermon was preached by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. In the evening, at a meeting in the Free Trade Hall, the president of the Conference (Rev. H. J. Pope) gave details of the work. He said there had been no diminution in the great spiritual success which had hitherto attended the Mission. During the year just closed the committee had taken over the old chapel in Great Ancoats-street. The congregation there had fallen to 100 or 150, although the chapel would hold a thousand, but in the few months that had elapsed since the chapel was taken over an entirely new face had been put upon operations there, and he fully expected before the year was out they would have the place crowded. Another good work was being done in the Red Bank district. These chapels were in the midst of a population of 85,000 people, who were the humiliation and the despair of the churches in Manchester, and amongst them they had got a foothold. Touching the question of finance, the president stated that the work all round had cost £4900, and there was a deficit of about £800. The committee therefore asked for £1000. At the close of the meeting it was announced that £882 had been promised towards the amount required.

South Wales.

Writing from Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mr. T. M. Wintle says:—We have given over 20,000 free meals to children, and about 8000 to parents, and are still giving meals to children daily at Pontnewydd and Pontymoile, and three times a week to parents. I think these works will all go on again when trade improves, and the price of coal again reaches its normal position. I am organising a labour party for the unemployed factory girls, and sending them out to do a day's washing, cleaning, etc. I am also seeking to fit up accommodation for five or six girls in the institute, to give them three months' training for domestic service, limiting the age from fifteen to eighteen. The cost per bed for two girls will be £4, and cost per week for each girl's maintenance 5s.

A Notable Victory.

Speaking of the defeat of the corrupt party in recent State elections, the New York Independent says:—

"It is a great and notable victory. The forces of evil have been routed; bosses, rings, race-track gamblers, unrighteous judges and the horde who delight in wrong-doing have been swept by the terrible wrath of a long-suffering people out of the public sight. The day of reckoning was long delayed. Wrong after wrong was done in high places, crime after crime was committed against justice and honour and good government, and the power of the law to punish seemed to be paralysed. But vengeance has come at last, and the American system of self-government has nobly vindicated itself. The people have risen in their might and majesty and scattered the enemies of honest rule like chaff. Thanks be to Him who ever worketh to deliver the people from the dominance of wrong."

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW, NEW BRIGHTON.—Mr. C. R. Capel, formerly a worker in Ratcliff-highway, but now engaged in Liverpool, reports the starting of a branch of the Christian Lifeboat Crew among the fishermen and lifeboat men of New Brighton. The meetings are well attended, and have been fruitful of encouraging spiritual results. Last year local friends sent in mufflers, scarves, and helmets to distribute among the sailors at Christmas time. This year things are straitened, and a more wide-spread appeal is necessary; although if wool and yarn were supplied Mr. Capel could get it made up. He also needs some bags in which to place books and papers for sailors leaving port.—Address, Mr. C. R. Capel, 33, Egerton-street, New Brighton.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s.	7d.	per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s.	10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„	„
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols.	„	„

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. R. Bruce, D.D., C.M.S. Missionary in Persia.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions for the ensuing year. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if friends will kindly note the particulars.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive The Christian direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

The full tale of lives lost through the recent terrible gales is yet untold; the fate of numbers of ships reported missing is still uncertain. But enough is revealed to make the storm take rank with the most fierce and fatal of late years. The additional burdens thrown on the resources of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society are very large, and there is a loud call for greater public support of this admirable institution. Its organisation is so perfect that the immediate relief of survivors is at hand in all ascertained cases of bereavement by loss of life at sea. The Society is a great national—indeed international—benefactor, and ought to be well provided with means.

It is very encouraging to notice that the Week of Prayer, uniting as it does Evangelical Christians of all bodies, has been more extensively observed during the last few years. With the increased observance there has also been more manifest blessing in the districts where united prayer has been offered. The case of our persecuted brethren in Russia and Asia Minor will give a special interest to the intercessions to be offered next January. In neighbourhoods where it is impossible to rally together the members of all the churches, let as many as possible unite in carrying out the programme; where no meetings can be held, much may be done by bringing the specially suggested subjects before God in family prayers as well as in the private intercession of his people.

The Christians in Glasgow are taking counsel as to the causes and the cure of the non-church-going which we have to deplore in all our great cities, and in which Glasgow carries an unwelcome pre-eminence. At an open conference last week, Lord Overtoun gave an address dealing in a practical spirit with the situation. He thought that the blame might be equally distributed between outsiders, the pew, and the pulpit. Scepticism, indifference, and over-indulgence in Saturday amusement keep many away from church. On the other hand, there is much preaching that fails to interest the hearers. To this we may add the decadence of pastoral visitation; so that of some ministers it has been said that "for six days they are invisible, and for the seventh incomprehensible." Finally, as to the pew, only an infinitesimal proportion of church members do any Christian work at all; the masses will never be reached till the words Christian and worker are interchangeable.

Coming to the question of remedial action, Lord Overtoun advocated the "territorial system" for large cities, but admitted that denominational divisions are unfavourable to this. He laid the greatest stress, however, on the point already alluded to—the co-operation of all church members under the lead of the pastor. Aggressive temperance work must also have a greater place. So far as we recollect, the P.S.A. movement has not taken any extensive root in Scotland; we would direct the attention of our Scotch friends to the manifesto on a succeeding page, as to the possibilities of this movement. In all our Christian endeavour we must have regard to adaptation.

The conference at the Holborn Town Hall on the Christian organisation of labour emphasised a point which should always be kept in view, viz., that men ought not to be mere working machines, but should have time and opportunity to live as men, cultivating mind and heart, enjoying their homes, and serving society and the Church. This doctrine needs to be applied all round. Men are too often turned into working machines, and masters into business machines, and so the Kingdom of God can find no room in them. How many Christian employers are giving an undue amount of time and strength to business, and then giving the paltry leavings of a tired body, of an exhausted brain, and of a fretted heart, to their Lord!

Archdeacon Farrar has been pouring out, in Westminster Abbey, his passionate desire for our youths and young men to escape being average men in character and influence, and to rise above "the conventional which they see in most of us, and in which more or less nearly all of us live." Is not this to be gained by patiently holding up the example of our Saviour, who was as high as heaven above even the grandest of men? Let us by all means see "the goodly fellowship of the prophets," "the glorious company of the apostles," and "the noble army of martyrs," the devoted and the saintly, who, in every age, have glorified God, for then we see what the grace of God can do; but it is Jesus before us and in us who alone can uplift and ennoble us. No man can continue to be commonplace who is much with Him.

The Archdeacon cried out for a prophet for our age:—

> Oh that God would give us only one real saint among the conventional echoes of artificial Churchiness; one living voice among the 20,000 priests; if He would give us but one prophet! Oh, that He might raise up one or two such to save England, and to save the Church of England, among the younger at least of those who hear me.

We may be optimistic as to the future, pessimistic as to the present. Our children and our grandchildren will look back on these times with wonder, and say that we had saints and prophets. We must not fall into Elijah's mistake, in our ardour to see a higher standard of life and character. But how are we to get prophets? We must simply follow the Spirit of God. There is no other way of gaining courage to burst the bonds of a fettering conventionalism, to reprove the sins of the church and the world, and then to endure the inevitable penalty that will follow.

Mr. Hodgson Pratt says in The Echo that there is in Paris a strong feeling of antipathy towards England, and that of late years it has steadily increased. It is deep down in the hearts of the people, and is not manifested only in the Press:—

> The term hypocrite is the favourite expression, and most generally expresses the widespread conviction that, while we make pretensions to be eminently religious, and profess the highest standard of morality, we are the most selfish, greedy, and unprincipled of all nations in dealing with the rights of weaker races.

Mr. Pratt hopes that a better feeling will be born when we know each other better, and co-operate more. He thinks that by the inauguration of an "International Alliance of Universities," and also by an alliance between industrial co-operators of various nationalities, much may be done. The shortest way might be to desist from oppressing the weak.

Lord Wolseley gave a shock to the conscience of Christians when he wrote in the "Soldiers' Pocket-book," p. 169:—

> As a nation we are bred up to feel it a disgrace even to succeed by falsehood. The word spy conveys something as repulsive as slave. We will keep hammering along with the conviction that "honesty is the best policy," and that truth always wins in the long run. These pretty little sentences do very well for a child's copybook, but the man who acts upon them in war had better sheathe his sword for ever.

Lord Charles Beresford seems to have a code of morals like Lord Wolseley's; for he has been telling a representative of The Idler that in such a thing as the Nile expedition, "just when everything seems up with you, and you feel you're in a tight place, it's the 'scallywags,' the worst fellows in the ship, who come out the best. I'd sooner have the boy who robbed the orchard with me, if I got into a row, than the fellow who was always first at Sunday-school." There can be no doubt that an enlightened conscience is a check upon a man, and therefore is troublesome in certain circumstances. That Lord C. Beresford's disparagement of Sunday-school trained boys ought to make us desist from our training is not quite apparent.

The Christian World Pulpit publishes a sermon on "The Christian and the Theatre," by Rev. W. H. Parr, in which the usual arguments against Christians frequenting the theatre are stated with force, but without any touch of bitterness or uncharitableness. More stress, we think, might have been laid on the pernicious influence of the stage on actors and actresses themselves, and the argumentum ad hominem might have been applied to some purpose. Will those Christian fathers and mothers who are pleading for this indulgence train their own daughters for the stage? Would one of those editors who are trying to erase the old line of prohibition of the theatre for Christians send his daughter to the stage? Would any Sunday-school teacher, with an atom of care for the present and eternal welfare of her girls, advise one of them to be an actress, and help her into the profession? If not, what right have they to countenance a system which, at the bottom of their hearts, they distrust? Is not any poor ballet girl as precious to God as their daughters?

The Sentinel quotes from the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette a paragraph which seems too good to be true; has Mr. Dyer or some clear-headed missionary been in the editor's chair for a few days while the editor was holidaying! This paper, "the leading official newspaper of the Anglo-Indian officials," does actually say:—

The ultimate outcome of the C.D. Acts Commission, Mr. Russell's committee and the various agitations and counter-agitations on the subject, ought to be this: that every British soldier coming out to India should be allowed to marry, either before or after his arrival in this country. The expense would of course be great, but it would be more than recovered in many indirect ways. State-regulated vice is incompatible with the theory of civilised government. If both sides could only unite forces in the direction we have indicated, and insist that the soldier who comes out to India ought not only to be allowed but encouraged, to marry and bring up his children to follow their father's calling, the difficulty would disappear, and a large number of other good results would follow. The army in India ought to be a long service army, composed of men of English birth, who are thoroughly acclimatised, and have a stake in the country.

The writer advocates the bringing up of the children in their fathers' profession, as they do in Russia. To this we object; every boy born under the British flag is born free to choose his own work in life and to go his own way. This cannot be altered. But we entirely agree with the proposal that soldiers should be allowed to marry; we mean a reasonable number of them, and under reasonable conditions. It would save the nation's purse, the nation's reputation, and the nation's influence; it would save the army's health and physique; it would ease our relations with the natives of India; it would remove a huge stumbling block from the way of the Gospel; above all, it would avert from us the wrath of God. We must now strive might and main in England to carry as soon as possible this point of the marriage of our soldiers. Much is against us, but God is for us.

A century has gone since John Berridge died. How few know anything of him; yet he is worth knowing, for he was one of the mightiest of those evangelical preachers who changed the face of England. For a long time he had the charge of souls before he was himself converted; his small success, though he was a great scholar and an able man, led him to think his mode was wrong. After prayer for light, it was one day borne in upon his mind, "Cease from thine own works, only believe." Consulting his Concordance, he was surprised to see how many columns were required for the words "faith" and "believe." So he was led to trust in Christ.

He has a characteristic passage on faith.

"Hear St. Paul's account of faith, a choice apostle, but no great favourite of the scribes. Human telescopes do not magnify Paul; he is not within the compass of their glasses; no moonlight planet, but a star; and take the matter in his own words." Then he quotes from Paul, also from Peter, and adds: "Thus the Christian life is a life of faith in the Son of God; and the Christian work is to fight this good fight. Believing is the Christian's trade and maintenance, procures his present peace and future prospects, makes him steady and valiant in fight, and brings him triumphantly to glory."

Berridge could not be content with preaching only in his own parish, where, through faith, he soon became a mighty power for good; he invaded other parishes, and was, of course, reprimanded by his bishop. At the end of a dialogue, in which the witty Berridge foiled the bishop at every turn, they parted with these closing sentences, "As to your conscience (said his lordship), you know that preaching out of your parish is contrary to the canons of the Church." Berridge replied: "There is one canon, my lord, which I dare not disobey, and that says: 'Go, preach the Gospel to every creature.'"

No one had more power with great multitudes, unless it was Whitefield and Wesley. His church at Everton was crowded with persons from all the country round, the windows being filled within and without, and even the outside of the pulpit to the very top, so that he seemed almost stifled. His courage and good sense were equal to his wit and his zeal. Lady Huntingdon came in for his rebukes when he thought she needed them; thus when her daughter Selina died he wrote: "She is gone to pay a most blessed visit, and will see you again by and by, never to part more. Had she crossed the sea and gone to Ireland, you could have borne it; but now she is gone to heaven 'tis almost intolerable. Wonderful, strange love this!"

Berridge's "Christian World Unmasked" is a very powerful book, to which Dr. Thomas Guthrie, of Edinburgh, wrote an introductory brief memoir. His Songs of Zion are extremely quaint, often dull, seldom poetical, but always full of love to his Lord and Saviour. "Jesus, cast a look on me" is a true hymn. We give the first and last stanzas:—

Jesus, cast a look on me;
Give me sweet simplicity,
Make me poor and keep me low,
Seeking only Thee to know.

In this posture let me live,
And hosannas daily give;
In this temper let me die,
And hosannas ever cry!

A contemporary recently described the ethics of the Old Testament as "the ethics of a people in a low but progressive stage of moral development." Depreciation of Old Testament morality is fashionable; but surely there are evidences all around that even our own "stage" of development is not so far advanced as to make further "progress" needless or undesirable. Leaving that, however, we cannot but be astonished that theologians should regard as a novelty a view which is at least as old as our era itself. Christ distinctly implied progressive revelation when He contrasted his doctrine with the teachings of "them of old time." It is, moreover, grievous to observe the tactics which are sometimes pursued by those who, in order to qualify the authority of the Old Testament, question and criticise its statements and instructions.

For instance, in a paper in a recent issue of The Christian World Pulpit, Rev. W. Hetherington, of Walthamstow, cannot bear the thought that God gave unto Israel "statutes which were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live"—that He should lead perverse men into temptation (Ezek. xiv. 7—9; 1 Kings xxii. 20—22). We wish to point out that such judicial acts on the part of God, are by no means peculiar to the Old Testament. St. Paul says of some, that God "gave them up unto a reprobate mind," and of others that He "sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe the lie, that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness" (Rom. i., 2 Thess. ii.). Moreover, though it is true that "God cannot be tempted of evil, and He Himself tempteth no man," an affirmative answer must be given to the question, "Shall evil befal a city, and the Lord hath not done it?" (Amos iii. 6. R.V.). God is a Refiner who sends his people through the fire; He is a Judge who reckons with his enemies.

Given, as is admitted, that God appointed unto Israel laws which were fitting and proper for their stage of moral development, and that the Old Testament records those laws and illustrates their operation, how does the question of Divine inspiration arise? Obviously, it does not arise at all. A Jewish editor in America, criticising Professor Briggs, has well said:—

How any man with pretensions to scholarship and scholarly instincts, who has devoted attention to the course of theological discussion, can confound in his mind the morals of the Bible with the morals of the human beings whose doings and sayings are narrated in the Bible, is something that passes comprehension. On the contrary, the fidelity with which are portrayed the human fallibility and human weakness of the human instruments, selected under Divine guidance to set in motion the great work of the moral regeneration of human kind, without any effort to assign to them Divine perfections, is one of the strongest incentives to credit the whole history of the people whose career is there unfolded.

When the news reached us that Mr. George Gillett was dead, our first thought was that one of the chief securities of European peace was gone! That may seem absurd to some, for George Gillett's name was not in everybody's mouth, and the daily papers did not pay him the tribute of a biography a column long. He was a simple Friend, little seen in public life, though at the very heart and centre of some of our best public movements. Yet we felt, and still feel, that a guarantee of peace has been removed. He prayed for peace as one who realised that his Christian priesthood imposed this sacred duty. He believed that he had God's ear, and that God could turn the hearts of men as He turns the rivers of water. We know how he used to lay the perils of the nations before Him who "rules among the inhabitants of the earth," and confidently look for his salvation. As Elijah was above Ahab, and Isaiah above Hezekiah, so was our friend above many who are supposed to hold the destinies of nations in their hands.

Under the heading of "Sporting Notes" The Pall Mall last week referred to Lord Shaftesbury as among the patrons of the turf, significantly adding, "A name which one has not yet learnt to associate with racing." The contrast as one thinks of that time-honoured title in its long association with everything good, and most beneficial to the world at large, is indeed striking. Remembering the many loved and trusted leaders who have passed in recent years from the Church Militant, we may well cry earnestly to God that more often there may be a fulfilment of the promise, "Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children, whom Thou mayest make princes in all the earth."

IN OLD DAYS there were angels who came and took men by the hand and led them away from the city of destruction. We see no white-winged angels now. But yet men are led away from threatening destruction; a hand is put in theirs, which leads them forth gently towards a calm and bright land, so that they look no more backward; and the hand may be a little child's.

Christ in the Household.

The opportunity afforded me, when visiting at a great many houses, of entering into conversation with the domestics, has led me to state that their want of Scriptural knowledge is deplorable. It is a matter that should be seriously reflected upon by the heads of households, whether something cannot be done by them to remedy the present condition of things. I have especially in view those who daily summon their servants to family prayer. It is to be feared that this service is too frequently performed in a perfunctory manner. The morning paper, or prolonged conversation at the breakfast-table, in many instances leave only a few moments for worship, and as it is felt that business claims are now pressing, a hurried reading of a few verses of the Bible, followed by a prayer not always suited to the occasion, constitutes the whole of the morning sacrifice. Do not actions always speak louder than words? What servants are so obtuse as not to feel (though they may never put the feeling into words) that there is more of routine than of reality in such a service?

There are heads of families more devout, who daily read, more impressively, some duly appointed passage of God's Word, and sincerely desire his blessing to descend on their households; but the monotony of voice, unrelieved by the varied tone of some explanatory remark, causes but a feeble impression to remain on the minds of those assembled around them. A fault may also be in the want of acquaintance with those who serve in the family. It is taken for granted that in this Christian country a considerable amount of Scriptural knowledge is possessed by everyone, so that all may to some extent be able to follow and benefit, if they will, from what is devoutly read.

Let these things be taken into account. First, the want of Scriptural instruction given in the Board schools, then the small quantum of teaching given in our Sunday-schools, and that frequently by very inefficient persons; then the number of children who go to no Sunday-school: and I ask, What have we a right to expect?

"Did you ever hear of the Trinity?" I asked a nice young woman in service, who was called a "scholar" by her fellow-servant, and her reply was she did not know that she had. One young person had for many years been instructed in a charity school, who showed me her prizes gained for Scriptural knowledge, given by one examiner after another, and finally by the bishop; but she failed to satisfy me that she had any clear idea as to one Christian doctrine, while I could not find out that she deemed religion to consist of anything more than keeping the saints' days and going to early Communion.

I will not refer to other instances which have fallen under my notice, but I desire to bring it home to the consciences of heads of households, to inquire by what means they may endeavour to fulfil a duty to those who dwell in their families, and over whom they may have some influence. Are there not thousands who would scorn to give their dependents an insufficiency of food, who seem to forget it is written, "Man shall not live by bread alone"? Without any set form of catechising, many are the times when a mistress may speak a kindly word; while showing some interest in those who serve her, she may sow some seeds of instruction, or try to say something to recall and to enforce some portion of Scripture which has been read in the morning, or find out what will be suitable as a portion for the next season of domestic worship. Let us remember, it was while men slept that the enemy sowed tares. The Church of Christ is now showing signs of great somnolence, with abnormal spasmodic action; all the time seeds, many of noxious weeds, are being sown in our houses.

E. A. Dodd.

The Present Distress.

Few of our readers will be surprised to learn that the pressure of poverty is at present exceptionally severe and widespread in East and South London. Experienced workers say the destitution is greater than in any year since "the cholera year" (1866); some even venture to estimate that the families now suffering are three times as numerous as in a normal winter. The generally depressed state of trade, the disastrous coal war, and the consequent high price of fuel, have paralysed many industries and compelled employers to close their factories. Thus thousands have been thrown out of work in addition to those who are usually more or less unemployed at this season.

A fact of this kind is easily stated, but only those in close and constant touch with the poor know what it really implies. We are anxious not to exaggerate, but if it be true that in certain localities there is distress in every second or third home, and that in some large tenements almost every family is in trouble, surely something must be done, and that quickly. Our noblest home-workers are "grinding their hearts out"—as one of them put it the other day—in efforts to relieve the most pressing necessities of those around them. These endeavours, moreover, are seriously hampered by the fact that while the condition of the poor demands all their care and attention, they are compelled to spend time and strength in collecting the needful funds.

In such circumstances the proposal may be made that a central fund should be raised. Past experience, however, leads us strongly to deprecate such a course. This form of relief is peculiarly open to abuse; the most distressed do not always benefit thereby, but the needy and loafing, attracted from other parts, and the most persistent rather than the silently suffering poor. Effective relief is best afforded through local workers: men and women in touch with the poor, conversant with their needs and difficulties, and enjoying their confidence. The honest poor, by reason of their praiseworthy reticence, are the hardest to reach, while they are the most deserving of aid.

Many thousands of respectable families are at this very moment suffering terribly. The men are not to be found in the clamorous throngs on Tower Hill; they are tramping the streets day by day on a vain, weary quest for work. Fathers go out in the morning without breaking their fast, so that the bit of bread there is in the house may be kept for the children. Mothers are found struggling to earn something; now and then getting a shilling or two, more often receiving nothing. Everything pawnable has gone for food, and dull despair settles on the family. Such is the actual state of things in many a sad home at this moment. Then, beside the women and children who suffer sorely, there are many sick ones needing nourishment and warmth, but unable to obtain it. Poverty breeds sickness, and this, again, aggravates the pressure and pain.

Further, it is not always borne in mind that there are others who suffer at such a time—the aged and infirm. Every court and alley shelters frail widows and men advanced in years. The customary pittance fails, and these aged ones, many of them choice saints, suffer lack. Many such are known to Miss Macpherson, Mr. George Holland, Pastor A. G. Brown, Dr. Barnardo, and other workers.

Amid all these scenes of sorrow Godly men and women, inspired by the love of Christ and pity for the perishing, are earnestly labouring to relieve present distress and put heart into the hopeless. So far as funds permit, everything that experience can suggest is being done to meet the present need. But the willing helpers are crippled by lack of means. Probably the large contributions recently sent to the starving hosts in the northern and Midland counties have drained the resources of some; but surely the poor of this great city cannot be left to suffer on this account. Many readers will feel that, even if it involve self-denial and the sacrifice of some pleasure or luxury, they must come to the help of those who are relieving the pressing needs of the poor. We cannot think that, such facts being brought to their knowledge, any wil deny themselves the privilege of helping to deal with suffering and sorrow of exceptional severity and extent.

If our present plea is confined to London, it must not be forgotten that this leviathan city has unusual claims on the charitable everywhere. Not only have we the hosts of poor that naturally belong to a great centre of population; great multitudes are constantly drifting into London from provincial towns and villages, and so the vast sea of sorrow and want becomes vaster still. Let those who live at ease in rural air, from whom these woes are hid, support their city brethren in rendering aid to the thousands who, country-born, have been led to cast themselves upon the overburdened Metropolis.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

In an occasional report Dr. Latchford says:—"One hundred and sixty-four patients visited our Convalescent Home at Folkestone this season, and many are the letters of gratitude and appreciation for benefit received both to mind and body. One aged saint wrote: 'I am feeling so much better, and do praise the Lord that He led me to Netley Cottage, for it has, indeed, been a Bethel to my soul. I shall always look back with gratitude to the happy and peaceful time I enjoyed while there.' Two hundred and nineteen children visited Holiday House, and each party remained for about a fortnight. Owing to the very hot summer, the change from the close streets of London was much appreciated, and the matron states that some of the little ones were led to a knowledge of Jesus as their Saviour."

Colonel Forster, a member of the Council, writes:—"The shortening days remind us that the winter is near at hand, and such a winter for the poor, perhaps, as has not been experienced in London for many years, owing to the increasing stagnation in trade, which has already begun to affect the poor through scarcity of work. Besides medical advice and medicine gratis, the medical missionary, when he sees real need, orders suitable food for the patients, and coals and clothing are given in special cases of poverty."

The secretary of the work is Mr. W. P. Crombie, 33 and 34, Short's Gardens, Endell-st., St. Giles', W.C.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE.—Mr. Brewing, reporting on the work of the local Evangelisation Society, says that God has blessed the meetings near the Pier very largely. During the past two years we have arranged for 180 meetings, in and out of doors. In connection with our meetings, we have tract distributors who have distributed thousands of tracts. The secretary is Mr. C. E. Brewin, 66, Upper North-street, Brighton.

The Evangelist.

A PRODIGAL'S STORY.

I was always greatly beloved by my father and mother, sharing fully the few joys and the many sorrows of their life; and did my best to minister to their comfort. Up to the age of twenty-three I was a member of a Christian church, and a zealous worker in the Sunday-school. But at this time a circumstance took place which gave a turn to my life. My father was treated with such dishonesty that I said, "If that is religion I will have nothing more to do with it."

After my father's death I found an outlet for my zeal and energy in taking a prominent part in local, political, and social reforms. By this means I worked my way into the world, and away, not only from my God, but also from my home and family. Unfortunately I held a good position, which enabled me to provide plentifully for my wife and family, while I was drifting rapidly away. My wife, faithful, patient woman, for five-and-twenty years took her family regularly to the house of God; my visits there being confined to times of bereavement.

All this while I was plunging further into that "far country" where God is systematically forgotten; trying to feel satisfied with the empty husks of worldly distinctions. When the "ambassadors" came, I forgot to "give God the glory." Summer friends flattered me; but often did I receive warnings of the error I had fallen into, and the still small voice of conscience would whisper with such tender earnestness that scalding tears would trickle down my cheeks. But I only tried to efface these, by plunging with greater zeal into the world.

But the Lord would not leave me thus. Afflictions came, and beloved ones were taken from me. One of my sons, before departing this life, was led by the Spirit to speak to me. He had long silently noted that though his dear mother lacked nothing which money could buy, yet she was not happy: and he made this touching appeal to me, "Father! will you stay at home more with my mother?" With sorrow and shame I confess that so great was my mental blindness, so thoroughly had I given myself up to the world, that the death of the boy and his dying appeal soon lost their influence over me.

In great mercy the Lord laid his hand upon me, took me out of the way of the world for a while: for six months I was laid aside by sickness, doubtless that I might reflect. But "when the hand of the Lord is lifted up, the wicked will not see it." Though my life for some time was despaired of, so blinded was I, and so conscience-seared, that I never turned to my God.

Family bereavement and personal affliction having failed in their purpose, I was made the instrument of my own reformation. Truly, "God moves in a mysterious way." In my stubborn blindness I took a step which stopped my income, and this, of course, caused my summer friends to leave me; and under a spell of mental frenzy I entered into a business partnership, which lasted only a few years, but which resulted in the loss of all my "savings." Still I sought not my Heavenly Father. I had an income independent of my business, but through the jealousy and treachery of false friends this was also stopped, and I began to see plainly the hand of God dealing with me.

It was too late to remedy the step taken in the "partnership," for that had gone so far as to complete my discomfiture and downfall. Sorrow and remorse seized me, and the Lord opened my eyes, and showed me in a panorama my past life, its gentle warnings slighted, its golden opportunities thrown away; and in striking vividness the disgrace of leaving my wife and family without the natural and the Divinely-appointed head and guide. I saw the vacant chair at home and the empty seat in the family pew. I saw the business drifting; I saw money wastefully and worthlessly squandered that might have brightened many a fireside, and made many a poor widow's heart leap for joy.

I saw my whole life in its rebellious sin, I saw the slighted love of God, and my heart sank within me, and I cried, "It is finished! It is finished! I have sown the wind and have reaped the whirlwind." Everything of the world seemed to be slipping away from me; and I saw it was all to turn me from the path of destruction in which I had so long and so persistently walked. Surely "His mercy endureth for ever." The veil was taken from my eyes, and I saw these visitations as blessings in disguise.

A serious accident to my wife brought to the house an evangelist, by whose ministrations I was greatly comforted and refreshed, but at the same time deeply humbled. I was, in short, able to offer the sacrifice of a "broken and contrite heart," which God can never despise. And thus I found acceptance with Him. I have learnt to know Him, whom to know is Life Eternal. I have learnt to trust Him who cannot fail me. My desire is to serve and glorify Him who hath done such great things for me. My chief aim in life now is to lead others from their wanderings back to the fold of the Good Shepherd. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, for He will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

THE P.S.A. MOVEMENT.

To Brethren in the Ministry of Various Sections of the Church of Christ.

Dear Brethren,—We have become by personal experience so impressed with the possibilities of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Movement, that we venture to call your attention to it, as likely, if wisely and rightly used and directed, to result in untold blessing, not only to the vast populations of working-people in our great towns and cities, but to the churches themselves.

It is not for us to examine the causes which have led to the alienation of masses of people from our religious organisations. The fact is too patent, and it is the more alarming in face of the strong social and democratic influences which are so marked a feature of our times. Nothing could be more disastrous to contemplate than the reign of a democracy not imbued with faith and love which the Gospel of our Lord inspires. In our judgment, the movement to which we have alluded may become the means not only of narrowing the chasm between the churches and the working classes, but of inspiring the strong democratic tendencies of our time with the Spirit of Jesus Christ.

It is computed that already 70,000 working-men meet in various P.S.A. gatherings each week, and in each case large numbers are found associated with them who had not previously come within the range of Christian influence. These men are drawn from the sturdier, more intelligent, and more vigorous ranks of British working-men.

We acknowledge that there are perils in the movement, such as the insidious growth of the demand for entertainment, the usurpation of the platform for the ventilation of mere socialistic schemes, the depreciation of the Church, etc.; but we do not think that any of these are inevitable, and they do not assert themselves in the presence of wise and careful direction.

We have found that this movement has brought us into touch with large numbers of working men, who, if not hostile to Christianity, were at least estranged from its influence. It has been the means of leading many to consider and submit to the claims of Christ; it has enabled us to show sympathy with them in their struggles for purer and more wholesome conditions of life; it has given us opportunities of discussing great social questions from the platform of the New Testament; it has attracted large numbers to our ministry of those who had not previously attended any place of worship; it has purified and blessed by its reflex influence hundreds of homes, and we have found that the clearest evangelical teaching has been eagerly welcomed by those who attend these services. No addresses have been so heartily appreciated as those which have dealt with the cardinal facts of sin and its issues, and with the grace of the Redeemer, by which deliverance from sin is obtained.

It is also worthy of notice that our churches themselves, when the true nature and drift of the movement have been made clear, have been only too glad to welcome and countenance this fresh method of fulfilling the Master's commission. With the sympathy of the church, the presidency of the pastor, the introduction of Christian men into offices of responsibility, the development of self-help among the men themselves, the imbuing of all the meetings with the Spirit of Christ, the holding of the gatherings where possible in places of worship, we think that the evils will be reduced to the minimum, while the maximum of good may be obtained.

We beg, therefore, as deeply interested in the great movement, and as desirous of acquainting you with the possibilities of good that we deem to be latent in it, to subscribe ourselves, in the bonds of the Gospel of Christ, yours fraternally,

J. B. Paton, M.A., D.D., Principal Congregational Institute, Nottingham.
J. A. Meeson, M.A., Harrogate.
E. R. Barrett, B.A., Liverpool.
A. Holden Byles, B.A., Hanley
F. B. Meyer, B.A., London

MEETINGS FOR UNITED PRAYER,

CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY PARK, N.

Tuesday, Dec. 19, at 4 and 7 p.m.

Dear Friend,—We invite you to be present with us at one or both of the meetings announced above, that we may have the benefit of your sympathy and intercessions as together we wait upon God to seek his guidance and blessing.

We recall with thankfulness the many years' experience of the unchanging faithfulness and favour of God, manifested in the Conferences and Missions connected with this Evangelical Centre. The memory of the Rev. William and Mrs. Pennefather, the founders of these life-transmitting institutions, is as fragrant in the Church to-day as was their ministry to the saints in earlier days at Barnet; and if saddened by the thought of what the present year has brought to us in the removal of Mrs. Pennefather and Sir Arthur Blackwood, we can rejoice in their greater blessedness and in our unfaltering assurance that their Lord and ours abideth, and is with us still, as He will be with his people to the end of the age. That He will raise up men "mighty in the Scriptures" for the conduct of future Conferences must be one of our petitions at the meetings to which we invite you; "holy women also," to guide the widely-ramified Missions of Mildmay in the "spirit of power and of love and of a sound mind;" that He will keep the institutions free from error and undefiled by worldliness; and deign to use them as a rallying-point for true believers of every name, even for "all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in uncorruptness" (Eph. vi. 24, R.V.).

Moreover, let us beseech Him who is the "Leader and Commander of the People," to incline our hearts to be more in the attitude of dependence and inquiry, and to welcome and to advance every fresh movement of his Spirit, and all indications of his hand in Providence, which run unmistakeably in accord with his blessed Word. As a recent writer says:—

We must be going the same way, or we cannot walk with God; we must walk at the same pace with Him, or we cannot walk with God.

Before all this, and at each step in the progress of our petitions, we must not forget to humble ourselves before our God for manifold failures in love, in faithfulness, and in watchfulness. To quote from William Pennefather's precious little book, "The Church of the Firstborn,"—

Humility nourishes love. The charity that is not "puffed up" flows forth in tender compassion to those who are out of the way. The Apostle who felt himself "the chief of sinners" was one who could not speak of "the enemies of the Cross of Christ" without weeping, and who, when he reproved his Corinthian converts, added, "If I make you sorry, who is he, then, that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?" It is when individuals or churches "vaunt" themselves, and are "puffed up" with their supposed gifts, that they behave themselves "unseemly," do dishonour to the Most High, and wound the brethren.

In the spirit of these imperfect suggestions, we affectionately ask you to gather at Mildmay on Dec. 19; and before that time and afterwards to accord those who chiefly bear the burden of her work and of her needs, a place in your sympathy and prayers.

Yours faithfully,

James E. Mathieson,
Harry C. Nisbet,
A. Richard Pennefather,
J. Herbert Tritton,
Edward Trotter,
} Trustees of the Conference Hall.

J. F. Morton, Colonel, Superintendent of the Conference Hall.

N.B.—If the Lord will, Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe will give a short address during the afternoon, and Rev. J. Hudson Taylor during the evening meeting. It is hoped that friends unable to join with us in the Conference Hall, will gather those in their own neighbourhoods, and, in fellowship with us, send up a united cry.

The Parliament of Religions.—4.

By Rev. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

(Concluded.)

I have already said that our Oriental critics, while presenting philosophical Hinduism, were most careful to keep any exposition or even mention of popular Hinduism out of sight and hearing. Philosophical Brahminism is confined to scholars and pundits, and a few learned men in other callings, especially those who have taken to high professional life since the advent of British rule in India. It has almost nothing to do with the massed millions of the Empire, who only apprehend in a crude way, without in the least understanding the philosophy of it, the salient principles of pantheism or materialism. But no adequate idea of Hinduism can be had without a knowledge of the popular cult of the age, old practices of the people in connection with the popular worship of the land. Now the customs and practices to which I am about to refer are not practices outside the pale of religion and under its ban, but strictly within the religious life of the Hindus, dictated, fostered, and enforced by all the power of the priesthood.

I.—IDOLATRY.

India is the most idol-ridden land in the world. I can hardly stop to describe it—gods innumerable; gods vile; gods malignant; gods and goddesses savage and furious; gods all more or less associated with that phallic worship which brought such ruin and desolation upon the ancient people of God. The temples and the roadside are crowded and strewn with the phalloid figures, until the land is vile with the presence of them. It is needless to say that the vulgar worship of these images can only corrupt the people who give themselves to it.

Many of the scholarly votaries of Brahminism, who assume a lofty tone of criticism of the morals of non-Christian people of Christian countries, and urge that Brahminism is a pure spiritual worship of God, have laid themselves open to a question as to their sincerity by their utter silence as to this prominent and universal form of Hinduism. The Aryas of the Punjab and the North-west Provinces have indeed repudiated the whole puranic cult. These are no longer Hindus, but a cleavage from Hinduism, as I have said before, under the impact of Christianity. Not till the leaders of Hinduism lift up their voices and throw their whole influence against idolatry—not in its vilest forms alone, but in every form of it—can they be credited with sincerity of teaching in the direction of a pure spiritual worship of God. Many of them do repudiate idolatry in theory and personally, but all of them practise it, and none of them openly condemn it. To do so would involve them in the difficulties, the dangers, and the penalties of schism.

II.—SUTTEE.

Before Christianity entered the land (I mean the Christianity of Carey and those missionaries who have followed him) Hinduism inaugurated, fostered and administered suttee, or the burning of widows upon the funeral pyres of their husbands. During the first thirty years of Carey's life in India, it is estimated that there were seventy thousand widows so burnt; and so far as official Hinduism is concerned that great crime would be prevalent to-day. Not till the British Government, compelled by the pressure of Christian sentiment, abolished it with a high hand and a strong arm, was there any voice lifted up against this horror. It has been said that the Hindu widows went to their fiery sacrifice gladly and voluntarily. If they did, it is evident that they only did so choosing rather that brief misery to the lifelong hell of Hindu widowhood to which they must otherwise be doomed.

III.—INFANTICIDE.

Until the British Government, again compelled by the pressure of Christian sentiment, abolished it, infanticide was the common practice throughout India, and especially the infanticide of girl babies. Even now, though contrary to the law of the British Empire, it is largely practised in secret. A prominent judge of the High Court told me that there was little doubt that innumerable deaths reported as the result of snake-bite were nothing less than death by strangulation; but that it was impolitic to make a too close investigation of these cases, as the practice would, being scotched by law, die away in time under the further influence of Christian enlightenment and civilisation. Hinduism has stained every house in India with the blood of its slaughtered infants. And this, as in the case of burning widows, under the sanction of religion.

IV.—CHILD MARRIAGE.

It is only two years since that the British Government, again compelled thereto by the pressure of Christian sentiment, stretched out its strong hand to put down the practice of compelling little girls, hardly out of their babyhood, to consummate marriage and be taken for worse purposes. The Government by law raised "the age of consent" to twelve years, and would gladly have made it fourteen but for the storm of opposition from all parts of India raised in the name of religion. This practice has been going on for ages, and not until, at last, the medical and zenana missionaries brought to light the dreadful facts in the case of numberless little girls lacerated, bleeding, and dying (as a result of this inhuman practice), offered up on the altars of the brutal lusts of men, did the Government move in the name of humanity to enact a law that no child be taken in actual marriage or for vile purposes until at least she had reached the age of twelve.

What was the attitude of the leaders of the Hindu religion? It is true that a few of the more enlightened Hindus of the educated class did sustain the Government in carrying out this reform, but many more of the same class protested against it in the name of their religion, and as an infraction of their privileges, which the Government is pledged to guarantee. So great was the opposition from the leaders of religion that it was feared that the land would break out into another mutiny. With my own eyes I saw vast processions marching through the streets of Calcutta to the great temple of Kali, there to make sacrifices and offer up prayers to that bloody goddess to save and protect them in the use of their ancient religious privileges. And all this in the name of Hindu religion.

V.—HINDU WIDOWS.

A final test of the truth and divine origin of any religion, it seems to me, must be seen in its treatment of women. Judged by this test Hinduism is found most conspicuously wanting. I said that of old, many widows gladly accepted the funeral pyre of their husbands rather than endure the lifelong hell of Hindu widowhood. What is this? So soon as a Hindu wife's husband dies, especially if she be not the mother of a son or sons, she is stripped of her jewels and of her best clothes, her head is shaved, she is clothed in vile raiment and reduced to the position of the commonest slave and menial in the house. She is looked upon with loathing and contempt, spoken to with words of reproach and hatred, and is oftentimes treated in the vilest manner. It is from this class that a large part of the poor prostitutes of India are recruited. Many widows flee to a life of open shame rather than bear the indignities of widowhood at home. When it is remembered that this utter horror and shame come upon the child-widow as well as the actually married widow, how awful it appears! When I was in Calcutta there died there an old Coolin Brahmin whose business it was to marry (for a money consideration) the unmarried daughters of high-caste Brahmins (maidenhood being a disgrace only short of widowhood), and thus save them and their families from the reproach attaching to celibacy. He perhaps never saw or had any dealings with his many wives after the day of his marriage. When he died some scores of Brahmin women were degraded to the awful estate of widowhood. And this in the name of religion. There are more than twenty millions of these widows in India to-day; disgraced, dishonoured, degraded, in the name of Hinduism; hopelessly shut up to a domestic hell, or driven forth to a life of shame. For a widow may not marry again, according to Hindu religious law.

VI.—THE RELIGIOUS RECOGNITION OF VICE.

We have prostitutes at home, and, alas! in some countries called Christian their calling is legalised and protected, but not by or with the consent of the Church of God. Prostitution is outlawed by Christianity, and no man or woman known to be living an unclean life could be admitted to the fellowship of any Christian church. How is it in India under Hindu religious law? In and about every temple in India, and oftentimes cloistered within their very walls, there are from two to five hundred prostitutes. These carry on their unholy trade by and with the consent and under the direction of the priesthood. This practice is confined to no part of India. I have seen them streaming through the temples from the far up hills in the North down to the burning plains of the South. I stood in the porch of a great temple in Western India, in one of the loveliest spots on God's earth, and whilst, with some companions, we sang a Christian hymn, scores of the girls, some shameless and old, and some shamefaced, young, and ill-content, crowded about us to hear the story of Jesus and his love for their kind. Yet we had a Hindu monk in tones of suave and fiery eloquence standing up in the Parliament of Religions and criticising the low morals and the inhumanities of Christianity.

VII.—THE CRUELTIES OF HINDUISM.

We heard much of the "gentle Hindu," who would be so willing to receive the doctrines of the "gentle Christ" if it were not for the inhuman death-dealing and meat-eating practices of missionaries. It is true that Hinduism forbids the taking of life, and that Hindus are most punctilious in the matter of their food lest they should eat anything which had been killed. They will not kill a cow because it is a living and sacred animal.

But who has ever been to India and not been sickened by the awful cruelties everywhere practised upon animals? The poor cows and bullocks are more than half starved, beaten under their burdens, and prodded in the yoke, with their tails twisted and broken to urge them on to speed. Who has not pitied the inhuman cruelty shown to horses? Who has not seen these poor beasts when they could stand no longer under cruel burdens or pull another foot in the yoke, galled and wounded with sores, left to die on the roadside in the burning sun?

I have seen a man dying on the roadside with a score of Hindus standing by, no one offering to help him or minister to him, because his caste was unknown. Rather than defile themselves by the touch of a dying man out of caste with themselves, they would leave him to die in an agony of fever and thirst. This is religion with the Hindu, not irreligious inhumanity.

The wars of Christian nations have been pointed to with scorn by these holy monks of Hinduism. Does not everyone know that until the strong rule of England entered India the whole land was, and had been for centuries, one field of slaughter and battle between contending tribes and dynasties, all in fierce struggle for ambitious rule? Was not the land overrun from end to end with bands of Thugs and murderers, who most dutifully served the goddess Kali, the most popular of the Indian deities? In pursuit of their profession they always brought to her a portion of the spoil.

This phase of Hinduism was not presented at the Parliament of Religions. The eloquent monks were too busy pointing out the iniquities and unrighteousness of that portion of Christendom which is not Christian, to find time to expound and defend these and some other features of the Hindu system of religion. I am aware that there are reformed and reforming members of the Hindu community who privately repudiate idolatry, who rejoice in the abolition of suttee, child murder, the treatment of widows, and child marriages, but this better mind has come to them through the presence and influence of Christianity.

There are none of them, so far as I am aware, preaching a crusade against those evil things that remain. With bated breath they tell us that the idols must remain, that the nautch girls must remain, that widows cannot be delivered, because all these things are necessary for the common people. Hundreds of those who repudiate idolatry privately go meekly to the temples and get their foreheads painted with the perpendicular or the horizontal bar as they are the devotees of Vishnu or Siva.

When the gentle and humane Buddha arose and went forth to reform Hinduism, and did for a time gain a marvellous ascendancy over the people, did the Hindu, eager for better things, go on to perfection? Far from it. Brahminism wrought with craft and subtlety; accepted and embraced Buddha as the ninth incarnation, and then straightway expelled him and his followers from the land; so that Buddhism is practically unknown in India, except in the remains of some magnificent temples in whole or partial ruin.

What reforming and elevating work has Buddhism wrought in Ceylon and Burmah? Are the people more pure, more humane, more elevated and progressive; more given to humanity than in Christian lands? One needs only to go to those lands and see. What little movement for good there is in Buddhism has been quickened more largely through the influence of Christianity coming in contact with it and stirring it, than from any life in itself. If the Parliament of Religions has done nothing else, it has demonstrated that we Christians must not rest day or night till we have fully preached the Gospel in the Orient.

IN THE HOMES OF THE POOR.

The following details, gathered in visiting among the London poor by the Mildmay Deaconesses, are typical cases, which represent some of the circumstances of present need. They will enable willing hearts to realise the condition of many a "poor brother" and "poor sister," and point afresh to the opportunity which, through them, the Lord gives, of bringing and receiving blessing.

AN EMPTY CUPBOARD.

"Only a pennyworth of bread between us!" This was said, in answer to inquiries, by one of God's bright and happy though suffering children. She and her husband, who is getting on in years, and often not able to work, live in a small, comfortless back room. The day on which I called was cold and cheerless; the grate had no fire in it, and a child was lying ill in bed. Yet, despite the experience of the day before, with nothing but this "pennyworth of bread between them," there was no complaining, but rather the word of trust. "The Lord is good," she said," and never lets us want for long."

A NEW KIND OF FUEL.

A great deal of the unusual poverty in London this year has been due to the Coal Strike. A few days ago I visited some people who were reduced to burning old boots picked up on rubbish heaps instead of coal; and was quite touched by the contented look on the poor woman's face as she said: "Of course, they do smell, Miss, but you wouldn't believe the 'eat they give out!" The week before her husband had come across one pair rather better than the others, had mended and blacked them, and sold them for 2s., on which the whole family lived for three days.

CHILD CRYING FOR BREAD.

A poor mother looked very hopeless when I called for the first time. The room was bare and wretched-looking, strewed with match-boxes which two tiny boys were making as fast as their small fingers could work. As she was talking to me a child of about four years old came in and asked for bread. She said she could not give him any till she had taken the match-boxes home and had been paid for them; without another word the poor little mite turned away and began to cry quietly to himself.

"I KNOW IT IS WRONG."

One who has not long known the Lord as her Saviour, but is truly witnessing for Him in her daily life where drink and sin abound, is greatly tried. Her husband is suffering from an affection of the brain, which somewhat weakens his intellect and unfits him for work. The poor woman has a hard struggle to keep the home together. In speaking to her to-day, she said: "Oh! I do want you to pray for me, I have been so terribly tempted of late. I have not been able to earn the rent the last few weeks, and we have had to go very short of food, and they persuade me to work on Sundays; by so doing, I could earn enough to rid me of these heavy difficulties; but I know it is wrong, and I do pray God to keep me, that I may never turn aside from the right way."

We do not ask for the luxuries of a feast for these poor ones, but for bread enough for the children, and fuel and clothing; for help to pay the rent, for nourishing food for the sick and weakly, for "a proper cup of tea" for the widows, and any little comfort that can be added to it; and all this will be carefully provided through the winter if friends will only liberally respond. Each case is personally visited in the Mildmay Missions, and the strictest economy observed in disposing of the funds, while, with the temporal relief which opens a welcome for it, the message of God's love in Christ is carried to the dark homes.

Contributions for the "Christmas Cheer" Fund thankfully received by Mrs. Codner, Conference Hall Office, Mildmay Park, N., London.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—The Chiswick Mission held its anniversary meeting on Monday week. Mr. Twiddle presided, and Mr. R. T. Smith, the superintendent, was able to give a good record of another year's work.

WHICH IS MORE ECONOMICAL?

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S.Ed.

The chiffonier in Paris successfully turns the cast off fragments lying in the dust heaps of the streets into items of profit and a means of livelihood. The modern chemist converts the waste products of our great industries into valuable commodities, rare essences, sweet perfumes, and glorious colours, in whose manufacture vast fortunes lie.

But all these are outdone by that diviner process of chemical transformation which converts the waste human material of our City slums into the law-abiding, God-fearing colonist, who, in a distant land, but still under the flag of old England, becomes a consumer of her manufactures, and an importer of her industrial products. I have, by God's blessing and His people's aid, taken out of the slums of our English, Scotch, and Irish cities, some 24,000 poor and neglected boys and girls, who otherwise must have been "submerged" for ever. 6571 of these have been carefully placed out abroad, and with the exception of some 2 per cent. of failures, are all by their steady industry contributing to the prosperity of both countries, the land of their birth and the country of their adoption. Deduct from this total the 1982 children emigrated since Dec. 31, 1890. This would give us 4589 as having been in Canada for not less than three years. Take off another 2 per cent. for failures, say 92; this leaves 4497 doing well.

It has been estimated that every wage-earning lad or girl of British birth in the Dominion consumes not less than £9 worth of English goods per annum. This, for 4497 emigrants, amounts to £40,473 per annum, or for three years a total of £121,419 worth of British goods imported for them into Canada, and, of course, paid for by them. Besides the foregoing, is the unestimated values of their individual work in Canada, and of their consumption of articles raised or manufactured in the Dominion. Thus the figures on the profit side steadily grow before our eyes; yet when all is totalled up, we have still left unstated (simply because we cannot appreciate or even estimate it by any material figures) the inexpressible value of 4497 human lives saved, or of immortal souls snatched from the destroyer and brought under the influence of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"I've bin on the streets all my life," said a ragged lad a short time back to the superintendent of our Ever-open Door in Cardiff. The police of the town, on being questioned, declared that the lad had frequently been in their custody as a homeless vagrant for "sleeping out"—that is, for being without friends or a fixed dwelling. In 1885 he was committed for this offence to an industrial school for five years, but in 1890 was discharged, apparently without any better prospect of employment or of a home before him. The life of a street arab began over afresh, until it seemed second nature to him to loaf and beg rather than to work.

Is it needful to draw the contrast such a case presents—the streets, ragged homelessness, and idle beggary on the one hand, followed by a pauper's or criminal's life at a cost to the country of from £50 or £80 per annum for years to come, or (oh, that blessed or!) our Home, its test and training, with its goal in Manitoba (if he stands the test), at an expense, once for all, of £25, and no more!

Yet with the greatest family in the world under my care, I often do not receive, during many days, the money needful for a single day's provisions, and have, meanwhile, to contend with prejudice, to overcome opposition, and to maintain a steadfast fight in simple reliance upon the goodness of God. Could I transport the readers of The Christian to Canada, where they could see with their own eyes the blessed and permanent results of this enterprise, I think I would never again lack the means for its support and development!

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

DOVER ORPHAN HOME FOR GIRLS.—The cost of each child in this excellent institution is between £18 and £20 per annum. The funds are not sufficient to defray more than a moiety of the cost, so a guarantee is obtained for the payment of £10 a year in respect of each child. At present there are twenty-seven children in the Home, but the committee is anxious to increase the number by eight or ten, as establishment charges would be exactly the same for the increased number as for the present number. The hon. secretary of the Home is Mr. Worsfold Mowll, Castle-street, Dover.

DEEP-SEA FISHERMEN.

A large number of friends interested in work amongst the trawlers assembled on Thursday afternoon and evening at Exeter Hall to confer together concerning the progress of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The afternoon was devoted to conference and prayer.

Mr. T. B. Miller, who presided in the evening, opened with a brief address, laying great emphasis on the spiritual part of the work. Although various philanthropic agencies are carried on, these are but means to an end—the winning of souls to Christ.

Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, chairman of the spiritual work committee, said he wished he could present before them some magic-lantern views of a fleet of deep-sea fishing smacks in the North Sea; the most interesting sight would be a number of these sturdy sailors down in the cabin on their knees before God. He described the men as bright, cheery fellows, but one thing which he had noticed was the absence of old men, and he wondered what had become of them. When the missionaries visited the fleets, the men knew what they came for, and were ready to receive them and to listen to their message. The desire of the committee was to extend the work. He made an urgent appeal for lady help in sorting and tying up the packets of literature, ready to distribute among the sailors. They gave away 400 packets a month; this meant 4,800 in the year, and they were greatly in need of helpers. Somebody had sent them two tons of literature, and that meant a large amount of time and trouble to sort and pack. A knitted quilt which hung over the rail in front of the platform, he said, was the work of a lady for the use of the hospital ship. It was worked in squares, each square having a text of Scripture in red wool, so that as the man lay in his cot he could read portions of God's Word.

Rev. John Tuckwell said he was there as a returned missionary from the North Sea. One thing that had arrested his attention was the few opportunities the fishermen had of hearing the Gospel—eight weeks on the stormy sea and eight days on shore. At sea it was often impossible for the mission ship to get near the smacks, so a greeting across the sea was all that could pass, but often the men would come off in their boat and board the mission ship and have a meeting.

Rev. C. H. Hicks gave similar experiences, and in narrating several conversions, dwelt on that of one who was drowned in the terrible gale of November 17 and 18. Revs. G. Eddy and C. Williams, Messrs. W. Fitchew, Edwin Smith, G. Mumford, and Tubb followed, telling what they had seen and heard among the smacksmen of the North Sea. Then came Miss Wilkes, who works among the women at Gorleston, with a heartrending description of the anxieties of the women during the gale, and of the reception by the widow at home of the news of the death of her husband at sea. She was thankful to be able at such a time to be some help and comfort to bereaved mothers, wives, sisters, and children.

The testimony of every speaker was that God had greatly blessed the Mission, and that its operations ought to be worthily supported.

Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, Bridge House, Queen Victoria-street, London.

CORNWALL AND DEVON.

Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, has closed a happy and successful mission in Cornwall and Devon. From Fowey, a lady writes that the words of the evangelist were blessed to many. At Falmouth God sealed almost every meeting with his blessing. The Sunday evening gathering at the Seamen's Bethel will never be forgotten. Many rose at the close of the meeting, and testified that they had received definite blessing. The Town Hall was fairly well filled at each meeting, and several young people decided for Christ.

The meetings at Plymouth extended from October 18 to 30. A friend writes of similar blessing among the seamen, the factory girls, and Bible classes of young ladies, also at the Soldiers' Home. Blessing rested on one night's meeting at Dawlish, and messages were taken home to some dear hearts. The workers praise God for having directed Miss Radcliffe to the far-away western counties.

THE READING BAND OF HOPE UNION, impressed with the importance of scientific temperance teaching for the young people of the town, have arranged for a class to be held for the study of the subject.

EVANGELISATION IN LONDON.

The thirty-fourth yearly report of the Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Missions in London is issued. The death of the late Mr. C. M. Sawell is regretfully referred to. The intimate knowledge acquired by Captain Lowe of the needs of the working classes through his intercourse with the missionaries specially fits him to succeed Mr. Sawell in the conduct of this work.

The report narrates satisfactory efforts made in the various buildings. The city missionary in charge of Morley Hall, Cambridge Heath, says: "God has graciously given unto us much encouragement in large congregations and rich blessing enjoyed at Morley Hall. The class that has thronged the services at the Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel, consists of 'dockers,' dwellers in common lodging-houses, and frequenters of the lowest music halls. The workers have circulated amongst these people some fifteen thousand handbills, on each of these being two telling texts from the Word of God. The attendance during the twenty-six Sunday evenings reached over 60,000, and the attention shown during the services was marvellous. In this congregation are to be seen many sailors, and a large number of Jews."

Speaking of the meetings at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, the report describes a service with an address by a working man:—"A capital sermon, well thought out and delivered in a simple, manly style, kept the people to its close, and it was some forty minutes long; not a bad proof that if there is a message faithfully delivered, there are those that will receive it. After the service was over, a second was held outside in the wide corridor, when the audience, in spite of the 'screed of doctrine' already received, were still willing to have more. Is there anything more pathetic or more appealing to those who know and love their Master than such a fact as this huge London, with its teeming millions, willing to listen if only the simple Gospel be delivered?"

At Homerton Hall a quiet and unostentatious work has been carried on. A most useful Bible-class is held each Sunday afternoon, with an attendance of over a hundred young men, and still the numbers steadily increase. To those who know from experience the difficulty of keeping up an interest sufficiently varied to retain such numbers, a fact like this speaks volumes for the hold Mr. Charles Button has upon the people. He makes himself responsible for the work done, as well as for the financial burden, which the committee by their grants gladly help him to bear.

The Queen's Palace of Varieties, High-street, Poplar, is attended by the very poor, such as dockers, or those engaged in unloading the ships in the neighbouring docks. Two of the publicans living near were represented by members of their families, who were very regular in their attendance. An interesting case of conversion was that of a Swedish sailor. Coming in late, he said to the steward, who directed him to a seat, that he hoped that he was in time, if it were only for a few words. After the service, which Mr. Chadwick took, he remarked to the same steward, with tears in his eyes, that he was about to leave England on the morrow, but he had then found what he needed above all—the pardon of his sins through Jesus Christ. One of the London City Mission dock missionaries has also given testimony to other instances of usefulness which have taken place.

The committee call attention to the special fund for giving mission halls small grants; they appeal for help so as to be able to aid many of these halls, the maintenance of which are a serious draw on their limited funds. Rev. Thomas Charles Udall, 3, Bridewell-place London, E.C., is financial secretary of the committee.

"OUR FIRST CHRISTMAS PARTY."—Such was the happy expression used by the treasurer of the Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Union-street, Borough, at a meeting convened by the Midnight Meeting Movement on Friday evening. One hundred and twenty-six, at least, women of South London, were present, and after tea were spoken to of Jesus, who died to save. Hearts were touched by the kind words and invitation to reclamation. While the meeting was proceeding Mr. John H. L. Christien, the organising superintendent, was called home, after a brief illness, at his residence in Forest Gate, at the advanced age of eighty. Mr. C. Wilson McCree, secretary of the Society, conducted the meeting.

MISS WESTON'S WORK.

The good hand of God has been upon this work, in guiding it safely through another year, a year which has brought its difficulties, its trials of faith, and yet has been a year of progress and blessing. The subscriptions and donations have amounted to £12,009, to the building fund £8380, and to the general fund £3629. To this fund all the Gospel and temperance work is credited, and also funds have to be drawn for the relief of widows, left destitute by the death of their husbands, often on foreign stations. £1000 a year is greatly needed to extend and develop all this work, to pay the largely increased staff of workers, and to circulate the monthly letter, and Ashore and Afloat. Annual subscriptions are asked for, every subscriber of 10s. and upwards will receive every month, gratis and post free, a copy of the subscribers' edition of Ashore and Afloat, containing on the last page the latest details of the work.

Her Majesty the Queen, through the Duke of Edinburgh, has graciously given the title of "Royal" to the Sailors' Rests at Portsmouth and Devonport, and has otherwise expressed her Royal approval of the work, while the blue jackets continue to use the Sailors' Rests in larger and larger numbers. The numbers sleeping on the premises have greatly increased—the last year shows a total of 123,617, an increase of 7980. The money taken over the counters amounts to £12,976. The receipts at Devonport are £557 more than last year, and Portsmouth £660 more. The evangelistic and temperance work has kept pace with this, meetings have been crowded, and very many have come out on the Lord's side. Miss Wintz is still working shoulder to shoulder with Miss Weston, aided by Miss Brown and other ladies, besides a strong staff of workers, who, having been naval men, know the heart of a sailor.

The work among the sailor boys is larger than ever. Some of those boys went down in H.M.S. Victoria. It is very cheering to hear from them, and to know that many of them are manfully serving the Lord Christ. Miss Weston has had heavy work in relieving the widows and mothers of those lost in H.M.S. Victoria for four months, until the Patriotic Commission commenced paying out the funds collected by the nation. Many a bright Christian went down in that ship. It is said that eight of the cadets and midshipmen were earnest Christians, loving their Saviour and trusting Him, and of the men, a large number were on the right side. A letter written by one of the lost men to his wife, came like a voice from the grave, being delivered some time after the ship went down. He said, "You will be glad to hear that we have many Christians aboard, and hold our Bible classes, and prayer-meetings—Roberts took thirty pledges yesterday—Tell Miss Weston that I see my duty clear, and have become a temperance man, for Christ's sake, to enable me by influence and example to win as many as possible for Him who died for me." That brave fellow was called into the presence of the King a few hours after writing the letter.

Further information may be obtained from Miss Weston, Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

A CONFERENCE IN GEORGIA.

The annual Christian Workers' Convention has been in session at Atlanta. Those who came from a distance have been greatly strengthened and encouraged by reports of what is being done in various parts of the country and the world; while great good has been done among the churches and the people of Atlanta. Rev. J. C. Collins, secretary of the association, has laboured very diligently during the past year for the success of the Convention. Governor Northern has identified himself with the work.

During part of the Convention, Rev. E. P. Hammond held afternoon meetings for children. At the first of these about fifteen hundred were present.

E. P. H.

LIGHTHOUSE MISSION, CAMBERWELL.—The tenth annual report shows that in a very poor corner of Camberwell, and in an old and well-nigh worn-out shed, a little band is doing good service. The Sunday-school is attended by about 150 children, very poor, while the Band of Hope, sewing classes, etc., are well maintained. The superintendent is Mr. R. R. Blewer, 75, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN KESWICK.

The third annual convention in South Africa on the deepening of the spiritual life was held at Wellington, the home of the saintly Andrew Murray, during the last week in October. The subject for meditation was "Perfect Love," and the spirit that united speakers and pervaded all the meetings was the very best expression of brotherly love. Ministers of the Dutch Reformed Church, the English Church, the Wesleyan, Presbyterian, and Congregational bodies, and members of the Cape General Mission took part. A message was read from Mr. Spencer Walton, now in America, and telegraphic greetings from Lovedale, the famous educational missionary institute of Africa. The mountains around towering in grandeur, and standing out with a clearness of outline and detail impossible in an English climate, made one think of the Cumberland Keswick, and the missionary meeting beneath the shady trees by the river's side was somewhat in resemblance of the missionary gathering at Friar's Crag.

There was for us an inestimable privilege unavailable in England, and that was the presence and presidency of Rev. Andrew Murray, who, in spite of much bodily weakness, spoke with extraordinary power on love in God and man, and endeavoured untiringly to diffuse the balmy breath of love around. "Not a drop of love," he said, "can come to us except God is moved to give it by an act of will;" yet we were taught it was failure if we were not filled with perfect love, and this we were to possess in our relation to God, to those around us, and in our Christian work. God can and will make it possible for us to love Him as easily as a child does a father. Instead of the contentions of the Church being a proverb and a reproach, love might abound, while towards the unconverted there should be the Spirit of the Lamb. To get this perfect love, there must be discovery and confession of its opposite, and the finding out of the root of it all—SELF—which leads to selfishness, and for this self there is no cure but death. God must slay self. When this is done we may expect an indwelling Christ and an operating Spirit.

Prof. Hofmeyr, of Stellenbosch College, author of "The Blessed Life," spoke with tender unction about God's love, an address remarkable for its theological depth and childlike spirituality.

Rev. Walter Searle showed what the outcome of love to God would be in love to the brethren, and brought home the sense of sin to those who, in sinning against the weak brethren, had sinned against Christ. The love to Him that begat must be accompanied by "love to him that is begotten of Him"; that is, to every child of God apart from lovableness, and because he is a child.

Mr. Dudley Kidd and others were used of God to search and probe hearts, to find out where there had been departure from the freshness of first love, or an infringement of the law of kindness, in act, or thought, or word.

The influence of the convention will long be felt amongst the churches and the heathen races of South Africa, for the love of God to man will stay the enmity towards the coloured man; and many who during the meetings were looking on the large letters of gold hung up on the platform, "GOD IS LOVE," went away with a desire to have that Word of God engraven on the heart and embodied in the life.

DARKEST GLASGOW.

The condition of the city on Saturday evenings is lamentable beyond description. Drunkenness with its concomitant vices and evils, and touching all ages and classes, and both sexes, has reached a terrible development. All through the evening hours the public-houses are thronged, and, as the hour for closing approaches, the streets are filled with men in all stages of intoxication, and scenes of degradation and shame may be witnessed on every side. In view of the abounding wickedness that flaunts itself in our midst, and the activity of all the forces of evil, we feel most distinctly that there is a call for more extended and resolute effort in seeking to stem this surging tide of sin.

The contrast between this turbid mass of debased and drunken humanity that disgraces our streets on the Saturday night, and the quiet decorum and church-going respectability of the Sabbath forenoon is so great that many of our citizens have little idea of the real state of matters existing near their own doors.—The Reaper.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 10.—PSALM CXXII.

It is supposed that whilst the former psalm was sung at the first glimpse by the pilgrims of the holy city, this was prepared to celebrate their entrance within its gates. The R.V. translates the second verse, "our feet are standing." The weary journey was over, and the abiding city was reached. The chief attraction of Jerusalem to the pious Jew gathered about the Temple, the House of God. This was the jewel in the casket, which made it delightful.

What Jerusalem was to the Hebrew, the Church on earth and in heaven, the City of God, is to all faithful hearts. It is compacted in the deepest unity; it is the centre of the aspirations of all holy souls; it is the metropolis, whence the Lion of the Tribe of Judah issues his commands. Oh, when shall the pilgrimage of earth, with its bitter discipline, end in thee, thou fair and lovely city? When shall our eyes feast on thy ravishing beauty? To love God's work is to possess the secret of true prosperity. Let us seek the Peace and Prosperity of God's cause, they will come back to roost in our own hearts. Peace lives with the sons of Peace.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 11.—PSALM CXXIII.

He who sits in the heavens is the Son of Man, our Lord, who sits at the right hand of God. There are times when we can see no help in man or on earth, and then to us, as to Stephen or to John, the heavens are opened, and we see the Saviour. Lift up your eyes to Him, troubled believer. Presently He shall arise to thy help. "Looking off unto Jesus."

There is no rest to the heart in this life until it has taken the place of the household servant or slave. We are more than that in our relationship to God, but we are always that in our reverence, humility, dependence, and obedience. "Paul, the slave of Jesus." "I bear branded on my body the marks of Jesus." The Oriental servant waits submissively for the first indication of his master's will. Such was the attitude of the great servant of God. He did nothing of Himself but what He saw his Father do. We must learn the lesson, so hard for us all, of being still until our Master bids us. And if He bid us not, then to be still, with our eye never off Him.

The captive Jews, returned to their land, were exposed to the bitter taunts and hatred of surrounding peoples. In such circumstances, again, we have no alternative but to look up.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 12.—PSALM CXXIV.

What might have been! is often our sad reflection as we see the faint outline of the rainbow fading back into the mist, before its arc was complete. But we do not always realise what storms would have engulphed us, what tides would have swept us off our feet, if it had not been for our God. This is the theme of this psalm. It attributes to God's interposition our deliverance from the extreme of peril, Let delivered souls give God their praises as votive offerings.

God is always beside us: and never more so than when men arise against us to swallow us alive in their kindled wrath. The Son of God walks through the overwhelming waters to succour the driven bark, with its panic-stricken crew. Look not at the storm, but at Him. He is only exercising thy faith.

The picture is next of an ensnared bird. Ah! fluttering thing, how truly thou imagest the soul when the nets of the dread fowler have fallen on it! But there is one who breaks the snares. And as the escaping bird leaps up into freedom, so does the emancipated soul. Happy is he who in all his difficulties and temptations derives help from Him who said, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth."

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13.—PSALM CXXV.

Those who trust in God share in the strength and might of God; as the limpet shares in the steadfastness of the rock to which it clings. The most yielding soul welded to God becomes like God in its permanence. God's strength enters into its very blood. "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

But there is a further thought. The trustful soul is God-encompassed, God-environed, God-protected. Jerusalem was encircled by greater hills than the one on which she stood; and they who trust God are within the ramparts of his own loving and strong care for evermore. The mountains screen the valleys from the blast, and collect the showers, which they shed down in crystal rills. Yea, the mountains may depart, but God's kindnes and the covenant of his peace are abiding,

The rod or sceptre of wickedness may cast its shadow over our lot but it shall not rest there. The prolonged assertion of evil over us might make us lose trust and hope, so God graciously keeps watch. The devil knows that his time is short.

What you are to God, God will seem to you. We view God in hues borrowed from the heart. He does good to them that are good: He avenges the evil and unholy.

Amid all the changes and chances of this mortal life, the only true peace is to be found in the covenant relationship into which God has entered with his Israel. Such peace be ours.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14.—PSALM CXXVI.

It seemed almost too wonderful to be true. One year they were captives in Babylon, the next in their own land. It seemed too good to be true—more like a dream; but was it only a dream? However profound your hopelessness, and strong your chains, and ruthless your gaolers, there will come a turning again. And when it comes it will be due to the hand of God.

Then laughter and singing. Weeping is a sojourner for the night; in the morning, joy. Your soul shall one day emerge into the light—if not here, yonder, where sorrow and mourning shall flee away, and you shall obtain gladness and joy. There are no tears in heaven; but who shall say that there is not the ringing laughter of the soul, happy for ever, in perfect health, and equipoise, and satisfaction?

What a difference there is in the tone of the nations who, merely observing, lay the emphasis on them, and those who can substitute us! It is to the glory of God that we should be delivered, and praise Him.

Out of deliverance arises further prayer. Those who had reached Jerusalem prayed for those who were still captives. As the winter rains fill the watercourses of the south of Palestine, so we would seek the plentiful rain of God's help and blessing. Oh, troubled child of God, hug this assurance to thy heart. It is thine autumn. Thou sowest tears as well as seed. It is hard to go on thy way. The furrow seems to have no end. But every foot shall be re-trodden in the summer time, and be one long procession of joy. Thou shalt come again, with the shout of "Harvest home."

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15.—PSALM CXXVII.

All Christian workers are builders (1 Cor. iii.). Too often we build after our own plans and in the energy of our own might. And we meet with disappointment. Our labour is vain. We must learn to recognise God as the builder. It is our part just to help Him.

We often try to keep our temper, our thoughts, our hearts. But if our endeavour to keep right and pure and earnest is only our own, it will be working in vain. The Lord must keep us, or our best resolves will be overcome by the sudden assault of our foe.

We are careful and troubled about many things, such as our business, our maintenance, our dear ones, our growth in the blessed life. We rise up early, and late take rest. We are worn and weary with our anxious labours, and have little to show for them. God does not forbid work; on the contrary, He urges to it. But this weary round of worry is not his will. He is prepared to carry that. Let us leave it with Him, and we shall acquire a blessed trust like the untroubled sleep of childhood; and whilst we sleep calmly on the arms of God, He will provide all we need. "He gives unto his beloved in sleep." (R.V. m.)

What children were to the Oriental, that our spiritual children may be to us. God gives them to us. They are the best reward of faithful toil. But they are not for our delectation only, but to be as arrows, which, deriving impulse from our hand, shall speed on their ministry of destruction to all proud things that exalt themselves against Christ.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16.—PSALM CXXVIII.

The blessedness of true and undefiled religion is beautifully portrayed in these words. It is described as fearing the Lord, and walking in his ways. And the results of such a life are portrayed as follows:—

1. To garner as well as plough: to reap as well as sow: to pick fruit as well as plant trees: to eat as well as labour with the hands.

2. To be contented and filled with the favour of God. "It shall be well with thee."

3. To be happy in domestic life. The wife clinging in her tender love, as the vine laden with fruit about the woodwork of the inner quadrangle of the Oriental home. The children like olives, the symbols of prosperity, joy, and peace.

4. To share in the prosperity of the people of God: beholding their good and participating in it. So that soul and home are perpetually replenished from its stores.

5. To live long, if not in years, yet in the intensity of bliss.

All these things may seem hyperbolical and unreal to many of those who read these words. Our lives are not thus. But remember that perhaps God has dealt with you as with Abraham. He did not give him Canaan, because He had prepared something better. And it may be, if you would look for them, there are around you spiritual blessings of which these are but transitory symbols.

THE POST OFFICE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY has now thirty-six branches, and 2,390 members.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 17.

The Glorified Saviour.—Rev. i. 9-20.

Golden Text, Phil. ii. 9.

The Book of Revelation was written by John the Apostle, on the island of Patmos, in the Ægean Sea. The date is uncertain, but it is probable that his exile took place during the reign of Domitian, A.D. 95.

The visions of conflict always ending in triumph with which the book abounds, were calculated to encourage the Apostle during his banishment, and to strengthen and embolden the Church in the conflicts awaiting her before the second advent. The messages are "signified" to John (i. 1)—made known to him by signs. Only by a patient comparison of the symbols used here with the symbols of the Old Testament can the meaning be understood. It is confessedly a difficult book; yet a blessing is promised upon the study of it (i. 3). No one can neglect it without suffering loss.

I. The Introduction to the Vision (9—11).—John's description of himself is significant. Messages of comfort have greater weight when spoken by one who is a fellow-sufferer with us. Beyond this mention of the name of Patmos, he makes no further reference to his banishment. This little island, about fifteen miles in circumference, is one of a cluster in the Ægean Sea. The Apostle heard (10, 11) before he saw. The order is significant. Those who are attentive to hear, and ready to obey, are in the fit condition to receive his revelations. The positions of the seven churches can be traced on the map. They were all in a single district of Asia Minor.

II. The Vision of the Glorified Saviour (12-20).—Several features may be noted. (1) His position. "The seven golden candlesticks" are the seven churches just mentioned, and represent the whole Church in every age. "Gold" sets forth our Lord's estimate of the Church. The seven-fold light represents the Church's purpose in the world. Not only to enjoy light, but to give it. The Saviour is in "the midst" of these (13), denoting his perpetual presence with his people. Where his Church is, there is He (Matt. xviii. 20; xxviii. 20).

(2) His wonderful likeness. Each detail of his appearance is significant. His humanity. In many respects He differs from what He was when John knew Him in the flesh, but He still retains his human likeness. This fact is itself a wonderful prophecy of the honour and glory to which God will exalt man in Christ. His priesthood. The long garment is that of the high priest. This office He sustains toward his Church to-day, and secures for all his people an eternal salvation (Heb. vii. 25). His kingship. His girdle is not round his loins as when He washed his disciples' feet (Jno. xiii.); but round his breasts. He has passed from lowliness into sovereignty, hence the "golden girdle." The priestly and kingly offices are closely united in our great Melchisedec (Heb. vii. 2), and in his people (1 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. i. 6). His spotless purity.—For the explanation of whiteness (14) see Isa. i. 18. His eyes of fire, denoting "his piercing and just discernment of the secrets of all hearts, his burning zeal against all injustice and wickedness, and both the consuming and purifying influences He exerts." Remember that this is the Lord with whom we have to do (Heb. iv. 13). His feet resembled not only brass, but "brass when subjected to a vehement heat, in which case its radiance is greatly increased." Some see in this a comparison to the lightning in a thunder cloud. The image would thus represent both his power to tread down his enemies, and the inconceivable swiftness of his movements. His voice. No sound is more musical nor more awfully impressive than the roar of the waters of the sea. Such a voice inspires confidence in those who trust Him, and awakens terror in those who know Him not. The stars in his hand are explained in verse 20. They probably represent the pastors of the several churches, in whom the characteristics of the churches appear. These are "in his right hand," because He appoints, sustains, protects, empowers them. The two-edged sword is the word of Christ, the sword of the Spirit. (See Eph. vi. 17; Heb. iv. 12.) His countenance (16), too dazzling for man to behold.

(3) The effect of the vision (17-18).—Like Daniel the Apostle was overcome by the glory of the vision and was restored by the touch and the message of the glorious Lord (Dan. x. 9-11). Note the two triplets as they appear in our Lord's message (R.V.). His present glory, and his authority over death and the grave are the result of his death and resurrection.

See in this lesson (1) the glory upon which we shall be permitted to gaze; (2) the glory in which we are to have a share; and (3) the importance of being in right relation to Him. How powerful is such a friend! How fearful if our love of sin should make Him our enemy!

For the Young.

"WHAT IS YOUR DRAGON?"

The satirist Thackeray, and a friend, were one day looking in a Bond-street shop-window. Pointing to a statuette of Perseus, the novelist startled his friend by asking in an earnest manner:—

"What is your dragon?"

"Luxury and indolence," was the reply.

"Ah, those are just mine, too!" replied Thackeray.

But no one who knew how hard he worked, and how steadily he kept at it, would have thought this. He just hourly fought his dragon, and—as we must all do if we fight with the right sword—conquered it. You, boy or girl, youth or "sweet girl graduate" in life's school, what is your dragon? Do you know it? Then fight it! Slay it, or it will lay waste all the beautiful garden of the Lord in your heart, and choke out every good growth. Fight it, beat it down, hunt it from you, until you can say, Thanks be unto God who giveth me the victory through Jesus Christ!

Good Cecil tell us that to parley is to fall. Never hesitate or delay to break off a bad habit, as soon as you know it exists. Remember, it will grow stronger each time it is repeated. You must have no manner of tolerance for it. There must be no fool's shibboleth, no devil's formula, "Just this once more," over it. No—for no one ever does anything worth doing to-morrow. To-morrow is the fool's paradise; if you cannot stop to-day, you are defeated. "Now is the day of salvation." There will be other days, of course, but not for you; for when they come you will be so enslaved by your mighty dragon, that you will not even have the desire left to say—Get thee hence, Satan!

You want to be good, with Christ's goodness; you want to be great, with Christ's greatness; you want to be strong, with Christ's strength. Begin now at once! Self-mastery, by the grace of God, is the first achievement of the truly great, the really strong; and the only cure for any bad habit, any evil propensity, any moral declension, is to stop it by putting a good one in its place.

You have seen a mother take a knife from baby's hand, and just quietly slip a new and a safe toy in its place.

That is what our heavenly Father does. He gently draws our hearts away from the evil thing by giving us something so much better, pointing us all the time to his Son—his great, manly, conquering Son—as our salvation, our liberator, our strength, and our friend.

Horace Vernet, the French painter, had once to paint a tiger; the creature's eyes so fascinated him that, under the spell of the tiger's gaze he, day after day, gradually covered his canvas with eyes of various expressions.

"How are you getting on?" asked the man for whom Vernet was to paint the tiger's portrait, as he stooped over the canvas. "Why, you're mad; you've painted only eyes!"

He had become so absorbed by that at which he gazed that it had become his sole work, unconsciously to himself. Gazing at Christ—the victorious Son of God—you will forget all else. Low aims, mean desires, petty distractions, sinful habits, will fall from you in his presence. You will become like Him—you will be free!

Seneca wrote that difficulties strengthen the mind as labour does the body. Go on, in the name of God, slashing away at your dragon, and it will soon lie at your feet powerless, under that gift of your Captain, the "power to become the sons of God."

Finally, I point you to those who

"Climbed the steep ascent of heaven;
Thro' peril, toil, and pain;
O God, to us may grace be given,
To follow in their train!"

M. BUTLER GERDS.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Stoke's Croft Chapel, Bristol, to Dec. 10; York, Dec. 11-12, Dukinfield, St. Mark's Schools, Dec. 13; Liverpool, Admiral-street Mission Hall, Dec. 14; Newcastle-under-Lyme, Dec. 18; Plumstead, Dec. 19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Waterhouses, co. Durham, Dec. 4 to 17; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Mission Hall, Gay-street, Scotland-road, Liverpool, Dec. 9 to 20; Mr. George Goodman, Bow, Dec. 10 to 17; Mr. J. M. Wigner, St. John's, Hatcham, Dec. 11; Mr. H. Hankinson, Harringay, Dec. 12; Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Talgarth: Mr. Edward Hughes, Harrow, Dec. 10; West Hill, Wandsworth, Dec. 14.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Psalms, Dec. S., 10, cxxxix. 17-24; 11, cxl. 1-13; 12, cxli. 1-10; 13, cxlii. 1-7; 14, cxliii. 1-12; 15, cxliv. 1-15, 16, Esther, i. 1-12.

A MISSION TOUR IN THE COLONIES.

I have lately returned from an eighteen months' mission tour among the young people in our colonies and Japan, chiefly in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, but doing a little Railway Mission and Y.M.C.A. work also en route when time and opportunity offered.

Arriving at Cape Town in March, 1892, I addressed a few children's meetings in Cape Town and neighbourhood, where there are a number of branches of the Children's Scripture Union, and then, taking rail to the Orange Free State, held meetings for the railway men and their families at various centres en route as far as Bloemfontein, the capital, where there is a flourishing branch of the S.U.; then, crossing into the Transvaal, stayed a few days at Johannesberg, holding services at these two last towns, and continuing journey to Natal, where I stayed four months, holding missions for young people at nearly all the towns in the colony, establishing branches of the S.U. where none previously existed, and addressing the Zulu and Kaffir boys and girls at several mission stations which I visited, including one (Swedish) at the famous Rorke's Drift.

Returning by boat to Cape Town, I proceeded to Tasmania, Victoria, New South Wales, and Queensland. There are several hundred branches of the Scripture Union in Australia, with about 40,000 members, and although I spent about seven months there I found the time all too short to do the work which offered, Melbourne and Sydney alone—too large to hold central meetings for young people—taking nearly three months. Here also there were branches of the S.U. in most of the colleges and schools, and many of them I visited and addressed.

At each of the missions held, some professed to decide for Christ, and on some occasions, where there did not seem to be opportunity for individual dealing, a number rose to their feet to testify their decision. I left each colony with regret that I could not spare a longer time there, there seemed so much to be done in several departments of work, and often few to do it.

In Queensland I had only a few days, and there some Christian friends complained that evangelists going to Australia generally passed their colony by.

In the southern Australian colonies there are only a few hundreds of the aborigines left, and these are generally at mission stations, one of which (Lake Condah) I visited, also the Kanakas on one of the sugar plantations in Queensland.

Returning home viâ Japan and Canada, I visited and addressed several mission schools in the former country, and some meetings of the S.U., which has spread wonderfully in Japan, there being already more than 10,000 members, a large proportion of them young men, of whom a good many are not even Christians, but who are regularly reading God's Word. The S.U. promises to be one of the most effectual weapons for Christ in Japan, and it is energetically worked by those in charge, besides having the interest of several of the missionaries. The picture leaflets which they print there in Japanese are eagerly read and received by the people.

The Y.M.C.A.'s I found very active in most of the large colonial towns through which I passed, and already established in some of the towns of Japan.

J. H. GREENE.

"FATHER."

These lines were written by a soldier who, ordered to the East on active service, fell at Candahar. Just before he sailed he gave them to Miss Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

Guide of sons in life's stern race,
Shield of daughters' maiden grace,
Childhood's pride and childhood's joy,
Speak it boldly out, my boy,
That royal name of "Father."

Mark the furrows on his brow,
Worn by care's relentless plough,
'Twas for thee those seams were riven,
Let love and reverence be given
To the guardian name of "Father."

Secret are a father's fears,
Secret as a mother's tears,
Oh! make virtue's paths thy choice,
Let his yearning heart rejoice
In the sacred name of "Father."

Monarch on his household throne,
Priest and ruler all in one,
Give whilst yet thy days are few
The honour and obedience due
To the kingly name of "Father."

Deep within thy youthful breast
Let his words of wisdom rest;
Let his bright example guide,
Helpful rise thou by his side,
The glory of thy "Father."

Never bring the blush of shame:
Speak with pride the glorious name,
Higher far than prince or king.
Shout, my boy, and make it ring—
That grand old name of "Father."

"MOTHER!"

Speak it softly, speak it low,
Toss not lightly to and fro,
Guard it in thy bosom's core,
Keep it safely evermore,
That sacred name of "Mother."

Tell me not of high-born dames,
Proud of great ancestral names,
Titles they may have in store;
But all these must melt before
That sweet old name of "Mother."

Ask the Queen upon the throne
Of the name she loves to own,
If a woman true she be,
Her reply will come to thee,
"Give me the name of 'Mother.'"

Where is talismanic spell?
Where the charm can work so well?
Try the word afloat, ashore,
Hearts of steel will melt before
That simple name of "Mother."

Tells it not of home and youth?
Tells it not of love and truth?
Tells it not of virtues rare,
Of self-denial, anxious care—
That homely name of "Mother."

Guard it well, preserve it pure,
Let its loving force endure,
Keep it thine, and keep it mine,
Woe the day should it decline—
That noble name of "Mother."

B. B.

THE SLIGO CHRISTIAN UNION reports quiet earnest work for the past year in carrying on evangelistic effort in the district; it aided in the Mission held by Rev. John McNeill, in Sligo. The secretary, Mr. R. Sampson, Sligo, will give any information desired.

MISS STIRLING'S HOMES.—Acknowledging a sum of money in aid of these institutions, Miss Coltart, lady superintendent of the Home in Edinburgh, writes: I hope that many kind friends may be raised to help in this grand work of rescuing orphans and destitute children. I have lately visited Miss Stirling's little emigrants in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, and only wish friends in this land could see them in their happiness and comfort. Miss Stirling is most particular in placing the children; in the majority of cases they are adopted for life, and are "sons" and "daughters," saying "father" and "mother," and also bearing the names of their guardians, whom they look up to and love. Miss Coltart will be glad to give further information. Her address is: Miss Stirling's Home, 79, Montgomery-street, Edinburgh.

TWO MISSIONARY MARTYRS.

[The following biographical notices of the Swedish missionaries who were recently killed by a Chinese mob at Sungpu, are from the pen of the senior agent of the Swedish Missionary Society in Hankow.]

Otto Fredrik Wikholm was born on September 9 at Fugalsta, in the province of Dalarne. The first part of his life was spent on the farm with his parents. At twenty-four he was converted, and shortly afterwards became a most devoted worker in the Lord's vineyard. His ambition was to become a missionary, and China was the field of his choice. He entered the Swedish Missionary Society's Theological College in 1885, and remained there till the autumn of 1888, devoting all his time to study and preparation for the coming work. As a student he was very successful, and highly esteemed both by his comrades and the professors.

During 1889 he had the charge of a congregation in Snaflunda, Sweden, and proved himself very acceptable, most devoted, and persevering. Many in that neighbourhood are now looking back upon that time with unspeakable joy as they remember the day on which they were brought to the Saviour through his instrumentality. May they all copy the example of our friend, and be faithful unto death!

In the spring of 1890 Mr. Wikholm was set apart as a minister of the Gospel, and after spending some months in London, for the purpose of acquainting himself with the English language, he left for China, together with two more missionaries, and arrived on November 25 in Wuchang, where his Mission was engaged in establishing its headquarters. Here, while occupied in studying Chinese, he witnessed the riots of 1891, and had just started out on his first missionary journey when he heard the sad news of the murder of Messrs. Argent and Green at Wusueh. As every day brought fresh news of outrageous attacks on foreigners and their property, he took the advice of Dr. Griffith John, and returned to Wuchang, where he devoted another year to the study of the language. At the graves of these two friends Mr. Wikholm was very much moved, and when asking a friend at his side, "Who shall be the next?" he little knew that he himself would have to lose his life so soon by even a more outrageous murder.

Before going to Sungpu, which place he visited several times during his third year in China, he had made good progress in the language, and become familiar with the customs of the Chinese; and being one of a meek and thoughtful disposition, there can be no doubt as to his wisdom and patience in all his dealings with the people. In fact, he had already won for himself a good reputation among the respectable citizens of Sungpu, and not a few had received, through his instrumentality, a very fair knowledge of the truth of the Gospel. At least one native of that place, an apothecary of means and standing, is now, as the result of his teaching, a very happy Christian. He stood by our brethren when they fell, and was himself beaten severely, and deprived of all he possessed. The other day, when he heard that the mandarins were hunting for him, he said, with tears in his eyes, "They have killed my foreign teachers, burnt down their house, and now they wish to kill me. But I am not afraid, for my soul is safe in Jesus, and from Him they cannot separate me." It is something worth seeing the martyr's spirit of devotion, zeal, and courage, of firm trust in God, of meekness in heart, and of love to Jesus, reflected in this man, who probably would have lived and died as a worshipper of idols, had not our brethren been faithful even unto death.

Among Mr. Wikholm's many sorrowing friends and relatives, there is one with whom we specially sympathise, as she was to have been his bride this autumn. May the God of all comfort grant peace and consolation to her heart, and give to all the bereaved ones at home the needed grace, courage, and endurance; and may He so overrule all for his glory that it still may be seen that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church."

Anders Danial Johansson was born on the 24th of July, at Tanno, in the province of Smoland. His parents were well-to-do, and, being earnest Christians, they taught their children to love and reverence God. Mr. Johansson was one of those who never indulge in any worldly enjoyment; on the contrary, he always tried to live a very religious life. But he did not look upon himself as a real born-again Christian until 1883, when a great revival spread itself over most parts of Sweden, during which he found the wanted peace and assurance of salvation in Jesus. From that time he used to engage in Sunday-school work, visiting the poor and sick, and ever pleading with men to accept Jesus as their Saviour.

In 1887 he entered the Swedish Missionary Society's College, in order to qualify himself for the foreign mission-field. At first it was decided that he should go out to Africa in connection with a small Mission Union in Ostergothland, to assist Mr. Hedenström, a missionary of that mission, who for some time had been trying to obtain a footing in Galla. For this reason Mr. Johansson went over to Germany in 1889 to study German. During his stay there the Mission Union gave up the idea of starting work among the Galla people, whereupon Mr. Johansson returned to college and continued his studies during 1890. As the Mission Union of Ostergothland was unwilling to part with their young missionary, they offered to support him in China, in case he wished to go there and join the Swedish Missionary Society. These arrangements were carried out, and he was ordained at Stockholm in 1891. In the same year he proceeded to China viâ London, where he stayed for some months, and made himself many friends, among others Rev. Mr. Müller, leader of the Kurka Mission, with whom he kept up a very friendly correspondence to the last.

OTTO FREDRIK WIKHOLM.

ANDERS DANIAL JOHANSSON.

Arriving in China in the autumn of 1891, he was called upon to take a journey through several provinces in the north, after only six months' study of Chinese. It was the privilege of the writer to be his travelling companion, and to witness his joy and earnestness in serving his Master. It was interesting also to notice his firm trust in the Chinese. He seemed never to suspect anyone of evil intention, and it was his aim in all things to adapt himself to the people as much as possible in order to gain their confidence. Of him it can be truly said, he had a heart as large as humanity, inasmuch as he loved all. He will always live in our memory as the "Steadfast Man," a name given to him by the Chinese in the north last year. This indeed may be confidently said of both of our brethren, for they have been faithful into death, and have now received the crown of life.

F. E. Lund.

Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, in a recent letter, after referring to the massacre of Messrs. Wikholm and Johansson, says: "May I ask your readers to remember the missionaries of China, and especially of Central China, in their daily supplications. Under the reign of the present viceroy, matters have been going from bad to worse in this province. Instead of Hunan being opened, as we were fervently hoping some time ago, it looks now as if Hupeh might soon be closed. Let us have a few more years of the present régime, and even travelling, to say nothing of residing in the interior of Hupeh, will become an impossibility to the foreigner. The murder of these two noble-hearted missionaries shows you the conditions in which we live and carry on our work in these parts. Within three years this province has given three martyrs to the cause of missions. Hupeh has a special claim on your sympathy and prayers."

FROM DR. PARROTT, HANKOW.

Writing from Hankow on Sept. 18, Dr. Parrott says:—"Some time ago a grateful patient made inquiries as to my full name, as he wished to present me with a testimonial in the shape of a large signboard. A few days ago the board arrived at the hospital. I had to summon all the Chinese politeness at my command; we drank tea together, and, after conversation, I asked him to accept and study a copy of the New Testament. When the testimonial was presented, his servants fired off 200 or 300 crackers in honour of the occasion! The board is painted black and varnished, with four large Chinese characters in gold, with six smaller characters at one end, and five at the other. The characters at the right end of the board are my literary name with the words "Ya chien," which mean, "For your Excellency's approval." Then follow four large characters, the whole sentence being to the effect that the medical divinities, Hu and Pien, are resurrected in me! At the left end are the donor's name and two characters, which mean that the board is respectfully and reverently presented by "Li Kwong huan." The natives tell me their testimonial is of more value than money. A native doctor only needs to get one such board, and he is on the high road to distinction.

"On inquiry I found that Mr. Li holds an official position of great responsibility here. He is the son of the Governor-General of the Province of Kan-suh (the province adjoining Shensi). I am not sure that he does not reside at Si-ngan. He wishes me to take his testimonial with me. Possibly it may be a help in getting an open door to Si-ngan. My greater desire, however, is that the Word of the Lord may find an entrance to this young man's heart. Pray that the reading of the New Testament may lead to his finding Christ. He is a Hu-nau man, the most anti-foreign province of China. There is no doubt, I think, of our being able to settle in Si-ngan. From every quarter we hear of friendliness of the people. My fear is that large numbers of patients will swallow up my drugs before I can get others.

"This brings me to business, I hope to be sending home an order for drugs almost immediately—£20 or £30 worth at least. I don't wish to order them until the money is in hand with which to pay for them."

A letter from Mrs. Parrott, dated September 25, speaks of an invitation they had received from Lao-o-Keo to spend a few months there. This they hope to do, as it will give time to perfect themselves in the Shensi dialect, and to study a little the written language. Lao-o-Keo is only a few days' journey south of Si-ngan, and Dr. Parrott would have the opportunity of entering this city, and arranging for a house, before taking on the rest of the party.

AN OFFER TO THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—A generous friend of the Bible Society made an offer last year which only holds good till December 31, 1893. He offered: (a) £50, if forty-nine similar amounts were given by others. To this proposal twenty-three responses have come.—(b) £100, if twenty-four similar amounts were given by others. Ten sums of £100 each have already been sent.—(c) £500, if nine such amounts were forthcoming. Six of these have been paid. Further responses are earnestly requested and hoped for to make good the Society's claim to the £650 conditionally offered to it. They should be sent to the Rev. J. Sharp, 146, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

A SELECTION OF WORKS

Suitable for Christmas Presents and New Year's Gifts.

Published by MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

AND MAY BE ORDERED OF ANY BOOKSELLER.

WORKS BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The "Scripture Biography" Series.

"In Mr. Meyer's hands the Old Testament is felt to be a living Book."—Baptist Magazine.

A NEW VOLUME OF SCRIPTURE BIOGRAPHY.

Joshua: AND THE LAND OF PROMISE.

With Nine Specially Engraved Illustrations.

CLOTH BOARDS, 2s. 6d.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 3s. 6d.

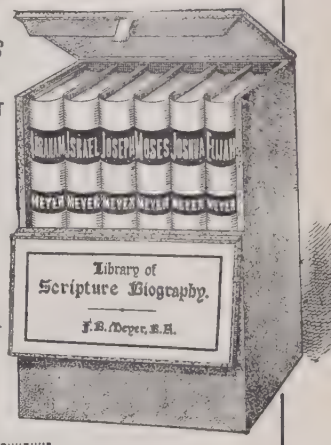
"In this work the author seems to have surpassed all his previous efforts, for we believe it is one of the strongest and most suggestive books he has written. He is a robust thinker, a clear writer, and a most reverent and devout theologian. His book on JOSHUA is worthy of being placed beside the best that have been written on the subject. It is full of great truths; a valuable companion for a busy worker."
Irish Congregational Magazine.

"This work bears the stamp of freshness and finish, and contains many helpful thoughts."—British Messenger.

UNIFORM WITH "JOSHUA: AND THE LAND OF PROMISE."



Each with Nine Original Illustrations.
Specially Prepared and Separately Printed on Toned Paper.

CLOTH BOARDS, 2s. 6d.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 3s. 6d.

Abraham: OR, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.
Israel: A PRINCE WITH GOD.
Joseph: BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED.
Moses: THE SERVANT OF GOD.
Elijah: AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

"A more useful guide for a series of Bible-Class lessons it would be impossible to find."—The Quiver.

The "F. B. MEYER" Library.
(6 Volumes in Case.)

THE SIX VOLUMES Comprising this Series are ENCLOSED IN A NEAT CLOTH CASE.

Price 12/6 net.
(Postage 1s. extra.)

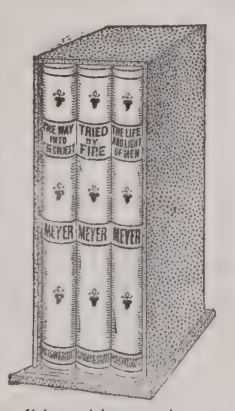
Each Volume Handsomely Bound in Library Style, and with Nine Original Illustrations.

The "Expository" Series.

A NEW VOLUME OF EXPOSITION.

The Way into the Holiest.



EXPOSITIONS OF THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

CLOTH BOARDS, 2s. 6d.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 3s. 6d.

"Especially rich in its teaching concerning the possibilities of Christian life. It is evangelical to the core, and full of suggestions for meditation and stimulus to effort."—Methodist Recorder.

"Full of good things."—Christian Leader.

"Luminous and instructive."—The Freeman.

THE THREE VOLUMES Comprising this Series IN A NEAT CLOTH CASE, 6/6 net.
(Postage 6*d. extra.*)

EACH VOLUME HANDSOMELY BOUND IN LIBRARY STYLE.

"A great treasure to any preacher or Bible student."
Preachers' Magazine.

UNIFORM WITH "THE WAY INTO THE HOLIEST."

Each Volume in CLOTH BOARDS, 2s. 6d.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 3s. 6d.

Tried by Fire.

EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PETER.

"Mr. MEYER thinks and writes accurately, and imparts his ideas with the maturity of reflection belonging to a ripe experience, which the deep teaching of the epistle evokes."—The Rock.

The Life and Light of Men.

EXPOSITIONS OF JOHN I.—XII.

"Pervaded by a fine delicacy of thought and feeling, revealing a mind of high culture and intense sympathy, and unswervingly loyal to the authority of the Word of God."—Christian Age.

The "Christian Living" Series.

A NEW VOLUME ON THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Key-Words of the Inner Life.

STUDIES IN THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

CLOTH BOARDS, 1s.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 1s. 6d.

"One of those sweet, spiritual, soothing books for this fretful age, that Mr. MEYER knows so well how to write. A voice saying to tired and harassed men and women, 'Come ye apart in a desert place and rest awhile.' There is peace; quiet power—gracious and refreshing; and the presence of Jesus vividly to be seen and felt here by faith."—Word and Work.

UNIFORM WITH THE "KEY-WORDS OF THE INNER LIFE."

CLOTH BOARDS, 1s.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 1s. 6d.

Christian Living.
The Future Tenses of the Blessed Life.
The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.
The Shepherd Psalm.

CLOTH BOARDS, 1s. 6d.;
CLOTH, BEVELLED BOARDS, GILT EDGES, 2s.

The Psalms: NOTES AND READINGS.

"It is a good sign that such books as these multiply and find readers. They are 'rills from the fountain of life,' and will send those who here taste the living water to the Word, which is the springhead."—The King's Highway.

FIVE VOLUMES

Of this Series are enclosed in a Neat Cloth Case.

Books bound in Cloth, 5/- net.

Books bound in Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 7/6 net.

(Postage 6d. Extra.)

"Sound spiritual teaching tersely put in an interesting style."—Footsteps of Truth.

JERUSALEM (Reduced from an Illustration in "John").

By Rev. JAMES CULROSS, A.M., D.D.

(Principal of Bristol Baptist College).

John, whom Jesus Loved:

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER, WRITINGS, THEOLOGY, AND INFLUENCE OF THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

WITH EIGHT CHROMO-LITHOGRAPHIC VIEWS.

Tinted Covers, 2s.;

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

FROM A REVIEW, by the late Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

"The work before us is a great book for matter, though modest in size. It is perhaps a little too compressed for the general reader, which is a virtuous fault for the student. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices, and are mainly of use in stirring up pure minds by way of remembrance.

"One of the excellences of Dr. CULROSS is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn forest.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate on what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

Christ's Message to Ephesus.

("Thy First Love.")

WITH CHROMO-LITHOGRAPHIC FRONTISPIECE.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

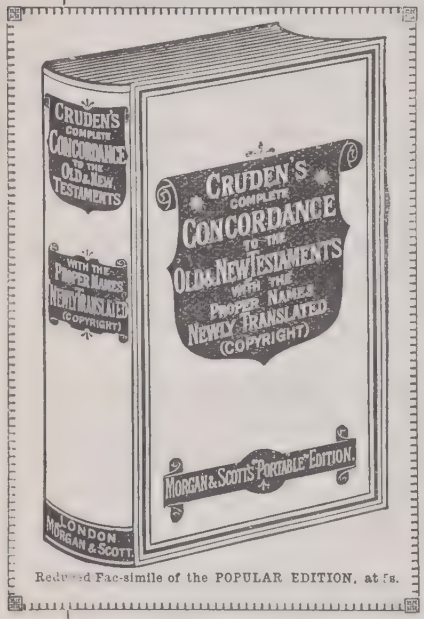
"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which the imagination sheds over the author's style, gives it a great charm."—The British Messenger.

Christ's Message to Laodicea.

("Behold, I stand at the Door and Knock.")

WITH CHROMO-LITHOGRAPHIC FRONTISPIECE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Bds., 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bev. Bds., 2s. 6d.



"All who admire the author's insight, his delicacy of perception, his felicity of language, his broad and tender sympathies, his grasp of great truths, will welcome this volume."—The Freeman.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S EDITION

OF

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

(UNABRIDGED).

Reduced Fac-simile of the POPULAR EDITION, at 5s.

All MORGAN AND SCOTT'S EDITIONS contain—
Over 750 Pages.
About 2,270 closely printed Columns.
And nearly 250,000 References.

Also A LIST OF THE PROPER NAMES OF THE BIBLE
Carefully Revised and New Translated by Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A.
Specially prepared for Morgan and Scott's Edition.

This List of Proper Names is strictly Copyright, and can only appear in Morgan and Scott's Editions.

The "PORTABLE" Edition, 3/6

STRONGLY BOUND IN CLOTH BOARDS.

This Edition is also bound in Half-Calf, Marbled Edges, 7s. 6d.

THE LATE C. H. SPURGEON wrote—
"To Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT,—Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. . . . I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

POPULAR EDITION. Printed on Superior Paper, Strongly Bound in Cloth Boards. 5/-

PRESENTATION EDITION. Handsomely Bound in Cloth Boards, with Gilt Top and Gilt Lettered. 7/6

LIBRARY EDITION. Handsomely Half-bound in Leather with Gilt Edges. In Neat Box. 10/6

ILLUSTRATED EDITION. Contains 12 Exquisite Steel Plate Engravings and Six Coloured Maps. Clh. Bds., Gilt Top. In Neat Box. 10/6

A SPECIAL OFFER.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT have a remainder of 2,000 Copies of "The Christian" Portrait Gallery.

Containing over ONE HUNDRED LIFE-LIKE PORTRAITS and BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES of Christian Men and Women of the present day.

Published at 10/6 Which they are Clearing out FOR 3/6 NET, Carriage Paid.

Application should be made at once, accompanied by Post Office Order for 3s. 6d.

In a number of cases purchasers on receiving this handsome volume have been so highly delighted with it that they have immediately ordered more.

By Rev. Dr. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.

"ITS CHAPTERS ARE MOUNTAIN SUMMITS, LADEN WITH THE DEW OF HERMON."—Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston.

"IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK";

OR, THE PROFIT AND PLEASURE OF BIBLE STUDY.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"No one can read this almost unique volume without being stimulated to a more diligent study of THE BOOK. It is not, strictly speaking, evidential; yet the key to valuable Scripture evidence is to be found within. It is not exegetical; but the careful reader will be taught thereby a sound method of exposition. It is not homiletical; although the seed-corn of dozens of addresses is contained in its brief compass. Buy it, we can say to all; read it with your Bible open and a commonplace book to hand, ready to catch up and store away the many precious things so lavishly scattered throughout its pages."—Night and Day.

By Rev. Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

THE LIVING WORD AND THE WRITTEN WORD.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Editions:
Cloth extra, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"We know of no volume that we more earnestly desire to see in the hands of persons of every age who are pondering the religious question of momentous importance, so much agitating men's minds at the present time. It is admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful; and also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the lives and thoughts of the young, and to mould them into Christians of a high type of character."
The Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

"THE BOOK WHICH THE PRESENT PERIOD NEEDS."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS."

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

From THE SWORD AND TROWEL:—
"An invaluable work. The price is low at half-a-crown. It is the book which the present period needs. It is solid, plain, conclusive argument. To those who retain candour, although somewhat shaken by the present earthquake of doubt, such 'INFALLIBLE PROOFS' as these will be greatly reassuring, and we believe they will return to the old faith with increased confidence. To spread such a treatise as this will be a very gracious work; and the results must be beneficial."

MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT

Will send, post free upon application, their

New Illustrated Catalogue.

This Catalogue comprises a large selection of Books, etc., suitable for the various departments of Christian effort.

Works by Rev. F. B. MEYER.
" " D. L. MOODY.
" " Rev. Dr. CULROSS.
" " ANNA SHIPTON.

SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS, Words and Music
(Over 70 different editions).

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG. TEMPERANCE PUBLICATIONS.
WORKS ON CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE.
BOOKS FOR YOUNG CONVERTS.

Sacred Songs and Solos:

750 PIECES.

PRESENTATION EDITIONS

BOUND IN LEATHER AND CLOTH GILT.

Words Only.

		s.	d.
	RUBY EDITION.
AA 4.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	1	0
AA 3.	Cloth Boards, Gilt	0	6
	NONPAREIL EDITION.
BB 3.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	1	6
	POCKET EDITION.
CC 4.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	3	0
CC 5.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges...	4	6
CC 6.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	2	0
CC 3.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	1	6
	LARGE TYPE: DOUBLE COLUMNS.
DD 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	4	6
DD 6.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	3	6
DD 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	2	6
	EXTRA LARGE TYPE.
EE 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	6	6
EE 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	9	6
EE 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	4	6
EE 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	3	6

Music and Words.

		s.	d.
	OLD NOTATION: LARGE TYPE.
FF 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	10	6
FF 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	14	6
FF 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	7	6
FF 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	6	6
	OLD NOTATION: SMALLER TYPE.
HH 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	6	6
HH 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	9	6
HH 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	4	6
HH 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	4	0
	TONIC SOL-FA EDITION.
RR 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	6	6
RR 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	9	6
RR 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	4	6
RR 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	4	0
	QUARTO EDITION.
	For use at the Piano, Harmonium, or Organ.
MM 3.	Persian Morocco, Boards, Gilt Edges	17	6
MM 4.	Best Turkey Morocco, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	25	0
MM 5.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	12	6
MM 2.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	9	6

Sacred Songs & Solos 750 PIECES: and The Christian Choir 79 PIECES:

COMBINED IN ONE VOLUME (829 PIECES).

Words Only.

	s.	d.
RUBY LEADED EDITION.
XB 5. Morocco, Gilt Edges	3	6
XB 6. Leather, Burnished Red Edges	2	0
XB 4. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	1	6
EXTRA LARGE TYPE.
XE 5. Morocco, Gilt Edges	7	6
XE 6. Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	10	6
XE 7. Leather, Burn. Red Edges	5	0
XE 4. Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges	4	0

Music and Words.

OLD NOTATION: QUARTO EDITION.

For use at the Piano, Harmonium, or Organ.

	s.	d.
XM 3. Persian Morocco, Boards, Gilt Edges	20	0
XM 4. Best Turkey Morocco, Boards, Gilt Edges	27	6
XM 5. Leather, Burnished Red Edges	15	0
XM 2. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	10	6

Any of the above Editions can be procured through any Bookseller in the Kingdom; or will be sent by the Publishers, Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, post free to any address on receipt of the published price.

A Complete List of the various Editions of "SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS"—with Words only from 2d. upwards, and with Music and Words, both Old Notation and Sol-fa, from 2s. 6d. upwards, with Specimens of Type—will be sent post free on application to the Publishers.

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S

LIFE OF REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

POPULAR EDITION.

IN ATTRACTIVE TINTED COVERS

PRICE 1/-

THE PRINCE OF PREACHERS.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

A SKETCH:
A PORTRAITURE:
AND A TRIBUTE.

WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

Presentation Editions: Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Far and away the very best presentation of Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. This book should become the gift book of the season from all Spurgeon-lovers to their friends."
The King's Own.

"Since the 'Prince of Preachers' has been promoted to glory many tributes of love and esteem have been rendered to his memory, but the one before us far excels all others we have seen at present. Mr. Douglas knew Mr. Spurgeon, loved him and reverenced him; it was meet that he should sketch his portrait, and he has done it perfectly. We could scarcely wish to have a word altered from the first page to the last."—Sword and Trowel.

New Hymns & Solos.

A CHOICE COLLECTION OF NEW COMPOSITIONS,
SPECIALLY SUITABLE FOR
EVANGELISTIC SERVICES and OTHER MEETINGS.

WORDS ONLY.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Tinted Covers	0	1	Printed Cloth	0	2

MUSIC AND WORDS.

OLD NOTATION.	s.	d.	TONIC SOL-FA.	s.	d.
Tinted Covers	1	6	Tinted Covers	1	6
Cloth Limp	2	0	Cloth Limp	2	0
Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges	2	6	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	2	6
Morocco, Gilt Edges	7	6

"It would be difficult to present anything more attractive and readable."
DIVINE LIFE.

The NEW YEARLY VOLUME of

The Herald of Mercy.

Profusely Illustrated. Containing Stirring Appeals, Striking Narratives, Choice Extracts. Biographical Sketches, Children's Pages, &c.

"FULL OF THE GOSPEL IN STORY AND SONG."

Attractively Bound in Pictorial Boards, Price 1s.

"Its varied contents, profuse illustrations, and attractive binding combine to make it a most acceptable present."—The Bookseller.

"It is bright without and within. It is full of good pictures. It is well printed, and every line is laden with the good old story of Jesus and His love."—Baptist Messenger.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

WORKS BY D. L. MOODY.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

132nd Thousand.

ADDRESSES BY D. L. MOODY.

DELIVERED IN ENGLAND AND REVISED BY HIMSELF.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"With the effect of these Addresses when spoken the whole land is acquainted; and now that they are written, they will tend to keep in force the impression they have already made."—Primitive Methodist.

19th Thousand.

THE FAITHFUL SAYING:

A SERIES OF GOSPEL ADDRESSES.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"These discourses are full of power and homely beauty, and exemplify very fully the strong points of the great Evangelist. His anecdotes are so fresh, so pointed, and so touching."—King's Highway.

50th Thousand.

HEAVEN:

ITS HOPES, ITS INHABITANTS, ITS RICHES, ITS REWARDS.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"We have here the large verbal familiarity with Scripture; the raciness of style; the profuseness and aptness of illustration; and the intense spiritual earnestness—which are always to be expected when Mr. MOODY opens his lips to speak or takes his pen to write."
Baptist Magazine.

61st Thousand.

THE WAY TO GOD.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES ON THE WAY OF SALVATION.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition. Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"This work should be secured by all who are anxiously seeking the 'Way to God'; because it is made plain there by His servant. Christian people, too, may have their faith strengthened by a careful perusal of this welcome volume."—The Stream.

31st Thousand.

POWER FROM ON HIGH:

OR, THE SECRET OF SUCCESS IN CHRISTIAN LIFE AND CHRISTIAN WORK.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d,

"Every page is full of stimulating thought for Christian workers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"Let all Christians who would succeed in leading a holy life and accomplishing the noblest work on earth, read, mark, learn."—Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

8th Thousand.

"TO THE WORK! TO THE WORK!"

A SERIES OF TRUMPET CALLS TO CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"It is a book which ought to be in the hands of every Christian."—Christian Commonwealth.

"Calculated to strengthen the faith of the weak; and to lead those who have not yet enjoyed the blessing of winning souls for Christ to get to work at once before the opportunity closes."—Footsteps of Truth.

10th Thousand.

PREVAILING PRAYER:

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES ON PRAYER.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"It is most searching and powerful in its appeals to the conscience, and abounds in well-told incidents."
Lay Preacher.

11th Thousand.

SOVEREIGN GRACE.

ITS SOURCE, ITS NATURE, AND ITS EFFECTS.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Rich in all that simple evangelistic teaching of which Mr. MOODY is a master. The book cannot fail to be very useful."—Christian Age.

"Full of precious Pauline truth, forcibly and familiarly put, and pressed home with power."—Regions Beyond.

THE OLD GOSPEL:

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"The word 'GOSPEL' is very little understood; few words in the English language are so much misunderstood. We have heard a great deal about it, but a great many people do not know what it is. Man looks on the Gospel as bad news; but it is good news, glad tidings of great joy."—Extract.

10th Thousand.

BIBLE CHARACTERS.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

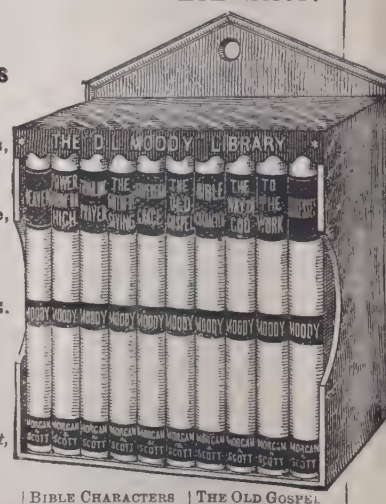
CONTENTS.

Daniel the Prophet.	Jacob. Lot.
Enoch.	John the Baptist.
Joseph of Arimathea.	The Blind Man.

"Mr. MOODY goes right into the heart of his subject; and in a few words shows his reader the great truth or principle involved, teaching lessons for all time and all generations. In his hands the Bible is a living book.'
Christian Age.



'LIBRARY' AND COMBINED EDITIONS.

THE "D. L. Moody" LIBRARY.

TEN of MR. MOODY'S most Popular Works, bound in Roxburgh Style, and enclosed in an OAK CASE.

12/6 NET.

If sent by Post, 1/3 extra.

ADDRESSES | BIBLE CHARACTERS | THE OLD GOSPEL
FAITHFUL SAYING | PREVAILING PRAYER | HEAVEN
SOVEREIGN GRACE | POWER FROM ON HIGH
THE WAY TO GOD | TO THE WORK!

"These are popular works by our great Evangelist, and they deserve a large sale. There can be no need for us to commend the living, blazing speech of our brother MOODY. Who can equal him in natural simplicity, all aglow with holy passion!"
Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and Trowel.

The above Ten Works can also be had bound in Five Volumes and enclosed in nicely made box, 10s. 6d. net.
POSTAGE 10½d. EXTRA.

CONVERSION, SERVICE, AND GLORY.

Being THE WAY TO GOD; HEAVEN; AND POWER FROM ON HIGH.

Specially Printed and Handsomely Bound in One Volume, suitable either for the Library or for Presentation. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 5s.

GRACE, PRAYER, AND WORK.

Being SOVEREIGN GRACE; PREVAILING PRAYER; AND TO THE WORK!

Specially Printed and handsomely Bound in One Volume, suitable either for the Library or for Presentation. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 5s.

THE 50th Thousand.

Second Coming of Christ.

Limp Cloth, 6d.

Cheap Edition, for Gratuitous Distribution, 2s. per dozen.

"Characterized by devout thoughtfulness, and deep reverence for Holy Writ."—Irish Baptist Magazine.

THE 12th Thousand.

Full Assurance of Faith.

SOME THOUGHTS ON CHRISTIAN CONFIDENCE.

Limp Cloth, 6d.

Cheap Edition, for Gratuitous Distribution, 2s. per doz.

"One of the most pointed and practical works the Evangelist has written."—Christian Leader.

EAST HALL, NORTHFIELD.

D. L. Moody at Home:

HIS HOME AND HOME WORK.

Containing a description of the Educational Institutions at NORTHFIELD and MOUNT HERMON; together with some account of the various Christian Conferences held, and the best thoughts exchanged therein.

With Eight full-page Illustrations of the Educational Buildings.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A delightful picture of the American evangelist amidst home surroundings. . . . . The account of Christian conferences, and helpful thoughts expressed at them is very edifying. Mr. MOODY'S own 'Bible Nuggets' are among the best in the volume."—The Rock.

MAJOR-GENERAL HOWARD,

OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

AMONG the special services arranged at various times during the recent Evangelistic meetings in Chicago, was one for veteran survivors of the American Civil War and their families. The meeting was held in the Central Music Hall one Sunday afternoon. A pressing call had been sent to the one-armed veteran warrior Major-General O. O. Howard, to come and address this meeting. The noble Christian soldier promptly responded to the call of his old army friend, Mr. Moody.

At the appointed hour a large congregation of veterans, with mothers, fathers, wives, children, widows, orphans, and friends of soldiers, assembled in the great hall. On the platform, with General Howard, sat Major Whittle, who had been on the General's staff during the Atlanta campaign and the march through Georgia, also Major J. H. Cole, General Sexton, and others.

As the General rose to speak, visibly affected, looking every inch the true soldier of his country and of his Lord, we remembered that he stood before us as the representative of a roll of heroes rapidly passing away, and soon all to be gone. The thought seemed to touch every heart, and there were tears in many eyes before a word was spoken. Those present knew the old hero's history. He is the only surviving officer of the five illustrious generals who commanded the Army of the Tennessee—Grant, Sherman, McPherson, Howard, and Logan. He was appointed to command after the death of McPherson at Atlanta. He participated probably in more of the prominent battles of the Civil War than any officer now living. He fought with McClellan in the Peninsular campaign, losing his arm at Fair Oaks. He was on the bloody fields of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Antietam, Gettysburg, and Chattanooga, went through the Atlanta campaign, with its numerous battles, led the Army of the Tennessee through Georgia and the Carolinas, and was an active participant in the last battle under Sherman in Fayetteville, N.C. He was honoured with the thanks of the country through resolutions passed by Congress for his services on the field of Gettysburg.

The pronounced Christian character of General Howard was well known during the war, and has been so steadfastly maintained that he holds the confidence and love of the Christian people of the United States, both North and South. General Sherman regarded him as the "Stonewall Jackson" of the Northern Army, and gave him his confidence and affection to a very marked degree. Mr. Moody became acquainted with him while in the Christian Commission work connected with the soldiers; their friendship and fellowship in Christian work has continued unbroken from the days of the war until now. They were companions in the memorable experiences of shipwreck on the steamship Spree last year, and were drawn yet closer together by the common danger shared and the mutual help afforded in the imminent peril through which they passed.

(From a Photograph by Mr. Sarony, 37, Union Square, New York.)

Major-General Howard commenced his address by saying that he had intended to speak of the loving-kindness of the Lord, but at the suggestion of his friend, Major Whittle, he would relate something about his experience in entering on the Christian life. "Perhaps my simple story may help and cheer someone in the Christian way. My thoughts go back to the days of my youth. How much I have to be thankful for! We had bright, happy Sundays at my home; pure, good, uplifting days. When I went to school my good mother followed me with letters of motherly love, and counsel and quotations from the Scripture. Her favourite word for me was 'Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' I knew not what it meant. But the words followed me and troubled me.

"There is a time in a man's life when he is affected with the measles of unbelief. It was so with me also. I spoke, as did others slightingly of the Bible and of religion. One day a dear friend said to me, with mild and loving rebuke, 'Otis, if I were you, I wouldn't speak against the Bible, but just be a Christian.' These words, spoken in season, have been in my heart for forty-seven years. They brought me under conviction of sin. Naturally a very quick and fierce temper, I have tried to conquer it, by the grace of God, and get self-control. My mother continued to write to me, and I always wanted to please her. I tried hard. It is only a short time ago that she passed away to her rest, not far from here. I am glad she lived to see her son a follower of Christ, according to her desire."

The General went on to tell of his life at West Point, and how he braved the ridicule of the cadets by going to religious services and doing work in the Sunday School. He said it cost him more to take his stand and run the gauntlet of their scoffs and sneers, than it did later to face the cannon and musketry of the battlefield. "But I gripped my Bible, shut my teeth, and went, for mother's sake."

All this time he did not profess or claim to be a Christian. But one day he sat in a little church, on a back seat, in uniform. A little coloured boy sat beside him, who fell asleep and rested his head on the General's breast. He was proud and sensitive, and did not like the situation, but he always had a tender heart for children. The preacher soon came up to him as to others in the congregation, with a personal appeal. "Which side would you rather be on, the Lord's side, or the side of those who mock Christ?" said the preacher. Promptly and resolutely the General's heart answered, "The Lord's side." He rose, buttoned up his military coat, and marched down the aisle to the altar, where he knelt and committed himself to Christ. No change was experienced and no light received at the time of this committal, and he was in much perplexity as to how he might know of his acceptance by God and the pardon of his sins. This came to him the same night while alone in his quarters.

A friend had sent him a copy of "The Life of Hedley Vicars." He read it with deep interest. He could not understand what was meant by the saying, so oft repeated: "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." He knelt down and asked God to show him what it meant, and God did it. "My soul was so happy, when God revealed to me the way of salvation by the blood of Jesus Christ, that I rejoiced with an unspeak-able joy. That hour the gift of eternal life was consciously mine. Oh, the preciousness of that gift. There is no counting the value of it, and there is no discounting it!

"After this experience I wanted to be a chaplain, to seek the souls of men. But the war came. I responded to the call of my country, and went as conscientiously to the field of battle as to a prayer meeting. On the eve of my first battle, I became pale and weak at the sound of cannon and musketry, and the roar of conflict. God was there, and I cried to Him to give me strength to do my duty. Quick as a flash, my courage and strength came, and I never faltered again in the face of any peril. I went forward with the confidence that I was doing God's will, and He never forsook me.

"When my friend, Captain Griffith, was shot down on the field of Gettysburg, we bore him to a house in the town to die. I went to see him once more, and read at his bedside, the sweet words of Jesus, 'Let not your heart be troubled. . . . . In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you and if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am, there ye may be also.' At these words, Griffith lifted his great black eyes, looking into mine, and said, 'General Howard, I am not afraid to die; I am ready to go!" I bent over him and tenderly kissed his white forehead, bade him a last loving good-bye, and left him to die. I shall see my comrade again!'

At the close of the address Major Whittle bore a fellow-soldier's testimony to his comrade and to their common Lord. "I was privileged," said he, "to be with General Howard on his staff six months. I knew him well. All who know him, as I do, will feel that he has been very modest in speaking of himself to-day. I never saw General Howard when he showed any weakness in character. But of all the scenes where I was privileged to be with him, those errands of mercy among the sick and the dying, in hospitals and camp, most deeply impressed me. I remember one affecting case where a dying Confederate soldier was brought to Christ by the General's kind ministry.

"I want to add my testimony to that of General Howard, that the religion of Jesus Christ is the greatest reality of life. I thank God that many of our comrades can also unite in this testimony. I commend unto you, comrades and friends, the verse that brought comfort and life to General Howard, 'The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin.'"

After several more songs and prayer, the soldiers pressed forward to clasp again the hand of their beloved commander and friend.

H. B. H.

UNIVERSAL WEEK OF PRAYER.

January 7-14, 1894.

The invitation for the universal week of prayer, observed during the early days of January, has been issued by the council of the Evangelical Alliance. The document, as usual, bears the signatures of representatives of branches of the Alliance throughout the whole world. It has now been definitely arranged that the general outline of topics shall remain the same for each day of the week, the details only being rearranged from year to year.

The programme covers a great variety of subjects, including prayers for the Church Universal, for Nations and their Rulers, for Foreign Missions, for Home Missions and the Jews, and for Families and Schools. Copies of the programme, and all other information regarding the observance of the Universal Week of Prayer, may be obtained of the secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

[1260]

WORK IN BARCELONA.

In September we re-opened the day and evening school after the summer holidays. The number of scholars increases, and almost every week one or more names are added to the list, which, for the day school alone, numbers eighty. I am daily more convinced of the usefulness of school work, especially in a country like Spain. It is the one effectual way to reach the mothers, who are as a rule the most difficult to win, on account of the ignorance and superstition in which they are kept by the priests. A very small proportion can read, and are therefore, as they often say themselves, "as ignorant as animals." The hymns, Scriptures, and Gospel instruction acquired by the little ones at school, are all repeated at home, and God alone knows what may be the blessed results of the seed thus scattered.

At the beginning of last month the annual fair and feast in honour of the "Virgin del Remedio"—the Virgin of the Remedy—were held here. We had a visit for the occasion of a blind man from a neighbouring town. He has a fine voice, and sings the hymns with guitar accompaniment. The second day of the feast we went with him to a spot near the chapel of the Virgin, to which thousands of persons from neighbouring towns and villages were bearing wax candles, from a foot to a yard and a-half long, as offerings to the image. Among these people we carried the true light, by distributing Scriptures and singing the Gospel. In the evening the blind man sang at our public meeting, and read and explained a portion of the Gospel of John. The people were very attentive, and much surprised by the sight, to them novel, of a blind man reading with his fingers! This poor man earns his living at present by playing and singing from door to door. Though he sings only hymns and moral songs, it seems to us a great pity that his talents should not be put to better use. He has a very earnest, winning manner, and an evident gift for preaching as well as singing the Gospel. Could some Christian friend be found willing to support him, he might be usefully employed to circulate the Scriptures.

Recently we have had opportunities of distributing the Word among civil guards quartered here from other towns, on the occasion of a strike among the poor, hard-worked, badly-paid factory people. The resident chief of the force sent one of his men to our house with a request that we would favour him also with a New Testament like those given to his men a few days before. Last week we distributed portions to a company of invalid soldiers stationed here. They have left now, some, perhaps, for the war in Africa.

For my school I should value some coloured pictures, Scripture, natural history, and other suitable subjects, to brighten the walls and interest my pupils. Small scraps and pictures are also always acceptable as rewards. Gifts of dolls, work-boxes, needle-cases, etc., for the girls, and balls, tops, pocket-knives, etc., for the boys for our Christmas tree, may be sent to my brother, Mr. George Lawrence, Electrician, Trinity Chambers, Trinity-street, Cardiff, who will forward them to Barcelona. All other help for the Lord's work in our hands will be gratefully received by Mr. W. Greene, 3, Endsleigh-gardens, London, N.W.

Elizabeth Lawrence.

Paseo del Remedio, 23, Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The varied operations of this Mission are being carried on with vigour and success, although it will at once be evident that the great depression of trade has increased the difficulties of the work in a two-fold degree; first, by making it harder than ever to find employment for repentant men and boys, and, second, by limiting the funds necessary for such work. Yet so far, although sorely straitened at times, Mr. Wheatley has maintained the operations in full efficiency. He began, it will be remembered, years ago at the prison gate, and still he has his experienced helpers each morning at the gates of the three metropolitan prisons, watching for those discharged, and persuading them to accept a chance of going straight. Besides this, however, he himself, having gained the confidence of the authorities, is permitted to visit the prisoners in gaol.

During the past year about 27,054 have been released from the London prisons (Holloway, Pentonville, and Wandsworth), and out of this number 19,970 have accepted the free breakfast, and after the workers have read and expounded God's Word to them 6119 have been persuaded to sign the temperance pledge. 5659 of these men have been helped in various ways: Sent abroad, 45; sent to sea, 12; restored to friends, 171; assisted with money, food, tools, and by work being found them, 5431. To assist one man to make a fresh start in life means much to himself, much often to his wife and children, and much always to the community at large. To assist 5659 in one year in a similar manner is evidently a matter of considerable importance to all concerned.

Another class benefited are men released from convict prisons, after undergoing terms of penal servitude. During the twelve months ended September 30, 1893, 300 such men were received and helped as each needed.

Moreover, in the four Homes belonging to the Mission, 511 boys have been received this year, and the vast majority of these are now doing well. The work among the lads has indeed been singularly fruitful in good results.

But in addition to the work carried on so happily among prisoners and the criminal classes, St. Giles' Christian Mission has large operations in St. Giles and among the poor generally. The distress prevailing in the district is very serious, and the cases discovered day by day are of the saddest description. By way of example let us give the following letter lately received:—

"Sir,—Could you kindly give me a little assistance? I have five children, and we are almost starving. My husband has nothing to do, in fact, he is in consumption, and is most always laid up. Oh, sir, we are parting with our little home bit by bit for bread, and expect the brokers in for the rent. Oh, what shall I do then? If you would help me just a little how I would thank you. I am ashamed to beg, but if you only knew what it was to be hungry. We have gone Sunday after Sunday with nothing but a little dry bread, but we have not even that now. Oh, sir, do believe me, I am getting almost afraid of myself. Please don't refuse; God will repay you if I cannot, for He knows all my troubles. C. S."

Inquiry was made into this case, and it was found that the writer was a very respectable woman, who had till now never stooped to make her home sorrows known. Some help was at once accorded. Alas! many similar cases might be cited. Here is one:—A man in great distress had, in his extremity, attempted his life. He was duly charged, but, Mr. Wheatley promising to befriend him, he was handed over to the care of the Mission. By trade he is a painter on glass, and he had with him two excellent specimens of his handiwork. But trade had been so slack that he was in need of money to buy material. "What would put you right?" asked Mr. Wheatley. The man hesitated for a moment, as if in fear of asking too much; then he mentioned the modest sum of seven shillings, which, he said, would enable him to get all he required. His request was granted, and he went away rejoicing.

We regret to hear that a Mission which can show such genuine results is in very great need of help. Mr. Wheatley himself, out of his business savings in the past, has advanced a considerable sum to prevent the work suffering. This ought to be repaid at once, and sufficient should surely be forthcoming to carry on vigorously a work which is of the utmost importance alike to the Church and to the nation. His address is 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

JEWS AND THE SECOND ADVENT.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week an influential conference was held in Hope Hall, Liverpool, for the purpose of prayerfully considering the prophetical Scriptures concerning the Lord's second coming and the restoration of the Jews to their own land. Three meetings were held each day, and, on the whole, the attendance showed a deep interest in these subjects.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided over the opening meeting on Tuesday morning, and gave a running commentary on Zephaniah iii. Referring particularly to verse 9, "For then will I turn to the people a pure language that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent," he said it might be an indication of the restoration to this world of a pure language, and the redressing of the great calamity which came upon the world at Babel in the confusion of tongues. This confusion of tongues had proved a very great hindrance to international amity, and to the spread of the Gospel.

Rev. S. Schor, formerly of Jerusalem, and now working in Liverpool as an agent of the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews, gave a valuable address on the present condition of Palestine, which we hope to report at some length in an early issue.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger gave a very lucid explanation of several passages of prophetic Scripture. He said that in two years from the present time they might expect certain very important changes with regard to the ownership of Jerusalem. The Jews had gone on for centuries without having a copy of the New Testament in their own language, but less than ten years ago the New Testament was translated by a Christian Jew. Through this translation a work had been done amongst the Jews which had never been done before. Up to the present moment more than a quarter of a million copies had been distributed. These copies had been carried into Russia free of duty, notwithstanding the rigid censorship. Then there was the great movement of Jews to Argentina. This avowedly was to become a nursery for their return to Palestine. The way in which railways are being laid in Palestine is another sign of the times which those who studied the prophetical Scriptures alone could understand in all its significance.

The speakers at the afternoon meeting were Dr. McKilliam and Rev. A. Wilkes, both of whom dealt very profoundly with prophecies concerning the second coming of Christ and the return of the Jews to their own land.

Dr. McKilliam presided over the evening meeting, which was well attended; Dr. Anderson spoke on the Anti-Christ, and Pastor Fuller Gooch followed on the restoration of the Jews.

Pastor Fuller Gooch opened the convention on Wednesday morning by a fervid address based on Luke xii. 49, "I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?" He said that to-day Christ was rejected by the world just as He was in the days of his incarnation. He was only accepted and adored by the few. Yet many Christians were looking at things quite triumphantly, almost jubilantly, even in connection with the Church of Christ, instead of walking in lowliness with the Lord God.

Dr. Neatby addressed the conference on the purpose of God with regard to his beloved Church.

The afternoon meeting was addressed by Mr. R. C. Morgan and Dr. Bullinger. The evening meeting was memorable for two thrilling, heart-stirring addresses by the Rev. A. Wilkes and Dr. Anderson, the former dealing with the parable of the wheat and the tares, the latter with a summary of the Book of the Revelation.

Mr. Sims opened the conference on Thursday morning, and Mr. Wilkes spoke in an allegory of the time when Christ would come back and redeem his Bride. Mr. Carr presided in the afternoon, and addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Dr. Neatby, and Dr. Anderson.

At the evening meeting Mr. Wilkes presided, and announced that it had been decided to hold from eight to ten conferences similar to the present in the large towns and cities of the United Kingdom.

Rev. David Baron gave a very interesting account of his work amongst the Jews in various parts of the world, and Mr. Millard dealt at length with the results of the missionary journey which Rev. Mr. Grubb's party made to Ceylon, Australia, New Zealand, and other parts of the world. Dr. Bullinger concluded the meeting with another enlightened address on prophetical teaching.

Friday, the last day of the conference, was devoted to reports of the Lord's work in various parts of the world. All the reports were full of deep interest and encouragement. Rev. A. Wilkes presided over all three meetings.

In the morning Mr. Baron and Mr. Schor gave a further account of their work among Jews: Dr. Bullinger spoke on work in Brittany; Mr. Jackson on Ceylon and New Zealand. In the afternoon Mr. Hudson Taylor gave a very encouraging report of his work in connection with the China Inland Mission, and Mr. Wilson represented the Tamil Mission. Mr. Millard again spoke on the missionary journey previously referred to, and Rev. E. Clarke dealt with the Spezia Mission, of which he had been in charge for twenty-seven years. Mr. Fanstone spoke briefly on his work for the Lord in Brazil.

The closing meeting was largely attended. Mr. Brandreth spoke of work amongst Jews in Liverpool, and Colonel Finch-White dealt with missions in France. Mr. Arnot gave an account of his twelve years' work in Africa, and Miss Wilkes thrilled every heart by her description of her work amongst the deep-sea fishermen in the North Sea. A memorable conference was brought to a close by brief addresses on practical holiness by Rev. A. Wilkes and Colonel Finch-White.

IN THE STORM.

Dear Sir,—You published a brief letter from Mr. Glenny, written on board the P. and O. steamer Thames, after he had left the river on his way to Morocco with a party of missionaries. The next day, as they were entering the Bay of Biscay, there commenced the terrific gale that strewed our shores with wrecks. For about thirty-six hours they were exposed to the full fury of the storm, and were in the greatest danger. The hatches were stove in, and tons of water entered the lower decks; boats were carried away or damaged, while heavy seas swept the decks continually.

Throughout this trying ordeal, most of the passengers being prostrate with sickness, they could but commend themselves to the loving care of God. Mr. Glenny writes that the verse which seemed to be most impressed upon his mind at this time was, "Neither . . . depth . . . can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." The vessel ultimately reached Gibraltar about fifty hours overdue. I am sure our many friends will unite with us in thanksgiving to God for his preserving care.—Sincerely yours,

Wm. T. Float, Assist. Sec.

21, Linton-road, Barking, Essex.

A TYPHOON IN JAPAN.

Dear Sir,—In a private letter from my daughter to-day, I have details of the terrible floods at Matsingi, Japan, by which Rev. Barclay Buxton's mission district has been visited. A typhoon followed days of pouring rain, flooding the town of Matsingi and the villages around. My child and other lady workers were rescued by Mr. Buxton, and had to walk from their house to his, some two and a quarter miles, often up to the waist, or nearly so, in water.

The poor people are in great distress; their goods and food have been swept away, and they are all but starving. Mr. Buxton and the Christians are doing all they can, but their means are limited, and the distress great.

If any of your readers, either through you or me, like to aid, I shall be glad promptly to forward any amount sent at this time of distress. Maybe it is a call from God, which will result in much impression being made in the Gospel work, if we do our part to show Christian sympathy with their sorrow. Prompt aid is required.—Sincerely yours,

Robert Wilson.

Broughton Grange, Cockermouth, Dec. 2.

STATISTICS INDISPUTABLY PROVE (says a writer in The Century) that the Christian Churches (in America) are increasing proportionately faster than ever before, and those Churches—notably the Methodist and Baptist—which insist on a more vital experience and a more prominent confession are the ones making the largest and most rapid increase.

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

The Welcome Home.—Gifts of woollen articles, &c., for the sailors' Christmas tree; also help for suppers to hungry seamen.—Miss Child, 173, Ratcliff-highway, E.

Homes for Hebrew Christians.—The committee ask special help at this season for the aged and afflicted believing Jews in the Homes.—A. Bernstein, 79, King Edward-road, South Hackney.

Christian Community.—For work among the homeless poor—night shelters, free meals, homes, and nine mission halls; help much needed.—James Atkinson, 28, Enfield-road, Kingsland, N.

Homes for Aged Christian Blind.—Mr. and Mrs. Bright plead for their eighty-two inmates, mostly very aged and all blind, in order to give them a little extra cheer at Christmas.—77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N.

Ashley Mission Hall, Bethnal Green.—For help to assist the poor and aged at Christmas. The Mission is open every night all the year round for the very poorest children and adults.—T. Miller, 104, Well-street, N.E.

Homes for Working Girls.—The committee find themselves in need of generous and liberal aid. Fully £2000 is required to cover the accounts by the end of the month.—Mr. John Shrimpton, 3, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W.

Gifford Hall Mission for Work Among the Poor.—There is now a weekly distribution of soup, and it is desired to supply our poor with a substantial Christmas dinner and other forms of relief.—B. Hityer, 1, Wood-lane, Highgate, N.

Children's Tabernacle, 274, Waterloo-road, S.E.—The workers connected with this Mission are anxious to relieve the distress in the neighbourhood as well as minister to their spiritual needs. Tracts, clothing, food, and other help will be welcome.—A. Watson, Superintendent.

John-street Chapel, W.C.—For help to give the poor Christmas dinners. The poverty of the district becomes worse day by day, and thus the greater need of the generous help of our friends. The smallest donation will be gratefully received by G. E. Shephard, Mountfort Lodge, Barnsbury, N.

Sailors' Rest, Naples.—Mr. Stephen Burrows, who is now returning to his post, pleads for help for the Rest at Naples. £100 a year is needed for rent and taxes. Ten persons are employed to work at ten stations, and the income of the society does not exceed £300 a year. At least £400 a year is required, and with this increase a much-needed larger Rest at Catania could be provided.—Address 7, Vico 2nd del Piliero, Naples.

A PLEA FOR NURSES.

In answer to a letter in The Christian of November 9 from "A District Nurse," we are informed that the idea of a Provident Fund is no new one to the Y.W.C.A. It has been the object of much thoughtful consideration. But it is a subject fraught with difficulties, and hitherto these have proved insurmountable.

There is a home for nurses in connection with the Y.W.C.A., at 25, Norfolk-terrace, London, W., besides very many seaside and convalescent homes, which charge so low a price that few are self-supporting. Any who would like to have particulars of the Nurses' Union of the Y.W.C.A. should apply to the hon. sec., Miss Dashwood, 39, Bryanston-square, London.

UNION HALL MISSION.

A three weeks' continuous Mission has been concluded at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road. Efforts were made to reach the poor in the neighbourhood with the Gospel. Fairly good numbers came out night by night, and God has blessed some souls, while others have been restored to the joy of his salvation.

We are in great need of means to enable us to continue our evangelistic work in four halls and districts. We have also opened a fund in order to render help to the poor in their present distress and need during the severe weather. Robert Bilke.

Abergeldie, 5, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

EMIGRATION.—A room at the Imperial Institute S.W., has been allotted as an office to the United British Women's Emigration Association. Young women who inquire about the colonies should be referred to Miss Lefroy, the secretary, by letter, or personally between the hours of ten and four, a party of domestic servants, ages eighteen to forty, being selected by the Association to go out in January. Free passages; only expense £1 for kit.

[1261]

Letters to the Editor.

YOUNG MEN AND MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—Whilst heartily endorsing your note on page 7 of The Christian for November 16, I would like to utter a warning. Let young men be sure that God has called them before they leave their employment to go to the mission field, or they may find, as I have found, that a situation once left is not easy to regain.

For eleven months I have been without regular work, because I thought proper to go unsent. God may yet want me to go to the work, and I am willing to sacrifice all for Him; but the lesson has been understood and taken to heart, viz., be sure that Christ treads the path in front of you.—Yours sincerely,

A. J. W.

New Wortley, Leeds.

Y.M.C.A. AND THE CHURCHES.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to an article on the above subject, by a correspondent in a late issue of your valuable paper. He says, speaking of the discussion at Cork on the relation of the Y.M.C.A. to the Churches, "Several ministers present said bitter things against the Y.M.C.A.," etc. I was present at the interesting discussion, and did not hear a single bitter word spoken by any minister present. Anything approaching bitterness came from a delegate, an Association secretary, who, in the afternoon session, when according to your correspondent, "the delegates had their innings," said the ministers were influenced by jealousy in the attitude they had taken up.—Yours truly,

A Cork Minister.

TELL THEM HOW TO BE SAVED.

Dear Sir,—I was pleased to notice that in your "Notes and Comments" you draw attention to the all-important question, "What must I do to be saved?" It is deeply lamentable that this question is regarded slightly and indifferently in these days, and by many of the very men whose duty it is to answer such questions. If, as you say (and it is too true), the bulk of congregations are the unconverted masses, surely this question should have the preference to all others, which, when discussed, there is scarcely any enlightenment thrown upon them. The masses do not go to hear this, that, or the other doctrine discussed, but to hear a soul-satisfying reply to the throbbing question which is at their hearts; and if they do not get it they turn away sorrowfully, and perhaps sink into deeper degradation than before. Their question has not been answered!

The question which ministers of heaven-saving evangel might well ask themselves is, "What is our duty as regards this question?"—Sincerely yours,

Arthur E. Washbourne.

THE INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY.

Dear Sir,—I am sure many who, like myself, believe that very many of the outstanding events of pre-Christian and Apocalyptic prophecy are yet to be definitely and finally fulfilled, have read with interest the papers which have been appearing in The Christian, by the late Sir Stevenson Blackwood.

It has been often objected by those who deprecate a close study of prophecy, that interpretations are so divergent. No doubt to the superficial observer this is so, but to those who examine more closely, it is, I trust, now sufficiently evident that these interpretations are less widely different than would appear. "Coming events cast their shadows before," and just as when the sun is westering we see the long dark shadows behind us, so can we from the stand-point of these latter days trace the long dark shadow of the coming Antichrist stretching spectre-like across the ages, interwoven in the ecclesiastical and national history of Christendom since the time of our Lord.

So, too, with the judgments and vials of the wrath of God, which the early Church and its representatives in succeeding centuries are assured in the Word shall be poured forth upon a world in revolt against God and his Christ with the message of grace and mercy. The dark shadows of these events of sudden, overwhelming character, and evidently occurring in rapid and alarming succession in a "day of judgment," would appear also to lie athwart the intervening centuries, and are well traced out for us in the papers referred to.

None the less, however, must we continue to recognise that every definite prediction of the Word of God must also have its definite and final fulfilment clearly apparent to a waiting Church or world. In their search for truth some seem to confine their scrutiny to the present dispensation, and such are thus enabled with much labour and research to trace out for us the shadows of each concrete event of the future, while others, fixing their eyes on a time to come, and examining it closely, as mirrored in the glass of the Word, are enabled to see, often with startling clearness, each outstanding event of that time which shall yet be the final fulfilment of the prophecy.

The study of the prophetic Word is a much-needed source of strength and comfort to the Christian pilgrim, and we trust that, as hindrances and discouragements to the study are cleared away, it will cease to be confined to the few and become the common heritage of every earnest student of the Word of God.

Edinburgh. John Elliot.

RAILWAYS AND SABBATH-BREAKING.

Sir,—I take the liberty of drawing attention to the increasing desecration of the Sabbath by railway companies. It is unnecessary to refer to the extent of the passenger traffic, as the public is sufficiently enlightened on the subject; but, possibly, there are many persons who are not aware that a large quantity of goods passes over the lines on Sundays. This state of things is far-reaching in its consequences, and tends to demoralise society; for it is reasonable to expect that many individuals follow the example set them by railway companies, and disregard the Sabbath. If one of the Commandments is set aside, the fate of the remaining nine is doubtful.

England is, owing to several causes, suffering severely at present from a financial point of view. As we cannot consider such affliction a thing of chance, we must accept it as a visitation from God, sent as a punishment for national sins. We must admit that Sabbath desecration is an important national sin. The Jewish nation was severely punished for violating the Divine commands relative to the observance of the Sabbath, and if we commit similar offence, can we expect to escape punishment? I am satisfied that the Christian shareholders have sufficient power to put a stop to the Sabbath desecration by the railway companies; but they must organise and be active, as they cannot expect to accomplish anything while they remain passive and disunited.

R. J. Horneck.

Wexford, Ireland.

RUSSIA AND THE JEWS.

Sir,—I have not seen the persecution of the Jews in Russia dwelt upon as I think it should be, as a sign that we are in the last times. Surely Russia is a north country, and quite two-thirds of the existing Jews inhabit it. No less than six times in the Word of God is this alluded to, and surely what He repeats in this striking manner should engage our attention.

In Jer. iii. 12, we read:—"Go and proclaim these words toward the north, return thou backsliding Israel." In verse 18:—"They shall come together out of the land of the north." In Jer. xvi. 15:—"Therefore behold the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all lands whither He had driven them, and I will bring them again to their own land." The same language is repeated in Jer. xxiii. 8, where it is coupled with the promise that a King shall reign and prosper—Judah shall be saved and Israel shall dwell safely. Again, in Jer. xxxi. 8:—"Behold I will bring them again from the north country, and gather them from all the coasts of the earth." Then in Zech. ii. 6:—"Flee from the land of the north." Note in verse 8:—"He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye."—Yours truly, Wycombe. Thos. Wheeler.

MR. W. R. LANE'S MISSIONS.

Mr. W. R. Lane has recently conducted a mission to young men under the auspices of Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., commencing November 18, the last meeting being held on Sunday, the 26th. Mr. George Williams gave a reception to young men on the evening of the 20th, which was well attended by many of those engaged in neighbouring business houses. Mr. Lane's forcible addresses and earnest appeals to the unconverted have not been without result, and the workers and friends of Stafford Rooms have been much cheered by signs of Divine blessing.

Last week the evangelist conducted a week's mission at College Park, N.W., which has proved a time of great blessing and solid success. It is not only that Christians have been quickened and edified, but a large number have been led to accept Christ as their Saviour. On different evenings of the week more than forty have remained for conversation in the vestry, and about the same number have given themselves to Christ. The work has been chiefly among young people, members of the Bible classes, and old members of the Boys' Brigade, but there are not a few older people also rejoicing in the Lord. This week Mr. Lane is holding special services in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood.

POST CARDS.

IRELAND.

On Sunday, November 26, three excellent open-air services were held in Cork. The crowd was of course somewhat lively, but on the whole paid very fair attention to the addresses delivered. G. W.

JERUSALEM.

Jerusalem is at present very still; the poor Jews are not allowed to enter the land. Even native Jews, if they leave Palestine, are not readmitted. The other day the wife of the Chief Rabbi had the greatest difficulty in landing in Jaffa No passport is given to any Jew. It would be a charity to make it known, so that poor Jews may not start for Jerusalem, only to find a landing is denied them at Jaffa.

D. C. J.

CAPE COLONY.

On last Saturday of October we had the pleasure of admitting ninety-six people to the fellowship of the Church. About 230 people were present at the Lord's Table in the afternoon. On Saturday, October 3, we observed the Lord's Supper at Engqueleni, when thirty-four people were present. Three young people were admitted to the Church on that occasion. We hope to see many more giving themselves to the Lord there. We hope to be able to appoint four evangelists for work in our large district soon.

A. Welsh.

Emgwali, Dohne, Cape Colony.

JAPAN.

Buddhism is very strong here. I recently dedicated a church. The Buddhists were angry that a foreigner should have anything to do with a Japanese church, so came in the evening en masse to break up the service. They began by asking puzzling questions, shouting, etc. Being unable to gain their point in this way, they rose, at a given signal, smashed the lamps, scattered the oil upon the worshippers, smashed the doors and windows, and prevented the continuance of the meeting. The police were warned, and were on hand the next night, and the meeting was carried through, though often interrupted.

(Rev.) David Spencer.

Nagoya, Japan.

REV. B. FAY MILLS.

An evangelistic campaign, lasting sixteen days, has been held in Binghampton (N.Y.). Twenty churches united in the movement, and the awakening has been of greater magnitude than any like effort ever before attempted there. The services were held in a temporary structure erected for the occasion, and seating about 4000 people. One Tuesday all places of business were closed from 10 a.m. to 12 noon, and from 3 to 5 p.m., and meetings were held all day long, opening with a vast number of neighbourhood meetings at 8 o'clock in every part of the city. The Mayor issued a proclamation setting aside the day as one of special religious consideration. On one Sunday evening, when Mr. Mills was to preach to men only, the electric railway company abandoned all car service during the hours of the meeting, and the conductors and motormen occupied seats in the body of the house, which was reserved for them.

Mr. Mills's preaching has been very earnest, and hearts have been mightily moved. Spiritual life has been wonderfully quickened, and many who had grown hard have been led to yield to the straightforward presentation of the truth. The singing of Mr. Hillis has not been the least effective part of the campaign. So much has been done that it is beyond the power of man to estimate results—eternity alone can reveal all that the sixteen days has meant to Binghampton. Mr. Mills has now gone to Scranton, Pa.

House of Rest, St. John's Wood.

The monthly meeting at the House of Rest, Finchley-road, on Friday last, was addressed by Rev. Gosset-Tanner, vicar of Emmanuel Church, Maida-hill. His theme was "The Faith of Gideon," and from the Scripture narrative he drew many practical lessons which the subject suggested. At the intermediate meeting, Miss Mason spoke on the necessity of the personal knowledge of the Saviour, and of an organic union between Him and every Christian soul.

In the evening the conference on "The Present Need of the Churches" was continued, under the presidency of Mr. Reader Harris. Each speaker was decided in his certainty that this need was the filling of the Holy Ghost. The Spirit, it was emphasised, has been poured out, and what was required was human channels, which might be the means of communication to a dying world.

THE Y.M.C.A.

There are twenty-one associations in Belgium, with 756 members.

Mr. R. Henderson Smith has been visiting the Associations in Inverness and the North.

Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness is to conduct meetings for the Dublin Y.M.C.A. from 19th to 23rd January.

The evangelistic services carried on by Y.M.C.A. men in Howth, Dublin, will, it is believed, result in much blessing.

Mr. Wm. Forbes conducted evangelistic services, under the auspices of the Falkirk Y.M.C.A., from Nov. 19 to Dec. 3, inclusive. The meetings have proved a means of stimulus to many.

The Peckham Association held a good annual meeting on Thursday evening, General Phayre in the chair. Mr. W. Hind Smith was among the speakers. A very encouraging report was presented.

The Coldstream Association, which has for some years been carrying on work among the young men of the town and district, has issued an appeal to other branches to assist them in raising funds for the erection of a suitable building.

On Friday evening last, Mr. W. Fry, jun., lately returned from a trip to the United States, Canada, and the World's Fair, Chicago, gave at the Dublin Y.M.C.A., an interesting account of the work carried on by Mr. Moody, and his Irish Brigade of twenty-five young Irishmen lately sent out from Dublin.

The annual conversazione of the White Memorial branch, Glasgow, was lately held. The secretary reported a membership of sixty-eight, an increase of eighteen over last year. Interesting addresses were delivered by the chairman, Miss West Watson, Dr. J. G. Andrew, and several members of the branch.

The number of branches in Denmark is 132, of which there are seven in Copenhagen. The principal branch was founded in 1878. It is reported that two branches have only three members each. The faith and courage of these few to keep together is under trial, but large results have often had small beginnings.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., Paris, celebrated its silver anniversary last week in one of the McAll Mission Halls. The gathering was the best for many years. Rev. H. E. Noyes, D.D., who took the chair, spoke highly of the work the Association was doing, as did the other speakers. An appeal was made to enable the Association to remove to larger and more conspicuous premises.

The Aberdeen Association has for a long time endeavoured to lay hold of the lads. The secretary has for the past nineteen years conducted a boys' meeting in the institute every Friday evening. The syllabus for the ensuing session has just been printed. The boys take a great interest in the meeting, and contribute largely to the programme. The average attendance is about fifty. Not a few present members and several in the foreign field made their first acquaintance with the Association at the boys' meeting.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Melbourne Y.W.C.A. has had good missionary meetings lately, addressed by Mr. Cheok Hong Cheong, and others, amongst them, Miss H. Brown, going out to China in connection with the C.M.S.

Denmark is said to have 149 Y.W.C.A.'s, the oldest dating from 1880. The Copenhagen branch has 400 members. Two other branches have over 100 each, while the smallest one is said to have five members.

A meeting, held in the lecture-hall of Ferme-park Chapel, has inaugurated a branch for Crouch End. The Hon. Emily Kinnaird explained the work of the Association, and addresses were also delivered by Revs. E. Griffith Jones, H. Laurence, and Thomas Orr.

A large gathering of the members of the Putney Y.W.C.A. met on Thursday at the opening of the new premises, The Crescent, 129, Upper Richmond-road. Lord Kinnaird presided, and Revs. G. M. Claris, Donald Matheson, and S. H. Wilkinson, and Miss Poulton each gave addresses. A "Sale of Work" to aid the funds will be held December 13 and 14.

The last annual report of the London Y.W.C.A. furnishes ample evidence of the good work done. A list is given of more than 140 branches in London alone, and of these about 40 are institutes and homes. The members number over 14,000. Physical recreation is provided for at two gymnasia, and by classes for drill at other institutes. Successful classes have been held in cookery and dressmaking. A park mission, restaurant, and public-house visitation, employment agencies, savings bank and benefit clubs, convalescent, sick-aid, and holiday fund, emigration, circulating libraries, etc., are among the departments. The "Factory Helpers' Union" and the "Travellers' Aid Society" are under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A. An interesting chapter of the report entitled "Members in Conference" gives extracts from papers read by the members, showing how highly the advantages of the Association are valued. Prospectuses may be had from 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A Central Union is about to be formed in Dublin and district.

The Luddendenfoot (Manchester) C.E.S. commenced twelve months ago with seventeen members: the present number is 142.

Three members of the Widnes Baptist Society have openly confessed Christ in baptism, and there are four more candidates for baptism.

There are now twenty-five societies in the Chester and District Union, with an aggregate membership of 1,186. Last year there were but twelve societies.

Some members and friends of the Y.P.S.C.E. of Werter-road, Putney, have been out singing in the neighbourhood during the past week, collecting money in aid of colliers' wives and children.

That the Sheffield C.E. Union is somewhat on the aggressive is evident from the fact that five new societies have been formed since the last quarterly meeting. There are now thirteen societies in the Union.

The first meeting in connection with the Winchester C.E.S. was held on Monday week. Rev. C. E. Dickinson took the chair, and explained the two pledges, viz. the associate and active members. The number present was between 50 and 60, out of which some 20 or 30 joined the new society.

At Tytherton, Wilts, a C.E. Society, started early in the year with but a few members, has grown and extended. A little while ago a special mission was held in the Moravian Chapel in the village, in which the endeavourers actively co-operated. The individual members are earnestly witnessing for Christ, and God is blessing their efforts.

Each member of the Henley-on-Thames Congregational Y.P.S.C.E. have promised to invite two of the poorest inhabitants of the town to a tea and entertainment to be given on December 28. By this means about 120 poor people will be enabled to enjoy a pleasant evening. Might not some other societies adopt this plan, and thus brighten the lives of a few of their poor older brethren at Christmas time?

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A hundred destitute Edinburgh children will be fed during the winter months by the House of Refuge.

A four days' bazaar in St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow, in aid of the Broomhill Home for Incurables, realised a grand total of £10,929 10s. 4d.

The death of Sir Archibald Orr-Ewing removes a well-known figure from the political, social, and industrial life of the West of Scotland. Sir Archibald was very generous in the stewardship of his great wealth.

At the annual meeting of the B.W.T.A. in Edinburgh last week, a year of progress was reported. An appeal was made by Mrs. Blaikie for more helpers to share in carrying out Lady Henry Somerset's forward policy.

During 1884, sermons by representative Free Churchmen will appear in The Free Church of Scotland Monthly, edited by Dr. Norman L. Walker. The sermon in January will be by Dr. Walter Smith, this year's Moderator.

Writing to The Glasgow Mail, Mr. R. H. Hunter says the recent storms have thrown many orphans on the care of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland. Additions will soon be made to the 350 children already provided for.

A recent report of the Royal Commission on Labour tells of much material and moral improvement in the condition of farm servants in Northern Counties of Scotland. The "bothy" system of lodging is strongly condemned.

One of the most useful Missionary associations in Scotland, the Scottish Coast Mission, held its annual meeting last week in Edinburgh. Much good has attended the labours of the missionaries among the seamen in the east-coast towns.

The Edinburgh Medical Mission had its annual meeting last week. At a great public demonstration in the Synod Hall, telling addresses were given in support of medical missions by Dr. Walter Smith, Mrs. Bishop, Prof. A. G. Smith, Dr. Johnston and others.

The Canal Boatmen's Friend Society of Scotland is now in active operation. The building in Glasgow is open daily for the use of canal boatmen and the residents in the neighbourhood. Religious services are held in the hall on Sunday, and a band of hope, savings bank, and sewing class are conducted on other evenings during the week.

Mr. William Quarrier has again the happiness of sounding a note of praise. Some friends in the East of Scotland have guaranteed the £3000 needed to erect one of two proposed homes for consumptives. Two other friends have given £1000 which will pay for erecting engine, washing-house, and other offices connected with the consumptive homes.

The recently formed Scottish Church Society has been distinguishing itself at a conference by advocating prayers for the dead; its members are also anxious for "the restoration of sacramental worship," whatever that may mean. This sacerdotal society will not improve the stability of the Church of Scotland as a state institution.

In an interview last week with a Scottish Leader representative, Mr. H. M. Stanley expressed a deep sense of the loss that African affairs will sustain by the death of Mr. A. L. Bruce. Mr. Stanley spoke in the highest terms of the good the African missions are doing. The famous traveller must improve his scriptural knowledge; he attributes to Paul a sentiment to be found in Ecclesiastes!

Writing to The Scotsman of the death of Mr. A. L. Bruce, Mr. Goschen, M.P., says:—"He was a most ardent champion of the civilising and lofty duties which he conceived to be a part of the traditions of his country, and no man threw himself with more ardour into the missionary work in East and Central Africa, which, in his view, was so indelibly connected with the name of his father-in-law, Dr. Livingstone."

Much interest, says The Free Church Monthly, seems to have been taken in Aberdeen in the opening of what are called "East End Recreation Rooms." These are in the basement of the Free New North Church, and owe their existence to Mr. Garvie, a member of that church. It is proposed to make the rooms a place of resort for the people of the district, with useful attractions of various sorts.

A valedictory meeting in connection with the departure of Alfred Hogg, M.A., M.B., C.M. (Aberdeen University) to Wen-chow, China, for the purpose of organising a Medical Mission—under the auspices of the United Methodist Free Churches—was held in the Congregational Church, Laurencekirk, on Wednesday evening, November 29. Dr. Hogg gave an able and clear address on the origin and development of Christian Missions, which was listened to with great attention. Dr. Hogg is a native of Laurencekirk, and has had a successful career as a student.

At the annual meeting of the Edinburgh Sabbath Morning Fellowship Union, held last week, a conference took place on "Aggressive Christian Work." Mr. Archibald Kennedy stated that, according to the last census returns, there were 41,000 young men in Edinburgh between the ages of fifteen and thirty-five. Of these, only about 2400 are members of the Fellowship Association in the Union. It was resolved to begin Sabbath evening evangelistic meetings in certain districts of the city, specially with the view of reaching the non-churchgoing young men and young women.

In The Reaper for December Mr. Anderson reports progress at the Bible Training Institute. "Several missions and a number of regular and occasional meetings have been held in different parts of the city, and the Lord has graciously given us much blessing. We have now conducted services in connection with churches of all the leading denominations—E.C., F.C., and U.P., Congregational, Baptist, E.U., and Wesleyan—and in various mission halls, as well as to policemen, postmen, sailors, &c. We have utilised the available capacity of our temporary premises to the utmost extent—indeed we are overcrowded. But even with this we have not been able to admit all who have applied."

IRISH NOTES.

Sunday week was observed as Temperance Sunday by nearly all the Methodist churches in Ireland.

Rev. William Gibson, of Paris, has been addressing a series of meetings in Dublin and Belfast, on behalf of Methodist missions in Paris.

A convention for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in the Methodist church, Clones; the meetings were very helpful and well-attended.

The George's Hall City Mission in Dublin is being well organised; most successful meetings are held. Rev. W. Crawford is the superintendent.

The Edgar Homes, Belfast, which aim at the elevation of fallen women, sheltered 118 during the past twelve months, and had a prosperous, useful year.

The Archbishop of Dublin has issued a final appeal for £1600 to clear off the debt on the recently-erected Protestant church in Madrid, and has offered £100 towards the amount.

Evangelistic services have been held by Mr. John Anderson, of Glasgow, in Bethany Presbyterian Church, Belfast, and by Rev. John Hoffe, rector of Kilbride, Arklow, at Florencecourt and the neighbourhood.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

One of the most interesting lectures of the term was delivered last week by Mr. A. C. Madan on the work of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, wherein he described the various branches of the work at Zanzibar.

Dr. George Matheson, of Edinburgh, preached at Mansfield on Sunday to a large and very representative congregation, many of whom took the opportunity of hearing one from whose books they have derived such stimulus. The sermon had all the charm of suggestiveness with which his readers are so well acquainted.

On Thursday, November 30, Bishop Selwyn gave an account in the hall of Merton of the work in Melanesia, so closely associated with the names of his father and himself. A novel and noteworthy point of this and similar addresses this term to University men was the use of the magic lantern, which proved a most valuable adjunct.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Band of Hope Union was held last Wednesday, when Mrs. Wynford Phillips, of London, and Mr. Henry Hibbert, of Bradford, gave able and stirring addresses. The meeting was a large and enthusiastic one, and, together with the recent equally large meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society, indicates a very strong and resolute temperance contingent in Oxford.

The University sermon last week was preached by the Dean of Gloucester (Dr. Spence, formerly Vicar of St. Pancras), in which he expressed his surprise and deep regret at some recent works of Oxford scholars on Old Testament criticism, which he feared would not only instil doubt into the minds of the less learned, but cause thousands to stumble and fall by losing all faith in the sacred Scriptures. Dr. Spence's testimony in the University pulpit was as refreshing as it was courageous and unusual.

CAMBRIDGE.

Instead of the usual Monday evening meeting of the Cambridge Missionary Union, a meeting for intercessory prayer was held in the Henry Martyn Hall on behalf of the Church at home and foreign missions.

Presbyterianism in Cambridge is showing considerable energy under the guidance of Rev. A. Halliday Douglas. On Sunday evening Rev. C. Anderson Scot lectured upon "Presbyterianism at the Reformation."

Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, preached the University sermon on Sunday in Great St. Mary's. His eloquent sermon was full of sound, practical advice to undergraduates, and contained much that was reassuring to those hearts perplexed by the storm of destructive criticism.

The Michaelmas Term being now almost over, meetings have considerably diminished in number. Many men have already gone down. Just now the minds of many here are in a state of ferment and uncertainty. Amidst the ebb and flow of the tides of criticism some cry, "What shall we believe?" There are a happy few who, through the storm of difficulties, discern the rainbow-promise of brighter things, and predict that when the throes of the conflict are over, better-grounded certainties, a riper faith, will be theirs.

There being no meeting of the Cambridge Intercollegiate Christian Union on Sunday evening, Professor Rendel Harris and his wife held a holiness meeting in the Henry Martyn Hall. After a short address from the Professor, in which he dwelt upon the wealth of unclaimed blessing at the disposal of the Christian, and the internal witness of the believer that he was acceptably serving God, Mrs. Harris spoke with considerable fervour upon the possibilities of the life indwelt by Christ. She evidently believes that it is possible to lead an entirely sinless life here. To many her address savoured dangerously of Perfectionism.

VILLAGE WORK.—For twenty-four years Mr. Owers has been going on Sundays to Ford End, Essex, a distance of eight miles from his home, to preach the Gospel in a chapel which during that time has undergone several alterations, schoolroom and gallery having been added, and a flourishing country cause worked up with Sunday-school and Band of Hope. Much self-sacrifice is shown in thus steadily plodding on all these years through all sorts of weather. Sunday, November 26, will long be remembered. Messrs. Owers and W. Gannon arranged a day of special services, and with the help of a few Christian friends, the day was spent in a soul-searching and soul-seeking manner. At the close of the evening service a number were found in the inquiry-room seeking salvation, many of them being most interesting cases. E. A. H.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS LESTER, HULL.

Great regret is felt in Hull at the melancholy death of Rev. Thomas Lester, Vicar of St. Luke's, Hull, which took place on Monday afternoon under mysterious circumstances. He had attended a C.P.A.S. meeting at the Grosvenor Hotel, and just before it was over he left the room, and could not afterwards be found. About five o'clock one of the servants at the hotel had occasion to use the store-lift, when underneath it deceased was found lying dead. The only mark of injury was on the forehead. Mr. Lester was the oldest clergyman in Hull, being over eighty years of age, and very feeble.—The Record.

DR. PROSPER LAUTRE.

The Paris Society of Evangelical Missions is mourning the loss of a veteran worker. François Prosper Lautré was born in Gibel, in the department of Haute Garonne, in 1818, and left France in 1844 for medical mission work in South Africa. He laboured for fourteen years at Lessouto, ministering to the needs of the missionaries, converts, and the population in general. In consequence of political disturbances, he afterwards had to change his sphere, and laboured first at Carmel and then at Smithfield, in the Orange Free State, in the latter place combining private medical practice with Gospel work.

PASTEUR JACQUES COMTE.

By the death of Pasteur Jacques Comte, Switzerland loses one of the founders of the Free Church of Canton Vaud. Born in 1819 at Lucens, he studied at the Academy of Lausanne in the days of the revival which attended the work of Vinet. With a number of others Comte entered upon the new life, and in 1844 was set apart for the work of the ministry, and joined those pastors who, in 1847, resigned connection with the National Church. He laboured at Montreux, Moudon, in the Broye Valley, at Savigny and other places; and, as one who knew him says in the Journal Religieux, toil rested upon him more lightly than leisure. He was a faithful man, and the faithful mourn his loss.

REV. A. L. SIMPSON, D.D.

We announced in our last issue the passing away of this honoured Presbyterian minister, who fell asleep at Bridge of Allan on Nov. 12. He was the first Presbyterian minister at Derby, where he began his labours about the year 1866. His reputation as a preacher stood high. Clear, well-balanced, and eloquent presentations of Gospel truth, an eminently judicial method of handling the Scriptures so as to bring out their connected meaning, with much literary grace of expression, made his sermons no ordinary treat to appreciative minds. He resigned the pastorate of the church in February, 1888, after twenty-two and a half years' earnest and faithful ministrations, on account of ill-health, and directly afterwards removed to his native city of Edinburgh.

REV. B. THOMAS, NARBERTH.

We have already noted the death of this well-known Welsh Baptist minister. He passed away at the age of fifty-seven. After a successful collegiate course at Bristol, Mr. Thomas entered upon the pastoral charge of Graig Chapel, Newcastle Emlyn. Penarth was his next ministerial sphere of labour. This was followed by the pastorate of the Welsh Baptist Chapel at Narberth, in Pembrokeshire. Mr. Thomas was well known under the nom de plume of "Myfyr Emlyn." His biography of Dafydd Evans, of Ffynonhenry, marked him out as the possessor of considerable literary abilities. These led to his being appointed the editor of the Connexional newspaper The Seren, a post which he filled up to the time of his death. Mr. Thomas was also well known as a preacher, his services being sought for in North and South Wales.

MR. JOHN H. L. CHRISTIEN.

For many years this devoted worker has been actively engaged in rescue effort in connection with the Midnight Meeting Movement, of which he was organising superintendent. Not only was he known all over London, but he had visited from time to time most parts of the country, seeking to stir the sympathy and concern of local Christians for their erring sisters, and to rouse them to vigorous effort for the rescue of such. Moreover, he led the way in this rescue by holding a series of midnight meetings in many provincial towns. In this particular sphere of service he was indeed a grand leader. He passed away on Friday evening, at his residence at Forest Gate, in his eighty-first year. He will be mourned by many as a true and simple-hearted follower of Jesus and friend of the fallen.

MR. TALBOT BAINES REED.

The death is announced, at the age of forty-one, of Mr. Talbot Baines Reed. A member of the firm of Sir Charles Reed and Son, typefounders, he was an authority on the archæological and literary aspects of printing, and wrote a "History of Old English Letter Foundries." He was, however, most widely known as the author of story books for boys. These included "The Fifth Form at St. Dominic's," "The Willoughby Captains," "Follow My Leader," "The Cock-house of Fellsgarth," "The Adventures of a Three-guinea Watch," "Roger Ingleton, Minor," "My Friend Smith," and "Sir Ludar." Of these the first four are school stories, setting forth the lights and shadows, the joys and sorrows, the humours and the scrapes, and the full and abounding movement of life in public schools. Mr Reed was educated at the City of London School, and married Elizabeth, daughter of the late Mr. S. M. Greer, County Court Judge for Cavan and Leitrim. She, with three children, survives him. He was a man of Christian faith and hope, profession and life, and a large circle mourn his removal.

REV. W. S. SWANSON, D.D.

A great sorrow will have fallen on many by reason of the death of Dr. Swanson on Friday week. In May last he was very seriously ill with diphtheria, from the effects of which he never really recovered. An honoured friend writes thus:—Dr. Swanson went out to China in 1860, becoming at Amoy the colleague of Revs. W. Burns and Carstairs Douglas, the two men who, more than any others, may be said to have founded the China Mission of the Presbyterian Church. He made an excellent missionary, acquired a more than usual command of the language in preaching, did noble work in the Amoy district for more than twenty years, and only abandoned the field when it became evident that if life were to be prolonged he must return finally to this country. His work since, among the congregations of the church, in pleading for the mission, his occupancy of the Moderator's chair of the Synod, his many able, stimulating, and most hopeful addresses, and his frequent and hearty appearances on behalf of the British and Foreign Bible Society, for which he had a deep and loving regard, will be long remembered, and we are sure his welcome presence will be greatly missed. He has left many attached friends among us, and the deepest sympathy will be extended to the bereaved widow and family.

MR. WILLIAM SPEAR, RAINHAM.

At the comparatively early age of forty-six William Spear, of East Hall, Rainham, Essex, formerly of East Cornwall, went in to see his Lord and Master face to face, "whom having not seen he loved."

On the border land of Devon and Cornwall, where the Tamar and Tavy mingle their waters, is the home of his family. Through various branches the same faith flows, and fertilises. There he was born, and there he was born again. There he grew into the stalwart typical West countryman he was. There in him was matured by the Spirit and grace of God that strong and buoyant faith that was to bear such an abundant harvest on the other side of England. Eastward ho! From Cornwall to Essex, from hill to dale, from noisy Tamar to quiet Thames.

Here Mr. and Mrs. Spear were led, and here their industry was prospered. A prosperous farmer, his bushel never hid his light! The spiritual destitution of the people grieved him, so he put up an iron hall for the Gospel. The Lord prospered this effort, and he was encouraged to build a commodious and substantial village hall—"The Lighthouse," as the people around call it. And in truth it has guided many a sin-tossed soul into the haven of salvation through the sacrifice once for all offered for sin.

Here summer and winter, Sunday and week-day, Mr. Spear might be seen giving himself in his cheery manner and sound practical sense and judgment to the work of the Lord. In every way he and Mrs. Spear have sought to lead those around them into spiritual things, and God has crowned their labours with signal blessing. His mortal illness was not long, but a fatal internal disease, mercifully painless, prostrated his vigorous frame, and sapped the vital strength. He returned to his old home, and on November 6 fell asleep.

He had provided financially for this and other good works during his lifetime, for his sympathies were not narrowed to his own sphere of labour. And in his closing moments on earth his thoughts lingered around the hall at Rainham. He begged Mrs. Spear to take his place in its management, and, on her consenting, he lay back on his pillow, and with eyes closed in prayer, said, "Thou knowest, Lord, how rejoiced I am that my precious wife will look after the work I have so loved. Oh, bless her in it, and I believe she will have much more blessing in it than I have ever had." J. C. R.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET has invited a large company to meet her at the Portman Rooms this (Thursday) afternoon at 2.45, to consider a special way of dealing with inebriate women. Dr. Norman Kerr, Rev. J. W. Horsley, Dr. Mrs. Anderson Brown, and Mrs. Meredith are to speak.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s.	7d.	per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„	„
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„	„
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„	„

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per	annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„	„
12 „ „	6s.	„	„
24 „ „	12s.	„	„

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. BENJAMIN GREGORY, D.D., ex-editor of the Wesleyan Methodist Connexional Literature.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions for the ensuing year. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if friends will kindly note the particulars.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

☞ The increase of communications on the one hand, and the decrease of available time for reading on the other, render it essential that we should give the largest amount of important information in the least possible space, and restrict the length of articles. Short papers are read at once, while longer ones are postponed to a more convenient opportunity, which never comes. We are often obliged to abbreviate reports of work, and generally the writers feel that their most important sentences have been omitted. We must therefore beg them to write in as condensed a form as possible, remembering that features of merely local interest are not suitable for a paper whose readers are scattered over the wide world. Our column of "Evangelistic Notes," and the Postcards occasionally received, indicate the space we can usually give to such subjects.

Of recent years there has been a continual advance in the direction of brief notes and larger type. For busy Christian workers, and for busy men and women everywhere, this is more and more needed; our kind contributors are therefore entreated to study the graphic and concentrated Gospel of Mark as a model for imitation in their records of Christian work. Think of the wonderful events of the age of Christ and his Apostles being recorded for all time by Divine Inspiration in the four Gospels and the Acts. The fulness yet the brevity of these pregnant writings is one of the mysteries of the Kingdom of God.

The dastardly and malignant outrage in the French Chamber, from the gallery of which, on Saturday last, a bomb was thrown by which nearly a hundred men and women were more or less severely wounded, is the latest of the moral "earthquakes in divers places" which are shaking society and threatening to turn the world upside down. One effect of it may be to give the Governments of Christendom pause in their jealousies of one another and their scramble for the lands inhabited by weaker peoples.

The European newspapers express the distress of the nations, with perplexity caused by the sea and the waves roaring out their discontent and anarchy, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.

The Berlin National Zeitung says:—So long as the supporters of law and order in every State fight against one another with as much ferocity as they do now, they only play into the hands of Revolutionists of all degrees, for they confirm the opinion that what exists deserves to be destroyed. The preparations for the next war with which nearly all nations are busied are also preparations for conditions which, among the vanquished at least, and not improbably among the victors as well, will afford Anarchism the best possible opportunity for comprehensive operations.

This is a very important and timely view of the case. The Governments are preparing torpedoes and ironclads to blow each other to pieces. What wonder if the Anarchists follow at a humble distance with their comparatively insignificant bombs filled with horse nails, maiming a hundred people, while the preparations of the Governments are on a scale adapted to the slaughter of human beings by the hundred-thousand. The most advanced science, and the closest inquiry into chemical forces and mechanical powers, are combined to make weapons for the destruction instead of the welfare of mankind. What wonder if the discontented, the depressed, and the despairing avail themselves of the same diabolical inventions?

The tribulations of the last days foretold by the unerring Word of Inspiration seem to be already shaping themselves. It is easy to perceive the growing self-assertion of the clay of popular power, which will not mingle with the iron of monarchy. And it is easy to conceive a condition in which the Governments (the kings) of Christendom may be driven to unite to give their power to the Beast, the personal Antichrist, who shall arise. If any of the Powers have an ear let it hear: "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."

A correspondent suggests that as birthdays are generally occasions for gift-giving, the churches generally should signalise the return of the day observed as the birthday of Christ by making generous gifts towards the sustenance and extension of missionary work in the regions beyond.

Congregationalists are going through great anxiety on account of the failure in the income of their Church Aid Society and the insufficiency of the income of the Foreign Missionary Society. Measures to change this have engaged the attention of their leading men. Rev. Wm. Crosbie, of Nottingham, points out, in a letter to The British Weekly, that what is wanted is not new machinery, but more life. "LIFE FIRST, and then the other things." He believes the hour has come when "the ministers and members of the Congregational churches should meet in solemn conclave and conference for the one purpose of considering the state of religion amongst us, and seeking by united prayer and supplication new and larger infusions of the Spirit of God. A whole week spent in this way would bring untold blessing, and would lead to the solution of problems apparently now insoluble."

With the spirit and purpose of these words we are in absolute agreement; but may we suggest that such "a conclave" would not be of the least use unless the men who come together were of one heart and one soul? A praying machine is more difficult to make than a sustentation fund. Would it not be possible for some minister who has a strong feeling of the need of prayer to send an invitation to all his brother ministers in the same county to come and spend a day in prayer and conference in his school or chapel? The arrangements for receiving them would be simple and inexpensive. Friends would provide lunch and tea. Only such ministers as were in sympathy would come. We know a case in which this was recently done, and with the most precious results. Many of the brethren said they had never been to such meetings in their lives, and the younger men especially were filled with new courage and hope. Meetings of such a description held in every county in England would soon produce nothing short of a national revival.

One word more: let only the ministers of each county or district be called together. They know each other and each other's work and difficulties. They will speak and pray freely only in each others' presence. On no account ask anyone to come as a visitor or chief speaker. Jesus Christ will be there, and through his Spirit will supply all need. Spiritual conventions are just as much in danger of looking to some one man as popular congregations to popular preachers. Let us honour God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. If, by some simple means such as we have pointed out, there is a revived ministry, there will soon be revived churches in every part of the land.

Dr. J. H. Gladstone has informed a representative of The Westminster Gazette, who has interviewed him on the work and character of the late Professor Tyndall, that Tyndall was brought up in a narrow school of Christian thought, and when he went to Germany, and came under the influence of the universities there, he found things so very different, that his belief in the Bible was entirely upset, and it was never restored.

I remember his once telling me that at times he felt as if he stood in the presence of God, and that at other times he did not believe there was a God at all.

He subsequently attempted to tone down the effect of his Belfast address, and in the latest published edition of it in book form several passages are omitted, from which we may learn that so-called belief in the Bible is not necessarily the same as belief in God; that neither is a mere feeling of awe in certain circumstances the same as an intelligent persuasion; and also that when a distinguished man speaks in a sense hostile to Christianity, he may live to modify, or even withdraw, his words. We may pay too much attention to opponents.

Dr. Gladstone went on to say:—

The belief that most of our leading scientific men are hostile or indifferent to Christianity is entirely without foundation. It is no doubt prevalent, because, after it had been proclaimed by Atheists, it was taken up by the occupants of the pulpits, and assumed by them to be true. There may be something in the study of science that tends to materialism—no doubt the advance of science has upset, legitimately, many of our theological notions—and I do not think it at all wonderful that young scientific men and readers of scientific books should be affected that way. But certainly the majority of the leading scientific men of the present day in this country are Christians, and so far as leaders in my own particular branch of science are concerned, this is much the case in France also. It is, I believe, as a general rule, true that, as Bacon puts it, "a little knowledge leads a man to Atheism, and greater knowledge leads him back to God."

In a thoughtful article in the current issue of The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, Rev. William Allen maintains that sceptical doubt, and the naturalistic tendency of our times, do much to hinder the cultivation of devotional life. Referring to the powerful influence of Miss Havergal on the religious life of this generation, he says:

Twenty years ago, I had a friend with whom I used to have the most delightful intellectual fellowship. When he was fifty years of age, his delicate constitution gave way, and he died. Shortly before he passed away, I visited him. On his bed I found one of Miss Havergal's books. Taking it into his thin hand, he said: "This book has been wonderfully helpful to me. Miss Havergal's piety is so natural, and simple, and real." Then, turning his bright eyes upon me, and referring in his own mind to conversations in days gone by, he said: "You know F. W. Robertson and James Martineau don't suit me now." It was a remarkable testimony, coming as it did from a man whose personal Christianity had been of such an intellectual cast.

In following after God the devout soul will take care that work does not exclude prayer, that service does not overlay meditation and worship. These are duties as well as privileges, and, combined with religious fellowship, are absolutely essential to the maintenance of the higher life. "When they are neglected," as Mr. Allen well says, "we decline in all those inward resources on which practical devotion depends, and our service becomes a strain, a mechanical exercise, a weariness of the flesh and of the spirit."

A series of historical papers descriptive of the spread of the Stundist movement in Russia have been republished in a pamphlet (1s. 6d. J. Clarke & Co.). It is a deeply stirring "story of a great religious revolt," and one that ought to awaken keen sympathy, among all lovers of freedom, with these suffering and persecuted fellow-Christians in the great kingdom of the Czar. The part played in this modern drama by the Holy Orthodox Church of Russia is about as pitiable and detestable as that of Rome in its worst days. It is the same with cruel and corrupt officialism everywhere. We are thankful to know that there are grounds for expecting more humane and Christian treatment of these heroic and simple-minded believers; but we do not believe it will come through ecclesiastical channels.

Admiral Grant writes us calling attention to evils in connection with certain sailors' institutes. Some (he finds) seek to attract seamen by smoking concerts, tobacco being provided free and drink at a low price, while objectionable songs are sometimes sung. In one institute "masses, confessions, and prayers for the dead" are announced. While deploring these abuses, the writer is anxious not to injure Sailors' Rests generally, knowing, as he does, the great good, spiritual and temporal, they have done. He adds: "The principles on which we should all act are such as those on which Miss Weston's are worked, 'For the glory of God and the good of the service,' also that 'the abundance of the sea might be converted unto Him.' And most assuredly neither one nor the other will be obtained by pandering to low tastes."

Mrs. Besant's account of her inner life, which has just been given to the world, suggests a warning which we have not yet heard sounded, viz:—"When you are in religious doubt and difficulty, don't trust to human skill to bring you through." Mrs. Besant has gone, at every critical stage of her history, to man for the help she should have sought from God alone. Once it was Dr. Pusey, then Mr. Bradlaugh, and now Madame Blavatsky. If she follows on consistently, she must end with the Pope. She is a curious example of the fact that a vigorous nature is not necessarily strong, nor an acute mind deep. Prayer alone with God would have saved her from this restlessness and drifting.

Professor Rendel Harris has an article in The Contemporary Review on "Tatian and the Fourth Gospel," which ought to give pause to those who confidently disparage the Gospel according to John. Before the Diatessaron was discovered, portions of it and also quotations from John were embedded in Ephrem Syrus's Armenian Commentary, published in the original text at Venice in 1836, and translated into Latin by Dr. Mosinger in 1876. Thereupon, Prof. Harris says:—

It is possible for an early Christian writer, profoundly acquainted with the Fourth Gospel, which he had at least once transcribed with his own hand, to write a religious treatise, in which he would fail to convince critics in later ages that he had any acquaintance with that Gospel at all. And this possibility is consistent with the fact that he makes verbatim quotations from the author with whom he is held to have been unacquainted.

Strange to say, Dr. Lightfoot had a copy of the Armenian Commentary in his library, but was ignorant of its contents, and made no use of it in his articles on Tatian. This leads Professor Harris to say:

It is possible for a professed apologist, acting in defence of a certain portion of Christian literature, the genuineness of which has been attacked, to seriously understate a winning case.

The study of Tatian, of Ephrem Syrus, and the light given from other sources, have set the date of John's Gospel back; and "a number of supposed quotations from St. John which were formerly considered doubtful must now be admitted." Thus research and scholarship win back what ignorant assumption had all but taken away.

When speaking of the "low stage of moral development" which prevailed in Old Testament times, devotees of the Higher Criticism do not hesitate to question the existence or operation of the faculty of conscience in those early days. A recent speaker ventured the following superficial remark:—

The basis of morality in the Old Testament was not the individual conscience, that sharply individualised word not appearing till the Maccabæan age.

The standard of true morality is Divine, and the "basis" cannot but be always and everywhere the same. Though the distinctions of modern metaphysics may not have prevailed in the golden age of Hebrew literature, it is clear that the language and narrative of the Old Testament introduce us to the human conscience and its operation. In the story of sin in Eden, of the crime of Cain, of the heartless treatment of Joseph by his brethren, and of the penitence of David, as described in Ps. li., we have the working of conscience applying the law of God, and bringing to mind the natural intuitions as to right and wrong.

By many figures the Old Testament speaks of the human conscience. It finds it in "the heart," which may be hardened, as the conscience is said to become seared (Prov. xxviii. 14; 1 Tim. iv. 2); in "the reins," which instruct in times of reflection, or are pricked in moments of perplexity (Ps. xvi. 7, lxxiii. 21); in "the spirit" of man, which serves as the candle, or lamp, of the Lord, searching into the recesses of motive and deed, thought and desire (Prov. xx. 27). Of old no less than to-day, the "spirit in man," as the inspiration or breath of the Almighty, gives understanding or power to discriminate right and wrong (Job xxxii. 8). Even in the breasts of barbarians there is, as the Apostle to the Gentiles said, a law written in their hearts, with a witness-bearing conscience, accusing or excusing them in regard to their lives and actions (Rom. ii. 15).

A letter by Sir G. Birdwood appeared lately in The Times condemning the way in which the signatures of forty-nine medical men in Bombay had been fraudulently obtained to a petition deploring the use of opium by natives in India. To this a reply was sent by Mrs. Dyer, wife of the editor of The Bombay Guardian, denying the charge, but the letter has been refused admission. She says the petition was suggested and drafted by a Bombay doctor in April, 1892, and was widely printed and circulated, but was never challenged till lately, when strong official pressure was put upon the signatories, to induce them to recant. Hence the report that thirty-four out of the forty-nine signatures have been repudiated.

The great Temperance Convention in Covent Garden Theatre has revived the hope and faith of the whole temperance party with regard to the purposes of the Government in the matter of the Local Veto Bill. Of course a Government can only do so much work in so much time, and circumstances may prove too strong for the strongest; but as the question now stands, we have the fullest and most explicit assurances that everything will be done that can be done to further temperance legislation in the direction of giving the people the control of licences. We sincerely trust that nothing may arise to defeat the accomplishment of this great and good work.

According to statements made in The Nautical Magazine, the work of safe-guarding seamen from the devices of a greedy commercial spirit is by no means at an end.

"Relentless competition," says our contemporary, "tends more and more to lamentable undermanning. Certificates abound, and a master would think twice before venturing to express an opinion on the number of his crew, in the presence of a managing owner, however loudly he might condemn the short-handed system while in the bosom of his family. The shipmaster is not strong enough, as a rule, to refuse to sail when shorthanded."

If a shipmaster who asks for, say, forty men, is passed over for the one who will risk sailing with, say, thirty, he will be likely to make shift with thirty. In the case of the smaller class of steamers the offence of undermanning is particularly glaring. Hence come collisions. The bodies and souls of men are being made merchandise of. But if Parliament could enforce a load-line, it surely ought to be able to say how many men a vessel needs for its safe navigation.

Moses and Zipporah.

Ex. iv. 24-26.

BY REV. ARNOLD FOSTER, HANKOW.

There is a large number of passages in the Bible that present real stumbling-blocks to many English readers, simply because of their own almost childish inability to imagine any state of life different from that in which they themselves have been brought up, or any habits of thinking and speaking which are not those of the nineteenth century. The average Englishman cannot, e.g., picture to himself some of the most characteristic actions of an Oriental—the demonstrative grief, the dancing joy, the uncontrolled anger, the mad outbursts of passion, which are features of Asiatic life. Again, he cannot realise that when Jews and other Orientals use in reference to certain things language that no Englishman of to-day would use, they do not necessarily mean at all the same thing as the Englishman would mean if he were to use the language in question.

The English reader who has never lived or travelled in the East comes across some narrative of Scripture, written by Orientals for Orientals from an Oriental standpoint, and he is staggered by it. He cannot understand how such a passage ever found its way into an inspired book! His idea of revelation requires that there should be no stories told in it that an Englishman of the nineteenth century considers to be in bad taste, and no expressions used that an Englishman of the nineteenth century would not use. Accordingly he finds "difficulties," where, with a larger experience of the world and of men, he would see none, and misses the point of many a story because its setting is Oriental and not English, or ancient and not modern.

I have before me as I write a well-known book by a well-known writer, in which the passage referred to at the head of this article is spoken of as if it were almost an insult to God to suppose that these three verses could by any possibility, or in any sense, be described as a part of "the Word of God." Believing myself that they are a part of "the Word of God," and a very instructive part of it too, I venture to submit, for the benefit of those who have found the brief and rugged language of these verses a stumbling-block to faith, a paraphrase of them, in which I think that, on the one hand, no part of the original idea is lost, and on the other hand no idea really foreign to the sense of the original passage is introduced. The few explanatory hints that are worked into the paraphrase only, I believe, present the passage to the English reader in the form in which the passage itself, without any such hints, would present itself to the ordinary Jewish mind. The language adopted is, as far as possible, in the style of the Scripture; if anyone reading it is still shocked by the sentiment it contains, I can only say I am as unable to enter into that person's state of mind as he is unable to enter into the mind of the writer of the original passage in Exodus.

"And it came to pass by the way in the inn, that the Lord smote Moses and he was sick unto death, and Moses knew that it was because it was of his son whom he had not circumcised according to the covenant made with Abraham, to whom the Lord had said 'Every man-child among you shall be circumcised.' And Moses repented him that he had not obeyed the covenant of circumcision, and he told Zipporah his wife. But the thing displeased Zipporah, for in Midian they circumcised not their children after the manner of the Israelites; nevertheless, being in fear, she did according to the word of Moses, howbeit she called him in her anger 'a bridegroom of blood.' And the Lord had mercy on Moses and raised him up again, and he went on his way to Egypt, to deliver the people, as the Lord had commanded him, whose name is the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."

Now about this story three observations may be made. Firstly, if the original language appears to English ears to savour of coarseness, it must be remembered that expressions and actions which strike us as coarse do not strike the great majority of mankind in at all the same way, and it is not absolutely certain that the modern European standard of good taste is the only right one. On the contrary, it may be questioned whether the modern wholesale introduction of French and Latin words into the English for the purpose of avoiding their rougher Saxon equivalents, is not an indication of hyper-sensitiveness and of morbid refinement on our part. Be that as it may, one thing is certain, as everyone who has lived in Asia knows, methods of speaking and acting which, though not in themselves immoral, shock the sensibilities of most refined persons amongst ourselves, do not in the least degree shock the sensibilities of many really refined and cultivated Orientals.

Secondly, the story as told in Ex. iv. 24-26, at least so far as it concerns Zipporah, is life-like. I can imagine I see before me as I write, some angry, storming, Chinese woman acting just the part of Zipporah—convinced that on grounds of expediency she had better do something that she saw no reason for doing on any other ground, and doing it accordingly, but all the time venting her passion against the person who had compelled her to do it.

Thirdly, under this story there lies profound religious teaching, and it is for us an unspeakable loss if, finding fault with the details of the story, we miss the lesson taught.

In a bitter and never-to-be-forgotten experience of his own life, Moses was taught the lesson that the work that God had entrusted to him must begin in his own home. If the covenant of God with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, meant so little to Moses that he did not think it worth while to circumcise his own children, how could he be a fit agent to establish that covenant with the people whom he had just been charged by God at the burning bush to deliver from Egypt, and to bring them into the land which the Lord had promised to their fathers? The truth taught by St. Paul many hundreds of years afterwards is here anticipated: "If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?" He can be no true minister either of the law or of the Gospel who allows his children and servants to grow up in disregard of the covenant of his God which he is spending his life in enforcing upon others. "They made me keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept." The lesson taught in the passage before us is one of infinite importance to all who are called of God to the ministry of his Church and to the work of saving men, and the narrative embodying it is well worth that place in Holy Scripture which it holds. It would be well if "critics," before pointing with contempt to such a passage as this, and repeating cheap and ignorant objections to it, would try to understand its meaning, and to extract from it the instruction which its place in Scripture would lead us to expect that it was intended to give. The shallowness of some modern criticism of Scripture causes nothing but pain to readers who know how utterly superficial and yet how mischievous it is.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

The Working Lads' Institute and Home, Whitechapel, has not only had a career full of interest in East London, but has been regarded as a model on which to organise similar institutions, both in and out of the Metropolis. It has from the first had many firm friends and staunch supporters, but yet its directors have gone through seasons of deep anxiety, arising from financial limitations. At the seventeenth annual meeting on Monday evening, some of the more active friends of the Institute had an opportunity, not only of attesting their sympathy with the work, but also of commending it to the hearty support of the benevolent public.

The chair was occupied by Alderman and Sheriff Moore, who attended in place of the Lord Mayor, whom illness prevented from carrying out his engagement to preside. The devoted founder and hon. secretary of the institution, Mr. Henry Hill, read a report which, although not jubilant, was not wanting in buoyancy. For the information of persons not familiar with the work, it opened with a statement of purpose and intention, in these words:—"The lads for whose benefit the Institute was founded are a distinct, a numerous, and an important class. It is not for the destitute poor, nor is it the young clerks and artisans, but for industrious working youths, from fourteen to eighteen years of age, thousands of whom reside in Whitechapel and the neighbourhood. A large number of them are employed as errand-boys and shop assistants; many others are engaged in mechanical trades, and some are apprentices. Their earnings vary from about 6s. to 10s. per week."

From this definition of the class to be benefited, the report proceeded to describe the means—spiritual, intellectual, moral, and physical—employed to direct the lives of the youths who are privileged to make the Institute a rendezvous at the close of their day's work. Educational classes, reading-room and library, gymnasium, swimming bath, and lecture hall, are among the attractions furnished, and they have in the past year been used in an increasing degree. Education of a technical character is a studied feature. The employment agency has done useful work in procuring situations for lads in need of them, and employers have come to value its co-operation because the servants recommended have been of an intelligent and reliable description. The total number of lads attending the Institute and classes last year was 407, which included thirty telegraph messengers. In the Home thirty-four beds have been occupied, by orphans, lads from the country, and others. Though the work generally is very encouraging, the financial situation is depressing, and has, indeed, been beset by difficulties that have been all but overwhelming. The lads contributed in fees and subscriptions £164, and outside contributions amounted to £412. The year closed, however, with an indebtedness of £1200, to say nothing of a charge on the building of about £5000, the interest on which swallows up £200 per annum. Double the work could be accomplished in the premises if the necessary means were forthcoming.

Addresses full of sympathy were delivered by the Chairman, and Messrs. W. J. Orsman, W. C. Steadman, and George Holland. Some gymnastic exercises were gone through, and a programme of music performed. Moreover, Mrs. Hill distributed the prizes gained by members of the educational and technical classes, and the swimming and athletic clubs. The proceedings bore testimony to the religious tone as well as practical utility of the work of which the Institute is the home and centre; and must have impressed many present with the urgent importance of the demand made for the enterprise to be freed from the encumbrance of debt, in order that it may deepen and extend its operations, all of which are as truly excellent in character as they are sorely needed in the district.

MOTHER, let not a day pass but that you feed your boy with the "bread of life," that shall cause him to grow into a splendid man.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXVII.

PROPHECY AND HISTORY.

In the last few preceding papers I have endeavoured to trace the wonderful correspondence of historical facts with the prophetic delineation recorded in the twelfth and thirteenth chapters of the Apocalypse. It seems desirable that this should now be exhibited in such a form as to afford the reader, almost at a glance, such a view of the correspondence referred to as will enable him, not only to bear it more readily in mind, but also to apprehend the force with which that correspondence supports the position advanced,—that the true interpretation of this great prophecy is to be found in the history of the present dispensation, from the time of the vision in Patmos up to the days in which we live.

That correspondence is so marvellous that, although, as already observed, mistakes and erroneous applications here and there may not have been escaped, it is almost impossible for a mind divested of prejudice to avoid arriving at the conclusion that it is none other than that history which the Spirit of God intended to prefigure in the visions, and that the wonderful course of the Roman Empire, first Pagan and then Papal, the rise and progress of the apostasy foretold by Paul, and the development and career of the great Antichrist, are therein set forth.

The following recapitulation, in parallel columns, of the main prophetic symbols, and of the events and facts which it is believed were signified thereby, will be useful as a means of demonstrating the view in question, and of aiding the memory of the reader.

1. The Great Red Dragon.	1. The Fourth Beast of Daniel's vision (ch. vii. 7, 23, etc.), i.e. the fourth world-empire, the Roman, energised by Satan (Rev. xii. 9).
2. The Seven Heads.	2. The Seven Hills on which Rome stood. Also the seven successive forms of government, which had existed or were to exist, in the Empire (ch. xvii. 9, 10).
3. The Crowns on the heads.	3. It was in those dynastic forms (each in its turn) that power was, or would be, vested. In John's time the existing form of government was the Emperorship.
4. The Ten Horns.	4. The Ten Kingdoms of the European Commonwealth, which were afterwards to come into being. Uncrowned here, because not yet existing.
5. The third part of the stars of heaven cast down by the power of the seven-headed dragon.	5. Satan's successful attack upon the Church, by persecution of Pagan Rome, resulting in the apostasy or fall of many of its leading men. (The stars are the angels of the churches, ch. i. 20.)
6. The war in heaven, between Michael and the dragon, and their respective hosts. The dejection of the latter.	6. The final conflict between Paganism and Christianity, resulting in the overthrow of the former.
7. The triumphant shout in the heavenly places.	7. The joyful belief of early Christians that the Kingdom of God was now permanently established on earth.
8. The means of the victory over the draconic hosts.	8. The means of the overthrow of Paganism—the blood of Christ—the word of the Gospel—the martyrdom of the servants of God.
9. The ejection of the water from the serpent's mouth to destroy the woman.	9. The flood of false doctrine and heresies, whereby Satan then sought to destroy the Church.
10. The rise from the sea of the seven-headed, ten-horned wild beast, with crowns on the horns and names of blasphemy.	10. The appearance of the Roman Empire in a new form, secular power now residing no longer in the Emperorship, but in the ten kingdoms of the European Commonwealth.
11. The head of the beast wounded to death by the sword, but healed and revived.	11. The fall of the Empire of Rome, but resuscitation of Romish power in the Papacy.
12. The universal dominion and supremacy of the beast.	12. The power assumed and exercised by Rome over Christendom.
13. The mouth speaking great things and blasphemies.	13. The blasphemous and self-exalting utterances of the Papacy. Its claims to quasi-Deity, infallibility, etc.
14. The duration of the beast's power, forty-two months.	14. The twelve hundred and sixty years of Rome's supremacy.
15. The beast's war with the saints.	15. The persecutions of Protestants by Rome. Fifty millions of God's saints slain by her!
16. The second wild beast, with lamb-like appearance, and draconic voice. The false prophet.	16. The corporate body of false teachers throughout Christendom, the priests of Rome, "wolves in sheep's clothing."
17. The great wonders wrought by the second beast, specially fire brought down from heaven in the sight of men.	17. The lying miracles of Rome—whereby the nations were deluded—specially those of Transubstantiation and Apostolical Succession.
18. The image of the beast.	18. The representation of Christendom in Œcumenical Councils.
19. The voice of the image.	19. The edicts and decrees of Œcumenical Councils.
20. The mark of the beast impressed on all.	21. The entire appropriation by Rome of all classes to its sway and service.
21. The ban upon all who were not marked.	21. The excommunication of all who would not acknowledge the authority of the Papacy.
22. The Number of the Beast, 666.	22. Lateinos — the Latin man—the Latin power—the Latin Church —The Antichrist.

To these correspondences which relate to the prophecy of the first and second wild beasts, as recorded in chs. xii. and xiii., must be added those which appear from the vision of Babylon in ch. xvii., and from the explanation thereof given by the interpreting angel. For the picture is incomplete without the exhibition of that aspect of the Great Apostasy, which was afforded to the Seer under the guise of the adulterous woman, whose name is "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth,... drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

She is so closely connected with the wild beast, that the most fitting way of exhibiting that connection was by the symbol of one seated upon, or riding, the monster. Thus they appear as practically one. And the character and conduct, the ways and works, of the two are so interwoven with each other, and so identical, that they are shown to be as inseparable as would be the composite figure of a horse and its rider.

As it was over the ten kings or kingdoms that the beast exercised his sway, so it is "the kings of the earth" that "committed fornication with the great whore," and over whom she reigns. And as it was they that "dwell upon the earth" who were deceived by the beast and his administrator, the false prophet, and rendered him their willing allegiance, so it is "the inhabitants of the earth" who have been made drunk with the wine of her "fornication." If it is the beast to whom power was "given over all kindreds and tongues and nations," it was also the "peoples and multitudes, and nations and tongues," which were symbolized by the "many waters" upon which the whore was seated (ch. xvii. 1, 15). And lastly, as the beast made war with the saints and overcame them, so it was with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus that the woman was intoxicated (ch. xvii. 6). The identity of character and action is complete. The seven-headed, ten-horned beast, and Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots, are figurations of one and the same enemy of the Church of Christ, but presented under different aspects, the one political and secular, the other ecclesiastical and professedly spiritual.

If, then, the Romish Church, the Great Apostasy, be symbolized by the woman, it can be none other than the Roman Empire, first Pagan, but lastly Papal, which is prefigured by the beast and its successive heads.

That Babylon, the seven-hilled city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth, is Rome, there has never been any doubt worthy of notice. Roman Catholic expositors fully and freely admit the fact, and only seek to evade the application of the prophecy to their Church by asserting that it relates, either to Rome Pagan, or to a Rome as yet future. But the portrait is too exact. The divine photograph is so accurate a representation of all the features of that apostate, yet seductive system, as to make it impossible to be mistaken.

And if the prophetic delineation was so marvellous that when it appeared before the Seer's gaze, he "wondered with great wonder," surely no less marvellous has been the fulfilment. It is easy to describe the historical application as fanciful, to find flaws in it here and there, or to point to the want of agreement of historical interpreters on certain points. Wonderful indeed would it have been had there been no differences of opinion in the endeavour to interpret the most mysterious visions, full of weird symbols, of strange heraldry, and of almost inconceivable portents. If such wide divergencies obtain among Christians with regard to what are called fundamental doctrines, it is surely not surprising that in prophetic interpretation various views should have been held. Passing strange would it have been if, in seeking to discern where the facts of history answered to prophetic delineations, couched in terms intended as much to conceal as to reveal, fallible students did not frequently err, or were not sometimes misled by human fancy.

But a much greater marvel surely would it be to find that the extraordinary correspondence which undoubtedly exists between the leading events, and the most potent in their influences and effects, of the world's history, secular and religious, for 1800 years, and the hieroglyphs of the Apocalypse, were due to accident, and not to the intention of Him who gave the Revelation, and to whom all future history was known.

That correspondence is so remarkable that even those who do not admit the application of the prophecy to past or present events, are compelled to allow that no better or more concise memoria technica of European history during this dispensation could be constructed.

Let anyone with unprejudiced mind, and with no preconceived schemes obscuring his view, or affecting his candour of spirit, trace, on the one hand, the series of visions unfolded in the "seals" and "trumpets," and then in the "signs"—so far as has yet been reached—and on the other, the history of the Roman Empire, Pagan and Papal, and of the Church, true and false, and say whether there is not such a correspondence as to compel the acknowledgment that it could be attributable to nothing less than design, even the design of that all-wise God, who "revealeth the deep and secret things," who "knoweth what is in the darkness," and "with whom the light dwelleth."

I can only say, as a very humble student of the word of prophecy for now many years, that of all the testimonies to the "eternal power and Godhead," which are furnished by his works and Word, none is more convincing than the evidence supplied by such fulfilments of prophecy as those upon which we have dwelt. As it is to such fulfilments that God condescends to appeal in proof of his Deity—as shown in the second of these papers—so do we find in them an irrefragable evidence of the inspiration—yea, the verbal inspiration—of the Holy Scriptures.

It is, I conceive, impossible to rise from the contemplation of these marvellous words without some such emotion of adoring wonder and praise as led one of old to exclaim, "Oh! the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counsellor? Or who hath first given to Him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of Him, and through Him, and to Him are all things: to whom be glory for ever, Amen."

☞ A desire has been expressed by many readers that these papers should be republished in a volume, as a bulwark against the aggressiveness of Rome. Such was the beloved author's earnest wish. It is, however, necessary to be able to form some idea as to the prospect of a sufficient number of copies being required to justify the expense of publication. It is, therefore, earnestly requested that every reader who would become a subscriber to the volume will at once send to the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN name and address, and number of copies desired. The price would probably be 5s.

The Present Distress.

BY MISS ANNIE MACPHERSON.

IT is with a very sorrowful heart that I corroborate your statements as to the present distress in the East of London. During December the people are generally working overtime, and are very glad to do so with the prospect of the slackness that often follows upon the new year; but the dearness of coals has this winter been a great strain, and has eaten up their little store. Doubtless all mission workers among the people find that the administration of help needs great wisdom, to distinguish between those who will spend what is given them for warmth and food, and those who will waste it in strong drink. Such a visitation of want is often mingled with mercy, to teach the improvident to be more careful in summer time.

You are right as to the real sufferers having to be sought out; even then it is not so easy to know the state of the empty cupboard, till illness comes; then how grateful they are to go into the warmth of an hospital, or have the attentions of a nurse and invalid kitchen. Trade is bad, for in workrooms where it is usual to see thirty young women at work, the presence now of only fourteen tells its own tale.

Foreigners have been rushing into the East of London, and supplanting our people in every direction. They are not skilled artisans, and offer to do work for 12s. 6d. a week, so that the Englishman who for years has been paid his £1 a week has to take 12s. 6d. or be discharged. I am thinking of one who pays a rent of 5s. 6d. for two small rooms, and there are five children. It is such decent working-men in this crisis who require help, lest they sink into illness and be submerged with a broken heart. They are not young enough to stir themselves up with the thought of emigrating, as a family, to some colony. The Y.M.C.A. and the organised mothers' meeting are excellent channels for finding out young men willing to be assisted to emigrate where there is plenty of work, food, and education. Only, the emigrants must be teetotallers, must have good characters, and willing to work. The best time to cross the Atlantic is early in March. Ocean steerage passage, £4 4s.; railway to Toronto, about £1. Shippers, Messrs. Allan, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

Sewing classes for mothers of families are another excellent way of relief in a time of distress such as the present. Such help does not lower their independence or self-respect.

Many missions are suffering. One sister writes: "I have no more money; I have never been quite so put to it." She has 120 mouths to fill.

Work is very slack in most of the East-end workrooms just now. To women with families this means truly hard times. Many distressing facts could be given if space allowed.

BY MR. JOHN KIRK, RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

I should belie the promptings of a grateful heart if I did not thank you for your sympathetic article upon the present distress in our midst. You have sounded a clear note, which is both timely and true, as, alas! so many of us know full well. We are here in helpful communication with all the poorest quarters of London, and the accounts which reach us daily are enough to move a heart of stone.

One of my most regular hearers at a Sunday evening service in South London was a poor woman with an imbecile son. I knew she made kettle-holders to sell in the street, and that she was poor, but she never begged or complained. We missed her, and then heard that she died in the infirmary, a ready prey to bronchitis induced by starvation. Draughts of cold water were all she and her grown-up son had had to eat or drink for a week before she was taken to the infirmary. And the poor children, how they suffer!

Generous and immediate help should be given through recognised agencies working in the very midst of our starving and suffering brothers and sisters.

BY MR. GEORGE HOLLAND.

Distress exists—widespread distress in the metropolis; no one can doubt this. We have only to look at the gaunt, hollow-faced men we meet with in the streets, thinly clothed, hungry, and footsore. They have walked weary miles to obtain employment, but without success. The careworn faces and the anxious looks of thousands point to a time of serious trial.

My object in writing is not to refer to my own particular work, but to state that there are hundreds of Christian workers who spend many hours daily in the poorest neighbourhoods, "in touch with the poor, conversant with their needs and difficulties, and enjoying their confidence," fitted by long experience to be distributors of effective relief. They are acquainted with the patient, suffering poor, and would administer to them necessary assistance, but they lack the means necessary.

There are God's own dear people in sorrow, in suffering, and in want; the husband without work; the children wanting bread; the only bread-winner in the family the poor factory girl, with her meagre wage of five or six shillings per week, and she, poor girl, working on, enduring many privations, laying up a stock of weakness, presently, it may be, to end in serious illness. There are widows and orphans, the sick and the aged, one and all requiring help.

It is not necessary that a central fund should be raised, but that the Lord's stewards should supply the necessary means, so that present agencies in operation among the poor should be properly sustained, and God's own poor people assisted. Practical Christian sympathy is necessary to prevent thousands of our fellow-creatures, who, if not assisted, may starve or perish.

It should be remembered that Christian workers as a rule give largely of their own means, but find it quite impossible to assist from their own limited resources the many sad cases they come in contact with. They find it hard to say to those of the "household of faith," "I cannot help you." Many of late must has carried such troubles to Him who moves the hearts of his stewards, and bids them supply the needs of suffering ones the "little while."

BY DR. HARRY GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Not only is the chronic winter condition of destitution again in painful evidence, but it is this year accentuated and intensified by various causes, some of which are permanent or integral, and some of a more temporary nature.

1. Although the easier conditions of existence which prevail in the summer season relieve the tension, they do not afford much opportunity to make up the lee-way, and each recurring winter's distress seems to increase the downward momentum of those who are dependent upon casual labour in the East-end. Then (as the inspector of a riverside parish told us) week by week during the winter scores of men keep pressing in from the country districts, in many cases making direct for the docks, and helping to increase the numbers of those who eke out an incompetent pittance as dock casuals. Again, the competition for this and other unskilled labour is increased by the continual advance of growing lads, who at eighteen are able to work for less pay, and perhaps get through more work than older men of forty or forty-five with families to keep.

2. Rents are high, and rent-collectors in many cases increasingly tight upon tenants. In not a few families the precarious weekly wage of the labourer, or the widow's dole (hard-earned by laundry work or charing) is all but swallowed up to meet this first charge.

3. There is a great amount of illness amongst the poor at the present time—scarlet fever, influenza, etc.—in some parts almost every third house having one or more cases: while the after effects of these scourges are likely to render many unfit for the terrible struggle they must wage.

4. Certain localities are permanently depressed since the dock strike. Considerable part of the work of unloading vessels, etc., has been transferred elsewhere, and although many of the best and steadiest of the dockers have followed the work, there is left in Shadwell and other places a large residuum of the least-valued labour. These men, although many of them hold the "B" (or secondary class) ticket, are subject to much uncertainty and irregularity of work, and have only, on an average, about three days' employment per week.

5. Some other trades are much depressed, boot-making for example; and for all classes the high price of fuel makes a large inroad upon the slender income.

6. The late coal strike has caused a great deal of distress among many who are usually in regular employment. The engineers, smiths, carriage-builders, and labourers on the North London and Great Eastern Railways have been on half-time almost from the beginning of the strike, and have only just returned to full time.

Our inquiries have extended over a considerable part of Shadwell, and some part of Bow and Bromley, and our information is drawn from a large variety of sources, including publicans, pawnbrokers, lodging-house keepers, dockers, poor-law guardians, City missionaries, district visitors, and ministers. While some of these have minimised the idea of exceptional distress, and some see nothing exceptional in the present condition, all are agreed as to the great amount of distress.

The following facts are significant:—

One relieving officer is distributing relief at the rate of £16 a week more than last year. In another district (St. George's, Shadwell) a temporary casual ward has been opened with 100 extra beds—a provision never before necessary. In yet other districts committees are being formed, free breakfasts are being organised, and other efforts made; but far more must be done to meet the awful and growing need.

In the course of a house-to-house canvass in certain representative localities a proportion of nearly 50 per cent. families were found to be affected to some extent, varying from the pinch and struggle of a first entry on the "distress plane,"—but with health and hope in their favour—down to actual and awful want, in which condition not less than one family in five seems to be.

What shall be done for these men and women? What would Christ have us do? Is it possible for us to sit down to our Christmas dinners, and to give Christmas presents to our loved ones—whose needs are already abundantly supplied—caring nothing for our unemployed and starving fellows?

In the East London Institute we are hoping to do something to alleviate this sad condition, and shall be glad if friends will help us.

BY MISS CHILD, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

Having lived in Ratcliff Highway more than fifteen years, and worked in it still longer, I well know many of the trials and difficulties of the poor in our midst. I can corroborate the necessity of something being done quickly to stem the flood of distress so unexceptional at this time. I would, however, draw attention to some of its chief causes:—

(1) The great and increasing influx of foreign as well as provincial immigrants without any means of support. The neighbourhood of the docks—indeed, all East London—is, with but few exceptions, the favourite resort of such people; in consequence, the labour market here is flooded.

(2) The strikes have had a terrible effect of transferring the trade to other ports, which is deeply felt, not only among sailors and dock labourers, but also by the whole neighbourhood.

(3) Intoxicating drink, which is, as we all know, at all times a terrible curse and barrier against comfort and thrift.

I quite agree with you about the enormity of silent distress going on; the results are frequently revealed at the inquests all over East London, as well as to the Christian workers in touch with the poor. I do not want to fill up your paper with tales of woe and want coming to our notice daily, but our hearts often sink within us when we see the careworn, pinched faces, and yet are, in some instances, powerless to relieve.

I might say the late gales have greatly added to the distress and sorrow among us. May God stir his people up to do what they can at this specially trying time!

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE, who had an attack of influenza two months ago while in London, and began work too soon, has had a relapse, and is lying at his home in Haddington, N.B., quite prostrate. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray that the Lord may restore him, if it is his will?

A STORY OF THE STORM.*

I cannot help writing to you again so soon to tell you of what an awful and yet merciful day we had yesterday. You know I wrote and told you of our early-morning excitement, with the lifeboat out in danger to get the crew from a steamer. Directly afterwards in came Margaret, breathless, to say another ship in great distress had just hove in sight; and, while she was telling me, the dreadful danger signal and lifeboat call rockets were fired.

I gave the children their dinner, and rushed out to see what was going on. The wind was getting wilder every minute, and the seas coming into the bay were beyond description, some of them breaking right up the cliffs opposite, the masses of white foam being carried inland for some distance, like thick smoke from a gun. I ran quickly down the hill to the beach, and there away in the offing lay a barque of 600 or 700 tons, rolling like a log. Everyone said she must go on Dinas Rocks, where there is no beach, and the cliffs too high to allow of help from them. The lifeboat on the beach could literally not be got out against the wind, and the long foaming seas coming in! I did not stay long there, as, though with a shawl all over my head, it was piercingly cold.

In another hour began one of the most awful sights possible to see. Through the sleet and rain driving down the bay appeared the barque, all her steering gear broken or carried away, just tossed about in the raging seas, perfectly helpless, steadily but surely driving, now head on, now broadside on, to the rocks opposite us, which are specially dangerous. It was awful beyond words to stand there and see her; sometimes entirely hidden by the white crashing seas, so we thought twice that she had gone down, and then again lurching, so that more than once we thought she must capsise; and all the time no one able to help.

Could the lifeboat have been moved from the sand against wind and sea, she could never get alongside the rolling, lurching barque, and we stood sick at the sight. At first we could see no people on board, and it seemed a wonder that everyone had not been washed away, but as she drove nearer people could be seen. And on and on she went, right for the sharpest point of land, at the opening of F—— Harbour. Then, as a best and most likely chance, everyone started off, the able-bodied men, with the rocket apparatus, to the fields above the harbour, and there waited, as we did on this side the bay, expecting to see her dashed to pieces before our eyes.

Here, in the village, all who knew anything of prayer, prayed as with one heart, and on all faces was solemnity indeed. Then, as she got on to the worst corner rocks a sea struck her and turned her into F—— Harbour, end on, past the rocks, and brought her up alongside the rocks in a little sort of cove there, just, as C—— said, "as if she had been eased alongside on purpose." And so she was, for it was a miracle in so far as it was out of any human aid. Then they worked the rocket and got off ten men, and the captain's daughter, a young Norwegian girl; one poor boy having been washed overboard just as they were coming into the bay. The horror of seeing that vessel, perfectly unmanageable and helpless, tossed on to destruction, and then the right hand of power put forth to save her, was one never to be forgotten. Truly, "The sea and the waves rage horribly, but the Lord that sitteth on high is mightier."

Nov. 29.—Everything that has since been heard of the wreck of the barque shows more and more the distinctly superhuman intervention which saved the lives of the crew. A great half-hidden reef at the mouth of the harbour prevents, at the tide there then was, any vessel of her size getting in, but at the exact moment when she was at the reef, she was lifted clean over it by a big sea. Had the sea been less violent and running less high, it would not have had the force to lift her over the danger, so that the very wildness and raging of the sea was the instrument used for the safety of the people who had given up all hope of escape. Two days after, all remains of the barque as such disappeared, and only floating wreckage and planks strew the harbour.

* I send extracts from two letters from a daughter living on the coast of Wales, describing a beautiful deliverance from shipwreck during the storm of November 17, 18, and 19 last. The story is so comforting and strengthening, that I think you may like to find a corner for it in The Christian. My daughter's husband generally heads the lifeboat crew.—F. G.

(1280)

PLEASANT SUNDAY AFTERNOONS.

A CONFERENCE OF WORKERS.

There is no fact in modern Christian effort more noteworthy than the success of the P.S.A. movement. Departures from Church routine are looked upon with coldness and suspicion in many quarters, and they have to go through the three customary stages. Taking it as a whole, the P.S.A. has survived the disabilities and frailties of infanthood, and it has now won the justification of assured success.

If this were not so, the conference of P.S.A. workers, held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, last week, would never have been convened. So rapid and great has been the spread of these "brief, bright, brotherly" assemblies, that some of the more ambitious spirits of the movement thought the time had come for confederation of the societies on a national basis and scale. Last week's event proved that the project was premature; but the conference was nevertheless not unfruitful. It was not a very large, but it was certainly a serious-looking and purposeful, company that answered to the call of the Rev. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, as he assumed the chair. Mr. Barrett at the close good-humouredly spoke of the audience as a docile and obedient one; but his firm and wise presidential hand had a good deal to do in securing that. Some differences of opinion were revealed, but the prevailing spirit of the meeting throughout was excellent.

The Chairman's few introductory words were much to the point,. He said that if the P.S.A. movement were to be a permanent power for righteousness among the masses of the people, it must retain its distinctly evangelistic character; personally he should not care to touch it if it were anything else. That keynote was echoed again and again during the evening—a fact of hopeful augury. Then he thought it must be brought and kept in living connection with the churches as such. This view was also endorsed by most of the succeeding speakers, though not by all.

The first part of the programme was a paper by Mr. Blackham, of West Bromwich, the justly esteemed originator of the P.S.A. It was he who had actually convened the conference, but it was soon made manifest that he had done so at the suggestion of others; indeed, instead of blessing the project of National federation, as some might have anticipated, he banned it thoroughly, though diffidently enough, in view of some opposite opinions. Mr. Blackham's address was a most interesting recapitulation of the leading facts and features of the young but lusty movement. It is no longer an experiment, he said; it is a great fact, and it has come to stay. Then it has within itself undreamt-of possibilities for good; for himself, he expected that soon there would be five millions of people within the scope of these Sunday afternoon classes. It has a broad platform; all Evangelical denominations have found it easy of acceptance. Moreover, it is independent; it is self-supporting, and self-governing. Another feature is its power of adaptation to varying conditions and surroundings.

There are three things, Mr. Blackham thought, that the P.S.A. does not want—greater public éclat, rules that would restrict its freedom of development, and a multiplicity of conferences and organisation that would divert the energies of the workers from their proper work. Two things they did want—prayer and push. In closing, Mr. Blackham expressed an intense longing that out of the P.S.A. there should spring such spiritual revival as would sweep through and uplift all the churches in the land.

It would be profitless to report in any detail the subsequent discussion. After Mr. Blackham's address it was not surprising that no one seemed ready with a formal motion in favour of national federation. Indeed a delegate from Hastings—a Church of England man, but secretary of a P.S.A. that meets in a Congregational church there—moved that such a step is at present inexpedient; and his motion, after due discussion, became the unanimous finding of the meeting. An addendum was afterwards made to the resolution recommending the formation of local or district federations, for the purposes of mutual encouragement and help. It was made clear at the same time that these federations should not possess any legislative power of interference with individual meetings.

A proposal was also on the tapis to start a national organ of the P.S.A., and a motion to that effect was actually submitted to the meeting. It became clear, however, to the minds of all, that as no national organisation was at present to be brought into existence, there was no authoritative machinery for the running of a Press organ, and the proposal was ultimately withdrawn.

A well-deserved vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings, Mr. Barrett having, in a closing word, expressed the hope that all the delegates would return home more desirous than ever that the P.S.A. should become the power of God unto salvation to the souls of men.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE TREMBLING MEDIATOR.

Heb. xii. 21.—So terrible was the sight that Moses said I exceedingly fear and quake.

Was this fear and trembling which Moses exhibited merely fright on his own account, as almost all commentators assume; or was it not rather for his people for whom he trembled, when acting as mediator betwixt God and them, at a time when their sin had exposed them to "the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the Lord was wrath against (them) to destroy them"?

These words just quoted from Deut. ix. 19 seem to give us the key to the right answer to this question; for the Greek translation (LXX.) renders "I was afraid" by the very word rendered in Heb. xii. 21, "I exceedingly fear." Thus it appears that the reference in the latter passage is not only to Exodus xix., but also to Deut. ix., where Moses himself speaks of his fear when he came down from the Mount and found the people exposed to God's wrath on account of their flagrant idolatry.

But here we must meet the difficulty, which most commentators raise, that this was another occasion, forty days afterwards, and not that referred to in Exodus xix., which they suppose to be the one here alone contemplated, and which they assume alone furnishes the outward accompaniments of terror—the fire, the tempest spoken of in Heb. xii. 18-20.

We owe to Bengel, that keen-sighted expositor, the answer to this difficulty. He points out that in Deut. ix. 15 it is expressly said that as Moses came down from the Mount "the Mount burned with fire," so that the physical cause of terror still existed, and probably had existed during the forty days of his absence, but what greatly added to the cause of fear was the fact that in the meanwhile "they had turned aside quickly out of the way which the Lord had commanded them." The fire was now not merely a symbol of God's anger against sin in the abstract, but here were a people exposed to this anger "because of all your sins which ye sinned, in doing wickedly in the sight of the Lord, to provoke Him to anger." Well might Moses, not for his own sake, but for that of his people for whom he was mediator, say "I exceedingly fear and quake."

How beautiful is the contrast thus presented in Heb. xii. 18-24 between the two mediators of the two covenants, which are there described as connected with the two mountains, Sinai and Sion. At the close of the description of Sinai is presented to us the mediator of that covenant trembling with fear on account of God's wrath against sin, which even his own intercession for Israel was unable wholly to avert. At the corresponding place, in the description of Mount Sion, stands "Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant," not trembling for fear on account of his people, but with "the blood of sprinkling" which speaketh pardon and peace, a peace as secure as that which He Himself enjoys. "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you. . . . Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." H. E. B.

VIVISECTION IN INDIA.—A protest, signed by the Lord Chief Justice of England and others, has been forwarded to Lord Lansdowne, Viceroy of India, and the members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, with reference to the Indian Bill now under consideration, which is on the model of the English Act of 1876, for the regulation of vivisection experiments. In this document the attempt to control and restrain vivisection in this country is declared to have been a signal failure, so far as justice and mercy to dumb animals are concerned; and seeing that vivisection is now illegal in India, the signatories trust that the members of Council may see fit to retain the present law, which is an efficient preventive of cruelty, and that a door may not be opened to the repetition of the cruelties perpetrated in the laboratories of Europe.

AT SUPPER IN ST. GILES'.

We have attended the famous "thieves' suppers," as they were formerly styled, almost every year since they were founded, and great has been the change accomplished. In early days it was truly a supper to thieves, and the guests were unmistakeably miserable men who lived by their wits. Gradually a few reformed men appeared as Mr. Wheatley's work began to tell. Now the meeting is virtually a thankful gathering of men and boys who have been rescued, and are leading honest and industrious lives.

This annual feast was held on Wednesday week, when some 200 boys and men were entertained to supper in the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, followed by a meeting, over which the Hon. Sir Gainsford Bruce presided.

Mr. E. Beard read, in the absence of the treasurer, a brief statement on the year's work, which said: The chief aim in all the operations is the prevention of crime, and the complete reformation of those who have fallen. Prisoners are met every morning immediately on their release from our London prisons, and invited to take their first meal after their liberation in our breakfast-rooms, near the prison gates. This immediate contact with friends who wish them well when they leave the prison is fraught with the best results. Those who have formed good resolutions are encouraged and strengthened; others are saved from falling a too easy prey to depraved companions, who are on the look-out for them at the prison gates. The work among boys has been still more effective, for juvenile offenders have fallen off to the extent of 80 per cent. Six years ago the number of young persons under twenty-one years of age in convict prisons was 234, but now it is only forty-five. Under the provisions of the First Offenders Act, a large number of lads are handed over to the Mission by judges and magistrates instead of being sent to prison, so that they are thus rescued. There are four boys' homes, and 511 have been received into these in the course of the year, 154 have been otherwise assisted, nine have been sent to sea, while ninety-one have been restored to parents and friends. In addition 647 situations have been found for boys.

Mr. Wheatley described how he first entered a den of thieves, and added:—Since that day many who have made my acquaintance on leaving prison have become changed men and good citizens. The scenes witnessed in early days led me to join with other friends, and to make great efforts to rescue the young, and not a few have been saved from a life of crime. Since we gave the first meal, over a quarter of a million on leaving prison have partaken of the free breakfast given morning by morning, while the Word of God is sounded in their ears. Who can tell what the results will be?

The Chairman (Sir Gainsford Bruce) showed that while the duty of the Government is ever to repress crime, the duty of good citizens is to reform the criminal and prevent crime. This the St. Giles' Christian Mission is doing in a very marked degree, and in so doing it must be liberally and worthily supported. Addresses followed by Messrs. M. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., James Judd, J.P., and R. Anderson, LL.D. (of the Criminal Investigation Department), and such police magistrates as Messrs. H. C. Bennett, John Dickinson, and Horace Smith. The testimony borne by these to the genuine results of the Mission in saving and reforming men and boys who seemed hopelessly entangled in a life of crime, was very emphatic and telling. The distribution of prizes to a number of boys who had kept their situations over a year, as also to one lad who had recovered from a young thief a large amount of money stolen from his master, provided additional evidence of the value of the work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—Under the auspices of the Christian Harbour Lights branch of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, a large meeting of sailors and others was held in the Society's new headquarters on Thursday evening. Mr. Theo. Howard presided, and gave a luminous address on the need of every one seeking the renewing power of the Holy Spirit. Mr. Maynard spoke of misdirected effort on the part of those who have a desire to be Christians. Rev. G. Hill read extracts from letters recently written by sailors, in which gladsome reference was made to the sustaining power of the Saviour to keep them in the midst of troubles at sea and temptations on shore. Happy testimonies followed from other Christian seamen.

A PARTY OF CRIPPLES.

The Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, was well filled on Wednesday evening last, on the occasion of a sale of work in connection with Mr. C. L. Boyer's Drift Children's Mission. The most interesting portion of the congregation was a party of three hundred juvenile cripples—Mr. Boyer's Home Cripples' Band. The children arrived at the Hall early in the afternoon, some wheeled in perambulators and mail-carts, others walking with the help of sticks and crutches, and again others conveyed in the arms of friends. Some of the vehicles had weary little burdens that have not for months known what it is to sleep on a bed; the humble coach is occupied by night as well as by day. Altogether forty "machines," of many shapes and sizes, were admitted.

How gleeful were some of the pale faces, how gladsome some of the bent and bowed forms! The progress of the little cripples, aged five years and upwards, was a touching sight; most of them were ill-nourished, and many insufficiently clothed. Being invited to a tea-party, they were all filled with joy. Not too frequently do such red-letter days come round; so the march into the Hall was pleasant to the little ones though painful to compassionate beholders.

The meal was a great treat. In the course of visits to the homes of the cripples, Mr. Boyer and his helpers have taught them Gospel hymns, and some of these were rehearsed during the afternoon, in anticipation of a performance later on in the presence of relatives and friends. The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. J. F. Shorey, who remarked upon the character of the work. To brighten the lives of the cripples of East London is indeed a Christian act, and he appealed to all present to do what they could by way of rendering assistance.

Mr. Boyer gave an account of his work. More than 8000 visits had been made to the homes of cripples for the purpose of exchanging toys and books; 2182 children had been taken to the park, 430 to Epping Forest, and 203 to the seaside. Mr. Thos. Richardson remarked upon the originality of Mr. Boyer's plans. The children look upon him as a genuine friend. He had accomplished what others had attempted without success. Rev. Dr. Tully, of Chicago, warmly sympathised with the work. Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. D. H. Fry and F. E. Paynter. The speeches were interspersed with songs and solos by the crippled children and friends of the mission.

Though the things that were said in praise of Mr. Boyer's devotion were pleasant to hear, it was to the singing of the cripples that the bulk of the people listened with greatest interest. Part-songs were rendered with much feeling, and still more feelingly heard. It was quite moving to see the weak and suffering forms of those who sweetly sang "A Message for You," and "God will Take Care of You." Through the kindness of friends Mr. Boyer has of late been able to supply clothing to many of his poor cripples. Ladies have been making up the articles to measure, so that they may properly fit the little forms which they are to cover. There are other ways in which help may be given to this work. Communications to Mr. Boyer should be addressed 29, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

GENERAL BOOTH IN DUBLIN.

General Booth lately visited Dublin and addressed two meetings in the Metropolitan Hall, Christian Union Buildings. At the afternoon meeting the Hall was filled, very many young people were present, and ministers of all denominations. The afternoon subject was "Boundless Salvation," and the "General" spoke at length on the perfect cleansing from sin that there is in the blood of Christ.

At the evening meeting there was a large attendance. The leader of the Salvationists on this occasion addressed himself to the question of his social scheme, and his remarks were listened to with great attention. It was announced that a new barracks to carry on the philanthropic and religious work of the Salvation Army is about to be erected in Richmond-street, Dublin, and it is hoped the building will be finished in two or three months. A considerable sum will be required to accomplish this undertaking. H. J. F. R.

MR. W. T. STEAD IN CHICAGO.

Last Sunday night (says a writer in the New York Independent) Mr. W. T. Stead finished his mission to Chicago. If he was not presented with the freedom of the city, he assumed, and, for two weeks, exercised, all the privileges of a citizen. His efforts were directed along three lines: He made a most earnest plea through the press and by public address for the preservation of the White City. He warmly advocated the removal of the Manufactures Building for social and civic purposes to the Lake Front; and he pleaded at two great meetings, held in Central Music Hall, Sunday afternoon and evening, in Christ's name, for the social and moral renovation of the city—not, as he said, because Chicago was so much worse than other large cities, but because he believed it would be more responsive.

The spirit of his mission is indicated by the following quotation:—

> Oh, how sorry I am for Christ. His heart so full of love for men as ours are not. His eye sees all, He knows all the bitterness of human hearts, He knows it all and bears it all. We get one, two, or three cases before us, and we feel as if our hearts would break. He must bear it all. That is the real cross of Christ. That is the cross which you are fashioning for him in Chicago, and we are fashioning for him in London, and all are fashioning in whose hearts love is not.

His longing to get the ear of the wretched men who seek a night's lodging in the station-house was illustrated when he said he wanted to lie down beside them a little while so that they might feel that he sympathised with them. Undoubtedly this desire to put himself in the place of these classes of society, who are at the bottom of the ladder, as well as with those who are seeking social redemption, led him to say and do things, as their representative, which he would not have said from the ideal standpoint of W. T. Stead. This effort to see through their eyes, to speak from their hearts as well as to their hearts, certainly gave to superficial, and even perhaps to careful, observers, abundant occasion for his being misunderstood and misrepresented.

Mr. Stead had spent Sunday night in visiting the slums. He sent out his invitations into the highways and hedges, and sought to compel them to come in to hear a brother, one who had seen the inside of a prison. While the audiences in the afternoon and evening were of a very mixed description, composed of the best, and perhaps of some of the worst, elements in the city, the purpose of the meetings was good, and the outcome will doubtless be good. It was well for different classes of society to speak with each other about civic interests. Excitement ran high. But Mr. Stead had every speaker well in hand.

The object of the meeting in the afternoon was to ascertain the facts, that in the evening to find a remedy. Mr. Stead not only projected these meetings, but bore the expense of them. At the conclusion of the second meeting, a nomination committee of seven was appointed to designate a committee of twenty-one, representative of labour, commerce, education, and religion.

Whatever may have been written or telegraphed over the country, Chicago owes a debt of gratitude to the fearless prophet who came with a message in Christ's name in behalf of suffering thousands.

[In his efforts as well as his desire to do good, Mr. Stead sets an example to us all, the Christlikeness of which we gladly recognise. But we take serious exception to the above quotation of his words. The first sentence strikes us as painfully inappropriate. But passing that by, the essence of the most mischievous of present-day fallacies is contained in the assertion that his sorrow over the crime and suffering in the world is "the real cross of Christ." If so, there is no hope of salvation for any soul of man. For there is no blood-shedding in his present glory. "He died unto sin once," and by that death He made atonement. His "real cross" was his suffering unto blood on Calvary. In the cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" we learn the reason of his broken heart. He who knew no sin was made sin for us, was made a curse for us. "God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." That was "the real cross," and to set it aside for any other experience He ever knew or ever will know, is to subvert the Gospel of God, and to substitute for it another gospel which is not another.—Ed.]

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 17.—PSALM CXXIX.

Israel represents here the people of God. Their story from the moment of the new birth is generally more or less one of affliction. It can hardly be otherwise. They have passed out of the earth and time spheres into union with the Eternal and Unseen. Citizens of the New Jerusalem, accepting its laws as their principles, its King as their Lord. This necessarily brings them into collision with the maxims and ways of men, and arouses their hostility. But though there have been the many afflictions, there has always been the restraining power of God. As though in their case, as in that of Job, there was a thus far and no further, beyond which the enemy dare not go. The knife may not cut the 100th part of an inch deeper than the Lord of our life permits.

The strokes of the scourge make long lines in the quivering flesh, like furrows in the brown earth. So Jesus gave his back to the smiters (Isa. l. 6). But in all such furrows God sows the seeds of a blessed "afterward." Afterward they yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness to such as have been exercised thereby.

The psalmist then predicts the fate of the wicked. Withered grass, unmourned, unnursed, such will be their fate. Do any read these words who are fast bound? Let them ask the righteous Lord to cut the cords of wicked men or evil spirits, of habit or besetment, of adverse circumstances or entanglement.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 18.—PSALM CXXX.

Sometimes we fall into depths. But we are as near God there as on the mountain top. Only those who descend can ascend. The home is only reached by way of the river. There is no depth so low but that a cry may ascend from it to God. And no suppliant, however lowly, will ever find God inattentive.

The chief cause of depression to a holy man is the memory of his sins. The more he knows of God, the more aware he becomes of his own depravity and guilt. The sense of growing imperfection is a good sign; it indicates that the soul is getting nearer to the infinitely perfect God. But our iniquities are not marked. We are forgiven. We stand in the spotless righteousness of Christ. We have redemption through his blood. And the sense of what we owe Him makes us more fearful of again sinning against Him or grieving Him than if He were wrathful or vindictive.

Wait on God. He will come and not keep silence. He will bring thee out of the depths, and set thy feet on a sure place. And with the waiting combine the assured and buoyant hope with which the God of hope fills them that believe. His coming truth is as sure as daybreak to the weary watchers' eyes scanning the East for the first herald ray of dawn. Here are strains of melodious comfort! Mercy: plenteous redemption: redemption from all iniquity. These things are with the Lord, and they are stored in his secret place for us to claim, and appropriate, and enjoy.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 19.—PSALM CXXXI.

This sweet psalm breathes the spirit of true humility and meekness. Your heart must learn to say it again and again, until it acquires its spirit of resignation and faith. Above all, ask the Holy Spirit to inspire within you the meekness and gentleness of your Lord, who emptied Himself, and became poor, and said of Himself, "I am meek and lowly in heart."

It is wise to live in the lowland valleys, if God permits; we are saved from many a blast, and many a dangerous ravine. Envy and ingratitude have no power against us, when we are content to be unknowing and unknown. All this is altered when God calls us to occupy some prominent position, or when the devil sets us on a pinnacle of the temple. But, so far as our own planning and scheming go, let us choose the lowlier, obscurer paths of life.

The soul is unquiet. It needs stilling and soothing. Argue with yourself; sing to yourself lullabies of trust and hope; remind yourself of all the blessedness which Jesus promised to the merciful and meek. Above all, wean yourself away from the sources of your own energy, from all that would minister to your self-sufficiency and pride, from all the world's boasted pomp and power. Weaned from your own ways and schemes and thoughts, hope in God from now and for evermore. He will do for thee more than thou couldst do for thyself.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 20.—PSALM CXXXII.

This psalm surely dates from the opening of Solomon's Temple. Where God's work is consummated, He always remembers the afflictions of the builders, and the work of those who commenced it amid the darkness and discomfort of foundation-laying. In the joy of harvest God thinks of the sowers. We often make preparations for results which we do not live to see, but God credits us with them, and He says, "Thou didst well, in that it was in thine heart."

Would that we had more sleepless nights in our anxiety for God's work (4). See how the generations link hands. The Mighty One of Jacob, the Jehovah of David, the God of Solomon, pervaded by one purpose, animated by one thought (5). The ark passed through many adventures before it came to its resting-place, emblem of Christ and his Church.

8-10. Now from the assembled throng there goes up the mighty prayer, the first words of which are borrowed from the lips of Moses. Strength, righteousness, and joy, become God's service.

11-18. One by one God takes up the several items of prayer which had passed from the lips of his people, and answers them. His promise to David, his choice of Zion, his promise to rest and dwell there, his purpose to make her priests and saints holy and glad; each answer fits into the mould of each petition with an exceeding abundance of blessing, like our God.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21.—PSALM CXXXIII.

The unity of Christ and his people make this psalm foreshadow the Epistle to the Ephesians. In the sight of God, Aaron and his sons prefigure the oneness between Christ the Great High Priest, and all those who, being sons of God, belong to the priestly line. The idea of unity is carried out even further. The whole Church seems represented in its Priest and Head, and as the anointing oil shed upon the head of Aaron streamed down to the skirts of his garments, so do the blessings accumulated in the Person of Jesus pass through all ranks and divisions of his people, to the uttermost of time and place, which are, so to speak, the skirts of his robes. What though thou art but as the furze that sweeps the ground, the precious oil of the Holy Ghost is for thee, and for all like thee, and therefore thou and they are one.

The comparison of the closing words is equally significant. As formerly the Holy Ghost was compared to oil, so here to dew. The dews of Hermon were plentiful, and partook of the aromatic plants and trees that grew there. It seemed far for it to travel, but to the mind of the psalmist it appeared to fall even on Zion, severed by a hundred miles of country. So far also the grace of Christ travels through the ages, and where it comes it will bring life.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22.—PSALM CXXXIV.

The last song of degrees seems suited for its position, because by this time the pilgrim bands would have reached the temple, worshipped there, realised their unity, and prepared to go forth in the deepening shadows to find lodging for the night. Before they go they address the night-watch just come on duty, and bid them bless God, as they stand through the night in his sanctuary.

The praise of God should never cease, and probably it never does cease, for as the morning goes round the earth, it is ever calling on fresh bands of worshippers. And when the active servants of God go to their beds, the great army of sufferers pray through the watches of the night. Mark, it is not to pray, but to bless, that we are incited. And it is wonderful to see how many reasons for blessing God are discovered by those whose life seemed draped in darkness.

The psalm ends with the response of the priest's night-watch. On the retreating crowds they call for blessing, and ask that the Maker of heaven and earth may engirdle them with tender mercy. Those that bless God are best able to bless men, as Melchisedek who first blessed the Most High God, and then the patriarch; and perhaps none bring so much blessing on the church, or the world, as those who stand by night in God's temple, their hours filled with worship.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23.—PSALM CXXXV.

A Psalm of Praise. It begins and ends with Hallelujah! Throughout its course it enumerates many things, which are among the more terrible acts of God, but concerning them all it demands that men should praise Him. It is difficult to understand God, but we may always praise Him for what He is in Himself, and for what He has promised to be to those who trust Him.

Here are arguments for praise! That He is good, that praise-singing is pleasant: that He has chosen his people to be his peculiar treasure: that He is great as well as good: that his good pleasure is love: that vapours, lightnings, rain and wind, obey his absolute behest: that He will smite our foes to the ground: that out of our dark times He will give lands for an inheritance; and that his name will be unchanged amid the fret and passage of the generation of time.

What a contrast is presented to God by idols! His mouth speaks gracious words; his eyes follow every step; his ears are open to the softest call. Let us who trust Him resemble Him. Beholding Him let us be changed, and then, whether belonging to the commonwealth of Israel, or to Aaron's priesthood, or numbered amid Levi's commoner ministers, let us pour forth the unceasing psalm of blessing and praise.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 24.

The Birth of Jesus.—Matt. ii. 1-11.

Golden Text.—Matt. i. 21.

Bethlehem (1) is called "of Judea" to distinguish it from another town of the same name in Zebulon (Josh. xix. 15). It was about six miles from Jerusalem. Though an insignificant place, it possessed many very interesting associations. There Ruth gleaned; David was born, and afterwards anointed as king; and prophecy pointed it out as the birthplace of the coming Messiah (Mic. v. ii.; see Matt. ii. 5, 6). Its name means House of Bread, and acquires new significance by this event. Herod (1) reigned as King of Judea under the Roman Emperor Cæsar Augustus. He is called Herod the Great, and was the first of the Edomite kings. He pursued a crafty policy, flattering the Pharisees by rebuilding the Temple in great magnificence, yet courting the favour of Rome by concessions to heathenism, and by introducing Grecian customs. A few years after the birth of Jesus he died in great misery, when seventy years old, and after a reign of about thirty-eight years. Wise men (1). About these there has been very much speculation. "The name Magi originally belong to a priestly caste among the Persians and Medes, who formed the king's privy council. . . . . Subsequently the name was applied to those Eastern philosophers who studied astrology, the interpretation of dreams, and occult science."

His Star (2). Attempts have been made to explain this by some natural event in the heavens, but without any great success. A miraculous event like that of the birth of Jesus may well be heralded by a miraculous sign. It appears to have guided the wise men first to Jerusalem and thence to the very house in Bethlehem where the new-born King was found (9). Not the stable where the birth took place (Luke ii. 7), but the house in which Joseph and Mary had secured a temporary home.

The practical teaching of this lesson is suggested by the three classes of men to whom it introduces us. These classes also exist to-day.

I. Earnest Seekers.—Such were the wise men.

Note (1). They made diligent use of their opportunities. We have no means of discovering how the Magi learned about Jesus. Had the prophecy of Balaam anything to do with it (Numb. xxiv. 17)? They were careful to follow the light they had, and so were led to more. Are we making similar use of our opportunities? If they could find Jesus with so little to guide them, how they condemn the indifference of many! (2) They put themselves to great inconvenience. Such a journey was not undertaken without difficulty and danger. They had a need which they believed the coming King could supply, and they made efforts to reach Him. If their journey, and the object of it, were known in their own country, would not many ridicule it? Are you as ready to brave ridicule and to meet difficulty in finding Jesus? (3) They made Jesus the object of their search. Neither the star in the heavens, nor the splendour of the reigning king in Jerusalem, satisfied them; they inquired for Him. Nothing short of Him will suffice for you. (4) They were rightly led to Him, as all true seekers will be. God made use of men who had no desire to find Him themselves (4), in order to direct these seekers; and even put a miraculous star in the heavens for their benefit. He as surely guides every true seeker.

II. Instructed Formalists.—The chief priests and scribes can be so described (4). They knew much more than the wise men. Without any hesitation they could tell the place of Messiah's birth. They are well instructed in the letter of the Scriptures; but how strange it appears that they are not at all concerned to find Him. No people are so guilty as those who remain indifferent to the claims of Christ while they know the truth concerning Him (see John v. 39, 40). You know what He is, what He has done, what are the consequences of receiving or rejecting Him; what use are you making of your knowledge? The greater our light, the greater our responsibility, and our guilt if we abuse it.

III. Helpless Opponents.—Herod is the type of this class; and though he possessed such power, he is not improperly described as helpless. He was as hypocritical as he was cruel. He appears as an earnest inquirer (4-7), and as a would-be worshipper (8), but only in order to accomplish his evil designs. The slaughter of the innocents of Bethlehem shows what means he was willing to use in order to compass his end. The reason for his opposition was fear (3). His life had been full of crimes, and "a guilty conscience makes cowards of us all." His own throne was not secure if a new and righteous king was to reign. Test your character by this—Are you troubled or glad at the thought that Jesus, who came before, is coming again? Opposition against Christ is always helpless in the end.

To which of these three classes do we belong?

For the Young.

CHILDHOOD.

By Rev. John Byles.*

There are four things I want you to remember:

1. Childhood is the time to be happy. God's law is that all young creatures should be happy. Older people have their cares and troubles. Children are free from these; they ought therefore to be happy. But they can only be happy when they do what is right. If they yield to temper, if they disobey conscience, if they give way to jealousy or envy, they are sure to be unhappy. So I ask you to put away these things, and instead to be loving, honest, and true, for it is your duty to be happy.

2. Childhood is the time to make other people happy. Children are intended to be God's sunbeams in the home. They are by their cheerfulness and goodness to be "strongholds" for tired men and women; as the psalmist said, "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings Thou hast ordained strength."

3. Childhood is the time to grow. You are to grow in stature; your body is to grow and your limbs are to grow. In order that they may do this you must give them exercise and play. But you are to grow, too, in other ways—in wisdom, in good habits, and good thoughts, in the love of what is true and right, in the hatred of what is false and mean. Of that wonderful Boy who lived at the carpenter's shop in Nazareth it was said: "He advanced in wisdom and in stature, and in favour with God and man." This is the very purpose of childhood; it is the use to which you ought to put it.

4. Lastly, childhood is the time to find God. There are some things you cannot find until you are grown up, nor do you need to find them, for such things you can afford to wait. But it is not so with the finding of God. "I love them that love Me," He says, "and those that seek Me early shall find Me." "Suffer little children to come unto Me," said Jesus, "and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

How are you to find God? How are children, while they are children, to discover the greatest and most wonderful of beings? Hear what was said by one who had found God: "He that loveth knoweth God, for God is Love." And we must love not only those who love us, but even those who love us not. This was the way Jesus loved, and this is the love of God. And those who love like this find God; they dwell in God and God in them.

Now, boys and girls, do not sit and dream too long by the river-side. The ever-moving stream of time is quickly carrying away your childhood. Wake, then, ere its golden hours be gone. Wake, that while there is yet time you may use this priceless treasure well. And remember what I said, "I love them that love Me, and those that seek Me early shall find Me."

* From one of the chapters of The Boy and the Angel. Sunday morning talks to the children. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin). A series of delightful homilies, founded largely on historical incident or legend, but each pressing home some simple homely lesson for daily life. For intelligent children it will be at once attractive and most helpful as a prize or New Year's present.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.

In the southern part of this kingdom we are familiar enough with those excellent places called orphanages, where the parentless little people are received, clad, fed, educated, and trained for honest industrious life-work. Away up in the north of Scotland there is an orphanage, which is the only one of its kind over a large district of country. It was started about thirteen years ago by some good men and women who had the love of Christ and of little children and their hearts, and whose Christianity was more than fine feelings and pious words. They had learned from the lips of Christ that the people who truly loved Him were those who kept his commandments; and one of the last commandments He gave was "Feed my lambs." So they built a house on the outskirts of Inverness, the beautiful capital of the Scottish Highlands, and they gathered into it the boys and girls whose natural protectors had been taken away by the cold, rude hand of death. From small beginnings the Home prospered and grew in favour with the people, so that now sixty orphaned boys and girls are found under the sheltering roof of Victoria House. Since the Home was opened a good many of the lads and lasses trained in it have gone out in the great work-a-day world, and are now not only making their own way, but doing something to help the institution to which they owe so much.

We have been reading the little report of the orphanage for the past year, and have found many things in it to interest us. First of all we notice that these sixty Highland bairns seem to live pretty much like the sparrows—"from hand to mouth" the report says. But we recollect that our Lord said about the sparrows: "Your Heavenly Father feedeth them." So we need not fear for the orphans; they will not lack their daily bread while there is so much gold and silver in the land, and plentiful seasons bringing forth corn and milk and honey. Is not each boy or girl of more value than many sparrows?

But the life even of a little child is "more than meat." We notice in the report that a new School and Recreation Room is about to be built, so that the lads and lasses need not be compelled to walk into the town to school in the stormy winter weather of these Highland regions. Some money is needed yet to meet the cost of rearing this school, and we doubt not the means will be provided.

Sixty healthy hungry children need a full larder, and it is very interesting indeed to see in this report how many different hands have helped in filling it. All sorts of people have sent all sorts of gifts, from meat and potatoes to kippers and jam; these northern children evidently share the common weakness for the last named relish.

Perhaps we have said enough to awaken the interest of our young readers in this good work. Inverness is a great holiday centre for tourists in the summer months; if any readers of The Christian, young or old, should visit the fair city next year on pleasure bent, we hope they will remember to call at the Orphanage on the heights above the town. Then we are certain they will not only be charmed with the place and its inmates, but will be glad to help in its efficient support. Anyone who would like a copy of the modest little report should address the hon. secretary, Mr. George Walker, 26, Ness Bank, Inverness, who is one of the founders.

TO A CHILD.

By F. E. Weatherley.

What can you do, my darling?
Why do you ask in fear?
God sent the little children,
And He will guide them here.
Everyone has her place, dear;
All have their work to do,
Whether they're great and noble,
Or little and young, like you.

Try to make others better,
Try to make others glad;
The world has so much of sorrow,
So much that is hard and bad.
Love yourself last, my darling;
Be gentle, and kind, and true,
True to yourself and others,
As God is true to you.

Be thankful for all your gladness;
Do what you know is right;
And whether 'tis hard or easy,
Do what you do with might.
And whether men praise or blame you,
Whatever the world may say—
In a world that is purer and better
You shall find your place some day.

From "Tens and Elevens."

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Liverpool, Admiral-street Mission Hall, Dec. 14; Newcastle-under-Lyme, Dec. 18; Plumstead, Dec. 19; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Waterhouses, co. Durham, to Dec. 17; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Mission Hall, Gay-street, Scotland-road, Liverpool, to Dec. 20; Mr. George Goodman, Bow, to Dec. 17; Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Talgarth; Mr. Edward Hughes, West Hill, Wandsworth, Dec. 14; Holiday Meetings for School Boys in Oddfellows' Hall, Edinburgh, by University men, Dec. 27 to Jan. 5, 1894; Mr. Jas. S. Tyler, Waterhouses, co. Durham, till Dec. 17; Consett, Dec. 18, 19.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Dec. 17, Esther ii. 1-11; 18, ii. 17-23; 19, iii. 1-15; 20, iv. 1-17; 21, v. 1-14; 22, vi. 1-14; 23, vii. 1-10.

ROBIN DINNER FUND.—We are constrained, from certain correspondence that has recently appeared in The Financial Times, to caution our readers against confounding "The Robin Society," which is issuing public appeals for help, with the well-known and long-established "Robin Dinner Fund," of which Mr. Brock and Mr. Kirk are secretaries.

A CHILD IN A THEATRE.

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

A mother wishing to give pleasure to her darling little girl took her one night to a theatre. The child was one of the Lord's own lambs, and often gave proof of loving and trusting the Saviour. Her Bible was read daily, and the portion read was prayed over. The Holy Spirit was taking of the things of Christ, and gradually making them known to her.

When in the theatre she felt she had no right to be there, for God was not there.

The play went on. Great was the applause. The child grew agitated, and begged to be taken home. So the mother drew her trembling little one very close to herself, but finding that did not allay the distress, rose and took her darling home, and there tried to soothe and calm her.

What, dear reader, do you suppose was the cause of the child's grief? Ah, it was on account of the felt absence of the Lord Jesus Christ. Where Jesus is not there can be no joy, no peace, no rest. In his presence there is fulness of joy (Psa. xvi. 11). Oh, dear mothers, do take your children where Jesus is "in the midst" (Luke xxiv. 36). There are many young hearts just yearning to "see Jesus" (John xii. 21). So help them, mothers, to see Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God" (Mark x. 14).

The theatre and pantomime season is again close upon us. I would, therefore, urge mothers to consider these few words, and let not this holy Christmas time be a time for taking the precious little souls committed to your care to places which do not tend to draw nearer to Jesus. A.

"ONE GLANCE CAN SAVE."

"One sin can lose a human soul,"
I heard them say with sinking heart,
For, oh! if one sin loses all
How can I ever claim my part
Of heaven's love?
Then spake a voice, "One glance can save,
One glance above!"

Oh, Lord! thou knowest every thought,
My deepest heart thou canst inquire.
If one long-planted sin be caught
Lingering there in darkness dire,
Oh, pity me!
One glance, thou Saviour on the cross
I cast on Thee!

Then, when I see thy precious blood
For all mankind about to flow
In one grace-giving, hallowing flood,
I can rejoice, and do, to know,
Tho' strong the ill,
One glance on Thee can save, for Thou
Art stronger still!

And shall I rest or sit in peace,
Saved by the love that pitied me;
While all around the crowds increase,
Who never cast a glance on Thee?
Or could I rest
Until to all who pass, I have
Thy name confessed?

My life should tell it every day;
My joy must show it while I live,
I'd make it known through life's dark way,
That Christ the Saviour will forgive
Sin's weakest slave;
And there is hope for the most lost;
One glance can save.

"Home," Bucharest. F. Spedding.

THE TRACT UNION FOR PRAYER AND WORK held its second anniversary meeting at the Religious Tract Society House, 65, St. Paul's Churchyard, on December 4. Guests were received in the library and committee room, where tea was laid, and was partaken of by about 100 members and friends. The meeting was held in the saloon. The first speaker was Rev. G. Pentecost, D.D., who gave a thoughtful, earnest, and eloquent address. In dwelling upon the society's work of tract-producing, he pointed out that a tract is illustrative, explanatory, or hortatory, and showed how it may be the means of awakening an idea, even if it does not give a new idea. In passing, the speaker paid a high tribute to the value of the "Present Day" series. Rev. J. P. Hobson followed, and reported that 216 persons had joined the Union in the year, making a total of 630 on the books. Small grants of tracts to the number of 11,000 had been made to members.

SOWING AND GATHERING.

Some of your readers may be pleased to hear how remarkably the Lord has been with us in our brief visit to Canada. I left Chicago on November 3, and reached Hamilton, Ontario, where for ten days thousands heard the sound of life, deep interest prevailing. The Bible readings and services for preaching Christ crowded out the different buildings in which the meetings were held. Invitations came in numbers, but as I was due in New York on the 25th, I could only pay a brief visit to Brantford and then Toronto.

I shall never forget the three weeks spent in Ontario. Beyond expression, grateful was it to meet and hear of hundreds brought to Christ when we were there in 1874. Only to his praise, and as showing the power of the Living Christ, would I state that from several leading Christian men the testimony was heard, "The city bears to this day the impress and result of those wonderful meetings." I remembered to have been in the inquiry room at that time, as late, or rather as early, as one and two a.m. The work went on for months after we left the city. It was with sincere regret that I could only give six days in Brantford, but they were blessed gatherings.

The chief result seen at this time has been the reviving of the Lord's people, and the profound interest awakened and taken in the preaching. The Bible readings in reference to the Lord's coming have been attended by thousands in the three cities; certainly I believe the cry is being raised of the Lord, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet Him." Numbers of the ministers told of wonderful blessing received there, and when with feelings of regret we parted, it was with great disinclination to "move on."

I reached Toronto on the Tuesday about noon, and went to the home of our beloved brother, Rev. E. Harris. The afternoon saw a large company to the Bible reading, as also in the evening, despite the storm of snow and rain. The four days spent here were full of blessing, the meetings gathering hundreds who had either been saved and profited in years past, or who came because of the interest which had been excited at Hamilton and Brantford. After fifteen hours' travel I reached New York, 550 miles distant, and had a hearty welcome to "Berachah," the large centre of our brother Simpson's work in this city. Lord's Day saw crowded gatherings at the Gospel Tabernacle in Forty-fourth-street and Eighth-avenue, whilst in the afternoon the Y.M.C.A. at Brooklyn gathered fully 1000 men. I expect to return by the Lucania, sailing December 9th.

New York, November 28. Henry Varley.

MR. LANE AT WEST NORWOOD.

This evangelist has concluded a six days' mission at Lansdowne Hall, from Sunday, December 3, to Friday, the 8th. Much earnest and united prayer preceded his visit, and the result has been greatly to the praise and glory of God. A number of persons gave their names as having definitely and deliberately yielded themselves to the Lord, while many others were manifestly wrought upon by the Word.

Our beloved brother's Bible-readings were felt to be most helpful to the children of God, and the week in all respects will be remembered by many with thankfulness and praise. While the Master continues to send such labourers into the field, there is no fear of the Gospel losing its hold on the people who are privileged to hear. It has been a great joy to pastor and people to have had such a worker in their midst. W. F. G.

CHARITABLE FUNDS.—Says the London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian:—"On all hands there is but one confession as to the financial condition of most of our benevolent and philanthropic institutions. Whether for work at home or abroad, the year is ending badly. There is a cutting down process on a large scale going on. In some cases it is simply deplorable. Institutions, which for years have helped the outcast and the poor, are unable to do so as has been their wont, and this at a time when the Government returns show an increased number of paupers, and when so many trades have been, and for some time are likely to be affected by the recent coal war. Just now there are opportunities for the exercise of a true benevolence which we have not had for many years."

[1284]

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

The varied operations of the Barbican Mission to the Jews are being carried on with energy, and attended with much encouragement. As the winter advances the reading-room is being more largely used, some forty or fifty Jews entering it daily. The evening Bible-classes are attended by an earnest few, who are instructed in Scripture truth, and led to see in Christ the Messiah of ancient promise. The Sunday-school is drawing together many little ones, and offers an opportunity for evangelising their parents. The principal occasion of Gospel preaching, however, is on the afternoons of Saturday and Sunday, when the meetings are well attended.

The last report of the work contains some deeply interesting cases of Jews coming out boldly for Christ. One day, at the close of a meeting, a young man introduced himself to the superintendent, Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, as his nephew, saying, "I should have made myself known to you before, but I was anxious to find out for myself what you had to say about the Crucified One. Now I must tell you that, from all I have seen and heard, I am fully convinced that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and I accept Him as my Saviour and Redeemer. God helping me, I am determined to follow Him, whatever the consequences may be." The young man confessed Christ before his Jewish brethren, and entreated them to search the Scriptures, as he had done, saying that if they asked God's help He would enable them to come to the light and truth. Mr. Lipshytz hoped that some day the Lord would fit this young man for his service, but the All-wise had other plans, for shortly afterwards he took the bold confessor to Himself. The last words of the convert were, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me."

Inquiring and outcast Jews are cared for by the Mission, which also endeavours, as far as possible, to assist other enterprises for the enlightenment of Israel. In pursuance of this purpose, a colporteur is engaged in France, and arrangements have been made for work in Alsace, with Strasburg as centre. This will be in conjunction with Rheinisch-Westfälische Society of Friends of Israel, who, owing to the prevalent anti-Semitic spirit, do not receive needed support from German-speaking Christians. In Hesseland, Pastor C. Wagner has for some time been working under the auspices of the Mission.

The weekly meeting of Jewish mothers, for sewing work and religious instruction, under the superintendence of Mrs. Lipshytz, is one of the most interesting held in the mission house, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C. People are visited in their homes, and the Scriptures distributed among them. Mr. Lipshytz has had the joy of receiving a number of believers into Christian fellowship, on a profession of their faith in Christ by baptism; and these, it is pleasing to add, are now leading consistent Christian lives, some at home, others in far-off lands.

EURASIAN CHILDREN.

Sir,—You have already called attention to our "Australian Homes Society for European and Eurasian Children" in your paper, and I have had the pleasure of receiving donations from some of your readers. Last July we sent out five children to our West Australian committee, having previously sent a lad of fifteen years old, making six young people in all. The children were met in Freemantle by the hon. sec. of the West Australia committee, and taken by her to the homes awaiting them. Since then we have received two letters from the chairman of the W.A. committee, applying for more children. We ask for prayer that the W.A. committee may select good Christian homes, that we may be guided to send the right children, and that money may be given as it is needed to provide outfits, passage money, and any premiums required. —Yours faithfully, C. B. Buxton, Hon. Sec.

Care of Rev. J. Peach, 116, Lower Circular-road, Calcutta.

MISSIONARIES AND MORALS.—At the annual convention of the Christian Mission, Bilaspur, C.P., India, resolutions were passed expressing hearty approval of all efforts to promote among the Indian races, social purity, temperance, and a better observance of the Lord's Day.

MISSION TO COALIES AND CARMEN.

By the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. William R. Rickett, several coal-merchants and their friends met at Sunnyfield, Hampstead, on the afternoon of Saturday week, to hear statements of the moral, social, and spiritual work among the coalies and carmen in North and South London, carried on by the two city missionaries specially set apart for that work. The company listened with rapt attention to the thrilling stories of the missionaries as they told of how some of the worst of characters, clad in rags, and having no soles to their boots, had been lifted up out of the depths of degradation and sin by accepting the simple story of the love of God in Christ Jesus to poor men. Here is one such story:—Mr. A—— could not understand the text in the Bible which says, "Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the Lord." The fact was, his so-called better half was anything but a helper to him. Every Monday morning the pawnshop was regularly visited, and the public-house opposite was the richer, while our coalie friend was the poorer for the frequent visits paid to this establishment; and it is not surprising that the poor fellow would sometimes say: "Look'ere, guv'nor, if you can convert my old woman you will be doing some good, for she pawns everything and neglects the children." And then, in his desperation, he would try to drown his misery in drink, making matters the worse rather than the better.

This unhappy pair were induced to come to one of the gatherings specially organised for the coalies and their wives. The woman came, leading a poor, dirty, neglected child by the hand, while she herself could scarcely stand, being then under the influence of drink; and there, in that meeting, husband and wife sat weeping bitterly, as the grace of God to poor sinful man was proclaimed, and the two on their knees resolved to lead a new life. Alas! for their good resolutions, made with good intent, but soon broken; and again the woman seemed to become possessed with devils, seven times worse than before, so that they were obliged to remove from one place to another because of their continual quarrelling.

"When the apostle Peter's friends could do nothing else they could pray for him, and in answer to their prayers God delivered him from the hand of Herod and the expectation of the people. So we prayed and God has heard our prayer. At the end of last year this man and wife stood up in our meeting and told of deliverance from the guilt and bondage of sin. To use their own words, the man said, "My home that used to be a little hell upon earth is now a little heaven upon earth"; and the woman said, "Yes; my husband that used to knock me about and give me black eyes now kisses me when he comes home"; and then to finish up, the man, with face all aglow, requested the prayers of God's people that both he and his wife might be kept in the good way. For ten months past the God of all grace has manifested not only his saving but keeping power; and this man declares had it not been for the efforts of this Mission under God, he might have been still in the darkness of sin and despair.

One of the interesting features of the meeting was the testimony borne by some coal-merchants as to the great improvement in the character of their men through the visits of the missionaries. It is desired to extend this work by adding two more missionaries, one for East and the other for West London.

Communications can be made to Mr. George R. Cole, district Secretary, London City Mission, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.

HEREFORD.—During the summer an open air mission has been held in Millbrook-street, Hereford, every Sunday. The workers have now secured an old disused mission hall, which we hope to open as an unsectarian Gospel Mission. It is hoped that a good work may be done, especially among the children.—J. R. Johnson, 115, St. Owen-street, Hereford.

MORLEY HOME FOR GOVERNESSES, NEEDLEWOMEN, AND SERVANTS.—This Home for worn-out, aged, and destitute persons, is situate at 25, Chatham-place, Paragon-road, Hackney, N.E., Miss Elizabeth Coales being the hon. superintendent. The report recently issued says: "During the past three years, nineteen inmates have, for longer or shorter periods, been benefited; and these have been representative of the different classes for whom the Home was intended. Several very needy outside cases have also received assistance as in former years. In 1890, I felt the strain of the Southend Home would be too much, and considered it advisable, for the time being at least, to withdraw from there. The many and varied duties that have presented themselves during these three years have left me very little time to devote to the interests of the Building Fund. The desire for a suitable structure, however, still remains. And hope whispers that, if not in my day, surely the same feeling will animate some other heart to carry out what I may lay down."

A SELECTION FROM

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S LIST OF PUBLICATIONS.

The PRESENTATION EDITIONS of the following Volumes are specially suitable for

Any of the undermentioned Volumes may be obtained of any Bookseller in the Kingdom; or will be sent post free by the Publishers, MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., on receipt of the published price.

Christmas and New Year Presents.

Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT will send post free to intending purchasers their

NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE,

which contains a Large Variety of Volumes specially suitable for CHRISTMAS PRESENTS AND NEW YEAR GIFTS.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Scripture Biographies.

A NEW VOLUME.

JOSHUA: AND THE LAND OF PROMISE.

With Nine Illustrations Specially Prepared and separately Printed on Toned Paper.

CLOTH BOARDS, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: CLOTH, BEVELLED BDS., GILT EDGES, 3s. 6d.

From the Baptist Messenger:

"In twenty-two thoughtful and powerfully-written chapters, in which the whole history of Joshua is made to live before you, and the scenes of the Promised Land pass in most impressive review, the writer shows all his usual skill and ability in pointing the lesson, and laying home upon the heart of his readers the Bible truth which character and event in his hand enable him to do. The book itself has an attractive and pleasant appearance, tastefully bound, printed on strong antique paper, and enriched by nine specially engraved illustrations."

Other Volumes of Scripture Biography.

UNIFORM WITH "JOSHUA."

ABRAHAM: Or, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.

ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.

JOSEPH: BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED.

MOSES: THE SERVANT OF GOD.

ELIJAH: AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Each with NINE ILLUSTRATIONS Specially prepared and separately printed on Toned Paper.

MAY BE HAD IN Cloth Boards, 2/6.

PRESENTATION EDITIONS: Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges, 3/6.

THE LIBRARY OF SCRIPTURE BIOGRAPHY.

Consisting of the Six above-mentioned Volumes, Handsomely Bound in Library Style, in a Handsome Case.

Each Volume contains NINE SPECIALLY PREPARED WOOD ENGRAVINGS, ARTISTICALLY PRINTED ON TONED PAPER.

The Six Volumes enclosed in a NEAT CLOTH CASE.

PRICE 12/6 NET.

If sent by Post 1s. extra.

Expository Volumes.

A NEW VOLUME.

The Way into the Holiest. EXPOSITIONS OF THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

From The King's Highway.

"No book that Mr. MEYER has ever written is so full of Christ: His atoning work, His human sympathy, His priesthood, the fulness of His salvation. He who with this book for company, will prayerfully read the Epistle it expounds, will be helped to a close personal application of its teaching. To the end of his days the Epistle will be to him a richer treasury of truth bearing on the personal spiritual life."

OTHER VOLUMES OF SCRIPTURE EXPOSITION.

(Uniform with "THE WAY INTO THE HOLIEST.")

THE LIFE AND LIGHT OF MEN. Expositions of John i.—xii.

TRIED BY FIRE. Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter.

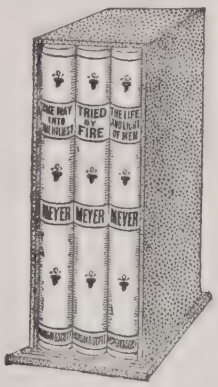
MAY BE HAD IN Cloth Boards 2/6



PRESENTATION EDITIONS. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges 3/6

The Library of Scripture Exposition.

CONSISTING OF THE THREE ABOVE-MENTIONED VOLUMES HANDSOMELY BOUND IN LIBRARY STYLE; AND ENCLOSED IN A HANDSOME CASE.

PRICE 6/6 NET.

IF SENT BY POST, 6d. EXTRA.

The "Christian Life" Series.

A NEW VOLUME.

The Key-Words of the Inner Life.

STUDIES IN THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Cloth Bds., 1s. Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

From Word and Work.

"One of those sweet, spiritual, soothing books for this fretful age that Mr. MEYER knows so well how to write—a voice saying to tired and harassed men and women, 'Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile.' There is peace, quiet power, gracious refreshing, and the presence of Jesus vividly to be seen and felt here by faith."

Other Volumes of The "Christian Life" Series.

UNIFORM WITH "KEY-WORDS."

THE FUTURE TENSES of the Blessed Life.
THE PRESENT TENSES of the Blessed Life.
THE SHEPHERD PSALM. Meditations on Psalm xxiii.
CHRISTIAN LIVING. Practical Counsels on the Christian Life.

May be had in Cloth Boards, 1/-

PRESENTATION EDITIONS: Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Edges, 1/6

THE PSALMS. Notes and Readings. Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

The above FIVE VOLUMES Bound in Library Style and enclosed in a Neat Cloth Case, 5/- net.

The same Volumes in Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, in Neat Cloth Case, 7/6 net.

If sent by post, 6d. extra in either case.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

SELECT BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS.

PUBLISHED BY

MORGAN & SCOTT.

The Prince of Preachers.

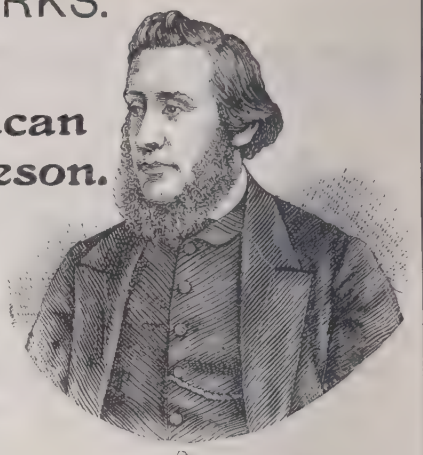
A SKETCH, A PORTRAITURE, AND A TRIBUTE.

By Rev. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

"We could scarcely wish to have a word altered from the first page to the last.—Sword and Trowel.

"The volume is living, fresh, and unfailingly interesting."—Divine Li e.

"The best 'picture in words' of the late revered Mr. Spurgeon that has yet seen the light."
Word and Work.



C. H. Spurgeon.

With Life-Like Portrait.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

A SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION, IN ILLUMINATED WRAPPER, 1s.

Duncan Matheson.

HIS LIFE AND LABOURS.

By Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON.

"The life of a real man, consecrated in life and full of zeal for the Lord. This biography will not only interest, but benefit a wide circle of readers. We had the happiness of frequent correspondence with DUNCAN MATHESON. We valued him as a successful soul-winner, and especially for his soundness of doctrine and innocence of cant. We are right glad to see so worthy a memorial of so worthy a man."
Sword and Trowel.

Duncan Matheson

With Life-Like Portrait.

Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Edges, Library Edition, 2s. 6d.

By Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON.

HENRY MOORHOUSE:

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST.

With Life-like Lithographed Portrait.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

MR. D. L. MOODY'S TESTIMONY.

"HENRY MOORHOUSE was of a gentle, winning disposition; and I do not know of a single instance in a wide-spread work, in which he left any but friends behind him. Denominational jealousies were forgotten; Christians of every name gathered about him; and ministers with long years of successful work, and young converts just entering the field, alike sat at his feet to study the Word. I feel that I have lost a dear friend, and one that in a long and intimate personal acquaintance was very helpful to me. I hope that the story of the Evangelist will lead many, who have not come under his personal influence, to a more thorough study of God's Word; knowing how God has used and blessed it in the work in which our friend MOORHOUSE was engaged. And may they be able to say, as he could, 'Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.'"

D. L. Moody

AN INTERESTING ACCOUNT OF THE NORTHFIELD INSTITUTIONS

WILL BE FOUND IN

D. L. MOODY AT HOME:

HIS HOME AND HOME WORK.

Containing a description of the Educational Institutions at

NORTHFIELD AND MOUNT HERMON;

together with some account of the various Christian Conferences held and the best thoughts exchanged therein.

With Eight Full-page Illustrations of the Educational Buildings.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A delightful picture of the American evangelist amidst home surroundings. . . . The account of Christian Conferences, and helpful thoughts expressed at them is very edifying. Mr. MOODY'S own 'Bible Nuggets' are among the best in the volume."—The Rock.

JOHN B. GOUGH.

THE GREAT TEMPERANCE ORATOR.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY. Revised by himself, with additions—continuing the Narrative to the date of his decease.

Best Edition, with Portrait and Three Illustrations: Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

Cheap Edition, with Portrait:
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We could only wish that this book were in the hands of every young man and woman in the kingdom, feeling sure it would have a powerful influence."
Western Good Templar.

For Gratuitous Distribution,
a Striking Sketch of the Career of JOHN B. GOUGH is Published at ONE PENNY. 1s. per doz. post free.

JOHN WESLEY:

His Life and Times. By the late JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D. (Author of "Buy your own Cherries," etc.) With Portrait. Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Special Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.

"This 'LIFE OF WESLEY' is precisely what it is intended to be, an interesting condensed account, adapted to popular use. Dr. KIRTON has the happy faculty of bringing his facts within the comprehension of the common people, and that is an indispensable thing in a work for popular use."—Christian Commonwealth.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD:

A Light Rising in Obscurity. By J. R. ANDREWS, Barrister-at-Law. Presentation Edition, with Steel Portrait: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 5s.; with Portrait: Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Special Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.

"We cannot imagine a better sixpennyworth of human authorship. Oh that every minister in the three kingdoms possessed this 'LIFE OF WHITEFIELD,' and would read it through! Why, it would set the Church in a blaze!"—Sword and Trowel.

JAMES SCOTT:

A Labourer for God. By Rev. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D. (Author of "Memoir of Rev. R. M. McCheyne," &c., &c.) With Portrait and Two Illustrations. Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"The pages before us show what a man in earnest can do. There is something reassuring to read of this young man fighting in the fore-front of the battle against sin, and vice, and intemperance."—Christian Leader.

LIFTED UP:

A Sketch of the Life of Walter Douglas. With Frontispiece. Cloth Boards, 1s.

"A really wonderful narrative of a man, who, having lost a good worldly position, through lack of the sustaining power of religion, sank lower and lower until he would seem to have reached the very brink of destruction. From it, in the mercy of God, he was, however, 'lifted up' and made a 'chosen vessel' to proclaim the Gospel."—The Friend.

ROBERT ANNAN.

The Christian Hero. By Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON. With Two Full-page Illustrations. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cheap Edition: Illustrated Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"From first to last this volume is full of interest, and valuable lessons are deduced from the life of this humble but honoured servant of Christ. His noble though tragic death lends a deep additional int rest to the record of his brief but useful career upon earth."
Word and Work.

DOROTHEA TRUDEL:

Or, The Prayer of Faith. With Steel Portrait. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Dorothea Trüdel became deeply penetrated with the striking passage in the Epistle of James—'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Led by circumstances to minister to the afflicted, she carried into practical action the settled conviction of her heart; and in hundreds of cases soul and body were alike healed without other visible means."—The Record.

FIDELIA FISKE.

Records of a Consecrated Life. By Rev. W. GUEST. With Steel Portrait. Cheap Edition: Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, 1s. 6d. Larger Type: Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Here is truth stranger and more thrilling than fiction—the incidents of a missionary career which are to the glory of God and of His truth."
The Sword and Trowel.

MARY LYON:

Recollections of a Noble Woman. By FIDELIA FISKE. With Portrait. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

"A book well fitted to stir up to greater zeal and activity in the Christian cause."—Christian Work.

P. P. BLISS:

His Life and Work. By Major D. W. WHITTLE and Rev. W. GUEST. Containing also Introduction by D. L. Moody and Memorial Notice by Ira D. Sankey. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Superior Edition, with Portraits of Mr. Bliss, Mrs. Bliss, and their Two Children, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"The narrative is a most affecting one, and will be read with the deepest possible interest. . . . A fitting tribute to the memory of one whose earnestness in his Master's cause seems to have been almost without parallel in the present age."—Grantham Journal.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT

And his Work. By Rev. W. GUEST. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt. Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s.

"The sketch of 'PASTOR BLUMHARDT AND HIS WORK' will have been read with interest by many, and by none without having their sense of the power of faith and prayer strengthened."—Lay Preacher.

JOSHUA POOLE:

A Remarkable Narrative of God's Saving Grace. Cloth Limp, 9d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 1s.

"This narrative is an undeniable proof that the good old Gospel has lost none of its power. It is a book for the infidel, the drunkard, the thoughtless youth, a book for the despairing, and for all who are led captive by Satan at his will. The advocates of temperance, and above all of the grace of God which bringeth salvation will find here the most powerful illustration of their principles."—Sword and Trowel.

WILLIAM SAUNDERS:

The Cricketer. With Frontispiece. Cloth Boards, 1s.

"This is one of the most interesting biographies we have ever read."—Primitive Methodist.

"This is an admirable little book, and eminently calculated to exalt the free, rich, and efficient grace of the Saviour."—Baptist Messenger.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

A JAPANESE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

For the past three centuries Japan has been steadily reaching out her hands toward the light of civilisation. Shinobu Nagasaka was born in Nagoya, a heathen town in the interior. His parents were members of the rank which stands second to the nobility. The highest rank in Japan is the nobility; the next in order comprises the martial families, and this rank is attained through military prowess. The order to which Shinobu belonged was known as the Samurai; and up till recently those belonging to it were distinguished by a short queue worn at the back of their heads. They were also privileged to wear two swords at their left side, like the nobility.

Shinobu received every educational advantage it was possible for his parents to give him, and was brought up in the Buddhist faith. When he was about eighteen, the family moved to Tokio, where he was married. Just about this time, 1870, the country was opened to foreigners, and various Christian Missions were established in the city. Shinobu and his wife both attended the meetings, and eventually became Christians. Immediately after this, the young converts felt that they wanted to be useful, and Shinobu began to preach at one of the Mission churches.

A little later, he was accepted as chaplain in the Mission Hospital. While there he felt a great lack of ability in explaining the Scriptures while talking to people whose minds were so clouded with heathen ideas. So he entered a theological seminary in Tokio for instruction in Biblical knowledge. After graduating in theology he was ordained a minister of the Scotch Presbyterian Church in 1883.

While in this seminary he was employed by the National Bible Society of Scotland and the Religious Tract Society as their agent in Tokio, and during eight years rendered them much assistance. Any spare time that he had he turned to account in the writing of two books—namely, "Helps to the Study of the Bible," and "Sacred Geography and Antiquity."

Shortly after this, Shinobu felt the Lord wanted him to go and preach to the Japanese of the Hawaiian Islands, and with the prayers and blessings of a ministerial conference, he said good-bye to his wife and four children. While on his way he stopped a few weeks in San Francisco. He became interested in the methods and zeal of the Salvation Army, but, thinking of his future work, he left San Francisco, and laboured among the lost of his own race in Hawaii for over ten months. He was used of God in leading some souls into the light, and sold a number of Japanese Testaments.

While in San Francisco and the Islands great enthusiasm was kindled in his heart. He felt God's Spirit striving with him, and knew that he was called to take up evangelistic work in his own country. He got no relief until he said, "Dear Lord, I will go just where you choose to send me." He came back to San Francisco, where, in February, 1891, he became a member of the Salvation Army for a time, in order to get an insight into their methods of open-air work.

Since he came to this country a great longing has been kindled in his heart to try and reach the masses of his own people with the Gospel of Christ. He is, therefore, organising an open-air mission, as such a mission will be simple in its operations, and its evangelists will be, if possible, honorary workers. The 28th article in the new Constitution of Japan provides religious liberty and freedom of faith.

Mr. Nagasaka had been to Corea upon the work of the Bible Society of Scotland in 1883 by one of the Japanese warships. He is now returning to Japan by the new cruiser Yoshino, I.J.N., which has a crew of 230 officers and men. This is the second time Mr. Nagasaka has been allowed a passage in a Japanese warship. He is the only Christian minister who has been allowed to preach Christ in the Japanese Navy. Truly, a grand opening for the Gospel message!

Mr. Nagasaka's whole-hearted, child-like trust in God will always be a source of blessing to his own soul, and the means of making him a useful servant of the Master.

Friends desiring to help on the Open-air Mission for Japan should communicate with the Treasurer, Mr. W. H. Omura, 14, Lithos-road, Finchley-road, London, N.W.

A SWEET AFFECTION in the child for a mother is a power that will guide him past the shoals of evil into the safe sea of righteousness.—Hoffman.

PROGRESS IN MADEIRA.

Readers that recollect the letter of Bishop Taylor describing the trial of our evangelist, Snr. Melim last year, and who read your notices of the work this year, will be glad to know of a step in liberty we have now obtained.

Civil interment—that is, without a priest—has long been conceded by law in Portugal; but here in the rural parishes, it has been always refused. The only place where a Protestant native could be buried was the Angustias cemetery down in town, and that only, the priests used to say, because the ground had already been polluted! A brief unostentatious service then was not objected to till Snr. Melim, on All Souls' Day, with the ground full of devout Roman Catholics praying for their dead, ventured on a longer funeral service with exposition of the Word and singing. In the process against him he was acquitted, but on the curious ground that it was not a real religious service, because he was not an ordained minister of his sect, and was not then habited in the vestments proper to a minister on such an occasion! To prevent all mistake in future, the "camara" governing the cemeteries, at the instigation of the Bishop, prohibited in future all religious acts of any kind at funerals.

Quite recently, in the cemetery of St. Roque, up towards the hills, where the priest, the guardian of the place, had declared that "till the life-blood ceased to run in his eyeballs" no Protestant would be buried, we laid to rest the child of one of our members, and I led the mourners at the graveside in public prayer. We have a new and more liberal "camara," and, in spite of the obstruction of minor officials under the influence of the priests, we insisted on having the liberty it has granted us.

This may seem a small triumph, but it counts for something here. To the Protestants it does not matter very much where their bodies lie or how they are laid to rest, but it was an inconvenience, and to the poor an expense—and all are poor—to come down to the Angustias. The reproach, too often hurled at them by priest-prompted neighbours, that they could not be laid with Christian rites beside their fathers, they will hear no more. And the little victory comes in time to better effect than if it had come sooner.

The Roman Catholics have lately been roused to do their best against us. To the wealthier among the "faithful" the bishop has issued a circular asking help to establish schools to cut out those of the Protestants; priests and "sisters" have been begging from door to door for the same object; there have been fierce fulminations from the pulpit, and the parents of our scholars have been more privately dealt with. One of our teachers has been offered support to transfer her services and her scholars to the guidance of the "Church." Close to our other school, that at S. Roque, a building is rising to be a school of "the true faith," and the mistress, already engaged, is hunting up scholars, giving them retaining fees of food and clothing. To the poor—and the Madeira peasants are wretchedly poor—such arguments appeal, and we have lost scholars.

But we do not fear for the future. We have not the means, even had we the wish, to fight our opponents with their own weapons. We do wish sometimes, it is true, we had a little more, so that we could supply our teachers with the power of meeting real cases of want—such as the not infrequent one where a little child actually cannot learn for the pangs of sheer hunger; but God will give us such means as are needed for the battle.

Meanwhile, we are thankful for the signs of progress He has given us—the increased opposition of our foes we take as one—for the hopefulness and peace among ourselves He has bestowed.

A. Drummond Paterson.

Quinta do Pico de S. Joao, Madeira.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.—A bazaar in connection with this institution was held in Holloway Hall, Holloway-road, N., recently. The object was to raise funds on behalf of the Homes at Farningham and Swanley. The Homes have for more than a quarter of a century been devoted to the care of little boys, who are received at a tender age, all under ten, and some when they can barely walk. They are trained to become useful members of society. There are at present yearly 500 boys in the two Homes, and it becomes a matter of increasing difficulty year by year to raise sufficient money to maintain the work in a state of efficiency. The Homes need immediate help, and it was hoped to raise at least the sum of £500 by the sale.

CRUELTIES IN CHINA.

It is the custom to send home the best reports of work on the mission field, with a view to stirring up a holy enthusiasm in the Church and strengthening the hands of those who gather and provide the sinews for the war. But there is another side to missionary work—a hard and stern one—which is not so often presented. It is well that the Church at home shall know something of this side. If its work is carried on from a settled principle and determination to win the world for Christ, and not a mere passing enthusiasm, accounts of hard fighting, and even temporary defeat, instead of damping its ardour, will only serve to cause it to gird its loins and plunge into the fight with more courage and daring faith than ever.

SUNGPU AND ITS MASSACRE.

All the civilised world has heard of the barbarous massacre of the two missionaries at Sungpu. Since then a perfect reign of terror has set in in the neighbourhood. Extra officials, with some 300 soldiers, have gone there, and captured every man they could lay hands on who had sold to the foreigners, or in any way assisted them. A poor innocent coolie, who had carried water for them, as well as for others, was arrested, tortured, imprisoned in foul dungeons, and now has an iron rod passed through a hole bored in his collar-bone, to which a chain is attached, and with which he is fastened in his cell! Other horrors, too evil even to be thought of in Christian lands, have been perpetrated on innocent men. The officials have done their work there, and come away with the boast that no foreigner will dare go to that place again.

The policy of the great officials of the empire (and of course they are eagerly backed up by all the smaller officials) seems to be to make it impossible for any foreigner to obtain any assistance from the natives; and thus they hope eventually to starve him out. In connection with the Sungpu riot not a single offender has been punished so far; and none will be punished unless strong pressure is brought to bear by Western Governments.

CHEO HAN'S CRUSADE.

The ex-official—the infamous Cheo Han—the instigator of the fire and bloodshed of 1891, is still at large and at work. Foreign Governments attempted to have him suppressed. The officials replied that he had gone mad, that he had fled from his home, and so on. Western Governments believed this, and nothing has been done to punish the ferocious outbreaks of 1891, or to prevent their recurrence. The riots and murders of foreigners that have occurred since then are sufficient proof of this. Cheo Han has remained all the time in his home at Chang Sha, and has recommenced, with great vigour, his attack on Christianity and foreigners. The blasphemous lampoons representing Christ as the god of lust, and the Church as guilty of the most outrageous barbarities, have never been equalled in the history of the Christian Church. These are being again circulated in vast quantities, and with them many new ones. Some urge the people to rise and murder all foreigners and burn their property; as an encouragement it is stated that foreigners are utterly powerless to defend themselves or to retaliate, so there is no danger, and nothing need be feared.*

Through the length and breadth of the land Christian preachers, native and foreign, have travelled, and told of a Saviour from sins and an uplifter of the human race. Millions upon millions of books and tracts have been scattered broadcast. All this is working in the minds of the people. It is impossible that a great people like this shall come into a new life except with great struggles. Mighty changes are taking place, and the world will possibly be thrilled with horror at the cruel deeds perpetrated.

Edward S. Little.

Kinkiang, China.

WE NEED TO LEAD THE SCHOLAR on as the mind grows and the spirit awakens, step by step from the valley of instinct, up the slope of moral rectitude, on to the height of spiritual enlightenment; and when the soul cries out for God, then to indicate to whom it must go for light and life.—T. J. Ainsworth.

---

* Later advices state that this Cheo Han had expressed his intention of paying a visit to Dr. Griffith John at Hankow. Hopes are entertained that the persecutor of the Christian faith, like Saul of old, might become a convert and also a friend.

Sketches from Sicily.—4.

BY REV. O. GOLIA-MAURO, GIRGENTI.

Pindare calls Girgenti "The happiest town of mortals." Things must have changed much since then, for with the exception of its superb position, and its Carthaginian and Greek ruins, this town has absolutely nothing attractive to offer. On the contrary, from a moral and religious point of view, a Pindare Christian would not hesitate to call it one of the unhappiest towns of mortals.

Whilst sea and sky rival each other in brilliancy, and almond trees whiten the valley and perfume the air from the end of January, in the town the epicurean, incredulous, and immoral priests walk about in great numbers, the true masters of the population, who nevertheless accuse and fear them at the same time. The consequence is on the one side a great contempt of religion, and on the other much superstition. How could it be otherwise, when the priests who are forbidden to marry (to speak of the most honest of them) have sons and daughters; when the priests everywhere amuse themselves with their friends at the expense of the confessional, and mock at the infallibility of the Pope, at the fast, and at the mass which they teach and officially minister?

The so-called faithful ones also offer a spectacle spiritually terrifying. A merchant taught with enthusiasm to numerous friends around him one evening to cease rather to believe in God and Jesus Christ, but never to doubt S. Calogero (the favourite saint of the town.) A distinguished young man, though a professed Atheist and Materialist, confessed that during the passage of a procession he never dared not to raise his hat. Another, a gentleman holding a good position in the town, said to me one day with a smile on his face, "Jesus Christ and the Gospel have had their time!"

When such errors predominate with intellectual persons, what can be expected of the lower class? The grossest superstition! At Easter, for example, they raise the Saviour from the dead in the churches in the midst of artificial thunder and lightning, his statue, with a red flag in hand, being sent up from beneath by machinery. At the same moment all the bells sound out, and in the streets men, young people, and children, hurl against doors and walls with great stones and sticks, striking, and even firing revolvers, crying, "Out with the devil and in with Mary." This severe vandalism lasts for a quarter of an hour, during which one would quite imagine being in the midst of a civil war.

Such is the place in which during the last year I have been evangelising and trying to lay the foundation of a future church. The priests signalised my arrival by publicly preaching, "Your sins are so great in number that God has sent the devil in your midst as a punishment." My house was at once found out by a large number, some coming from curiosity, but the great part driven by religious need. These first comers consisted of some workmen, a large number of students, and others of various professions. I began by uniting all together one evening of the week, and their number has reached fifty. As well as this class of catechumens, I was able to organise a family service at the house of an engineer, where each Sunday evening ten or twenty persons of the best society meet together. But the opposition commenced from the pulpit, naturally continued in the families, and in all manner of ways. Notwithstanding systematic opposition, the Word has been listened to by a large number, and has penetrated into at least a hundred families, and even into the Municipal Schools, where the bishop reigns, and where I have been able to sell forty magazines and some Gospels.

This spring an unexpected occurrence drew, so to say, the sympathy of nearly all the town. Dr. P. Geymonat, Professor of the Waldensian Theological College in Florence, having written a concise "Explanation of his Evangelical Faith," the thought came to me to send a copy of it to the Catholic Bishop here, with a few respectful words enclosed. Monsignor answered by a letter, calling the pamphlet a heretical book which contained the doctrine of corrupt men rebellious to God, and using as regards myself the most calumnious phrases. This letter he also had printed, and the paper, The Catholic Citizen, added itself half a column of insults, saying that I had come here to preach Atheism, since one must be Catholic or Atheist, and that it was for a vile stipend that I preached against the only true religion, etc. To those words I felt it my duty publicly to reply, which I did by printing a calm and Biblical refutation of the principal errors of the Romish Church, and proving that the Evangelical Faith is the truth and the Romanist doctrine false. At the end I invited the bishops and priests in general to a public discussion founded on the Bible, which, of course, however, they did not accept. In a few minutes more than 200 copies of my reply were sold in the town, and read and commented on everywhere in the streets, promenades, restaurants, shops, theatres, offices. Everywhere there was nothing but reproach and accusation against the bishop, whilst in the streets and at my house a great number of persons came to salute me and buy the excommunicated pamphlet and other evangelical books. The Friday evening meeting grew considerably, so much so that I did not know where to put the listeners. Public opinion manifested itself in favour of the Gospel.

But this triumph of the truth exasperated the Romish clergy, who at once commenced in their journal a series of articles—which are still being continued—against my reply, with the most lying and even insulting and indecent phrases. Seeing that these malicious things did not provoke me to reply, they had recourse, in June last, to anonymous letters, in which they wrote to me: "Girgenti is an apostolic Roman Catholic town, and has no need of your heresy; we have here our holy bishop, so you had better leave, otherwise you will be stoned. And go quickly if you will not be killed," etc., etc. "Your reunions are secret conspiracies, and those who frequent them reptiles whom you will lead to ruin. Fortify yourself, attract by your infamous work the corrupted youth, but remember that our vow is to destroy your propaganda, and to suffocate it, if it is necessary, in your own blood." Other anonymous letters were sent to several catechumens and various families to stir up war between parents and children, and even administrations, with the aim of having this or that one employed there discharged, because known as a disciple of the Gospel.

Thank God, the persecuted ones stood firm. I felt it my duty to bring these things to the knowledge of the chief of the police. His counsel at first to me was retreat, but I replied that I did not apply to him to know what I should do, but that he, as one in authority, should perform his duty. Alluding to the Gospel he afterwards said, "I do not believe that this new religion will succeed in Girgenti!" Notwithstanding so much fanaticism, opposition, and ignorance, my house has become too small to receive the catechumens, and on all sides the earnest desire is for a public place, adapted for a church and the preaching of the Gospel.

The Elliott Home, Dublin.

An occasional paper issued by Miss A. D. Smyly as to the William Henry Elliott Home for Little Children, Townsend-street, Dublin, states that:—Although the Elliott Home holds one hundred little ones, and though we have some other homes as well, yet we are not able to take one quarter of those who come to us. One of these, who as yet has not been successful in getting in, is a little lad named Isaac. His was a very sad little life, and the saddest thing about it was that his mother was a drunkard. He is too young to be admitted, and has been placed under the care of a woman till he is old enough.

Another who came to us was a little girl. She was brought by her mother, who was in extreme poverty. At one time she had been a Roman Catholic, but some time ago she had become converted to God, and had renounced the errors of the Romish faith. Her husband persecuted her so much that she left him and went to service, having arranged with a woman to take care of her little child. Her husband continued to persecute her, and followed her from one situation to another. She is now most anxious to get her little one taken into the Elliott Home, so that she should not be brought up as a Roman Catholic. We hope to take her as soon as there is a vacancy.

WOMANLY INFLUENCE upon the boys of the Day Industrial Schools of Glasgow is marvellous. They have not been much accustomed to the law of kindness. They know something of hard knocks and hard lines, and the atmosphere into which they are brought is to them like a new life. The most rebellious, stubborn natures are subdued, and truants and vagrants, hitherto unmanageable, have in most cases become quite reformed. All the teachers are women. —William Mitchell.

*SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

Whatever objections may be urged against preachers treating in the pulpit of themes which concern trade, capital and labour, war, and so forth, because different views may be held by their hearers, and irritation, instead of peace, may be caused, no one can fairly object to Christians discussing these subjects in the press. Every day convinces us more deeply that until Christian ethics are applied to every phase of human life there will be cause for discontent and a chronic condition of unrest. Any one who can show how the Word of the Lord bears upon the problems of wages, hours of labour, amassing of wealth, treatment of workmen, co-operation, etc., is doing a priceless service. Mr. Matheson is an able and useful worker in this department of service. He has added a volume to our increasing library on social topics to which thinkers will turn for light, and for which Christians will feel thankful.

The first chapter, on "The Duty of the Church in Relation to Social Problems," is an appropriate introduction to his theme, a kind of self-vindication, and also an exhortation to the churches to take this duty in hand. The real difficulty lies in the method to be followed; How are the churches to do this work? This will vary according to Church constitution and order, according to the social condition of the members, and according to the actual questions which may spring up in the neighbourhood of a congregation. To take a present-day question: a living wage will be settled in the colliery districts before it is quite apprehended in some suburban congregations. We apply ourselves to those things which are near, personal, and urgent. On this question "the Word" said long ago: "The labourer must be first partaker of the fruits." Some day the entire reasonableness and rightness of this principle will be admitted by everyone.

Mr. Matheson has wisely adopted the historical method with each "problem," so that you have a valuable historical discussion of political economy, old and new, of landlordism, of the co-operative movement, etc. He shows us where we are in idea and in practice, and how we have reached the present point. To follow him is to see that we have been progressing from lower to higher conceptions of the relation of man to man, and to practices which are coming into growing conformity with Divine principles. It is at once instructive and cheering to see how the influence of the Gospel, by modifying the actions of men, has modified the conclusions of political economy, which, like all other sciences, has to take in the whole set of facts which present themselves for explanation. The history of co-operation is replete with instruction, warning, and encouragement. It is a bright example of courage, thrift, foresight, and large-mindedness on the part of many of its disciples; but parts of it are a painful illustration of human selfishness and its fruits. The great lesson, that where Christian principle has been followed, and not human greed, the system has done good work, and is in the healthiest condition, is pointed out in the plainest manner.

We have no space for any extracts, save one or two sentences which are appropriate to the struggle which has just been concluded. "If labour had the first share, and if it had not the largest yet the fairest" [why "fairest"? fair is enough] "share, it is certain that capital could never be, as it has been, the master—often the autocrat—of labour, but only the respected manager and highly-remunerated servant of labour; it is certain, at least, that such a phenomenon as a millionaire could not exist." "Highly-priced labour comes in the end to be the cheapest by the creation of new employments to meet the increased demand, and so the future of the labour question lies in concentrating capital on a larger scale to the increase of wages and a rise of standard of living." Of course the strongest opposition will, in some quarters, be felt to some of Mr. Matheson's conclusions, but that does not detract from the value of his work. We by no means accept every position: all the same we are grateful for a book so clear, so well-informed, and so suggestive.

J. P. Gledstone.

OUR CITIES TEEM WITH PEOPLE whom misfortune, blundering, or temptation has ruined or overcome. They are not the product of a day. This ruined manhood and womanhood—what is it, nine times out of ten, but the sure result of exposed, neglected childhood?

CHILDREN ARE THE MEN of to-morrow; they will see what we only surmise, even what we cannot surmise; they will take part as witnesses and actors in events which we cannot even guess.—Marion.

* The Church and Social Problems. By A. Scott Matheson. Edinburgh and London: Oliphant Anderson & Ferrier.

African Missions Visited.—16.

By Mr. D. A. HUNTER.

We left Palapye after sundown one Friday evening, and headed the oxen southward. Sunday was spent by the margin of a water-pan, some ten miles from Palapye. The heavy sand had prevented us getting further. It was quite a sight to see the hundreds upon hundreds of cattle which kept coming down all day long to be watered. This pan the natives also bathe in, and it is the only drinking water to be had for miles round. We did our best by boiling and filtering to make it fit for use, but our efforts were not very successful. The 'Mngwatu have a curious antipathy to digging wells, grounded on some national superstition.

I had been indisposed for some days before leaving Palapye, and was now prostrated with an attack of dysentery, which kept me in bed for a week. It was a very trying time, for one feels the jolting of the waggon more when sick and weak; but the tender mercies of the Lord failed not: He truly "made my bed for me in my sickness."

We struck the west bank of the Limpopo, near where the Makalapsi joins it, and travelled along that, and then on the west bank of the Marico river. Heavy thunderstorms with tropical rains were almost daily occurrences, and caused us considerable discomfort. When the road struck away from the Marico river, matters improved all round. We got on to higher ground; the weather cleared; I seemed to get a new lease of life, and rapidly recovered from the great weakness which followed my indisposition.

Crossing the mountains at Sechuani, we again entered the Transvaal. At Fleischfontein there is a Jesuit mission station. We had to outspan there overnight, and called on the priest in charge, a Frenchman, Père Bontemps. During the nine years this mission has been in existence, about 150 natives have become converts, of whom a hundred are now on the station. The school is very small. I am informed that a resolution was moved in the Volksraad some time ago, to expel all Jesuits from the Transvaal. This was not carried, but I believe they are allowed to acquire or own no land.

Some seventeen miles north of Zeerust, we came to Linokana, a station of the Hermannsburger (German) Missionary Society. It was founded in 1858, and Mr. Jansen, the present missionary, has been there since 1863. There are twenty acres of land belonging to the mission, fourteen of which are under cultivation. The surrounding land was reserved by the convention between the Transvaal and British Governments as a location for natives, and consequently may not be sold, or taken up by white men as farms. Under direction of their missionary, the natives have irrigated it by means of water furrows, and cultivate it so successfully, that they are well-to-do. To teach the people regular and intelligent industrial habits is a great factor in successful mission work in South Africa.

In the course of his ministry at Linokana, Mr. Jansen has baptised about 1000 converts. Some time ago a split arose in the tribe over the chieftainship, and many emigrated under a new chief to a location some twenty miles distant. There a new mission station has been founded. The present membership at Linokana is about 500. A beautiful new church has recently been built, to replace the old one burned down by lightning. It can seat 1000 people, and cost £1350 in cash, besides the personal labours of the missionary and his flock; £500 of this sum was subscribed by the natives, £150 by white friends, while Mr. Jansen sold a farm he owned, and generously paid the balance with the proceeds.

There is a station school with some sixty children in it. Morning prayer is held in the church every day just after sunrise, when the Bible is read through systematically and explained.

At Zeerust I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Spranger, an earnest Christian gentleman, and a subscriber to The Christian. He very kindly drove me out to his farm at Rickersdam, and gave me much valuable information about farming in this country. He is quite interested in the proposed industrial mission farms, and expresses it as his opinion that they will answer well, both as an invaluable auxiliary to the missionaries, and also from a financial point of view.

Turning eastwards from Zeerust, we passed several large stations of the Hermannsburger Society. We arrived back in Pretoria safe and well, and deeply thankful for the good hand of our God, which has been upon us during our three months' travel in a bullock-waggon.

HAUTE SAVOIE, FRANCE.

In a report of their interesting work at Thonon, Misses Larritt and Wilson state that they have partly furnished their College Hospital—an institution of which they daily realise the great need. "One after another we had sick people nearly all last winter, and wonderfully did God bless, spiritually and bodily, each one that came in. We do want, if possible, to put in two more beds and a child's cot this winter. Last winter we were obliged to have only one sewing meeting a week, instead of two (which was a great disappointment to the poor women), our funds not being equal to more. Our kind friends, Rev. A. F. Buscarlet, of Lausanne, and Rev. W. Milne, of Montreux, made themselves responsible for the salary of an evangelist, who spent every alternate week at Thonon. We also had again the kind help of Mr. Milsom, and other friends from Geneva, for the temperance meetings. We are quite proud of our hall, it having been beautified by a number of young English ladies. Two in England sent us a splendid American organ, and several others in Lausanne made us large and beautiful texts for the walls.

"In the spring and summer of this year we were again constantly annoyed by the stoning of the house; and in one way we were very much more tried by it than before, as the middle of the night was the time chosen for the attack. This continued for over three months. We sent two or three times to the Commissaire of Police, but with no result. Being obliged to send one day for the doctor, we told him how continually our much-needed rest was destroyed by this disturbance; shutters, windows, and board telling of the meetings, were broken—the latter was almost smashed to pieces. He not only spoke to the Commissaire, but came out with him to see the depredations. At once inquiries were made, and a garde (policeman) was put on to patrol here during the night. And, so far, we have been left in peace."

Copies of the report may be had by addressing the ladies at Thonon, Haute Savoie.

At Evian-les-Bains a good work is carried on by Misses E. and M. Wellington and L. Smith. In their report they say: "In some respects last winter was the most difficult of the six that we have spent in Savoie. The work was extended specially among the men, and this raised opposition greater than ever before. All the public meetings were held with locked doors, only those known were allowed to enter. Those who came hoping to gain admittance and upset the meetings, finding they were shut out, revenged themselves by throwing stones, and trying to hammer down door and window; and once they succeeded in fastening the door of the salle outside so firmly that no one could leave the meeting till the gentleman presiding went out by the window, and the police were sent for. But in spite of all this opposition, the attendance was good, and God never suffered harm to come to anyone.

"For the first time there was a resident evangelist, supported by the Scotch Churches of Lausanne and Montreux; he came from the Vaudois Valleys of Piedmont, spoke French and Italian, thus reaching the two nationalties, there being many Italians in Evian. The evangelist commenced a fortnightly meeting at Bernex, a little mountain village at the foot of the Alps, three hours' climb from us. There are two Protestant families there, and one of them offered a room for the service. This cottage service roused the anger of the curé, who preached against it, and warned the people not to listen to one who came among them as a wolf in sheep's clothing. We try to help young girls by placing them under Christian influence in Protestant families. The women's knitting meeting is a great aid during winter; the women work three hours and are paid 3d. and given a cup of coffee with bread before leaving."

TWENTY YEARS AGO the Sunday School Union appointed in Sweden their first missionary agent; to-day there are fifteen travelling missionaries and 242,000 scholars are attending Sunday School.

IF WE WORK upon marble it will perish; if we work upon stone it will crumble to dust; but if we take a child and train it well, we carve a monument that time can never efface.—Archdeacon Farrar.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

Mr. W. J. H. Brealey has issued the twenty-third Narrative of Facts concerning the Lord's Work on the Blackdown Hills, and a deeply interesting narrative it is. At the outset we are reminded that though the year has been one of exceptional blessings, it has also had its peculiar trials. A note of praise is struck, however, in view of the goodness of God in sustaining the hands of his servants. Mr. Brealey goes on to relate some very encouraging incidents.

A young man who was converted while living at Clayhidon, but is now in the police force, writes:—"The Lord has been very good to me. His presence is my joy, and He has helped me. When I first came here, I thought I should have a hard time of it, but God has heard prayer. I am lodging with another policeman, and the first night, on going to bed, I at once knelt down, and prayed to my God, as I had been accustomed. I expected to be laughed and scoffed at, but I told my companion I was a Christian, and was determined to be true to the Lord Jesus. To my surprise he never scoffed or said an opposing word. I trust I may be led to win him for Jesus. In the morning, the superintendent came to see my kit. He was very well satisfied with everything. Just before leaving, he noticed a card which I had placed over the door—a card Miss Rawling gave me just before I left Clayhidon—on which was the text, 'The Lord is my Light and my Salvation.' 'Whose is that?' asked the superintendent. 'Mine, sir,' I said, 'What does it mean?' he asked. 'Do you believe it?' 'Yes, sir, I do, and I know it and rejoice in it,' I said. 'That's right, my boy,' he said, 'stick to it, and you will be sure to prosper.' My heart is so full of joy to think that God has so favoured me. I want to be kept true and faithful, and I believe I shall, for He has said, 'Lo, I am with you all the days!'"

Some extracts from Mr. Brealey's journal show that his hands are as full of work as his heart is warm with evangelistic zeal. He tells the story of a visit to a dying lady, who had to confess that her life had been a wasted one, and that all before her was dark. "Can the Lord forgive such a sinner as I?" she repeatedly asked. "I am chief of sinners. I have committed every kind of sin in my heart. My heart is desperately wicked, desperately wicked." This distressing question could only be answered by a statement of God's provision of a Saviour to meet the sinner's need. She persistently inquired, "Can I be sure that God will forgive and receive me?" The forgiveness of sins through Christ was preached unto her, with the assurance that all who believe are justified from all things (Acts xiii. 38, 39). "Can I really depend?" she asked. In reply she was told that it is impossible for God to lie. "He cannot deny Himself." "Abraham believed God, being fully persuaded that, what He had promised, He was able also to perform, and therefore it was reckoned to him for righteousness" (Rom. iv. 21, 22). "Oh, those wonderful words!" she exclaimed. "Are they really in the Bible? Wonderful words! Will you please mark them in my Bible, and write down the places on a piece of paper lest I should forget?" Having done so, I asked if she was quite satisfied with what God had spoken, and if she could now rest. With a fervour and firmness I have rarely seen she said, "Yes, with all my heart I do. 'God is not a man that He should lie.' I come a lost sinner to Him through Jesus, and He has received me, He says so." She lingered some days afterwards in great agony, but her peace was undisturbed. Often and often would she ask that those "wonderful words" may be read again to her. And so she passed away to be 'for ever with the Lord.'"

Surveying the various operations, Mr. Brealey reports that good success attends the schools. Financial anxiety is a chronic experience, but it is not allowed to weigh down the workers. More than 1000 Gospel and other services were held during the year, besides Sunday-schools and children's meetings. The Provident and Clothing Clubs have proved a means of timely assistance to the poor, and although resources have been slender, much good has come of their application.

Communications to Mr. Brealey should be addressed, Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

IT IS ONLY IN GOD'S GARDEN that childhood can blossom.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN'S WORK.

(Concluded from November 30.)

He speaks of the fulfilment of the national aspirations of Greece, Roumania, Servia, Bulgaria, and Hungary, after centuries of subjugation and oppression, and goes on: "But listen, we groan and sigh and cry for our Messiah, and by our very longing have often been misled by false Messiahs. What an inconceivable situation! What perversity! What unnatural confusion of thought! Throughout the centuries thousands upon thousands of the most excellent of all nations have cried triumphantly, 'Rejoice and be glad, thou daughter of Zion; behold thy Redeemer. He is come.' But whom shall I persuade and warn? who will listen to me? (Isaiah vi. 10). Yes, it matters not who, the most godless and worldly-minded, the greatest sinner and hypocrite—to him the Jew will listen with respect and even esteem. He will accept the strangest principles and the latest phases of modern thought; but one thing only—oh grief and shame!—will he not endure—that Christ should be preached, his sacred name spoken with reverence. Whoever does this he curses and execrates. Men who continually make jest of the weightiest injunctions of the Jewish law persecute me because of my testimony for Christ, have excommunicated me, and publicly branded me as unfit for my office.

"Why, I ask, this unconquerable apathy, this inextinguishable hate, this fanatic rage against Him who has brought to a whole world civilisation, salvation, redemption, and blessed faith? It is inconceivable! Take note of the failure around you, the shameful results, the moral blots, and consider the salvation of your children. Lay aside prejudice and bring reason with you. Thus will Old and New Testaments convince you indisputably that Christ is our only Hope, our Saviour, and Messiah, that He and no other will bring us to Zion, to the house of our God. I sow the seed undismayed and undiscouraged. The time will assuredly come when it will ripen and bear fruit, and when he will return with joy who bears his sheaves with him. If I speak of faith, of Christ as our Messiah, of his mission to the world, of the Divine doctrines of the New Testament, if I encourage my Jewish brethren to draw from the crystal spring and youth-renewing well of the Apostle, I do not draw your attention to any dogma or miracle, but to the historic way of salvation as it exists in the Old and New Testaments. There Christ is the centre, as the miracle of history, the goal of Israel's history of miracle, in whom all its power and perfection are found. Israel shy of wonders! Israel, born of miracle, and who has the God of miracle as its Father and Author! Israel, whose history is encircled and filled in by wondrous acts of God! Israel stumbles at the miracles of the New Testament!

"Israel, whose prophets were obliged continually to confirm their words by miracles and signs, stumbles at the miracles of Jesus Christ, in whom all the prophecy of Israel culminates, and is perfected! But, leave for the present the miracles and signs of Christ, and consider those words of his in the Gospel which strike so powerfully to heart and conscience. . . . He required faith, as God requires faith of those who come to Him seeking help. Faith, i.e., openness to his word, devotion to his person, reliance on his help. . . . I will not speak here of the Holy Spirit; or of the Christian doctrine of the Person of God as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit [although, as he shows, the Chassidic and Kabbalistic Jews readily credit the absurd and mystic idea of a tenfold unity, or a tenfold Emanation of the Person of God]. I will not dwell here on Christ as the Sin-offering, whose death was vicarious [although, as he shows, the Talmudists themselves believed in the doctrine of the innocent suffering for the guilty], but I repeat that the Jew fights with his own flesh, is traitor to himself, commits moral murder on himself, unless he acknowledges Jesus Christ as his Messiah, and pays Him due homage, unless he joins with the pioneers and heralds of Christ, and in unison with Israel's friends cries, 'Sing unto the Lord a new song, for He has done marvellous things. His right hand and his holy arm have gotten Him the victory!'

"Brethren, away to Jesus, who, by the wings of his Spirit, has borne men into purer regions, into the Kingdom of Heaven, who has given the death-blow to degraded, heathen, human sacrifice, has given a new direction to thought and manner of life, and brought a new life to the nations. Who, as Him, has awakened dead consciences out of their senselessness, taught true worth and nobility, broken down the separating walls of classes and races, and established brotherhood and equality of mankind before God? Truly He has effected that which was the work of the predicted Messiah, the Seed of David and of Abraham, and all nations have been, and will be, blessed through Him. We can shut our eyes to these patent facts, but we are not, by so doing, the less blind. Well may you point to curse and not to blessing, and bring to my remembrance all the iniquity and abomination which during all these centuries have encountered us in the name of Christianity, all the torture, the acts of oppression, the martyr piles and the bloodshed, of which so many pages of Church history are full."

After repudiating these acts as unchristian, he exclaims, "Look not into the darkness but into the light. Light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun. God has his people among the peoples, and Christ has his spiritual disciples in the churches. Come out of your narrow circle, rub your sleepy eyes, behold what is being done everywhere by the true people of God, the genuine disciples of Jesus Christ. Look on the sacrifice of their faith, the work of their love, the life and endeavour of their spirit."

I conclude by saying that the Council for Rabbi Lichtenstein will be glad of the assistance of all missions and missionaries to the Jews, and friends generally, in circulating this powerful appeal among the scattered people in all parts of the world. Communications may be addressed to me.

David Baron.

23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

PROGRESS IN MEXICO.

Writing from Orizaba, Mexico, Mr. Eglon Harris reports cheering progress. He recently baptized three native converts, and others are waiting thus to confess Christ. The school has so increased that further accommodation has been found necessary. Accompanied by Don Vicente, the teacher, Mr. Harris recently paid a visit to the distant mountain village of Yxhualtancillo, which has a population of 2000, purely Indian. He says:—

"We went from group to group repeating with ever-increasing joy the glad tidings. I think I shall never forget a scene in one garden. The visible things of creation were speaking loudly of the invisible God who formed them. Four generations of human beings were there. The grey-headed and bowed great-grandparents, their children, and their children's children. Though they were witnesses to the power of God, they knew nothing of the love of his heart. Beginning at Gen. i. we arrived at Luke xv. Their custom of dividing the inheritance, their acquaintance with a great famine, and their knowledge of swine-tending, and the repulsive nature of the food they eat, all give a deep meaning to the story of the Prodigal Son.

"When I arrived at that part of the story where the bad son said to his father 'I have sinned,' and the loving father 'kissed him,' one of the old men asked if I would wait while his son went to tell another family to come. Our congregation increased, and we continued: with what words you can guess, but with what feelings of solemn joy and sorrow, I think only we who were there could understand. Three times I closed up, to be moving on, but was pressed to open the Book again. 'Do tell us again,' 'Do read some more,' and other such expressions came from lips that will soon be in the grave, to all appearances. Praise God that many a score heard the Gospel that day for the first time. 'What shall the harvest be?' Who dares to say that Mexico must ever be an unfruitful field?"

Communications regarding this work may be sent to Mr. John Mercer, 143, Dickenson-road, Manchester.

IF YOU HAVE NEVER SHOWN your son self-control in the little temptations of your home, how can you expect him to show self-control in the greater temptations which he is sure to meet afterwards?—Dr. Whyte.

IF IT IS TRUE that the children hold in their tender hands the future of humanity, it is not less true that by educating them better, by moralizing them more, it is possible to modify this future and to improve the moral destiny of mankind.

The Evangelist.

"CURED BODY AND SOUL."

A friend who, like his well-loved Master, is always going about doing good, and who loves nothing so much as the spending and being spent in his service, one day found himself outside some little white-washed cottages, at the south-eastern end of the Bay of Dungeness. Here is a coastguard station, but the place is somewhat solitary and picturesque. Knocking at the door of one of the little white cottages on a fine summer evening, the visitor offered one of his leaflets to the bright, happy-faced old woman who opened the door, and who received it with a kindly manner, and a smile.

"I think you have found the secret of happiness?" said the visitor, noting the happy smile.

"Yes, indeed, sir, I have," was the reply, as she gladly admitted the stranger, on his own invitation, into her little sitting-room, the walls of which were brightened by some texts.

"I should so much like to know how you found this; tell me, please, all about it."

She, nothing loth (as indeed, who ever is?) to tell the good news, began, first inviting her visitor to take a seat. My friend can tell the story in the exact words of the woman, for, he says, "It made a great impression on me."

"I was sixty years of age," she began, "before ever I attended a place of worship. A friend one day asked me to go to a service with her at Pevensey, fourteen miles distant from here. I went, and the meeting began with the hymn 'Jesus of Nazareth passeth by' ('Songs and Solos,' 20). I heard no more, remember no more, for I was cut to the heart, and began to cry, like Bartimæus (Luke xviii. 35), for mercy. When I got home, I continued to cry to God; indeed, I could not stop crying. I lived alone, and if anyone came to see me then, I had either to continue crying before them or to go outside and cry. 'Lord, save me! Lord, have mercy on me!' was always my cry.

"After about three weeks the rector of the parish heard of my distress, and came to see me. But he could give no help, for he did not understand what was the matter with me—he thought I must have been doing something very bad. Still my distress continued. A short time after this a Christian lady found me, and tried to show me Jesus, but I could not see Him. Day after day she came, asking me: 'Have you found Him?' and I would shake my head. Almost wearied, at last she would just put her head inside the door, and say, 'Have you found Him?'

"One day she gave me a leaflet to read; it was about an old man who was in great trouble for his sins, and how, at last, this old man was led to cry, three times over, 'Jesus, my Saviour, I come to Thee!' and found instant peace.

"I thought to myself," continued the old woman, "I will do the same. So just on this spot" (laying her hand on a table in front of her) "I knelt down and cried, 'Jesus, my Saviour, I come to Thee!' Sir, I had not to say it three times. He came and filled me with joy unspeakable, and full of glory! I felt it all over my body, down to my toes! And that joy has never left me, for He has never left me. If I go from this room to that room He goes with me; if I go a distance it is the same. He is always with me.

"Some little time after this I was feeling very ill, and suffering acute pain. A neighbour found me, and was very anxious to relieve me. At last she said, 'I believe some brandy and hot water would do you good.' Now, sir, I never was a drunkard; nothing of the kind. Still, I was conscious that I liked alcohol a little, and, fearing it might grieve God's Holy Spirit, I objected to the remedy. My friend pressed me, went away and got some, and offered it to me. I knelt down and said, 'O Lord, if Thou canst cure me with that, Thou canst cure me without it.' That moment the pain was gone! I have never had any more desire for alcohol, for I am healed!"

The old woman's story was ended, but not the lesson it teaches us of the long-suffering and the all-sufficiency of God. Sixty years without Him, and then led to Him through a hymn! Cured, body and soul! How true that to-day, as of old, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by!"

M. B. Gerds.

WORKS ON ROMANISM.

PUBLISHED BY MORGAN AND SCOTT.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

BEING A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

BY

JOHN FOXE.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Complete in One Handsome Volume.

Cloth Boards, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.; with Gilt Edges, 12s. 6d.

"A most masterly exposure of what Popery really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no favour wherever Foxe's Martyrs is studied."
Christian Progress.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."
Primitive Methodist.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A VINDICATION OF PURE AND PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY; AND AN EXPOSURE OF THE CORRUPTIONS OF ROMANISM: DERIVED FROM THE SEPULCHRAL REMAINS OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS AT ROME.

BY

BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,

Late Chamberlain of the City of London.

With Seventy Illustrations, and Portrait of the Author.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

FUNERAL PROCESSION.

"There is no volume equally moderate in price giving to English readers so full and clear an account of these sepulchral remains of the early Christians. The work is executed with strict accuracy as well as with enthusiasm; it is copiously illustrated; and in an age of revived sacerdotalism among the Anglican clergy its appearance is specially opportune."
Christian Leader.

By ELIZA RICHARDSON.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM

With Incidents of Convent Life.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

"This is a very interesting book. It would be so if it were a romance, it is so life-like, and of such important practical bearing; but it is much more so because it is not a romance, but a piece of actual life. It is a plain and veritable account of a most important crisis in a young person's religious experience—a temporary perversion to Roman Catholicism, and (happily) a genuine recovery from it. Its exposure of the secrets of priestly domination over the conscience, and of the practical working of the Confessional is not new, indeed, but effective and invaluable."—The Fireman.

THE CONFESSIONAL.

A Personal Narrative by

ELIZA RICHARDSON.

NEATLY PRINTED IN RED AND BLACK.

Suitable for enclosure in the Modern Square Envelope.

1s. per dozen, or 7s. per 100, post free.

THE VEIL LIFTED;

OR,

The Romance and Reality of Convent Life.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

"Such a book as this, in these days, must do good, and may serve as a timely warning to many a sincere but mistaken enthusiast. It is to be hoped that this really temperate and candid work may have an extensive circulation. It is one which we can safely recommend. The writer herself has been in a convent, and her aim is to save from such a life those whose inclinations, in their ignorance, lead them that way."—Illustrated News of the World.

AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY.

REV. C. H. SPURGEON wrote

Regarding Morgan and Scott's PORTABLE "CRUDEN,"

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott are resolved not to be beaten, and so they have produced a portable edition of 'Cruden's Concordance' for 3s. 6d. Nobody should now be without a Concordance: which is to the Bible-reader what a foot-rule is to a carpenter, or a chain to a land-surveyor. For the sake of all the poor parsons in the three kingdoms, we feel grateful to Messrs. Morgan & Scott. How they can issue such a book at such a price we cannot tell."

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S COMPLETE EDITIONS.

Cruden's Concordance

TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

All the Editions described below contain 757 pages, 2270 closely-printed columns, and about 250,000 references. A special feature is The List of Proper Names, newly translated by Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A. This portion of the work is strictly copyright, and can only appear in Morgan & Scott's Editions.

Facsimile of Morgan & Scott's Portable Edition.

The PORTABLE EDITION

STRONGLY BOUND IN CLOTH BOARDS, 3/6

The Portable Edition, in Half Calf, Marbled Edges, 7s. 6d.

POPULAR EDITION. Printed on Superior Paper Strongly bound in Cloth Boards, 5/-

LIBRARY EDITION. Strongly half bound in Leather, 10/6

PRESENTATION EDITION. Handsomely bound in Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Top, 7/6

ILLUSTRATED EDITION. Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Top. With 12 Exquisite Steel-Plate Engravings, and 6 Beautiful Coloured Maps. 10/6

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To secure the special features which are only to be found in the above-mentioned Editions, it is needful to insist on being supplied with

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

A REVIEW OF "THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER" FROM "THE SCOTTISH LEADER."

"A remarkable work, packed with information, and invaluable as a simple and easy hand-book. Indeed, the ingenuity that has succeeded in squeezing so much into the space deserves all praise. Scores of items combine to astonish the reader. The editing has been carefully done, and a very trustworthy and wonderfully complete and sufficient book is the result."

The Bible Remembrancer.

A VALUABLE HANDBOOK TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS. A NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

The whole of the work has been carefully revised, and a large portion entirely re-written; while several new features have been introduced, rendering this Edition one of the most comprehensive companions to the Bible extant. To the Sabbath-school Teacher or Local Preacher it is simply invaluable.

Tinted Covers .. .. .. 2s. 0d.
Cloth Boards .. .. .. 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

Among the prominent features may be mentioned

A Complete Modern Atlas of Bible Lands. Consisting of FOURTEEN Choice Coloured Maps, containing the results of the most recent research.

An Analysis and Summary of the entire Scriptures—by which any Biblical incident can immediately be traced.

The Words of Christ; the Miracles, and Prayers and Thanksgivings of Christ: with full references to each of the four Evangelists.

A Chart showing THE ORDER OF ENCAMPMENT AND MARCH OF THE ISRAELITES THROUGH THE WILDERNESS. (Specially prepared for this Edition.)

Original Articles on THE HERODS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT and the CÆSARS of SCRIPTURE. (Specially prepared for this Edition.) Besides nearly SIXTY OTHER CLASSIFIED HEADINGS WITH COPIOUS SCRIPTURE REFERENCES.

Searching the Scriptures:

IN ORDER TO ABIDING COMMUNION WITH GOD.

Also Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study; and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. J. ANDERSON, M.R.C.S.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A scholarly, accurate, suggestive, and wise work on the Study of the Books of the Bible; how best to get at their teaching; and how best to turn that teaching to practical account. Preachers and teachers will find it a treasury of thought, beautiful expositions, and fruitful suggestions. The volume is nicely got up, and is suitable for a prize or a present."—Oldham Chronicle.

Notes for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS and JOHN H. ELLIOTT. With Introduction by D. L. MOODY.

Tinted Covers, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

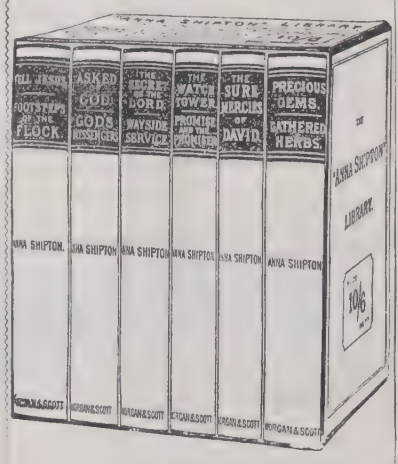
"A book which every Bible Student should possess. It brings together an immense number of subjects with groupings of Scripture texts on each. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation; and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

ANNA SHIPTON'S WORKS.

"These simple and strong writings mightily brace the faith of believers."—The Christian at Work.

THE

"Anna Shipton" LIBRARY.



Consisting of Eleven of Anna Shipton's favourite works bound in Six Volumes. Each Volume in neat Roxburgh style, in box, net.

PRICE 10/6 NET.

Contents.*

TELL JESUS. FOOTSTEPS OF THE FLOCK.
THE BROOK IN THE WAY (Poems).
GOD'S MESSENGERS.
WAYMARKS OF MY PILGRIMAGE (Poems).
THE PROMISE AND THE PROMISER.
THE WATCHTOWER IN THE WILDERNESS.
WHISPERS IN THE PALMS (Poems).
THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID.
PRECIOUS GEMS. GATHERED HERBS.

"The volumes embraced in the 'LIBRARY' are simple, cultured, persuasive. No single reading can reveal their many and varied excellencies."
Oldham Chronicle.

 The Contents of the LIBRARY have recently been re-arranged in order to include the Volumes of*

ANNA SHIPTON'S POEMS.

Poetical Volumes.

Each Volume Elegantly Bound in Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

THE BROOK IN THE WAY (ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE CHRISTIAN LIFE).
"Not a page but gives pleasure to the reader."—Non conformist.

WHISPERS IN THE PALMS (HYMNS AND MEDITATIONS).
"Many of the pieces are very touching and beautiful."—Christian World.

WAYMARKS OF MY PILGRIMAGE (A COLLECTION OF LATER POEMS).
"Full of faith, and sweetness, and cheer."—Woman's Work.

THE CHILD MINISTER. RECORDS OF A YOUNG LIFE. (With Portrait.)
Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Neat, 1s.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.
"This life is one that children will read with avidity."—Christian World.

THE VALLEY OF BLESSING.
Cloth, 1s.
"A very beautiful and touching narrative."—The Friend.

SAVED NOW; OR, PARDON AND PEACE.
Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth, 1s.
A simple narrative, illustrative of the power of the Word of God when applied by the Holy Spirit—adapted for great usefulness.

SACRED SONGS. LARGE QUARTO, SIXPENCE PER COPY.
Words by ANNA SHIPTON. Music by M. L. BRADSHAW.
"THOU LORD, KNOWEST THY SERVANT." "MORE OF THEE!"

Favourite Prose Works.

"TELL JESUS": Recollections of EMILY GOSSE.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.
"Calculated to produce an impression upon the hearts of true Christians that will be greatly beneficial to them."—Sword and Trowel.
Cheap Edition: Tinted Covers, 6d.
 A Special Cheap Edition, Imperial 8vo size, 16 pages. Suitable for gratuitous distribution; done up in tastefully illustrated wrapper,*
ONE SHILLING PER DOZEN.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID.
Cloth Neat, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 4s. 6d.
"Full of incidents indicating Divine Response to trust, and answer to prayer. . . . . We can recommend it to all those who know what it is to dwell in the secret place of the Most High."—Sunday School Chronicle.

GATHERED HERBS. A Series of Narratives.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.
"Helpful in many ways."—Christian Progress.

THE WATCHTOWER IN THE WILDERNESS.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.
"Chapters of very useful counsels, adapted to many phases of Christian life."
Christian Age.

"ASKED OF GOD:" Experiences of Answered Prayer.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.
"A beautiful exposition and enforcement."—Preachers' Lantern.

THE PROMISE AND THE PROMISER.
Or, The Power and Presence of the Lord with His People.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.
"There is a freshness, a fervour, a fulness in the teaching of this authoress which wins the readers at once."—Oldham Chronicle.

WAITING HOURS
With "The Hungry and Weary, and Thirsty, in the Wilderness."
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.
"A series of appo ite reflections upon chosen passages of Holy Writ in Mrs. SHIPTON'S best manner."—Christian Age.

FOOTSTEPS OF THE FLOCK:
A Series of Narratives on the Christian Life.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.
"Very striking and impressive narratives of Spiritual usefulness."
Our Own Fireside.

GOD'S MESSENGERS; Or, The Lost Blessing.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.
"The various chapters are mines of richest experience. The author lives at the feet of Jesus."—Sword and Trowel.

THE SECRET OF THE LORD.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.
"Cannot fail to be welcome to those who appreciate evangelical holiness."
The Freeman.

PRECIOUS GEMS For the Saviour's Diadem.
Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Neat, 1s. 6d.
"Well calculated for world-wide circulation."—The Evangelist

SPECIAL SEASONABLE OFFER.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott have a remainder of 2,000 Copies of

"The Christian" Portrait Gallery

Containing over One Hundred Life-Like Portraits and Biographical Sketches of Christian Men and Women of the Present Day.

IN A NUMBER OF CASES PURCHASERS, ON RECEIVING THIS HANDSOME VOLUME, HAVE BEEN SO HIGHLY DELIGHTED WITH IT, THAT THEY HAVE IMMEDIATELY ORDERED MORE.

Published at 10/6 which they are clearing out FOR 3/6 NET, Carriage Paid.

Application should be made at once, Accompanied by Post Office Order for 3s. 6d.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

REV. ROBERT BRUCE, D.D.,

C.M.S. MISSIONARY IN PERSIA.

THE subject of our sketch was born at Charleville, in co. Cork, Ireland, on October 23, 1833. His father, Jonathan Bruce, was a Justice of the Peace for co. Cork. His mother's name was Annie Maxwell. Both father and mother bear Scotch names, and were of Scotch extraction.

The migration of the Bruces to Ireland is referred to in Burke's "Landed Gentry." A son of Sir Alexander Bruce, of Earl's Hall, Fife, fought in the Royalist ranks at the Battle of Worcester; he went to Ireland after the battle, and remained there. It seems that the loadstone of attraction was a young lady, a Miss Saul; and, ever since, the Bruces have honoured her memory by having in their families Sauls and Jonathans.

Dr. Bruce when a boy did not go to school. He was taught at home by a tutor, who knew Latin, and little besides. He was in youth a keen sportsman, a good rider, and a good shot. He passed through Trinity College, Dublin, distinguishing himself in mathematics and theology.

The turning point in his life was a fall from a horse. On that occasion, a clergyman said to him: "'All things work together for good to them that love God.' Do you love God?" He pondered for a month over the question, and in the end he found the answer, not that he loved God, but that God loved him. The truth then discovered has borne him up ever since, and in the strength of it he has lived and laboured.

Towards the close of his attendance at Trinity College, Dublin, he resolved to join the missionary prayer meetings, for, said he, "as I am resolved not to be a missionary myself, I ought to do all I can to help others." The first day on which he attended the missionary prayer-meeting he left his Bible behind him in the student's room in which the meeting had been held. He returned for it in the afternoon, and made the student's acquaintance. They took a walk together, talking about mission work, and on the way his new companion, turning to him, said: "How do you know that it is not God's will that you should be a missionary yourself?" "That question," says Dr. Bruce, "was a polished shaft from God's own quiver, and I could not extract it from my heart."

He wrote to his parents, who, at that time, were well-nigh ruined by the Irish famine, to say that he would be unable at his ordination to declare that he believed he was called by the Holy Spirit to the ministry, unless he was able to go wherever the Holy Spirit might send him. His parents, who, in the pressure of the famine, had sent away three of their sons to seek new homes in distant lands, replied that it would break their hearts if he left them to be a missionary. The pain of parting with his three brothers was still poignant, and the prospect of losing the fourth was more than they could bear.

At that time Dr. Bruce came upon the passage in the Gospel that called upon him to give up father and mother for Christ's sake and the Gospel's, with the promise of receiving a hundredfold in their stead. He did not like the passage. It seemed to him wicked, as it appeared to him to say, "Be selfish. Give up your parents, though they grieve. I will give you better instead."

He prayed over the matter, and the Spirit of God seemed to say to him, "If God changes their hearts and makes them sharers with you in the blessing, that will be giving them back to you a hundredfold." The very next morning a work of grace began in his family, without any effort on his part, or means used by him, and the result was that he got the answer he desired. The promise was fulfilled a hundredfold.

On May 20, 1857, he offered himself as a missionary to the Church Missionary Society. The letter was lost at the Mission House, and he was unwilling to send in his application a second time. The letter was found, and a reply sent to him on December 20, 1857. While the letter was lost, and the matter of the appointment in suspense, all difficulties to his becoming a missionary were finally removed.

On October 4, 1858, he set sail for his mission field in the Punjab. For the first three years he was missionary at an outstation called Narowal, where he erected the first mission school in the town, and laid the foundation of the mission house, where he hoped to spend the remaining years of his life.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.)

On his arrival in India Dr. Bruce began to study the Mohammedan religion. The larger part of the inhabitants of the Punjab are idolaters, but he felt that he should devote himself to the Muslim population, who are less accessible to the Gospel than idolaters. While he was thus meditating on his true vocation, an order reached him from the London Committee, directing him to leave Narowal, and join the new mission to be opened in the Derajat. As the new mission was entirely to Mohammedans his studies had fitted him for it.

It was hoped that, as the Derajat lay on the frontier of Hindustan, the mission might be able to send the light of the Gospel into the strongholds of Islam in Central Asia. For some months at first Dr. Bruce worked under the guidance of Rev. T. B. French, afterwards Bishop of Lahore. Often did these fellow-workers turn longing eyes to the Grand Takht-i-Suliman mountain range, and eagerly yearn to bear the Gospel to the region beyond. Mr. French was soon obliged by ill-health to return to Europe, and it was then Dr. Bruce's privilege to build the first mission houses and schools in the Derajat, viz., Dera Ismail Khan and Bannu. For six years he carried on mission work among the Afghans, through the medium of the Pashtu language, but towards the close of that period he began to devote himself to the study of Persian, believing that by means of Persian Christ's Kingdom might be best extended in Central Asia. Eighteen months later he was in Persia, the field of his future labours.

In April, 1860, Dr. Bruce married Emily C. Hughes Hughes, and she has ever since been his fellow-labourer and true yokefellow, the sharer in all his sorrows and joys. In 1868 both Dr. Bruce and his wife were obliged by failing health to return to England. When, in the following year, he was preparing to return alone to India, a friend who had travelled in Persia so interested him in that land, that he resolved to pass through it on his way back to his mission.

Rev. H. Venn was then hon. secretary of the Church Missionary Society. For thirty years Mr. Venn had watched over the interests of the Society, and when Dr. Bruce spoke to him of returning to India through Persia, his prepared mind saw in the suggestion an opening for establishing a mission in Persia.

Thus encouraged, Dr. Bruce set out from London in March, 1869, for Persia, with permission from his Committee to spend one year among the Persians. The path of the missionary to Persia was zigzag, and somewhat roundabout, but there was little doubt that the Spirit of God was guiding his steps.

During his first year in Persia an attempt was made to have him appointed chaplain to the English Embassy at Teheran. Dr. Bruce believed that he would be able to discharge the duties of a chaplain to the English and carry on mission work at the same time. At the close of the year the negotiations regarding the Embassy were not completed, and he received permission from the home Committee to remain in Persia another year.

On the British Government declining to make a grant towards the proposed chaplaincy, the negotiations came to an end; but during the interval Dr. Bruce's heart had warmed to the work in Persia. As the second year was drawing to a close, he received a letter from Mr. Venn, telling him that if he could make a good revision of Henry Martyn's New Testament, the Committee would consent to his remaining in Persia for that purpose; but if not, he was instructed to go on to India at the close of his second year, in May, 1871.

In 1833, the year of Dr. Bruce's birth, Dr. Perkins established the American Presbyterian Mission in Oroomiah. The American Mission was confined to the Turkish-speaking people in the north-west of Persia. Dr. Bruce settled his headquarters in Julfa, an Armenian suburb of Ispahan, the ancient capital of the country. He had, therefore, the honour of beginning the first Protestant mission for the Persian-speaking part of Persia.

In one short year in 1811-12, Henry Martyn had made a version of the New Testament in Persian. He received considerable help in the work, but it was a marvellous achievement for a dying man, in such a short space of time. Parts of the version were fairly good, but as the author did not live to revise it, or to see it through the press, it was, on the whole, unsatisfactory. It required some courage on the part of another missionary to undertake to improve Henry Martyn's version.

While Dr. Bruce was meditating on Mr. Venn's instructions, and his fitness to revise the version, the period was approaching (May) when he must either undertake the work, or set out for India. April came, and light with it from an unexpected quarter. In that month nine Mohammedans, all intelligent and respectable men, sought baptism at his hands. He felt so convinced that God was answering his prayers, and guiding him to remain in Persia, that he hired a house in Julfa for a year, and wrote to his Committee for their approval.

Through lack of funds the Committee's response was unfavourable. Then broke out the terrible Persian famine, which taxed all Dr. Bruce's ingenuity and energy. Owing to drought, during the winter months of 1870-71, there was considerable suffering, but the drought continued and the suffering increased. Friends in Germany and in England supplied him with funds, and in relieving distress he expended £16,000. Out of the famine grew school work and mission work, and circumstances were so ordered, by a wisdom higher than his own or that of his Committee, that he was unable to leave Persia.

During all these years of weary waiting and uncertainty Dr. Bruce was preparing for the great work of his life. He was constantly using the living vernacular tongue in teaching and preaching, and in all his intercourse with the people, and he was daily engaged in the study of the classical tongue. He was also proceeding with the work of translation. A version of the Prayer-book and a Bible History gave him practice in composition. So did a tentative revision of parts of the New Testament, though the work was not satisfactory. But Dr. Bruce learned from preliminary failure, and with a high ideal before him, he laboured on the revision of the New Testament.

Persian is a literary language, polished and elegant, and a version of the Scriptures in Persian should be simple, pure, polished, and elegant. It is not enough to give the meaning of the original in a version of the Scriptures. The idioms and elegancies of the language must be observed, if the version is to find its way to the affections of the people.

In 1882, Dr. Bruce returned from Persia with the manuscript of the revised New Testament. Like all true workers, he had a lowly estimate of his work. It was thought desirable by the Committee of the Bible Society that the version should pass under the eyes of another Persian scholar besides Dr. Bruce, before being published. Dr. Wright, the Editorial Superintendent of the Bible Society, had once met Professor E. H. Palmer on Mount Hermon, and after spending many days with him, in Damascus and in other places, had formed a high estimate of his marvellous linguistic acquirements. Professor Palmer was induced to spend two hours a day for six months with Dr. Bruce in going over every clause and verse of the New Testament, and the result of their joint revision was a great advance on any version of the New Testament ever before published. Professor Palmer went straight from the revision of the New Testament to Egypt, where he was murdered. It is some consolation, however, to remember that the last six months of that scholarly and precious life were devoted to the revision of Henry Martyn's New Testament.

Dr. Bruce, however, was not satisfied with the work. He returned to Persia, and began again a complete revision of the whole Bible. Aided by his teachers, and pupils, and other Persian scholars, he continued the work; and last year he returned to England with the Bible complete. He is now engaged in carrying through the press this crowning achievement of his ripe experience and scholarship. With breaks by sickness, and necessary rests, we may look on the version as the chief fruit of twenty-four years' labour. In all this we recognise the hand of the living and loving God. May He make the Book a blessing to Persia, and to Him alone be all the glory!

W. W.

INDUSTRIAL MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—In "The Rise of our East African Empire in Nyassaland and Uganda," a book which The Times pronounces to be the most important contribution that has yet been made to the history of British East Africa, Captain Lugard, speaking of missions, says:—

I think the most useful missions are the medical and the industrial in the initial stages of savage development. A combination of the two is, in my opinion, an ideal mission. Throughout Africa the ideas of the cure of the body and of the soul are closely allied. As the skill of the European in medicine asserts its superiority over the crude methods of the medicine man, so does he in proportion gain an influence in his teaching the great truths of Christianity. . . . A mere preacher is discounted, and his zeal is not understood. . . . The value of the industrial mission depends largely on the nature of the tribes among whom it is located. . . . In my view education is largely wasted on adults, who are wedded to custom and prejudice. It is the rising generation who should be educated to a higher place by the establishment of schools for children.

It will interest your readers to know that these are exactly the lines on which the Zambesi Industrial Mission is carried on in Nyassaland, one of the centres treated of by Captain Lugard. The industrial, the medical, the educational, and the spiritual department of the Mission are all well provided for. Of the twenty-three European missionaries connected with the Z.I.M. four have had medical training. Letters from the missionaries received in London last Friday state that after a conference extending over two days, Mr. Booth, Dr. Fallon, and their colleagues have decided on a forward movement. While keeping their present missionary plantation well manned it was arranged that eight missionaries should advance into Angoniland, which has hitherto been unreached by Christian effort. Dr. Hamilton, one of the missionaries, had previously prospected in Angoniland, and now he has gone forward with Mr. and Mrs. Graham, Dr. and Mrs. Allan, Miss Thomas, Miss Davis, and Mr. Edwards. They purpose opening up the five stations granted to the Mission by Mr. H. H. Johnston, British Consul for Nyassaland.

As this effort will be attended by many dangers both from man and beast, we trust our readers will remember these pioneers in their prayers. The missionaries state that it is urgently needful to send out at once large supplies of provisions and calico for both Europeans and natives.—Yours truly,

R. Caldwell, Sec.

St. Martin's House, 1, Gresham-street, E.C.

MISSION WORK AMONGST PUBLICANS.

A meeting was held at the Aldenham Institute, Goldington-crescent, St. Pancras, on the 7th inst., in connection with the work of the London City Mission amongst publicans. The special missionary (Mr. J. J. Browne) has about 500 public-houses in his district, which he periodically visits, and the landlords, their children, and their assistants were well represented by those present.

The meeting took the form of a tea, at intervals during which the choir of the London City Mission sang the praises of Christ. Rev. Robert Dawson (one of the secretaries of the Mission) presided, and traced the history of the work. At the present time 12,000 public-houses are visited by twenty-five missionaries appointed by the committee. He concluded his remarks by an earnest Gospel appeal.

Mr. Woods, a City missionary, who next spoke, gave some incidents from his own work; and Mrs. Barsley, a lady from Harrow, specially urged the children to give their hearts to Christ. After a few appropriate words from Mr. Brett, missionary to policemen, Mr. Browne closed the meeting by thanking the publicans for the kind reception they had always given him.

At the close of the meeting, a barmaid arose, and in the name of all present, thanked Mr. Browne for the books and tracts he had left from month to month. As the friends left, a kind lady, a friend of the mission, gave each a book and card to take home.

Children's Free Dinners.

Sir,—The fund for giving dinners to Board School children is greatly in need of funds to carry on the work this winter. The need of the children in many districts is extreme, owing to the general slackness of work, the high price of coal, and the widely prevaling sickness. A painful feature of our work this year is that many parents who have hitherto been held above such need are applying reluctantly to us for free tickets, careful investigation in their homes disclosing grievous distress.

All contributions go direct to the object for which the money is sent; there are no expenses for management. Copies of report will be gladly sent and subscriptions gratefully received by yours obediently,

Annie Pennington, Hon. Sec.

16, Crossfield-road, South Hampstead, N.W.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of the late Mr. GEORGE GILLETT, banker and Christian philanthropist.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions for the ensuing year. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if friends will kindly note the particulars.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive THE CHRISTIAN direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

The distress in the East-end is terrible. The poor say it is the overwhelming press of foreigners cutting both men's and women's wages down. Men who this time last year got £1 a week, only get 12s. 6d. now. Is there any reason or humanity in allowing this little island to be the dumping-ground for the poverty of all the world?

We utter a sincere and hearty Christmas greeting to all our widely scattered readers. May the First Advent gladness and its fruits be theirs in overflowing measure; and not only at this time of special commemoration, but continually as the days and years go by, and the programme of this present life fades into the irredeemable past. Some men may overestimate the value of observing times and seasons; neglecting for them that constant heart communion with the Eternal which keeps the fires of the soul aglow without extraneous impulses. Vital Christianity does not reject any uplifting that comes legitimately from the occasional and the temporary; but it takes pains to preserve the windows of the soul untarnished, so that the life-giving and fructifying light of God may stream in without hindrance. Better even than the exulting Christmas joy of the welcomed Christ, are the calm and restful strength and comfort that spring from his abiding presence in the innermost citadel of the heart.

But the lessons of Christmas are relative, as well as subjective. There is "peace on earth" through the reconciliation that the Saviour came to accomplish; there is also "goodwill to men," because the love of Christ constraineth us to desire the good of those for whom Christ came and lived, and died, and rose, and reigns. Alas! it is because men are at enmity with God that they are at enmity one with another. "Boards of Conciliation" between one set of people and another would be obsolete and superfluous if all had experienced the regenerating power of the Gospel of reconciliation, and were not only striving to love God with heart and soul and strength and mind, but were loving their neighbours as themselves. What with social strifes, and political animosities more keen and bitter than ever, and with the nations of Europe armed to the teeth, surely the satisfaction that comes to Christ from seeing the full travail of his soul seems even now far distant.

And yet this Christmas time is a promise and a pledge that the desired end is certain. No Christian should give way to despair because of the postponed realisation of the great and precious promises of God. Neither should his faith falter for a moment in the darkest hour. We cannot impose our petty calendars upon Him with Whom one day is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day. In the fulness of time Christ came once to make an end of sin and to bring in everlasting righteousness. In the fulness of time He will come again, without sin, unto completed salvation. It is ours to see to it, that, by our unbelief, by our unfaithfulness, by our pride and self seeking, or by our devotion to self-constructed programmes, we do not delay his Second Advent.

Would that we were all more taken up with the personal Christ, less occupied with things about Him, more concerned with the Lord Himself. It is one of the most subtle snares laid for our feet to get us so busy with the schemes and systems, possibly good in themselves so far as they go, as that we lose sight of the one great necessity as well as crowning privilege of true discipleship—communion with the Lord. Out of touch with Jesus we are powerless for good, and destitute of blessing. If, Enoch like, we walk with God, our path becomes like that of "the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Continuance with Christ is the sine quâ non of power with God and men; to abide with the King is the best possible way both to anticipate and to hasten the Kingdom.

"THE DIARY AND LETTERS OF ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.," issued by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton (6s.), is one of the most helpful books for the culture of the spiritual life that the modern press has produced. We have here unfolded to us with unusual simplicity and candour, the inner workings, yearnings, and attainments of a soul that was, one might say, supersensitive to the touch of the Holy Spirit in his sanctifying office. After reading these daily records and reflections we can understand the secret of a life that found such favour with God and man. Would that every Christian pastor could study and drink deeply into the spirit of this autobiography. We hope to make some extracts from the diary in future issues.

We are such imitative creatures. The tones of Charles H. Spurgeon are reproduced in many of his students. The voice and gestures of the Booth family are traceable in the officers of the Salvation Army. In other circles stereotyped expressions are reiterated with a wearisome sameness. "Down here" and "up there" are phrases which recur with monotonous frequency, as though they were elegant synonyms for earth and heaven. It is very desirable to avoid mannerism of any kind: whether it be an established formality on the one hand, or a methodical fervency on the other; a congregational culture affected here, or an affectionately-expressed exclusiveness developed there. In prayer, imitate the inimitable psalms and supplications recorded for us in the Old Testament and in the New, rather than adopt the terms and phrases of any school. The most spiritual experience finds the most natural expression. Young believers, and elder also, may well be reminded that the more we walk in the Spirit the less will our speech or conduct be marred by individual eccentricity or by mannerism acquired from imitation.

Among the Christmas books there is none for which we look with more interested anticipation than the annual volume of Mrs. Frances Bevan (TREES PLANTED BY THE RIVER. 3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.). It is no small boon to this generation that the experiences of saints who centuries ago lived in the Holiest, in closest fellowship with God, should thus be preserved to us. We warmly commend the records of these trees planted by the rivers of water, trees full of sap, as one of the most precious gifts to those who seek the Heavenly City, and have an ear for its holy harmonies.

The notorious Zierenberg case points a moral which the religious and philanthropic will do well to lay to heart, viz.: "Be sure that you are giving money to those who will use it rightly." Where there is so much difficulty in obtaining help for perfectly genuine cases of need and for well-worked philanthropic agencies, it is distressing to see money consumed by the unworthy. There is a special danger to some honest and truthful persons in their very honesty and truthfulness, because what they would never dream of doing themselves they cannot believe anyone else would do. It is much easier for some to believe in the doctrine of depravity than to believe that a depraved person has come into their house to impose upon them by means of a bogus refuge or home. The recommendation of the judge and jury in the Zierenberg case that every home or refuge should be under Government inspection may be carried out, but no Government inspection can guarantee a loving heart, and God's work for man cannot be done without it.

A more terrible example of the selfishness which lies at the root of a gambler's nature, has never come under our notice than the following:—

At Villefranche Station on Thursday, just as the train for Mentone was steaming into the station, one of two gentlemen who had been walking quietly up and down the platform, suddenly left his companion and threw himself on the line in front of the advancing engine. His body was terribly mutilated. The companion of the unhappy man manifested little concern, and, in spite of the remonstrances of the railway officials, insisted on getting into the very train which had just killed his friend, leaving an address which ultimately proved to be false. All subsequent attempts to discover his whereabouts have failed. The suicide, who was a financier from Paris, had lost heavily at play.

Yes; the survivor was heartless, but would it have been different had the men changed places?

Among ominous signs of the times must be placed the proposal to form a "Thurifer

Guild," in connection with the Established Church of our land. Its members are to consist of the numerous acolytes and other attendants on the "altars" now so common in the churches both of town and country. One of its objects is to be the further development of the Popish practice of incense-burning, and the best method of producing orthodox and sweet-smelling compounds for use. Alas for the congregations whose pastors and teachers forsake the one true altar of God, and the one High-Priest within the veil, for altars and for rituals alike derogatory to the honour of Christ, and destructive to the souls of men.

A young lady who has been making a stay in Florence with a Roman Catholic Italian family has returned to England greatly impressed with the intense hatred that the Jesuits have to the Italian King and his Government, and with the readiness and assurance with which the Italian people ascribe any attempt on the King to them. Were he to be assassinated or come to any mischief, the Jesuits would get the blame. The Italians also are confident that the Jesuits are a great deal busier in England than the English people suppose. They say that inasmuch as England grants perfect religious liberty, and Englishmen do not generally inquire into a man's religion before placing him at the head of a business or in some other responsible position, it has come to pass that numbers of Jesuits are to-day in positions of trust, and are using their positions for the advantage of their Church.

To this young lady's astonishment (and she was not trained in an alarmist way in regard to the Roman Catholic Church) she would hear the remark made of one and another distinguished person in her country. "Ah, yes! a Jesuit." We seem to be looked upon as a simple, not to say credulous, people. They know the Jesuits in Italy, and understand their ways; they have paid a dear price for their knowledge. We may pay too dearly for ours. Is it wise or right of English Protestants to engage Roman Catholic tutors for their children, or heads of firms to put Roman Catholics to manage their affairs and engage or dismiss employés? Whilst we can support no public policy that would persecute Romanists, are we not bound to safeguard our homes, our businesses, and our nation in every right way?

A return made by the Bank of England to the House of Commons shows that nearly £10,000 was on November 22 of this year written off from the total issue of notes dated prior to 1853. Notes to that amount not having been presented for payment within the forty years past, according to the Bank Act of 1892, are no longer presentable. If a return could be made of all the Divine promises Christians have failed to claim within a similar period through unbelief, and other causes, how large would be the loss of spiritual wealth involved. We have reason to rejoice, however, that the foundation of God standeth sure. "If we believe not, He abideth faithful, He cannot deny Himself." Shall we not ransack our treasure store, and see whether we cannot turn to more account our interest in Divine assurances? Be this our prayer, "Lord, increase our faith."

The quarterly record of the National Bible Society of Scotland tells of a French evangelist, M. Devenege, who has hit on the happy thought of visiting the towns and villages of Normandy on his tricycle, in the hope of gaining a wider circulation for the Scriptures. He has thus disposed of 2199 New Testaments this year. He exhibits the Scriptures open on the desk of his carriage-box. Some persons read and some buy.

Frequently while offering the precious book in private houses, I find on my return a crowd round my carriage, making their reflections on the portions of the Scriptures laid before them, generally John iii., or Romans v.

The average of his sales is one New Testament in every twenty houses visited. It is for Christians to harness every contrivance and every discovery to the work of spreading the Gospel. Let us have more travelling evangelists, going about on bicycles, and preaching on two or three village greens on the same summer evening. Then shall we be able to get at the army of men on pleasure bent, who on fine Sunday mornings stream out of London and all great cities.

The mutually contradictory nature of the evidence being given in India before the Opium Royal Commission constitutes a strange puzzle to simple-minded people, who have difficulty in believing that black and white mean the same thing. Sir Joseph Pease shows in a dispassionate letter to The Times that the British public are not being impartially served by the Indian telegrams, which generally give prominence to the pro-opium side of the question. To get at the full facts we must patiently await the completion of the evidence and the report of the Commission.

Meantime it is highly interesting to read what is said by The Bombay Guardian, which is on the spot, and can fairly appraise the value of the evidence:—

The Commission is being deluged with the statements of officials whose consciences are so seared by long complicity with sin that they call darkness light. In some cases, the official allegations cannot be other than deliberate falsehood. Between the statements of the missionary and official witnesses there is a gulf which no stretch of charity can bridge. One of the two classes is lying, and lying outrageously. Doubtless the British public will know which class to believe.

Dr. Cuyler's facile pen contributes helpful and stimulating articles on doctrine and life to a large circle of religious journals. His teaching and attitude are always loyal to Scripture. In a recent issue of The Portland Mirror (Maine), the Atonement is dealt with as "The Core of the Gospel," and the fear is expressed that this truth is not presented so often and so winsomely as it ought to be. Dr. Cuyler refers in terms of high appreciation to Dr. Newman Hall's useful book, "Atonement, the Fundamental Fact of Christianity" (2s. Religious Tract Society), a little volume which we are glad again to commend to all who require a sound and simple treatment of a doctrine of fundamental importance.

A remark by Peter Böhler, the Moravian pastor, who was a friend of Wesley and Whitefield, on the difference between English and German Christians, has always seemed to us profoundly true:—

Our mode of believing in the Saviour is so easy to Englishmen that they cannot reconcile themselves to it; if it were a little more artful they would much sooner find their way into it. Of faith in Jesus they have no other idea than the generality of people have. They justify themselves, and therefore they always take it for granted that they believe already, and try to prove their faith by their works, and thus so plague and torment themselves that they are at heart very miserable.

There is an artlessness in the faith of many German believers, a child-like simplicity, which we too seldom see at home. Our strenuous English nature and restless habits may have something to do with the difference between the types of religion in the two peoples.

Christians may find much food for meditation and much light for guidance in a conversation which Dr. Henry Martyn Clark, C.M.S. missionary at Amritsar, had with a friendly Hindu. "Do you mind telling me which of all our methods you fear the most?" inquired Dr. Clark. "Why should I put weapons into the hands of the enemy?" said the Hindu; "but I will tell you. We do not greatly fear your schools, we need not send our children. We do not fear your books, for we do not read them. We do not much fear your preaching, we need not listen. But we dread your women and we dread your doctors, for your doctors are winning our hearts, and your women are winning our homes, and when our hearts and our homes are won, what is there left us?"

The meanings of familiar passages of Scripture sometimes flash upon us from some interpreting circumstance; thus the old promise—Gen. iii. 15—is vividly illustrated by Rev. J. Ewen in his book on "India":—

A man, armed with a long bamboo, gave chase to the cobra, which was gliding off towards an old wall, and, overtaking it, gave it a blow which broke the vertebræ and arrested its progress. Two or three more well-directed blows injured it so seriously that it lay as if dead. We gathered round it, amazed at its immense size, when someone remarked: "Take care, the air may get into its lungs and revive it. If it does, it may spring suddenly and bite some of us; bruise its head." Down went the bamboo again. Placing the end on its head, the man crushed it between the hard ground and his stick. The jawbone was broken, the muscles paralysed, and the poison-glands destroyed. Notwithstanding, the snake coiled and twisted in the most lively fashion, but its power to work mischief was gone. Then I understood for the first time what the curse on the serpent meant: "He shall bruise thy head."

"Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God." Divine illumination, a new nature created by the Spirit of God, is necessary before anyone can accept the idea of the incarnation of our Saviour. We may speculate about incarnation, but when we feel our sinfulness, helplessness, and loneliness, the revelation of the Son of God having entered our nature, passed through our experience, and died for our sins, becomes very precious; it meets a deep need. The "mystery of godliness" remains a mystery, but it is not a difficulty. It is transformed into a help. Something within us says that this is as worthy of God as it is needful for man. We confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, because we believe it to be the very truth.

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." If we can believe and confess that the Divine Son took human form, we can, by the same Spirit acting on us, renewing us, opening the eyes of our hearts, see that the human Jesus is the Divine Christ. There is something about Him fairer than the sons of men; there is something about his personality and life which the human does not exhaust or explain. We come short of his greatness and goodness when we say that He is only human. When we know Him as the Spirit reveals Him, we call Him Lord, for so He is. Again, we are perplexed with the metaphysics of the problem, but out of the heart comes the solution. "Prove that Jesus Christ was divine" was the question put to a young man who offered himself for admission as a student of a college. Bursting into tears, he said, "I know He is, because He saved my soul." The best possible answer.

The Star of Bethlehem.

THE Star of Bethlehem, like Him whose star it was, is wonderful. It shines in a light of its own. No theory resolves the mystery. Whether it was the rare conjunction of Jupiter, Saturn, and Mars, as Kepler thought, in connection with which, as in his own day, a fourth star was seen to emerge and to point westward—whether this was the Star of Bethlehem, or some new star that blazed forth for a season from depths unknown, to withdraw when its mission as Messiah's witness had been served, we have no means of knowing. Whatever the view adopted, the characteristics of the star in question transcend scientific explanation.

It is not ours to resolve the mystery of the appearance of the star; rather it is ours to be instructed by the fact. The clear significance of this token, if we may venture to construe it, is that creation to its utmost end is concerned in Christ's birth. Tiny as the earth is in respect of the vast universe, it is the theatre of unprecedented Divine display. The glory to God which it brings in the highest is a glory reflected upon creation to its remotest bound. All creation has something at stake, something to learn, some benefit to gain, from the wondrous fact that the Word became flesh and dwelt amongst us. "He made the stars also"—He whose "delights were with the sons of men." It is by his power they shine, and for his glory they are and were created. It is idle to suppose that the Divine mystery, Immanuel, God with us, has no extra-mundane bearings. Is it not God's plan to gather up all things in Him, whether they be things on earth or things in heaven, even in Him who was before all things and in whom all things cohere? If the angels sang when He was born, it is not surprising that a star of matchless beauty appears to sound the advance note of creation's praise. Who can wonder, seeing the arm of the Lord is revealed, and creation's Maker appears as the Infant of Days, that out of the abyss of heavens a star leaps forth to pulsate as never did star before, and to flash intelligence of the fact to the few observers of the star-gemmed sky in whom true wisdom was found?

What is told concerning the Magi is small compared with what is suggested. How came these men to be among the wise? One wonders at finding wisdom in such a sphere. From the Magi came magic and what has been called the black art. It was the Magi that withstood Moses in Egypt, and that Nebuchadnezzar first consulted about his dream. It was the Magi that cast horoscopes, told fortunes, and explained the stellar influences in relation to the fates of men. The Magi, as a class, were not ranged on the side of God, but on the side of demons. But here are men from the East who stand out by way of exception, to whom the black art is not the end of astronomic study, but the Divine thoughts.

What are we to infer? Clearly that they had become students of the Word, and had embraced the grand hope of the coming King. Hence, when the Star of Bethlehem appeared, they could distinguish it, they could name it rightly, they could infer the line of its direction, and follow their starry guide; and though precipitate in their conclusion that Jerusalem was its goal, the error is soon rectified by the reappearance of the star, and by its clear indication of the very spot in Bethlehem where the Infant Saviour lay.

The light that God has given in his Word is sufficient to make wise still, and those who find the wisdom will see the Star, and know in the new heavens of a regenerated heart that the King is come and is to be adored. The wise men greeted the birth of Christ by worship. They could do no other. To have stopped short of bended knee and adoring heart would have been to have stultified the evidences both of reason and the senses. How could He be from beneath, whose attendant is a glorious star, and whose index is set in the canopy of heaven? He must be Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, whose natal badge makes heaven wonderful, and by its vivid rays marks the spot of the Holy Mystery.

It needs no theological indoctrination or argumentative process to win that soul to worship Christward which has once seen his star; for the dark spirit is then illumined, and between the sight of Christ and the adoration of Him, there is not a step. The absence of the spirit of worship towards Jesus is due to the absence of heavenly contemplation. It is easy for those to blaspheme who grovel—easy for those to discrown the Messiah, or deny Him Divine honours, who are earthly, and carnal, and sensuous, and who care more for their reputation manward than Godward; but when a man's thoughts take wing, when his field of observation is heavenly, when his eye is intent on the Blessed Word which is for ever settled in heaven, it is far otherwise. Faith then looks and lives, for his star is seen, and the soul adores the earth-born Redeemer.

Worship has, as its appropriate sequel, gifts. "And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto Him gifts; gold, frankincense, and myrrh." The worship of the heart has, as its correspondent, the ministry with the hand. And what is this? It is the luxury of worship. It is blessing God as distinguished from being blessed by Him. If we were blessed of God and could not bless in return, we should resemble a fountain sealed; as it is, the fountain is opened, and the well-spring of praise becomes a stream of gratitude, a river of devotion.

So here the opening of the treasures is love's imperative and worship's crown. Love's gifts are not superfluities. The Infant of Days had human interests, human needs. He has so still. Consider how dependent He is in many of his members, and how in the relief of the least of these, you succour Him. And if this is to you a day of good tidings, if unto you a Child is born, a Son is given, remember how many there are who have not even heard of his name; and, in the opening of love's store, make the luxury of worship your own, and give wings to the Gospel to fly to earth's utmost end.

JAMES DOUGLAS.

AT BABBACOMBE the Misses Skinners have had for some years a delightful House of Rest for business women, and here many toilers have been refreshed and reinvigorated. These ladies are anxious it should be known that the House is open in the winter, as they feel that it ought to be more used at that season, the situation it occupies giving great advantages in the winter. The address is Bayfield, Babbacombe, Torquay.

CABMEN'S MISSION, KING'S CROSS.—This Mission has been the means of benefiting and uplifting hundreds of drivers who have become sober, honest, and God-fearing men. In connection with the Mission, Gospel temperance meetings are carried on with great earnestness; there are also a Sunday-school, Band of Hope, preaching, and open-air services and prayer-meetings in active operation. The funds are exhausted, and we are burdened with a deficit of several hundred pounds.

JOHN DUPEE, Superintendent.

165, Hemingford-road, Barnsbury, N.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

ANOINTED AND SEALED.

A CORRESPONDENT, referring to our article on "Foundation Truths" (Nov. 9), says:—

The writer infers that all who have been converted have been anointed or sealed. Do you think that the anointing always takes place at conversion, or is it not generally afterwards? I am disposed to think that it is a further manifestation of the Holy Ghost (see Eph. i. 13, 2 Cor. i. 21, 22, Matt. iii. 16, 17).

The passages referred to prove the contrary:—

In whom, having believed, ye were sealed. Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, in whom ye were sealed unto the day of redemption (Eph. i. 13, iv. 30, R.V.).

He that stablisheth us with you into Christ, and anointed us, is God, seeing that He both sealed us and gave us the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts (2 Cor. i. 21, 22, R.V., mar.).

These words were written respectively to all the Ephesian and Corinthian saints, not to some in either city who were more advanced than others. The reference in Matt. iii. is to the Spirit descending on Jesus at the commencement of his public ministry.

Anointing and sealing are initial acts.

Kings were anointed at their coronation, and priests at their consecration. The tabernacle and all its vessels were anointed as soon as they were made and set apart for the service of God. Indeed, it was by the anointing that they were so set apart. The apostle John wrote to all saints throughout all time, "The anointing which ye received of Him abideth in you . . . and even as it hath taught you, abide ye in Him" (1 John ii. 27, R.V.), or "in it," as A.V. mar.

Seals of office are given to an ambassador at his appointment, not some time after. Jeremiah (xxxii. 10) sealed the deed of purchase at the same time that he subscribed it. The Jews sealed the stone of the sepulchre as soon as they got Pilate's permission. The seal was put upon the lions' den as soon as Daniel was put into it; and as soon as Satan is shut up in the bottomless pit the angel sets a seal upon him. The Father anointed and sealed the Son for his work of redemption at the hour when by his baptism He was set apart for it. The servants of God are sealed for preservation before the winds of tribulation begin to blow.

As soon as we are born again we are baptized into the one body of which Christ is the Head, and are all made to drink into one Spirit. Every child of God is, from the moment of his new birth, constituted a sealed and anointed minister of the grace given him according to the measure of the gift of Christ. For unto everyone of us is given grace, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ; from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love (Eph. iv.). The interval, the delay, noticed by our correspondent is not on God's part, but on ours. It all comes together from "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, in Christ." But we apprehend the blessings by degrees. Just as "we are saved by the blood, but assured by the Word," so all saints are baptized and sealed and anointed, immediately we believe, but we become conscious and assured of it as we are instructed in the Word of truth; as we grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; and as by Him we believe in God, who raised Him up from the dead and gave Him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God.

R. C. M.

"APOCALYPTIC SCENES."

THE last of these papers, by the late Sir S. A. Blackwood, will appear in our next issue, entitled "The Fourth Sign—The Lamb and the 144,000 on Mount Zion."

A desire has been expressed by many readers that these papers should be republished in a volume, as a bulwark against the aggressiveness of Rome. Such was the beloved author's earnest wish. It is, however, necessary to be able to form some idea as to the prospect of a sufficient number of copies being required to justify the expense of publication. It is, therefore, earnestly requested that every reader who would become a subscriber to the volume will at once send to the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN name and address, and number of copies desired. The price would probably be 5s.

[1309]

The Present Distress.

BY REV. A. G. BROWN, Bow.

Though far away from home I am kept in full knowledge of the state of affairs, and all my relief works are being carried on as usual. There can be no question that the distress is terribly severe. In a letter from my daughter, who is taking my place pro tem., she says, "The state of things here is alarming. The soup kitchen is literally saving scores from starving."

I expect to be in London in the course of a few days with the special view of personally helping in the work of relief.

BY REV. WM. CUFF, Shoreditch.

I am in distress and trouble about all the poverty, suffering, and woe around us here. I would not bother you, but so little comes in, and we have a splendidly organised mission church with eight missions attached to it, all worked by purely voluntary workers. Every Sunday night while I am conducting the service here there are some 300 church members out of the Tabernacle doing all sorts of aggressive Christian work. Missions, schools, house-to-house visiting go on at the same time. It seems to me a unique thing. But the poverty of the people is dreadful, and we all yearn to mitigate it. Our fund is empty, and we can do nothing.

We shall do all we can ourselves, but that will be the poor helping the poor. I wonder if you could be so kind as to say a good word for us. Anything sent could be acknowledged, and a big work would be helped.

BY MR. E. H. KERWIN, Mile End.

I want to be allowed to endorse your statement that at the present time there is exceptionally severe and widespread distress. I speak from twenty-five years' experience among the poor of the East of London, not only as General Secretary to the Tower Hamlets Mission, but also as a Poor Law Guardian for many years, and Chairman of the Mile-End Board of Guardians.

We have had starvation in our midst all this year. The daily Press have recorded some very shocking cases, and coroners of various districts have commented upon the sadness of the destitution which causes the deaths of so many. How often recently we have had to turn aside as the boiling tear rolled down our cheeks while listening to the heartrending tale of some poor widow as she related her sad condition surrounded by her woe-begone and hungry little ones.

I have made personal visits to the homes of those in want, that I might be able to record precisely the condition of things actually existing. It was no uncommon thing to find homes completely devoid of everything.

"No bread! No fire! No work!" I will not trouble you with details, but it is generally husband out of work, goes out early morning, walks all day, invariably comes back at night without anything, to find his children crying for food, all things worth anything pawned; nothing left the pawnbroker will take. In one case, while the husband was out searching for work, the children cried so that the mother left her bed and fireless room to take the last things she had, viz., six plates, which she tried to sell to get some bread for her starving little ones. The woman was utterly exhausted, and the wonder is she did not die in her attempt to get something to stay the hunger of her offspring. This is not in the least coloured, and I unhesitatingly say cannot be exaggerated.

We have done all we could to relieve the cases that have come under our notice, but our funds are such now that we have to give orders to our visitors not to seek out new cases. Added to this sad state of things Mr. Charrington has been laid aside for some time, and is now ordered by his medical advisers to take a sea voyage. I am writing from my sick room, having also had an attack of influenza. Several of our workers are also down with it. Amid all this anxiety we are grateful to the Lord for all his mercies, but while we are surrounded with these starving ones we feel that if the prosperous and happy knew of all this misery, how much they might enable us to mitigate it—to warm fireless hearths, to replenish the empty cupboards. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, there is that withholdeth and yet it tendeth to poverty." How true is this? God's standpoint is "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure pressed down and running over," etc. "For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." May the Lord at this time deeply impress this upon the hearts of his own as they enjoy their own happy Christmas.

BY REV. PETER THOMPSON.

With many others I am most thankful for your recent timely article on this subject. Whatever may be the views entertained by the various sections of Christian workers as to causes or remedies, I think they will unite in confirming to the full your statements as to the extent and character of the present distress.

Our mission extends from the Tower to Limehouse, and from Mile End to the river, and has seven centres of operation. We have three ministers, four evangelists, and about twenty lady workers who give their whole time to the interests of the people, besides a large number who give a part of their time to help us. We all agree that the poverty is more awful and the distress more acute than for years past, though our condition of chronic poverty and distress is utterly appalling. Large numbers of families are constantly living on the verge of starvation, and no sooner is the breadwinner thrown out of employment or taken ill than they are in absolute need of food.

Here is one of the cases brought under my notice to-day. In a cellar close by live a man, his wife, and their boy. The man is ill, and at present in bed. The wife is racked with rheumatic pains, aggravated by the dampness of their room; the little boy had to sleep in one corner of the room with the water trickling down the wall close by, and he is naturally far from healthy. They have been without fire part of this week and have now pawned almost everything they can. It is useless to say such people should go to the workhouse; they simply will not do it.

Another case just reported illustrates the distressing condition of many who are driven in their utter need to secure any kind of employment. One of our lady workers found a family in sore straits. The daughter is the principal support of the family, and is at present making men's shirts throughout, with the exception of buttonholes and buttons, for the noble sum of 10d. per dozen. In twenty hours of hard work she will make twenty-eight shirts for twenty-three pence, out of which must go 2d. for cotton. There was a pathos in her words far deeper than she thought when, turning to her visitor, she said, "Ah, Miss, I often says to my mother, they might well write that piece as they call 'The Song of the Shirt.'"

On reading this many will be ready to say, and to say rightly, "This kind of trading in human lives must not be tolerated." But while good men are devising schemes for dealing with these grave questions, men and women and little children are starving under our very eyes, and we are most anxious to help them a little if we can in their present need.

I am glad you call attention to the fact that it is not only the profligate and worthless who are suffering. Many members of our various churches and missions, decent, respectable, God-fearing people, are in sore need. "I never came across a brighter or happier Christian than this poor, suffering woman." So writes one of my workers of a poor widow who, since her husband was killed in the Docks, has fought as only woman can fight to protect her two fatherless children from the wolf, ever at the door. The two boys have now both gone to work, but the poor mother has been smitten down by the terrible disease of cancer. The joint wages of the two lads yield, when the rent is paid, just nine shillings per week, on which the family must live and pay all expenses. With a simple heroism, of which they are wholly unconscious, these two boys live on little more than bread and coffee, work hard during the day, and then come home to look after the house and nurse their mother as best they can.

I have said nothing, so far, about the poor children (they, at least, have done no wrong), and yet upon them comes the present distress in all its bitterness. It is hard enough at times to labour where the voice of crying is constantly heard in the streets, but when that cry is the cry of little children for bread we cannot give them, the work is sometimes well nigh unbearable. Let your readers then send to the help of those who, with loving hearts, but almost empty hands, are trying to minister as best they can to distressed London.

242, Cable-street, E.

The Evangelist.

"AND YET THERE IS ROOM."

What comforting words are these to the soul that, just finding out its own unworthiness, longs to enter the kingdom of the pardoning love and the all-conquering grace of the Saviour, God! Let me tell you the story of one who heard those words for the first time from the lips of the late C. H. Spurgeon, and was saved:—

I had heard that the preacher at the Tabernacle was very eloquent, and perhaps nothing had greater power over me than the rise and fall of a sweet, finely-inflected human voice. So, one evening, with the throb of the City still in my pulse, and with its spirit in my heart, I went to hear Mr. Spurgeon.

"Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city." At those words I was all attention. I followed the servant as he went out at his Master's bidding, and felt I was among "the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind," just as I saw them every day; and I watched them coming in, and saw them seated in the Lord's presence, and wondered in my heart if the Lord would heal them, for I was so strangely moved that I wanted them to be healed every one. When I saw that the more that came in the more room there seemed to be, and I heard the servant say to his Lord in clear, respectful tones, "Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room," the wonder of this struck me with strange force. I detached my spiritual gaze from the Oriental picture, and asked myself the plain question, "Room—where?" "With Christ, in his heart," I found myself mentally replying. "Room—for whom?" I again asked myself, only perhaps not quite so briefly this time. "For the poor" (oh! how poor am I!); "the maimed" (alas! why have I never known before how crippled I am in soul!); "the halt" (gracious God, Thou only knowest how I have stumbled and fallen in my way!); "the blind" (Oh! Christ, open Thou my eyes to see Thee!). It was as if a shining light came suddenly into my soul. I forgot the preacher and his eloquence; he had been used of God to call me away from myself to Himself, and, with a heart-awakening which I can liken to nothing but a spiritual earthquake, I saw myself a sinner, needing Christ—Christ alone—as his Saviour, and dropping my head upon the seat in front of me, I gave myself, with burning tears, to God. I went home and told my wife what had come to me, and the burden of my whole thought was—I have entered, and millions of others have responded to the Lord's invitation, "Come unto Me," and have obtained pardon and life everlasting, and yet, dear wife, there is room for you! I cannot tell you how those words clung to me—how they touched my wife so with the immeasurable love of God, that she too, became his; and how it was and is the burden of all my later ministry to the dying, needy humanity around me. Come in, all of you! the love of God the Saviour calls you—the heart of God the Father is open to receive you; the power of God the Holy Spirit is waiting to renew you. Come, for yet there is room!

M. Butler Gerds.

Destitute Children's Dinner Society.

The cry of distress is very bitter this season. To answer it in some degree this Society opened its dining rooms for children earlier than usual on the small reserve left when we closed at the end of last March. We have opened as many dining rooms as we dare venture, but it is heartbreaking not to be able to open any more, that is impossible with resources so slender as those at our disposal. This year the distress is very great. We thankfully receive small amounts. One shilling feeds five children, one pound feeds one hundred.

The treasurer is Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, London.—Yours faithfully,

Burdett Coutts.

1, Stratton-street, London, W.

CHORLTON-CUM-HARDY.—A four days' convention for the promotion of Scriptural holiness has been held here. The meetings were fairly well attended, and a good influence was maintained throughout. The closing meeting took the form of a testimony meeting, when many testified to great blessing received.

The Missing One.

A TRUE STORY.

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

THE snow fell in a giddy whirl that Christmas Eve, as the pastor sat by his study fire. On his table lay the class books belonging to his Sunday-school teachers. He had asked that he might see them before the annual meeting. With prayerful consideration he glanced over the registers for the year, with the remarks here and there. Against some names he found, "Gone away," "Died," "Ill"; but opposite a name in the senior class of young women he read the word "Missing."

Still holding the book, he closed his eyes, wondering over that word; but, wearied with his day's work, the warm glow of the fire soon drew him into restful forgetfulness of all around him. He seemed to be away where he saw a multitude of people with bright and radiant faces, and the scene was one of perfect gladness. But all at once on his ear there came a voice of earnest pleading.

"Who goes to find the missing one?" And one after another said:

"Send me, Lord. Send me."

He woke. The book was still open, and he read again opposite the name Mary Trentham, "Missing."

"I must go and ask the teacher about this," he said to himself; but first he asked the Lord for guidance, and then prepared to go out into the cold. He was not sure of the nearest way to the teacher's house, and the dizzy light of snow confused him, until he realised he was beyond the turning, and near the river. Waiting to consider, he heard a sound that startled him; and then, again, it sounded clearer, like to one in distress. The prayer had gone up from a heart full of faith, and he did not choose but follow, as the answer seemed to bid him go; and cautiously making his way down the road to the bridge, the moan was distinctly heard, and he could see something lying in the snow.

"Who is it?" faintly asked the crouching form,

"Only a Christian come to help you," he said, putting out a hand to lift what seemed to be a woman.

"Please save me, and lead me away from this horrid water. I am ill and lonely, and I tried it, but it is so dreadful."

"Where shall I take you?"

"I feel so faint, but here—" she said, taking an envelope from her pocket. He got her with difficulty to the lamp, and read, "Mary Trentham," etc. For a moment he, too, seemed benumbed, till a thought recalled him, "O ye of little faith!" for had he not actually put himself into God's hands, and asked to be sent. Calling a boy, he asked him to fetch a cab, and conveyed the stranger to her lodging.

"She hasn't been here long," said the landlady. "She's ill and strange. I wondered where she'd gone this wild night."

"Be kind to her, and I will send a friend," he said.

The teacher's house was reached, and Hermine Clure welcomed the pastor; she knew he had come to encourage and inspire her. With peculiar agitation the incident was told and heard, and with tears of gratitude she related how that one had gone to her class for three Sundays past just to please a girl who worked near to her, and then disappeared, and no one could tell how or where, and that during the last two days the word she had written against the name, "missing," had been before her, and almost without ceasing she had prayed God to find Mary Trentham this Christmas time.

Christmas Day came in upon the town that lay quiet under its covering of snow, and Hermine Clure was early by the bedside of her missing scholar. No festive decoration marked the season, but assuredly in that humble lodging the Christ of God had entered to save a lost soul. All defiance was gone, all rebellion hushed, for earnest prayer had been heard, and what was impossible with the disciples was seen to be possible to the prayer-answering God, and Mary Trentham was ready and pining to know of Jesus' love. Weak after a long battling with hidden disease, the cold, and exposure had hastened the end.

"I have no relatives in England, and none who care for me anywhere," she said to her patient listener. "Mother died when I was young, and the friend she left me with died, and I have had a hard life. The world is cold to such as I, and no one told me of Jesus; whatever made me go to your class I can't tell. I hated myself when I saw others happy, but twice when I was ill (for I went right away just then) I did think of what you said."

The pastor and teacher rejoiced together, and one or the other constantly visited and comforted the dying girl; they felt God had honoured them by entrusting a precious soul to their care. Medical skill was useless, but the lonely one had a short time to live, but out of the bondage of sin she emerged into the clear light of redeeming love, as she laid her weary head on her Saviour and wept to be forgiven.

The last day dawned, the week had been as a year, for the blessedness that new-born soul had experienced, and as the old year died, old things to her had passed away, all things were new. The last visit was a never-to-be-forgotten one to that devoted worker. The bare room seemed lighted as by a torch from heaven; a radiance shone about the pale face as a tear of gratitude trickled down the thin cheek. "How can I ever thank Him for sending his servant out in the cold to save me? Are there no other missing ones like me?"

"Alas! God knows. We will pray; 'tis his to command, and ours to obey!" And after sweet converse and prayer, Hermine felt it was the gate of heaven, and but for the thrilling joy of being used by the Master to save others, she could envy the happy departing soul.

"I am only waiting now till Jesus calls. All is beautifully well," said Mary, her bright countenance proving the truth of her words.

"Is there anything I can do?" asked her friend.

"I want nothing now but Jesus. You have done all you could, but please ask the minister to come once more that I may see the faces of my dearest earthly friends ere I go."

"We will come very soon," said the teacher, taking a fond farewell, and hoping to find the pastor able to go at once.

It was less than an hour when they entered the room.

"Just gone," said the housekeeper, who had attended the dying one. "I came to give her drink, and she said quite brightly, 'Jesus! Jesus!' and was still."

Heaven seemed grandly near, and eternity most real, and to those earnest workers there came a sweet voice, saying:—

"He that winneth souls is wise"; and the joy of their Lord entered more fully into their souls as they thanked God for a wanderer brought safely home, and prayed for more Christ-like zeal and love.

Christian workers, there are missing ones somewhere this Christmas time—away from the bliss and joy of salvation. There are young hearts aching for a word of cheer and love. There are souls waiting to be saved.

As the love of friends surrounds us, and the love of Jesus fires our hearts, shall we not hear in sweeter tones than finest Christmas carol, our blessed Master saying, "Go ye out and compel them to come in"—those missing ones on life's highway, who perchance are on the verge of despair.

Caring not for wealth or pleasure,
Casting selfish ease away,
Is not this our solemn duty,
Christ's last precept to obey?

SALTLEY BAPTIST MISSION.

I AM glad to say I am once more engaged in active service for Christ. God has certainly opened to us a great door, but, with Paul, we are obliged to confess "there are many adversaries." I had no idea of the terrible amount of wickedness, indifference, and godlessness to be found in our large cities until quite recently. We find it hard to reach the adults, but, thank God, the children flock to us, our Band of Hope and Sunday School are now larger than we can properly manage. I feel much encouraged, and believe God is going to richly bless us. Our Mission is very badly fitted out, and at present we are not able to help ourselves, as the collections do not cover expenses. Should any of our readers feel led to help me, as many did when I was on the foreign field, we shall be grateful for such help. E. H. SOPER.

36, Highfield-road, Saltley, Birmingham.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET addressed, at Rhyl on Thursday, a large conference on temperance questions. In the evening a public meeting was held. Her ladyship is now making a tour in North Wales.

TWENTY-ONE YEARS AGO.

BY MRS. TRAVERS LEWIS.

LOOKING back on the history of our Paris Homes, how consciously have the threads of the work been kept in the hands of a loving Father who alone has known all the conflicts of hope with doubt and difficulty, sunshine and shade, with which they have been interwoven.

This Home is now the mother of three other Homes, a Mission Hall for our English working class in Paris, and a Home in London at 22, Queen's-road, Bayswater, all of which can testify of God's loving faithfulness. There have been shadows, but only to draw both work and workers more closely into the secret of his presence.

And what shall we say of the over 8000—chiefly orphan daughters of our professional men, thrown upon their own resources—of our young country women who seek to gain a livelihood in Paris. Last year the admissions were 445, who for days, weeks, or it may be months, have found all that is meant by "Home," in homeless and frivolous Paris, at 77, Avenue Wagram.

We might tell of situations obtained—last year 335, almost one a day, through our Free Registry—or letters of introduction given to different parts of Europe, where these young women strive to earn their daily bread, over 120 chaplains and consuls being associated with this vast work of protection for our young country-people; but we love rather to think of the young hearts, brusque and difficult to win, it may be, from the early child of sorrow and of lonely privation which so soon petrify the first impulse of those who have life's hard side to face, with the slipping foot steadied upon the One Foundation, and now building in their turn for Christ or his Church.

The present is a time of need, both of workers and of funds. Ten guineas a day (alas! there were many blanks last year) is needed for our Mission Hall and five Homes, containing some 150 beds, and reaching, by their united influence, nearly 1000 of our country people each week in thoughtless, God-forgetting Paris. We have no endowment, and many a liberal friend of our early days "is not." A special expenditure for new heating apparatus, repairs, and paint is also needed to make 77, Avenue Wagram bright and trim in attaining the year of her majority! Our treasurer, Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, London, E.C., will gladly welcome the "ten guineas a day," made up of the smallest amounts.

I trust to be in Paris early next year, to share the joy of recording with my old workers and our young women God's love and faithfulness to our Mother Home in Paris, 77, Avenue Wagram.

THE ANNALS OF THE POOR.

ACCORDING to the poet these annals are "short and simple"; but in our great city, at any rate, they are none the less full of the elements of tragedy and pathos. We have before us a batch of formal reports transmitted to the Ragged School Union (Norfolk-street, Strand) by teachers in Board Schools and others, with respect to children who have applied for grants of clothing. The space allotted to "remarks" is filled in most cases with truly heart-breaking facts; "short and simple" facts, no doubt, but long and profound in the infinite pathos of them. We quote a few; merely premising that the reports are from all the crowded parts of London:—

Father is a leather-dresser, tramping the country for work. He sends a few shillings whenever he gets employment. Mother in a lunatic asylum.

The family very poor, judging from the child, who looks badly fed. Mother has been in prison lately for theft; home is evidently badly managed.

Father a cabinet-maker, no regular work; earns four or five shillings per week. Mother a matchbox maker, earning 2s. 6d. a week, never more. Three young children, rent three shillings.

Father dead, mother sells watercress; very poor indeed; one girl earns 3s. per week.

Father waterside labourer, out of work nine weeks. Two deaths and a birth in family all in last five weeks.

Father died last March, leaving nine children; one born six weeks later; one now in hospital, one in bed ill. Mother sober, hard-working woman.

Such are some of the modern annals of the London poor. Who can read these facts, filling in all the untold suffering that lies between the lines, without wishing and resolving to help?

CHRISTMAS APPEALS.

Poor Jews.—For work among the poor Jews in St. George's; the distress is terrible.—D. Oppenheim, 119, Leman-street, Whitechapel, E.

Homerton.—The Gospel Mission, Marian-street, ask help for the children's Christmas treat and other work.—J. Brett, 46, High-street, Homerton, E.

Camberwell.—Pastor E. S. Neale, 10, Mount-villas, Lansdowne Hill, West Norwood, asks help to give a treat to many poor around Charles Street Chapel.

Christmas Dinners.—Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Crawley-road, E., asks funds to give Christmas dinners to unemployed poor around Latimer Chapel.

Stratford, E.—Mr. Monk, City Missionary, desires means wherewith to brighten the lives of young and old under his care.—Address, 101, Chobham-road, Stratford, E.

Liverpool Poor Children.—Mrs. Birt writes from the Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street, Liverpool, asking help to give a Christmas treat to 5,000 of the poorest children of the city.

The Flower Girls' Mission urgently needs help for free meals, treats, and the general work among young girls and women.—J. A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Borough-road.—The workers at Mr. McCree's old chapel in the Borough-road ask help towards Christmas treats to the poor.—E. Cooper, 36, William-street, Borough, S.E.

Friendless and Fallen.—The committee ask liberal aid on behalf of this important work. There are now 240 inmates in the homes.—W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, N.W.

Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, West India Docks, E.—Mrs. Hedenström Welin asks help to give her sailors a Christmas treat, making it home-like to those far away from home.

Millwall.—The pastor of the Congregational Church asks aid for the poor fund on behalf of the very aged and sick poor in this district.—W. J. Temple, 32, Strafford-street, Millwall.

Fox-court Mission.—In a crowded central district, where there are many unemployed, these workers ask aid in providing special Christmas help.—Thomas Fagg, 136, Pentonville-road, N.

Ark Mission, Rotherhithe.—The members, who intend giving a series of Christmas meals to children, will be thankful for help.—Geo. W. Beech, Ark Mission, Paradise-street, Rotherhithe, S.E.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged Schools, doing an important work near Smithfield Meat Market, appeal for help for special effort at this time.—H. Noel Cox, 2, Edinburgh Mansions, Victoria-street, S.W.

The Ragged School Union, representing 4000 workers among 50,000 poor and crippled children, seek help to relieve distress, give Christmas and other treats, and brighten sad, weary lives at this season.—J. Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission, Hoxton.—Mr. W. Noble pleads for help for the poor of Hoxton. The distress among furniture makers and others is very great.—W. Noble, 134, Hoxton-street, N.

Berger Hall, Bromley-by-Bow.—Help greatly needed for the medical and Gospel work among the poor, also for Christmas cheer, and coals for the shivering.—H. Grattan Guinness, M.D., Harley House, Bow, E.

The Zenana Medical College, 58, St. George's-road, S.W., appeals for cast-off clothing, new material, or money to provide indispensable necessities in maternity and visitation undertaken by the students amongst the neighbouring poor.

Lisson Grove Mission.—The funds are quite exhausted, and help is greatly needed. Two Bible women are caring for the spiritual good and bodily needs of the many poor in the district.—George T. Hunt, 77, Church-street, Lisson Grove, N.W.

St. Luke's and Clerkenwell.—Pastor Philip Gast, Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, desires aid, especially for the widow, the fatherless, and afflicted, as a witness for Christ in a neighbourhood permeated by infidelity.—Address, 12, Noel-street, Islington, N.

The Children's Aid Society.—Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, 32, Charing-cross, S.W., pleads for help for this Society, which last year rescued 940 children and placed them in a way to be cared for and trained for honest work. The Society is now £700 behind-hand.

Poor Blind.—The South London Association for Assisting the Blind wish help to provide for poor blind and guides their usual Christmas treat. Upwards of 300 persons are cared for, principally of the very poorest class.—J. T. Edmonds, 155, Brixton-road, S.W.

The After-Care Association for poor female convalescents appeals for help to carry on and extend its work. It helps in various ways poor women discharged recovered from asylums.—Secretary, Mr. H. Thornhelv Roxby, The Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, E.—Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, hon. sec., will be glad to receive joints of beef and plum puddings for the Christmas feast for sailors away from home; also helmets, mufflers, cuffs, steering gloves, and housewives for the sailors' Christmas tree.

Soho and St. Giles' Mission wish to give 400 family dinners, also a Christmas dinner to 200 poor men out of employment. We hope to give the poor children their Christmas treat, and to provide coal and other winter comforts for the sick and aged poor.—William Harrison, 20, Merrick-square, S.E.

Hope Mission, St. Luke's.—Mr. S. J. Glover, of 88, Bishopsgate-street, appeals for funds to provide a Christmas dinner for 450 children. In addition to the spiritual work the mission has a soup kitchen, and during the year 3170 halfpenny dinners, 2910 farthing dinners, in addition to 2710 quarts of soup, were distributed.

Holborn.—The pastor of Kingsgate-street Baptist Church writes:—Our lecture hall is crowded each week with the poorest waifs of this district. Throughout the year we minister to them, but at Christmas time they call for special help, clothing, food, and Christmas cheer.—H. Thomas, Kingsgate-street Chapel, Holborn, W.C.

Dock Labourers and Matchbox Children.—Much acute suffering is now being borne by many of these. The workers at the East-end branches of the North-East London Gospel Mission would rejoice if friends would come to their help in trying to give gladness for sadness this Christmas season.—W. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

The Salvation Army (Social Wing) wishes to provide a Christmas dinner for 5000 of London's poorest. Help us again to give to these poor hungry ones a share in your Christmas rejoicings. The very best will be done with the money, in economical manipulation, and the judicious distribution of all food.—E. Cadman, 272, Whitechapel-road, E.

Wandsworth-road.—The winter is upon us; many cases of intense need are staring us in the face, and the distress is appalling. We are anxious to relieve the suffering, and would like at Christmas time to provide dinners for poor families, especially widows, whom we know to be in need.—D. M. Cameron (Pastor), "Thurlow," 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Christmas Day in St. Giles.—For many years past the St. Giles' Christian Mission has endeavoured to relieve the hungry. This year it is hoped to do even more, as the needs are greater than in the past. Funds are wanted to provide many a wretched home with a Christmas dinner, and with food, clothing, and warmth.—William Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C,

John-street Mission, W.—Our opportunities for relieving the poor are numerous, and we desire to continue this effort. We hope to give a substantial dinner on Tuesday, 26th, to as many aged and poor as the funds will permit. There will also be (if the means are provided) companies of the poor gathered to tea during the winter.—William T. Russell, 27, Cambridge-street, Edgware-road, W.

Evangelistic Mission.—Mr. C. Russell Hurditch writes:—The extra claims that come upon all workers among the poor during the winter, and especially at Christmas, are well known to all. The director earnestly appeals for help in the pressing needs of this Mission just now, particularly for the special relief fund and the general current expenses. Address: 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Christ Church Lodging-house Mission.—We ask help to distribute a few much-needed Christmas gifts among the unhappy inmates of the common lodging-houses which abound in Southwark and Lambeth. Long experience in evangelistic work in these kitchens has convinced us of the urgent need of a little timely relief during the winter months to the unfortunate dwellers in these haunts of poverty and vice. H. Halliwell, 40, Albert-street, Kennington-park-road,

The National Refuges have just completed fifty years of work on behalf of destitute children. Since its establishment the society has rescued over 13,000 poor boys and girls. The committee appeal for help to carry on the work now in progress at the Boys' Homes in Shaftesbury-avenue, Twickenham, and Bisley; and Girls' Homes at Sudbury and Ealing. Help is also greatly needed to maintain the training ships Arethusa and Chichester.—H. Bristow Wallen, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C.

Surrey Chapel, S.E.—Around this chapel the district visitors visit 2000 families of the poorest class every month. We have 600 poor children in our Children's Mission service every Sunday night, and 120 poor mothers are on the roll of our mothers' meeting. Besides these, there are many most distressing cases. We hope to provide a Christmas tea for the children and mothers, making gifts to the most necessitous.—Pastor J. Tolefree Parr, Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, London, S.E.

The Clapton Mission has three missionaries, four Bible-women, and one medical officer employed among the poor of Clapton and Homerton. Such ministry brings us in contact with large numbers of the poorest and most needy. The suffering and destitution is most distressing. We are now without funds, yet the cry for help is becoming louder every day. We gave a dinner last Christmas Day to 3200 persons, and during the winter 41,040 free breakfasts were given to destitute children.—Thomas Jackson, 8, Rushmore-road, Clapton, N.E.

Stockwell Orphanage.—Dr. James Spurgeon writes:—"For many years my dear brother made an appeal at this season for gifts to our Christmas fund. Upon me now devolves the duty of presenting the claims of this large family of fatherless ones. Our numbers are the same, and the need as large as ever. We miss many helpers, who are either gone to their reward or are no longer able to give as they could; so that we need new donors and larger aid from others that there may be no lack for these orphans at the festivities at Christmas."—President and treasurer, Jas. A. Spurgeon, D.D., Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham-road, S.W."

Field Lane Refuges and Ragged Schools.—The deserving poor are never refused assistance. Fifteen hundred pounds are needed before the end of the year. During the past year 838 men and women were sheltered in the refuges, 268 children were fed, clothed, and educated in the homes, 6402 hot dinners were given to poor children, 30,044 breakfasts were given to men and women, 20,528 portions of broken food were distributed, 268 men and women were assisted to obtain employment. The committee desire also to provide a Christmas dinner for 600 poor families, and for 700 of the homeless on Christmas day.—Peregrine Platt, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The annual meeting of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, is always a hearty gathering of earnest Christian workers, and notwithstanding the stormy weather of Tuesday last week, a goodly number of friends assembled to rejoice over past blessings and encourage one another for continued effort. Mr. John McCall presided, and expressed regret at the absence of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who was to have occupied the chair, but was too ill to attend. In a thoughtful letter Mr. Mathieson called attention to Matt. xx. 1-16, identifying such workers as carry on the Rest with the "eleventh-hour labourers," whose services were not "hired" in bygone centuries by the great historical churches, but who at the last will receive full recognition at the hands of the Master.

Mr. J. T. Isaac, hon. secretary, made a statement on the character and progress of the work. Though there have been many discouragements, there is abundant cause for thankfulness. The meetings for men of various nationalities have been largely attended, and the Bible classes have been seasons of spiritual help and joy. Earnest workers, all of them voluntary, have attended every afternoon and evening, and all the established departments have been kept in vigorous operation. In conclusion, Mr. Isaac intimated that £100 was wanted to put the funds on a proper footing.

Mrs. M. Baxter followed with a stimulating address, based on Col. i. 23-25, emphasising the clause "to fulfil the word of God." As Jesus Christ was the fulfilment of the Old Testament, Christians are to be a fulfilment of the New. The Lord's life on earth was in no detail accidental; everything was done to fulfil the will and word of God. He aimed to learn and do the will of God, just as we do—from the Word of God, enlightened by the Spirit of God; and herein He left us an example that we should follow in his steps. There is a great deal of breadth in Christian work, but if those who are engaged therein would loyally and lovingly follow the Master there would be more depth.

Dr. Barnardo spoke on Christian service, maintaining that, to be acceptable, it must be rendered in the spirit of sonship. There must be restfulness, but this does not mean "letting things slide." There should be earnest pursuit of duty, without worry, not to gratify self, but to please God.

A TEMPERANCE INSTITUTE and Reading Rooms have been opened at Desborough.

SINCE THE INTRODUCTION OF CHRISTIANITY TO GREENLAND widows and orphans are not left to perish as they used to be. A baby that lost its mother by death used to be buried with her, because no one would take care of it. It is not so now.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 24.—PSALM CXXXVI.

This psalm is set to the key of mercy, ever-enduring, everlasting mercy. The Psalmist's eye is quick to detect God's mercy in every circumstance, and under every disguise. Let us always believe that God's mercy is in us and around us, and working for us, though there be nothing to indicate its presence to the natural sense. Believe, and you will see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living.

We give thanks to God, constrained thereto by his great mercy. His wonders in creation are not so great as those in redemption. But through creation itself, with its marvellous adaptations between organs and elements, between aptitudes and environments, we see conspicuous examples of the love and mercy of God. He feedeth the young ravens that cry. No sparrow falls to the ground without Him.

It is startling and terrible to think of the aspect which God's mercy presents to those that hate Him. That which is a blessing and help to his people is destruction to his foes, to Pharaoh and Og and Sihon. To the froward He shows Himself froward. The cloud which is light to Israel is black as pitch to Egypt. The sun which softens wax hardens clay. Oh, kiss the Son, lest He be angry!

The history of Israel was difficult in its unfolding, but as the Psalmist reviewed it from the standpoint of the years, he saw the golden thread of mercy woven with every incident. Thus, when we review our life from our Pisgah of vision, we shall see mercy where now we find hardship and trial—many incidents, but one unbroken chain of loving kindness and tender mercy.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 25.—PSALM CXXXVII.

A reminiscence of the Captivity! The memory of pain is generally short-lived, but Israel in the days of her restoration could not forget the agony of her exile. When the song of gladness arose around the renovated city and temple there were tears and sobs mingling with its joy notes; there was indignation at the memory of those who had taken pleasure in the day of degradation and contempt.

There are days in most lives when we are in captivity of soul. We weep as we remember happier, better times. The harp sways sadly in the breeze How impossible then to join in the songs of Zion! How can the heart, sad even to breaking, be other than mute! We cannot sing the Lord's song in a strange land. When sin has been repented of and put away, when the soul is restored again to its old position, then only can it sing.

Let us always put God and his house first; preferring these to our chief joy. For the cause of God our right hand should exercise its cunning, and the tongue move gladly. And in our time of triumph let our heart go out tenderly towards those who mocked our anguish and triumphed in our miseries.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 26.—PSALM CXXXVIII.

What glad notes ring out through this Psalm. Give thanks and sing praise, O soul of man, whom God has delivered. Sometimes when the heart is low and silent, the voice, raised on high, will awaken its responsive echoes; as one bird trilling its lay from a tree will start the woodland choirs into minstrelsy. These are high themes! God's name, and loving kindness, and truth.

God always answers us in the day when we call, though we do not see the answers. He cannot trust them in our keeping, but keeps them for us, till the hour comes when He can place them in our possession. But they are labelled with our name, and kept for us till the destined moment strikes. God puts strength into our soul, without our detecting its entrance, and we only know it is there, when we begin to want to use it. It is certain that never a day can come, but its strength comes also.

In the midst of trouble God is nigh. It may seem as if you will never survive it. But on the third day He will revive you, and you shall live in his sight, and God will perfect his work. He never begins what He does not intend to finish. There are no unfinished pictures in the Divine studio. And this shall be, because his mercy and patience abide for ever. You cannot exhaust them. What his hands have begun, they will complete. He cannot forsake: He cannot fail: He cannot disappoint.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 27.—PSALM CXXXIX.

The omniscience of God is not a theme for a psalm, except to those who know that they are the objects of his redeeming mercy in Jesus Christ. To those who are enemies by wicked works, it must be torture indeed, to know that the eye of God searches their secret thoughts; but to us who are in Christ Jesus, there is no terror. Though God knows all, He loves us better than He knows.

Not a thought in our heart; not a way in our life; not a word in our tongue, but God knows it. How circumspect we should be. But how blessed it is to know that we can never get away from his Spirit or lose his presence. Of course it will be the heaven of our heaven, but it will be with us in the passage between the two worlds, it will be with us in the transition stage ere the resurrection crowns our salvation; it will be with us, though we follow the dawn till we belt the world. His eyes are as a flame of fire, and make the night as day.

The body of Christ is being wrought in secret (16). From the first all its members were apparent to the Divine gaze, but they are being fashioned day by day.

God is always thinking of us, by night and day; and it is very precious and comforting to know that whether we wake or sleep we are still with Him. Let our waking thoughts remember this. Let us say as we wake, I am still with Thee. If we would have it so, our last thoughts before sleeping should commend ourselves to his care. The prayer with which the psalm closes is one for every hour of waking life.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28.—PSALM CXL.

Internal evidence confirms the testimony of the superscription that this is one of David's psalms. His was a stormy life, continually molested by evil and violent men, who imagined mischief in their heart and stirred up wars. Other men who have set themselves to destroy nests of vipers have had to make the same complaints, as Clarkson in England and Garrison in the United States. The wicked and violent and proud join hands, and lay their plans together to ensnare and overthrow all who interfere with their nefarious profits.

At such times we turn to the Lord. He is the strength of our salvation, and covers our heads in the day of battle. We know that evil spirits and men are absolutely in his control. They cannot overstep the bounds that He assigns to them, and He will not permit us to be tempted beyond what we are able to bear. We may be quite sure that the Lord will maintain our cause, so that we shall give thanks to his name and dwell in his presence. However great be the number of our foes, if God is for us none can be against us with any hope of success.

What a difference between the head covered in the day of battle and the head of the adversary (9). As you contemplate the bitter fate of those that hate the people of God, join in the prayer of Jesus for his murderers, the prayer which in his case was answered in the conversion of thousands at Pentecost.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 29.—PSALM CXLI.

The righteous man picks his way with difficulty amid the gins and nets of the wicked (9). The path is dark, and, as in Bunyan's story of the Valley of the Shadow, there is a dangerous quag on the one side and a precipice on the other. The lonely soul at every step calls God to make haste.

Our daily prayers should be as incense, because mingled with the merit of Christ our Saviour. And when we cannot kneel, we may always lift up our heart and hands; this will be precious to God as the evening sacrifice in the Temple. They who pray thus will be sure to join in the following petition. It is a becoming prayer to ask God to watch the door of the lips, so that no evil thing may come out and to deliver the heart from evil things and wicked ways. The mouth which is used in worship should not be befouled by slander or impurity. Oh for the live coal to touch our lips!

We may do a great deal for our fellow-believers by loving criticism of their faults. Thus we wash the saints' feet, and anoint their heads with oil. Often it costs more love to smite than to console. We are each other's keepers. Let not our heads refuse the unguent, because the hand that breaks the alabaster box is rough.

Do not let the eyes wander off to the foe or to the scattered bones cleft on the earth. Keep them ever looking to the Lord Jesus. He will keep you from the hidden snare, nor shall your soul be destitute.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30.—PSALM CXLII.

The Cave Psalms are amongst the most trustful and beautiful of any that David wrote. Consider how much he must have suffered, his sensitive nature in hourly contact with the strong rebellious spirits, who, by a strange affinity, had been drawn around him! As he tells us here, he could look right and left in vain for help. No man would know him, no man cared for him. It was in such moments of loneliness, which was not that of space but of heart, that he turned with overflowing desire to his God.

The heart finds relief in vocal expression, "I cry with my voice." Sometimes the act of telling God, pouring out the complaint, and showing the trouble insensibly brings comfort. But deeper than all, the overwhelmed spirit is comforted because God knows its path. Even though that path is filled with hidden snares, the soul which knows that God knows, and trusts Him, does not lose its footing.

Reiterate the words of the psalmist. Say "Thou art my Refuge, my Portion." Reaffirm this. Dare to accentuate your reliance on God. Say it aloud until your heart accepts it. The persecutors are strong, but God is stronger. The miracle of Peter's deliverance from prison is a standing one in the history of the Church. When the iron gate is left behind, the prayer meeting in the house of Mary is turned to praise, and righteous souls shall compass the delivered one about with songs.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

DECEMBER 31.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Rev. xxii. 21.

Few notes will be required for this review. The subjects have been doctrinal and practical, and the lessons can be best recalled, and their teaching applied, by the Golden Texts. The first of them (Rom. i. 16) is a good text for all the rest.

We are not ashamed of the Gospel (1) because of the Person whom it declares. What was He? and what is He now? See Lessons VII. and XII. We may be ashamed of ourselves before Him as John was, but not of Him. What has He done? Provided redemption for us; overcome Death and the grave; and brought the costliest blessings within the reach of all (Lessons II., VI., III.). What is He to us now? An example to be followed in everything, who has embodied in his own life all He has enjoined upon us. All those lessons describing the Christian life (IV., VII., VIII.—X.) point us to his example. Why should we blush to own Him in whom all excellences meet?

(2) Because of the blessings it secures. See what a list of them is in Lesson III., and how one brings others after it. How changed has the aspect of death become after the fact of Lesson VI. In the light of resurrection, why should we fear death? And what a prospect is held out before us in Lesson XI.! To look forward from this world of change to an incorruptible and eternal inheritance is a bright and blessed hope.

These are the things of which you have been learning. Is Christ anything to you?

WEST-END RESCUE WORK.

The work undertaken by the Salvation Army in rescuing lost women in and around Piccadilly is pathetically described in The Darkest England Gazette by Mrs. Major Harding. She says:—

We are anxious to get hold of these hearts, not for ourselves, but to link them on to God. In some cases we have been successful, and can rejoice in reaping what we sow. One young girl, who had been at our midnight supper only a few days ago, came and asked us to take her. She was only eighteen, had been respectably brought up, but had got into wicked hands and been led astray. She was thoroughly tired and weary, and came to see what we could do for her. We took her in and placed her under tender care. We want to get hold of scores more of such this winter, and our suppers will greatly help us in doing so.

We are wanting to give a big Christmas supper to some hundred or two of them. Will you remember us in your Christmas gifts? These poor girls represent hundreds of English homes, where their absence has caused sorrowful gaps. We have also commenced a weekly sewing-class, in order to get some warm clothing for those whom we rescue that need it. Material for this will be very welcome, and any ladies who can spare the time to help us, kindly note that our address is, 11, Little Titchfield-street, Great Portland-street, W.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Bulith Wells; Holiday Meetings for School Boys in Oddfellows' Hall, Edinburgh, by University men, Dec. 27 to Jan. 5, 1894; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Sydenham, Dec. 30; St. Peter's, Colchester, Jan. 5 to 11; York, Jan. 12 to 20; Mr. E. Hughes, Aldenham Hall, Somers Town, Jan. 10 to 12; Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Battisford, Needham Market, Jan. 1 to 8; Ipswich, Jan. 13 to 21; Mr. J. M. Wigner, Camden-road Baptist Chapel, Jan. 8 to 13.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—S., Dec. 24, Esther viii. 1-17; 25, Matthew i. 18-25; 26, Psalms cxlv. 1-10; 27, cxlvi. 1-10; 28, cxlvii. 1-20; 29, cxlviii. 1-14; 30, cxlix. 1-9.

MEDICAL WORK IN TRIPOLI.

Until about five years ago there was in this place not a single witness for the Gospel, and Tripoli was commonly supposed to be closed to missionaries. But early in 1889 the North Africa Mission sent here my friend Mr. G. B. Michell and myself. We were, by God's grace, enabled to effect a settlement, and, in spite of much opposition and many difficulties, to found this Medical Mission, which I still direct. During the past four years and a-half this work has steadily grown, the staff has been increased, and to-day we look with some satisfaction on a record of many thousands of natives whose bodily sufferings have been relieved, and whose minds have been directed to the Great Physician of souls.

The work is appreciated by the natives as no other kind of work would be, and although their fatalism is an immense hindrance to their profiting by it as they might, the fame of the Medical Mission has spread far and wide. Patients come two, three, and four days' journey to see the English doctor, and even strangers from the far interior are sometimes to be seen in our dispensary. Thus, while we are horrified by the barbarities of native doctors, we are thankful to know that any who wish to escape them may obtain skilled medical and surgical treatment gratis, and with no other restriction than the necessity of putting in an appearance at the short Gospel service which precedes.

As regards results, while we, in common with other workers in these lands, can point to few conversions, I, who have been here from the beginning, can testify to a marvellous change in the general bearing of the people towards us. They know now, what they never thought before, that there are among the Christians God-fearing and good-doing men, and to such they are not unwilling to listen. The seed is scattered broadcast, and our "good works" secure for our message a quiet and respectful hearing.

This is our answer to the "bitter cry" of the people of Tripoli, but now we send forth a far more bitter cry ourselves. Why have our brethren and sisters left us, a mere handful, to assault the strongholds of Mohammedanism? We are working here, and our brethren of the Central Soudan Mission are working here, but what are we among so many? At our Medical Mission, which is open every day (except Sundays), we are treating about four thousand patients a year; but we cannot deal with these four thousand as we would. The work is under the direction of the North Africa Mission, which would welcome suitable recruits, men or women, for this or other stations; but the special expenses of the medical work are met by voluntary gifts from the workers themselves and friends at home.

Tripoli, Barbary. Henry G. Harding.

EVANGELICAL CONTINENTAL SOCIETY.

The following is an extract from a letter received a few days ago from a Christian worker, labouring assiduously in a very dark district on the European Continent:—"In this large city there is only one small Protestant church, whose two pastors think they have done enough in holding one service on the Sunday morning and administering the sacraments from time to time as occasion offers. There are no Sunday afternoon or evening services, no week-night gatherings, no Sunday-schools. The Lord has been pleased to bless our evangelical efforts to the conversion of many souls. Most of our converts are from the Roman Catholic Church. The chief part of our work is to spread the Gospel among the Romanists.... We are sure that if more Christians knew about the work here, how necessary it is, and how the Lord has blessed it, more would help. But we are dependent on the kindness of personal friends to make known our needs, as we dare not publish much. Will you pray with us that the measure of religious liberty we have at present in —— may be increased if it be the Lord's will, so that we may have full freedom to proclaim the glad tidings as is the case in some other countries?"

For obvious reasons I do not give the name of the writer, nor the place to which reference is made. The adherents to the Protestant cause in purely evangelistic centres are almost invariably very poor, hence the necessity for appeal for pecuniary help to their more highly-favoured brethren in England. Evangelical work might be easily largely widened and deepened in France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, Austria, and elsewhere if the needful help were forthcoming.

George H. Giddins.

E.C. Society, 13, Blomfield-street, E.C.

(1314)

A USEFUL GOSPEL AGENCY.

SERMON-LANE MISSION, ISLINGTON.

"When the ear heard me then it blessed me, and when the eye saw me then it gave witness to me: because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." These words were cited by Rev. Henry Simon in his memorial sermon on the occasion of the death of the late Mr. William D. Lewis, and in view of the special form of service to which his life had been devoted the quotation seems singularly appropriate. The poor, the fatherless, the helpless, the perishing, and the widow, expressly mentioned in the passage, are precisely the classes reached at Sermon-lane and in many a Ragged School Mission in which similar work is done.

This Islington Mission has laboured for forty-four years actively and fruitfully amongst children and adults. From small beginnings as a Ragged School, it has developed into a centre of earnest Christian effort, and many there are who thankfully confess that they owe, under God, all they are to Sermon-lane. A work of this kind has not, it will be understood, been the doing of any one man. The mission is entirely undenominational, and it has consequently engaged the best and heartiest service of many faithful and true labourers. Yet in reading its history, two names come specially to the front—the late Mr. George Fuller, whose remarkable career was sketched in these columns a few years ago; and that of Mr. W. D. Lewis, who passed to his rest in August, 1891. For over thirty years Mr. Lewis was closely associated with the work—first as teacher, then as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and finally as president and treasurer of the Mission. In the early days the children were very rough, and somewhat unruly, but wonderful was the influence he and others gradually gained over them. His deep interest in, and love for, the young won their confidence and affection in a remarkable degree. His unfailing punctuality and regularity in attendance had a corresponding effect both on scholars and teachers. Whoever might be absent or late, Mr. Lewis might always be reckoned upon. His devotion and zeal, his aptitude for the work and hold of the children soon marked him out as a fitting leader, and the choice was justified in the issue, for under his presidency the work grew in every direction, proving an incalculable benefit to the neighbourhood.

As to Mr. Lewis's personal characteristics, one of his co-workers says: "During the whole thirty years I had intercourse with him in the mission work we have never had a disagreement. He could be firm, and kept a strong hand over the children, but had the art of doing it in such a way that they all loved him. He was one of the most punctual men I ever knew—one could set the clock by him. He and his family have been the soul of the work at Sermon-lane. To my mind he was the embodiment and type of the Apostle John—a man of love."

Rev. Henry Simon well said, in the sermon to which we have already referred:—

The mission work of Sermon-lane, at which he wrought for more than thirty years, is a fine monument of faithful toil on the part of many, but of none more than of William Dix Lewis. It is a monument to his memory, which will live when the marble and the granite shall have crumbled into dust. The most affecting sight of all the affecting sights which I witnessed at his funeral was the trudging of poor people—and especially of poor children—poorly clad, to Abney Park, to weep at the grave of their friend and benefactor.

While, however, we have made these brief references to one whom God was pleased to use greatly in connection with this Mission, it must be borne in mind that in full vigour and activity. The trusted and loved leader was taken, but the work was not abandoned. Others were raised by God to fill the gap. His brother, Mr. J. Dix Lewis, most heartily undertook the vacant post of President, and has continued to render good service to the cause.

THE WORK STILL GOES ON

In Mr. Fuller's day the Sunday morning and evening mission services became a salient feature of the Mission's operations. These, under the charge of Mr. Harry Dawe, an experienced evangelist, now superintendent of the Mission, are made bright and cheerful, while the Gospel is earnestly and closely pressed home. The attendance shows an increase, varying in the evening from 100 to 230, while the results have been most cheering. Similarly the week evening service and the Gospel temperance meeting are full of encouragement.

Moreover, sick visitation is the special care of Mr. Dawe, and the claims upon him have been many. The most deserving cases of poverty are made known and a little help administered; by this means many are led to look more hopefully on their surroundings and feel they are brought within the bounds of fraternal sympathy. The amount expended on relief is small compared to the good effected. During the years of the Mission numberless incidents have occurred to prove that care for the sick and sorrowing is the royal road to the hearts of many now, as it was when He who is our example and teacher trod the paths of Judea.

The Sunday-schools, afternoon and evening, are also well maintained; the average evening attendance being about 500. In connection therewith various useful operations are carried on, such as the infant class, Bible classes, girls' band, and of the whole it is stated that "There is sufficient evidence of the Divine blessing to encourage" the workers to go forward in faith and prayer. The sewing class and the Band of Hope have also engaged the energies of the helpers.

Besides for the adults there are the Mothers' Meeting and the Young Women's Welcome, conducted by Miss Pound and others, and the Dorcas Society and Maternity Society, under the care of Mrs. William D. Lewis and her daughter Mrs. White.

The Youths' Institute and Sunday-night schools are carried on at Denmark-terrace Schools, Cloudesley-road. The help of friends will be cordially welcomed in any of the foregoing agencies.

Without detailing further the numerous activities carried on, we may observe that at this season there are many in the district suffering greatly by reason of sickness and want of work, and on behalf of these relief efforts have been organised, including a soup distribution twice a week. The Mission at Sermon-lane is one that commends itself to the sympathies of all. The secretary is Mr. D. Cooksey, 52, Amwell-street, Pentonville, N.

Girls in Tin Works.

Owing to the continued depression of trade, the free meals commenced in August last are being continued by the Undenominational Christian Mission, Pontymoile, as many of the large works are still closed, and considerable distress prevails. Great interest will be taken by many in a new departure of a very promising nature. An attempt is being made to train a number of girls, hitherto employed in the tin works, in domestic duties. Beds are being fitted up in the Mission Hall, and the girls will go into residence for a course of training, under a qualified teacher, for a period of not less than three months. The cost of providing the necessary accommodation will be £4 in each case, and the cost of maintenance 5s. each per week. A few friends have already inaugurated the movement by undertaking the cost of providing for three girls of the lodger class, and who, it is hoped, will be thus fitted for domestic service. Mr. T. M. Wintle, Pontymoile, will supply any information desired.

THE MURDERED SWEDISH MISSIONARIES.—The question of compensation for the murder of the two Swedish missionaries, Wikholm and Johanssen, at Sungpu, on July 1st last, has been settled between M. Bock, the Swedish Consul-General at Shanghai, and the Chinese Government, the latter agreeing to pay an indemnity of 40,000 dols. to relatives of the deceased.

For the Young.

CHICK'S REVENGE.

"Oh, bother it!" and with the exclamation Chick shot up into the air.

When he had regained his footing on terra firma, a look of pain and passion was on his face.

"Hullo, what's up?" asked one of his fellow-messengers, in a happy-go-lucky sort of tone.

"I was up just now, but if I get the fellow who put that tack on that form I'll send him up," said Chick, as he cast his eyes towards a group of his amused comrades gathered in a corner of the office. He stared for an instant, his wild eyes fixed on their smiling faces, as if to detect, if possible, a trace of the culprit. But no; all of them, if not as sober as judges, because of their exuberant mirth, were at least as free as judges from all trace of circumstantial evidence against them.

"That was you, Dickey Bruce," said Chick, in the heat of his passion, laying the blame on the likeliest one of the company. "Just you wait now; see if I don't pay you back for that"; and, with a significant shake of the head, he turned away, vowing within himself to have revenge. And so he would; but something happened, and second thoughts changed his mind.

The office work had been dull that morning; and to wear away the tedium of waiting, the restless boyish spirit found vent in a practical joke, with the result described.

Although it was by the merest chance Chick had fastened his accusation on Dickey, it happened to be placed upon the right shoulders. Perhaps an everyday acquaintance with Dickey had helped Chick with a clue to the culprit. Dickey was the ringleader of not a few of the messengers who were simple enough to be led into his tricks, and was known as an "old hand" at the tack trick.

Genuine enough as Chick's threat had been, it had but little effect on such a daring spirit as Dickey; in fact, it troubled no one more than it did Chick himself. For no sooner had it passed his lips, and he had turned away, than Chick felt within himself that something was wrong in it. He did not always feel that way, but since that day on which a something happened in his life that made his conscience tender and his nature new, it had never been easy for Chick to harbour long such threats within his heart. So it came about that no sooner had his passion subsided, and he had come to himself, than he was trying to devise a means of putting it away.

Three days after the tack incident, news was brought to the office that Dickey Bruce was unable to come on duty. He had caught a chill and was dangerously ill in bed.

Not a few of his fellow-messengers were awed by the news, for Dickey had always seemed of a healthy build, and had lots of what the boys called "go" in him. But the strongest must submit at times. It was Dickey's turn now.

To Chick the news of Dickey's illness only served to intensify the horrors of that threat. With a keen sense of what is meant to return "good for evil," his mind was more than ever exercised about how to wipe it out. Should he write a letter to Dickey and tell him he would forgive him? Should he ask to see him, and tell him it was all right? What if he should never see him again? Such thoughts were continually rising in Chick's mind and would not be dispelled. How he got peace of mind and made it right with Dickey, we shall see.

It was Christmas Day. Chick had seen no less than sixteen Christmas Days in his existence, but this particular one surpassed them all as being a genuine "Christmassy Christmas." The snow fell all day in heavy showers, and lay deep upon the ground. Every article of Chick's equipment was in full use—leggings, overcoat, and cape; and even these seemed insufficient for the stress of the storm. To trudge through the elements, however, was preferable to sitting cold and damp, as it kept the limbs in action and natural heat.

It was with a grim sort of satisfaction Chick heard the delivery clerk call "Number 249."

Buckling his cape tightly about his neck and pulling his hat as far down on his ears as possible, he set himself to face the storm. Scarce had he gone a hundred yards from the office door, when, pressing forward with his head bent, doing battle with the storm, he was struck by something like a bandbox, being carried along on the wings of the wind. Chick staggered for an instant. On recovering himself he found the object of assault, at his feet, was nothing more than a gent's tile hat. Its owner, exhausted with the excitement of the chase, was at his side in an instant.

"Hullo, my lad, did it hurt you?" he asked, in a kindly voice. "Thanks; I hope the knock wasn't severe," he added, as Chick handed him his headgear.

"No, sir; only a new style of Christmas box," said Chick, who had not yet abandoned his old habit of punning.

"Ah, well, we'll make amends in the 'old style,'" said the gent., as he drew from his pocket a shilling and placed it in Chick's hand.

"Thank you, sir," said Chick; and each passed on his way.

Strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless true, that shilling had been hoped for—yes, and prayed for, too—by Chick, that very morning. How it was to come he didn't quite know, and little thought of it that moment when its forerunner almost knocked him off his feet. Chick never did seem like a lad with much religion in his life, at least of that type which exists only for parade; but for all that he had a deeply honest and earnest religion in his boyish heart, and a firm belief in prayer was a big part of it.

Now that that shilling has come, he felt a little the embarrassment of riches. What should he do with it? Oh, to be off duty, was his next desire; and his joy and eagerness quickened his steps and carried him on his errand, heedless of the rough effects of wind and weather. Long before the hour of release he had settled his plan.

The moment of freedom was no sooner gained then he was off to the nearest fruit store, bent on a purchase. When his requests had been complied with, and a little note had been enclosed in his box of fruit, he left it in the hands of the shopkeeper, to be conveyed to its destination.

But after all this great transaction he had still threepence in hand. As he moved along the dull, deserted street, contemplating how he should best lay out the surplus to advantage, his attention was attracted by a cold and wretched-looking urchin, crouching in a doorway for shelter from the still falling snow. The hoarse croak of the childish voice as it tried to sell its "ev' noos," went home to the sympathetic heart of Chick, and made him stop to speak. Chick drew from the shivering little form the too common story of ill-usage, poverty, and pain, and he felt with all the sympathy of a larger experience for the friendless little urchin. Taking from his own warm wrists the thick woollen mits which protected them, he put them on the cold, damp hands of the child. The very kindness of the action seemed to carry warmth in it, for the joy of the little heart gleamed through its bleared and swollen eyes. Then off at once Chick sped to the nearest cook-shop. In a few seconds he was back, bearing a steaming hot pie and a substantial scone. Truly a royal feast for this little neglected one. With a kind and cheering word he left the youngster to enjoy his Christmas fare.

Chick had now expended all his wealth, and had nothing left to spend on himself. Ah, no! True, he had spent it all on others, but unconsciously had reaped a satisfaction he could never have had had it been spent on self. His kindly actions had purchased a pleasure money could not buy. He had given his all for the sake of others, and so had gained the highest happiness, and in his boyish way had preached that Christmas gospel of "Good will to all men."

But Chick's doings did not end there. That same night Dickey Bruce was surprised to receive a box, bearing his full name and address, and evidently all for himself. It was a puzzle to Dickey to know who in the world was so thoughtful as to send him a Christmas box. But the puzzle was soon solved.

When the box was opened, on the top of its contents, which presented a most delicious smell and inviting look, Dickey found a small, neatly folded note. It was written in a boyish hand.

When Dickey read it, something like a mist seemed to gather in his eyes. Do we wonder it was so when this is what he read?—

My Dear Dickey.—This is a small present to cheer up your Christmas. Never mind about the tack affair; that's all right now. I said I would pay you back; so this is my revenge.—Believe me, your office chum, Chick.

"To whom much is forgiven the same loveth much."

Does there seem to be nothing heart-thrilling in these simple terms? Well, perhaps they fail to thrill other hearts, but God knows it was with many a heart-throb that little note was penned by Chick and read by Dickey; and Chick's revenge was not in vain.

We have no sensational ending to our story. No, Dickey did not die. Better than that, he lived; and, better still, his life was spent in doing good.

In after days when he returned to his work in the office, it was Chick he sought for as a companion; and now, instead of being ringleader to a gang of simpletons in every mode of wrong-doing, he was content to be led into "continually doing good" by that honest boyish heart that took such strange revenge.

"Not such a bad up-shot after all, yon tack business, was it, Dickey?" Chick would remark in his humorous way.

"No, and a proper sweet revenge," Dickey would add with a significant smile.

There are few boys like that, you say. Yes, there are few; but we know some such, and it is to increase their number the story of "Chick's Revenge" has been recorded here. Will you add to the number of those who love much, because "their sins which are many have all been forgiven?"

B. McCall Barbour.

[This touching story can be had in booklet form from Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.]

MISSION TO CHINESE BLIND.

I have received several letters from Peking from Rev. William Murray, giving very interesting details of the development of his various inventions ("revelations" he loves to call them, and with good reason). He says it is delightful to see with what pleasure his blind lads and girls set up the type for printing, his new and marvellously simple type for the use of sighted persons, and the wonderful facility with which the latter can learn to read in less than a week. There can be no doubt whatever that this new invention will prove an invaluable aid in extending the power of reading the Scriptures among the illiterate converts of every mission which will adopt it. The beauty of it is that the same version can be read throughout the whole vast empire.

His latest invention is a wooden slate with a groove, on which the blind students can arrange moveable wooden characters, representing his recently-invented shorthand for the Chinese, and by this means the blind give lessons in shorthand to the sighted!

In my little book, "Work for the Blind," * part II., page 23, I told the history of Mr. Hsii, a blind fortune-teller, who had been converted and came to Mr. Murray for teaching. That man has been sent as organist, choir-master, and instructor in many things to the American Presbyterian Mission at Nankin, "the Southern Capital," where Mr. Murray had long wished to have a representative. Now he has one whom he considers thoroughly capable and in every respect satisfactory, and he is greatly rejoiced thereat.

I regret to say that the heavy and prolonged rains last summer have effectually destroyed the rickety old Chinese dwelling-house which was on the mission land when he bought it in 1887. Since then it has been patched up year after year, and Mr. Murray, his wife, and four children are still living in it. But this summer the ceilings fell in, several walls gave way, and everything in the house was saturated, including all the most valued books and other property. Mr. Murray himself was for two months very seriously ill in consequence of living in the soaking rains, and inhaling the pestiferous vapours of the great steaming city. Now it is positively necessary to build a new house, and for this purpose I am anxious to raise a building fund of £500. We must not let our admirable inventor die for lack of a watertight roof.

(Miss) Constance F. Gordon Cumming.

Walton Lodge, Crieff, Scotland.

LET YOUR SCHOLARS learn as much about the Old Testament and the New as you have time to teach them. But your first aim should be to teach them those parts of the Bible which contribute to the great object of making it clear how men ought to live.—R. W. Dale, LL.D.

* Gilbert & Rivington, St. John's House, Clerkenwell, London, E.C. 6d.

A TALK ABOUT BETHLEHEM.

Christmas season naturally directs our thoughts to Bethlehem. After Jerusalem there is hardly another place in Palestine which fills the Christian's heart with stronger emotions. To be on the very spot where eighteen centuries ago the most marvellous event in the history of the universe took place awakens fervent feelings, and makes an impression which can only fade with life. Here it was that "the Everlasting Father," the great "Counsellor," the "Wonderful" One took to Himself human form. Here the "Prince of Peace" came into this sin-stained world of ours. Here the almighty "Word," whose "goings forth had been of old, even from everlasting," became flesh that He might dwell among us. Here in this City of David was born "a Saviour, Christ the Lord." It was here "when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem them who were under the Law." Christmas bids us think of all this; and it brings Bethlehem prominently before our minds.

You would like to know about this truly interesting town. In one sense it never was a place of very great importance. You remember how the prophet Micah (v. 2) speaks of it as "little among the thousands of Judah." Such it was in the past; such is it to-day. It lies about five miles south from Jerusalem. It stands at a considerable elevation, situated on the side of a lofty hill, and is for the most part surrounded by other hills. We leave Jerusalem by the Jaffa Gate, pass by the walls, and soon cross the valley of Rephaim. See what took place here in connection with David (1 Chron. xi.). Advancing, we come to a low white building with a dome surmounting it. This is the tomb of the beloved Rachel, for whom Jacob served seven long years, and then was deceived, and had to wait another seven. On the way to Bethlehem she died, and was buried here. The touching history you will find in Gen. xxxv. The soil around the tomb is supposed to possess the miraculous power of healing diseases.

About half a mile from the road on the right hand, and on the slope of a hill, stands Beit-jald. Here it was that Saul found his father's asses. We then branch off to the left, and pass by vineyards and olive-yards, with their watch-towers, and soon arrive at the entrance to the "city." We make a halt to inspect a well. What is it? It is that for whose sweet water David sighed when Bethlehem was besieged by the Philistine host. Three of his mighty men resolved to gratify his wish. They broke through the ranks of the foe and secured the precious water. When I was last there a very pretty maiden offered me a draught, but I did not like the look of the liquid, and though pressed to drink, I declined. I had no fancy for typhoid fever or any other ailment.

The population is only a few thousands in number. Most of the inhabitants are nominally Christians. No Jews reside here, and only a few Mahommedans. They are an industrious people. Many devote themselves to agriculture, which is in a forward state about here. A large trade is done in the manufacturing of various kinds of fancy articles, brooches, bracelets, ornaments, and so on, from mother-o'-pearl. The shells come from the Red Sea, which the Israelites passed through after leaving Egypt. If you look into a workshop you will see the natives hard at work, using hands and feet, and all seated on the floor. The females of this locality have long been celebrated for their beauty. After all, true beauty consists not in the countenance being pleasing to human eye, but in the heart being right in God's sight, in a heart from sin set free. Man looketh on the face; but God on the heart. Pray for a clean and contrite heart, and, having it, you will possess the best and most lasting kind of beauty.

Now come with me and inspect one of the most sacred and interesting spots in the world—a place which even the angels of God must view with reverence and pleasure. I want you to see the Church of the Nativity. As early as the year 327 A.D. a Christian Church was erected here. This was done by the Empress Helena, mother of the Emperor Constantine, who was the first Christian ruler. By a low door you enter a nave with side aisles. It is 120ft. long. The columns are of marble, and it is thought they belonged formerly to some portion of the Temple in Jerusalem. Scratchings representing coats of arms and initials are noticed on them. These were made by the Crusaders, who in the eleventh century came from various parts of Europe with the intention of driving the infidel Saracens out of Jerusalem. Our King Richard I. took an active part in the effort. Under the same roof the Greeks and Latins have their separate chapels.

It is sad that in both gross superstition and rank idolatry prevail. The Virgin Mary is an object of adoration. To her prayer is made, and worship is given. What is this but idolatry? Great reverence also is shown to pictures of saints. From the Chapel of the Greeks a short flight of steps leads to another chapel. It is that of the Nativity. There is a low vault which has been hewn in the limestone rock; it is 38ft. long and some 11ft. wide. The sides are lined with costly marble. It is lighted up with numerous lamps of chaste workmanship, and very valuable. At the left-hand side of the entrance to this cave or vault there is a narrow recess. It is the most sacred spot of all. Numerous gold and silver lamps shed down their soft light. We notice a marble slab fixed in the pavement at one side. In its centre there is seen a silver star, and on it are printed the words, "Here Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary."

The spot has a charm, a captivation, an attraction which no other place possesses. Over this slab there stands an altar. The one objectionable feature in the place is the gorgeous and costly trappings and decorations. They do take somewhat away from the impressiveness. Had the cave been but left in its natural condition one could realise more fully what the character of the "stable" was where Jesus was born, because there was no room in the inn.

We will leave the hallowed spot and proceed outside. In front of the church is an extended platform. From the summit we look down the valley, which lies at a considerable depth below. It is fertile and well cultivated. The sight of it brings to mind Bible scenes. Here it was that the good-hearted Boaz had his fields, and here did the gentle Ruth glean, and became acquainted with the former, and at last he took her to wife. The Saviour-King who was born in Bethlehem was descended from her.

In these very fields, too, young David kept his father's sheep; across them he oft led his charge, and protected them from the prowling wild beasts. The hills around have often resounded with the melody of his sweet-sounding harp. And somewhere on the side of those hills we are looking at, on an eventful night shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks. Anon, they were startled by a sight unusual. "The glory of the Lord shone round about them." A loving voice bade them not to fear. There was made known to them the "glad tidings of great joy." They were told that in the city hard by had just been born "a Saviour, Christ the Lord." Of that great birth Christmas speaks to us.

Why did God become incarnate? The beloved disciple answers, "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him" (1 John iv. 8). Jesus came to uplift the veil and reveal the heart of God. He came to reveal the love of God. He came to make atonement for sin. The sinless Son of God must bleed and die ere the love of the Father could embrace its object, the fallen sinner, and welcome him to his heavenly home, and allow him to share his endless glory. The one sacrifice for sin has been offered. He offers salvation to each freely. All He asks is, "Only believe." Trust Him who was born in Bethlehem's manger, a willing almighty Saviour, "able to save to the uttermost." Trust him for time and for eternity. Trust Him who though once

Glory be to God!

A CHRISTMAS HYMN.

(Copyright.)

Words and Air by JOHN JEWELL. Harmony by THOMAS ELY, Mus.Bac., F.C.O.

Joyfully.

3. He was born a little child,
Lowly, gentle, meek and mild,
Sinless He—the undefiled:
Glory be to God!

4. Peace on earth He came to bring,
Therefore let our praises ring,
And our voices sweetly sing,
Glory be to God!

5. Good-will unto men He brought,
Righteousness for them He wrought,
Blessing gave to all who sought:
Glory be to God!

6. Holy Jesus, Lord, may we
Evermore be led by Thee,
Till we sing, from sin set free,
Glory be to God!

as a babe did sleep, now "neither slumbers nor sleeps," whose wakeful eye is "in every place."

Trials there may be here, afflictions and sorrows too; but trusting Him only, you will in time emerge from all here and enter upon everlasting rest, where will be no trouble, no declension, no sin; where there is no sunset, no evening shades, no midnight darkness, but all is one perfect, cloudless, endless day, and the everlasting song of joy is one of "Glory to God in the highest."

Runcorn. W. Preston, D.D.

ST. CHRISCHONA MISSION.

The annual report, for English readers, of the Pilgrim Mission, having its home and centre at St. Chrischona, near Basel, opens with an acknowledgment of the help which the work has received at the hands of British Christians. We make a brief extract: "During last year, in our Training College of St. Chrischona, seventy-five young men were daily gathered round the Word of God to study its holy lessons, and to be prepared by outward and inward discipline for the high and yet lowly calling of evangelists. Sixty-four of these were regular students, whose course of study comprises a term of four years. The eleven other young men were pensionnaires. Without relinquishing their outward calling, they intend to devote a part of their time to evangelistic work, and for this they sought a few months of preparation by diligent study of the Word and by communion with like-minded brethren.

"We had the joy of sending out fifteen young workers to different spheres of labour. Two of the number have gone to the Western coast of Africa, where they are working among the heathen under the direction of the North German Mission. One of them, William Innes, is an Englishman, who by God's providence was led to St. Chrischona some years ago, and is now very happy in his calling as a missionary. Two were sent to the United States as pastors for German settlers, and are working in Texas. Five have found their work in Germany, where many doors which hitherto seemed closed for evangelistic efforts are now open, and call for energetic action. The fire of social discontent and revolution is slumbering under the surface, and threatens to blaze out in devouring flames. We who believe the prophecies contained in our Bible know what all this means, and never has the Master's word sounded so earnestly in our ears as now, 'The night cometh, when no man can work.' Five out of the fifteen are at work amongst the hills and vales of our own beautiful Switzerland, some as city-missionaries, others as evangelists; and one has taken charge of a post of labour in Slavonia, where he is evangelist and teacher, and where the few scattered lights are shining amid gross darkness to the glory of God.

"The greater number of our former students, of whom some 500 are still actively employed, are working in connection with different missionary societies, or with synods in the United States. They are scattered over the whole continent of Europe, and remain united with us by regular correspondence. The last year was marked by signal blessing in many localities. It is most refreshing to hear that souls have been awakened and brought to the Saviour, and that others are growing in grace and are beginning to work for the Master. The evangelists of the Pilgrim Mission, directed and supported by our own Society, are thirty-five in number. They are labouring in Switzerland, Germany, and Slavonia. Several of our mission stations are quite self-supporting, that is to say, the people won by the Gospel gladly contribute the amount required for the maintenance of their preacher, and the necessary repairs of their mission halls. Their interest in foreign missions is also awakened, and it is touching to see what sums these devoted people are able to send. The blessing of the Lord maketh rich even amid poverty."

We regret to read that the Mission is embarrassed by debt. Communications may be sent to the director of the Training College, Rev. C. H. Rappard, St. Chrischona, near Riehen, Basel, Switzerland; or to Mr. E. Erskine Scott, 64, Queen's-street, Edinburgh.

BE PATIENT, BE MERCIFUL.—To the imagination of a little child, who has just intelligence enough to see that a denial offers an escape from threatened punishment, it cannot look a very dreadful thing not to speak the truth.—L. S. Redshawe.

Christmas Poems

It was the eve of Christ's nativity,
Yet not a sign of Love's eternal dawn;
No bells rang out, in joyful cadence sweet,
To tell that He, the Prince of Peace, was born.

Pale Judah, bowing 'neath the Roman yoke,
Hailed not the Advent of her Saviour's birth;
Proud Cæsar, slumbering 'neath his palace dome,
Woke not to laud the King of Heaven and Earth.

No trumpet sounded 'mid the Hebrew hosts,
No signal bade Rome's sentinels arise,
No pageant glory, for men's hearts were dumb;
Few welcomed Him, the Sun of Paradise.

His own received Him not, nor found they room
For Him in the poor cot, or stately hall;
In Bethlehem's manger, on a virgin's breast,
Lay God incarnate, light and life of all.

Not unto priests or kings, but lowly shepherd swains,
Tending their flocks through the dim silence still,
Came the sweet burden of the angels' song,
Glory to God; to all mankind goodwill.

O, lowly hearts, by sin and care opprest,
List to the lay through eighteen centuries borne;
The message tuned to seraph harps of old
To you a Saviour, Christ the Lord, is born.

Harriet Julia Evans.

Behold the Christ-child in his manger bed,
The Great Desire of every nation come;
The Monarch sends no angel in his stead,
But comes Himself from his eternal home.
Nowell, Nowell! let angel voices sing,
And hail the Birthday of their Infant King.

Stud all the glowing, sapphire steeps of night,
Arise, arise, ye "Morning Stars" and shine;
And, trailing earthward from your home of light,
Come forth, come forth, ye "Sons of God" divine.
Nowell, Nowell! behold the lustrous gem—
That ne'er shall wane—the Star of Bethlehem.

With harp and cymbal, tabret, lute, and lyre,
In notes that never woke to earthly strain,
Celestial words that burn like heavenly fire
In sweet antiphony from train to train;
Nowell, Nowell! to mortals peace, goodwill,
Till all the sleeping earth the chorus fill.

Ye deathless angels that excel in strength,
From everlasting, for his pleasure made,
Throng all his worlds throughout the breadth and length,
Let highest honour unto Him be paid;
Nowell, Nowell! let every cherubim
Bow low in veilèd awe and worship Him.

On earth the golden Dayspring doth appear;
Speed forth, ye angels, from the portals blue,
For earth is heaven, since He, your Lord, is here,
Enshrin'd in every loyal heart and true.
Nowell, Nowell! let sorrow flee away,
And darkest night be turned to brightest day.

The Word incarnate, God's belovèd Son,
The Lamb who taketh all our sin away;
In human form, behold the Spotless One;
Worship, adore, and endless homage pay.
Nowell, Nowell! enraptured myriads fall,
Bend down the knee and own Him Lord of all.

Caroline Tickner.

List to the song the angel host are singing,
A bright and joyful strain;
Peace and goodwill to all men they are bringing—
Oh! may the sweet refrain
Echo to-day in every heart and home
The glad, the saving news that Christ has come!

Glory to God, for since the world's creation
No truth has e'er been told,
To bring to men such joy, such exultation
As angels now unfold.
To spread the tidings may each one unite,
Till all mankind have seen the Gospel light.

Had Jesus come in pomp and kingly glory
Our hearts had been dismayed;
But when we hear of Bethlehem's sweet story,
We cannot be afraid.
Lowly He came, from realms of light and joy,
To bruise the serpent's head, sin to destroy.

May every heart to-day prepare a dwelling
For Him the Prince of Peace:
Then shall we know a joy all joys excelling,
Discord and strife will cease.
Peace and goodwill through life be still our song,
Till we are called to join the angel throng.

M. E. M.

It was the Christmas Sunday,
And round the teacher's chair
A happy group was gathered
Of children young and fair.

They spake of God's great mercy
To sinful, helpless man,
And talked about the wonders
Of God's redemption plan.

They spake of Christ, the Saviour,
Who in this world was born
A little helpless infant
On that first Christmas morn.

They spake of costly offerings
The wise men brought their King,
And then they stopped and wondered
What could the children bring?

The children have no presents
Of gold and incense rare;
And yet they want to offer
Their young heart's tribute there.

"What can I give to Jesus?"
Said little Gracie Lee.
"I'd like to give Him something
For what He's done for me.

"Dear teacher, I've a shilling
I saved to buy a book;
Dad gave it me for Christmas.
It's here, dear teacher—look!

"It's new, and bright, and shiny.
I've not had one before;
But though I like the shilling,
I love the Saviour more.

"So take it, dearest teacher,
I give it up to Him."
The teacher took the shilling,
And her kind eyes were dim.

"He sees your gift, dear Gracie,
And you will always prove
That, giving up for Jesus,
You gain his smile of love."

"What can I give to Jesus?"
Said blue-eyed Nannie Wray;
"This penny, dearest teacher,
I'll give Him if I may.

"It's all I've got, for mother
Is very very poor:
I earned this penny sweeping
The snow from Simpson's door.

"But O, I love the Saviour
Who gave Himself for all;
I'd like to give this penny
If it is not too small."

"The pennies make the shillings,"
The teacher said, and smiled;
"And He who loves the children
Accepts your gift, my child.

"'Tis not too small for Jesus,
Who blessed the widow's mite,
The humblest gift that's offered
Is precious in His sight."

Then, kissing her dear teacher,
Away ran little Nan;
"O, Jesus Christ," she whispered,
"I've given all I can."

"What can I give to Jesus?"
Said sad-faced little Jim:
"I love Him, but I've nothing
That I can give to Him."

"Then give yourself," said teacher,
"'Tis that will please Him most;
He gave Himself for sinners
To seek and save the lost,

"So give yourself to Jesus,
Give all your heart to Him."
"I will"—and now so happy
Is pale-faced little Jim.

"What can I give to Jesus?"
Said smiling Harry King;
"Why, teacher dear, this morning
I gave Him everything.

"'Take me,' I said to Jesus,
'Dear Christ, Thine may I live';
And so you see, dear teacher,
I've nothing left to give;

"For if I am the Saviour's,
Then He has all my store;
My purse and all my money
Belong to me no more."

"What can I give to Jesus?"
The teacher said, with tears;
"Take all my goods and talents,
Take all my future years.

"Let them be spent in service
For Thee, my God, and thine;
And so with these dear children
Thy blessing shall be mine!"

Edith Greeves.

When snow clouds drift across the plain,
And north winds freeze the stream;
When Yule fires blaze, and holly wreaths
In green and ruby gleam;
When dearest friends, divided long,
Are clasping hands once more—
Fain would I join your Christmas throng,
My dear old friend of yore!

Our ships are out on life's great sea,
We must with them abide;
And, steering each in duty's track,
Or driven by storm or tide,
We sever—meet perhaps no more—
No more where friends must part;
But yonder, comrade, is the shore,
Where heart is still with heart. J. K.

Once more, once more 'tis Christmastide,
And the angel's message goes far and wide,
The message of peace to the sons of earth,
A message, indeed, of priceless worth.

Once more, once more 'tis Christmastide;
May perfect peace with us all abide,
And God's "goodwill" to mankind given
Come as the very voice of heaven.

Once more, once more 'tis Christmastide,
The hungry and homeless must be supplied.
A helping hand to the lost and least
Will surely sweeten your Christmas feast.

Once more, once more 'tis Christmastide,
Your thankful hands now open wide.
Have you freely received? Then as freely give,
And henceforth for others learn to live.

Now, how will you keep this Christmastide,
With feasting and laughter, side by side?
Or will you not, as in duty bound,
Let your goodwill be felt around? J. E. P.

O, come let us sing unto the Lord,
Who, of his love, redemption's work begun—
Removed from us the glittering sword
By Him who hath our full salvation won—
Come, praise Him all day long
With a delightful song!

Abolish'd death, the curse of sin—
The awful curse no mortal can endure—
And in its woeful place brought in
"Peace and goodwill," for ever strong and sure;
Come, sing a joyful song
Of Jesus all day long.

That sword, o'er his devoted head,
Flamed, when He came to take the sinner's place,
Then fell, when on the Cross He bled,
The guilt of every sinner to efface;
Let every soul believe,
And Jesus Christ receive!

For God, our God, did not withhold
His great, eternal, ever-blessèd Son,
More precious and more pure than gold,
To rescue sinners from "the wicked one":
Sweet incense with you bring—
Come all, give thanks and sing:

Glory and honour and praise be his!
From pole to pole his great salvation sing!
Joy of his love not one should miss—
Come, great and small, to his ingathering:
Come, lift your voices high
Into the cloudless sky!

"The gift of God is eternal life,
Through Jesus Christ our Lord," Who, this day born,
Expels the gloom of endless strife
To usher in the everlasting morn.
Come, every soul, and sing
That Christ our God is King!

Lyme Regis. Charles Ellis

[1318]

PROGRESS IN PERU.

Writing from Calle de Mapiri, No. 5, Lima, Peru, South America, on Oct. 23, Mr. C. H. Bright says:—

We are now settled in the capital, Lima. I had very much desired to settle in some little native village, but it seems the Lord has really forced me to plant myself right in the capital. It is too soon yet to speak of our meetings here, for we have only just commenced, but there was an encouraging feature in our yesterday's meeting of which I wish to speak. We had present a Peruvian lady who told us of her experience in selling Bibles in a small place in the interior two years ago. Having occasion to visit some friends there, she took with her a companion, and resolved to make it an occasion for service to the Lord. She commenced her work offering a Bible for sale in the train ere it stopped at the town she must first visit. Two priests in the car sought to intimidate her, threatening her in a loud voice, but the Lord gave her courage and apt answers, so that it turned out rather to help than to hinder, and she was enabled to sell many Testaments in this town.

But it was in another town, away from the railroad, that she had her more thrilling experience. Here they had, in spite of threats, walked around with their Bibles all day. In the night she dreamed of being surrounded by an angry mob threatening to kill them. The dream was so vivid that it awoke her, and, being impressed by it, she hastily dressed herself. She and her friend had barely got dressed when they heard the cries of a mob, and people knocking at the door, and talking of them (not knowing, though, that they were in the house). Her companion suggested they should hide. This seemed to her unworthy of a witness for the truth; Christ shed his blood for them; why should they shrink from shedding their blood for him?

After commending themselves to God in prayer they sallied forth. They were soon surrounded by a mob, crying: "Burn her! stone her!" etc. The sacristan stopped her and demanded the books, that he might burn them. She boldly challenged him to do it, but he had no matches and no one offered them. The Prefect of the town warned her to leave immediately or he would not be responsible for her life. She told him that he was bound to protect her, she being a Peruvian. I cannot give the whole narrative, but it seems that the courage the Lord gave her was her salvation, for it stirred up the sympathies of some of the more educated class, and these protected her, keeping near her and daring anyone to cast a stone at her. The result of the uproar was that she sold many Bibles, and these gentlemen safely escorted them back to the railroad.

The narrative had an encouraging effect upon our minds for the evidence it gives that there are some Peruvians who will receive the Word in sincerity, and who will testify for the Lord with enthusiasm, spontaneously, and not for pay. This was the first time this lady has been to our meeting, and she assures us that we shall have her sympathy and active co-operation. She has attended Mr. Penzotti's meetings in Callao, though not lately. Two other Peruvians were present. One of these had never before attended any kind of meeting for preaching the Gospel. The other has attended our meetings in Callao; was first impressed with one of our tracts that was given her; gained more light at our preachings there, and is now asking about baptism. The others present were three Swedes, all believers.

Now that we are in the capital we feel that we must make this the centre of testimony. In Callao Mr. Penzotti has his chief work, and we do not wish to divert attention where he is so well known and so justly esteemed, though persecuted.

Lima is four or five times larger than Callao, and is more truly a centre than any other capital city I have ever seen. This is due, perhaps, to its great facilities for intercourse with the rest of the world perhaps due to the present system of government,, which, instead of being federal, as in Mexico and Venezuela, is a centralising government. Lima is the centre of influence for all Peru. People are here from all parts. So while I felt much disappointed in not finding some quiet country town in which to settle, I have to recognise that it must be the Lord's hand, especially for the much greater influence that our press will have here. For right here in Lima itself we have a field that will probably always need more papers than we can print on our small press.

We rejoice to be able to say that already there is a sign of some crumbling in the walls. The Congress having passed a law which virtually establishes liberty of the Press, the President vetoed it. But the Congress had the courage to insist on it, and at last the President has accepted it and promulgated it. The law that the Congress has repealed forbade any publication that directly or indirectly attacked the religion of the State, which law would certainly have been interpreted against such papers as we publish. Of course, it has not yet been tested. Tracts have been distributed here—I have circulated our own "Antigua Fe" (commencing right where they used to burn the heretics, in the plaza of the Inquisition)—but as yet no religious paper has ever been published here, except those that had the seal of the Archbishop. But all seems now clear, and we hope that in the first month of the coming year our own little testimony to "the ancient faith" will come forth, the first witness to the Gospel printed in Peru.

THE GOSPEL IN ALBANIA.

Rev. Gerasim D. Kyrias, an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, writes from Kortcha, Albania:—Since settling in this town—about three years ago—we have regularly preached the Gospel to numerous hearers. Perhaps never since the Apostle of the Gentiles visited this ancient Illyricum (Rom. xv. 19) has the Gospel been proclaimed here. The same Apostle also visited Apollonia, another ancient city in Albania, which was situated not far from modern Avlona, on the shore of the Adriatic Sea.

Our Sunday-school is very interesting and well attended. The Lord has blessed us richly in our efforts to make known to our countrymen the way of salvation. We have paid special attention to educational work among the girls and women, and rapid progress has been noticed. A little more than a year ago, we opened a girls' school, under the direction of Miss Sevasti D. Kyrias (my sister), who is a graduate of the American College for Girls at Constantinople. Miss Fanka E. Liabaka, a graduate of the American Girls' School at Samokone, Bulgaria, has joined us in this work. Moslem girls, too, attend our school. You may be interested to know that this is the only Albanian girls' school in this country. Unfortunately the people have been kept in dense darkness by the Greek clergy, whose purpose has been the Hellenising of the nation. Greek is the language of their services, as well as all teaching in the schools, and this is a strange language for the Albanians.

Thanks to the British and Foreign Bible Society, we have a translation of the whole New Testament and a part of the Old, into pure Albanian. The Scriptures have been widely circulated in all parts of Albania through colporteurs. Besides their duties in the school, the teachers are holding regular prayer-meetings among the women. Many of the latter have learned to read. The American Board has helped us in carrying on this work, and for this we are very thankful, but as the board has extended its operations in other regions, the aid allowed for Albania has been so limited that it will be needful for some of our workers to retire from the field. If they had enough wherewith to provide the necessities of life, they would gladly continue this hopeful work—a field with two millions, who are speaking one language.

The Lord has helped us to erect a school building, which is also used for preaching. It cost about £160, nearly one-third of which was contributions by Albanians. We need to enlarge the building, but have not the funds at present.

Last November we formed here an evangelical brotherhood, the members of which are paying, some ten piastres, some five, and others two and a-half piastres monthly. We likewise started a library for the school, and over 200 volumes have been collected up to the present in several languages.

Rev. Dr. Thomson, Bible House, Constantinople, will gladly give information regarding this promising work.

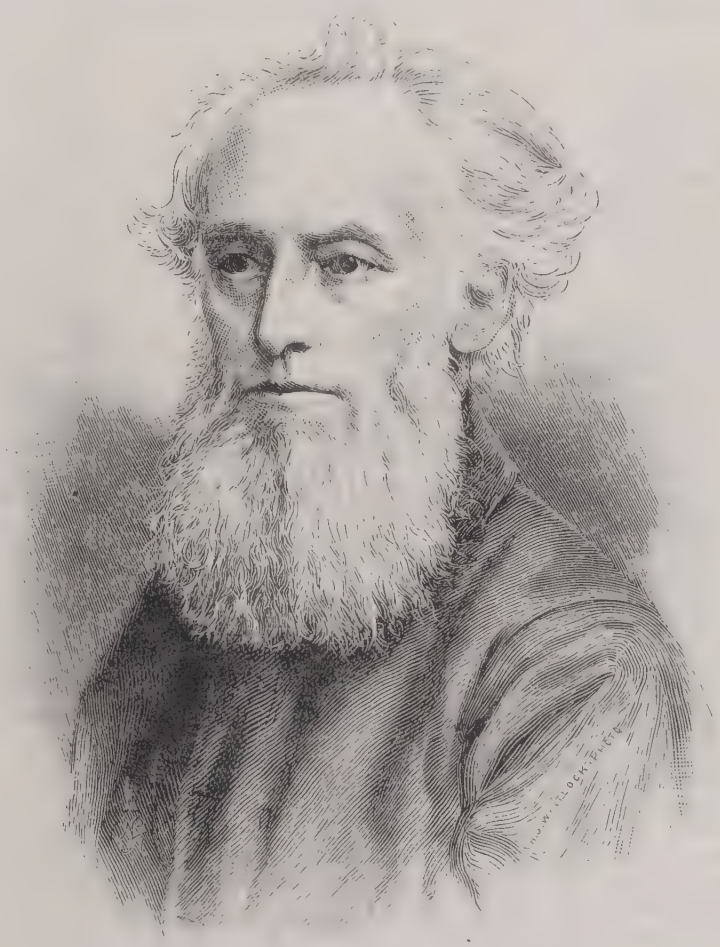
A CHILD is taught to pray that he may be an obedient son and a kind brother. And if he should be what he habitually prays to be, does the over-anxious parent recognise his pleasant behaviour as the answer to his own prayer? How many parents believe in a beneficent Nature apart from God?

REV. BENJAMIN GREGORY, D.D.,

EX-EDITOR OF THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNEXIONAL LITERATURE.

THE retirement of Rev. Dr. Gregory from the Wesleyan Methodist Connexional Editorship, after twenty-five years of arduous service—seven years longer than that of any former editor—and his relinquishment of the active ministry, after fifty-three years of strenuous and varied labour, has naturally been recognised as a notable event.

Benjamin Gregory was born at Stokesley, Yorkshire, in 1820. His father was a remarkably powerful and successful Methodist preacher, a great theological reader, thinker, and converser, but kept comparatively in the background by a distressing nervous affliction. His maternal grandfather was also a highly serviceable Methodist minister. At the age of eight he was sent to the famous school for ministers' sons at Woodhouse Grove, in Yorkshire. On the day after the conclusion of his full term of six years' pupilage, he was appointed as a salaried tutor, in which capacity he served for six more years, during the last of which, 1840-1, he was stationed by the Conference as a minister in the Woodhouse Grove Circuit.



Inspired by his mother in early boyhood with a passionate love of literature, and disabled by a delicate physique from competing with his schoolfellows in athletic sports, he spent almost all his play hours and vacations in voracious reading, which thus became a lifelong passion and necessity. On his ordination, in 1844, he was appointed to the Second London Circuit (Great Queen-street), where he spent the full term of three years, the first under the superintendence of Rev. Joseph Fowler (father of the present President of the Local Government Board), the second and third years under that of Dr. Beaumont, at that time the most popular preacher in the Connexion. He was again Mr. Fowler's colleague in Hull, and was subsequently stationed in the Third London Circuit. He thus became a member of the Connexional Book Committee immediately at the close of his probation for the ministry.

Throughout the terrible convulsion of Wesleyan Methodism during the years 1849-54, Mr. Gregory took most stoutly the side of conciliation, and, twenty years later, was one of the most earnest advocates of the formation of the Representative Conference of United Ministers and Laymen. During the first seventeen years of his ministry his health seemed always on the verge of a breakdown; but after his appointment to the superintendency of the Oxford Circuit in 1857 it materially improved. For fifteen years he felt himself obliged to request country or suburban appointments, taking great delight in village work; but in 1866 he accepted an invitation to the London (Lambeth) Circuit, under the superintendence of Rev. Dr. Waddy, father of Mr. S. D. Waddy, M.P. In 1867 he was elected a member of the Legal Conference. In 1868 he was appointed to the Connexional Editorship, in conjunction with his old schoolfellow and co-tutor, Rev. B. Frankland, B.A., on whose lamented death, in January, 1877, he undertook the sole editorship.

In 1879 Mr. Gregory was chosen president of the Conference. During the early years of his ministry, he published little, beyond contributions to the Connexional periodicals, and The Watchman newspaper. With these exceptions, his first publications were chiefly polemical against High Church misrepresentations of Nonconformist Christianity. The first of these appeared at Hull, in 1847, in reply to an eloquent and popular dignitary. The noble-minded Dean raised himself immensely in public estimation by a prompt and cordial retractation, and an expression of profound regret at his having been betrayed into mis-statements so uncalled for and unjust. On three subsequent occasions, and in three different localities he stood up for the defence of Nonconformity wantonly assailed.

In 1867, Mr. Gregory was called to confront a different class of controversialists. At the request of the Connexional Book Committee, he prepared two tracts in defence of the Holy Scriptures against the assaults of Rationalism, the one entitled "Honest Doubt," the other "Reason and Revelation." They were much read and valued. Of late he has again been summoned to stand up for the integrity and authority of Holy Writ, in a series of papers entitled "Theology in 'Transition' and the Bible in 'Suspense.'"

In 1856, he contributed to a series of Methodist Biographies a life of the great Irish evangelist, Gideon Ouseley. In 1860 he published "The Life of Emma Tattam," author of "The Dream of Pythagoras," and other noble poems, whose genius he had discovered when she was sixteen years of age, and whose productions he had edited in 1852. Mathew Arnold in his "Life of Eugenie de Guerin," took occasion to notice the volume with marked approval, and The Spectator also had a very favourable leader anent the work. In 1870 he published his "Thorough Business Man," a life of Mr. Walter Powell, partner of the late philanthropic Henry Reed. In this book he set forth the principles of legitimate success in business, and the Christian morality of commerce. It met with great commendation from the press, especially in an article by The Spectator, and by The British Quarterly Review. He was also on the staff of The London Quarterly Review, during the editorship of Dr. Pope. In 1873 he was chosen to deliver the fourth Fernley Lecture, the subject allotted to him being "The Holy Catholic Church, the Communion of Saints." A second edition of this lecture appeared in 1885.

(From a Photograph by Mr. H. J. Whitlock, 11, New Street, Birmingham.)

By the conference of 1873, Mr. Gregory was elected to the Chair of Theology at the Wesleyan Methodist College, Headingley, Leeds, on the retirement of Rev. John Lomas; but various providential indications, and a deep interest in his editorial work, induced him to decline the honour. In 1876 a heavy blow fell upon him, in the death, after a few days' illness, of his son, Benjamin Alfred, a laborious and entirely devoted Methodist minister of the highest promise, an M.A. and first-class honours man of Oxford, at the early age of twenty-six. Mr. Gregory wrote a memoir of his son under the title "Consecrated Culture," which was widely circulated.

In 1881 he published a volume of sermons preached during his presidential year, and of addresses to the meetings on behalf of the Thanksgiving Fund, which were held that year in Manchester, Sheffield, Bolton, and Darlington, with an address to the students of the Training College, Westminster. The last-named deliverance brought him into a discussion with Professor Bain, against whose unworthy theory of morals, propounded in his popular Educational Hand-book, Mr. Gregory had felt it necessary to warn the students.

Dr. Gregory published, in 1889, a "Handbook of Scriptural Church Principles and of Wesleyan Methodist History and Polity," drawn up by the direction of the Conference. He owed his designation to this task to the principles set forth and defended in his Fernley lecture, and to the fact of his having enjoyed such exceptional facilities for familiarising himself with the subject, and to his accurate acquaintance at the time with the details of two great connexional crises. In 1889 he also prepared, at the request of the Book Committee, a volume of "Prayers for Christian Families," with an essay on family worship, written by himself. At the request of the Book Committee, three years previously, he edited a selection of Wesley's sermons, which were published under the title "The Marrow of Methodism," and in 1891 a selection from Wesley's journals, entitled "Wesley, his own Biographer."

For many years he took an animated interest in the discussions at the Conference, but owing to a critical attack of hæmorrhage at the Conference of 1884, loud speaking was declared to be fraught with danger, and he was also debarred from work in the pulpit and on the platform. At the beginning of his probation for the ministry he was led to study the principles of sound hermeneutics, and his preaching has been based throughout on a thorough and straightforward exegesis. He has also been an eager student in every school of theology and metaphysics. In youth he availed himself of exceptional opportunities for hearing almost all the greatest preachers of the time. An insatiable reader from his childhood, he has laid all his literary acquisitions under contribution for the illustration and defence of the Holy Scriptures, both by voice and pen. His poetic paraphrases of the Psalms are vivid expositions.

Whilst The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, under his editorship, has been faithful to the doctrinal principles and purposes for the sake of which it was expressly instituted by Wesley himself a hundred and fifteen years ago, and energetically edited by him during the last twelve years of his laborious life; yet it has illustrated the kindly catholicity of Wesley to an unprecedented extent. Not only the leading preachers and writers of all the Nonconformist Churches, but many of the chief dignitaries of the Established Church, including some bishops, have freely placed their pens at his disposal. And whilst maintaining that the Gospel alone is the power of God unto salvation, of society as well as of the individual, it has freely discussed the great social problems of the day, and has shown the heartiest interest in philanthropic movements. He has himself contributed successive series of articles to the Magazine and to the City Road Magazine, and, in the earlier years of his editorship, to the Christian Miscellany and Sunday School Magazine, the most popular of which were his delineations of Methodist worthies and his reminiscences of his own life and times.

The last Conference granted Dr. Gregory's request to become a supernumerary. The portrait which we have elected to place before our readers represents him in his more vigorous days, and at the same time gives in anticipation the features of the "hoar age" to which God has graciously brought him. We trust that in his retirement he will be as truly blessed of God as he has been in his active and public life.

[1320]

AFRICAN MISSIONS.*

Dr. James Johnston arrived in England from Jamaica early in 1891, with six young Jamaicans, whom he thought adapted, from their birth and training amid surroundings favourable for usefulness in their fatherland as mechanics, builders, and planters, to relieve the white missionary in Africa of manual toil, and enable him to devote his time to the translation and teaching of the native languages. The chief difficulty which he anticipated was the natural "lack of stick-at-it-iveness and backbone" in the coloured races.

He determined to put this idea to the test with these six volunteers, and sailed with them for Africa. Four of them were left at Cisamba, in the west; the other two accompanied him across the continent as far as Mangwato. The experiment failed for reasons given in the book, and the young men have returned to Jamaica.

The narrative of the journey from West to East of the Dark Continent is full of interest, and we can easily conceive that the difficulty was not to find material for the story, but to select what to record and what to leave out.

We must omit all reference to the adventures of the journey, and confine ourselves to the often startling comments made on the missions visited on the journey. The first of these is Bishop Taylor's important station at Loanda, in connection with which the traveller characterises the idea of self-supporting missions in Africa, so far as he has seen it, as "a grand mistake" (pp. 26-31). This opinion is sustained by a lengthy quotation from Regions Beyond, and this side of the question deserves serious consideration.

This is followed by an attack upon the Mission "superintended by a Mr. F. S. Arnot," a mode of reference which indicates either a want of information or a want of courtesy. The Garanganze Mission, whose headquarters are at Kwanjululu, is designated "a huge farce." We have no doubt we shall hear something in reply to the harsh judgment passed upon Mr. Arnot and his work. It is natural to suppose that experience will lead to many improvements; but the assault of Dr. Johnston seems to savour of personal bitterness, and we are reminded that his own proceedings in Jamaica have been still more seriously animadverted upon, not by passing travellers, but by fellow-residents upon the spot.

The French Mission of M. Coillard is spoken of with appreciation: "I shall never forget the time spent on this station with the veteran missionary, Francis Coillard. If I have seen one Mission in Africa which deserves the full sympathy and hearty support of Christians at home more than another, it is this. When I state that from the time Bihé, on the west, was left behind, and we arrived at Blantyre, on the east, with the exception of the French mission at Zambesi I did not come across a single missionary labouring among natives, it will be better understood why I failed to find places for the appointment of coloured men."

The British South Africa Company is very severely censured, and facts are given, which painfully maintain the charges made (pp. 145-151 271, etc.).

Some quotations are made (pp. 155, 236, 313) from missionary reports, which are declared to be not only highly coloured, but absolutely untrue, 'giving a totally false conception of the nature of the work, and filling the minds of enthusiastic missionary volunteers with the idea that the Central Africa natives are 'ready and waiting to receive the Gospel.'" So that "half of the missionaries we have met during our journey state in so many words that their coming to Africa has been fraught with sore disappointment, both as regards the country and the work." The blame of such highly and falsely coloured communications is attributed not a little to the requirement from the home committees of something specially thrilling for their annual meetings.

M. Goy, a Swiss, and M. and Mdme. Jalla, of the French Mission, receive special and honourable mention.

We have a portrait of King Khama, who seems to wear a blue ribbon in his European coat. He jealously guards his people against the baneful effects of strong drink, yet vetoes any social or sanitary improvements, so that "immorality is more brazen-faced than among the most uncivilised we have met hitherto." Khama is spoken of as "a noble example of what Christianity and civilisation can do for the African, . . . yet over fifty per cent. of Khama's people are slaves, the representatives of tribes conquered and captured in bygone days... Many friends of freedom would be glad to see Khama add to his many virtues and humane laws that of equal rights to all his subjects."

One of the most interesting of the photographs is that of the ruins of Zimbabwe, and a quotation from Mr. J. T. Bent's "Ruined Cities of Mashonaland" shows that in an unknown past these regions were inhabited by a powerful people of high civilisation.

The booming of Mashonaland as being even a fair average country for farming is denounced as but another "South Sea Bubble."

The most successful and enterprising mission in Mashonaland is said to be the Wesleyan Methodist, under the superintendence of Rev. Isaac Shimmins; but the missions here are "for the evangelisation of the Europeans; no effort is being put forth to meet the natives" (pp. 266-7).

Dr. Johnston distinguishes between the slave trade and domestic slavery, household slaves being sometimes "treated with much more consideration than some people do their servants" (p. 288, 313-5).

The Blantyre Mission has for its congregation chiefly 200 boys and girls, who are under instruction and boarded on the Mission premises. "The form of service closely resembled the more ceremonious ritual of the Church of England—surpliced clergymen, processional white-robed choir, intoned prayers, turning to the east, tapers on the altar," etc. The clergymen both zealous and devoted men, indefatigable on the sick, etc. Of the Universities Mission, "the Sunday morning service should satisfy the most exacting of Ritualists" (pp. 321, 2).

Strong things are said to "those fanatics" come or intending to come to Africa on the "faith alone" plan; and the moral is pointed with some very sad experiences (pp. 296-7). Mr. Joseph Booth, of the Zambesi Industrial Mission, and Mr. Mangin (the latter of whom died while Dr. Johnston was at Mandala) are mentioned in this connection. A paper by Dr. Ellinwood in The Missionary Review of the World for December, 1890, is quoted, and is well worthy of the most serious heed (pp. 301-7).

Valuable information is given as to the moderate medical qualifications necessary for the treatment of the native African, and the necessity of higher qualifications for dealing with Europeans; though instances are cited of cases given up as hopeless by skilled physicians having been easily healed by bushmen with indigenous herbs (335-7).

We have had no space to speak of the stirring incidents and dangers and escapes of this arduous journey, nor of the excellent and interesting photographs, nor of other features of the entertaining yet somewhat depressing story. We do not regard it as a blemish that it should set before us the more sombre side of missionary enterprise; but not a little depends upon the point of view from which a traveller looks at things; upon his own predilections, sympathies, or prejudices; upon the impressions conveyed by his informants during his brief visitations; and, not least, upon his capacity for perceiving the principles and methods of God's long-suffering government, while the Prince and God of this world is making his way, through deceit and violence, to his doom in his own prepared place.

* Reality versus Romance in South Central Africa: an account of a journey across the Continent from Benguella on the West, through Bihé, Ganguella, Barotse, the Kalihari Desert, Mashonaland, Manica, Gorongoza, Nyasa, the Shire Highlands, to the mouth of the Zambesi on the East Coast. By James Johnston, M.D., with fifty-one full-page illustrations from photographs by the author, and map. 21s. Hodder & Stoughton.

MR. CHAS. INGLIS IN AMERICA.

Upon the completion of his engagement in Chicago, Mr. Chas. Inglis accepted the invitation of the Y.M.C.A. in St. Louis, Mo., to conduct meetings for young men. He was compelled to limit his work to twelve days, which were, however, very fruitful. The meetings were held in Union Methodist Episcopal Church (the largest church of that denomination in the city), as the Association lecture room would not accommodate the audiences.

On the Sundays and Wednesday nights the meetings were for general audiences, and the capacity of the church was thoroughly tested to accommodate the crowds who gathered. The remaining evenings of the week were devoted to men only, and every night there was a deep interest manifested by inquirers, many of whom professed faith in Christ. Each afternoon, except Saturday and Sunday, Mr. Inglis gave Bible readings, which were greatly blessed in the up-building of God's people.

The leading pastors of the city were frequent in their attendance, and all expressed themselves as having been greatly helped by the expositions of the Word of God; and many of them united with the Association and other Christian workers in striving to induce Mr. Inglis to continue his work for some weeks longer, and deeply regretted that his other engagements would not permit of his doing so.

We feel deeply grateful to God for having sent his servant among us, and we confidently believe that the effects of his work will be felt for many days to come. Geo. T. Coxhead.

St. Louis, Mo., U.S.A.

Lord Bennet and Mr. Inglis have been holding a united mission in the city of Sing-Sing, where the largest buildings were crowded. Here, too, not a few among saints as well as sinners will praise God for the blessing they have received. All classes in the city have been brought under the sound of the Word, and the meetings held in the State prison on Sunday mornings will never be forgotten by the 1000 convicts who attended. Many of those men were broken down, and wept like children, and it was evident that the Spirit of God was using the sweet songs sung by Lord Bennet, and the fervent appeals of Mr. Inglis, in blessing to these men.

Mr. Inglis was holding meetings twice a day, when the mail left, in New Brunswick. He was expected to reach London on the 20th inst. to begin work in England.

HOMES FOR AGED POOR.

In these havens of rest many an aged Christian may be found spending their last years; while many who in the battle of life have neglected to seek the home beyond, have, we have good reason to believe, not only obtained an earthly home, but also one not made with hands eternal in the heavens.

It is an interesting fact that among our number there are fifteen aged couples and six pairs of sisters. We must sorrowfully add that at the present time we have more than fifty applicants pleading for admission, to whom the answer "No room vacant" must be given. We long for the time when, with larger funds entrusted to their care, the committee will be able to assist all suitable candidates without the long waiting time which is at present a necessary evil. From the commencement the charity has been entirely worked by voluntary labour, and it is much to be wished that this mode of helping the aged was more widely known and largely extended.

The Homes are open to visitors any afternoon, and are situated 7, 9, 11, 15, and 17, Minford-gardens, West Kensington Park; 65, Watterton-road, St. Peter's Park; 25 and 27, St. George's-road, Notting-hill; 10, Saunders-road, Notting-hill; and 41 and 43, Penge-road, South Norwood. A report and further particulars will gladly be sent.

S. A. Harrison.

5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—That God will use a book for blessing, to one to whom it is sent.—For a country church and parish, that error may be excluded, and truth — Gospel truth — triumph. PRAISE.—For much blessing granted on the work of the Liverpool Open-air Mission.—For God, manifesting his power in the salvation of souls in meetings held in Linlithgow, N.B.

YOUNG MEN AND MISSIONS.

On Friday evening last, the Missionary Society in connection with the firm of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams and Co., St. Paul's Churchyard, London, celebrated its fifty-first anniversary amidst a large attendance of members of the establishment and friends, Mr. George Williams occupying the chair. Mr. J. Henderson read the general report of the year's work. The twofold object of the Society is to aid the moral and spiritual welfare of the members of the establishment, and to help in a practical way the furtherance of the Gospel in our own and foreign lands.

Rev. F. R. Meyer, in an admirable address, impressed upon the audience the importance of Christian men remaining in their business calling, which is such a vast sphere for practical usefulness. How many have made a mistake in leaving in their calling to enter the ministry.

A very pleasing feature of the evening was the presence of Mr. W. H. Omura, a Japanese gentleman, a member of a very old-established commercial firm in Tokyo, who some four years ago came to London to learn the principles of Western commercial life. He is going back to Japan to carry a Christian influence into the firm of which he will be the head. Rev. T. B. Pandian and Rev. Hira Singh Puri also spoke on Christian work in India.

THE FARWIG MISSION.

Twelve years ago a few earnest Wesleyans commenced work in a small cottage in Bromley, and this has grown into a large and fruitful mission, having, we are glad to note, already a representative in the foreign mission field—Miss J. L. Moxam, now on the Congo. The new report says:—

One cannot be present at a single meeting without feeling that hearts are knit together in the one great desire to make use of every possible occasion to persuade men and women to be reconciled to God, and to accept salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. All have not the same gift, and this desire manifests itself in different ways in various people. Some are only able by invitation to bring those in whom they are interested under the sound of the Gospel; others are able to speak to one and another during the services, while many tell of the love and salvation of God to them. The real enjoyment in prayer meetings is also a striking feature. The announcement of such a meeting will bring together a large gathering of men and women delighted to have the opportunity of spending an hour or more pleading with God, and to hear many just started on the Christian life ask for grace to continue in the narrow way. While some churches have great difficulty in maintaining one weekly meeting for prayer, there is no difficulty in holding such meetings here four times on Sunday, and two or three nights in the week.

The natural result of these two characteristics of the work is the wonderful blessing of Ged apparent in every department. Scarcely a service passes without manifest tokens that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation still. The oversight of those who thus turn to God is a great anxiety, but we praise God for many who during the year have found peace in believing. The belief in open-air work is very strong amongst us, and many are willing in the very streets where they have lived in the bondage of sin to tell of a love that has sought them out, and a salvation that has transformed their lives and homes. Details follow of the various agencies carried on. The secretary is Mr. W. J. Gibbs, Campbell House, Bromley, Kent.

MISS E. J. FISHER, closing a nightly address at Holloway on the moral and scientific aspects of temperance, maintained that temperance workers are looking forward to the time when the Church would be free from the evil of intemperance, and when the young would be trained up under the principles of a high moral and religious code. In the meantime all should endeavour to do their duty not only to the society in which they live, but to the Christ whom they profess to serve.

HOUSE-TO-HOUSE VISITATION.—At a conference of the workers connected with the Bradford House-to-House Visitation, held at the Primitive Methodist Central Hall on Thursday, the secretary (Rev. T. Law) said that a large proportion of the churches to which parochial allocation had been made were diligently working their districts, and at least a thousand visitors were regularly employed. The visitors also testified to the growing interest in the work, and that they were, almost without exception, well received. The second anniversary of the movement will be held on February 13, and Revs. H. P. Hughes, C. A. Berry, and others will take part.

Letters to the Editor.

MRS. RENDEL HARRIS AT CAMBRIDGE.

Dear Sir,—As I see a reference in the Christian of 7th inst., to a meeting held by my husband and myself at Cambridge, in which my address is criticised as savouring dangerously of "Perfectionism," may I say a word in explanation? As I understand that term and its sister one of "Sinless Perfection" to imply an absolute condition reached from which there is no falling, I disclaim it entirely—believing much ignorance, frailty, and a constant liability to sin to belong to the Christian's earthly stage of development, even when most fully saved.

What I told the Cambridge undergraduates, and what I firmly believe, is that every human temple, earthly in material and limited in area, was first created and then redeemed to be a clean and indwelt building of God.

Also, that the Scriptural term katharizō and its derivations when used in connection with God's work in the heart, means a work commensurate with the efficacy and power of the blood of Christ, under the application of the Holy Spirit; an efficacy and a power who can exaggerate or trust too completely?

Yours, in a present Saviour who "is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him," Helen B. Harris.

1, Bedford-road, Hitchin.

Gathered Cold.

"I HAVE FINISHED MY COURSE."

2 Tim. 4-7.

A Christian whose life was ebbing away,
Was thoughtlessly asked "the time of day";
When this was the answer, faintly given,
"Thank God, that it wants but a minute to heaven."

R. Ball Rutter.

"TRUTH, LORD, YET."

"Truth, Lord, yet," is the sum and substance of faith. Truth, Lord, "sin hath abounded unto death," yet "hath thy grace reigned much more abounded unto life." Truth, Lord, "cursed is everyone that abideth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them," yet "He who knew no sin was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." "Truth, Lord," is the sea of our guilt, and the righteous anger of our God, "yet" is the rock of Christ's redemption and love. "Truth, Lord," is a view of self, "yet" is a view of Jesus.—A. Saphir.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE.

In all my actions teach me to square myself to thee. Whatever I am about to do, or speak, or effect, let me think, "If my Saviour were now on earth, would He do this that I am now putting my hand unto? Would He speak these words that I am now uttering? Would He be thus disposed as I now feel myself?" Let me not yield myself to any thought, word, or action which my Saviour would be ashamed to own. Let Him be pleased so to manage his own life in me, that all the interest He hath given me in myself may be wholly surrendered to Him, that I may be, as it were, dead in myself, while He lives and moves in me."—Bishop Hall (1608).

THE SOUTH-WESTERN EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION was founded three years ago by a number of earnest young men in Bath, who sent out one brother to sell Bibles and Gospel literature in dark districts in Somerset and Dorset. Eventually other workers were sent out until six are now devoting their energies to the work. Besides, there are several bands of voluntary Christian workers, also about 30 local preachers of the different denominations upon the Association's plan, as special missioners. The Lord has blessed the work of the Association in a remarkable way. Particulars may be obtained of the superintendent, Mr. Woolley, Long-street, Sherborne, Dorset. F. B.

EAST LONDON SEWING-CLASS FUND.—During the past year this class, meeting twice a week for three hours, has been held regularly at Sidney-street, Mile-end. In the winter months it consisted of about seventy women, most of whom were either widows or the bread-winners of their family. For the work done in the mission-room the women are paid twopence an hour, and the shilling a week thus earned often enables them to obtain some of the bare necessaries of life which they would otherwise have to do without. Mrs. van Erckelens, who has worked under the committee for twenty-six years, still superintends the sewing-class and works among the women. Owing to a falling off in the amount of the subscriptions, the balance is, this year, on the debit side. Communications may be addressed to Lady A. Hobart-Hampden, 63, St. George's-road, S.W.

THE Y.M.C.A.

THE Bishop of Derby has promised to preside at an Anti-Gambling Demonstration in February.

Special services, conducted by University men, were held in the rooms of the Ipswich Y.M.C.A. from the 12th to the 15th inst. Much blessing is believed to have resulted.

Mr. James Pearce, formerly of the London West branch, has conducted with much acceptance a series of Bible readings and evangelistic meetings, under the auspices of the Ludlow Association.

At a special Workers' Meeting, lately held in Derby, Mr. Thurley, gen. sec. Nottingham, gave an interesting address. The Sunday night meetings in the open air have been continued weekly, with good results.

The Bolton Association having reported upon the annoyance experienced at their Association through smoking in the rooms, the Manchester District Union have passed a resolution that it is inexpedient to allow smoking in Y.M.C.A. premises.

At Exeter Hall the past month has been a very busy one—crowded with meetings and rich in blessing. The workers are looking forward full of expectation that God will continue to bless the agencies in operation at Exeter Hall for reaching young men.

A small band of open-air preachers connected with the Cork Association were subjected to a somewhat serious assault in the Mall on Sunday last. In the course of the disturbance a Bible was snatched from the hands of one of the young men, and was set on fire.

Under the auspices of the Chudleigh Association, a series of very successful meetings for young men have recently been held. Each night there was a large attendance, and practical and stirring addresses were delivered by Mr. W. H. Roberts on gambling, intemperance, impurity, and unbelief.

It is expected that upwards of 1,500 delegates will attend the Jubilee International Conference in London next year. There are at present upwards of seventy associations in and around London. Altogether, in many lands, the work is carried on in 5158 centres, and has a membership of 467,515.

A large number of members of the Y.M.C.A. Missionary Band recently gathered at Exeter Hall to hear an address on "Missionary Work in Brazil," by Mr. Fanstone. The speaker gave a most interesting account of his evangelistic work amongst the natives and the Roman Catholics of Brazil. The burden of his cry was, Men! more men! to go and preach Christ crucified.

The ninth annual report of the Hackney Association shows vigorous all round work, the spiritual effort being well sustained, while the intellectual and educational receives due attention. During the past eighteen months, three members have gone forth as missionaries to Central Africa, China, and India, whilst four others are in College preparing to follow, Four more are in training for the home ministry. whilst many are working in ragged schools and mission halls. There is also a junior section for lads which is doing good work.

The railroad branch of the Y.M.C.A. in America, has opened at Clifton Forge, Va., a fine new building for the men on the Chesapeake and Ohio line. The president of that company said at the opening, "In old times when men came into this place and we wanted to find them, we had to go the round-house or to the bar-rooms. I remember the first time I went through the main street of the town, it seemed to me that one side was filled up with saloons, and the other side with coal cars. Hereafter, if we want to find any of our men we shall expect to find them either at home or in this building."

Mr. George Williams, Lord Kinnaird, and Mr. W. Hind Smith represented the National Council on Wednesday last at a large meeting held to further a scheme for the acquisition of a building by the Totterdown (Bristol) Y.M.C.A. Mr. J. S. Fry offered £200, on the condition that four other gentlemen contribute a similar sum, making £1,000, and ten others £100 each, making £2,000 towards the £3,500. They had had a capital site offered them, and to meet the cost of providing the requirements of the various departments and furnishing, it was estimated that £3,500 would be required.

The new building of the Y.M.C.A. of Chicago was opened on November 12th. It is thirteen stories high and will cost, when furnished complete, 900,000 dols. The value of the ground is 765,000 dols., making a grand total of 1,665,000 dols. It is the finest Y.M.C.A. building in the world, and is the beginning of a new era of great prosperity for the Association. It occupies nine floors and basement, the other floors being reserved for office purposes. In the various departments we notice among the new attractions, the cycling room, natatorium, photographic dark room, industrial room, tennis courts, observatory, clay modelling, science, carpentry, and forge rooms. Rooms have been set apart for the various ministers' meetings, and it promises to be a great religious, educational and social centre.

The Chelmsford Y.M.C.A. Evangelistic Mission, begun in October by Mr. H. Thorne, is still going on, and much blessing is being experienced. The great feature of that work was the unity brought about amongst Christians of various denominations, resulting in more united effort in Christian work. At the end of last month, Mr. Thorne paid us another visit, and again souls were saved and Christian workers stirred up to more determined efforts. Large numbers professed faith during the services. Another gratifying result of this work has been the establishing of an early Sunday morning prayer meeting which continues to be well attended; also a meeting has been held weekly for young converts. This has been of a very helpful character, and much appreciated. It is cheering to note that the work is still spreading in the district around, and in many of the villages. The Y.M.C.A. has been strengthened by this mission in the addition of members, especially of Christian workers.—J. H.

THE Y.W.C.A.

THE report of the Finchley branch states that there are more than 100 names on the books. Evident tokens of God's blessing have been granted, and enlarged premises have become necessary. A room suitable for the work was recently opened in Lichfield Grove.

The 12th anniversary of the Brixton branch was held on December 13th. Over 100 members and friends accepted the invitation to tea. An earnest address was given by Hon. E. Kinnaird especially to the Prayer Union members. The branch numbers 138 seniors and juniors. Another member is leaving for foreign work, and there is evident token of blessing.

The Hackney and Clapton branch has issued its ninth report. Miss Hardy, the hon. sec., tells of much good work done. Lectures have been given on "First Aid" and "Nursing" by Dr. Gerard Smith. All through the year the Home has been full of boarders, who are well cared for by the Honorary Resident Superintendent. "Seymour House" now has its own representative in the mission field. Temperance work, the library, and the junior branch all continue to prosper.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A NEW society has been started in connection with Trinity Church, Arundel. The adoption of the pledge is not pressed, although the conductors favour its use

A very successful meeting was held on Thursday by the members of the Puddletown Y.P.S.C.E., assisted by friends from the Dorchester branch. The Y.P.S.C.E. in this place is growing stronger.

A series of Evangelistic services has been held at Dunstable by active members of the C.E. Society and other friends, under the lead of the pastor, Rev. F. J. Flatt. The meetings were well attended. interesting, and successful.

Two months ago a C.E. Society was started at Greenfield, Flints. It is in a vigorous condition, the young people of both sexes taking the keenest interest in the work, and giving unmistakable evidences of the real benefit they have already derived from it.

At the third annual meeting of the Horbury Society, Rev. J. T. Briscoe gave a stimulating address on "The Christian Life, what it is, and how to live it." This society consists of twenty-three active, eleven associate, and twenty-seven honorary members, all of whom are total abstainers.

"PLENTY OF WATER, BUT IT'S NAE BILING."—A discussion has been going on in the North British Daily Mail (Glasgow) on the non-church-going question. Mr. William Arnot, senior, contributes thereto the following story, related by the late Rev. William Arnot, of the Free High Church, Edinburgh:—"After Mr. D. L. Moody had his meetings in Edinburgh, in 1873, some ministers had met and were discussing the reason why Mr. Moody had been so much blessed in his preaching while so little result followed their own. Mr. Arnot told them that when he was travelling through Fife on one occasion, the train was detained a long time at one station, and when he put his head out of the carriage window and asked the guard the cause of the delay—'Have you no water?'—and got the reply, 'Oh ay, plenty of water, but it's nae biling.' Then Mr. Arnot told his brethren we have plenty of theology, but it is not boiling. His opinion was true then, and the cause still prevails at the present day, and it throws much light on at least one cause of the declension and 'down grade' of the times. May all the pulpits of our land be filled with men full of faith and 'the Holy Ghost,' after which the lapsed masses may be reclaimed and dead souls in the Churches revived."

IRISH NOTES.

THE late Mr. John Thompson, Strabane, co. Tyrone, has bequeathed to the Presbyterian Church, for various purposes, the sum of £750.

With the view of consolidating united Christian work in Ireland, the Dublin United Services Committee has been amalgamated with the Evangelical Alliance.

Evangelistic services have been held in Barrackton Chapel, Cork, during the past week by Rev. S. T. Boyd, B.A., and others. Similar services have just been held in Durrus, Bantry, Drimoleague, and Skibbereen, co. Cork, by Mr. G. B. Millar, of the Faith Mission, Glasgow.

Two Presbyterian missionaries — one to China and the other to India—are to be sent out immediately. The Chinese Government has at last paid over the indemnity to Dr. Greig for the outrage perpetrated upon him about two years ago, when he was left for dead by a mob who had attacked him.

Two open-air services were held in Cork on Sunday week, one being quite orderly and successful, the other much disturbed by a band of boys, who hustled the speakers, pelted them with mud, seized a Bible and burned it, and by their noise prevented a large and apparently a willing crowd from listening to the sweet Gospel story.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

MR. J. J. SIMS, an evangelist from America, has been addressing large audiences in Glasgow, speaking sometimes on Gospel themes and sometimes on prophecy.

The Shop Hours Act would seem to be a dead letter in Glasgow, as in other towns, for girls in fruit shops are said to work from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., with no going out to meals, except on one night a week, when they leave at seven, whilst the Saturday closing hour is often twelve.

The oldest minister in the Free Church, Rev. John Thomson, of Greyfriars Church, Aberdeen, died a few days ago at the advanced age of ninety-one; the death is also announced of Rev. Finlay Macpherson, of Tarbert, who was for a time secretary to the celebrated Dr. Chalmers.

The Gospel Training College, Dunoon, continues to grow. The principal, Rev. Duncan Macgregor, regrets to have been able to entertain only a few of the applications recently made, but those who wish to enter at the beginning of the classes, early next year, should make immediate application.

The Glasgow Lodging-House Gospel Union have had a very successful year of work. The union carries on evangelistic meetings in eight lodging-houses every Sabbath and mission work in two halls in the slums. It also gives free dinners to poor children and maintains rescue work among the fallen.

The question of the unemployed is exercising the minds of many, especially in the large towns. In Paisley those out of work have paraded the streets, and sent deputations to the magistrates, who have now employed some of them in the public quarries and otherwise. In Dundee, the Charity Organisation Society have resolved to make an attempt to raise £2000 to relieve the distress in the city during the winter.

On Sunday, Dec. 10, the students' meeting in Edinburgh was addressed by Major Susie Swift, of the Salvation Army, editor of All the World. In an address of remarkable power she described her undergraduate and post-graduate experiences up to her conversion. The astonishing vigour with which she dealt with the phases of infidelity, the clearness with which she set forth the plan of salvation—indeed, the scientific manner in which she treated her whole subject, and not least, the tender sympathy with which she addressed herself to those who were in religious difficulties, quite took her hearers by storm.

Dr. Newman Hall closed a twelve days' mission at Morningside, Edinburgh, by three services last Sunday, at the U.P. Church, the Congregational, Free Church, and U.P. uniting in the effort. Many professed discipleship and asked for prayer. Rev. John Mathieson, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Hampstead, who had a large share in promoting the mission, was taken seriously ill at its opening, and on the day of its close worshipped in the "House not made with hands," lamented by all who knew him during half a century. a faithful and affectionate minister of Christ.

"WORK AMONG THE GIPSIES" is a little book, in which Mr. Stanley Alder gives an account of his twelve years' labours among Romany outcasts. Though possessing no literary form, these simple records will have an interest for those who feel for the gipsies in their ignorance, and desire to promote their evangelisation. 1s., post free, from the author, Lucas Green, Chobham, Surrey.

The Message of the Bells.

A TRUE TALE OF CHRISTMAS.

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S. Ed.

I.

The snow had been falling steadily for hours on dingy East London, transforming with its magic mantle the "Joyless City" until the prevalent squalor had been draped in a heavy garment of unsullied purity. The snowfall had been too heavy and too recent to be as yet churned into mud in the roadway of the narrow streets of Shadwell through which I was passing. Moreover, it was still early on Sunday morning, and the traffic was small. Only here and there on the pavements were some deep footmarks left by a few early passengers hastening on their way.

It was the morning of Christmas Eve and also Sunday. The next day, Monday, would be the great Christian festival, when the Church at large would rejoice in commemorating the birth of Him who became a little Child on earth, the Son of a poor woman, that He might win us back to our Father in Heaven.

But no one seemed to have noticed a little half-clad form crouching on the wide steps of a doorway hard by. For there sat a girl, with head bent over her knees, apparently asleep from sheer fatigue and exhaustion, while on the ground, close to her stockingless feet, was a small broken box, whose contents proclaimed the child to be a street vendor of lights.

How long had she sat there all alone, so wearily, the very picture of despair?

Surely, she was noteworthy! Here, eighteen centuries after the great Birth-Day, in the open street of a Christian city, lay this poor Waif Child, even poorer than He had ever been, the type in her misery of many more as desolate and forlorn as herself, for whom apparently the Church of Christ had no message of pity or of love!

The cold was intense. The girl was only thinly-clad in the poorest garments, while head and feet were almost bare, her limbs looking blue and stiff with cold. I stood surveying her closely for only a moment, and then, touching her gently, I said: "Come, little one, wake up and tell me who you are?"

She roused herself wearily, and with a start she looked up—oh! with such a white face, while her poor eyelids were red and swollen. She almost staggered to her feet. "Where do you live, dear? How long have you been here in the cold? Why don't you go home, my poor child?" was the substance of my first inquiries. But she was clearly half-frozen, and too hungry to talk, and her answers were almost unintelligible. "Come with me," I said, "and have some breakfast; then you can tell me all about yourself."

She took up her box slowly, very slowly, and we moved off to Stepney Causeway, where our first little Infirmary was then opened.*

II.

Mrs. Lark, a bright, winsome, warm-hearted little woman, was then the Matron of our Hospital, and in her time, as ever since, my poor wayfarers received the heartiest and most loving of welcomes on coming under my roof. I consigned my little Waif—for such I guessed her to be—to the care of this kindly woman, to whom I briefly mentioned the circumstances under which I had found the child, and then I quickly retraced my steps to keep the engagement which had brought me out so unusually early.

I was to breakfast that morning with a family living at South Kensington, at the house of General D————, an old Indian officer, recently retired from the service, who was a friend of mine of many years' standing. A household of charming children, sons and daughters of various ages, always greeted me there with the cheeriest of welcomes, and made me feel at once at home. After the morning meal, it had been arranged that I was to accompany them to Divine service, and subsequently, in the adjoining school-room, to address a large audience of happy children, the boys and girls of wealthy families near, on the subject which lay closest to my heart—"Work for Christ among the Homeless Waifs and Strays."

I reached the hospitable dwelling of my friends quite half-an-hour behind time, to find that they had waited breakfast for me. Three of the girls were at the window, eagerly on the look-out for their belated guest. The moment they saw me down the street, they disappeared from the window to show themselves at the widely open door. To rush down the steps, seize my hands, and drag me in, was the work of a moment. Of course, I was overwhelmed with enquiries as to why I was late, and if anything had happened? I replied mysteriously, "Yes; something very interesting has happened. In fact, I have been busy from an early hour this morning getting a Christmas present for you all and taking it home!"

This answer, as may be imagined, did not tend to allay the excitement; but I shook my head in response to further eager inquiries, and said: "You must all be very patient; folks do not get their Christmas gifts on Christmas Eve, and you must wait awhile for yours."

"A LITTLE HALF-CLAD FORM CROUCHED ON THE WIDE STEPS."

III.

The meal was a cheerful one, and enlivened by ceaseless chatter from the youngsters. Amid it all, however, my thoughts would wander from the happy folks surrounding the breakfast table, back to the narrow street in Shadwell, and to the poor wee damsel whom I had taken to our Hospital that very morning.

Suddenly the two youngest children of the group announced for our benefit that they had been awake ever so soon, that morning, imagining that the bells they had heard calling to early Church service were Christmas Bells. The others laughed at the idea of hearing a Christmas peal on the morning before Christmas Day!

Kitty, the youngest, said she had been trying to think what the bells were saying, for nurse had told them, only the night before, that "Christmas Bells always had a message to give, or a story to tell, to those who had heard them chime."

"Bells cannot speak, can they?" incredulously asked Maud, the next oldest, looking to me for an answer.

"Oh, children, do be quiet for a while, and let our friend have some breakfast," interposed a gentle, motherly voice close by, and my questioners seemed somewhat abashed for a moment; but I encouraged the young delinquents by replying:

"Oh, yes; bells do indeed talk to us, if only we can hear them aright, and Christmas bells often have very interesting tales to tell. In fact, I think I know what the bells, which you heard this morning, were saying, for I heard their story down in Shadwell on my way here."

After that, it is needless to say there was farewell to all hopes of quietness. In fact, it was quite a hubbub, which I had to subdue by firmly saying:

"No, I can tell you no more at present; you must wait patiently until we reach the school-room; then I will explain, but really now, I must eat my egg:—thank you, I will have a little more coffee."

Breakfast over, we proceeded to church, filling two large pews with our own party. It was a helpful, quiet sermon that we listened to; the old familiar story of the Heavenly Child was simply related, and lessons of love and charity to all men were enjoined. The wants and sufferings of the poor were referred to as an incentive to unselfishness and sympathy, and, glancing I thought in my direction, the preacher said, "Which of us has not sometimes thought in our heart, 'Oh had we been alive when Christ was here in human form, how gladly would we have been among his worshippers! How our hands would have ministered to his wants! With what joy would we have succoured Him!' And is He not here with us still in the person of His poor? Can we not serve Him in serving them? See the number of neglected children who still throng our streets, and who are growing up without love or sympathy! Ah! did we really love the Saviour, as we often profess to do,—did His words abide in our hearts and memories, our eyes would be opened to see the Holy Christ-child in the person of every little forlorn Waif of the Streets, and we would once again hear in the Christmas chiming of the bells, which are to gladden us all on the morrow, His voice saying: 'Whoso shall receive one such Little Child in My Name receiveth Me.'"

Then the preacher drew attention to the notice which had already been given out of an address to be presently delivered in the adjoining school-room by one who worshipped with them that morning, and whose work among Orphan and Waif Children he desired heartily to commend to their sympathy.

IV.

This very appropriate service concluded, we quietly went off to the schoolroom. Kitty and Maud each held me by a hand, but in perfect silence, till we reached the door, when Kitty pulled me down to whisper in my ear, "Oh! I know now what the bells were saying this morning, and what the Story was which you heard before you came!"

As we entered the schoolroom I saw it was crowded by young and old, for parents had, in many cases, accompanied their children. I spoke with much liberty, describing how I was led by God to begin this work, and giving narratives of some Waif Children who had been rescued from suffering and from danger, and brought into the Homes. Towards the close I related my adventure of that very morning, and told them of the poor wee maiden, who, just then, was safe in Mrs. Lark's kind care. I could not, of course, say anything of the child's history, which, indeed, I did not yet know; so I only described her pitiful condition. I concluded by giving all present a hearty invitation to the Homes, and added, "If any here would wish to spend Christmas evening in our East End Home, perhaps I could arrange to let them see the little Waif, whom, I feel sure, God has sent me as a Christmas gift to care for and cherish, and to share with others."

About a dozen spoke afterwards of their intention to pay a visit Eastwards; and the offertory showed how generous was the interest which had been evoked in the hearts of all by what they had heard.

"So that little girlie is Our Present—that is what you were taking home for us this morning," ejaculated Maud as we were going homewards; while Kitty said, "Oh,—I am so glad that you found the poor thing and took her to the Infirmary, and I am so glad you were late for breakfast!"

I steadfastly resisted the friendly pressure exercised to induce me to return to the house of my-

* Rebuilt in 1887, the Jubilee Year, and ever since somewhat grandiloquently styled "Her Majesty's Hospital for Waif Children."

hospitable entertainers for luncheon, for indeed the truth was I was myself most anxious to get back quickly to learn what I could concerning my little Waif girl of the morning.

"We will come to see you to-morrow afternoon. Mind, we will ALL come. It is our present, you know; you told us that at breakfast," were the last words I heard as, having said "farewell," I turned Eastward, homeward bound.

Reaching the Infirmary about three o'clock, I heard that the weary child was then in a sound slumber. Mrs. Lark informed me that at first she had been thoroughly alarmed on the girl's behalf, as it seemed impossible to get her really warm, or to induce her to take nourishment. A very warm bath was administered; then the visiting surgeon was called in, and he ordered small doses of hot soup to be given at short intervals. The child was put to bed, and became very feverish and restless, tossing from side to side and unable to close her eyes, although too dull and dazed even to understand what was going on. But, about half-an-hour before I called, she had fallen asleep, and this gave hopes of good results. Mrs. Lark told me she had not yet been able to ask her anything, the child being far too exhausted to talk. All the evening she continued to sleep peacefully, and when I looked in again at ten o'clock that night, she was still in profound slumber, from which we did not venture to arouse her.

V.

The next day was Christmas Day, and my time was fully taken up until the afternoon. There was, first, the usual morning Special Service for my boys, and then arrangements for their public dinner at two o'clock, at which many of our friends were present as spectators. So that it was past four o'clock when I went across to the Infirmary, as I had promised. In Mrs. Lark's room, sitting on the hearth-rug in front of the fire playing with a kitten, was a young girl, whom, in spite of the great change in her outward appearance, I at once recognised as my little street Waif. She approached me somewhat shyly at first, but she soon gained confidence and began to talk. Her name, she said, was Amy——, and I interested her by saying I had a little niece of the same name in far-away India. Then, sitting on my knee, she began to tell me in simple words enough of her little history to put me on the track of further investigation for myself. The substance of what I thus learned and pieced together from Amy's words was as follows:—

Amy had no brothers or sisters, or any living relative that she knew of. She could not recollect her father, though she had heard her mother talk of him as being kind to her; but he died, she said, a long, long time ago. Her mother lived in Star-street, Shadwell, where she also died after having been ill some weeks. On her death, a woman, one of the neighbours in the house, a Mrs. Broker, took charge of Amy, and had kept her after a fashion. But the woman was evidently a very brutal creature, for Amy said she had been regularly sent out clad as I found her yesterday, often without food, to beg in the streets under the pretext of selling matches. If she did not bring in at least 4d., she was cruelly beaten and sent to bed without any supper. On the previous Saturday night she was afraid to go indoors, as she had no money, and Mrs. Broker was always at that part of the week violently drunk. So Amy had wandered disconsolately about the streets during the whole of that bitter night, hungry, cold, wet, and in despair. A man keeping a street refreshment stall had pitifully given her a piece of cake and a hot cup of coffee, and I feel convinced that this alone had kept her alive. Towards morning she walked down High-street, and, feeling too exhausted and weary to go farther, sank on the step where I found her, and where she must have soon been frozen to death but for my providential discovery.

At the time of which I write there was no Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and many little people who had been ill-treated as Amy had been, I had myself rescued from the toils. In a very real sense, the Homes under my care had always done valuable work in preventing cruelty to the helpless Waifs and Strays found in the streets and lodging-houses of the Metropolis. To the poor girl I only said, "I am sure God sent me to find you yesterday morning, Amy; I think He wants you to be one of His own little girls. Would you like to stay with me always?" Tears filled the sensitive child's eyes, as, holding my hand in hers, she said, "Oh! please don't let me ever go back to Mrs. Broker; I will be such a good girl if I may stay with you." Gently reassuring her on this point, I left to obey a somewhat imperative call from below. My small boy-porter was bursting with importance. He announced that there was "a lovely omblibus below, such a big 'un, and a whole lot of young ladies and a ole gentleman, and they want you, sir, and they have got heaps of nice things in that there omblibus, and they are all awaitin'."

I rightly guessed who my kind visitors were, and soon I was with my hosts of yesterday, trying in vain to get in a word edgeways amid the excited questionings of the younger members of the group. But the end of all things comes to those who wait, and at length I was able to march my visitors off to the schoolroom, where we had a Christmas tree and speeches, with cheering enough at intervals to make any ordinary person deaf.

Having first sent Mrs. Lark word to expect us, a little later on I quietly conveyed nine of my guests to her cosy room, and there, sitting around the fire, they made the acquaintance of my poor Christmas Waif. She was very pale and timid, and there were dark circles round her eyes, which still bore traces of inflammation; and she looked so young and frail that it was difficult to realise that she could have survived her terrible night's exposure to the bitter weather in the merciless streets.

My guests had to return to Kensington to dinner, and soon took their leave; but not before Kitty had thrown her arms impulsively about Amy's neck and cried, "Oh, you DARLING! we will all make you so very happy, for you know you are our VERY OWN Christmas present, and we are going to save up to buy you nice things, and you are never to go back to that horrid woman any more, NEVER!"

VI.

THAT pledge so impulsively given was faithfully redeemed. On their return home a family council was held, and next morning I received a letter which set my mind at rest. General D—— undertook, on behalf of himself and his children, the entire future expense of Amy's maintenance. I was to bring her up in one of our Homes, and now and then she was to be allowed to go and see her benefactors. The daughters of the family undertook to make all her clothing with their own kind hands.

And thus it came to pass that the Bells of that Christmas had told a true tale, for our Lord had surely sent to my door this fair young child, so desolate and unhappy, to be brought up in His faith and fear, and was already using her to awaken generous feelings and tender love in the hearts of others.

* * * * *

BUT some of my readers may perhaps say: "The case you describe is one of a great many years gone by. Now you cannot possibly find such neglect and suffering."

Would that it were so! Alas! the records of my work prove only too sadly that every week cases of almost as terrible misery, among the Children of the Streets, are brought to light. Let a single example from the newspaper press of only last December suffice to show that the same lesson may be learned from yet another Christmas story of more recent date.

POOR JANE EAST was only twelve or thirteen years of age, although she looked somewhat older. She was discovered on the 28th of December, in the year of grace 1892, lying bare-footed, frozen dead in a ditch at Walthamstow. The miserable child is stated to have wandered about after leaving her home, owing to ill-usage. Poor little creature! In sheer despair of living, she had turned her face towards the solitudes of the Forest. Cold, added to hunger and misery, had made the burden of existence too heavy for the sad little heart to bear, and, creeping out of the town to this lonely spot, she lay down and died, within the sound of the church bells which, only three days before, had rung out the nativity of the Wondrous Child.

Will not such a case cause the readers of these pages to think lovingly, amidst their own Christmas joys, of the little OUTCAST CHILDREN, who form to-day the great family of nearly FIVE THOUSAND under my care? And will they not try to realise what it means, that every twenty-four hours NINE fresh Waifs are added to that number? "If but our eyes were opened," the preacher told us, "we would see, in the person of every little forlorn Waif of the Streets, the Christ-Child Himself stretching out His hands for our pity, and our love." Who among us has the open eyes to see the Divine Visitant, even in humblest guise? And which of us has the heart to feel and the hands to succour? Surely, Eye and Heart and Hand will not be lacking in this great service to Christ and to his Little Ones! Verily the yet unrescued sisters of little Amy and of poor Jane East have not ceased out the land. Some folks there be who close their eyes and WILL NOT see them; but within a rood of every Church door, within sight and sound of every city dwelling, are to be found those pitiful, appealing little representatives of the Great Master!

Let no one say, therefore, that the necessity for this Divine work of rescue is gone by; but let the Christmas Bells of 1893 carry their beautiful Message to all my readers, a Message with Memories of Pity to touch the Heart, and with impulses of Service to quicken the fingers. So shall the great festival of the Christian Year bring with it a glad and joyous word of cheer to the perishing Little Ones, homeless in our streets, houseless at our doors, friendless amongst our millions.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

[ADVT.]

ROYAL ALBERT HALL,

SOUTH KENSINGTON.

Will all Readers of "The Christian" kindly note that

In connection with THE YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE

A Children's Entertainment

WILL (D.V.) TAKE PLACE IN THE ABOVE HALL, ON THURSDAY AFTERNOON, 11th JANUARY, 1894.

Her Royal Highness

PRINCESS MARY, DUCHESS OF TECK,

President of the YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE,

Has graciously consented to open the proceedings at THREE O'CLOCK.

THERE WILL BE NO SPEECHES.

The whole Arena will be occupied by

DR. BARNARDO'S WAIFS,

who will do their best to minister to the enjoyment of the audience. There will be Christmas Romps, Music by a Choir of SIX HUNDRED VOICES and by young instrumentalists, Naval Drill, Musical Movements, Fire Escape, Limelight Pictures, &c., &c.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS will receive Purses from Companions for the funds of the League of not less than Two Guineas each. Those who intend to offer purses should inform Miss Norton at once.

Tickets of Admission Now Ready:

Balcony, 1s.; Stalls, 2s.; Boxes, per Seat, 3s. 6d. to 5s.; Entire Boxes, seating from 5 to 12 persons, 15s. to £2s. 2s.

Please apply for Tickets AT ONCE, WITH REMITTANCE, to (Miss) RACHEL NORTON,

Secretary of Y.H.L.,
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under:—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.
Remittances to be sent as above.

 Will our subscribers please note that receipts are not now sent for subscriptions to The Christian, except when specially asked for, and in such cases a postcard should be enclosed with remittance, or an extra stamp to cover postage of the receipt.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. George Douglass, D.D., Principal of the Free Church College, Glasgow.

As we have to go to press with this issue early, in view of the Chistmas holidays, late communications cannot be acknowledged or inserted.

☞ We beg to call attention to the Special Announcement made above with reference to Subscriptions for the ensuing year. It will greatly facilitate our work at this season if friends will kindly note the particulars.

☞ Will those of our readers who receive The Christian direct from the Office by post, and who have not recently communicated with us, kindly send their present full postal address; especially Missionaries and others in foreign countries.

A correspondent and a generous contributor to our Donation List writes as follows:—"I venture to suggest that secretaries of societies sending out appeals should enclose their balance-sheets. An extra number of these, which are almost always on a single page of the report, could be thrown off for the express purpose of accompanying appeals."

As the year closes much examination of business accounts will be made, many old partnerships will terminate, many new ones be formed. There will be heart examination on the part of Christians. How far have we honoured, how far grieved the Holy Spirit of God? To honour Him is to yield to his teaching and impulses; to grieve Him is to be inattentive to his word and to be slow to move in the direction towards which He impels us; to say nothing of any acts of positive and wilful disobedience by violating express precepts. How far have any of us come short of what we might have been by our treating the suggestions of the Spirit in our hearts with coldness and neglect? And, instead of "stirring up the gift that is in us," have we "quenched the Spirit"? Are our gifts of service all failing because we have not yielded ourselves, body, soul, and spirit, unto God? May the new year be a year of walking in the Spirit.

To his ordinary duties Dr. Parker has lately been adding the work of an evangelist. His visits to Birmingham, Liverpool, and Southport are said to have been productive of much good. He does not seem to work on the old lines, but rather aims at teaching, inspiring, and strengthening those who are at work. If he can accomplish that, he will do an immense service. Customs change with changing times. In the twenties and thirties London used to have the assistance for weeks together of preachers from the provinces. James Parsons, John Angell James, William Jay, used to come and preach at Whitefield's Tabernacle and Rowland Hill's Surrey Chapel. These were stirring occasions when conversions were sought and gained. James Parsons had some remarkable accounts, which we have heard from him in conversation. When London spares Dr. Parker for the provinces, could not the provinces spare some evangelists for London?

From the recently-published "Life of Dean Stanley" it appears that he preached his first sermon at Bergh Apton, a village near Norwich, of which his father was rector, while at the same time Bishop of Norwich. The comments of two old women who were overheard discussing the sermon are suggestive. One said, "Well, I do feel empty like." The other replied, "And so do I; that young man didn't give us much to feed on." It is worth a preacher's while to ask himself when he looks over his notes or his manuscript before he goes to preach, "Is there really something here for a hungry soul to feed on?" The congregation should be always in his eye and in his heart. As a contrast to Dean Stanley's first attempt, we may name Alfred Vaughan, the accomplished author of "Hours with the Mystics," who counted it one of the glories of his ministry, that poor and illiterate persons derived as much profit from it as anyone.

A Bordeaux working man is reported to have prayed in a mission meeting:—

O Lord! demolish the churches, knock down the chapels, so that thy servants may be obliged to descend into the streets, and preach the Gospel to the crowds!

The prayer may, in some cases, be necessary, where ministers and hearers practically make the door of the building not so much an entrance from without as a barrier to entrance. Isolation and exclusiveness easily encompass a congregation which has walled itself in. Buildings are absolutely necessary in cold, wet climates, but they are sometimes dangerous competitors to the vital work of saving souls.

One chief defect of the Salvation Army is often said to be the want of Bible teaching, and we think there is much truth in the remark. But is not the same want found elsewhere? Take a hundred ordinary church-members, and how many of them could write an intelligent account of any book of Scripture? Would ten be able to give an adequate account of the Atonement, or of any other Scripture doctrine? Would ten be qualified to instruct a Bible-class, or to tell an anxious soul the way of salvation? How many, after having been professing Christians for ten years, know any more about the Bible than they did in the first year after their conversion? If a "soldier" left the Salvation Army in order to get grounded in Scriptural knowledge and spiritual intelligence, whither should he go? Systematic theology is one thing; systematic Bible instruction is quite another. College training, judged by its results, does not always teach men to teach others the Word of Life, nor train them to train others in preaching the Gospel or in winning souls.

Meetings for Bible-reading, conducted by a wise and well-instructed leader, are an indispensable means of grace. They are always well attended, for babes desire the sincere milk of the Word, and young men in Christ hunger for the solid food. The only antidote for the shallow scepticism of this time is the good seed, the Word of the Kingdom.

If ox and ass plough together the ox must accommodate itself to the ass; the ass cannot rise to the level of the ox. When the sons of God chose wives of the daughters of men, the offspring was not Godly, but fleshly and worldly. In the mixture of natures vitality is lost; hybrids cannot generate. Nature and history alike contradict the fictitious notion that falsehood can be leavened with truth, sin with righteousness, or fallen human nature with the Gospel of God. God does not patch the worn-out garment nor put the new wine of the Kingdom into old wineskins. In Christ a new creation. God will make all things new.

Being convinced that there are "tens of thousands of people in London and elsewhere of the Nicodemus class, who must be helped under the shadow of the evening," Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, the well known Wesleyan Methodist minister, has opened chambers in the West End, where anybody in spiritual need may be seen by appointment. Christian ladies and gentlemen of experience, who have leisure at their command, will help, and cases will be followed up by correspondence or visitation as may be desired. Many ministers hold themselves in constant readiness to do precisely this kind of work, and probably some will follow Mr. Sarjeant in publicly announcing their willingness to visit or be visited by anxious inquirers. Mr. Sarjeant's newly opened chambers are at Nicholas House, Beaumont-street, Marylebone.

Do we ever give a thought to the tremendous cost we are paying for many of our modern improvements? Take the working of our vast railway system. To say nothing of Sunday travelling, and its demoralising effects, look at the enormous night traffic, which takes men away from home, from their churches, and from the religious duties and privileges they might otherwise enjoy. When a Christian railway workman is put on night-work, all his life is turned upside down. He cannot be with his family, or go to his temperance meeting, or join in efforts to evangelise his neighbourhood. We know of a case in which a man who had been a pattern, became, by this "night-duty," utterly lost to the Church. When we so loudly boast of our "advance," we should do well to say—"At what cost are we obtaining it?"

While in the United States there is a resolute and patient effort being made to purify the Civil Service from corruption, we in England, according to The Investors' Review, are actually suffering from something quite or almost as bad. Speaking of "guinea pig" directors of companies, it says:—

The greatest nursery of the guinea-pig species of director is, when all is said, the House of Commons. Who does not know some being of this cast, the loud-tongued brawler, the impudent liar, a simulator of patriotism, a suborner of the electorate, a cut-purse with no shred of conscience, a designer of fraudulent prospectuses, a concocter of false balance-sheets, distinguished, perhaps, for his "piety" and works of charity done in public? Through them, more than through any class of person, the City has become a hot-bed of thieves.

Let the churches and the House of Commons see to this. There always have been men who made "godliness a way of gain," and the church's only defence against them is the cultivation of an intense spiritual life, whose pure atmosphere they cannot endure. The House of Commons must act out of self-defence. The Inspector-General in Bankruptcy reckons our annual national losses through unworthy companies at twenty millions sterling, and for this the guinea-pig directors are mainly responsible, and the possession of M.P. at the end of their names gives them their position. It is at the corrupting and demoralising influence of all this that we are concerned.

When William George Ward and John Henry Newman entered the Roman Catholic Church they did so in the hope of reaching an abode of ecclesiastical peace, where the differences and contentions of Protestantism would never be heard. They professed to have found it; but they were easily satisfied. They themselves were never agreed on the point as to what was the infallibility of the Pope; one thought it was in one sphere and sense, but from this his friend dissented. Newman placed it in the Church; Ward said Christianity was the Pope. Hence the two friends became estranged. In the abode of peace Dupanloup assailed Veuillot (an extreme Papist) in France, while Newman had a controversy with Bishop Ullathorne in England. We can well understand why his biographer should say of Ward: "While his Catholic controversies made him ill, his meetings and arguments with his metaphysical friends and enemies were among the most effective tonics when he was ill or depressed."

A false religion or a debased form of a true religion always tends to make men irreligious. The wayward and corrupt heart of man may refuse to embrace the truth, but it never fails to loathe hypocrisy, real or unconscious. Hence the irreligion on the Continent, where Rome has had the nations under her teaching for centuries. "The Romish bishops in France lament that more respect is shown to religion in Protestant England than in their own country." It is nothing but absolute loyalty to Christ that can win the people.

While the prevailing spirit of the times is tolerant, and favourable to the widest liberty of thought, the religion of the Vatican remains unchanged. Its dogmas are as rigid and unbending as ever, and its claim to be the only true ark of salvation as imperious and exclusive as in any past era of its history. There is no change in its assertions as to priestly authority, auricular confession, purgatorial fire, or any other similar perversions of truth, or figments of error. Its appeal is no more to the Word of God to-day than in days gone by, nor does it any more permit its votaries to read for themselves the revelation God has given. Why, then, should its growing hold on the minds and hearts of men be viewed with less concern, or resisted with less earnestness of testimony and protest than by our fathers, who died at the stake rather than yield to it?

M. Narbel is giving a course of lectures in the University of Lausanne, on the history of Christian Missions, which raise and discuss some most important questions. For example, How can we introduce Christianity among the heathen without our civilisation injuring them? The Christianity is good and only good, but it is carried by messengers who represent our civilised life, our modes of eating, clothing, housing ourselves, etc., etc. We create new wants, and a new world full of temptations and dangers is opened to the heathen. Over and above these things, which perhaps experience and common sense can easily regulate, there come the dangers from the greedy trader, who follows in the missionaries' wake, who will sell his "fire-water" and gunpowder even if it kills all the natives off, and ruins all honest trade for the future. Then, again, we are in danger of insisting that in every land the natives shall work as hard as we do who live in a temperate climate. Idleness is a vice, no doubt, but the quantity of work to be done should vary with the conditions of the worker. Another point requiring our attention is whether other races are to be doomed to perpetual inferiority; shall they develop in their own way, or must they be forced or coaxed along our way? The time has come when all such matters will have to be definitely faced and settled, and M. Narbel is making his contribution to the settlement.

The mistaken meanings which are often attached to familiar and, one would suppose, easy passages of Scripture, are a marvel. Prince Bismarck, e.g., when speaking to a visitor, of "Germany and the evils of the day," remarked:—

Fortunately for me, when I was very young I learned to repeat the Lord's Prayer, and truly to mean it when I said, "Thy will be done." And this I still say, and so nothing ever really troubles me.

This passive sense of the prayer, which is the sense of the prayer in Gethsemane, seems to be more generally taken as the correct sense than one would suppose. A minister who had been preaching on the Lord's prayer, and expounding this clause to mean the doing of God's will, not the bearing it, was surprised to receive the grateful thanks of several of his friends for helping them to see the passage in quite a new light! Very likely many more passages are in a similar fog.

Rothe says: "Only in our maturer years do we begin to realise what a wealth of meaning lies in the so-called elementary truths of religion, and what an indescribably great thing it is to be really persuaded of them! Then, too, we can understand how persons of outstanding piety have been satisfied with these truths alone." Experience and observation confirm this testimony. Paul, who so well knew Christ, was willing to "count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord . . . that I may know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings." To be really persuaded of the love of God to us, of the value and relation of Christ's death to us, of the constant watchfulness of God over us, of the reality of invisible things, would have, over even the brightest of Christians, a fresh transforming power.

CHILDREN SHOULD ALWAYS BE HEARD, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after anything they would know and desire to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully cherished in children as some other appetites suppressed.—Locke.

"Stir up the Gift that is in thee."

We have been told that Godly clergymen and ministers complain of being overborne by worldly churchwardens and deacons, and that the spiritual element in the churches is thus swamped by the secular. But is not one cause of this, the transference to the "clergy" and "ministry" of the privileges and duties of the people? For the New Testament knows no clergy and no ministry but the whole people of God. The people, the laos, the laity, ARE God's cleros, God's heritage, God's clergy. And the gifts of evangelists, pastors, teachers, are for the express purpose of "perfecting the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ."

But this is exactly what many of the "clergy" and "ministers" fail or neglect or decline to do. The rampant Romish ecclesiasticism which is ritualising and romanising the Church of England, is leavening also the Nonconformist bodies; and instead of training and educating the saints to the work of ministering, the pastors are burdened more and more with doing all the work themselves. A deacon, or other member of the church used to give out the hymns, but this small participation in public worship is becoming obsolete; the so-called laymen sit in their pews and do nothing. Do they love to have it so?

To every one of the Lord's blood-bought and forgiven people is given some grace, some talent, according to the measure of the gift of Christ. And no matter how spiritual, how scripturally taught, a pastor may be, he neglects the chief part of his office if he does not chiefly devote himself to the discovery, development, and training, of the special gift of each member of his flock. Only by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, is it possible that all should come into the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, and speaking the truth in love, grow up into Him in all things who is the Head, even Christ.

Therefore let those pastors who are finding themselves swamped by worldly-minded elders, or business-absorbed deacons, or secularised churchwardens, bethink themselves whether they have encouraged these men to stir up the gift that is in them. For though we are many, we are one body in Christ; and we are everyone members one of another; and we each have gifts differing according to the grace given to us. And let each member bethink himself that he is responsible to minister his gift; if it be prophecy, or active service in external things, or teaching, or exhorting, or giving, or ruling, or consoling the mourner, or relieving the sufferer—nothing can absolve him from fulfilling his ministry. He cannot devolve it upon any other, and he dare not allow another to interfere with its exercise. Each one, whether prophet, or pastor, or teacher, or giver, or help, or government, must give account of himself to God.

But possibly the impracticable churchwardens, or elders, or deacons, may have been elected on account of their wealth, or position, or social influence. It is even possible that they may be unregenerate men. If so, only let them that are spiritual each recognise the other's gift and stir up his own, and it will be as it was of old, when walking in the fear of God and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, they were multiplied; and of the rest durst no one join himself unto them.

The Coming Revolution.

In judging of the present age, in its modern developments, two things call for attention—the crop of ideas which mark the present exodus of thought, and, second, the modern trend of events. These should not be taken as synonymous. The ideas at the basis of a movement do not necessarily correspond with the actual direction that the movement takes. The failure to perceive this distinction has been, and more than ever threatens to be, the prolific source of anarchy and woe.

What is the dream from which come the throes of social upheaval, already begun, the presage of a revolution, on a scale such as humanity has never known? We give it in the words of one of the dreamers—

> If every man stood up straight before his Maker, the fear of want, and the lust of gain would become extinct motives, when abundance is assured to all, and immoderate resources impossible of achievement in the New Society we hope to see. Then evil will flit away like a shadow. Equity will leave charity with nothing to do. The decalogue will become nigh obsolete, when there is no temptation to theft, to lie, to kill.

It is obvious that such a dream as this is exceedingly catching. Why should social conditions be so unequal? Why should the many, now that the power is coming into their hands, be servants, slaves, any longer? Why not strike for liberty, fraternity, equality, and turn the dream into fact? Is not this New Society right, and what is power for, if not for the enforcement of what is tantamount to a millennium?

That the idea we have sketched is the dominant force in the various Socialistic combinations of these times cannot be questioned. Anarchists, bad as they are, are not demons. They are misguided men. Nihilists are not monsters; they are members of a fallen race whom Satan leads in his train by the chain of optimistic thought. They have an elysium in view, and for this they battle. If foul means are employed, it is on the plea of necessity, and because the present constitution must be shattered and levelled, that the new order may proceed. By the whisper "Ye shall be blessed," and "Ye shall be as gods—all crowned heads," Satan is marshalling his forces to the war.

It is also obvious, we consider, that at the root of the mischief is disbelief in Revelation. No credence whatever is attached to the history of the fall, or to the outworking of the self-same principles now, and in the race generally, that then found expression. Sinners themselves of a mortal race, the advocates and members of this great international social network are fully confident in the righteousness of their purpose, the equity of their motive, and their high call to overturn until the time is come for them "to make all things new." They are, without any disguise, their own Christ, their own Deliverer, working out, in their social propaganda, and by their Anarchist bombardment, their own salvation.

Indeed, nothing has so much struck us, in the perusal of the literature of this movement, as the self-sufficiency that is breathed through it all. The assumptions which are characteristic of Socialism, and which, like axioms, lie beyond the sphere of debate, are man-exalting in the highest. Even where a measure of respect for Christ is retained and expressed, it is a levelling respect which reduces Him to the democratic herd, or makes Him only as one among many. His Cross is reckoned as nought. In effect they say:—

> His life is our inspiration, not his death. No one can atone for me. No man can atone for you. Every man goes to the Father—not by or through blood—not through Christ's death, or any death, but only in the living way of Christ's life. Every good man's life, in the same way, and for the same cause, becomes an inspiration and a potency in the spiritual enlargement of his fellows.

Such is the democratic view which Socialism, at its best, takes of the person and work of the Incarnate Word. It is, therefore, not surprising to find that the ultimate aim of Socialistic philosophy is to put man in God's stead.

> The solution of the scheme of social reconstruction will be, not by dividing the world between God and Humanity, but by giving God all by giving Humanity all; Humanity being conceived, not as a collection of individuals, but as an organism, in which the Divine Spirit reveals Himself.

In keeping with this, we find that Christ's most holy and unique claims are parodied by Socialistic assumptions, and treated as common property. Hence we are gravely assured that "in man are the celestial host"; and again, "the Father is in Me; I am in the Father, yet the Father is greater than I," are words "not of prophecy, but fulfilment and testimony of the oneness, the alliance of God and men, the world and the universe, a partnership between creation and Creator." The convenience of this assumption is as patent as is its untruth. According to it,

> Man is ordained to be
> God's heir to Deity.

Socialism expounded means that the mind of the race has been slumbering, but now at last is awaking, and, in the kinship of the masses, as contrasted with State and Ecclesiastical privilege, is finding its Divine interpretation. For Socialistic rule, therefore, is claimed a Divine warrant and authority. In Socialism the race reaches its majority,

> And man has destiny by side of God.

We have, therefore, to read the aphorism, "Vox populi vox Dei," with severe emphasis, for Socialism means it. It is the cardinal dogma which is the hinge of the whole movement. The self-consciousness of humanity has dawned at last, and what the grand consummation is, Socialism sees and burns with desire to reach. The vision is "a society in concord from pole to pole—bound up together as earth and heaven are bound together, atom upon atom, each person in it being a unit in a great Catholic Unity, contributing exactly that which the entire unity will determine."

Such is the scheme which in these latter days has been launched, and which is now on its way to fulfil its mission. In our judgment it is laden with portentous mischief. There is dynamite enough in it to shiver the fabric of society. The aim is to be "as gods," the real issue is every spark of liberty crushed out. For the individual unit is only to act "as the entire unity will determine."

In harmony with the self-inflation of this movement, there is no room left either for the fact of sin, or its Divine remedy as expounded in the Cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Sin, in fact, is simply viewed as an obstruction to growth; and by an obstruction to growth is really meant whatever stands in the way of the fulfilment of the Socialist programme. For this reason it is an utter mistake to view the action of the Anarchists as something apart from the organic development of the system in question. The throwing of bombs may be confined as yet to the advanced wing, and may probably in the future be the handiwork of the more daring spirits; none the less is it the logical expression of the creed adopted. If in Socialism man's deity is made actual, why should not his sovereign will clear every obstruction from the field? And if the paradise aimed at is a paradise of force, where individual freedom is sunk for ever, who can wonder that force should be applied in the endeavour to reach it?

It is instructive to note that the Anarchists are not only unscrupulous, but shameless. They glory in the mischief that they work, and confine their regret to the imperfect realisation of their end. The action of the Socialistic deputies of the French Chamber should be pondered by every student of the times. Both their silence and their applause showed where their sympathies lay. It is worse than folly to shut our eyes to the ominous signs of the times, as bodied forth in Socialism. It has a dream, a philosophy, a creed, but these are in defiance of Revelation and the cardinal verities of the Gospel of God. It may name, and does name, the Name of God, and of his Christ, but it is to arrogate the attributes of the one and claim equal authority with the other—sometimes more. It speaks of a Brotherhood, and has much to say of the golden rule; but all the same it is unsparing in its vengeance, and utterly heedless in the destruction that it deals. Order is its end, and anarchy its means.

Let him that hath understanding mark the number of the beast, for it is the number of man, and his number is six hundred sixty and six. Socialism is man, and man's number, for it is man exalted; it is self-worship perfected. There need be no delay now in the advent of the Lawless one, the Anarchic King, for lo! a people, strong and mighty and unscrupulous, awaits him on the earth. But it is for Thy coming, Lord Jesus, we wait, and Thy reign in righteousness. Then shall creation's travail be o'er, and the rest, so long deferred, extend from pole to pole. James Douglas.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

"DID YE RECEIVE THE HOLY GHOST?"

> Paul....came to Ephesus, and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? (Acts xix. 1, 2.)

This passage is made by some the basis of an appeal to Christian believers to receive the Holy Ghost, notwithstanding that Peter said to the anxious inquirers after his first Pentecostal address, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you into the name of Jesus Christ, unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And notwithstanding that Paul says that being justified by faith the Holy Ghost was given unto us, and that if anyone have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his (Rom. v. 8; viii. 9).

Sometimes, indeed, it is admitted that all believers have the Holy Ghost, but the above verse is used to raise the question whether they have received the Spirit for power in service.

But the question of the Apostle was entirely different, and for an entirely different purpose. The Revised Version correctly renders it:

"Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?"

It was a test question to prove whether they had heard and believed the good tidings of Jesus Christ, for if so they would have received the Holy Ghost.

The previous chapter tells us that Apollos had been preaching at Ephesus eloquently and earnestly, but he only knew the baptism of John, and could not preach more than he knew. These twelve disciples had probably received from Apollos all that he could teach them, for they were, by their own testimony, exactly where Apollos was. But when Paul preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection, they believed, were baptized into his name, received the Holy Ghost, and spake with tongues.

It is not rightly dividing the word of truth to make these disciples, who only knew the baptism of John, the counterpart of those who believe in Christ. Those disciples did not know that Jesus had been glorified, and that the Holy Ghost had been consequently given. Their nearest parallels, now in Christendom, are such as have been convinced of and have confessed their sins, but have not received the Gospel of Christ, have not been justified by faith in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead.

It is dealing deceitfully with the Word of God to base any teaching or exhortation on what we know to be an incorrect translation or interpretation. And a faithful steward of the truth of God will take time and pains to find out the real meaning of any Scripture before he undertakes to teach from it. We think that these two principles are important enough to be made a note of. R. C. M.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By the late Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XXXVIII.

THE FOURTH SIGN.

THE LAMB AND THE 144,000 ON MOUNT ZION.

If, after witnessing in the night visions at Babylon, and again by the river Ulai, the prophetic history of the world for 2500 years, the "man greatly beloved" was so affected that, as he wrote, "my cogitations much troubled me—my countenance changed in me—I fainted, and was sick certain days," we may well imagine that the terrific foreview of the great Antichrist who was to overcome the saints, and of the great Apostasy which was exhibited to the beloved disciple in Patmos, must have no less oppressed his spirit.

The scene had closed with the apparent triumph of Satanic subtlety and power; the last head of the wild beast from the abyss exercising supremacy in his name; "all the world" subject to his dominion, and all but a few branded in hand or forehead with his mystic number.

Dark indeed was the view presented, hopeless must have seemed the outlook. But just as in the former series of visions, in the blackest moment (ch. ix. 20, 21) there arose the heavenly light of the angel with sun-bright countenance and rainbow crown (ch. x. 1), so in this series a soul-entrancing scene of glory suddenly bursts upon the seer's eyes, and sounds of such melody as earth had never heard float upon the breeze, and delight his ear.

"And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the Mount Zion, and with Him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps: and they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women: for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God, and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God."

Upon an eminence which he at once recognises as the Mount Zion of psalmist's song and prophet's rapturous gaze, "beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, the city of the Great King," the Apostle beholds—and oh! with what inconceivable delight—the now familiar symbol of his Saviour and Lord, once slain as sacrifice, now living and triumphant, the Lamb—the Lamb of God! There stands, in all the power of an endless life, the Crucified One, the occupant of the throne of glory (ch. v. 6), the object of all creation's adoration and praise.

And He is not alone. An elect and blessed company surround and follow Him. An hundred and forty and four thousand are with Him. On their brows the name of glory shines with heavenly light. It is the Father's name that is written in their foreheads. They are the sons of God—the redeemed from among men—the blood-washed Church of Christ. Satan has not triumphed. The Lamb is yet the victor, and they for whom He died and rose again, the possessors of eternal life, are associated with Him.

The scene occurs in due order. As under the first three signs was shown the pristine glory of the early Church, the efforts of the enemy to destroy her by the persecutions of Pagan Rome, the rise of the great Antichristian power of Papal Rome and its world-wide success, so now in the fourth sign appears a striking representation of the Church militant here on earth, the faithful servants of the living God, bearing the distinctive tokens of their sonship, tokens specially chosen because of their contrast with the claims of the great Apostasy.

The whole Church is presented later on, when the number of the elect has been accomplished, as a city, of which "the length and the breadth and the height are equal"—a perfect cube. A section of that cube—that is, a square—exhibits such a portion of the Church as is at the given moment the subject of vision. Such a section was brought to view in the hundred and forty-four thousand of ch. vii.—the Church, chosen, regenerated, and sealed by God; another section is manifested now in the hundred and forty-four thousand on the Mount Zion, another company, a portion, of the same sacramental host; and specific features are revealed, which at once disclose the characteristics of the redeemed, and the prevailing errors of the time to which the vision relates.

For it was the Church of Reformation days that now appears upon the scene. The Reformation itself was delineated in the glorious vision of the 10th chapter, when, under the symbols of the sun-bright and rainbow-crowned angel, with open book in his hand, we saw the beautiful light of Gospel truth which then shone forth upon the dark ages of mediæval history, and when the effulgence of covenant grace, of justification by faith, and the blessing of a long-closed but now opened Bible brought life and liberty to the nations enslaved in Papal gloom and bondage and foulness of iniquity.

It is the same period to which the fourth sign brings us in this the parallel series of visions; and here it is the leading truths of Reformation times which are brought prominently forward, in contrast to the lies with which the great deceiver had so long deluded the world.

First and foremost is the Lamb Himself. The ecclesiastical Apostasy which had usurped his place and offices, professing to be his vicar, had worn the appearance of a lamb though speaking with dragon's voice (ch. xiii. 11). Here is the rightful occupant of the Mount Zion—"my King upon my holy hill of Zion" (Ps. ii. 6). It is He that liveth, and was dead, and is alive for evermore. "Delivered for our offences," but "raised for our justification." The one accepted sacrifice, instead of the many sacrifices which could never take away sins, and which are being daily offered by a false priesthood upon the thousands of so-called altars of Christendom.

"I protest that in the Mass is offered to God a true, proper, and propitiatory sacrifice for the living and the dead" was, and is still, the blasphemous teaching of Rome according to the creed of Pope Pius IV. That "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many," that He "offered one sacrifice for sins for ever," that by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified," was the doctrine of the blessed Gospel sounded forth at the Reformation. A dead Christ, lying upon the "altar," is the central feature of the Mass. A living Saviour, crucified, but risen, is the glorious presentation of the Gospel. "The Lamb standing on the Mount Zion" was the symbol of this cardinal truth. "The Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" was what the eyes of men were opened to see at the Reformation.

Then, too, was the fact of the Church of Christ being an elect and separate people again brought to light. And in contrast to the mark of the beast, impressed upon all them that dwell on the earth—in other words, the appropriation by and allegiance to the Antichristian power—the dwellers in heavenly places, the 144,000 on the Mount Zion, bear emblazoned on their brows the name of their Father. They have been purchased by his own blood, to Him they belong; they "were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." They are the children of God, and bear his likeness. "Each one resembles the children of a king." And "the high praises of God are in their mouths," for "this honour have all the saints."

> "Loud as thunders to the ear,
> Loud as many waters' noise,
> Sweet as harp's melodious voice," rolls down from the triumphant multitude around the throne the new song. Gladly caught up by the host militant here on earth, its burden is quickly learned, and its joyful accents are echoed back. The circumcised ear alone can hear it, the heart taught of God can alone appreciate its melody. Its sweet tones fall, without response, on the multitudes whom the many voices of the world have beguiled. But "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with gladness, and everlasting joy upon their heads."

The Reformation era, like every time of true revival, was a time of singing. Unlike the Miserere and dirge of Romish services, the melodies which burst forth wherever the glad tidings of the Gospel came from renewed hearts that had received the love of God, told out the joy that could not be repressed. "The time of singing," the singing of "the songs of Zion," had again come.

And what was the new song which they sang? It was the song of redeeming love. "Thou art worthy, for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God," is its keynote. Its Hallelujah choruses swell their triumphant strains in joyful acknowledgment of the wonders of Divine grace; and as the wide circumference of heaven resounds with the praises of the God of Salvation, so here also, though the time may be yet unknown, from the heart of every sinner saved by the blood, springs upward the thanksgiving which it is so sweet to utter, and which is so acceptable on high.

The hundred and forty and four thousand are not only redeemed, they are justified. "They are without fault before the throne of God." The blood that was shed to redeem them has made them "whiter than snow." No stains remain to be removed by masses, by merits of saints, or by fires of purgatory. The blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed them from all sin. The presence of their living Head in glory, their Substitute once upon the cross, their Advocate now upon the throne, is the witness of their acceptance "in the Beloved." "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us"! To his redeemed and beloved, the heavenly Bridegroom saith—oh, marvellous words—"Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." They are "justified by his blood"; they are without fault before "the throne of God."

And they are sanctified too; for "in their mouth was found no guile." This is the accompaniment and consequence of justification. The blessedness of "the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity" consists also in this, that "in his spirit there is no guile." The spirit of holiness has taken possession of him, has renewed his heart, has cleansed his thoughts, has purged his lips. He is a new creation in Christ Jesus. Truth is in his inward parts.

And just as the complete justification of the redeemed was the foundation-truth uncovered at the Reformation, and brought forward in opposition to the imperfect justification which Rome offered by its masses and indulgences and purgatorial sufferings; so is the holiness of the people of God exhibited here in striking contrast to the awful lies and deceptions which, by means of the Apostasy, "Babylon the Great," had taken possession of, and so permeated the millions of Christendom, that the whole world was under the dominion of him who "is a liar, and the father of it." Guile was and is the hellish brand of the Romish system and its followers. "No guile" is the mark of the blood-bought Church of Christ, the bride of the Lamb.

Another most distinctive feature is theirs. A counterfeit purity had been insisted on by Rome. "Forbidden to marry," inculcating the celibacy of both sexes, and immuring them as monks and nuns, she had taught that the highest standard of holiness could only be reached by the rejection of the divinely instituted and divinely blessed state of matrimony. "Promising liberty," they became and caused others to become "the servants of corruption." The foul enormities that disgrace the unhappy votaries of "the Mother of harlots," from the occupants of the Papal throne downwards are matters of history, too notorious to be denied. The grace of God had indeed been "turned into lasciviousness." Refusing God's way of holiness, the treaders in a self-chosen path of professed superior sanctity had fallen victims to the vilest of fleshly lusts, and were perishing in their own corruption.

True virginity, the virginity of heart and life, which Christ demanded for his espoused bride, was not to be thus attained. And so, at the time when the light of the Gospel, so long obscured, again shone forth, the Reformers taught, and taught rightly, that devotion to the Lord did not require, or consist in, seclusion from the world, or enforced celibacy, but in that deep and thorough consecration of spirit, soul, and body, to Him and to his service, which could only find its expression and develop its true activity in those earthly states and callings which the will and word of God had ordained, and which his Providence pointed out. They who there and then served and glorified their Saviour—and not the dwellers in monasteries and nunneries—were the truly chaste. "These are they which were not defiled with women, for they (emphatic) are virgins." For

There are souls that seem to dwell
Above this earth—so rich a spell
Floats round their steps, where'er they move,
From hopes fulfilled and mutual love.
Such, if on high their thoughts are set,
Nor in the stream the source forget,
If prompt to greet the bliss they know,
Following the Lamb where'er He go,
By purest pleasures unbeguiled,
To idolise a wife or child;
Such wedded souls our God shall own
For faultless virgins round his throne."

Finally, they "follow the Lamb withersoever He goeth." They tread in the steps of the Crucified; they "go forth unto Him, without the camp, bearing his reproach." His word is their guide, not the precepts or traditions of men; his example is the pattern and model of their lives to which they seek to be conformed. They are the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb; for this is the designation and character of the Church in all ages (James i. 18).

Thus, with features too plain to be mistaken, do we see in the company on Mount Zion, the Church of Reformation times exhibited in striking contrast to those who, marked by very different tokens, were the followers of the beast, and of the adulteress, who sat thereon. They are the truly justified, the truly sanctified, the true followers of, and associates with, their risen and beloved Lord. They, and they only, can learn the new song, which must be learned here on earth if it is to be sung above in glory. They are the redeemed, the children of the living God.

"With them numbered may we be,
Here and in eternity."

AMONG THE TELEGUS.

Some friends will perhaps remember reading in these columns of a work which the writer was enabled to commence among the Telegus in this district through having been sent out and supported by a single Christian family. Some Christian brethren and sisters who read of this new work very kindly sent some help through the writer's father, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, of Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood. In addition to this, some very kind words of encouragement and interest were received—a means of helping and stimulating missionaries abroad not sufficiently appreciated, perhaps, by friends at home.

A gospel hall and schoolroom in one building has been commenced, as also two preachers' houses; and three rooms to accommodate the boarding department of the Christian Girls' Boarding School, which the writer's wife purposes carrying on, in the hope that it will ultimately be a means of providing some of the Biblewomen so much needed here to assist in the zenana work. So far as funds permit, the young girls of all Christians in reach will be received in this boarding-school, and so trained as to fit them to be useful in the Lord's service, whether He calls them to be Biblewomen or otherwise.

These buildings are all on less than an acre of land, and situated right in the town, within easy reach of all inhabitants, and close to the public offices and police headquarters. We are earnestly desiring that God will give us a certain piece of land joining our present site, in order that we may put up a dwelling-house, as until we can secure this we have to utilise the Gospel Hall as a lodging-place. We have two preachers working with us, men whom we are glad to see growing in desire to win their countrymen to confess Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord.

We are finding many opportunities of proclaiming Christ, even while engaged in the very trying work of superintending our own building operations. The people, especially the pariah class, listen very well, and we have good hope that out of dark Anakapalle's thousands, God will in his grace call many, in the near future, to be members of Christ's body, and instruments to make the Gospel light shine amid the darkness that surrounds this thickly-populated district.

We need more help to finish our building, and get our work into good steady working order, and if any readers are led to a desire to help us here at this juncture, we shall thank God and take courage. Letters or question may be addressed to Pastor Fuller Gooch, of Norwood, or myself,

F. W. Gooch.

Anakapalle, India.

The Evangelist.

A HERTFORDSHIRE FARMER.*

In a quiet lane in Hertfordshire, where stands a small farmhouse, plain and unsightly, there lived a farmer, respectable and very commonplace, absorbed in his cows and his crops. His stolid, unintelligent face told of a mind into which higher matters had seldom found their way.

He fell into bad health, and a visitor, who sometimes called to see him, made hopeless attempts to direct his thoughts to the God before whom he was, apparently, so soon to appear.

He did not object or oppose: he seemed too little to understand even the simplest verses of the Bible to find objections.

He smiled in a bewildered manner, and said, "Haven't no doubt it's all very nice for them as can take it in, but I'm one of those as can't?"

God, Christ, Heaven, the Soul seemed to him, words to which no special meaning attached, and it was a relief to him to take out his large account-book, and describe to his visitor the number and value of the cows he had lost by "that there lung disease."

Again and again the visits ended thus, and the visitor left the neighbourhood sad and discouraged.

Six months afterwards, she received a message from this man. It was thus: "You will be glad to hear that I am saved." She returned to the neighbourhood, and again found herself in the dark little parlour, but like a light in the darkness was the radiant face of the farmer.

"The Lord has healed my body," he said, "and He has saved my soul."

And in answer to the question of his visitor, he thus related the history of that which had befallen him.

"You remember," he said, "how stupid I was when you talked to me last year about the Lord Jesus Christ. It seemed all like Greek to me—couldn't make out what it was you meant me to understand. But I kept thinking, well, there's something or other I must do to be saved—I must repent, or pray, or turn over a new leaf—yet I couldn't make out what. And so I let it alone, and thought, There's some that understands these, and some that don't, and so I must let it be.

"It was a fortnight ago I went to bed, just as stupid and dark as ever I was. It seemed to me that in the middle of the night I awoke—but yet it must have been a dream. For when I seemed to wake, strange to say, everything was gone. There was empty space, and nothing else. And stranger still, I was gone! clean gone! It was a wonder to me that words can't say.

"Then I thought, is there nothing, nothing anywhere? Is there nothing that cannot be gone? And then in one moment it came to me clearly and surely, Christ cannot be gone. Christ is there before his Father, his eyes are upon Christ. I am gone. It is Christ who has undertaken all that I could not do. Christ has satisfied God. He must be satisfied, for his eyes are upon Christ, and Christ is perfect.

"And I had my heart filled with perfect peace and joy, and I awoke calling out, 'I am gone, and Christ is there before God!' And now that I was really awake, I understood it all. I had been thinking before I must do or be this or that. But God had showed me, as it were in a picture, that not only He did not want my doings, but He did not want me. He could only be satisfied with Christ. And it was in Christ only that I was there before Him; not a question of what I was, but of what He is; not a question of me at all, but only what Christ is to God.

"It was a joy to me no words can tell, for not only I saw my sin was gone, but the wretched self that did the sin—the sinful, stupid self, all gone, and Christ only left!"

By this mysterious means had the Lord revealed Himself to the Hertfordshire grazier. From this time his life work was to seek to win souls for Christ. His joy and peace were not the passing excitement caused by a strange dream, but the eternal blessedness caused by belief in the truth thus taught to his soul.

He lived four years in the faithful service of God, and died saying, "There is nothing, nothing but happiness," for to him there was nothing but Christ.

"Do you know which side of the Jordan you are?" a friend said to him some time before his death. She did not expect he would know the meaning of the question.

He looked at her in astonishment. "I don't think," he said, "that you needed to ask me such a question as that. How can I help knowing that I am in the land that flows with milk and honey?"

He, too, had been led into the "land of eternal summer," into the "Paradise of unfading blossoms." For "there is one Body and one Spirit, even as we are called in one hope of our calling," one Jesus, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

* Extracted from Trees Planted by the River. By Frances A. Bevan. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.)

THE UN-CHRISTIAN WORLD.

The Church Missionary Society has done a good thing in sending out in leaflet form the thrilling address given recently by Mrs. Isabella Bishop at Exeter Hall. We hope that all who are moved by compassion at the thought of the sins and sorrows of heathendom will get copies from the C.M.S., Salisbury-square, E.C., and will scatter them freely. We append one or two impressive paragraphs:—

"I think that we are getting into a sort of milk-and-water view of heathenism, not of African heathenism alone, but of Buddhism, Hinduism, and Mohammedanism also, which prevail in Asia. Missionaries come home, and they refrain from shocking audiences by recitals of the awful sins of the heathen and Moslem world. When travelling in Asia, it struck me very much how little we heard, how little we know, as to how sin is enthroned, and deified, and worshipped. There is sin and shame everywhere. Mohammedanism is corrupt to the very core. The morals of Mohammedan countries, perhaps in Persia in particular, are corrupt, and the imaginations very wicked. How corrupt Buddhism is, how corrupt Buddhists are! It is an astonishment to find that there is scarcely a single thing that makes for righteousness in the life of the un-Christianised nations. There is no public opinion interpenetrated by Christianity, which condemns sin or wrong. There is nothing except the conscience of some few who are seeking after God, 'lest haply they might feel after and find Him who is not far from every one of us.' And over all this seething mass of sin and shame and corruption hovers 'the ruler of the darkness of this world,' rejoicing in the chains with which he has bound two-thirds of the human race.

"Just one or two remarks as to what these false faiths do. They degrade women with an infinite degradation. I have lived in zenanas and harems, and have seen the daily life of the secluded women, and I can speak from bitter experience of what their lives are—the intellect dwarfed, so that the woman of twenty or thirty years of age is more like a child of eight intellectually; while all the worst passions of human nature are stimulated and developed in a fearful degree: jealousy, envy, murderous hate, intrigue.

"It follows necessarily that there is also an infinite degradation of men. The whole continent of Asia is corrupt. It is the scene of barbarities, tortures, brutal punishments, oppression, official corruption, which is worst under Mohammedan rule: of all things which are the natural products of systems which are without God in Christ. There are no sanctities of home; nothing to tell of righteousness, temperance, or judgment to come, only a fearful looking for in the future of fiery indignation from some quarter, they know not what; a dread of everlasting re-birth into forms of obnoxious reptiles or insects, or of tortures which are infinite, and which are depicted in pictures of fiendish ingenuity."

DUTCH BAPTIST UNION.—A little report has appeared of the work of this Union and of the auxiliary efforts made by Mr. R. Klickmann, 41, Belvedere-road, Lambeth, to secure English support for those faithful workers. A spirit of revival is reported, and it is stated that in June last there were thirteen associated mission churches (each with two or three outlying stations) in the Union, the largest being Groningen, with 250 members, and the smallest Heeg, with nineteen members. They are all poor—in many cases the poorest of the land—unable to bear their several financial obligations as churches without some extraneous aid. Yet the total amount raised by these native churches during the year was 6247 gulden (about £521).

A Little While.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

In our Lord's last conversation with his disciples before his betrayal and crucifixion, He said to them "A little while and ye shall not see Me; and again a little while and ye shall see Me—because I go unto the Father." Before them was the bloody tragedy on Calvary, and forty days after that his ascension through the vernal air to heaven. They should see Him no more in earthly form. But in another little while—in fifty days thereafter—He should come again by his Holy Spirit in the wondrous baptism of power at Pentecost. He was then to be glorified by the Holy Spirit in the hearts of his disciples. Jesus Christ is with his people now; for did He not promise, "Lo, I am with you always"?

Those sweet tender words "a little while" have deep thoughts in them, like the still ocean at the twilight—thoughts too deep for our fathoming. They breathesome precious consolations to those whose burdens are heavy, either of care, or poverty, or sickness. If the prosperous can enjoy their prosperity only for a little while, neither shall the mourner weep much longer, or God's poor children carry much longer the pains or privations of poverty. The daily toil to earn the daily bread, the carking care to keep the barrel from running low, and the scanty "cruse" from wasting, will soon be over. Cheer up, my brother! "In a little while and ye shall see Me," says your blessed Master, "for I go to prepare a place for you." O the infinite sweep of the glorious transition! A few years here in a lowly dwelling, whose rent it was hard to pay, and then infinite ages in the palace of the King of kings. Here a scanty table and coarse raiment soon outworn; yonder a robe of resplendent light at the marriage-supper of the Lamb. Let this blissful thought put new courage into thy soul, and fresh sunshine into thy countenance.

I sometimes go into a sick chamber where the "prisoners of Jesus Christ" are suffering with no prospect of recovery. Perhaps the eyes of some of those chronic invalids may fall upon this article. My dear friends, put under your pillows these sweet words of Jesus—"a little while." It is only for a little while that you are to serve your Master by patient submission to his holy will. That chronic suffering will soon be over. That disease which no earthly physician can cure will soon be cured by your Divine Physician, who, by the touch of his messenger, will cure you, in an instant, into the perfect health of heaven! You will exchange this weary bed of pain for that crystal air in which none shall say "I am sick"; neither shall there be any more pain. Not only to the sick and to the poverty-stricken child of God do these tender words of our Redeemer bring solace. Let these words "a little while" bring a healing balm to hearts that are smarting under unkindness, or wounded by neglect, or pining under privations, or bleeding under sharp bereavements. I offer them as a sedative to sorrows and a solace under sharp afflictions. "A little while and ye shall see Me," and the sight of Him shall in an instant wipe out all the memories of the darkest hours through which you made your way into the everlasting rest.

"A few more struggles here,
A few more conflicts o'er;
A little while of toils and tears
And we shall weep no more."

These words of the Master are also a trumpet-call to duty. In a little while my post in the pulpit shall be empty; what manner of minister ought I to be in fidelity to dying souls? Sabbath-school teacher, in a little while you shall meet the young immortals in your class for the last time! Are you winning them to Christ? The time is short. Whatever your hands find to do for the Master do it. Do it, Aquila and Priscilla, in the Sunday-school! Do it, Lydia, in the home! Do it, Dorcas, with thy needle, and Mary in the room of sickness and sorrow? Do it, Tertius, with thy pen, and Apollos with thy tongue! Do it, praying Hannah, with thy children, and make for them the "little coat" of Christian character, which they shall wear when you have gone home to a mother's heavenly reward.

Only think, too, how much may be achieved in a little while. The atonement for a world of perishing sinners was accomplished between the sixth hour and the ninth hour on darkened Calvary. That flash of Divine electricity from the Holy Spirit which struck Saul of Tarsus to the ground was the work of an instant; but the great electric burner of the converted Paul has blazed over all the world for centuries. A half-hour's faithful preaching of Jesus by a poor itinerant Methodist exhorter at Colchester brought the boy Spurgeon to a decision, and launched the mightiest ministry of modern times. Lady Henry Somerset tells us that a few minutes of solemn reflection in her garden decided her to exchange a life of fashionable frivolity for a life of consecrated philanthropy. Why cite any more cases when every Christian can testify that the best decisions and deeds of his or her life turned on the pivot of a few minutes? In the United States Mint they coin eagles out of the sweepings of gold dust from the floor. Brethren, we ought to be misers of our minutes! If on a dying bed they are so precious, why not in the fuller days of our healthful energies? Said General Mitchell, the great astronomer, to an officer who apologised for being only a few minutes behind time:—"Sir, I have been in the habit of calculating the tenth part of a second!"

Our whole eternity will hinge on the "little while" of probation here. Only an inch of time to choose between an eternity of glory or the endless woes of hell! And, as a convert exclaimed in a prayer-meeting, "it was only a moment's work with me when I was in earnest." May God help us all to be faithful only for a little while; and then comes the unfading crown:—

A little while for patient vigil keeping
To face the stern—to wrestle with the strong,
A little while to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest-song.
A little while to keep the oil from failing,
A little while faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
We'll haste to meet Him with the bridal hymn.

TABEETHA MISSION, JAFFA.

The report of the Tabeetha Mission, at Jaffa, for the year ending July 31, contains deeply-interesting details of the work carried on under the superintendence of Miss Walker-Arnott. In some introductory remarks Rev. Dr. Alison, of Edinburgh, says:—"Miss Walker Arnott is to be congratulated, not only on having assistants so accomplished and so true to her as Miss Grierson and Miss Milligan, but also on the remarkable efficiency of her four chief native helpers. The three out-schools are important offshoots of the original boarding-house. One is mainly for Jewish girls, a second for Moslems, and a third is more mixed. The instruction given in them is very good, and has to be conveyed with much tact, to avoid collision with the religious prejudices of the parents. The Christian element is kept well in front through it all.

"Katingo's meeting for Moslem women is a remarkable proof of the skill and kindliness with which she does this, as well as all other parts of her work. The three sisters, Maria, Labeebeh, and Fareedah Dahdah, continue to merit the praise which Miss Walker-Arnott gives them. Attention is specially called to the originality and force of character of M. Labeebeh. She is a young woman of remarkable capability. Her energies have during the past year made two new channels for themselves. First of all, she devised a scheme for helping poor Jewesses to a living without injuring them by offhand charity. Through the gifts of a friend in Scotland—supplemented afterwards by others—she was able to furnish them with small stores of wheat which they retailed, bringing back the capital at the end of the fixed time, having meanwhile supported themselves and families. The plan was entirely her own, and has succeeded well.

"She also began a club or class for boatmen and others, to save them from drinking habits, and help them to lay by their earnings. In that, too, she has been remarkably successful, winning the thanks not only of the men and their relatives, but of the Greek priest and others. While educating them in thrift, and helping them to pure recreation, she has taught them the truths of the New Testament, and guided their devotions. If M. Labeebeh were an average specimen of her class, Miss Walker-Arnott's hope of the results of trusting more to native agency would certainly be realised. She is, however, not an average woman, but one who would take a foremost place among women anywhere."

There are some very useful agencies connected with the Institution. The Y.W.C.A. has from forty to fifty members, and the Children's Scripture Union sixty-six. There are several ways in which friends in Great Britain may help the work, and of these details are given in the report, copies of which may be had from Miss E. Walker-Arnott, 24, St. Bernard's-crescent, Edinburgh.

Aggressive Work.—3.

If any feel constrained to engage in this work, and do it systematically, I guarantee they will not be disappointed. They may tire in the work, but never of it, for it grows upon one. "It is a thing of beauty and a joy for ever." Its loveliness increases.

We should, however, always be on the watch for opportunities, as far as we can consistently with our daily avocations. In city life their number is positively legion, but there are times when one feels especially directed to speak to some passing individual. Is not this the voice of the Spirit, and should it not be instantly obeyed?

Once, whilst passing a baker's shop, I felt I must enter and speak to the man behind the counter, although I had never entered a shop for such a purpose before. I found him under conviction of sin, and so glad to unburden himself. I saw him several times afterwards, and he at length found peace, and then persistently preached Jesus to his customers, although it endangered his trade. Ah! how life will manifest itself, whether natural or spiritual, although not always in the same manner, yet I would not give much for the man who can restrain himself from telling others of the Saviour whom he has found.

Upon another occasion I entered a large public building, and spoke to one of the leading clerks about his soul's salvation. He told me he used to be an active worker and preacher, but for five years had been a backslider. He was pleased to talk about eternal truths, and asked me to call any time when passing. I did so occasionally, and eventually he was restored, and began again preaching the Gospel. Have we any right to give up the backslider, however far he may have strayed? He is a son, as the Prodigal was, and, like him, will be brought home weeping.

These are special cases, yet some workers always appear to look for a directing voice or impulse of this description before moving at any time. I find, however, that these are only occasional cases, and all the others ordinary ones, and I don't see why it should not be so.

The many ordinary opportunities are easily indicated. The railway train stops, and tickets are demanded. At once you remark to the other passengers: "I presume we shall not be admitted into the Better Land without a ticket or pass, and the pass will be, 'Ye must be born again. Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. If we have the pass we usually know it, and if we don't know it is a bad sign and we should not be satisfied. 'These things have I written to you that believe on the name of the Son of God that ye may know that ye have eternal life' (1 John v. 13). It is only the knowledge of the present possession which brings joy and peace. Have we all got it?"

Or you enter a pretty full railway carriage, and immediately remark, "I presume, gentlemen, there will not be any railways when we get to heaven?" Someone likely replies, "Hope not." (For unless someone answers it becomes somewhat difficult work, and you can only calmly look through the window.) You ask the man who answers, "Are you going there, sir?" and he replies, "Don't know." Now is your opportunity for making a few quiet home-thrusts.

A correct-looking High Church clergyman entered a rather empty tram-car, and sat opposite me. I handed him a Gospel booklet, entitled, "The Way of Salvation." After looking at it, and then at me, he crossed to my side and said, "Do you consider it wise to hand these to clergymen?" I replied, "Oh, yes; for I find a number of them unconverted, and ignorant of Divine life. Are you saved, sir?"

He had dropped into the trap. He said he believed he was being saved, but not yet saved. I discriminated between instant justification and the walk of sanctification.

He asked me to show him my authority and credentials for preaching, for he could show me his. I said if he would go with me for a few days he would see my credentials, but if his were on paper I preferred not possessing them—that I had God's ordination, and would never accept man's. We talked of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, but, of course, did not altogether agree. Yet although some pretty straight things were said, he shook hands with me when leaving the car.

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

ANTI-VIVISECTION CONFERENCES.

Sir,—May I draw your readers' attention to the National Anti-Vivisection Conferences just held at Nottingham under the presidency of the Bishop of Southwell. The Conferences were most successful, the local Press gave extended reports, and widespread interest was excited by the proceedings. Besides eminent laymen, bishops, and clergy, a large number of medical men gave their names as vice-presidents.

In the letter received from Bishop Barry, expressing regret at inability to leave Windsor, as Canon in residence, he said: "I feel convinced of the paramount importance of keeping clearly before the public attention the main issues of the great controversy in which we are now engaged, and preventing men's minds from being distracted by mere side issues, or overborne by scientific authority, on what is primarily a moral question. I have always felt that when we aim at protecting the just rights of the animals committed by God to our charge, we are also fighting for the spirit of true humanity, and so for the highest moral interests of mankind."

This high standard was prominent in the able papers read by the medical opponents of Vivisection, as well as in the striking addresses of Prebendary Grier and others. The following passages are culled from the medical papers read:—

Dr. A. Wall said:—If experiments on animals were entirely prohibited medical and surgical science would advance much more certainly and rapidly, through the increased attention which would be bestowed on clinical and pathological study, instead of the mind being led astray by the latest alleged triumph of vivisection. Look to its 2000 years of awful agony and torture, 2000 years wherein men and women, as well as animals, have been slowly dissected alive. Has it saved one human life? My answer is an emphatic No. On the contrary, it has forced the medical art, an art designed to alleviate suffering, into partnership with it, and made it appear that the most beneficent of all sciences has sanctioned wholesale murder and mutilation. Very few observations can be made on an anæsthetised animal; yet so much functional disturbance is evoked by torture that the tortured animal is rendered incapable of giving a correct answer upon the laws of its own being. There is a wide divergence of function and structure even amongst allied species of animals. What must be the width of the hiatus betwixt them and man?

Referring to one failure after another, in vaunted "cures," Surgeon-Gen. Gordon said, with regard to anthrax: Inoculation is not only not beneficial, but—with especial reference to England—most dangerous, and capable of producing incalculable mischief. As to rabies and hydrophobia, he said: By the practice of inoculation, there is no proof that hydrophobia can be prevented; but there is proof that the practice itself carries with it a possible danger over and above the risk pertaining to a bite by a rabid dog.

Dr. Berdoe gave instances of experiments (whose details are too sickening for your columns) performed at Cambridge and Strasburg by Dr. Stewart, who says, in a note, they were done under some anæsthetic, or stupefying drug, yet he himself gives instances of ten cases in which curare* alone was used.

Dr. Haughton said: These experiments are gradually converting the old art of healing into a system of corrupting the blood with the most revolting concoctions. Vivisection is homicidal in its results in the past, whilst it shows signs that it is still more likely to be murderous in the future.

Dr. Bell-Taylor exposed the failure of the "cures" for hydrophobia, consumption, brain diseases, etc., and the mockery of talking of anæsthetics for burning, boiling, baking, skinning alive, etc., and ended his exhaustive paper by saying: "The proper study for mankind is man, and if a doctor is to learn his business, it must be at the bedside of his patient. Nature is for ever performing experiments of the most delicate and suggestive kind, experiments which it is impossible for mechanical artifice to imitate or realise, and it is to the careful observation of the symptoms in such cases during life, and to the careful study of the lesions that accompany them after death, that we must look for such advance as is possible in the science of medicine and surgery to-day. That is the true method of study, the only fruitful method; and I am convinced that those who abandon it, in the hope of finding a royal road to fame and fortune by torturing animals, are not only wasting their time and laying up for themselves an old age of remorse, but, like the man with the muck-rake, they are actually turning away from the crown of glory which awaits them in the path of legitimate study."

I find it exceedingly difficult to furnish extracts really satisfactory to myself, from the many papers read at the Conference, as they are all so full of most valuable matter. I trust therefore that your readers will get the papers, which can be had, with any further information that is wanted on the subject, from Mr. B. Bryan, Society Protection of Animals from Vivisection, 20, Victoria-street, Westminster, S.W. Ought we to be content that our money should support vivisection, while we leave to others the decision whether it is a moral or an immoral practice?

May I earnestly commend to your readers the example given us in Holy Writ, "The cause which I knew not, I searched out"?

S. S. Monro.

Alton House, Hampstead.

* Curare only paralyses movement.

ROMANISM IN FIJI.

From time to time, reports have been circulated of a supposed growth of Romanism in the Fiji Islands. A pamphlet issued from the Wesleyan Mission Press, at Bua, entitled, "The Papal Propaganda in Fiji," shows that Popery counts for very little at present in the group. We give some extracts that have an historical as well as controversial interest:—

"In 1835 the pioneers of Methodism found Fiji in a state of heathenism, the descriptions of which have filled all Christendom with horror. But in 1885 the Wesleyan Methodist Church, celebrating its jubilee in Fiji, justly rejoiced in the possession of a thousand churches, in which three thousand native preachers, reading from the translation of the entire Word of God, declared salvation through Christ to congregations of more than one hundred thousand Methodist adherents.

"During almost the same period, the Roman Catholic clergy, though ever dogging the footsteps of Methodist pioneers, had succeeded in forming a church containing (according to their own printed circular) a membership of 6000 persons. Bishop Vidal has recently, through the medium of The Catholic Times, of New Zealand, endeavoured to impress the public with the absurd idea that the strength of Methodism and the weakness of Roman Catholicism in Fiji are both to be attributed to Sir John Thurston's fostering the former and persecuting the latter. Let the reader remember that Sir John Thurston has been Governor of Fiji since 1888, but Methodism on the date of his arrival possessed 104,585 adherents. How, therefore, we ask, can the present Governor be regarded as the occult power which has made Methodism what it is? British Governors from Sir Hercules Robinson to Sir John Thurston have exercised their authority in Fiji for about eighteen years, but for a period of nearly forty years prior to the arrival of Fiji's first Governor, Methodism, amid circumstances the most adverse and perilous, grandly demonstrated to the wide world that she, by the inherent force of her own nature,* could stand alone and fight her own battles."

Thus it would appear that over 94 per cent. of the population are Methodists, and less than 6 per cent. Romanists. As regards education, the pamphlet says:—"Twelve hundred Methodist teachers give a secular education to 31,000 day scholars. These men, though efficiently performing the work of State school teachers, receive no recognition from the Government beyond their being recognised as reliable taxpayers. Probably there is no other country in the world where the education of the people costs the Government nil. We are not Sir John Thurston's or any other man's protégé, and we say this in no spirit of offence, for we have during his Excellency's term received only what all men have a right to expect from a colonial Governor, viz., impartial justice and gentlemanly courtesy. That Roman Catholics have not received the same consideration is without doubt untrue."

[* We confess that we are often pained by the inflated way in which Methodism, as here, is spoken of.—Ed.]

AT IRISH FAIRS.

The following extracts from the diary of two missionaries of the Irish Church Mission (office, 3, Westmoreland-street, Dublin) will show what a good work is being done amongst the Roman Catholic population in some of the outlying districts in the Sister Isle. For obvious reasons the names of the places visited are not given.

"We visited M——, where a large harvest fair, composed almost entirely of Roman Catholics, was being held. We displayed our books in their midst, and between the heavy showers of rain we had many purchasers. Both of us read and expounded various texts to large crowds of people, who paid marked attention. This went on for four hours.

"We went to D—— Market, and after some heavy rains we opened our bag of books. For an hour I spoke freely to an audience of about 200, who remained very quiet during that time. Some musicians and a 'Cheap Jack' then commenced close to us, and kept on for another hour. We afterwards resumed, sang hymns, and addressed them again, having a most blessed time. The power of the Lord seemed to take hold of the people, as we talked of sin and its remedy and justification by faith only. Two priests stood near and listened for some time, and their presence encouraged some roughs, who had to be removed by a Protestant policeman, who was friendly to us. Many appeared deeply impressed.

"We attended a large fair at C——, and stood on a big box against the market-house and sang, read, and preached for about two and a-half hours to a quiet audience of about 300. A Christian man encouraged us by telling us of a Roman Catholic friend of his being very interested in what was preached. Next day we attended the market at D——, where quite 300 heard the Gospel from our lips. When we began an old pedlar near us cried out, 'God deliver us from evil, Amen.' We joined in the 'Amen,' but, of course, in a different sense! For some time he raved away, repeating the Apostles' Creed, and saying, 'I believe in the Holy Roman Catholic Church,' etc., but he soon got tired. Some roughs jeered and disturbed the meeting, but we rebuked them sharply, saying that everyone should respect the Virgin's Son. This had the desired effect, and at the end there was perfect order and attention. Whilst we were speaking a man wrote a few lines on a scrap of paper and handed it to us warning us of danger from a man in the crowd who had stones in his pockets intended for us. We did not mind, but kept on.

"At G—— Fair a large number of Roman Catholics of the most ignorant class living on the neighbouring mountains were present. For two hours and a-half we offered our books for sale in the centre of the fair just opposite a stall where they sold scapulars and other things to the poor deluded country people. We experienced great liberty in preaching to the people, but only about fifty attended. Most of the people passed by expressing disapproval. One man spat in his hand, according to their custom, so as to get a firmer hold of his stick, and showed by his demeanour he meant to attack us, but we stepped up to him and handed him a Douay Testament, which action seemed to completely disarm him.

"We had a wonderful time at S—— Fair on the following day. We hardly know how to describe it. We sold books in the midst of the cattle from 12 to 2 o'clock, then, having space by some of the cattle being driven away, we had a great meeting till 3.30. When singing our first hymn a man interrupted, asking us to read about Christ at Capernaum. I complied, standing on a chair. When reading verses 53 and 54 he got so elated he waved his hat and cried out, 'That's it: that's it!' The crowd increased to about 2500, and we had splendid attention from a large number of Roman Catholics. Only one man grew antagonistic and threatened to punch our heads, but the presence of two policemen quieted him. When we had finished a number of Roman Catholic men stepped forward and bought Douay Testaments."

SETTLE THIS PRINCIPLE in your heart, as that which you will never depart from, that it is better for you to fall into any suffering, than into the least sin. Suffering is but an external and temporal evil; but sin is a universal internal and everlasting evil. —Flavel.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31.—PSALM CXLIII.

Our God is faithful. He will not fail to meet the needs which He has implanted, or to fulfil the promises which He has made. And He is righteous to his Son. His dealings with us are of grace founded on our Saviour's righteous fulfilment of the demands of the divine law. We cannot be justified for aught that there is in us, but we are justified through faith in Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead (Rom. iv. 23 ; v. 1).

The Psalmist was under the heavy persecution of his oppressors (3, 4). His sufferings had been so crushing and bitter that he seemed to have entered already into the shadow of death. His spirit was overwhelmed, his heart desolate.

The remainder of the psalm is filled with cries and prayers, which keep coming back to mind in dark and troubled times. Make haste: my strength is ebbing fast. Hide not thy face: that were the worst calamity of all. Cause me to hear thy loving kindness; my ears are dull of hearing; and it often speaks when I am unheeding. Be my rampart, interposing between my foes and me. And what a prayer is that for teaching and leading! Teachableness is the prime requisite for us all, and, if that is our condition, God will take us into his school, and as we obey Him in some lower respect, He will lead up to higher grades. Note how the attributes of God afford anchorage for the soul! Thy faithfulness: Thy righteousness: Thy good Spirit: Thy loving kindness.

MONDAY, JANUARY 1.—PSALM CXLIV.

In this psalm we pass from the Prayer-Psalms which we have been considering, to the Praise-Psalms with which the Psalter closes. David is the singer (10). Notice how God is, throughout, the theme of his minstrelsy; how he puts his hand on all that God is as his own; "my Rock." Not my goodness, as though it were anything inherent in himself, but my loving kindness (2). God teaches us to fight. If we live near enough to Him, He will indicate to us what strategy to adopt against our great spiritual adversaries. But when He has taught us all, we must still look to Him to subdue the people under us.

Then from the contemplation of God, the Psalmist turns to his own worthlessness and frailty. A breath rising for a moment in the frosty air. A shadow careering quickly across the landscape. Such is man, mortal man. How wonderful that God should notice him. And yet this weak and insignificant creature has the power to draw God out of heaven, as the tiny child to draw its strong father to its side from the ends of the earth. He rescueth, and will rescue.

The psalm closes with a delightful picture of the blessings that will come on the heels of God's deliverances. Sons as vigorous plants, and daughters supporting the honour of the home as the female figure is sometimes made to carry the material structure. The full garners, the multitudes of cattle, the prevalence of peace, none breaking in and no carrying forth. Ah, happy people, whose Protector, Vindicator, Friend, and Saviour, is God Himself.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 2.—PSALM CXLV.

There are three prominent notes in this precious psalm. The Lord is great (3), good (9), righteous (17). Who would not extol Him, lift Him up in loving adoration? Oh soul of mine, recite his praise, bless Him and magnify Him for ever, let no day pass without bearing on its wings its tribute of adoration. "Every day will I bless Thee." The theme can never be exhausted, because his greatness, goodness, and righteousness, are all unsearchable.

Note the prevalence of the words all and ever, especially as David comes to speak of God's tender love. Let tried children of God rest on these blessed words. However hard their lot and many their sorrows, the tender mercy of God is beneath them, over them, and around them. A lunatic used to search through the villages of France for Tenderness! Mothers are tender, friendship is tender, but there is no tenderness like God's. He is nigh. He will uphold. All his works are gracious. He will minister to the needs which He has created. He has only to open his hand, and He satisfies; his heart is always wide open. Before desire has become a cry He will fulfil it unless some higher consideration of our better interests restrains Him. Mouth! speak his praise. Flesh! bless his Name for ever.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3.—PSALM CXLVI.

This psalm is full of present tenses. It reminds us of our Lord's expressions: "Your Father knoweth," "the Father Himself loveth," "My Father worketh." There is no cessation in his activities. The tides of his being know no pause. The beneficent ministries of his life are always at work. What a contrast there is between the son of man, whose breath goes forth so that he returns to his earth, and this mighty, glorious Lord. Praise Him, O my soul.

We are apt to put our trust in the princes of this world, rank, or wealth, or influence. If we have only one or two of these at our back, to head our subscription lists, to give us their patronage, we think all must be well. Whereas they die or fail us. It takes us so long to realise that God is all that these could be, and infinitely more. Unseen and yet ever near. Incomparably more happy and secure, who has Jehovah for his help and hope.

Ten different agencies are attributed to God, from the keeping truth with those who trust Him to turning the way of the wicked upside down. Are you oppressed, or hungry, or imprisoned in circumstances, blind or bowed down, stranger or fatherless, there is a side of God's nature for you. But it is necessary that you should appropriate and claim it for yourself. The river is brimming to the edge of the banks, but each living thing along its margin must drink for itself.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 4.—PSALM CXLVII.

Still an enumeration of the Present Tenses of God's dealings with his people and workings in Nature. The Psalmists were never weary of searching out and proclaiming what God was doing. They did not admit the thought of second causes, or human agents to be interpolated between what they saw around them and God. All, but sin, was his act and deed.

The couplets in this psalm are very beautiful. Each by contrast or some further touch completes the other. God builds Jerusalem, but his heart goes out after his prodigals. He is equally at home in the hospital for broken hearts or wounded spirits, and in the immensities of space counting the stars, as a shepherd does his flock. He upholds the meek, but overthrows the proud. Spring, with its clouds and rain and sprouting grass; the life of the forest, whether of the beast or the bird; the snow, hoar-frost, and ice of winter; the warm, genial breath of his wind—all these are his work. And He is at work for his saints, building up Jerusalem, and filling its storehouses with the finest wheat. It is the same God in nature and in grace. Always trying to do the best for those whom He has made. Look out for Him; wait for Him; trust in Him. Even when there is no sign that He is at hand or careful, He is diligently ministering, drawing nigh, and making all things work together for good.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 5.—PSALM CXLVIII.

Every stop in the organ of nature is here pulled out. The psalm is like the burst of the full power of an orchestra. After each set of instruments has performed its part, and many different strains have struck the ear, the whole meaning of the composer is poured forth in strains that stir the soul as they roll in on it from every side. It is like the Hallelujah Chorus at the close of the Messiah!

First the heavens begin, and from their heights of stars and suns, of angels and exalted spirits, the hallelujahs begin to roll down the corridors of space. All the seven heavens yield their streamlets to the mighty torrent that circles around the listening earth. And now the waters of the clouds in vapour, rain, and snow-crystals, catch the inspiration, and again the hallelujah is repeated with increased volume.

It needs the quickened ear to detect the praise of God from sea-dragons, from the elements, from the stormy wind that fulfils his word, and from the animate creation. But it is there: and if only we were to realise the universal soul that underlies all nature, and which acknowledges God, we should hear his praise in each day, however storm-swept—in each season, however dark. Rising from nature, the Psalmist comes to redeemed man as High Priest, and finds in him the loftiest exponent of the praise of God. Oh, you who are near to Him, praise Him! Use your access as an opportunity of saying sweet and glad things into his ear.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6.—PSALM CXLIX.

Again the praise of God is set to another metre. Israel, the saints, the children of Zion, the people of God, stand to the front, theirs is the prerogative of praise. Let us find arguments for praise, and weave new songs as crowns.

That we are admitted into the assembly of the saints; that God has made us; that He is our King; that He takes pleasure in us in Christ; that He will beautify us if we are meek, by casting around us the garment of his salvation; that we may share and exult in the glory of our Lord; and that even in the bed of affliction, in the bed of death, or in the bed of the grave, there are reasons for hope—these are subjects on which the devout heart may meditate until it catches fire, and sings praises with the timbrel and harp.

Our duty, however, is not only to praise, but to wield the sword of the Spirit, which is sharper than any two-edged sword for the piercing of soul and spirit, and dividing the joints and marrow. The vengeance of the Gospel are the coals of fire of love. The punishment is to be outcast from the love of God. The saints rule on the earth, we bind on earth what is bound in Heaven, and what we loose here is loosed there. Oh, when will the time come when all the kings of men will be bound with the chains of the love of God, when all earth's nobles will find their loftiest title in the service of the Saviour! He is the truest honour. An honour which all his saints may share. F. B. M.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JANUARY 1.

The First Adam.—Gen. i. 26-31 ; ii. 1-3.

Golden Text.—Gen., i. 27.

This lesson takes up the story of the creation at the latter half of the sixth day. The previous five and a-half days have been occupied with the work of preparing the earth for man.

The manner in which the creation of man is introduced intimates that this is a work different from any which has preceded. Note the word, "Let there be," with which each part of creation hitherto has been introduced. Now the word is "Let us make man" (26). We are prepared by such language for a work more sublime than any hitherto recorded.

The doctrine of the Trinity is suggested by the words "Let us make man." In the New Testament this doctrine is more fully declared; but it would be a mistake not to recognise it here. Before this last crowning act of creation the persons of the Trinity are represented as taking counsel.

The result of this deliberation is the creation of a being who, as possessing a material body, is linked on to the earth, and yet, by his spiritual nature, is linked on to the Divine. At the head of all earthly beings, his chief glory consists in the possibility of union and communion with God. In the lower creation we have bodies without spirits. In the angels we have spirits without material bodies. Man stands as the link between the two. If he responds to the call of God he becomes spiritual and heavenly; if he yields to demands of the flesh he becomes earthly and sensual. Remember your dignity, and seek to walk worthy of it.

Concerning man this lesson teaches us several things:—

1. His Divine likeness (26, 27).—This consisted "not in the erect form or features of man; not in his intellect, for the devil and his angels are in this respect far superior; not in his immortality, for he has not, like God, a past as well as a future eternity of being; but in the moral dispositions of his soul, commonly called original righteousness" (Eccl. vii. 29). Compare what is said about our being renewed in the image of God (Eph. iv. 24; Col. iii. 10).

2. His sovereignty (26, 28).—This follows as the result of his being in the Divine likeness. It is not physical strength nor intellectual vigour that gives supremacy, but righteousness. Sin means weakness and bondage. To that condition man has fallen; but it is not what God intended for him (Psa. viii. 6-8). He is uncrowned now; but in Jesus we have the pledge that the purpose of God concerning him shall not be defeated (Heb. ii. 6-9).

3. His numerous posterity (28).—The blessing of God is most frequently connected with fruitfulness and increase (see xiii. 16). To have the power of peopling the earth with men possessed of a sinless moral nature, like that of Adam, was no small blessing.

4. His food (29, 30).—God provides for those whom He creates. Not for man only, but for beasts. At this time there is no mention of animal food. Matt. Henry says, concerning this provision for man's bodily need, that it should make him humble, because he was both made, and is sustained out of the earth; and that it should make him thankful, because the Lord cares for the body, and gives him richly all things to enjoy, "not only for necessity, but plenty, dainties, and varieties, for ornament and delight." How little we recognise our indebtedness to Him for daily mercies!

5. His rest (ii. 2, 3). The institution of the Sabbath dates back as far as this. Whether it was observed by the people of God during the Patriarchal age cannot be proved. But evidently its obligation does not begin with the law of Moses. "God rested," not because He was weary with the work He had just completed (Isa. xl. 28); but He ceased from his creation work. In this sense his rest becomes a type of that into which believers now enter (Heb. iv. 10). He sanctified it (3)—made it holy. Everything is made holy by God resting in it. If sin had not disturbed the rest of that day, what holy and happy fellowship man might have had with God!

Lessons:—(1) Let us adore the wisdom and power of God displayed in our creation. (2) Thankfully recognise his goodness in so bountifully providing for our need. (3) Value and use aright the days of rest He has given. (4) Since the image in which man was created has been destroyed, seek an interest in the work of Christ, by whom we are created anew into the Divine image. C. W.

For the Young.

HOME, SWEET HOME!

"Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home."

Oh, the charm that breathes from that one little word "Home"! What tender and fond memories cling about our hearts at the thought of the old home—the paradise of our childhood! You, dear young ones, you help to make home. Do you help to make it beautiful and glad? For not fine furniture, costly pictures, an abundant table, a large house, many servants, rich friends, make home; but true hearts, united affections, the sacredness that belongs to the love and the name of mother.

We were asking each other questions one day in the nursery, and thought turned upon our most precious possessions. "What in this house is most precious to you, little Mamie?" was asked of the rosy, thoughtless little child of seven.

"You should say 'who,' not 'what,' for my most precious and beautiful possession anywhere is my mother!" she replied. We asked the grandfather what was his sweetest remembrance. "The divine and ineffaceable memory of home," was his reply. So make home beautiful by being beautiful and lovely at home. Do not put on your charming manners for company. I have known a youth fly to open the room door for a stranger, who would let his mother stand before it with hands filled with her completed mending, unable to open it; but he did not see her! Let your devotion, self-sacrifice, affection, tenderness find their expression at home. Think of Christ's obedience to and thought for his mother. She was his first care in his last hours. Oh! to live the gentleness and thoughtfulness of Christ to one's mother! There are houses where many persons together rise, eat, work, sleep, and yet, without love, these cannot be homes.

I have known children grumble at food—refuse to eat it, make a disturbance at table, after asking a blessing on it! Do not condemn that for which you have asked to be made "thankful," do not distress the tender mother's heart by abusing her provision. But by kind words—the bright flowers, the priceless jewels of earth—and loving deeds, gladden and beautify your childhood's home. The only virtues that will stand the test of time and temptation, are those cultivated in the light of a true home. M. B. G.

CHILDREN IN GALILEE.

Dear Sir,—An appeal for help has reached me from a Christian Jewess, teaching Jewish girls at Safed. She says:—

"I am very thankful to say that we have all our old nice children, but how very miserable they are! I am hardly able to describe their poverty and misery. As the winter is coming on, I believe that they will not be able to come to school. They are most promising, but if we lose them, it will be because they are ill. We are thinking how to help them. The only way will be if we could give them dinner five times a week; that will keep them from starvation, and they would not go home at all till four o'clock in the afternoon.

"We will need about £25 a year, and how thankful and grateful we would be for the poor children's sake. I quite believe that we would have double the number, and it is no wonder that they are not regular now. How can they be, when, after being three hours at school, they come home, and do not have even a piece of dry bread?

"Sometimes when they know it is time to go to school again, they come without eating, and of course they are not very much inclined to do anything, and very often they will say, 'I have a headache and feel sick.' Then I am obliged to send them home, and the end is that the following day they get fever, and do not come to school for some days.

"I do not wonder that sometimes they are idle and disobedient, for how can they be good or happy when they always have a miserable feeling about themselves and faint? My bad English keeps me back from explaining all my feelings, but what I can say is that they are hungry, naked, cold, miserable, and willing to come to school, and delighted to learn."

If any of your kind-hearted readers are disposed to assist in feeding these hungry little ones, I shall be most glad to receive contributions. This Christian Jewess was baptized by me some two years ago in the church I then had at Liverpool. She is working at Safed with her brother, who is a clergyman, in connection with the above society. I myself saw their interesting but difficult work when visiting Palestine in 1891.

Yours faithfully,

Sidney Pike.

Catherluke, Tanza-road, Hampstead, N.W.

WHAT WE SHOULD CARE FOR.

It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor,
Whether they shrank at the world's cold scorn,
Or walked in the pride of wealth secure.
But, whether I live an honest man,
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, brother, plain as I am,
It matters much!

It matters little how long I stay
In a world now bright, now full of care,
Whether in youth I am called away,
Or live till my bones and pate are bare.
But whether I do the best I can
To soften the weight of adversity's touch
On the faded cheek of my fellow man,
It matters much!

It matters little where be my grave,
On home-girt land or in silent sea,
By purling brook or 'neath stormy wave,
It matters little, if aught, to me.
But, whether my Saviour Lord looks down,
And marks my brow with his loving touch,
As one who shall wear the Christian's crown,
It matters much!

From the Swedish.

WITH JESUS.

A WATCHWORD FOR THE NEW YEAR.

With JESUS! note of sweetness, how it falls upon the ear,
Like a strain of distant music, borne from a higher sphere—
So far away from the star-depths comes its melody sublime,
It steals o'er the heart with whispers of a serener clime;
With Jesus, thought of comfort for all the coming year.

With JESUS! in the sunlight, or amid the darkness drear,
It shines a radiant sunbeam upon the falling tear,
Illumes the shadowed pathway with a light from heaven's throne,
For if we walk with Jesus we ne'er shall be alone
In the darkest, loneliest days of the coming year.

Do we feel afraid to meet it? With Jesus we can bear
All that God's love appointeth, for love doth cast out fear;
His message is "Fear not, I'll hold thine hand in mine own."
Thou art going forth with Jesus, pilgrim, and not alone,
Through all the untried days and hours of the coming year.

With Jesus! blest assurance, tho' by faith till He appear,
Then "face to face" we'll see Him in morning sunlight clear;
Night's shadows gone for ever, the tears all wiped away,
Joy, Joy eternal, cometh with the coming of that day,
When God shall crown the ages with the glad Redemption year.

[This poem has been published by J. E. Hawkins & Co., Ltd., and Marshall Brothers, Paternoster Row, in a pretty illuminated booklet, price 6d.]

REALISTIC PICTURES IN OUTCAST LONDON is an illustrated booklet (2d. London Congregational Union, Memorial Hall, E.C.) in which the story is told of work done among the despairing poor. The philanthropic department of the London Congregational Union prosecutes some very interesting work in connection with mission halls at "Collier's Rents," Shadwell, and in many other centres. The influence of these missions on the social and religious life of the people is very marked. An average of 30,000 garments a year, distributed through the instrumentality of ministers, missionaries, biblewomen, district visitors, etc., has proved a valuable means of helping the needy and deserving. Emigrants to Canada and other Colonies have been largely aided by this department. The free shelter for the homeless, and relief tickets for the distressed, are important features of the work. The booklet deserves many readers.

PIONEERING IN MOROCCO.

I have returned from an interesting trip among the villages at the foot of the Atlas Mountains. Owing to the ignorance and fanaticism of the mountaineers it is extremely difficult to advance beyond the plain. They imagine all manner of strange things as to the Christians' presence in these unfrequented regions, and endeavour determinedly to keep one from proceeding. It needs much tact and patience in dealing with them, and often days have to be spent in one village before their suspicions are removed. At the entrance to one of the glens leading far into the grand range of snow-clad mountains, we thought the way was shut in our face.

The sub-governor pointed out to us the impracticableness of our attempt to go further, the danger of the way, the inhospitality of the people, and the fact that they considered killing a Christian the very gate to glory, was strong reason why we should remain where we were. The Lord, however, opened the way for us, and we had the joy of preaching Christ where no missionary had been before. The people, too, contrary to our expectation, received us kindly, and listened quietly to the story of the Cross.

We climbed one of the highest peaks of the mountains over 13,000 feet high. At our feet, towards the south, lay the Soos Valley, and much beyond still unopened to missionary enterprise with teeming millions sitting in darkness.

In the town we are now busy spreading the words of life. The soil is hard, but the Lord will give the showers. The people continue to come in crowds for medicine, and so we have many opportunities of making known the glad tidings.

Many, too, are reading the Gospels in all quarters of the land. We trust that some are seeking after truth.—Yours in Jesus, John Geddes.

Mazagan, Morocco.

POOR IN ROME.

For the last seven months we have had the workmen in, and our hall has been very much enlarged and made much more comfortable. It is now well filled, but although rejoiced to see the people listening to the Gospel, this does not satisfy us. We cannot rest unless they come out and confess Christ. We ask prayer for them. Last Saturday week Mr. Wall baptized four, one of these quite an old man, who came first to the Medical Mission to bring a blind young man needing medicine. He accepted the Gospel, and when before the Church his testimony was beautifully clear and simple. He said, "Before, it was all night with me; but now it is all day: before, it was lead; but now like feathers. The Lord Jesus has washed away my sins in his own precious blood."

At our meeting the other day I asked them to tell me how they had been helped during the week. One of them said, "I arose yesterday morning without anything to eat, or a sou to buy bread. With my wife we told the Lord all about it. Towards twelve o'clock she came to me saying she felt very weak and hungry. I said, 'Trust the Lord; before night He will send us something.' About three, a very poor woman came with a pound of beans, and soon after another brought us a little coffee and sugar. The Lord supplied all our wants."

Another said: "I went out on Tuesday morning, for I really could not bear to see my children crying for bread when I had nothing to give them. I walked on and on, hardly knowing where I was going, my heart was so full of trouble. At last when outside one of the gates of the city I heard a woman from a window on the fourth floor of a house calling me. I went up, and found she had removed all the furniture from her room, and had been scraping the walls; feeling thoroughly tired, she knew not what to do to get someone to finish it. I began at once, and about three o'clock she brought me some wine. I thanked her, saying 'I never drink anything before breaking the fast.' She looked surprised when she heard I had tasted nothing, and brought me a large piece of bread and meat. In the evening when too dark to see, I was going away when she called me back and gave me sevenpence-halfpenny for what I had done, telling me to return the day after to finish." This poor man added, "Signora, I felt as if the Lord Jesus had given it me from his own hand."

I could tell you many more testimonies given by these dear men to the tender loving care of Jesus for them. I hear distress is very very great; but many of them can say, and do say often, "Once I said I hope I shall be saved, but now I can say 'I am saved.'" Emily J. Wall.

35, Piazza in Lucino, Rome.

No More Weeping.

I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people, and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying (Isa. lxv. 19).

How many suffering, sorrowing children our Heavenly Father has in his family! How many cries of distress are entering into his ear day by day, as his loved ones tread the path of sorrow, on their way to the Home on high. It gives us pain to hear the cries of our children. We love to soothe them and wipe away their tears. What a joy it will be to our Father in heaven when this dispensation of suffering is ended, when "the clouds shall no more return after the rain," when no more tears gather in the eyes of the ransomed family who are gathered around the Throne. "Everlasting joy shall be upon their heads. . . sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. xxxv. 10).

That Blessed One whose heart overflowed with compassion as He said to the bereaved mother at the gate of Nain, "Weep not," shall separate from each one of his children all cause of sorrow. That hand which touched the bier shall wipe away all trace of the tear-drops. It will be the day of the gladness of his heart. His redemption work will be completed, and his Sabbath rest begun.

"Each taint of sin shall be removed,
All evil done away;
And we shall dwell with God's Beloved
Through God's eternal day."

Child of God, is the road rough, the night dark, the cross heavy? Faint not, nor be discouraged, as though some strange thing had happened unto you (1 Peter iv. 12). There are many close beside you, "wrestling on towards heaven, 'gainst storm and wind and tide," though you think yourself alone. It is the King's highway, much traversed by Zion's pilgrims, and One, bearing his cross, hallowed the path on a darker day than thine.

The day-dawn is near. "Weeping may come in to lodge at even, but joy cometh in the morning" (Ps. xxx. 5, R.V. marg.).

Someone has beautifully said, "Every trial your Heavenly Father sends is a vote of confidence in you." Shall not this lead us to look very lovingly on our trials, and shall we not respond with a full, unwavering trust? It is an honour to belong to the noble army of trusting ones—the Royal Family of Heaven—the cloud of witnesses. "Our fathers trusted in Thee, they trusted and Thou didst deliver them—they trusted and were not confounded" (Ps. xxii. 4, 5). It is a sweet tie between the soul and Jesus. "He knoweth them that trust in Him" (Nahum i. 7).

We dare not ask nor desire trial; neither dare we ask exemption from it. What we need is grace to walk in harmony with God, to allow Him to give or take in his own royal way. We are not to do so without intensest feeling; for these Divine chisellings are meant to tell upon the heart, but without murmur or rebellion.

As one quaintly remarks: "The ground of all music is the bass. The first string the musician usually touches is the bass, when he intends to put all in tune. God usually plays upon this string, just when He sets the soul in tune for Himself." The cry of a trusting heart is but the prelude to the hallelujahs of heaven!

One other lesson we have learned from the cries of our children. We have waited and listened to see if they were to come to us for help and comfort in their little distresses. The mother's heart is a little disappointed if her child prefers any bosom to her own. "If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto Me." The true resting-place for a broken, bleeding heart, is the once-broken heart of Jesus. In all his dealings with us—by the piercing north wind, or the gentle south—He means to bring us closer to Himself. It was one who knew what it was to walk in darkness who sang—

"Trials make the promise sweet;
Trials give new life to prayer;
Trials bring me to his feet;
Lay me low, and keep me there."

There is a Mary in Scripture who is always to be found at the feet of Jesus. At his feet for teaching (Luke x. 39). At his feet for comfort (John xi. 23). At his feet for service (John xii. 3). Mary had found "the secret source of every precious thing." It was "Jesus only," dark day or bright day.

"Jesus only! In the shadow
Of the cloud so chill and dim,
We are clinging, loving, trusting,
He with us, and we with Him,
All unseen, though ever nigh,
'Jesus only'—all our cry.

"Jesus only! In the glory,
When the shadows all are flown,
Seeing Him in all his beauty,
Satisfied with Him alone,
May we join his ransomed throng,
'Jesus only'—all our song."

Banchory, N.B. B. Campbell.

Thought Gems.

SELECTED FROM NOTES OF DR. A. BONAR'S SERMONS.

We are to be filled with fruits of righteousness. How many of your branches have no fruit on them? In how many ways you might be bearing fruit to God's glory, if you only cared to do so?

When the world sees that our joy has deeper springs than circumstances, and is not dried up by losses and crosses: this commends Christ, and is for the furtherance of the Gospel.

Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego would often tell of the "fourth" who kept the fire from hurting. Should you not tell others of the joy you get in trouble, and that you are made more than conquerors through Him that loves you?

The more entirely you look to Christ, the more you are satisfied. The more exclusively you trust in Him, the more you are filled. Never try doing anything with the "finest of the wheat!"

In the forty years during which Moses kept his father-in-law's flocks at the back-side of the desert, he may have been surprised to find he had no use for all the learning he had acquired during the first forty years of his life. He kept sheep, but when he found that this was what God had given him to do, he did it well, and was found at this humble work when God revealed Himself to him. Perhaps he may have learned his meekness in these quiet years—learned to give up his own will to the Lord's. Then, too, he had leisure to meditate and to pray, like John the Baptist in the desert.

Our everyday service is the best preparation for special times of trial, such as the hour of death. Live daily looking in the face of a living Saviour, and in the hope of a joyful resurrection, and He will keep you so that you will never see death.

IN A CHINESE CHRISTIAN FAMILY, a little boy on asking his father to allow him to be baptized was told that he was too young, that he might fall back if he made a profession when only a child. "But Jesus has promised to carry the lambs," was his touching reply; "I am only a little boy, so it will be easy for Jesus to carry me." Ere long this little fellow was baptized; and the whole family are all now members of the Mission Church at Amoy.

READ, MARK, LEARN.

A WORD TO YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

These are the words of Jesus—

"Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of Me."—John v. 39.

Search, not merely read, but seek to find out the treasures in the Word of God, half of which have not yet been found. What is more encouraging to the seeker than the thought that even the simplest may discover, by the Spirit of God, something that no other seeker has found?

Does a question arise in your mind as to the inspiration of the Scriptures? If well read, they are self convincing; the golden thread of connexion, agreement, and fulfilment runs through them from Genesis to the Revelation. There is evidence that has but to be sought and found, to be conclusive. There is nothing so convincing of the Divine origin of the Scriptures as the Scriptures themselves.

Dear young friends, there is no telling the treasures they contain. God speaks through them, and sometimes in sorrow or difficulty we hear, as it were, a voice, but it speaks in the words of Scripture. The Spirit of God gives the words fresh power and meaning, but they are the words of Scripture.

It ought to be our daily business to search the Scriptures. See what God says about them in 2 Tim. iii. 15-17; Heb. iv. 12; Eph. vi. 17; Ps. cxix. 9, 105.

If we would do any work for God and win souls for Christ; if we would have a reason and answer for those who ask us as to what we believe; if we would comfort those in sorrow, we must know and use the words of Scripture. A few words of Scripture spoken into the ear of the anxious, the sick, and the dying will often bring a response when other words have failed. Be careful, then, to use few words of your own, but much of Scripture.

If we would have power to resist our great enemy; if we would know God; if we would have communion with Him (John xiv. 23, 24), we must search the "Book." Although we may find Him in his creative power, and in his goodness in the wonderful and beautiful works of Nature, yet it is only in the Scriptures that we can find Him in his great love "in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself" (2 Cor. v. 19).

Some may say, But we have the Spirit. But even in the day of Pentecost, when the power of the Spirit was so manifest (Acts ii.), we find Peter saying through that Spirit, "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel," and making several other quotations. We can do nothing without the Word of God.

Again, see how our Lord Jesus always used the Scriptures in his life and work. When starting on his Divine ministry in the Synagogue of Nazareth, He opened the book of the prophet Esaias and read (Luke 4—16). Every temptation he resisted with "It is written." When the Sadducees asked Him of the resurrection (Mark xii. 24), He answered, "Do ye not, therefore, err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God? Have ye not read?" etc. And in that much-envied walk with the two disciples on the way to Emmaus, "beginning at Moses and all the prophets He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself" (Luke xxiv.).

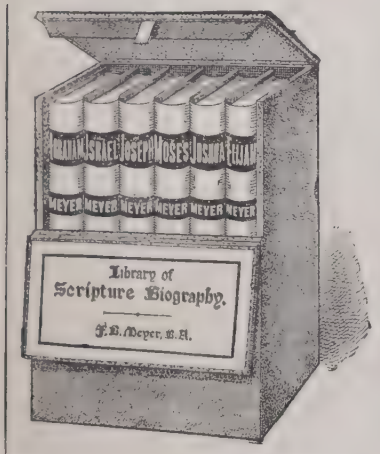
It is only in the Scriptures that He reveals Himself, and if we are seeking to know more of Him it must be through his Word. Again, in the same chapter, when He appeared to the disciples assembled together, He reminded them how He had told them of the things written concerning him in the Scriptures, and how it "behoved Christ to suffer." Neglect anything rather than the Word of God; other books are very attractive, some useful and good, but none satisfy and repay for reading like the Word of God. If you have but little time for reading, oh, give up the novels and comic papers, and stick to the Bible, and you will be able to say with the prophet, "Thy Word is unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart" (Jer. xv. 16). E. H. B.

GOD HAS MANY SERVANTS.—The other day a young mother was received into the Church; her baby made her think of her duty. God opened the mother's heart with the baby's hand. To a poor man who was sick, a teacher sent some flowers by his child. The flowers opened the man's heart, and let Christ in.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

A SELECTION OF WORKS

Suitable for New Year's Gifts.

PUBLISHED BY



MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings,

LONDON, E.C.

And may be Ordered of any Bookseller.

LIBRARIES.

THE "F. B. MEYER" LIBRARY OF Scripture Biography.

Consisting of the undermentioned SIX VOLUMES, each containing Nine Full-page Illustrations, and attractively Bound in Library Style, in a handsome Case,

PRICE 12/6 NET.

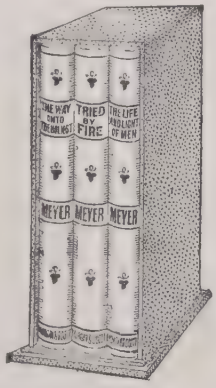
If sent by Post 1s. extra.



CONTENTS OF THE LIBRARY.

ABRAHAM: OR, THE OBEDIENCE OF FAITH.
ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.
JOSEPH: BELOVED—HATED—EXALTED.
MOSES: THE SERVANT OF GOD.
JOSHUA: AND THE LAND OF PROMISE.
ELIJAH: AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

Any of the above Volumes may be had separately—

In Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

THE "F. B. MEYER" LIBRARY OF Scripture Exposition.

Consisting of the undermentioned THREE VOLUMES, attractively Bound in Library Style, and enclosed in a handsome Case,

PRICE 6/6 NET.

If sent by post, 6d. extra.

CONTENTS OF THE LIBRARY.

THE WAY INTO THE HOLIEST:
Expositions of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

THE LIFE AND LIGHT OF MEN:
Expositions of John I.—XII.

TRIED BY FIRE:
Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter.

Any of the above Volumes may be had separately—

In Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

THE F. B. MEYER LIBRARY OF VOLUMES ON The Christian Life.

Consisting of the undermentioned Five Volumes handsomely Bound in Library Style and enclosed in a Neat Cloth Case, net. 5/-
If sent by post, 6d. extra.

The same Volumes in Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, in Neat Cloth Case, net. 7/6
If sent by post, 6d. extra.

CONTENTS OF THE LIBRARY.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.
THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE.
THE FUTURE TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE.
THE SHEPHERD PSALM.
THE PSALMS: Notes and Readings.

Any of these may be had separately—
In Cloth Boards, 1/-
Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Edges, 1/6
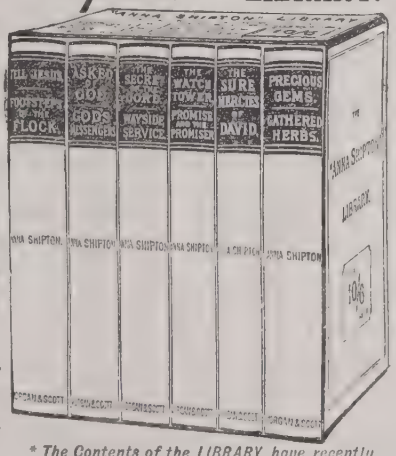
Cloth Boards., 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

THE "Anna Shipton" LIBRARY.



Consisting of Eleven of Anna Shipton's favourite works bound in Six Volumes. Each Volume in neat Roxburgh style, in box.

PRICE 10/6 NET.

If sent by post, 1s. extra.

CONTENTS OF THE LIBRARY.*

TELL JESUS. FOOTSTEPS OF THE FLOCK.
THE BROOK IN THE WAY (Poems).
GOD'S MESSENGERS.
WAYMARKS OF MY PILGRIMAGE (Poems).
THE PROMISE AND THE PROMISER.
THE WATCHTOWER IN THE WILDERNESS.
WHISPERS IN THE PALMS (Poems).
THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID.
PRECIOUS GEMS. GATHERED HERBS.

 The Contents of the LIBRARY have recently been re-arranged in order to include the Volumes of*

ANNA SHIPTON'S POEMS.

THE "D. L. Moody" LIBRARY.

TEN of Mr. MOODY'S most Popular Works, bound in Roxburgh Style, and enclosed in an OAK CASE.

Price 12/6 NET.
If sent by Post 1/3 extra.

CONTENTS OF THE LIBRARY.

ADDRESSES | BIBLE CHARACTERS
FAITHFUL SAYING | PREVAILING PRAYER
THE OLD GOSPEL | HEAVEN
SOVEREIGN GRACE | POWER FROM ON HIGH
THE WAY TO GOD | TO THE WORK!

The above Ten Works can also be had bound in Five Volumes and enclosed in nicely made box, 10s. 6d. net.

POSTAGE 10½d. EXTRA.

"A NOBLE EDITION OF A NOBLE BOOK."—The Christian Leader.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

BEING A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

BY

JOHN FOXE.

With Twelve Full-page Illustrations. Complete in One Handsome Volume.

Cloth Boards, 1083 pages, 10s 6d.; with Gilt Edges, 12s. 6d.

"MESSRS. MORGAN AND SCOTT deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

"A most masterly exposure of what Popery really is, and what it can do when it has the upper hand. The perusal of this book should form part of the education of our youth. Heads of families should purchase it for their children to read. Popery could find no favour wherever Foxe's Martyrs is studied."

Christian Progress.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."

Primitive Methodist.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

Sacred Songs and Solos:

750 PIECES.

PRESENTATION EDITIONS

BOUND IN LEATHER AND CLOTH GILT.

Words Only.

		s.	d.
	RUBY EDITION.
AA 4.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	1	0
AA 3.	Cloth Boards, Gilt	0	6
	NONPAREIL EDITION.
BB 3.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	1	6
	POCKET EDITION.
CC 4.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	3	0
CC 5.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges...	4	6
CC 6.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	2	0
CC 3.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	1	6
	LARGE TYPE: DOUBLE COLUMNS.
DD 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	4	6
DD 6.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	3	6
DD 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	2	6
	EXTRA LARGE TYPE.
EE 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	6	6
EE 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	9	6
EE 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges...	4	6
EE 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	3	6

Music and Words.

		s.	d.
	OLD NOTATION: LARGE TYPE.
FF 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	10	6
FF 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	14	6
FF 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	7	6
FF 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	6	6
	OLD NOTATION: SMALLER TYPE.
HH 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	6	6
HH 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	9	6
HH 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	4	6
HH 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	4	0
	TONIC SOL-FA EDITION.
RR 5.	Morocco, Gilt Edges	6	6
RR 6.	Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	9	6
RR 7.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	4	6
RR 4.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	4	0
	QUARTO EDITION. For use at the Piano, Harmonium, or Organ.
MM 3.	Persian Morocco, Boards, Gilt Edges	17	6
MM 4.	Best Turkey Morocco, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	25	0
MM 5.	Leather, Burnished Red Edges	12	6
MM 2.	Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	9	6

Sacred Songs & Solos 750 PIECES: and The Christian Choir 79 PIECES:

COMBINED IN ONE VOLUME (829 PIECES).

Words Only.

Ruby Leaded Edition.	s.	d.
XB 5. Morocco, Gilt Edges	3	6
XB 6. Leather, Burnished Red Edges	2	0
XB 4. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	1	6

Extra Large Type.	s.	d.
XE 5. Morocco, Gilt Edges	7	6
XE 6. Morocco, Yapp, Kid-lined, Gilt Edges	10	6
XE 7. Leather, Burn. Red Edges	5	0
XE 4. Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges	4	0

Music and Words.

Old Notation: Quarto Edition.

For use at the Piano, Harmonium, or Organ.

	s.	d.
XM 3. Persian Morocco, Boards, Gilt Edges	20	0
XM 4. Best Turkey Morocco, Boards, Gilt Edges	27	6
XM 5. Leather, Burnished Red Edges	15	0
XM 2. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges	10	6

Any of the above Editions can be procured through any Bookseller in the Kingdom; or will be sent by the Publishers, Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, post free to any address on receipt of the published price.

A Complete List of the various Editions of "SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS"—with Words only from 2d. upwards, and with Music and Words, both Old Notation and Sol-fa, from 2s. 6d. upwards, with Specimens of Type—will be sent post free on application to the Publishers.

"It would be difficult to present anything more attractive and readable." Divine Life.

The NEW YEARLY VOLUME of

The Herald of Mercy.

Profusely Illustrated. Containing Stirring Appeals, Striking Narratives, Choice Extracts, Biographical Sketches, Children's Pages, &c.

"Full of the Gospel in Story and Song."

Attractively Bound in Pictorial Boards, Price 1s.

"Its varied contents, profuse illustrations, and attractive binding combine to make it a most acceptable present."—The Bookseller.

"It is bright without and within. It is full of good pictures. It is well printed, and every line is laden with the good old story of Jesus and His love."—Baptist Messenger.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

12 Copies, post free for 1/-

100 Copies, post free, 7/6

Sample Copy post free for 1½d.

"The Christian" SHEET ALMANACK FOR 1894.

PRINTED IN COLOUR, & CONTAINING A SPECIALLY SELECTED

TEXT for EACH DAY in the YEAR.

NINE SPECIALLY ENGRAVED ILLUSTRATIONS of Scenes in the LIFE OF JEREMIAH.

POSTAL INFORMATION, &c., &c.

Rev. W. Adamson, Vicar of St. Paul, Old Ford, thus writes to The English Churchman:—

SHEET ALMANACKS (1894).

"Sir,—These seem to increase in number. Happily some increase in artistic taste, literary value, and religious influence. I have seen many specimens for 1894, but, to my mind, none come within measurable distance of the 'Christian Sheet Almanack,' published by Messrs. Morgan and Scott. Anything more delicate in art, happy in conception, and appropriate in contents I have never met with. The illustrations, so sweet in colour and so effective in execution, are taken from the life of the prophet Jeremiah—a most suitable selection for the present time of falling away from the Faith, and of spiritual apathy. The Church of God is greatly the debtor to those respected publishers for the production of such an interesting, attractive, and profitable sheet almanack. I call the attention of all clergymen and of all Christians to it."

Wm. Adamson, Vicar of St. Paul, Old Ford, E.

UNION AND COMMUNION:

Thoughts on the Song of Solomon.

By Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR,

Of the China Inland Mission.

Cloth Boards, Red Edges, 1s.

SYNOPSIS.

I. THE UNSATISFIED LIFE AND ITS REMEDY: Chapter i. 2—ii. 7.
II. COMMUNION BROKEN—RESTORATION: Chapter ii. 8.—iii. 5.
III. UNBROKEN COMMUNION: Chapter iii. 6—v. 1.
IV. COMMUNION AGAIN BROKEN—RESTORATION: Chapter v. 2—vi. 10.
V. FRUITS OF RECOGNISED UNION: Chapter vi. 11—viii. 4.
VI. UNRESTRAINED COMMUNION: Chapter viii. 5—14.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

A Vindication of Pure and Primitive Christianity; and an Exposure of the Corruptions of Romanism: Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the Early Christians at Rome.

BY

BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S.,

Late Chamberlain of the City of London.

With Seventy Illustrations, and Portrait of the Author.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;

Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"There is no volume equally moderate in price giving to English readers so full and clear an account of these sepulchral remains of the early Christians. The work is executed with strict accuracy as well as with enthusiasm; it is copiously illustrated; and in an age of revived sacerdotalism among the Anglican clergy its appearance is specially opportune."

Christian Leader.

London: Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

PUBLISHED BY MORGAN AND SCOTT.

Cannibals Won for Christ:

A THRILLING STORY OF MISSIONARY PERILS AND TRIUMPHS IN TONGOA, NEW HEBRIDES.

By Rev. OSCAR MICHELSEN,

Missionary of the Presbyterian Church of Otago, N.Z.

With Introduction by Lieut. G. C. FREDERICK, R.N., Hydrographic Department, Admiralty.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Top, 3s. 6d.

From THE IRISH CONGREGATIONAL MAGAZINE:—

"A well-told story; there is not a dull page from beginning to end. In addition to the account of his missionary labours, Mr. Michelsen gives an interesting description of the islands he has visited and their inhabitants. We welcome this book as a valuable acquisition to the missionary literature of our day, as well as an invaluable testimony to the saving, ennobling, and civilizing power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We hope it will have thousands of readers in this and other lands."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

TINTED COVERS 1/6.

Pearls of Wisdom

From the Parables of Christ.

By A. L. O. E.,

Author of "Rescued from Egypt," "Exiles in Babylon," &c.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Presentation Editions: Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A delightful contribution to Biblical literature."—Church of England Sunday School Magazine.

"We commend the volume to the special attention of ministers, lay preachers, and Sabbath-school teachers, as a most helpful auxiliary to the elucidation of the Saviour's parabolic teaching."

The Primitive Methodist.

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION OF

The Pilgrim's Progress.

By JOHN BUNYAN.

WITH THIRTEEN ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS. Size 10 in. by 7 in.

Tinted Covers, 6d.; Fancy Boards, Cloth Back, 1s.

Superior Edition, Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

Also, Pocket Edition, Illustrated, Bound in Roxburgh style, 1s.

Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s. 6d.

☞ In Ordering it will be needful to specify MORGAN & SCOTT'S Edition.

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S

Life of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

POPULAR EDITION.

IN ATTRACTIVE TINTED COVERS.

THE PRICE 1/-

PRINCE OF PREACHERS.

A SKETCH:
A PORTRAITURE:
AND A TRIBUTE.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS, M.A.

WITH LIFE-LIKE PORTRAIT.

Presentation Editions: Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Far and away the very best presentation of Mr. Spurgeon that has yet appeared. This book should become the gift book of the season from all Spurgeon-lovers to their friends."—The King's Own.

Choice Sayings.

BY

ROBERT C. CHAPMAN,

of Barnstaple.

NOTES OF EXPOSITIONS OF THE SCRIPTURES.

Consisting of about 800 Striking and Suggestive Comments on almost every Subject Relating to Christian Faith and Practice.

PRESENTATION EDITIONS
Morocco, Gilt Edges.. ..	3 0
Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges	2 0
Cloth Boards	1 6
Tinted Covers..	0 9
Cloth Limp	1 6

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON wrote:—

"Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good!' Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests on Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

Sword and Trowel.

By Rev. THEODORE MONOD.

The Gift of God.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES.

Tinted Covers, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

"To the anxious enquirer, the new convert, the seeker after holiness, and the mature believer, we heartily recommend this book."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.

"These addresses are clear as a sunbeam, and full of spiritual force. The source, nature, reception, and consequence of the gift of God are treated, and the last chapters relate to its purpose and how to use it. Our counsel is, by all means get the book."—King's Highway.

Life More Abundant:

AND OTHER ADDRESSES.

Tinted Covers, 1s.

Presentation Edition: Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

"Full of the Gospel as an egg is full of meat."

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"The addresses before us glow with fervour and pant with the highest aims; and yet their exegesis is sound and their common sense and practicability strong and supreme. The volume before us is charming, welcome, and enriching as the balm-filled air of dawning spring."

General Baptist Magazine.

The "Golden Treasury." Birthday Book.

WITH BEAUTIFULLY ILLUMINATED FRONTISPIECE.

Elegantly Bound in Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d. Presentation Editions: French Morocco, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.; Rich Coloured Leather, Padded, Gilt Edges, 4s. 6d.

In this country, very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely appreciated as

"BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY."

In this Edition—arranged as a Birthday Book—four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with blank square spaces, one for every day. Each space is adapted for receiving four entries, consequently the total number of names which can be inscribed in the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

SUITABLE FOR DISTRIBUTION AT THE NEW YEAR.

Herald of Mercy Leaves.

AN ATTRACTIVE SERIES OF

Illustrated Gospel Messages.

CONSISTING OF

NARRATIVES, CHOICE EXTRACTS, ANECDOTES, POINTED APPEALS, &c., &c.

2-PAGES EACH. SIZE— 7½ in. by 10 in.

For Gratuitous Distribution, the Publishers offer HERALD OF MERCY LEAVES in quantities at the following

SPECIALLY LOW RATES.

1000 "LEAVES" in a Packet .. 5/- net (Post free 6/1½).

400 "LEAVES" in a Packet .. 2/6 net (Post free 3/-).

Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT will send their

CATALOGUE OF TRACTS, SMALL BOOKS, AND LEAFLETS, post free to any address on application.

Useful Wedding Presents.

Be Lovers Still!

FRIENDLY HINTS TO A BRIDE AND BRIDEGROOM.

In Beautifully-illuminated Cover, Gilt Edges, 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 1s.

"A dainty booklet, the contents of which are 'a choice blend' of good-will and common sense. Miserable wedlock might have been happy, happy wedlock might have been happier, under the dominion of such 'Hints.' How Marriage may be Happier than Courtship, might have been the alternative title. As a wedding gift it is likely to prove more precious than all costly presents."

Cambridge Congregational Magazine.

Marriage and Home.

A Volume of Wise Counsels for the Newly-Married.

In Elegant White Cloth Binding, Gilt Lettering on side, and Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.; in Handsome Leather Binding, Gilt Lettering on side, and Gilt Edges, 4s. 6d.

"A gem, both in print and binding; and full of wholesome counsel to those about to enter on the Battle of life. An admirable wedding gift-book."—Gospel Magazine.

AIDS TO BIBLE STUDY.

PUBLISHED BY MORGAN AND SCOTT.

FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

HELPS TO THE
Scripture Lessons for Sunday-Schools
FOR 1894.

FIRST QUARTER (Morning Subjects).

The Gospel of John.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

THE LIFE AND LIGHT OF MEN.
Expositions of John I.—XII

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Characterised by the tender spirituality and gracious fervour, the clearness of diction and wealth of bright illustration which mark all Mr. Meyer's work, and it ought to take a high place as a popular help to the study of the 'Golden Gospel.'"—Irish Baptist Magazine.

By Rev. J. Culross, D.D. (Bristol Baptist College).

JOHN WHOM JESUS LOVED.
A Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple.
WITH EIGHT CHROMO-LITHOGRAPHIC VIEWS.

Tinted Covers, 2s.;
Cloth Bds., 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

VERY HIGHLY COMMENDED BY THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON in a lengthy special Article in The Sword and Trowel.

"Dr. Culross has handled his subject in such a way as to have produced the most complete as well as the most interesting biography of the Apostle John it has ever been our privilege to peruse."—Stirling Observer.

FIRST AND SECOND QUARTERS (Afternoon Subjects).

Genesis and Exodus.

THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.
GENESIS—DEUTERONOMY.
(The Notes on Genesis are written by Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.)

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

A brief Introduction to each Book, with a suggestive summary of each Chapter.

"Rarely can Sunday-school teachers get so excellent a commentary on such easy terms."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

By Rev. Dr. G. F. Pentecost, M.A. (Marylebone).

"OUT OF EGYPT."
A Series of Addresses and Bible Readings on the Exodus of Israel, and its Spiritual Lessons.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Neat, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.; Bound in White Parchment, 5s.

"A most welcome practical commentary on the portion of the Word with which it deals."—British Messenger.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

SCRIPTURE BIOGRAPHIES.
EACH VOLUME WITH NINE ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

ABRAHAM: or, The Obedience of Faith.
ISRAEL: A Prince with God.
JOSEPH: Beloved—Hated—Exalted.
MOSES: The Servant of God.

"In Mr. Meyer's hands the Old Testament is felt to be a living book."—Baptist Magazine.

Helpful Volumes for Sunday-School Teachers.

THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER.
A valuable and unique Handbook to the Bible.

New and Enlarged Edition; a large portion having been specially re-written.

Over Sixty Classified Sections with copious Scripture References. With Complete Bible Atlas (14 Maps) brought down to date, and many other features of interest.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"Every teacher ought to have a copy. Its cost will be repaid by the mere economy of time in a few weeks."
Methodist Recorder.

THE BIBLE INTERPRETER.
An Illustrated Dictionary of the Holy Scriptures.

With Steel-plate Frontispiece, 11 Full-page and nearly 50 smaller Illustrations.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

"A compact and handy manual of reference, especially designed to meet the requirements of Sabbath-school teachers, and others who are unable to procure the larger and more expensive works of this class."
Literary World.

By Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS,
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.
A helpful volume for Teachers, Parents, and Preachers to the Young.

The contents embrace over Sixty Outline Lessons, over Forty Diagrams for the Blackboard, and Twenty-five Children's Hymns, with Music.

HIGHLY COMMENDED BY THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Sunday School Chronicle says:—"The question is often asked, 'How can we make our week-evening meetings varied and interesting?' The answer is found in a work like this, which we heartily recommend."

A.L.O.E.'s Work on the Parables.

PEARLS OF WISDOM
From the Parables of Christ.
WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

150, pages, Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A delightful contribution to Biblical literature."
Church of England Sunday School Magazine.

By Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, M.A.

"IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK:"
Or, the Pleasure and Profit of Bible Study.
With Introduction by Rev. JOSEPH COOK and Rev. J. H. VINCENT, M.A.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.;
Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"A capital book! It is a vindication of the Bible's Divine authority; an exposition of some of its great lines of teaching; and a manual for guidance as to Bible study, all in one. May it do much good!"
British Messenger.

By Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir, B.A.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.
The Living Word and the Written Word.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

Presentation Editions:
Cloth extra, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"We know of no volume that we more earnestly desire to see in the hands of persons of every age who are pondering the religious question of momentous importance, so much agitating men's minds at the present time. It is admirably adapted for the mature and thoughtful; and also peculiarly fitted to give a right direction to the lives and thoughts of the young, and to mould them into Christians of a high type of character."
The Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

By Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D.

"The Book which the present period needs."
Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"MANY INFALLIBLE PROOFS."

Tinted Covers, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition:
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

From The Sword and Trowel:—
"An invaluable work. The price is low at half-a-crown. It is the book which the present period needs. It is solid, plain, conclusive argument. To those who retain candour, although somewhat shaken by the present earthquake of doubt, such 'Infallible Proofs' as these will be greatly reassuring, and we believe they will return to the old faith with increased confidence. To spread such a treatise as this will be a very gracious work; and the results must be beneficial."

Books on The Tabernacle.

By Henry W. Soltau,
Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," &c.

THE TABERNACLE,
THE PRIESTHOOD, AND
THE OFFERINGS.
With Four Beautiful Coloured Plates and numerous smaller Engravings.

Cloth Boards, 5s.;
Library Binding, Gilt Edges, 6s.;
Tinted Covers, without Coloured Plates, 3s.

"This is the best book on the subject we have seen. Concise, complete, and evangelical, it affords all readers of the Holy Bible the help which they need in appreciating the services and ritual of the wilderness worship."—Preachers' Analyst.

By Rev. George Rodgers.

THE GOSPEL
ACCORDING TO MOSES.
As seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."
The Christian.

By Rev. James Fleming, D.D.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.
Types and Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"This book is fitted to be eminently useful as a plain and faithful setting forth of the work of Christ as foreshadowed in the Mosaic types."—Baptist Magazine.

Searching the Scriptures:
IN ORDER TO ABIDING COMMUNION WITH GOD.

Also Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study; and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. J. Anderson, M.R.C.S.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A scholarly, accurate, suggestive, and wise work on the Study of the Books of the Bible; how best to get at their teaching; and how best to turn that teaching to practical account. Preachers and teachers will find it a treasury of thought, beautiful expositions, and fruitful suggestions. The volume is nicely got up, and is suitable for a prize or a present."—Oldham Chronicle.

Notes for Bible Readings.

By S. R. Briggs and John H. Elliott. With Introduction by D. L. Moody.

Tinted Covers, 2s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"A book which every Bible Student should possess. It brings together an immense number of subjects with groupings of Scripture texts on each. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation; and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

MORGAN AND SCOTT'S COMPLETE EDITIONS.

Cruden's Concordance
TO THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

All the Editions described below contain 757 pages, 2270 closely-printed columns, and about 250,000 references. A special feature is The List of Proper Names, newly translated by Rev. Alfred Jones, M.A. This portion of the work is strictly copyright, and can only appear in Morgan & Scott's Editions.

The PORTABLE EDITION
STRONGLY BOUND IN CLOTH BOARDS, 3/6
The Portable Edition, in Half Calf, Marbled Edges, 7s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED Edition. Cloth, Bev. Boards, Gilt Top. With 12 Exquisite Steel-Plate Engravings, and 6 Beautiful Coloured Maps. 10/6

POPULAR Edition. Printed on Superior Paper, Strongly bound in Cloth Boards, 5/-

PRESENTATION Edition. Handsomely bound in Cloth, Bev. Bds., Gilt Top, 7/6

LIBRARY Edition. Strongly half bound in Leather, 10/6

London: Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. And may be Ordered of any Bookseller in the Kingdom.

The Late MR. GEORGE GILLETT,

BANKER AND PHILANTHROPIST.

THE personality of some men and women is the thing that impresses; in others it is the work of their life, their aims, and motives, and spirit, which specially mark them. Mr. Gillett was a Christian who seemed merged in his work and calling. To be near him was to be braced and strengthened for righteous struggle, was to be confirmed in the faith that goodness is invincible, was to realise afresh that the mightiest forces of the universe are spiritual, not carnal. Somehow he drew you into the world of his spiritual ideals, and engaged you with them rather than with himself. There was a spiritual suggestiveness in him which preoccupied your mind; you got on thinking how much a man may do who is taught of God and walks with God.

George Gillett was born at Banbury on August 14, 1837, and died at the same place on November 24, 1893. He was the son of Joseph Ashby and Martha Gillett. A Friend by birth, he afterwards became one by conviction and choice. His childhood was happy, and the memory of it is bright to those who called him brother; they think of him as "very gentle and considerate to others." He had his early business training in York with a Friend, Mr. Joseph Rowntree, whose daughter he married. In 1869 he joined his brother, Mr. Alfred Gillett, in the banking and discount business in London.

In his own Society he took a position of great influence and usefulness through his devotion and labours. He became a minister, and fostered every mission by which the Gospel could be brought to men's hearts and the Kingdom of Christ extended. For many years he worked hard in the Bunhill Fields Mission; he also cherished the Medical Mission which is now carried on there. Rescue work had an early place in his affections, and The Friend attributes the happy change which has come over the Society with regard to missions very much to his action and influence.

He had a high conception of the place and calling of his Society in extending the Saviour's Kingdom. While holding as tenaciously as anyone to the sacredness of individual duty, he yet revered his position as one of a fellowship, and saw that through the fellowship he might work for great and useful ends. He evidently did not think that its mission was discharged and its work done. He held, and rightly so, that a Society with such a history and such a training, had been prepared for more service in the future.

That he had his struggles is evident from one of his own sentences, quoted at his graveside: "I never knew the joy of service till I knew the peace of surrender." His peace must have come very early, or his work would not have been so fruitful. He had his mental doubts and difficulties, like many other thoughtful Christians; his method of dealing with them, as described in his own words, is worthy of careful observation, and might be copied with advantage by all who are passing through a similar experience. At the end of 1887 he wrote:—

(From a Photograph by Mr. Geo. Emberson, jun., 9, Cornhill, London, E.C.

Some five-and-twenty years ago I used to think that I was at liberty, nay rather ought, to discern between Scriptures as being partly inspired and partly uninspired. This attitude of mind prevented rather than helped me to understand their teaching, and I was drifting slowly towards an open sea of practical unbelief. I saw that there were two courses open to me—the one to examine the question as to the authority of the Scriptures; the other, to accept that as an hypothesis, and to let the Scriptures speak for themselves. In my circumstances I took the latter course. I put away from my mind, so far as I could, all previous ideas about the Bible. I turned away from commentaries, till I had first made myself fairly acquainted with what the Bible had to say. I resolved to give every word its simple ordinary meaning apart from theology, and to form the best conclusions I was able to from its statements. With this attitude of mind the Holy Spirit has opened its pages to my understanding in a way I had no conception of before. As my life, only too haltingly, was moulded by its precepts, the unity of its testimony through so many writers became apparent, and I became the possessor of a spiritual experience, which, so to speak, proved the hypothesis with which I started.

Mr. Gillett was first brought into public notice by his labours for the abolition of the State-regulation of vice. This introduced him into the ranks of national workers for national ends. The Friends' Association supplied workers and means with a liberality which far outstripped any other Church; indeed, they did better, they aided largely in giving to the repeal movement a spirit of pure devotion. They were never ashamed of saying that their action was simple loyalty to Jesus Christ; they encouraged prayer for the overthrow of the evil assailed; and they believed in God as the great Power who alone could work salvation in the earth.

His deep compassion for those who were the victims of this horrible system led him to go with Mr. A. S. Dyer to Brussels in 1880, and at great risk attempt the rescue of some poor English girls from the prisons of infamy and shame in which they were incarcerated. To read now the story of all the horrors that were brought to light by the action of the British committee that was formed, with him as its treasurer, is like reading a chapter about one of the vilest parts of the old Slave States. The quiet courage and rare devotion which led our friend to brave the risks and the odium of such work can only be ascribed to that grace to which he always attributed all good. So modestly was it done that somehow it seemed not to belong to him, and one rather kept thinking of what God in the present moment was doing by means of him.

It is touching to know that the proof-sheets of his last report of the Friends' Association, dated November 13, 1893, passed under his eye, and that he gave almost his last strength to them.

His labours in the Anti-Opium cause were as abundant and as exacting as those given to its sister cause. On committees, at meetings and conventions, he toiled with unflagging zeal. Great causes go in groups, and practically spring from the same root principles; hence he was found busy working for the oppressed of many lands. France had its share of his sympathy; the Depôt Central in Paris, from whence go forth philanthropic and religious agencies, owes much to him. He was a Christian citizen of the world, and might appropriately have been nationalised in every country. He spoke, too, in many ways, his zeal leading him to make free use of the Press. In England, in France, and in India, he greatly aided the spread of Christian thought and teaching, and thus multiplied himself manifold.

His interpretation of our Lord's words; "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the sons of God," was true both in letter and spirit. He believed in an active aggressive peace propaganda. He not only stirred up the members of his own society, but strove successfully to rouse the sympathies of brethren of other churches. He was mainly instrumental in founding the Christian Union for Promoting International Concord, of which the Bishop of Durham is the chairman; it was begun modestly, and is still continued under a "provisional committee," which is composed of men of almost every church. Among its publications is one by Mr. Gillett on "The Old Testament and War," a very thoughtful examination of the subject, which would greatly modify the judgment of those who think they can find in the Old Testament a vindication of any amount of bloodshed. For the purpose of aiding this work of peace, he started a monthly paper, Messiah's Kingdom, which has been conducted with great freshness and ability. Few pleasanter sights has it been our privilege to see than that of Mr. Gillett gently steering a meeting of the Christian Union. Those who can see nothing but divisions among Christians would have been surprised at the cordial feeling manifested on these occasions between dignitaries of the Church of England and all sorts of Evangelical Nonconformists.

We believe that Mr. Gillett contributed, by means of prayer, to the settlement of many an international difficulty, and smoothed the path for the nations to walk in. He was a watchman who kept a keen eye upon the ways of kings and Governments, and at any sign of danger prayed for heavenly succour and guidance.

The Peace conventions, which he always attended, if possible, will now miss his kindly presence and resolute spirit; for he was unbending on the point of having a distinctly Christian doctrine put, as such, even in audiences composed largely of Agnostics, Positivists, and Atheists. If the Continent could send from among its troubled nations, so long accustomed to a mutilated and abused Christianity, a band of men who hated the idea of Peace and Christianity being linked together, England could send others who saw that the only guarantee of stable harmony between the nations was to be found in the Gospel of redeeming love, and chief among them was Mr. Gillett. "Prepared unto every good work" might well be inscribed underneath his name. J. P. G.

Missionary Dentistry.

I have been trying for three years to find a good missionary dentist. Most of my missionaries in Angola have been there at the front for nine years without any means of repairing their teeth. They have abundant self-support, but their masticating "grinders are low." At last I have secured a dentist to accompany me on my present tour to Congo and Angola, who, in addition to evangelising work by the power of Gospel-singing and testimony for Jesus, will fulfil a dental mission to the missionaries. My dentist is a lady. She is a B.A. from Dickinson College, of Pennsylvania; she is an M.D. from the Woman's Medical College of Philadelphia; she has practised a year in a hospital in that city, and gained a reputation as a surgeon; and graduated in dentistry under the teaching of Dr. Wm. Dunn, of New York, who is renowned for his porcelain plate work.

My lady dentist is the daughter of Rev. A. E. Taylor, of Montoursville, Pennsylvania, who is my brother; so she is my niece. She is a good musician, a good singer, and a very unassuming, but earnest Christian worker. May I ask my friends in this great country to pray for Dr. Jennie Taylor and for her uncle, Wm. Taylor.

Liverpool.

[3461]

The Present Distress.

BY DR. T. J. BARNARDO.

Never since my first experiences have I known anything like the distress which is now prevalent throughout East London, for in all our streets it is a moan and not a cry that comes to the ears of the workers. The quiet, passionless way in which the half-starving poor have settled themselves down to suffer is past belief, and would move the most callous. It is just because of this stoic attitude that England does not know the tragedies of her poverty. Its appeal is to the eye and not to the ear, and we must turn to the endless rows of workmen's houses, and not to the columns of the press or the groups on Tower Hill, to learn its meaning.

The district visitor has the grimmest tale to tell. The visiting I can no longer personally do in connection with my work is done with better grace and more effectually by the twenty or thirty devoted sisters who live in our Deaconess House in Mile End, and who go from room to room in narrow streets, and up the creaking stairs of unsavoury dwellings, to carry light and comfort, hope and cheer to those who sit dumbly suffering. But these brave, strong, courageous women are shaken to the very heart by the misery they witness, and which, alas! our poverty leaves us unable to relieve. Of course we do what we can. But shillings are now gathered here and there where a few years ago pounds came into our treasury. The "ministry of old clothes" stands us in special stead. Worn or cast off garments, old boots that will still bear some patching, oddments of every kind, all come into goodly service, and are gladly distributed.

But it is chiefly among the poor who are of the "Household of Faith" that we meet with the most painful forms of distress. It is, I assure your readers, heart-breaking to think at such a season as this of the numbers of poor Christian men and women, aged, lonely, helpless, to whom a warm meal comes almost as a special providence, and whose simple needs we feel ourselves unable to supply. As Mr. Holland has written: "It is, indeed, hard to say to those who are of the Household of Faith, 'I cannot help you.'"

Meanwhile, in all our agencies we are face to face with distress of such magnitude and extent that our small means are wholly unequal to cope with it. That a way will be opened out of all this I do not doubt. I think the publication of your article has been providential in the highest sense, and doubtless, too, the conjoint testimony of workers of experience will enforce the lessons you have so clearly taught. The stewards of wealth have indeed at this period a heavy responsibility. But does there not lie before them also a most delightful opportunity if they will seek to obey literally our Divine Lord's injunction to the disciples of his own day: "Give ye them to eat?"

BY MR. E. WILSON GATES,
London Congregational Union.

During the last ten years I have had a somewhat large experience of the social conditions of the East End of London, as well as of other districts of the Metropolis. The Medland Hall Free Night Shelter of the London Congregational Union affords, to my mind, an unmistakable index of the distress which prevails at the present time between Tower Hill and the East India Docks. This free shelter is situated at the east end of Ratcliff Highway. It is open to destitute men every night in the week, and, sad to say, it is regularly filled, and hundreds have to be refused admission owing to lack of room. The admissions for November, 1893, are now before me. They number 18,400, as compared with 15,665 in November, 1892, and 6821 in November, 1891.

What are the great attractions presented at this hall to impecunious and homeless men? The "Shelter" includes a chair upon which to sit from 10 o'clock at night till 6 o'clock in the morning, and for food half a pound of bread and a drink of water. The figures I have quoted show how eagerly this provision is sought after. Those who avail themselves of this shelter know that they are free to leave at 3 o'clock in the morning in search of work, and that there is no fear of being treated as criminals on account of failure to do an allotted task. They are looked upon as fellow-men, brothers, who by misfortune have been brought into a state of destitution, and for whom efforts should be put forth with a view of raising them to a higher level. The Sunday evening service is always largely attended. Last Sunday there were 710 present, and about 250 had to be turned away to face the cold and rain of a December night.

I have only given a few figures; the total for a year is simply appalling. The year just about to close will show something like two hundred thousand admissions! The cost of feeding and sheltering such a large number totals to about £1000, including rent, gas, firing, and every expense of management—less than one-fourth the cost per head of "casual-ward" accommodation. I have said nothing about other philanthropic agencies of the London Congregational Union; of the numerous mission halls; of the tens of thousands of garments annually given to clothe the naked; of the free breakfasts and dinners provided for starving children; of the homes made glad by the ministrations of coal, bread, groceries, etc.; of the successful placing of honest workers; of families and individuals sent to new homes across the Atlantic; and of numerous other agencies.

"Medland Hall" is only one index of the exceptional distress which now prevails. This distress manifests itself, alas! in another way: funds have fallen off very greatly, and unless there is a speedy increase some of the work must be curtailed. God grant that this evil may not be realised.

NEW YEAR'S APPEALS.

The Home Teaching Society for the Blind appeal for help; £200 are really needed.—Ralph Tait, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C.

Howard Street Mission.—John Soames, 47, Harlesford-road, Stockwell, S.E., urges the need for help on behalf of work among the poor and unemployed.

Poplar.—Rev. R. D. Wilson, Trinity Parsonage, Poplar, E., appeals on behalf of the poor and destitute. The fund for relieving such is completely exhausted, but still they come every day.

Bethnal Green.—Rev. R. W. Loveridge, St. Philip's Vicarage, Bethnal Green, E., asks help to give a good Christmas treat to 1400 of our school children, and to 400 of our aged and suffering poor.

Grove Mission, Southwark.—John William Weston, 31, Park-street, Southwark, S.E., appeals on behalf of the poor and distressed families of South London, wishing to make the season bright in many a destitute home.

Homerton.—Many families are in great distress, principally through the slackness of trade. It would gladden our hearts to help at least fifty of the poorest families at this season.—C. Pateman, 8, Hassett-road, Homerton, N.E.

The Brixton Orphanage receives and maintains poor orphan girls, and trains them for domestic service. Over 300 orphan girls are now being so maintained. For seventeen years the institution has quietly carried on its good work, but at the present time it is in need of funds to obtain requisites for so many children.—Mrs. Annie Montague, Barrington-road, Brixton, S.W.

H.R.H. Princess Louise signs an appeal for the National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, Woolsthorpe House, Wright's-lane, Kensington, W., which now contains eighty-five inmates from all parts of the kingdom. Boys who through illness or accident have lost a limb, or become crippled in other ways, are received into the Home for three years, educated on Christian principles, and instructed in one of the following trades, viz., carpentering, tailoring, relief stamping, copperplate printing, saddlery and harness making. Although there is accommodation for 100 boys, and a great pressure of candidates for admission, the committee do not feel justified in receiving more than eighty-five so long as the Home is encumbered with a mortgage. The latter has been gradually reduced, and now stands at £2000. It is in the hopes of speedily extinguishing this debt that the committee appeal for assistance.

NEWS FROM FEZ.

A letter, dated November 26, has been received from Mr. John Edwards, who, with Mrs. Edwards, late of the Irish Church Mission, Dublin, has recently commenced a mission school for Moslem children in Fez. The letter has been forwarded to us by Mr. S. S. McCurry, Newtown Smith, Kingstown, hon. secretary of the Dublin Auxiliary of the North Africa Mission. After telling of protection and deliverance in the midst of abounding lawlessness, Mr. Edwards says:—

"The discontent and tribal outbreaks around us are attributable to many causes. The Sultan of Morocco being away with his army in the neighbourhood of Tafilet, every tribe thinks it has liberty to rob and plunder its neighbours. Then the famine price of most foodstuffs helps to swell the ranks of the discontented. All these things act and react on one another. In Fez trade is very bad all round. The price of silver affects Morocco very much, her currency being chiefly Spanish dollars.

"It has been sad to see the poor mountaineers and street beggars foraging over the street refuse for food. The state of the poor is bad enough in Fez, but in Mequinez, a town about fifty miles from here, it is reported that many are dying from want of bread. To see a starving crowd of beggars, blind, halt, and disfigured by disease, fighting for bread, distributed by a friendly Nazarene, is a sight enough to wring pity from the coarsest of natures.

"Some of our friends have been looking for news of the work among the children. It is a duty we owe to them for their kind sympathy and help in the past, and if we have seemed to neglect it, it has not been for want of will, but for lack of opportunity. Settling down in a new sphere, especially in Morocco, where everything tarries, is slow work. Moorish houses are not of the best quality or description. It is not often that good ones can be rented, and ours is no exception to the rule. Hence we have been kept busy attending to roofs, windows, walls, and floors, all of which when we entered were in a bad state of dilapidation, requiring money and time, labour and patience, to make the place habitable; but now that we are fairly settled we can talk about the school and its prospects.

"We commenced our work some weeks ago in a place hitherto unreached, poor, populous, and needy. There is no lack of children around us, but how to get them to come to us was, for a time, a puzzle. We have, however, solved that difficulty for the present by opening a dispensary one morning every week for the sick and ailing in the neighbourhood. Many have taken advantage of this boon, and it has acted like magic upon the children, who seem to have lost suddenly all fears of entering our garden, and now quite a number are beginning to attend regularly. This is a great step in advance, and calls for much praise. The day before yesterday we had some forty lads. It is encouraging to notice how some of them are interested. One or two have been frightened away by causes quite beyond our control, but during these last three weeks the attendance has gradually increased. We have no room to accommodate any more than our present number. We have only one room, thirty-three feet by ten, at one end of which is our dispensary. Many of them have to sit down Moorish fashion on the nice clean matting we have bought for the floor.

"At present we are exceedingly handicapped for want of school material; goods purporting to have been shipped from London early in July having gone astray.

The object of our work among the young is, of course, quite spiritual. Even if we fail to win their hearts to Christ in their early years, they will never be able to forget the words learned at our feet. Even young minds must grow up unbiassed towards Christianity, and more open to receive the Gospel than their forefathers are, and have been, because of prejudices removed and early Christian influences. Those who think and feel as we do about these little Moslem children will lend us their aid and sympathy to carry on this work. Not only in the United Kingdom has interest been aroused. We have only just received a letter from Mexico telling of practical help. Others are praying for us in India and Australia. If God be for us, who can be against us? and He is not unmindful of your work of faith and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ."

THE HOXTON GIRLS' GUILD.

We are constantly hearing that one great need of our time is that the home of the working man should be made attractive and comfortable. Give him a happy fireside, people say, and he will have no hankering after the ruinous delights of the public-house.

We firmly believe in the truth of this, and therefore we are specially thankful for any successful effort to bring about such a delectable state of things in our crowded centres of population. Such an effort we find in the Girls' Guild of Good Life, which is one of the most important and promising branches of the blessed and many-sided work which centres in Hoxton Hall.

In her new report Mrs. J. T. Rae (who is the heart and soul, as well as the head of the Guild) has many encouraging things to tell her friends and helpers. She fitly takes for a title, "Good Wives for Working Men," and goes on to show how the Guild girls are trained for this highly-important calling. The work of the Guild is all the more invaluable, because practical training of that sort is too seldom given to our working girls in their homes. Many of them work in factories, and therefore it is only in such a happy homely evening resort as the parlours of Hoxton Hall where such training can be got.

We cannot now enumerate all the varied branches of the Guild training, but it is comprehensive, and embraces what might be called the ornamental as well as the strictly useful. Why should not these young women have instilled into them the love of the beautiful, even though they may never be able in after life to preside over a well-furnished drawing-room?

Due care is taken to improve the girls mentally and spiritually, and Mrs. Rae could tell many a touching tale gathered from her confidential talks with her working sisters in her weekly "At home" on Monday evenings. We regard this good, warm-hearted, sympathetic Christian woman as one of the greatest benefactors of East London. If friends will get a copy of the report from Hoxton Hall, N., and will carefully read it, they will surely be moved to take a practical share in such a noble work. It needs substantial support at this juncture.

WORK IN NORTH CHINA.

Dear Sir,—Allow me to thank the unknown friend in Belfast for kindly forwarding to me so regularly a copy of The Christian. It is a great help and comfort to us, isolated as we are from privileges enjoyed by fellow saints in the homeland.

You will be glad to hear that in this out-of-the-way place in the south-east of Shantung, a little testimony for God is maintained; though we cannot boast of numbers, we rejoice that we are privileged to have freedom to spread amongst the people the Gospel message. The work is difficult and uphill, but the word "God is able" cheers and comforts us when we are feeling depressed.

It is only a little over four years ago since Mr. and Mrs. Stephen gained a footing in this Godless place, and though the trials and difficulties they have encountered since then have not been few, we rejoice to-day that an open door still remains for the preaching of the Word, though our adversaries are many. Here in Shih-tao many think we are sent by the Queen of England to spy out the land, and that we simply preach the Gospel in order to hide from them our real intentions. Others again think we have power to deceive them, and this they dread very much.

We have two halls in this town, one where Gospel meetings are held daily, also our meetings on Lord's day; the other is more of a preaching shop which opens to the street, situated in the centre of the town, where in the fishing season and autumn we can always get large and attentive audiences; by this means the Gospel news is spread far and near. Then in the autumn and spring we itinerate in the outlying districts, visiting markets and fairs to make known Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost. Work is also carried on amongst the women by Miss Moore from Cork. This work has been at times very discouraging, but now that the people are beginning to trust us more, the women are coming out better than formerly.

Yours in Christian love and service,

John W. Wilson.

Shih-tao, c.o. Mrs. Price, Chefoo, N. China.

MR. JUJI ISHII'S WORK.

A writer in Missionary Tidings (Yokohama) gives the following account of the work of Mr. Juji Ishii, at Okayama, Japan:—

"The Orphan Asylum was never in better working shape, and perhaps never more needy financially than now. Its inmates have kept up regular evangelistic work through the summer. The children have recently printed a little tract of twenty-two pages, containing pithy comments on the Sermon on the Mount; also the Ten Commandments and two hymns which the orphans sing. They are scattering these far and wide. Mr. Ishii has received permission from the Sanyo Railway to distribute tracts and engage in personal work at the trains in the station.

"A remarkable case of Providential leading has just occurred at my very door. Last Sabbath, a young man, recently reformed through Mr. Ishii's personal work, found on the hill close by, whither he had gone for private prayer and Bible reading, a man formerly a preacher of one form of Christianity (not the Protestant) who had fallen into sin, committed crime, served out a sentence in prison, could secure no work on gaining his freedom, had lost heart and hope for this world and the next, and was on the point of killing himself. Through the help of this friend and Mr. Ishii, the man is given a new chance with good prospect of reclamation. Some of the most tragic features of the case it were hardly wise to put in print just yet, but the facts surpass those of a sensational novel."

SECTARIAN JEALOUSIES ABROAD.

In his address at the Parliament of Religions Dr. F. E. Clark, of the Society of Christian Endeavour, made the following incisive remarks:

The most pitiable sight which I saw in foreign lands was that of churches which had been gathered out of Heathenism and Mohammedanism rent in twain by the sectarian jealousies which have been introduced from a so-called Christian land. To see, as is occasionally seen, a Christian missionary or teacher trying to build up a church not from the foundation, not out of the ruins of heathenism, but by building on another man's foundation, and tearing away the converts from truths around which their minds have feebly begun to twine, in order that some sect or ism may be built up—this indeed is disheartening.

Thank God that such cases are no more numerous than they are. In the name of the world lying in sin; in the name of these heathen nations which are just emerging into twilight of the Gospel; in the name of these feeble converts, distracted and distressed by names and distinctions whose significance they cannot understand; for the sake of the final triumph of the kingdom of our Lord—above all, for the sake of Him who prayed "that they all may be one," let us, when we come to our work in foreign lands, minimise our differences, make much of our common faith and love and service, that we may all have part in the common victory which is surely coming.

Let us remember that the City with golden streets and pearly gates lies four-square, with its doors open to the north and the south, and the east and the west, and may we keep none without the walls because they enter not in at our gate. Then as we enter in shall we find one God and Father of us all, and one Saviour who hath redeemed us out of many nations and kindreds, and peoples and tongues, whose name is "the King of kings, and the Lord of lords," and we shall have part in the one great voice of much people which cries, "Hallelujah, salvation and glory and honour and power unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne and to the Lamb for ever and ever."

[Our limited experience of missions in foreign lands is that where the sectarianism so justly complained of exists, it is chiefly caused by those who direct affairs at home. Those on the field are lonely enough to be glad of each other's fellowship. —Ed.]

THE CHILDREN'S CHARTER. 1. Free citizenship in the great human community. 2. Love and care in the family, the centre of human life. 3. Free development of every natural faculty. 4. Guidance that shall expand and strengthen the moral nature. 5. Culture that gives the key to the intellectual inheritance of the race.—E. A. E. Shirreff.

THE NEW YEAR'S ANGEL.

By M. BUTLER GERDS.

Outside there was a dripping thaw. Yesterday the ground, the fences, the trees, the hills had been covered with glistening, frozen snow; to-day the whole face of nature was changed. Drip, drip, drip! everywhere; and to make the state of things more uncomfortable for those who had to be out in it, there was a sharp, driving sleet setting in towards the end of the day.

It was New Year's Eve, and the outlook from the window of a solitary cottage, that stood like a blot on the large, dreary landscape, was not an inspiriting one.

Inside the cottage things were no better than they were outside.

"I declare, it's enough to make a saint say things he didn't orter say!" exclaimed a sharp-featured woman, who was standing looking out at the desolation.

"And you ain't a saint by a long way!" said her sister, in rasping tones. "Why don't you come away from the winder, 'stead o' standin' there makin' yourself and everyone else miserable? Do come and set down!"

"Lor, Hannah, you can be real disagreeable when you've a mind to, and that's pretty well always. To see you settin' there a preachin' one would think you was a pattern, 'stead o' that, you're only Hannah Gale."

"Well, Martha, seein' as we're sisters, and you the older of the two, it's fair to think my failins' is inherited."

These two elderly women owned a tiny farm, left them by their father twenty years before. They managed it themselves, and made a little living by the sale of its scanty produce. They were past middle life, and though they were church members, they had no friends and wanted none.

Their hard speech to one another was known far beyond their own lonely cottage; it was a common saying, "The Gales quarrel with the weather, when there is any, and with each other when there isn't."

Forty years before, their brother Sam had left home, and had never been heard of since. They had been heard to say that he had stayed away so long, he had better keep away, and as time went on it seemed that their wish would be realised. No little child ever crossed their threshold; no gentle influence stirred them to any kind or loving deed for another. They went to their church, they joined in its service, and they listened to the sermons preached there; but the gracious tender Spirit of the living God, the meekness and forbearance of his Son, the beautiful fruits of his Holy Spirit, all seemed as if they were not in the lives and experience (if they had any) of these two women. How long they would have gone on quarrelling and arguing on this New Year's eve, it is hard to say. But an interruption occurred in the person of a poor belated wanderer—cold, wet, and unwelcome—standing at their door. "Send him away at once; we want no tramps here!" snapped Hannah, from her corner by the fire.

"Come and send him away yourself, I can't get him to go," called Martha from the entry. Hannah came out.

"Can't you go away when you're told?" she asked the poor creature, who seemed half frozen and past speaking. "Who are you, anyhow, coming here in this way?" "The New Year's Angel," said the poor traveller; and he had hardly uttered the mumbled words when he fell prone at their feet, just across the threshold.

"Well, of all things!" exclaimed Hannah. "If you had not opened the door this would not have happened."

"You're never goin' to drive the poor, half-starved thing out such a night as this!" cried Martha, as Hannah was pushing out the miserable form with her feet. "No, you shan't. I've given in to you long enough; here, help me carry him up to my room. I'll soon get a fire; I declare, I quite like doin' of it."

"You've gone crazy," screamed her sister. "Take that dirty thing up, and put it in your clean bed? If you're mad I'm not, and I shan't put out a finger to help."

With all her strength Martha lifted the prostrate form and half-dragged, half-carried it up to her bedroom. She managed to strip off the "tramp's" outer garments, and soon had him between her clean blankets. Then she lighted a fire. Her sister came up in the midst of these preparations. "I'm most afraid to stop in the house with such a real crazy one as you! What on airth be you doin'?"

"He's our New Year's Angel, Hannah; he said so—and can't you hear them bells a-ringin' up at Old Staveley?—seems to me I couldn't stop doin' this if I was to try."

Hannah stared at her sister—she was struck by a change in her whole appearance and demeanour. But she only said:—"What's goin' to happen to him to-night, anyway? He'll hate the cold more'n ever, after that comfortable bed."

"He won't feel the cold—he's goin' to stay just here!" said Martha, quietly. Hannah turned away in disgust and amaze. By-and-by, when the clang of the bells from Old Staveley penetrated to the hearing of the fast reviving New Year's guest at the Gales' cottage, he turned to the silent figure sitting at the foot of the bed, and after gazing at her for some time, said:—

"'I will arise and go unto my Father'—that was the first thing, and I've done that; 'I was a stranger, and ye took Me in'—that was the second thing, and you've done that; and now hear what Christ says to you: 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me.'"

Martha listened to the rambling voice. At first she thought the stranger talking in delirium, but on looking up she found him regarding her earnestly; her frame shook; she was moved by an impulse outside of herself, and fell sobbing on her knees by the bedside. The stranger continued, softly:

"'Who is like unto the Lord? Has he not said, and shall He not do it? I, even I, am the Lord, and beside Me there is no Saviour. Behold, I will do a new thing. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh.'"

"Oh, don't, don't!" sobbed Martha. "If only He will forgive us, if only He will let us make up for all the wicked past."

"You cannot do that; but Jesus lives. 'He has blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions, and as a cloud thy sins.' Oh, don't I know! Haven't I tried Him, and found it all true?"

Hannah, hearing the sounds of sobbing, rushed upstairs.

"Why, whatever! Martha, Martha, what's he done to you?"

"Oh, nothing but what I deserve, Hannah. My heart is broken. All these years, and no thought for any but myself—not—one thing—one look—for my—Saviour—all—these years!"

Something in Martha's terrible distress touched, like an accusing spirit, the heart of Hannah. Trying to soothe her sister, she burst into tears, and began upbraiding herself.

"I've often felt it, but I'd never give in. Oh, to think as it should come like this—we two, grown old and miserable, and now what shall we do? Oh, sister, I'm sin itself beside you!"

"Come unto Me," Christ said, "and I will give you rest," came the words, softly whispered by the stranger.

. . . .

The first grey streaks of dawn were struggling through the little windows of the Gales' cottage, when the clang of the bells from Old Staveley Church tower told its occupants that it was New Year's morning. New year, indeed, to those two hearts, to whom the blessed evangel had spoken of pardon and peace and kinship. For the New Year's Angel, bringing to their hard old hearts the message of Divine love, was the long-lost Sam Gale. "I felt somethin' stir me when he fell down at my feet. I was all of a tremble, and couldn't help myself; I seemed to be obliged to take him in, even against my will," said Martha. "Yes, I had prayed for this," said their brother; "I was two days getting here, and I prayed all the time. I thought nothing of the money I'd a made in Colorado. I kept prayin' for you. And at last I got so numbed and frozen, I forgot who I was, and got all confused like; that must a been why I spoke of the New Year's Angel."

Old Staveley was not long in finding out that Martha and Hannah Gale had lost their "stony hearts," and that God had given them instead the heart of a little child. They and their brother lived many years to comfort others, to show the fruits of the Spirit, and to testify that God had manifested Himself to them in the New Year's Angel.

THE NEW YEAR.

Hearken! through the silence breaking,
Sounds the sonorous midnight hour;
Music, mirth, and love are waking,
Joybells clash from tower to tower.

Dear ones face to face are meeting,
And afar o'er land and sea
Sounds the kindly welcome greeting
Of the Year's nativity.

Yet upon its threshold golden,
At its portals fair we stand,
Wistfully, with vision holden,
Waiting for a guiding hand.

When athwart the shadows stealing,
Comes a voice Divine and clear;
Softly pain and sorrow healing,
"I will guide thee through the year.

List, belov'd! though dimly o'er thee
Droops a future all unknown;
I have trod the way before thee,
And still tread it with mine own.

On life's sea 'midst storms or calms,
It is I, be not afraid;
Trust mine everlasting arms,
In the sunshine or the shade."

Saviour Christ our answer lowly,
Through the glooming pale and still:
"Make us thine, thine ever wholly,
Teach us Lord, thy blessed will.

Sun of heav'n, O let thy glory
Gild our hopes and chase our fears;
Till, with life's brief chequered story,
Ends in love earth's transient years."

Harriet Julia Evans.

"Save now, I beseech Thee, O, Lord; O, Lord, I beseech Thee, send now prosperity."—Psalm cxviii. 25.
"Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus."—Colossians iii. 17.

Hear, Lord Jesus, hear and help me,
Send a prosperous, glad New Year!
That anew I walk before Thee,
In thy saving might draw near;
Grant, O Fount of grace divine,
That new peace, new joy be mine!

What my hands effect, establish;
Thou alone canst give success;
Words by me in weakness uttered,
Condescend to own and bless.
Work Thou in me to fulfil
All thy wise and holy will.

May I never bend in worship,
Save in honour of Thy Name;
Make me readier with the service
Thou from me dost meetly claim;
When my prayers and praises rise,
Spurn not Thou my sacrifice.

Let this be a year of mercy,
And when sin disturbs my mind,
Quell its power to grieve and harm me;
Full, free pardon let me find,
Lord, in Thee, in whom I live;
'Tis thy glory to forgive.

Be thy precious love my comfort,
Let thine ear attend my prayer;
Look on me in all my sorrow,
Strengthen me 'neath all my care;
When the powers of ill assail,
May they nevermore prevail.

Jesus, in each purpose prompt me;
Jesus, still abide with me;
Jesus, flesh and sense lead captive,
Let me find my all in Thee;
Jesus, make this heart thy throne,
Keep me ever, Lord, thine own!

Grant a joyful, blessèd ending
To the now beginning year;
Through its course, unknown, uphold me,
In all peril be Thou near;
And when earth and time I leave,
To thy love my soul receive.

Johann Rist (1607-1667).

A MONTHLY DRAWING-ROOM BIBLE-READING on Holiness has been started at Queenstown. The first meeting was held last month at the Rectory. This month's meeting will be held at Rockville. The meetings have been bright, brotherly, and blessed, homely and helpful, prayerful and practical. The January meeting will be held at the Methodist Manse.

EAST AFRICA AND EAST LONDON.

A wonderfully interesting experience awaited the little company of workers who gathered at Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry last week, heedless of the storm. They were treated to a quick and easy specially conducted trip through Basutoland, with Rev. R. Henry Dyke as expounder of the numerous lantern slides, and Messrs. Merry, jun., as operators. For well on to an hour and a-half the listeners and spectators were rivetted to their seats; it is tolerably safe to say that everyone was sincerely sorry when the delightful excursion was ended, and we had to awaken from our dream-travel to find ourselves once more face to face with the sins and sorrows of East London.

Mr. Dyke's story, in explanation of the pictures thrown on the screen, constituted a veritable romance of missionary devotion and of missionary success. Our friend took us over so much ground, and touched on such varied aspects of the Mission's history, that space would quite fail us in recording the full narrative here. This, however, is the less needful since the reader can furnish himself with a pretty detailed account of the Basutoland Mission, its genesis, its progress, and its remarkable results, in a well-illustrated booklet prepared by Mr. Dyke, and entitled "The Switzerland of South Africa."* Many of the excellent illustrations are the same as those that were cast on the screen on Wednesday week. All who are interested in African Missions —and what Christian is not in these days?—should study and rejoice over this most cheering record of Gospel triumphs among a once heathen and savage tribe.

After an outline map of the south-eastern corner of Africa, we had pictures of several of the founders of the Mission, which is under the auspices of the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society. Then, in rapid succession, there passed before our vision views, of the country in its physical aspects; of many buildings connected with the work of the Basuto Mission at Morija and elsewhere; of those being educated in the schools and colleges; of the natives, both in their Christianised and their heathen state; of waggon travel; of the great Christian assemblies that gather periodically to the Mission centres; and of other important features of the work. All were so full of genuine interest, heightened by the graphic running commentary of Mr. Dyke, that it is very difficult to particularise. The pictures of the Matabele warrior and the witch doctor were of most gruesome interest; the contrast afforded by the groups of Christian students and native teachers was irresistible proof of the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to civilise, to humanise, and to transform the very worst and most degraded. Some marvellous instances of this re-creating element were given by Mr. Dyke, and they showed that no limit is to be placed to the wonder-working potency of God's grace, revealed through his Word in the person of his Son.

The educational aspects of the Mission were set forth in an intensely vivid and attractive way, and the importance of this part of the Mission work among the Basutos was placed in clear relief, from the fact stated that over a million of people scattered over South-east and Central Africa understand the Basuto language. The literature issued from the Morija press has thus a wide field in which to exercise its educative and evangelistic influence. The work carried on is thorough in every respect; in none more so than in the out-and-out renunciation of all heathen ways and customs required of the converts. This does not deter them from a courageous confession of Christ. It was truly gladdening to hear that there are now in the Basuto region some 9000 communicants, and 5000 candidates for baptism; besides the very large number of young people being taught Christian truths in the day schools.

Some welcome information of a recent kind was given with respect to the devoted labours of Mons. Coillard and his helpers in the Barotse country. There have been many gleams of light breaking through the darkness, and there are prospects that a rich fruitage of past toil will soon be reaped. Several new European and native helpers are about to proceed from Morija to join M. Coillard's staff, with the view of relieving him for a period of furlough in Europe. No foreign missionary will receive a heartier welcome. We could have wished that Dr. James Johnston had paid a visit to Basutoland in his recent scamper across South Central Africa; he would then have had occasion to modify his somewhat hasty and sweeping conclusions as to the non-success of missions to the native peoples of the Dark Continent.

All too soon, as we have said, the thrilled and fascinated company were brought back from Africa's sunny plains and mountains to the stern realities of life in the East-end of London. Yet plenty of real heart-moving interest awaited them in that unique field of Christian endeavour. The short addresses by Mr. George Holland and Miss Macpherson were brimful of recitals that were at once harrowing and gladdening. The accounts of widespread poverty and suffering were the gloomy side of the picture. The stories of quiet Christian resignation, or of grateful recognition of God's goodness in sending relief through his loving servants, provided the golden lining to the dark clouds of distress that overhang the great city. It was certainly startling to hear from these friends, and from Mr. R. C. Morgan, the chairman of the evening, the suggestion that a deputation of Basutos should come over to London to teach us some lessons in dealing with the drink traffic, as well as in the separation of Christians from the evil elements of the world that lieth in the wicked one.

We hope our young missionary brother, Mr. Dyke, will find many opportunities up and down the country of telling his true and blessed tale of Gospel work among the Basutos. He may be addressed at 50, Sardinia-terrace, Glasgow.

* Morgan and Scott. 1s.

THE LIVERPOOL MISSION.

In The Methodist Times there is a deeply interesting and stimulating sketch by Rev. W. Wakinshaw of the work of the Wesleyan Forward Mission in Liverpool under the energetic lead of Rev. Charles Garrett. We extract some parts of the article:—

Nineteen years ago Mr. Garrett had no more expectation of being in charge of a "Mission" than of having the command of the Channel Fleet. It happened in this wise. Mr. D. L. Moody was conducting his campaign in Liverpool, and at a special meeting he suddenly pounced upon Mr. Garrett for a brief address. Nonplussed for a moment, at the suggestion of a friend at his elbow, he repeated the substance of a speech he had delivered the night before, and made an impassioned appeal for the 15,000 dock labourers of the city. These were the terror of the police and the despair of philanthropists. Thousands of them were honest, hard-working fellows. But hundreds of them prowled about the streets abutting on the Mersey in gangs, known as the "High-Rippers" and the "Logwoods," and committed every conceivable form of assault and depravity. The "scuttlers" of Ancoats are a species of the same genus. Justice Hawkins went by night incog. to study in person this abnormal development of the criminal class. Mr. Garrett declared that these ruffians were the finished products of the drink traffic, and that there was no hope for either their moral or material salvation until the Church had provided some counter attraction to the public-house.

Brother Moody saw that his friend had "struck ile," and, announcing that Mr. Garrett must have ten minutes more to elaborate the scheme for the reclamation of the docker, he leaped from the platform and made a bee line for Mr. Alexander Balfour, the philanthropist. At once Mr. Balfour, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and others, founded the Coffee Tavern movement that has brought such untold blessings to the docker and his family. But these gentlemen refused to furnish the capital unless Mr. Garrett remained in the city to direct the scheme that was born in his compassionate heart. Thus his engagement to Bradford, Eastbrook, was cancelled, and the Conference of 1875 had the courage and the sense to put the name of Charles Garrett after Liverpool Mission, with Pitt-street Chapel for its headquarters.

The staff consists of three ministers—one of whom is a supernumerary—seven lay missionaries, several caretakers, and a legion of volunteers. The superintendent is so universally known and beloved that it would be impertinence to describe him. Mr. Garrett has gathered around him a band of kindred spirits. Rev. W. Hodson Smith, his right-hand man, seems to possess all the instincts of a City missionary. Owing to his impaired health, Rev. John Brash is only able to contribute one service on the Sunday. Mr. Garrett spoke to me in the highest terms of his comrades in this holy war. He referred to Mr. J. A. Lee as "the finest man in England," and declared that in quelling a drunken brawl his name was much more effective than the gleam of a policeman's helmet. Both he and Miss Slater, of the Wesley Hall, had rescued children from dens of infamy which Mr. Garrett said he would shudder to enter, and had wrenched knives from the hands of drink-maddened men and women with murder lurking in their breast.

Mr. Lee put into my hand a document such as Methodist preachers do not often finger. It was a pugilist's record, foolscap size, neatly printed and folded, the sheets fastened together at the corner with a brass stud, and setting forth in all their sickening, brutal details, the duration and the results of the prize-fights of Benjamin O'Brien in England and abroad. Ben is a negro, and about twelve months ago he lay in the infirmary suffering from the effects of his journey from Australia. In the next bed was a lad from the Home, who had been a Roman Catholic. The eye of a priest who was visiting in the ward fell upon him, and when he noticed the boy's class-tickets in a rack at the head of the bed, and heard that he was "converted," the priest protested that he would tell his father. The boy explained that his father had been converted the previous week. When the priest retired Ben broke in and said how he longed for the salvation through Christ of which the lad had spoken. Brutalised though he might appear, he was "bearing a lifelong hunger in his heart." Mr. Lee had the joy of pointing him to the Saviour, and Ben is now a prayer-leader, and earns his daily bread honestly at the docks.

The agents of the Mission are everlastingly pounding away at the drink traffic. Like the old senator who declared that Rome would never be secure until Carthage was destroyed, they believe that Liverpool would never be saved until Liquordom is annihilated. Incidentally Mr. Garrett gave me a remarkable indication of how the tide of public opinion is rising. Twenty-one years ago this week he denounced the drink trade, and some of the Watch Committee wished to prosecute him. This week he had appeared with a crowd of ministers from all churches at a special session of the city justices, to oppose six dramatic licences that carried the power to sell liquor with them, and in four cases the forces of morality prevailed.

What the Mission appears to need most is an adequate, commanding centre. The Alexandra Theatre in the heart of the city has been empty for years, and I am told it may be bought for £30,000 or £40,000. Let the Methodists of Liverpool rise to the height of this great argument. This theatre would be to them what the Central Hall is to the Methodism of Manchester. With a hallowed boldness let this, or some similar building, be seized to commemorate and to crown the priceless services of Charles Garrett.

"CHOOSE THOU FOR ME."

Thy will, O Lord, not mine I pray,
For I could never choose aright;
My future path I cannot see,
With this my dim and earthly sight.

Yes, Lord, I know that I would choose
The brightest path and bluest sky;
But then I'd never, midst the storms,
Hear thy sweet whisper, "It is I."

And I would ask, I know right well,
A life without one single care;
And thus I'd lose the soothing balm,
Of coming oft to Thee in prayer.

A life without one cloud to hide
The brightness of that azure sky;
Without one heart-pang or a grief,
And ne'er one bitter helpless cry.

But Thou, oh Lord, Thou knowest all,
Thou knowest what I need the best;
I'll take with joy the pleasant things,
And thy sweet will shall choose the rest.

Winnipeg. Margery E. McClean.

IT IS THE YOUNG THAT CHEER THE AGED, and by their presence make the Church a home. Just as in every family the children do as much for their parents as the parents do for the children, so in every Church the children will do as much for the old as the old can possibly do for them.—R. Glover, D.D.

THE BERMONDSEY SETTLEMENT.

The second annual report of the Bermondsey Settlement has been issued by the warden, Rev. J. Scott Lidgett. The pages describe much devoted work, in which our Methodist friends engage with characteristic vigour and fervour. The members of the Settlement endeavour to turn their hands to any form of service, in religious or educational affairs, or in the enterprises of sound philanthropy. Their activities are very varied, and it is pleasing to learn that much encouragement attends the efforts put forth. The residents of the Settlement include several University graduates, but there are vacancies for others who are disposed to help. A large staff of assistants give a day or an evening each week, and willingly render valuable service.

The evangelistic operations have taken many forms, and have been attended with much blessing. Mr. Scott Lidgett says of the region in which the work goes on:—"In South London something more is needed than increased vigour in the Churches. The great multitude are not prepared to accept the ministration of any Christian Church. The less independent outsiders may be attracted, and especially by those who give large material relief in times of distress. But a great proportion of the labouring class, at least, live in a world entirely foreign to the appeals and efforts of churches. Spiritual indifference is commonly given as the reason, though probably we should convey a truer impression if we were to say that their abstention is due to pre-occupation by pressing anxiety in the case of the poorer, by schemes of material and social advancement in that of the better-to-do. But it is most important for us to realise that that to which they are indifferent is seldom the full Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . We must set forth the whole Gospel in all its spiritual and ethical splendour. And we must remember that the working people have minds, are exercised about the perplexing mysteries of the world, and must be talked to as men, not indeed controversially, but plainly, sympathetically, and with competent knowledge."

The educational department covers a wide range of subjects in arts, literature, science, theology, and technical work. There were 1568 entries last year, representing about 800 students. The report says: "The dulness of South London life is a deadly spiritual foe. How sadly wanting in imagination, in energy, in enjoyment of life, in power victoriously to face new conditions, our Londoner becomes after a few years' work under our present industrial and social conditions! Our task is to back the man against the machine in all who come to us. And, above all, we are training our students for social service. The poorer parts of London do not want to be pampered, but to be inspired." The work among the children is also full of interest. Finally, it is to be regretted that the balance-sheet shows a deficiency.

WORK AT COSTERS' HALL.

In the immediate vicinity of Costers' Hall, Hoxton, there is a large, closely-packed population, which lives from hand to mouth, a large proportion being street-traders. For more than thirty years Mr. Orsman has laboured here as a voluntary worker, and has gathered around him about 130 co-workers, like-minded with himself. The outlay is for the most part for such necessary things as gifts to the deserving poor in their own homes, the soup-kitchen, and cocoa breakfasts to Board-school children three mornings a week in wintry weather.

The spiritual side of the work, however, always has the first consideration. The large hall continues to be well filled on Sunday nights, while the Sunday-school is as large as the building will accommodate. Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, meetings for sewing, thrift, etc., are held during the week. By holding their business meetings at Costers' Hall the trading classes are saved from the temptations of the public-house. One of the chief trials in connection with the work is the falling-off of funds in consequence of the death of old friends. Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, London, N.E.

THE FAIREST FLOWER in the garden of creation is a young mind, offering and unfolding itself to the influence of Divine Wisdom, as the heliotrope turns its sweet blossoms to the sun.—Sir J. E. Smith.

APPEAL TO Y.M.C.A. MEMBERS.

In his annual address to the members and workers of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. George Williams, president of the English National Council, sketches the progress of the movement. He urges all members to hearty and faithful service, and proceeds:—

"Let it never be forgotten that the chief characteristic of our work is that it is a spiritual work. This is its distinguishing glory; for while the Y.M.C.A. makes provision for the social, physical, and intellectual needs of young men, and seeks to qualify them honourably and usefully to fill whatever positions they may be called to occupy, our supreme concern is to bring those under our influence to exercise saving faith in Christ as their personal Saviour, and to give practical embodiment to his teaching in their daily life.

"These are lines upon which we would go forward. To our first principles we would tenaciously cling. For while ever prepared to adapt our methods to the constantly-changing requirements of the times, we would ever remember that it is for spiritual results we are working, and that these can only be accomplished by spiritual means and divine equipment. Hence the absolute need of abiding dependence upon God, and the necessity of seeking that power from on high which is the source and secret of true and permanent spiritual usefulness.

"There are multitudes of young men yet to be won for Christ. Shall we not be in earnest for their salvation? Shall we not, as Associations, rise to the occasion and respond to the call—so clear and distinct—to definite effort for the conversion of the unsaved? This is the centre around which all our operations should revolve. During the revolutionary changes of the last fifty years, human nature has remained unchanged, the mighty forces of evil still prevail. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the only remedy for sin, and Christ is the only satisfying answer to all the complex questions of human life and destiny. Let us labour on in abiding recognition of these immovable realities. Let us seek to be worthy of the age in which we live, and of the work committed to our trust."

MRS. SMYLY'S WORK, DUBLIN.

I do not remember such a trying winter in Dublin for many years as the season upon which we have now entered. The unprecedented drought of this year, which extended on into November, overtaxed our water supply, and scarcity of water has prepared the way for an epidemic of typhoid, which commenced directly the rainfall distributed the long-pent sewer gases; and there are large numbers of poor children away from our ragged schools whom, on inquiry, we have discovered to be suffering from this dreadful disease or from influenza. In homes where the necessaries of life are scarce and insufficient for healthy children, our visitors find these pitiable little sufferers, and do their best to relieve them and comfort their parents. For such outdoor relief we keep a special fund, and the calls upon it this winter, for coals alone, have already been constant and pressing. Free meals for the children of the Ragged School are given from a fund collected by those who know the needs and sufferings of the poor children in Dublin. Parcels of clothing are distributed with great care to needy little ones. We have over 600 children of this class housed and cared for in the Mission Homes.

Here they soon forget their troubles past, and heartily settle down to lessons which, I trust, are to prepare them for honest, useful, and Christian lives. Quite seventy-five per cent. of these are of Roman Catholic parentage, and would, in all probability, never have known anything of the Word of God but for the missionary effort which I now bring before your readers. The past forty years have seen hundreds of boys and girls saved from ignorance, vice, and want, and instructed for life here and hereafter.

Ellen Smyly.

53, Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

THE LITTLE ONES IN THE NURSERY revel in love, but how is it with even the nursery elders? Are they not soon taught to give place to the little ones and look for small show of love, because they are "big boys" and "big girls"? The rather sad aloofness and self-containedness of these little folk in some families is worth thinking about. Love-hunger is a sickness which drives even little children into naughty ways.—Miss C. M. Mason.

MISS KRIKORIAN'S WORK.

The Ragged School began in October last, and has about eighty scholars. The Temperance Society and the Y.M.C.A. in connection with it have kept up their Saturday evening meetings for Bible study throughout the summer, and on every Sunday at noon they have gathered for prayer, and to listen to suitable addresses. The society to promote purity and charity in speech has continued its weekly meetings for prayer and conference, and is doing a very important work. Our three Mission Sunday-schools, in parts of the city remote from the churches, have continued throughout the summer, and have an aggregate of about 400 children. It cannot be doubted that the faithful work done in them has resulted in much good.

I expect very soon to resume the district meetings for women, which have been so largely attended and richly blessed in the past. I find many of our best Christian workers are already looking forward hopefully and eagerly to the opportunity which is before us. I ask friends in England to remember us often and earnestly, in their prayers, especially for blessing upon the special effort we plan to make with the New Year. This work by women and for women is certainly one that the Lord has most graciously owned in the past, and one that is specially fruitful, because it brings the Gospel directly home to the family life, where it is so much needed in this land. I must repeat the extreme urgency of more help in properly occupying this most interesting and promising field. Volunteer helpers can do a great deal, but there is great need of at least one paid helper to give all her time to this work with me. The people who have been brought together in such large numbers (over 3000 men and women in different parts of the city) have fairly come within the influence of the mission. Their moral and religious natures have been stirred, but many of them are weak, and in need of frequent visitation and personal stimulus. Contributions in aid may be sent to Mr. J. McDonald, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

We have been keeping Minas, "the little drunkard," in our house ever since I found him. We have been hoping that some help would come for him from friends in England. He is a clever and hopeful child; to send him back to his parents means to have him killed with raki.

Aintab, Turkey-in-Asia. R. Krikorian.

SUFFERERS BY EARTHQUAKE.

Dear Sir,—In the spring of this year some readers of The Christian were touched by the sorrows of the sufferers through earthquake in Malatia, Asia Minor, as described by Dr. Barnum, and they kindly sent a small relief. I have now received the latest information from the veteran missionary. He writes:—

"Help was sent by the native Protestants of the country, by Persia, and America. The first money that came was used to relieve individual wants, such as food and clothing; a large school building has been erected, used for public worship for a time; for the chapel and manse, I suppose, it requires some £400 to erect. The coming winter is sure to be one of great distress in Malatia. The earthquakes have not wholly ceased, so that the houses are considered unsafe, and the people are trying to provide shanties for themselves; these will be damp and cold, and fuel is double price. Food is dear, and the majority of the people are without preparation for the winter and without money. The mills are generally crowded at this season of the year, but now they are empty.

"There is great destitution in other parts of the country, and the suffering that is before the people it is fearful to contemplate. May the Lord pity this poor country."

Two grants have already been sent by the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, and I shall be intensely grateful to receive any help in aid of our poor brethren, suffering as they are from cold, hunger, and exposure.

Yours faithfully,

W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec.

7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

MR. MATTHEW BURNETT closed a successful Gospel Temperance Mission in West Bromwich on Sabbath evening last. Many remarkable cases of conversion have taken place.

JEWISH NOTES.

EVENTS IN PALESTINE.

IT is not alone at Jerusalem that we see signs of the revival of Palestine. Jewish colonies are beginning to thrive in different parts of the country. Dr. Masterman writes of a visit to Samarin, in Galilee:—"The situation of this quickly-rising Jewish town is magnificent, the finest site I know of in Palestine, embracing views of the sea, forest, mountain and plain. The well-built houses, solid streets and roads, public gardens, and miles of vineyards on all sides, present a scene unlike anything else here. The Jews seem to be industrious and happy. Much of the actual labour is performed by the fellahin under Jewish supervision. European ploughs and carts are used extensively. Splendid roads, which would be a credit to any European country, are being rapidly pushed from the colony towards Haifa on the one side and Nazareth on the other. The main street of Samarin is fully a mile long, with comfortable houses and small side-streets on each side. At the centre of the town there is a fine large synagogue. Water is laid on to the streets and houses, being pumped up the hill by a steam pump. Smaller colonies are springing up, under the protection of the great one, in the districts around."

A special correspondent of The South African Pioneer, the organ of the Cape General Mission, writing from Jerusalem on October 3rd, states that two sailing vessels have arrived there by train. One of them, a large and heavy boat, for freight, has already been transported to the Dead Sea, for the purpose of exploiting the mineral wealth of salt, bitumen, and sulphur, which abounds on its shores. The other, a somewhat smaller boat, for the use of passengers, was bound for the same destination.

We do not read in the Bible of the navigation of the Dead Sea, but Josephus states that the Moabites crossed it when attacking Judah, and that the Romans used boats in pursuing fugitives. But the appearance of trading and passenger vessels is altogether a new feature. The eventual restoration of the Dead Sea and neighbourhood is clearly foretold. (See Ezek. xvi. 55 and xlvii. 8-12.)

A MOVEMENT CHRISTWARD.

Mr. Nelam, a Jewish Christian, who has lately been accepted for service by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, and who is opening a new station for evangelistic work and New Testament distribution at Berdits chew, in the south of Russia, writes:—"A great movement has sprung up among the intelligent class of Jews, and fifty or sixty of them are willing to embrace Christianity if Christians would hold out to them a charitable hand. Let the world know that there is a field in South Russia ripe for the harvest. Only reapers are needed."

In forwarding Mr. Nelam's letter to Rev. John Wilkinson, Dr. Althausen, the venerable superintendent of most of the work in Russia, observes:—"This sounds as if Amos viii. 11, 12 were about to be fulfilled. Mr. Nelam is not an enthusiast, and if he describes the work in such glowing colours, the movement must be very great."

Mass movements of the Jews towards Christ are a peculiar feature of the present times. Not many months ago The Jewish Intelligencer reported a remarkable movement among the Jews at Damascus, where Rev. J. F. Segall is working. Similarly in Persia, Rev. C. Stileman, C.M.S. missionary at Julfa, Ispahan, has received much encouragement by the manifest spirit of inquiry awakened among the Jews. A. S. D.

NEW YEAR'S DAY PRAYER MEETING.—The committee of the Baptist Missionary Society have resolved to hold a public meeting for special prayer on behalf of foreign missions, New Year's Day, 11 a.m., in the library of the Baptist Mission House, 19, Furnival-street, Holborn. Not a few of the friends of the Society are deeply impressed with the necessity of waiting upon the Lord for his gracious guidance and blessing at the present time, specially in view of the urgent and pressing need for a large increase in the staff of labourers to occupy the numerous openings that present themselves in all parts of the world. There can be no more fitting occasion for such united petition than the commencement of a new year. It is hoped to have the presence and sympathy of representatives from many other missionary and kindred associations.

ALFRED HENRY BAYNES.

PURITY AND OPIUM IN CALCUTTA.

A VERY remarkable meeting was held here last Monday. It was summoned to protest against three things: the disgraceful condition of the streets of this city; the shameful inefficiency of the law to protect young girls, as recently interpreted by an English judge of the High Court of Calcutta; and the existence of a large body of foreigners, many of them well known to the police, who live here upon a shameless trade in vice.

The meeting, composed of men only, was in itself a remarkable sight; the Great Town Hall was closely packed with men of varied European and Indian nationality, and the platform was covered with men representing every class—Hindoos, Mohammedans, Theists, and Christians. A conspicuous figure was that of Sir Romesh Chunder Nitter, who lately retired from the post of judge of the High Court, where his inflexible independence made him greatly honoured. The chair was taken by Bishop Thoburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the missionaries and clergy of all denominations, including an eloquent Roman Catholic priest, were largely represented; so, too, was the Brahmo Somaj, associated with the name of Keshub Chunder Sen.

The resolutions were eloquently supported, and unanimously adopted. The high tone of some of the Indian speakers was very noticeable, and not least the warm appreciation expressed by the mover and seconder of the vote of thanks to the chairman, both non-Christians, of the efforts of the missionaries, to whose initiative the meeting was due. In listening to their grateful expressions, one could not but feel thankful that the Missionary Conference of Calcutta has, in this and other matters, so fully recognised its duty to help in making this world better and purer and safer for the young, at the same time that its members are holding out a hope for the world to come.

I think most present were of opinion that the highest level in the whole meeting was reached by Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., with whom it has been my great privilege to come to India. He pointed out that the meeting had been occupied with symptoms, and that to make any real progress we must go to root principles. He proceeded to lay down two of these—First, that the moral law of purity is equally obligatory on men as on women, and that men are just as truly disgraced as women by its infraction; secondly, that the oft-repeated allegation that vice is a necessity is utterly without foundation, as has been proved by the experience of thousands. Such a speech, delivered in the presence of more than a thousand men, of whom I was told not more than one in twenty would be professing Christians, was good seed that can hardly fail to bring forth good fruit.

I have not time to say much of the subject which has brought me to India, the Opium Commission, and it would be unwise to attempt to forecast results. One thing has come home to us as it never could have done in England: the extreme difficulty, humanly speaking, of carrying on in India a contest of this kind, in which the Government of India is itself one of the parties. Few men in India dare say things that are contrary to the views of Government; whilst men will readily come forward to say those things which they know will please Government. We have been able to place before the Commission a good deal of valuable testimony, hitherto on the part of missionaries only, as to the evils flowing from the opium traffic. In Calcutta, as in London, some Government witnesses have injured their own cause by assertions as to the innocuousness of opium so extravagant as to provoke incredulity, and one Government witness, a medical man, has actually supported our views, whilst a considerable number have condemned opium-smoking absolutely, though they defend opium-eating. They have thus completely established our case as to China, since opium-smoking, not opium-eating, is the form of the vice which prevails in that country.

We are sustained by the conviction that truth will prevail, and by many signs that God is with us. Will your readers pray that this Commission may be used to hasten the blotting ont of a great national sin? JOSEPH G. ALEXANDER.

Calcutta, Nov. 29.

TO MAKE the destruction of a child sure, place no restriction on his going out and coming in.

KURKU AND C.I.H. MISSION.

THE friends of this Mission will be glad to hear of the arrival at Ellichpur of the two new missionaries sent out this autumn, Miss Bacon and Miss Mead. Work is now being carried on at five different stations, for a few weeks ago it was decided to open a new station at Chikalda, a healthy village in the hill country, and a small bungalow is in course of erection there. The lady missionaries who have been working there for some months say that the natives are delighted to hear that they mean to come and live near them. When they last wrote all the missionaries were busily engaged at the great Bairam festival, where 60,000 people had just assembled to sacrifice at a large black stone daubed with red paint.

Everywhere in the villages they are warmly received by attentive listeners, both men and women. Mrs. Müller says: "Our happiest days here are always those spent thoroughly amongst the people, and more than ever before we wish to spend all our time in visiting and in intercourse with the people in some way or other. A few days ago I spent the forenoon in one house in a village with a sick man and some neighbours who had gathered round, Miss Stericker next door with women and girls busy cooking, while Miss Raine sat on the ground before a house with several women and a great number of children. One old woman, who was over one hundred they said, sat grinding, grinding her flour. Usually they grind at night, and sing a monotonous chant all the time. Understanding our story, she soon began to shout across her grinding-stone: 'No, it will never be; I shall never give up my caste and my people—no, never, as I live, so I will die, and fall into the ground, and it will all be over.' We said: 'No, it will not be over; He who cares for you now, and who has cared for you all your life long—He wants you to be with Him when you die.' But she said, 'No, it is not to be.' Such a hopeless, hard old face was hers, though beautiful with snow-white hair. She was earning all her living day by day through the labour of those stiff, dry old hands, without God and without hope, and with nothing to look forward to but death, falling into the ground and being no more."

MISSION WORK IN LABRADOR.

THE Mission Hospital vessel Albert has arrived at Great Yarmouth from her second annual voyage to the Labrador Coast, where it has been engaged during the summer in medical and mission work. Two hospital stations have been established at Battle Harbour, ten miles north of the Straits of Belle Isle, and Indian Harbour, 180 miles further north still. The latter station was, unfortunately, completed too late in the year to be of use this season, but the Battle Harbour work was in full progress the whole time. The harbour being a favourite port of call for fishermen passing up and down the coast afforded great facilities for medical work.

The doctor on the Albert visited in and from the vessel thirty-five harbours. Six or seven thousand people attended the evangelistic services, which were held wherever the opportunity presented itself. Over 1000 patients were seen and treated. The great majority of the settlers of English descent were found to be in a very destitute condition, and a large quantity of new and old articles of warm clothing were distributed.

Dr. Grenfell, the superintendent of the Mission, visited eight-seven harbours in the small steam launch Princess May. He conducted sixty services and gave twenty magic lantern, Bible, and temperance lectures. The dispensary work done in connection with the Princess May was very great, and much clothing, food, and healthy literature were distributed.

In the deep bays or fjords, 2000 white settlers live, and, for the purpose o fcarrying on work amongst them, the Church of England next year hope to reopen their two stations, which are temporarily closed. In addition to this the Methodists have two ministers stationed on the coast. Notwithstanding the agencies at work, there still remains a wide field for missionary effort amongst the thirty to forty thousand fishermen, and their families, who reside for 3½ months in the natural harbours and islands along the seaboard, and who are, during that time, cut off from all ordinary spiritual influences, and from medical assistance. So greatly has this been felt in the colony that something like half the expenses required to carry on the Labrador work of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen there, has been raised in Newfoundland.

"AFTER MANY DAYS."

By MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

Elaine Duncan had yielded herself in full consecration to Christ, and had been honoured by the privilege of winning many souls to Him. Her Bible class was unique. Each member had been sent in some remarkable way, and after earnest prayer that she might be sent out to find the wanderers. Of the hundred names she had on her class-book, some were rescued from a sad life, some were fast hastening to ruin, and many had never listened to the Gospel message before. Not one had been drawn from other classes, for all admitted they had never attended a religious meeting of that kind.

Time passed by. Several had gone away, while two had died. Elaine saw there was room for more, large and responsible as the class was. She laid the matter before the Lord, and asked where the next wanderer was to come from. One afternoon, in early winter, she was hurrying homeward, when a strange inward feeling prompted her to go by a busier and a longer route. It was a noisy way; men, women, and children hurried by, and she saw no reason for taking that course, although she was sure there must be someone to whom she had to speak.

Presently, waiting by a shop window, evidently admiring herself in a glass, stood a young woman, perhaps twenty-five years old. Her whole get-up was showy in the extreme, feathers, flowers, and jewellery to a ridiculous extent: in fact, the last person it could be easy to speak to seriously. Without a doubt that it was God's leading, she went to the stranger's side, and with gentle tact addressed her.

"I cannot tell why I am to speak to you, but it is to you I am sent with an invitation to a Bible-class, and to offer kindly friendship when you need it."

The disdainful glance and sharp retort almost discouraged her.

"Friendship, indeed," she said, curling her lip; then laughing out, she added, "If I do come to your class you'll never forget me."

Much more was said. Elaine managed to learn that she was travelling with a musical company, which gave variety entertainments. They parted, one to go home, conscious of having obeyed the Lord's command, and the other to ponder over the curious incident of having heard a voice that lingered about her in its quiet sweetness.

Mary Driver took off her startling hat and sat down in her room in solitude, and before getting a light, or thinking of her tea, she began talking to herself, "It's uncommonly odd that she came and spoke to me, above all people." Then she lapsed into thought; she went back to her childhood, and faintly recalled a mother's kindly arm around her; then a time of misery, with a stern father, who drove all tender feelings from her. Then she saw again the headlong plunge into scenes that looked darker to her since she had seen that bright pure face. A slight shudder passed over her, at which she tried to smile, and turn in thought to the day when her father died and she was quite alone. But she roused herself to make ready for the performance which would make many laugh and herself to forget all such weakness.

Four Sundays went past, and Elaine had prayed for that stranger in the street. On the fifth, as she opened the Bible, she caught sight of the unmistakable hat, with the wearer sitting at the far end of the room. She knew it was not her words, but the Spirit of God through her, that was touching the hearts of those before her; and yet she sighed, and felt heavy in spirit as she saw Mary Driver get up and dash out of the room during the closing hymn, as though she had taken offence at what she heard. Although Elaine made every effort to find her, or hear something of her, it was all to no purpose.

For five years Elaine worked faithfully and earnestly, and sought the highest good of all in her class. In all, some 200 souls claimed her as teacher and friend. After a long summer of uninterrupted work, the Master called her aside to rest. Unable from weakness to meet her class, she sent messages through her sister, telling them to be sure God had a reason for stopping her in the work. As ever, she pleaded for the stranger who once had come within her reach. Elaine went for change of air to a seaport town, where, after a week's quiet, she regained somewhat of her lost energy. She had heard the friends with whom she stayed talking much of some meetings being held for young women, and when feeling herself able to go she gladly made her way to the room. A seat was given her, and she looked round with pleasure to see a large number gathered there. One young person sitting near told her the lady who conducted the meetings had lately come from America, and had told them that her own conversion dated from an address she heard before going across the Atlantic. This information gave interest to the thought of listening to an unknown worker, and Elaine, still weak, closed her eyes and waited for the speaker's arrival. "There she is," her kindly informant said, causing Elaine to start by her quick remark.

The speaker was Mary Driver! the one who had said, "If I do come to your class you'll never forget me." Very touching was the interview after the meeting, and the wonderful story soon told. The words she heard in the class that afternoon years before lodged in her heart. She went abroad with the performing company, was ill, and had to leave them. Lying at death's door, Elaine's words became God's messenger to lead her to repentance, and showed her Jesus as her Saviour. Before she recovered sufficient strength to seek a situation, she had become a saved soul, and resolved to seek others as she had been sought.

"God found me a respectable means of gaining a livelihood, and I did what you did for me: I went out and spoke to just such hardened worldlings as I once was, and have gloried in telling them how Jesus found me. A friend coming home offered me a place, and so I came, and am humbly trying to save young women. I wanted to get to see you soon to pour at your feet my deepest sense of debt and thanks, and now God has crowned my desire by sending you here to rejoice with me."

They knelt in silence; feelings, too strong for words, overpowered them, but God knew, and blessed them both.

ARE YOU HAPPY?

Sitting one morning after breakfast for a few moments of quiet, before beginning the day in earnest, thoughts—somewhat rebellious—passed through my mind. On turning to the "Lamp" for relief, and as a refuge from the agitation, its words came with healing on their wings; and as many fellow-Christians are struggling with the same difficulties, may I give to them what has cheered and strengthened me? From a busy life in Christian work I have, by God's providence, had to take up the routine of ordinary domestic duty.

Cooking, dish-washing, to say nothing of the endless demands on one's temper and patience which arise from the constant ringing of "that door bell" make life seem so different. Am I in all this serving God? Yes, undoubtedly.

But is the service joyful? Ah! here is where the pinch comes in. Can I with a pleasant face tell the third old-clothesman who has called within the last half-hour that there is "nothing to-day"? Oh, dear! and that dreadful pot has boiled over in the meantime! Surely, surely, I may get cross now, and snap somebody's nose off? Is there any balm for all this? Turn to 1 Chron. xxiii. 28, 29, and ponder 30th verse. In these verses you have culinary affairs sanctified.

Yes, dear Christian mother, often tired before the day has begun, you can begin the work joyfully and do it in Christ's spirit all the day. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." Stand a few moments and praise God for something.

Sing, oh sing and break the spell of gloom which has gathered over your spirit, and then you can say, "I have finished the work Thou hast given me to do." Look up a moment in the Father's loving face and say, "Not my will, but thine be done." Linger on the name "Father" till your spirit grows calm and your hand and heart get steady.

If you cannot be joyful in circumstances, ask Him for his joy, and when you show by your face and manner you have something the world cannot give, then comes victory, and men are won to Christ. Fight on, sister, you who are tied down to what you call menial work. Look at it from God's side and then it will become grand work, making your life noble, as you labour not for man, but for Him who toiled even unto death for you.

Y. Marloch.

THE MUSIC OF LIFE.

The drama of life which lies before each mortal very closely resembles an intricate music score, of which the music must be written by ourselves.

Be the characters what they may—bold, timid, careless, or painstaking—each has a fair white sheet of music paper set before him, and each is free to write sweet or harsh music thereon.

God does not leave his students to compose their life's music unaided. He gives each one his book of theory and instruction—the Bible; and with this to guide and encourage them, beautiful life music can be fashioned out of the poorest, dullest, and most trying surroundings.

In childhood we have many crotchets and quavers, which change to fuller, deeper sounds, as experience and training influence each life. The ups and downs of life are the sharps and flats, the change from one to the other being so sudden and varied.

The keynote differs according to the disposition and temperament of the student. With one gentleness, with another ambition, with a third the love of wealth and power, leaves its subtle influence in the music, beginning and ending it.

In many lives sorrow becomes the major key, and a long wearisome symphony of agony, bravely and conscientiously played through to the bitter end, changes to the minor of rest and peace, as the final "amen" ends its music on earth.

Mistakes and sins make discords, and discords lead to carelessness in time, as well as in tune, often drawing down on the offending player a severe rebuke from the attentively observant conductor. How many writhe under the accident or illness which lays them aside, apparently useless, and they forget that the enforced idleness is but a pause, a rest, to give the sufferer a chance to review his life and correct his errors.

A note out of tune is but a small matter to a careless player, but another who is feeble, timid, and quickly influenced, hears the discord, thinks it highly clever and original, and promptly copies it. But for the conductor's help and inspiration the weak and timid could never proceed with their music. As it is, often sweet and tender harmonies ring out from the quietest and most retiring lives. Some lives are set in such a high key that they are heard above the din and clatter of the busy world. The fame, wisdom, skill, unselfishness, or charity which mark such lives are to be found in all classes and religions, and in both sexes, and, besides adding grandeur to the united concert, they echo in thoughtful hearts in ages to come. The one perfect Life left his music in the hearts of millions, and the influence diffused by that Life never decreases as centuries roll by.

Perhaps the saddest life of all is the grey colourless existence, not faulty it is true, as men count faultiness, but so cheerless, so narrow, so utterly lacking in the light of charity, and the warmth of sympathy, that it resembles a dreary, monotonous bass, to which even erratic time would add attraction.

The concerted music of home life is very lovely when each member plays his or her part unselfishly and conscientiously. But in home life, as in the duet of matrimony, there are too often crotchets to mar the harmony, and quavers which make perfect honesty and friendliness impossible. To make matters worse, passion and selfishness intrude themselves, until the key changes, and the original motif of "peace and goodwill" is lost for ever. The wedding march too often alters in a few years into a pathetic sonata of lost hopes and trusts, or dies away in the long drawn sigh of "the might have beens." Death, the final rest, calls the musicians one by one away from the earthly orchestra, sometimes with a sweet and soothing slumber song, and sometimes with the abrupt harsh notes of a bugle call. Then and there, be the summons gradual or sudden, the blotted, tear-stained, sin-soiled music score is given up to the Great Conductor, and it rests entirely with Him to appoint each player to the choirs of heaven, or to the dirges of hell.

Julian.

THE STREET PREACHING was continued in Cork by the members of the Open-air Mission for Ireland on Sunday, December 17. A large crowd attended, but the roughs were so noisy and violent that the speakers were hardly heard. The police ultimately "moved on" the preachers, thus aiding the mob in suppressing the Gospel.

Evangelistic Notes.

Banbury.—A mission has been held here, with tokens of considerable interest and fruitfulness.

Chesterfield.—A very successful ten days' mission has been conducted in the Ragged School by Messrs. Torrance and Head, students from Dr. Guinness's Cliff College, Derbyshire.

Handcross Mission.—Mr. and Mrs. Hare have held a mission here with very great blessing, and several souls converted. On the last night testimony was borne to blessing received, and twenty testified.

Holbeach.—Successful mission services have been conducted here by Rev. T. Dargue. The town was moved in a way unknown for many years. Many of the elder scholars and children were brought to a decision.

Shotley Bridge and Consett.—Special services, conducted by Rev. Albert E. Salmon, have resulted in the quickening of spiritual life and the decision of many who for long had "halted between two opinions."

Ross Bible Carriage.—Mr. John Coates has closed a ten days' Mission in the village of Wellington (Hereford). Upwards of 200 villagers gathered together night after night. The Word came with power, and quite a band have been brought to the Lord.

Rev. Dennis Osborne held in the end of November a capital series of evangelistic services in Grant-road Church, Bombay. Great interest was manifested, and a good work done. The morning Bible readings were felt to be times of much helpfulness, although the gatherings were small. The evening meetings were throughout well attended.

Preston.—Mr. W. Chester Turner has been conducting a seven weeks' mission in the Primitive Methodist chapels around Preston. At Hoole, sinners have been converted and believers quickened. At Longton there was a week's successful services. But Farington was the crowning place. Sinners cried out for mercy. Backsliders were restored, and during the three weeks at this village the membership was more than doubled.

North Midlands Evangelistic Mission.—The mission conducted by Mr. J. Neech at Morton, Bourne, has exceeded expectations. The attendance has been good throughout. As the mission proceeded the interest deepened, believers were quickened, and sinners aroused. Many were found inquiring their way to Jesus. The work closed last Sunday, and many regretted that the mission was over. The evangelist follows on with a mission at Dyke, two miles from Morton.

Great Queen-street, W.C.—The recent mission held by Rev. Thomas Waugh proved remarkably successful. From the first the Divine power rested on the congregations. Night after night numbers entered the inquiry-rooms. Fathers and mothers rejoice over penitent sons and daughters, brother has led brother, and sister has led sister to the Saviour. Many young people in the schools have decided for Christ. The number of young men coming out has touched many hearts. It is believed the good work will go on.

Mr. Raymond Preston has just concluded a very hopeful mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Swansea. The congregations seemed to increase each night. On Sundays the chapel was filled. A large number were under conviction, and many obtained salvation. Meetings for children, for women, and for men were held with cheering results. Members greatly quickened. Each evening a large mission band went out with an illuminated placard, singing well-known hymns, and announcing the services. The workers are looking for richer blessing, a spirit of inquiry is abroad, and the members are full of hope.

Mrs. Baeyertz has held a fortnight's mission in Ryde. Every meeting was crowded, and many tokens of blessing were granted. Ryde has been roused in a way it never was before, and we look for lasting blessing and more unity among the Christians. A well-attended Bible reading was held each afternoon in the Y.M.C.A. It is impossible to say how deep has been the blessing received at these expositions, but the number and regularity of those attending shows the yearning of many to know more of Christ. The number who came to hear what the Word of God had to say about "Worry" was so large that many could not gain admission. The seed sown at these meetings will bear much fruit, and many may show in years to come the influence of these times of refreshing. The mission was concluded on Monday week, when many hundreds were present, and led to increased knowledge and joy in the blessed truths of the Gospel.—J. A. JOHNSTON.

LET NOT YOUR HEART FAIL.—Let not your prayer grow slack. A thousand promises assure you that the children who have been wrestled for, who for years have been committed to the Lord in prayer, will still be brought back to God.

Personalia.

Mrs. Bishop sails on her journey to China on January 4.

Dr. Colin S. Valentine has now settled down to his work at the Missionary Training Institute, Agra, after his brief visit to England.

Rawei, the Maori Evangelist, is doing a remarkable work among his own people. The Australian Christian World speaks of large and interesting meetings held by Rawei in Sydney, and adds that he hopes early in the coming year to visit England.

Rev. Thomas Evans, of Mussoorie, in response to an urgent request, has felt it his duty to join Mr. J. G. Alexander in accompanying the Opium Commission during its tour in India. This will no doubt help to present to the Commission the truth about the Indian aspect of the opium traffic. Mr. Evans also hopes to address temperance meetings in the various places visited.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

"DOES drunkenness cause poverty, or does poverty cause drunkenness?" asks an American Y.M.C.A. paper. If poverty makes one man a drunkard, it is quite certain that drunkenness makes fifty men poor.

Rev. G. A. Bennetts paid a visit lately to Ely in connection with a Temperance Convention. The afternoon meeting, held in the dining-room of Hill House, was well attended, and Mr. Bennetts delivered a powerful address. The evening meeting was held in the chapel.

Rev. John Thornley, of Sheffield, reports that in connection with the Methodist Free Churches there are no less than 810 temperance societies. Of these eighty-one are confined to adults, 100 are joint societies, and the remainder, 629, are for the young people only. These societies number 83,668 members.

The Bow-street Police Court missionary lately induced a cabman to sign the pledge, and a charge of drunkenness was adjourned by the magistrate to see if the man would keep it. At the end of the three months the cabman appeared in court, and declared himself a reformed man, and the magistrate at once cancelled the charge which had hung over his head.

The success of the great temperance convention and demonstration in London has led the North of England Temperance League to decide to inaugurate a great campaign for the north-eastern counties. Over 1,000 meetings are being arranged for, the whole of which will finally concentrate in a great representative conference at Newcastle-on-Tyne, which will extend over January 28 and 29.

Total abstinence from a Christian standpoint has at last been crystallised into organisation. An entirely new religious movement in national form has originated in New York City. It is called "The Christian Men's Union for Total Abstinence," and its object is "to arouse Christian men throughout the nation, and organise them into unions for united effort, in Christ's name, to save the youth from spirituous and fermented beverages, and to rescue those already enslaved." It calls upon all Christians to lay aside political and denominational differences, and join this purely interdenominational, unsectarian, and non-political society.—Union Signal.

Professor Rainy said, a few days ago, it is not the business of the churches to take up everything that is desirable in this world, because they must mind their main business. But surely a subject so concerned as temperance is with the morality and well-being of men should attract specific attention. "I do not in the least deny that people who do not take the view of total abstainers may be temperate themselves, anxious that temperance should everywhere exist; but one can hardly get rid of the feeling that if a person is to exert much influence on this question, it must be from the platform of abstinence."

Mr. J. McDougall, speaking at a meeting of Holloway Temperance Society, said he regarded temperance as being the most important question with which public bodies had to deal. It was a remarkable fact that they could not touch any subject unless connected in some way with temperance. London, although the greatest city of the world, and possessing 5,000,000 of people, had very little control over their affairs until five year ago, when a county council was formed with the view of bettering the management of its affairs. If the temperance party would do their utmost to support the London County Council, they would not only do their best in dealing with the right conduct of places of amusement, but in abolishing the liquor traffic.

BE GENTLE WHILST FIRM in your discipline always, especially in little things. Do not frown too soon when faults which are of heads more than hearts touch you. Be not in a hurry to condemn.

Obituary.

MR. WILLIAM CHAPMAN.

MR. CHAPMAN, who passed peacefully away on Saturday week, after a somewhat prolonged illness, was one of those loyal, earnest workers who, although not acquiring great public fame, yet in his own way did much to win many to a higher conception of life, and to Christ. When thirty-five years of age he was deeply interested in Sunday-school work, and felt the necessity of becoming a total abstainer if his work amongst the young was to have any permanent success. For over twenty years he worked in connection with the St. Giles' Christian Mission, being chairman of their Finance Committee, and for many years superintendent of the Sunday-school. Many thousands have been brought under his influence.

Mr. Charles Inglis in New Jersey.

THIS evangelist has closed a ten days' mission in the hall of the People's Mission, Neilson-street, New Brunswick, N.J. New Brunswick is a city of twenty thousand inhabitants, well supplied with churches and other Gospel agencies; having also a college and theological seminary. Yet saloons abound in every quarter, and many are ruined, body and soul, by these places of iniquity.

The afternoon Bible readings will long be remembered by those who attended them; such faithful and scriptural teaching it has seldom been the lot of the people to listen to. Truths have been pressed home to the hearts that will bring forth much fruit for the Master. At the evening meetings the faithful appeals to the unsaved were very solemn, and many were deeply impressed. The last day of the mission will not soon be forgotten. Mr. Inglis preached five times to large congregations. The last appeal he made was to the unsaved on "Son, remember"; many were impressed, and it was 10.30 p.m. before the workers left the building. From the very first the meetings were very largely attended, and many will praise God throughout eternity for sending Charles Inglis to New Brunswick.

The People's Mission is an undenominational work, and meetings are held every night in the week all the year round. Besides the evening meetings, a meeting for girls and boys, a Bible Reading, and a woman's meeting are held once a week. Three Bible classes are held each Sunday afternoon, besides many other agencies.

THOS. J. HUNTER, Superintendent.
145, Neilson-street, New Brunswick, N.J.

Conference Hall, South India.

THE Union Evangelistic Hall, erected in 1856 has been a rallying place for Christians of all denominations from far and near, and many have had reason to thank God for blessing received within its walls. But now it is falling into disrepair, and the Lord has been blessing so much that the ordinary congregation fills the place, and there is absolutely no room to receive the many missionaries and other visitors who will be here during the season. To enlarge the present building would be very expensive and not satisfactory. It is therefore proposed to erect a more commodious hall, if possible, in a more central position, and we cordially invite our friends in India and at home to come to our aid and enable us to obtain the sum of Rs. 10,000 (or £700), that will, at least, be needed.

HENRY SOLTAU,
D. HOOPER.
Ootacamund, Nilgiris, South India.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOME.—The twelfth annual report states: "Last winter was one of the busiest of the twenty-one winters since the opening of the work in 1872. We admitted 212 children, and, after a large number of withdrawals, outfitted about 130 of them, and took them to Canada. As in former years, a large number of employers were awaiting our arrival, giving the young people a hearty welcome, and thus freeing our hands, beds, desks, and board to rescue more of like needy children, and transplant them also from poverty to plenty, from dismal days to bright ones, from no prospects for the future to great opportunities. We are extremely favoured in seeing many of our children show evidence that they desire to be useful to others, and to lead Christian lives. Some of those even once termed 'incorrigibles' have outgrown that damaging epithet." In an illustrated booklet, Mrs. Birt gives some very interesting testimonies from children now reaping the benefits offered by Canada to the poor boys and girls of our overcrowded cities. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Birt, Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street, Liverpool.

The Book World.

Early Days is a capital serial for the young. The new annual volume is in important respects more attractive than any of its predecessors. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Glad Tidings. By Amy N. Palmer (1s. 6d.). Parchment bound and very tasteful. An admirable gift book, with daily text prettily arranged for the year. (London Stereoscopic Co., Cheapside.)

A Threefold Mystery. By Constance Serjeant. (E. Stock.) A tale of Monte Carlo, and how two English girls were the means of saving a ruined gambler. The story is well written, and very interesting.

The Welcome Hour. Vol. XVII. Edited by Percy Russell. (2s. 6d. Digby, Long, & Co.) A useful and interesting home magazine, which is well worthy of the attention of the young people, who will find in it good hints and pleasant tales to pass the evening hours.

The Sunday School, the weekly paper edited by Rev. James Hastings, M.A., has completed the first year of its existence. Some of the contents are worth preserving. The year's parts may be had in a large cloth-bound volume for 5s. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

Illustrated Missionary News. Vol. XXVII. (Partridge & Co.) This well-known missionary monthly forms a useful and informative annual volume. Being tastefully bound, it would be an acceptable present, and probably become the means of arousing fresh interest in missions.

The King's Light-bearer. By M. S. Comrie. (3s. 6d. Shaw & Co.) A fascinating story of one of the Master's little light-bearers. The tender motherly love of sweet little "Mouche Luisante" for her dear Celestine is most pathetically portrayed, and cannot fail to interest old and young.

South African Pioneer. The special Christmas number of this magazine contains varied and interesting matter, while a capital sheet almanack accompanies it. Addresses are given from the Wellington Convention, and good accounts of the work of the Cape General Mission. (Marshall Bros.)

Friends or Foes. By E. Everett Green. (2s. 6d. Shaw & Co.) A delightful book for boys and girls. The unselfish character of Harry Danvers is very well depicted, and shows how a boy may be manly and unselfish at the same time. "Madcap," his sister, will also delight the readers of this pretty story.

Out of Darkness into Light is a deeply interesting volume, translated from the German by Samuel Wilkinson, in which are narrated God's ways with Elieser Kropveld, an Israelite by birth, now preacher of the Reformed Congregation at Alblasserdam. (Mildmay Mission to the Jews Book Store, Central Hall, Philpot-street, London, E.)

The Face of Death. By E. Vincent Britton. (6d. Seeley & Co.). A Westmoreland story by a writer who has already made his mark. It is very thrilling in its portrayal of one who seemed truly in bondage through fear of death, but found at length happy deliverance. Some of the characters are delineated with a masterly hand.

The Better Way. By W. J. Lacey. (2s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.) A thoroughly good temperance tale, ably conceived, and well written, bringing out some of the hidden dangers of intemperance, and leading to the triumphant conclusion that temperance is "the better way," and that there may be sound reason in what may at first sight seem fanaticism.

The Mother's Friend. Vol. VI. (Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. 6d., 2s.) The special aim of this magazine, as indicated by its title and exemplified in its contents, is to help the mother in amusing and instructing her children, as also in tending them in health and sickness. Thus it has plenty of matter fitted to read to them, while it has also sound and helpful household hints.

Bible Women and Nurses. Vol. X. (Cassell & Co.) Here we have the record of the work of the London Bible and Domestic Female Mission, an institution which has won for itself the love and confidence of all who know the power of a Bible-woman in a poor home. As these pages reveal, God still uses this agency to win many. The volume is admirably edited by Mrs. Selfe Leonard, and supplies much interesting information as to the London poor. We trust it may gain numerous fresh friends for the worthy work it represents.

Onward and Upward. Vol III. Edited by the Countess of Aberdeen. (Partridge & Co. 2s., 2s. 6d., and 3s.) Tasteful illustrations, well-written tales, and a variety of useful matter render this magazine a real help to mothers, and of much interest to girls. The volume is a charming miscellany. Its juvenile companion, Wee Willie Winkie (1s. 6d.), does credit to its aspiring young editor, Lady Marjorie. Its contents include pictures, puzzles, and stories, which will delight the little ones. With the new volume this inimitable children's paper will be enlarged.

Christianity in the Home. By Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Our dear old friend and brother Dr. Cuyler is the living illustration of the thirty-third chapter of this his latest book. Well planted and well rooted, he is bringing forth fruit in his old age, still full of sap and green. Whether the brief sermonettes which compose the volume are gathered from the long years of his ministry, or have been recently written, they are winnowed grain, simple as childhood, strong as manhood, wise and grave and mature as age. An elegant and well-printed book.

Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. send Rosemary Lane, by P. M. Notrad (1s.), a happy little story which our own young folk have read with avidity and pronounced capital. The Station-master's Children, by L. Indermaur (1s.), a simple story of rural railway life, telling how the mischievous but kindly children were the means of reforming an intemperate porter.—Also Poems Written for a Child, by Two Friends (2s. 6d.). The verses are juvenile enough, but hardly of sufficient merit to warrant publication. Some of the fairy tales in rhyme are certainly good, and will be liked by the young folk.

The Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon, with introduction and notes by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, is the latest volume of the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges. It is the fourth contribution to the series by Principal Moule, and ranks with the best in exegetical worth and spiritual helpfulness. This compact little book will serve as an admirable preparation for a thorough study of a singularly rich Epistle. Its simplicity will suit the student, while its succinct comprehensiveness will claim the attention of the advanced scholar. (2s. Cambridge University Press.)

The Christ-controlled Life. By Rev. E. W. Moore, M.A. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) A series of thoughtful chapters on spiritual life, a life yielded to Christ that He may have "a free hand" therein. The aim, the Great Pattern, and the secret of this life are expounded; and then, in successive chapters, the author deals with its characteristics, conditions, trial and reward. There is much that is well put and singularly helpful. Occasionally, however, we notice a want of clearness; for example, a phrase like "Justification is your coming to Christ, but sanctification is Christ coming to you," may be epigrammatic, but it is scarcely satisfactory as a statement of doctrine.

From The Wesleyan Sunday-school Union we have a budget of children's gift-books, including, A Victory and its Cost, by Dr. Withrow (2s.); Her Heart's Desire, by Mrs. J. Ferry (2s.); Grannie's Darling, by Alice J. Briggs (1s.); Little Jim's Rescue, by Annie F. Perram (1s.); Lots of Time, by Annie F. Perram (1s.); Fabian and Phil, by Isabel S. Robson (9d.); Out of the Dark, by G. Spratling (9d.); Ned's Victory, by Alice J. Briggs (9d.). Also In Solomon's Porch, The Young Conspirators, and Pitch and Toss, by W. J. Forster (8d.). The titles give a fair idea of the contents. Both boys and girls will find among these books something acceptable and pleasing in the way of present or reward.

Week-day Religion, by Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Many who have profited by Dr. Miller's suggestive and stimulating writings, such as "Silent Times" and "Every-day of Life," must have learned to look out with expectancy for his annual volume. This, his latest, is specially designed for young Christians, who cannot fail to be helped in the spiritual life and guided into clearer knowledge of the resources that are in Christ by its perusal and study. The author deals in his own practical style with the daily life, its duties and temptations, winning the confidence of his readers, and leading them into the deeper joys and comforts of the faith. To many it must prove a very real help.

The Missionary Societies and the Bible Society is the latest tract of the "Missionary Society" series, published from The Bible House, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

Footsteps of Truth. (1d. Shaw & Co.) Mr. Russell Hurditch keeps for his little magazine the good name it has gained as an expository paper. The current issue has many very helpful things.

Messrs. Cassell are at once reissuing, in monthly parts, price 6d., The Family Prayer Book, edited by Canon Garbett and Rev. Samuel Martin. There is a new introduction by Dr. R. Payne Smith, Dean of Canterbury.

Messages for Mothers, a series of four-page tracts, by Mrs. Eva Travers Evered Poole, have been issued in packets of ninety-six for a 1s. (post free) by Pearce & Co., 80, Upper Richmond-road, Putney. They may also be had from the author, Rockholme, Southampton.

The New Year's issue of Helping Words (1d. Great Thoughts Office) has a practical and thoughtful article upon "The Press as an Accessory to the Church," from the pen of Rev. E. Griffith-Jones. He argues forcibly that this potent agent should be increasingly used in the cause of religion.

Scriptural Solutions of the Omissions and other Difficulties in the Genealogies of our Lord Jesus Christ is the title of a small pamphlet, by M. W. C., which has reached a third edition. The subject is dealt with thoughtfully and clearly. British Jews Society, 96, Russell-street, Bloomsbury-square, W.C.

The 'Alway' Presence, by Rev. J. T. Wrenford, of Newport, Mon., is a precious word for the New Year. From the opening exposition of Matt. xxviii. 20 to a beautiful closing poem written by F. R. Havergal in Mr. Wrenford's house in 1876, the book is thoroughly helpful and edifying. (6d. per dozen. Partridge & Co.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From John Murray.—A First Introduction to the Greek Testament. By Theophilus D. Hall, M.A. 3s. 6d.

From Hodder & Stoughton.—The Silence of Jesus, and other sermons, by Rev. W. M. Taylor, D.D.; Lux Dicrna, by Janet S. Berger. (4s. 6d.).

Gathered Gold.

A holy life has a voice; it speaks when the tongue is silent, and is either a constant attraction or a perpetual reproof.—Hinton.

Thought is deeper than all speech,
Feeling deeper than all thought;
Souls to souls can never teach,
What unto themselves is taught.

We count our mercies one by one; our troubles six at a time. A like industry in gathering up our reasons for gratitude, would make us happy all the day long.

Thy dreams of noble doing are but seeds,
And all about thee lie the waiting fields;
Sow thou in faith and love—the season yields
The perfect flower that crowns un selfish deeds!

Surely there is a way of enjoying God even in our worldly employments. God would never have put us upon them to our loss. Enoch walked with God, but did not retire and separate himself from the things of this life.—Flavel.

PRAISE AND ITS SOURCE.

Wherever God's grace is discerned, and his love is welcomed, there praise breaks forth as surely as streams pour from the cave of the glacier when the sun of summer melts it, or earth answers the touch of spring with flowers.—Dr. A. Maclaren.

'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities,
Whereon our firm feet planting, nearer God
The spirit climbs, and hath its eyes unsealed.

THE CHRISTIAN RACE.

Some professors do not go on so fast in the way of God as a snail doth go on the wall, and yet these think that heaven is for them. But there are many more that run than there be that obtain, therefore he that will have heaven must run for it.—John Bunyan.

Daily living seemeth weary
To the one who never works;
Duty always seemeth dreary
To the one who duty shirks.
Only after hardest striving
Cometh sweet and perfect rest;
Life is found to be worth living
To the one who does his best.

GOD'S TEMPLES.

God's temples are: 1. Heaven, where the spirits made perfect are before his throne. 2. The visible creation, in which He has never left Himself without a witness to his power, wisdom, and goodness. 3. The Church, in which the unknown God is a revealed God in the Gospel of his Son. 4. My heart, in which he desires to dwell by his Holy Spirit.—K. Gerok.

FAITH DEFINED.

Faith is the hinge on which salvation turns; it is that without which all knowledge, and all impressions, and all convictions, and all duties will leave us short of heaven at last. It is the saving grace, or, in other words, that state of mind with which salvation is connected. Being brought into this state, you would be saved though you died the next hour; without it, you would not be saved, even had you been for years under the deepest concern.—John Angell James.

A MINISTERIAL WATCHWORD.

I believe that almost any preacher on reviewing a ministry of any considerable duration, would confess that his great mistake had been the neglect of individuals. When not long ago I had the opportunity, as I was passing from one charge to another, of reviewing a ministry of twelve years, the chief impression made on me, as I looked back, was that this was the point at which I had failed; and I said to myself that henceforth I would write "Individuals" on my heart as the watchword of my ministry.—Dr. J. Stalker.

FALMOUTH.—The Bethel in connection with our branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society had become unsafe and dilapidated beyond repair. In the course of ten months God sent us £500 for a new Bethel. The foundation-stone was recently laid. A further sum is needed before the opening.—Yours faithfully, Catherine M. Fox, Hon. Sec., 41, Market-street, Falmouth.

